forms are embroidered and depicted in the lower Garden of Eden. The cherubim there are neither of silver nor of gold, but are entirely supernal lights, portrayed as artful handiwork of the complete Name of the Holy One, blessed be He. All the images and forms of this world are depicted and engraved there in the likeness of how they appear in this world. It is a place for holy spirits—both those who have already come to this world, those who have not yet come, and those who are prepared to come. All these spirits clothe themselves in garments, bodies, and countenances resembling those of this world, and there they behold the radiance of the Holy One, blessed be He's glory.[1] When they come to this world, they divest themselves of that body and garment, which is of the spiritual essence of that holy atmosphere, and clothe themselves in a body resembling the air and physicality of this world.[2] When the time comes for one to die, he is divested of this afflicted garment (in which the evil side has a portion) by the Angel of Death. Then he proceeds to clothe himself in that other body that is in the Garden of Eden, which he removed upon his entry into this world and which was preserved there until his return. The spirit finds joy only when clothed in that body, and rejoices that it has been stripped of the body of this world and clothed in another complete garment resembling what it had in this world. Through that pure garment from the translucence of the Garden, one gazes upon supernal mysteries that one was unable to know and understand in this world. What delights and longings the spirit experiences in that garment! And in this garment, one merits "to see in the gardens and gather lilies"—the initial letters of which spell out "garment" (levush). This also confirms what we wrote in previous chapters about the preservation of Torah and commandments for the righteous after death in the Garden of Eden. The Holy One, blessed be He, does not remove these garments of the Garden of Eden from this spirit until He prepares other garments for it that are more precious and better than these, according to the translucence of the supernal worlds in which it will delight in the future,

[1] This 'radiance' (ziv kavod) refers to an attenuated form of divine revelation that souls can experience without being overwhelmed by direct divine light—a common concept in Jewish mystical literature.

[2] The text presents a sophisticated understanding of the soul's journey, where it transitions between different types of 'bodies' or vessels appropriate to each realm it inhabits—spiritual bodies in the Garden of Eden and physical bodies in this world.

אחרים יקרים וטובים מאלו לפי ספיריות עולמות עליונים שעתיד להשתעשע בהם כפי מעשיו חוץ מרשעים שמתו אפי׳ בלא הרהורי תשובה שערומים ישובו שם ר״ל. והמהרהר תשובה מצפצף ועולה פירוש מצפצף כי רצון טוב שהרהר עולה ויורד לפני הקב״ה ושובר כל שערי גיהנם [i]

in accordance with its deeds—except for the wicked who died without even thoughts of repentance, who return there naked, Heaven forbid. But one who contemplates repentance chirps and ascends[1]—meaning that the good intention that one contemplated rises and descends before the Holy One, blessed be He, and breaks through all the gates of Gehenna.[2] 85R

ומגיע למדור הנקרא שאול ששם ירד רשע זה ואז מצפצפת אותה נשמה לעלות משאול ואין שום רצון טוב שמתאבד מלפני הקב״ה ואשרי המהרהר הרהורי מצוה ולבו תאב להביאן לידי גמר [ii] כאשר בארנו למעלה ועליהם נאמר מוריד שאול ויעל. פוק חזי דברי החכם אלשיך בפ׳ בראשית על דרוש אילנות ונטיעות ג״ע כי יערב לך. [iii] ואמרו במקום אחר שג״ע תחתון הוא כלול משני דוגמות דוגמת העה״ז ודוגמת עולם של מעלה. ואמרו בויקרא רבה פרשה י״א אור שברא הקב״ה ביום ראשון היכן גנזו בג״ע שנאמר אור זרוע לצדיק וגו׳ ואם מלאכי השרת אינם ניזונים

...and reaches the dwelling place called Sheol where this wicked one descended, and then that soul chirps to ascend from Sheol. No good intention is ever lost before the Holy One, blessed be He, and fortunate is one who contemplates thoughts of commandments and whose heart yearns to bring them to completion, as we explained above. Of them it is said, "He brings down to Sheol and raises up" (1 Samuel 2:6). Go and see the words of the sage Alshich in his commentary on Genesis regarding the discourse on trees and plantings of the Garden of Eden, for it will be pleasant to you. 90R 95R 100R

They said in another place that the lower Garden of Eden encompasses two models: a model of this world and a model of the world above. And they said in Leviticus Rabbah, chapter 11, that the light which the Holy One, blessed be He, created on the first day—where did He store it? In the Garden of Eden, as it is said, "Light is sown for the righteous" 105R

[1] The Hebrew metaphor of 'chirping' (metzaftzef) for a soul's expression compares it to a bird's song—suggesting a preliminary, incomplete form of spiritual expression that nonetheless has redemptive power.

[2] This powerful image of repentance breaking through the gates of Gehenna suggests that sincere contrition has the spiritual power to overcome postmortem punishment, reflecting the rabbinic concept that 'nothing stands before repentance.'

[i] Cf. Zohar — The text follows the Zoharic tradition of describing the Garden of Eden as a spiritual realm where souls reside both before birth and after death, and where they are clothed in spiritual garments corresponding to their deeds and spiritual level. | Cf. Song of Songs — This biblical verse is reinterpreted mystically as referring to the spiritual activities of souls in the Garden of Eden, with the author noting that the initial letters of these words in Hebrew spell out 'garment' (לבו״ש), connecting the verse to the theme of spiritual garments. | Cf. Earlier chapters of Ma'avar Yabok — The author is creating internal coherence within the book by referencing earlier discussions about how the righteous continue to observe Torah and commandments in the Garden of Eden after death. | Cf. Kabbalistic tradition on repentance — This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that intention (kavanah) has spiritual power and that even incomplete repentance can effect cosmic changes, particularly in mitigating postmortem punishment.

[ii] This concept that good intentions and desire to fulfill commandments have spiritual value even if not completed is a significant theological principle in Jewish thought.

[iii] The author refers to the biblical commentary of Rabbi Moshe Alshich (1508-1593), a prominent Safed kabbalist whose writings on Genesis discuss the Garden of Eden in detail.

אלא מזיו השכינה כדאמרו בש״ר
פרשה ל״ב כ״ש הצדיקים בג״ע
כי יזכו להארת אור עץ החיים
כאשר יבא לפנינו אם יגזור ה׳ כי
אפי׳ בעה״ז הצדיקים אלהיהם
מתקיים עליהם כדאי׳ בבראשית
רבה פ׳ ס״ט. ובזהר פ׳ וארא דף
כ״ג אמר דגופא דאדם הראשון
ג״כ אתחבר מתרין עלמין מעלמא
דא תתאה ומעלמא דלעילא ולכן
הדיוקנאות של בני אדם שוכנים
בג״ע תחתון ואמר שם בדף כ״ד
ע״ב דכי היכי דמעפר מקדשא
לתתא אתחברו ביה תלת סטרין
יסודי עלמא דאינון אש רוח
מים הכי נמי מעפרא דמקדשא
דלעילא אתיהב ביה נשמתא
ואתחברו תלת סטרי יסודי
עלמא ואשתלים אדם וכבר נודע
מה שנמצא כתוב בג״ע תחתון
בדברי רבותינו כי רבי יהושע
שנכנס חי בג״ע[i] שלח לרב״ג
תבנית ומדות הג״ע וחומותיו
הפנימיות והחצונות והיכליו
ותאיו ואולמיו הכל השביל אותו
בכתב אמת רשום והם ודבריהם
אמת ותאלמנה שפתי שקר.
ואמרו כי בג״ע אין שם עצבון כי
לויתן ראשו בג״ע וכתיב לפניו
תדוך דאבה[ii] ואמרו ג״כ כי
כשהצדיקים יושבים בבגדיהם
ולבושיהם הנאים ובעדונים
רבים הרשעים עומדים מבחוץ
ורואים ממרחק ויש רשעים
גמורים שאינן מניחין אותם
לראות אלא ע״י שמועה שמגידים
להם ויש להם רשות לפעמים
להקיף הצדיקים ולראות דרך
חורין וסדקין סביב רשעים
יתהלכון. הנה כי בג״ע תחתון בו
שעשועים גדולים והוא בהרבה
בחינות מעין העה״ז. ועיין מזה
בפ׳ כ״ז וכ״ט מחלק העבודה

(Psalms 97:11), etc. And if the ministering angels are sustained only from the radiance of the Divine Presence, as they said in Shemot Rabbah, chapter 32, how much more so will the righteous in the Garden of Eden merit the illumination of the light of the Tree of Life, as will come before us if God decrees, for even in this world, "the righteous—their God stands by them," as stated in Genesis Rabbah, chapter 69. 110R 115R

In the Zohar, parashat Va'era, page 23, it states that the body of Adam was also formed from two worlds—from this lower world and from the world above—and therefore the forms of human beings dwell in the lower Garden of Eden. And it says there on page 24b that just as from the earth of the lower sanctuary, three aspects of the world's elements—fire, wind, and water—were joined within him, so too from the earth of the upper sanctuary was his soul given to him, and the three aspects of the world's elements were joined, and Adam was completed. 120R 125R

It is already known what is found written about the lower Garden of Eden in the words of our Rabbis, that Rabbi Joshua, who entered the Garden of Eden alive, sent to Rabban Gamliel a blueprint and measurements of the Garden of Eden, its inner and outer walls, its chambers, compartments, and halls—all of which he understood in true writing, inscribed. They and their words are truth, and the lips of falsehood will be silenced. 130R 135R

They said that in the Garden of Eden there is no sorrow, for Leviathan's head is in the Garden of Eden, and it is written, "Before him sorrow flees" (Job 41:22). They also said that when the righteous sit in their garments and beautiful clothes and in great delights, the wicked stand outside and see from afar. There are completely wicked ones who are not permitted to see except through hearsay that is told to them. Sometimes they have permission to encircle the righteous and to see through holes and cracks—"all around, the wicked walk" (Psalms 12:9). 140R 145R

Indeed, in the lower Garden of Eden there are great delights, and in many aspects, it is like this world. See more about this in chapters 27 and 29 of 150R

[i] This refers to a Talmudic tradition about Rabbi Joshua ben Levi who reportedly entered Paradise alive. The story appears in tractate Ketubot 77b, where he tricks the Angel of Death and enters Paradise without dying.

[ii] This connects the presence of Leviathan in the Garden of Eden with the cessation of sorrow, based on Job 41:22. In Jewish mysticism, Leviathan represents a cosmic force whose presence brings joy.

בעבודת הקדש. ואילנות ג״ע
עושים פרי לעד לעולם בארץ
155 לא יזקין שרשם ובעפר לא
ימות גזעם ואין צריכים לעובד
דזומר כי הם נטיעות ה׳ דכתיב
ויטע ה׳ אלהים וקיומו לעולם
כמ״ש לא יבול עלהו ולא יתום
160 פריו כי מן המקדש יוצאים
ואדמת גן עדן היה צריך עבוד
ושמור. והדברים שבגן הם יסוד
ורוחניות לכל הדברים אשר
בארץ כמו שדרשו הביאני המלך
165 חדריו זה חדרי ג״ע וכן אמרו
במעשה הרקיע כן מעשה ג״ע
והנהרות נגד ארבע מחנות שכינה
שעליהם הכסא נכון[i] ומשם נמשך
כח למלאכים והגן מעלה דשאים
170 ממים חיים שהיא שפע בינה
היוצאים ממעין הנובע מחכמה
עד האין סוף[ii] והם מים שאין
להם סוף ומג״ע נשפעים ונאצלים
כל בעלי חיים וצמחים ויציצו
175 ויפרחו. ובזה לא יהיה נמנע
לצדיקים לראות את עולמם
בחייהם:[iii]

the "Service" section in Avodat HaKodesh.

The trees of the Garden of Eden produce fruit forever and ever; in the earth, their roots do not age, and in the dust, their trunks do not die. They 155R do not need a worker to prune them, for they are the plantings of the Lord, as it is written, "And the Lord God planted" (Genesis 2:8), and their existence is eternal, as it is said, "Its leaf shall not wither, neither shall its fruit fail" (Ezekiel 47:12), for they 160R come forth from the sanctuary. And the soil of the Garden of Eden required working and guarding.

The things in the garden are the foundation and spirituality for all things on earth, as they interpreted, "The king has brought me into his chambers" 165R (Song of Songs 1:4)—these are the chambers of the Garden of Eden. They also said that as is the work of the firmament, so is the work of the Garden of Eden. The rivers correspond to the four camps of the Divine Presence upon which the throne is estab- 170R lished, and from there, power flows to the angels. The garden raises grasses from living waters, which are the influx of Binah (Understanding) flowing from the spring that flows from Chokhmah (Wisdom) to the Ein Sof (Infinite One), and they are waters that 175R have no end. From the Garden of Eden flow and emanate all living beings and plants, and they blossom and flourish. And thus, it will not be impossible for the righteous to see their world in their lifetime.

[i] This describes the four rivers of Eden (Genesis 2:10-14) as corresponding to the four angelic camps that uphold the Divine Throne in Ezekiel's vision. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that earthly geography mirrors celestial structures.

[ii] This passage uses technical kabbalistic terminology to describe divine emanation, where vegetation in the Garden grows from 'living waters' that represent divine influx flowing from the sefirah of Binah (Understanding), which itself receives from Chokhmah (Wisdom) and ultimately from Ein Sof (the Infinite).

[iii] Cf. 1 Samuel 2:6 — Used to emphasize that even those who have spiritually descended to Sheol (the wicked) can be elevated through genuine spiritual intention | Cf. Genesis 2:8 — Used to emphasize the divine origin of the Garden, explaining why its trees are eternal unlike earthly trees | Cf. Ezekiel 47:12 — Applied to Garden of Eden trees to show their eternal and perfect nature | Cf. Psalms 97:11 — Used to explain where the primordial light of creation was stored—in the Garden of Eden for the righteous | Cf. Job 41:22 — Applied to show that the Garden of Eden is free from sorrow, since Leviathan's presence there drives away all sadness | Cf. Psalms 12:9 — Used to describe how wicked souls may observe the righteous in the Garden of Eden but only from outside through cracks | Cf. Song of Songs 1:4 — Mystically interpreted to refer to the chambers of the Garden of Eden | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Va'era — Used to explain why human forms/souls dwell in the lower Garden of Eden—because humans are composed of both physical and spiritual elements | Cf. Leviticus Rabbah, chapter 11 — Used to establish that the primordial light is stored in the Garden of Eden for the righteous | Cf. Genesis Rabbah, chapter 69 — Used to argue that if God sustains the righteous in this world, they will certainly experience the divine light in the Garden of Eden | Cf. Avodat HaKodesh — Referenced as a source for further reading on the mystical nature of the Garden of Eden

פרק ל״ה

Chapter 35

מדברי ספר הזהר מוכח כי בג״ע של מטה יש סודות עליונות ברקיע העומד עליו כי כשעשה הקב״ה רקיע[i] הביא אש ומים מתוך כסא כבודו ושתף אותם יחד ועשה מהם שמים למטה ונתפשטו עד שהגיעו למקום ג״ע ושם עמדו מה עשה הקב״ה נטל משמים קדושים עליונים אש ומים אחרים שמתגלים ואינם מתגלים והם אש ומים שנטלו מהשמים עליונים ועשה מהם רקיע שבו ד׳ גוונים ובו ד׳ פתחים ושם מאורות הרבה כמו שפירשו רבנן במקומו ומתראים שם מרכבות מיכאל ורפאל העומדים על הנשמה ואומרים יבא שלום יבא שלום ומרכבות גבריאל ונוריאל יורדים מב׳ פתחים אחרים ועומדים על הנשמה ומשם נכנסים תוך היכל גנוז בג״ע הנקרא אהלות ושם י״ב מיני בשמים ושם כל לבושי הנשמות כל אחד כפי מדרגתו ובלבושים ההם נרשמים כל המעשים טובים שעשה בעוה״ז ונרשם בו זה לבוש פלוני[ii] ומלבישים הנשמה ההיא בדיוקן עוה״ז כנזכר וזהו אחר ל׳ יום דכל ל׳ יום אין נשמה שלא תקבל ענשה קודם שתכנס לג״ע ואחר הלבון נותנים

From the words of the Zohar it is proven that in the lower Garden of Eden there are sublime mysteries in the firmament standing above it.[A] For when the Holy One, blessed be He, created the firmament, He brought fire and water from within His throne 5R of glory and combined them together, making from them the lower heavens. These extended until they reached the place of the Garden of Eden, where they stood. What did the Holy One, blessed be He, do? He took from the higher holy heavens other fire and 10R water that are both revealed and not revealed[B]—fire and water taken from the supernal heavens—and made from them a firmament containing four colors and four openings, with many luminaries, as our Rabbis explained in its proper place. There appear 15R
the chariots of Michael and Raphael, who stand over the soul and say, "May peace come, may peace come," while the chariots of Gabriel and Noriel descend from two other openings, stand over the soul, and from there enter a hidden chamber in the 20R Garden of Eden called "Ahalot" (Aloes).[C] There are twelve kinds of fragrances there, and there are all the garments of souls, each according to its level. In these garments are inscribed all the good deeds that one performed in this world, and it is inscribed: 25R
"This is the garment of so-and-so." They clothe that soul in the likeness of this world, as mentioned. This happens after thirty days, for during the first thirty days, no soul escapes receiving its punishment before entering the Garden of Eden, and after the 30R purification, it is given its place.

[A] Or: "that in the terrestrial Garden of Eden there are supernal secrets in the firmament positioned above it" — The term 'של מטה' can be translated as either 'lower' or more specifically 'terrestrial/earthly', contrasting with the celestial Garden. Similarly, 'סודות עליונות' could be rendered as 'supernal secrets' rather than 'sublime mysteries' to better preserve the technical kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: "that manifest yet remain concealed" — The paradoxical nature of this divine fire and water might be better conveyed with the contrasting terms 'manifest' and 'concealed', which more directly capture the mystical concept of simultaneous revelation and hiddenness.

[C] Or: "an archived palace in the Garden of Eden called "Ahalot"" — The term 'היכל' specifically refers to a palace or temple hall in kabbalistic literature rather than simply a chamber, and 'גנוז' carries connotations of being archived or treasured away, not just hidden. The transliteration 'Ahalot' could stand without the explanatory 'Aloes' as it is a technical term.

[i] The author begins with a cosmological description drawn from the Zohar, explaining the mystical structure of the heavens in relation to the Garden of Eden.

[ii] This passage describes how the souls' garments in the afterlife are inscribed with records of their good deeds performed in this world, suggesting a form of spiritual accounting.

לה מקומה.[i] ומרקיע ג״ע נוטף
טל מהאותיות החקוקות בו
ובו מתרחצים הנשמות להטהר
ורקיע ההוא הוא סוד התורה
ומהאש ומים של התורה נעשה.
ועל כן ממשיכים מאותו טל על
עוסקי בתורה לשמה כי דבריהם
נרשמים בג״ע ועולים עד אותו
רקיע ה״ד יערוף כמטר לקחי
תזל כטל אמרתי.[ii] באמצע
רקיע זה בו פתח אחד שדרך
בו פורחים הנשמות לג״ע עליון
דרך עמוד ששם וברקיע ההוא
יש ג׳ מיני גווני אורות המאירים
לגווני עמוד ההוא ואז הרקיע
הזה מתנוצץ ומתלהט בכמה מיני
אורות המתלהטים ובכל שעה
הצדיקים מאירים מאותו אור
עליון אבל בכל שבת וראש חדש
מתגלית השכינה ביותר משאר
פעמים ברקיע הזה וכל הצדיקים
משתחוים לגבה ולבושים אלו הם
ממעשי המצות. אבל בשעולה
הנשמה בפתח של רקיע למעלה
מזדמנים לה לבושים אחרים
יקרים עליונים שהם מרצון
וכוונת התורה והתפלה בשעולה
מתעטר מכתר התפלה הראוי
להתעטר למעלה ונשאר אלקו
לאיש ההוא ונעשה ממנו לבושי
אור להתלבש הנשמה לעלות
למעלה תוך המלאכים רוחין
קדישין הכי פירש אליהו לר׳
שמעון בן יוחאי כי לבושים
של ג״ע תחתון הם ממעשים

From the firmament of the Garden of Eden drops dew from the letters engraved upon it, and in this dew the souls bathe to purify themselves. This firmament is the mystery of the Torah, and it is made from the fire and water of the Torah.[1] Therefore, they draw from that dew upon those who engage in Torah for its own sake, for their words are inscribed in the Garden of Eden and ascend to that firmament. This is as it is written: "My teaching shall drop like rain, my words shall flow like dew."

In the middle of this firmament is an opening through which souls fly to the upper Garden of Eden by way of a column that is there. In that firmament there are three types of colored lights that illuminate the colors of that column, and then this firmament sparkles and blazes with many kinds of flaming lights. At all times, the righteous shine from that supernal light, but during every Sabbath and New Moon, the Divine Presence is revealed more prominently than at other times in this firmament, and all the righteous bow to Her.[2] These garments are from the performance of commandments. But when the soul ascends through the opening of the firmament above, other precious supernal garments are prepared for it, which come from the will and intention behind one's Torah study and prayer. When it ascends, it is crowned with the crown of prayer worthy to be crowned above, and a portion remains for that person, becoming garments of light in which the soul dresses to ascend above among the angels, the holy spirits. Thus did Elijah explain to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai that the garments of the lower Garden of Eden come from deeds, while the higher garments come from will and intention of the heart.[3]

In the lower Garden of Eden, a river flows forth,

[1] The text creates a parallel between the physical formation of the heavens from divine fire and water, and the formation of the firmament of Eden from the conceptual 'fire and water' of Torah, suggesting that Torah study mirrors cosmic creation.

[2] The feminine pronoun refers to the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), which in Kabbalah represents the feminine aspect of divinity. The text describes how it manifests more intensely on Sabbaths and New Moons in the Garden of Eden.

[3] This passage presents a kabbalistic hierarchy of spiritual garments, where deeds create lower garments but intentions and devotion create higher ones, emphasizing the importance of inner devotion over mere external actions.

[i] The term 'לבון' (libun/purification) implies a process of spiritual refinement, similar to the purification of metals, that souls undergo before entering the Garden of Eden.

[ii] The author cites Deuteronomy 32:2, interpreting this verse about Torah as rain/dew as a reference to the metaphysical dew that nourishes souls in the Garden of Eden and those who study Torah in this world.

ולבושים עליונים מרצון וכוונת
הלב. ובגן עדן תחתון נהר יוצא
ושרשו הוא מעדן ולהיות כי
עדן עליון סתום וגנוז גם עדן
תחתון שממנו יוצא אותו נהר
סתום ואפי׳ מאותם הנשמות
שבגן עדן וכמו שלמטה נהר זה
מתפרש מעדן להשקות הגן הכי
נמי מפתח אמצעי שבגן עליון
יוצא אור המתפרש לארבע
רוחות מארבע פתחים שאמרנו
ואור זה המתפשט לארבע אורות
בארבע אותיות יוצא מעדן
מקום המאיר נקודה תחתונה
נגד מעלה ונקודה זו מתנהרת
ונעשית עדן לאיר באינה נראית
הנקודה רק האור המתפרש ממנה
משתחוים כנגדו הצדיקים שבגן
בנזכר. ונקודה זו תחתונה היא
גן לגבי עדן שלמעלה[i] מקום
שלא ניתן לידע ולהסתכל על
זה כתוב עין לא ראתה אלהים
זולתך[ii] זה עדן עליון סוד
עוה״ב האוחז למעלה מעלה
עד אין סוף הוא יודע לנקודה
תחתונה שהיא נקודת בת ציון
בתר צדיק שהוא יסוד נהר דרוי
לה ונהר היוצא מעדן למטה הוא
סוד והשביע בצחצחות נפשך
כי הנשמה היוצאת מעולם זה
החשוך היא תאבה לראות באיש
התאב למים. וצחצחות הוא לשון
צחה צמא.[iii] צמא מאותן צחות

and its root is from Eden. And since the upper Eden is hidden and concealed, the lower Eden from which this river emerges is also concealed, even from the souls in the Garden of Eden. And just as below, this river separates from Eden to water the garden, similarly, from the middle opening in the upper garden emerges a light that separates into four directions through the four openings we mentioned. This light, which expands into four lights corresponding to the four letters, emerges from Eden, the place that illuminates the lower point toward the height. This point becomes illuminated and becomes Eden to give light, though the point itself is not visible—only the light that emanates from it. The righteous in the garden bow before it, as mentioned. This lower point is a garden in relation to the Eden above, a place that cannot be known or perceived. Concerning this it is written: "No eye has seen God besides You"—this refers to the upper Eden, the mystery of the World to Come, which extends upward beyond limit to the Infinite One. He knows the lower point, which is the point of the Daughter of Zion, after the Righteous One, which is Yesod,[1] the river that quenches her thirst.

The river flowing from Eden below is the mystery of "He will satisfy your soul in drought,"[A] for the soul that emerges from this dark world yearns to see, like a person who thirsts for water. The term "tzachtzachot" (drought) is related to the language of "tzacheh" (thirsty)—thirsty for the clarity of the luminaries of the garden, the firmament, and the chambers of the garden. All the souls in their precious garments sit by that river, for without that [A] Or: "The river flowing from Eden below embodies the secret of "He will satisfy your soul with radiant splendors,"" — The term 'צחצחות' in Isaiah 58:11 is often interpreted in kabbalistic texts not as 'drought' but as 'radiant splendors' or 'clear brilliance,' referring to divine illumination rather than thirst. This interpretation better fits the context of souls being nourished by divine light.

[1] These terms refer to specific sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah: 'Daughter of Zion' refers to Malkhut (the lowest sefirah representing divine presence in the world), while 'the Righteous One' and 'Yesod' refer to the ninth sefirah representing the cosmic channel connecting higher realms to Malkhut.

[i] This presents a sophisticated hierarchical cosmology where Eden itself is distinguished from the Garden (Gan), with Eden being a higher, more concealed realm that feeds the Garden below it.
[ii] The author cites Isaiah 64:3 to describe the completely transcendent nature of the upper Eden, identifying it with the World to Come that extends infinitely upward.
[iii] The author provides an etymological explanation of the term 'צחצחות' from Isaiah 58:11, relating it to thirst and clarity, which helps explain why souls desire the spiritual illumination of the Garden.

דמאורות הגן ורקיע והיכלות
הגן וכל הנשמות בלבושיהם
היקרים יושבים על ההוא נהר
שאלמלא לבוש ההוא לא היו
יכולים לסבול ונהר ההוא
הוא תקון הנשמות להתיישב
ולזון וליהנות מאותן צחות.
וכבר נשאו נהרות קולם ודכים
להעיד על אמיתת גן עדן ועציו
ונהרותיו בכל קצות הארץ ושאין
ג״כ לספק כי עץ החיים אשר
בתוך הגן לטוב מזגו ושווי טעמו
תהיה מסגולתו אשר כל אוכליו
יאריכו ימים רבים או יחיו לעד
כמו שכתב הרמב״ן[i] ועיין בשער
עשירי בבעל העקדה דף ר״ט
ע״ב בסופו כי הכריח דברים
אלו ממעשים העושים חכמים
הטבעיים בכל יום הגם כי עדות
ה׳ נאמנה מצד עצמה ובזהר פ׳
שמות דף י״א ע״א על פסוק וילך
איש מבית לוי מבאר איך מתגלם
רוח האדם בגן עדן תחתון קודם
בואו לעולם והכריח מכל שכן
שמתגלם שם אחר בואו בשובו
למנוחתו בגן עדן ההוא ואיך זה
ובדף י״ג ע״א מביא מעשה רב
על זה[ii] ומתוכו מתאמת מציאות
גן עדן תחתון כפשוטן של דברים
יעויין שם:[iii]

garment, they could not endure it.[1] That river is the rectification of souls, enabling them to settle, to be nourished, and to enjoy those clarities. 100R

Rivers have already lifted up their voices and pounded to testify to the truth of the Garden of Eden, its trees, and its rivers in all corners of the earth. There is also no reason to doubt that the Tree of Life, which is in the midst of the garden, with its good temperament and balanced taste, has the special property that all who eat from it will live many days or live forever, as Nachmanides wrote. 105R 110R See the tenth gate in the Akedah, page 209b at the end, where he proves these matters from the works of natural scientists[2] every day, although the testimony of the Lord is faithful in and of itself. In the Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 11a, on the verse "And a man of the house of Levi went," it explains how the spirit of a person is embodied in the lower Garden of Eden before coming into the world, and it proves a fortiori that it is embodied there after its arrival,[3] when it returns to its rest in that Garden of Eden, and how this works. And on page 13a, it brings a great story about this, and from it the existence of the lower Garden of Eden is confirmed in the plain meaning of things, see there. 115R 120R

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that souls require protective 'garments' to withstand divine radiance, just as Moses needed protection to see God's glory in Exodus 33:22.

[2] The author cites both religious authorities (Nachmanides) and philosophical works (the Akedah by Rabbi Isaac Arama) that use natural science to support the literal existence of the Garden of Eden, showing an integration of mystical, theological, and proto-scientific approaches.

[3] The text presents a complete cycle of the soul's journey: it begins in the Garden of Eden before birth, enters the world, and returns to the Garden after death, suggesting a pre-existence of souls before their earthly incarnation.

[i] The author cites Nachmanides (Ramban) regarding the immortality-granting properties of the Tree of Life, suggesting a literal interpretation of the Garden of Eden and its features.

[ii] The author appeals to a story in the Zohar as evidence for the existence of the lower Garden of Eden, showing how kabbalistic literature is used to validate theological claims about the afterlife.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shemot — The text explicitly cites this section of the Zohar regarding how the human spirit is embodied in the lower Garden of Eden before entering the world and returns there after death, using it as textual proof for the physical reality of the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Isaiah 58:11 — The text interprets this verse as describing how souls in the Garden of Eden are spiritually nourished by the river flowing from Eden, using the concept of 'tzachtzachot' (typically translated as 'drought' but interpreted here as spiritual clarity or brilliance) as a metaphor for divine illumination. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:2 — This verse is cited to explain how the dew from the firmament of Eden nourishes those who study Torah for its own sake, creating a parallel between

פרק ל״ו

Chapter 36

הנהר של מעלה שאמרנו מוציא נשמות וממנו פורחים לתוך הגן ונהר שהוא בגן עדן תחתון מתקן הנשמות להתיישב ולזון וליהנות מאותן צחות כדוגמא שבעולם הזה ריח המים לבד מישב הנפש להאיר ולפי שמתהנים הנשמות על ההוא נהר דנגיד ונפיק מעדן יכולים להתיישב באינון צחות עליונים ולעלות למעלה. סביב העמוד העולה למעלה לפתח הרקיע סביבו יש ענן ועשן מחוץ ונגה מבפנים וזה לחפות על העולים למעלה לבל יתראו מאותם שיושבים למטה. ובשבתות ובחגים ובמועדים כשהקב״ה רוצה להתלבש בלבוש מלכות שולח ד׳ פנים של נשר ועומדים על היכל הנקראת דרור והיינו מר דרור והם נותנים קול ואין מי ששומע אותן רק אותם הנשמות שהם ראויות לעלות ומתקבצים שם ונוטלים ד׳ פנים אלו ומכניסים אותם תוך העמוד העומד באמצע ואז עולה אותו העמוד וענן ואש ועשן ונגה מלגו וב׳ אלו נקראים מכון הר ציון ומקראיה מכון הר ציון דא תקון עליון כשנקודה תחתונה מתקשטת והם מקראיה של אותה נקודה המתקשטת. ובעלות אותן נשמות עד פתח הרקיע אז סובב ההוא רקיע סביבות הגן שלש פעמים ומקול נעימות זה יוצאים כל אותן נשמות ורואים

The upper river that we mentioned brings forth souls, and from it they fly into the garden. The river in the lower Garden of Eden prepares the souls to dwell, be nourished, and enjoy those supernal radiances.[1] Just as in this world, the mere scent of water refreshes the soul and illuminates it, so too the souls derive pleasure from that river that flows forth from Eden, enabling them to settle in those supernal radiances and ascend higher. Around the pillar that rises upward to the opening of the firmament, there is cloud and smoke outside and brightness within, which covers those ascending so they cannot be seen by those who remain below. On Sabbaths, festivals, and appointed times, when the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to clothe Himself in royal garments, He sends four faces of an eagle that stand at the palace called Liberty—that is, pure myrrh—and they make a sound that only those souls worthy of ascension can hear. These souls gather there and take these four faces and bring them into the pillar standing in the center. Then that pillar rises with cloud, fire, smoke, and inner brightness. These two are called "the foundation of Mount Zion and her assemblies." "The foundation of Mount Zion" refers to the supernal rectification when the lower point adorns herself,[2] and "her assemblies" refers to the adornments of that point.

When these souls ascend to the opening of the firmament, that firmament encircles the garden three times, and from the sound of this sweetness, all those souls emerge and behold the sweetness of that firmament. They also see the ascending pillar of fire, cloud, smoke, and radiant brightness, and they all prostrate themselves. Then the souls ascend through that opening until they rise within the circle surrounding that point, and then they see what they

[1]The Hebrew term 'tzachot' (צחות) literally means 'clarity' or 'brightness' but in kabbalistic contexts refers to refined spiritual illuminations or radiances that souls experience in the afterlife.
[2]In Kabbalistic symbolism, the 'lower point' refers to the sefirah of Malkhut (Kingdom), which represents the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) that receives influx from the higher divine emanations. Its 'adornment' refers to its spiritual elevation through the prayers and good deeds of Israel.

Torah study in this world and the spiritual sustenance of souls in the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Nachmanides (Ramban) — The text references Nachmanides' view that the Tree of Life has the property of granting longevity or immortality to those who eat from it, using this as authoritative support for the literal existence of the Garden of Eden and its features. | Cf. Akedah (by Rabbi Isaac Arama) — The text cites this philosophical work as providing scientific evidence for the existence of the Garden of Eden and the Tree of Life, suggesting that even natural philosophers can verify these theological truths.

נעימות של אותו רקיע ורואים ג״כ העמוד העולה אש וענן ועשן ונגה דלהיט ומשתחוים כלם ואז הנשמות עולים בההוא פתח עד שעולים תוך העגול הסובב אותה נקודה ואז רואים מה שרואים. ומתוך אור ושמחה ממה שרואים עולים ויורדים קרובים ורחוקים והיא תאבה להם ומתקשטת באור. ואז אלביש קנאה מאור דצדיק עילאה ומסתכל ביופי הנקודה הזאת ותקונה ואוחז אותה ומעלה לה לגביה ומאיר אור באור והם לאחדים וכל חיילי השמים פותחים ואומרים אשרי העוסקים בתורה ששמחת בוראכם בכם שעטרה של בוראכם מתעטר בכם. ואחר ששני אורות אלו מתייחדים יחד ומאירים אח״כ יורדים ומסתכלים להשתעשע באותם נשמות הצדיקים ומתקנים לון להתעטר למעלה על זה נאמר עין לא ראתה אלהים זולתך יעשה למחכה לו.[i] ולאדם הראשון הקב״ה התקין לו שבעה חופות בגן עדן להשתעשע בהם ובטעם עליון בשבע רקיעים למעלה ולבקר בהיכלו בשבע רקיעים למטה ושבעה חופות עליונות היו חופפות עליו להתעטר בהם[ii] ושבעה חופות תחתונות היה עוד בהם להשתעשע בתוכם עד שנמשך אחר ראש פתנים

see.[1] From the light and joy of what they behold, they ascend and descend, both near and far, and she desires them and adorns herself with light. Then, clothed in zeal from the light of the supernal Righteous One,[2] He gazes upon the beauty of this point and its rectification, grasps it, and elevates it to Him. Light illuminates light, and they become unified. All the heavenly hosts open their mouths and say, "Happy are those who engage in Torah, for your Creator rejoices in you, for the crown of your Creator is adorned through you."

After these two lights unite and illuminate together, they descend and gaze with delight upon those souls of the righteous, and prepare them to be crowned above. Concerning this it is said, "No eye has seen, O God, besides You, what He has prepared for those who wait for Him." For Adam, the Holy One, blessed be He, prepared seven canopies in the Garden of Eden for him to delight in, with sublime taste in the seven heavens above, and to visit His palace in the seven firmaments below. Seven supernal canopies hovered over him for him to be crowned with, and there were seven lower canopies for him to delight within, until he was drawn after the serpent's head[3] which the body followed. From this exposition, we see that the delight of the righteous in the Garden of Eden causes the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence, as we explained above.

There are two firmaments: the lower firmament stands upon four living creatures, and from there the female form extends, receiving from behind the male, as it says, "You shall see My back." The upper firmament stands upon supernal living creatures,

[1] This deliberately vague phrasing reflects the ineffable nature of the divine vision experienced by elevated souls. The text implies that certain spiritual experiences are beyond description and can only be referenced indirectly.

[2] The 'supernal Righteous One' (צדיק עילאה) refers to the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation), which in Kabbalah serves as the channel that transmits divine flow from the upper sefirot to Malkhut. It is often associated with the biblical figure of Joseph, who is called 'righteous' (tzaddik).

[3] This refers to Adam's sin in the Garden of Eden. In kabbalistic interpretation, the serpent represents the evil inclination or cosmic forces of impurity that tempted Adam away from his original perfect state where he enjoyed direct divine illumination.

[i] This quotes Isaiah 64:3 (64:4 in some translations): "No eye has seen, O God, besides You, what He has prepared for those who wait for Him." This verse is used to describe the ineffable reward of the righteous in the Garden of Eden.

[ii] The metaphor of "crowning" or "being crowned" (להתעטר) appears frequently in kabbalistic literature to describe the process of spiritual elevation and the adorning of souls and divine attributes with higher light.

שהגוף נמשך אחריו הנה מהנדרש
ראינו כי עדון הצדיקים בג״ע
גורמים יחוד קודשא בריך הוא
ושכינתיה כאשר אמרנו למעלה.
ויש שני רקיעים רקיע של מטה
עומד על ארבע חיון ומשם
מתפשט דיוקן נקבה המקבלת
מאחורי הזכר וזהו וראית את
אחורי[i] ורקיע שלמעלה עומד על
חיות עליונות ושם מתפשט דיוקן
הזכר המשפיע שהוא סוד עליון.
ושני רקיעים אלו א׳ נקרא קצה
השמים ואחד נקרא קצה השמים
ונקודת בת ציון[ii] שהוא נקודה
אמצעית של מלכות למעלה
מתייחדת בצדיק עליון ולמטה
בפירות היוצאים מאותו צדיק
שהם הנשמות היוצאות מיסוד
ואינה מוצאה השעשוע מעלה
ומטה אלא בצדיק והגן הוא
מהאי נקודה הנקרא עדן וראשי
החיות הם ארבע פנים אריה
שור נשר אדם כלל כלם. והם
ארבע ראשי נהרות המגיעים
לכסא הקדוש. ומזיעת החיות
הנושאות הכסא נעשה נהר
דינור[iii] והנשמות בעלייתן
מתרחצות שם ועולות לקרבן
ואינם נשרפות אלא מתרחצות
וק״ו מסלמנדרא[iv] שלהיותה

and there the form of the male who bestows extends, which is a supernal mystery. These two firmaments are called "the end of heaven"—one is called "the end of heaven" and [the other also] "the end of heaven." The point of the daughter of Zion, which is the central point of Malkhut,[1] unites above with the supernal Righteous One and below with the fruits that come from that Righteous One, which are the souls that emerge from Yesod.[2] She finds delight above and below only in the Righteous One, and the garden is from that point called Eden. The heads of the living creatures are four faces—lion, ox, eagle, and man—encompassing all of them.[3] They are the four riverheads that reach the holy throne. 70R 75R 80R

From the perspiration of the living creatures that bear the throne, the River of Fire is formed. When souls ascend, they bathe there and rise as an offering. They are not burned but bathed, which is a fortiori from the salamander, which being of fire, its garment is whitened only in light. Similarly, the soul is from fire, taken from within the holy throne, of which it is written, "His throne was fiery flames." When it wishes to be cleansed of its impurity, it passes through fire and is bathed, and the fire consumes all impurity within it. It experiences pain, for woe to the soul that endures foreign fire, even though it is purified by it. When there is great impurity upon it, woe to it, suffering that punishment, for it is purified by fire twice. The first time, after the body receives its punishment, it is elevated to a place called Hinnom, 85R 90R 95R

[1] In the kabbalistic system, Malkhut (Kingdom) is the tenth and lowest sefirah, representing divine immanence in the created world. Its 'central point' refers to its essence or core that connects to higher divine attributes.

[2] In Kabbalah, Yesod (Foundation) is the ninth sefirah that channels divine flow into Malkhut. The souls are depicted as 'fruits' or emanations of this divine attribute, reflecting the kabbalistic view that human souls originate from and express different aspects of the divine structure.

[3] The four faces (lion, ox, eagle, and man) represent the four primary archetypes in the divine chariot described in Ezekiel's vision. In Kabbalah, they correspond to various divine attributes and cosmic forces that govern different aspects of creation.

[i] This is a reference to Exodus 33:23, where God tells Moses "you shall see My back, but My face shall not be seen." In kabbalistic interpretation, this describes the relationship between the male and female aspects of divinity, where the feminine aspect (Malkhut) receives from the "back" of the masculine aspect.

[ii] In kabbalistic terminology, "Daughter of Zion" represents the Shekhinah or divine feminine presence, which is identified with the sefirah of Malkhut (Kingdom), the lowest of the divine emanations and the channel through which divine influence flows to the created worlds.

[iii] This is a reference to the mystical concept of the River of Fire (nehar dinur) formed from the perspiration of the Chayot (living creatures) that bear God's throne. This river is mentioned in Daniel 7:10 and elaborated in mystical literature as a place where souls are purified.

[iv] The author employs a rabbinic logical principle of kal vachomer (a fortiori reasoning) using the מאש אין מתלבן אותו לבוש

אלא באור וכן הנשמה היא מאש
הנמלת מתוך כסא הקדוש דכתיב
ביה כרסייה שביבין דנור. בעת
שרוצה להתלבן מזוהמא שבה
עוברת באש ומתרחצת והאש
אוכל כל זוהמא שבה ויש לה
צער כי ווי לנשמה שסובלת
אש נכרי[i] גם שהיא מתלבנת
בו וכשיש זוהמא רבה עליה
ווי לה הסובלת עונש ההוא
כי בשני פעמים מתלבנת באש.
פעם ראשון אחר שקבלה עונש
הגוף מעלים לה במקום הנקראת
הנום[ii] ששם מצרפים הנשמות
קודם בואן ליכנס בג״ע. אם
הנשמות ההם זוכות בשמכניסים
אותן למקום ההוא יש שני
ממונים והם מלאכים מזומנים
בג״ע ועומדים על השער
וצווחים לחותם ממונים של
גהינם לקבל אותה נשמה וקודם
שמתלבנת באור צווחים ואומרים
הנם ופעמים שמתלבנת ואותם
הממונים יוצאים עמה מן אותו
המקום ומזמנים לה לפתח גן עדן
ששם אותם השלוחים ואומרים
הנם ואז מכניסים אותה נשמה
בג״ע והיא משוברת מאש גהינם
שהוא שיבור אש תחתון[iii] אע״ג שיורד מלמעלה ביון שמגיע

where souls are refined before entering the Garden of Eden. If those souls merit, when they are brought to that place, there are two appointed ones—angels stationed in the Garden of Eden who stand at the gate and call to those appointed over Gehenna to receive that soul. Before it is purified in the light, they call out saying, "Here they are!" Sometimes it is purified, and those appointed ones exit with it from that place and prepare for it the entrance to the Garden of Eden, where those messengers are, and they say, "Here they are!" Then they bring that soul into the Garden of Eden, broken from the fire of Gehenna,[1] which is the breaking of lower fire. Even though it descends from above, once it reaches the earth, it is a fire that is not so refined, and the soul is punished by it and broken. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, brings forth an illuminating sun from four openings that shine in the four sides of your Garden of Eden, reaching that soul and healing it. This is what is written: "But for you who fear My name, the sun of righteousness shall rise with healing in its wings."[2] mythological salamander, which was believed to be born from fire and immune to it. The argument is that if a salamander, being of fire, can be purified by fire without being consumed, then certainly a soul, which is also of a fiery nature, can undergo purification by fire without being destroyed.

[1] Unlike many Western conceptions of hell as eternal punishment, the Jewish concept of Gehenna presented here is primarily purgatorial—a place where souls are painfully but ultimately beneficially purified of their accumulated spiritual impurities before entering the Garden of Eden.

[2] This concluding biblical quotation ties together the passage's theme of purification followed by healing. After souls undergo the painful but necessary cleansing in the fire of Gehenna, God provides healing illumination that restores and elevates them for their existence in the Garden of Eden.

[i] The term "foreign fire" (אש נכרי) alludes to the biblical concept of "strange fire" (אש זרה) from Leviticus 10:1, where Nadab and Abihu offered unauthorized fire before God and were consumed. Here it metaphorically refers to the purifying fire of Gehenna, which is foreign to the soul's divine essence.

[ii] Hinnom refers to the Valley of Hinnom (Gei Hinnom in Hebrew), which was historically a place where idolaters sacrificed children by fire. In rabbinic literature, it became associated with a purgatorial realm where souls are purified before entering the Garden of Eden, and is the origin of the term Gehenna.

[iii] The concept of "breaking of lower fire" refers to the kabbalistic idea that the divine light becomes increasingly materialized and "broken" or fragmented as it descends through the spiritual worlds.

לארץ הוא אש שאינו כל כך
דק ונשמה נענשת בו ומשתברת
ואז הקב״ה מוציא שמש המאיר
מארבע פתחים שמאירים בארבע
צדי גן עדך ומגיע על אותה
הנשמה ומתרפאת הדא הוא
דכתיב וזרחה לכם יראי שמי
שמש צדקה ומרפא בכנפיה:[i] [ii]

פרק ל״ז

אחר שנשמה זו ישבה בגן עדן
ועדיין לא אתפרשת מדברים
של עולם התחתון מכל וכל
כשמעלים אותה למעלה צריכה
לאתפרשא מכל דברים תחתונים
ומעבירים אותה פעם אחרת
באותו נהר דינור[iii] ומתלבנת
בו מכל וכל ומתראית לפני
בורא עולם מבורכת מכל

Chapter 37

After this soul has dwelled in the Garden of Eden but has not yet completely separated from the matters of the lower world,[1] when it is elevated higher,[A] it needs to separate from all lower matters. They pass it once more through that River of Fire (Nehar Dinur) where it is completely purified, and it appears before the Creator of the Universe blessed from all sides.[B] As it gazes upon that light, it is healed and perfected in every way. Thus the souls stand in adorned gar- 5R

[A] Or: "when they elevate it upward" — The Hebrew uses an active third-person plural form ('they elevate') rather than passive voice. This alternate translation preserves the sense that there are active spiritual agents (perhaps angels or other celestial beings) who facilitate the soul's ascension, rather than it being an automatic process.

[B] Or: "and it presents itself before the Creator of the Universe, blessed from every direction" — The Hebrew 'מכל הצדדין' literally means 'from all sides/directions.' This alternative conveys more precisely the multidimensional nature of the soul's blessed state after purification.

[1] The Hebrew 'לא אתפרשת מדברים של עולם התחתון מכל וכל' emphasizes total separation from worldly attachments. This reflects the kabbalistic belief that souls must progressively detach from physical existence to ascend to higher spiritual realms.

The fire of Gehenna, though originating from divine sources above, becomes less refined at lower levels and thus causes pain to the soul.

[i] This quotes Malachi 3:20 (4:2 in some translations): "But for you who fear My name, the sun of righteousness shall rise with healing in its wings." The author applies this verse to the divine healing light that restores souls after their painful purification in Gehenna.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The author is directly quoting and paraphrasing from the Zohar's mystical cosmology regarding the Garden of Eden and the afterlife journey of souls. The structure of heaven, the River of Fire (nehar dinur), and the process of soul purification are all core Zoharic concepts. | Cf. Isaiah 30:26 — The author cites this biblical verse to support the concept that souls damaged by the purification process in Gehenna are ultimately healed by divine light. This connects the biblical text to the kabbalistic concept of soul purification. | Cf. Genesis 3 — This refers to the biblical account of Adam's fall through the serpent's temptation, but reinterprets it in kabbalistic terms as disrupting the divine canopies and unifications that were prepared for him. | Cf. Ezekiel 1 — This draws from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah), but integrates it into the structure of the Garden of Eden and the celestial realms that souls traverse after death. | Cf. Isaiah 4:5 — This alludes to Isaiah's prophecy about the future glory of Zion, but reinterprets it in kabbalistic terms as referring to the divine feminine (Malkhut/Shekhinah) and her adornments in the celestial realms.

[iii] The 'River of Fire' (Nehar Dinur) is a central concept in Jewish mystical literature, particularly in the Zohar. It represents a cosmic boundary between spiritual realms where souls are purified. According to kabbalistic tradition, all souls must pass through this river to cleanse themselves of worldly attachments before ascending to higher levels.

הצדדין ובהסתכלותה באותו האור מתרפאת ומשתלמת מכל וכל ובזה עומדים הנשמות בלבושים מעוטרים לפני האדון ה׳ צבאות שמו. ונשמות שבג״ע תחתון שאטין בכל ראש חדש ושבתות ומועדים ועולים עד המקום ההוא שנקרא חומות ירושלים[i] ששם כמה ממונים שומרי אותם החומות ואינם נכנסים לפנים עד שיתלבנו ושם משתחוים ושמחים מאור ההוא וחוזרים תוך הגן ויוצאים משם ושטות בעולם ורואים בפגרי האנשים הפושעים בי[ii] וגו׳ ואח״כ מסתכלים ובלי יסורין על יחוד שם שמים בתלמידים המתעניים בכל שני וחמישי וכדומה ובאים ואומרים למשיח והוא בוכה על רשעי ישראל כי הוא מחולל מפשעינו[iii] וכו׳ וחוזרים הנשמות למקומן. וכשיש רשעים הרבה שמורידים אותם לפני ולפנים במדורות גהינם האחרים[iv] ומקבלים עונש רב מרוב הזוהמא שבנשמותיהם אז מדליקים האש יותר לאכול אותו

ments[1] before the Lord, YHVH of Hosts is His name. 10R

The souls in the lower Garden of Eden roam about on every New Moon, Sabbath, and festival,[2] ascending to that place called the Walls of Jerusalem, where several appointed guardians watch over those walls. They do not enter within until they 15R are purified, and there they prostrate themselves and rejoice in that light, then return to the Garden. They depart from there and roam through the world, seeing "the corpses of the people who rebelled against Me," etc. Afterward, they observe those 20R who, without suffering, unify the Divine Name,[3] like students who fast every Monday and Thursday and the like. They come and tell the Messiah, who weeps over the wicked of Israel, for "he was wounded for our transgressions," etc., and the souls return to 25R their place.

When there are many wicked people who are brought down to the innermost chambers of Gehenna and receive great punishment due to the abundance of spiritual impurity in their souls, 30R then the fire is kindled more intensely to consume that impurity. Woe to the soul that endures that punishment! Fortunate are those who observe the commandments of the Torah.

When the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) wishes to 35R delight above—meaning to unify[A]—it is through the

[A] Or: "When the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) desires to take pleasure in the upper realms—which means to unite" — The Hebrew term 'להשתעשע' can be translated as 'delight,' 'take pleasure,' or 'enjoy.' Similarly, 'להתייחד' literally means 'to unite' or 'to become one,' which in mystical

[1] The concept of souls wearing 'garments' (לבושים/levushim) is important in Kabbalah. These spiritual vestments are formed from the person's Torah study and good deeds in life, and determine the soul's capacity to withstand and perceive divine light in the afterlife.

[2] The Hebrew 'שאטין' (roam/float) describes a form of spiritual movement specific to disembodied souls. The text emphasizes that souls have special mobility and privileges on sacred days in the Jewish calendar.

[3] This refers to those who achieve mystical unification (yichud) through spiritual disciplines like fasting, rather than through physical suffering. The unification of God's name is a central kabbalistic practice aimed at restoring cosmic harmony.

[i] In kabbalistic literature, 'the Walls of Jerusalem' represents a spiritual boundary between lower and higher realms of Paradise. This is not the physical Jerusalem but its celestial counterpart, which serves as a transition point for ascending souls.

[ii] This is a reference to Isaiah 66:24: 'And they shall go forth and look upon the corpses of the men who have transgressed against Me.' In this mystical context, it suggests that righteous souls witness the fate of the wicked as part of their afterlife experience.

[iii] This phrase quotes Isaiah 53:5: 'he was wounded for our transgressions.' The text applies this verse, traditionally associated with the 'suffering servant,' to the Messiah who bears the spiritual burden of Israel's sins.

[iv] According to kabbalistic tradition, Gehenna (Hell) contains multiple levels or chambers, with deeper levels corresponding to more severe punishment for greater spiritual corruption.

זוהמא ווי לאותה נשמה הסובלת
אותו העונש. אשרי שומרי
מצות התורה. השבינה כשהיא
רוצה להשתעשע למעלה[i] פירוש
להתייחד הוא על ידי רוחיהם
של צדיקים [ii]

spirits of the righteous.

כמה שנאמר וכשהיא רוצה
להשתעשע למטה ג״כ הוא
ברוחותיהם של צדיקים כאם
השמחה עם בניה ומשתעשעת
בהם[iii] וכן בחצות לילה
היא משתעשעת ומתייחדת
בהם. [iv] ברוזא קרי ופס ידא
כתבא כי אין בגן עדן אלא עסק
התורה כי הטוב שהוא השגת
האור הראשון אשר היתה יריעה
שנכתבו בו כל הנמצאות[v] והוא
לא יושג אלא על ידי התורה
שהעולם נברא בה ומהטוב ההוא
היה מוציא כל הנמצאות ואח״כ
השרישן בתורה והיינו וירא

As it is said, and when she [the Divine Presence] wishes to delight below,[1] it is also through the spirits of the righteous, like a mother rejoicing with her children and delighting in them. And so at midnight she delights and unites with them. The herald proclaims and the writing hand writes, for in the Garden of Eden there is nothing but the study of Torah, for the good—which is the attainment of the primordial light that was like a curtain on which all existences were inscribed[2]—can only be attained through Torah, with which the world was created. From that goodness, He brought forth all existences and afterward rooted them in the Torah. This is the meaning of "And God saw that it was good"—in the return of all things to their source, binding them contexts refers to the unification of divine aspects. This alternate translation emphasizes the pleasurable aspect of divine union rather than just the functional aspect.

40R

45R

50R

[1] Here, 'she' refers to the Shekhinah or Divine Presence, which is portrayed with feminine imagery in Kabbalah. The vertical dimension (above and below) is central to kabbalistic cosmology, with divine delight flowing both in upper realms and downward into our world.

[2] This poetic description references the kabbalistic concept of the primordial Torah that preceded creation and served as its blueprint. The metaphor of a 'curtain' (yeri'ah) on which all of existence was written before being actualized is drawn from rabbinic sources.

[i] In kabbalistic terminology, 'delight' (שעשוע/sha'ashua) often refers to the mystical union of divine aspects. Here it specifically refers to the union of the Divine Presence with higher divine attributes through the medium of righteous souls.

[ii] Cf. Isaiah 66:24 — The text quotes Isaiah 66:24 which describes the fate of the wicked whose corpses will be viewed by the righteous. Here it is used to show how souls from Paradise observe the fate of sinners as part of their afterlife experience. | Cf. Isaiah 53:5 — The passage refers to Isaiah 53:5, applying it to the Messiah who weeps over Israel's wicked. This reflects the kabbalistic interpretation of the Messiah bearing Israel's spiritual suffering. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The concept of souls passing through the River of Fire for purification appears frequently in the Zohar, particularly in Vayakhel, where it describes how souls must be cleansed before ascending to higher spiritual realms. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Tractate Shabbat 152b — The Talmud discusses how souls have special privileges and movements on sacred days, which is elaborated in this kabbalistic framework of souls ascending to higher realms on these occasions.

[iii] This maternal metaphor for the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) is common in kabbalistic literature, portraying God's feminine aspect as nurturing and delighting in the righteous souls like a mother with her children.

[iv] Midnight is considered a particularly auspicious time in Kabbalah when the Divine Presence is most accessible. The Zohar frequently mentions that righteous individuals should rise at midnight for Torah study and prayer to participate in this cosmic union.

[v] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the Torah served as the blueprint for creation, with all existences first being inscribed in the primordial Torah before being actualized in the physical world.

אלהים כי טוב בחזרת הדברים
אל השורש וקשרן בתורה בכל
יום[i] ודרך כללן בכלל דכתיב
וירא אלהים את כל אשר עשה
והנה טוב מאד והתורה היא העדן
העליון[ii] והצדיקים מתעדנים
כפי מה שיפתחו בסודות התורה
כך הם מאירים באור עליון
ולכן התורה נקראת לקח טוב
כי הטוב צפון בה וכן בג״ע יש
עדן נקודה סתומה שהיא נובעת
לצדיקים סוד תורה[iii] ומתעדנים
שם מהעדן ההוא הסתום והטוב
תתפשט דרך אצילות בספירות
ומשם אל הנשמות בגן עדן עליון
בבריאה ומשם אל גן עדן תחתון
ביצירה[iv] ומשם אל העוה״ז
בגשמיות הזה. וזה עקר העבודה
בעוה״ז ויאכלו הצדיקים מפרי
דרכם בג״ע ויש לו לאדם בעוה״ז
לעורר הזווג עם כלל יושבי
הגן[v] [vi]

to the Torah each day. And He generally included them all, as it is written: "And God saw all that He had made, and behold, it was very good." The Torah is the supernal Eden,[1] and the righteous delight according to how much they uncover the secrets of the Torah—thus they shine with supernal light. Therefore, the Torah is called "good teaching" because goodness is stored within it. Similarly, in the Garden of Eden there is Eden, a hidden point that flows forth to the righteous the secret of Torah, and they delight there from that hidden Eden. And the goodness extends by way of emanation through the sefirot,[2] and from there to the souls in the upper Garden of Eden in the World of Creation,[3] and from there to the lower Garden of Eden in the World of Formation, and from there to this world in its physicality. This is the essence of divine service in this world, and the righteous eat from the fruit of their ways in the Garden of Eden. It is incumbent upon a person in this world to awaken the union with all the inhabitants of the Garden.[4]

55R 60R 65R 70R

[1] This identification of Torah with Eden itself, rather than merely a path to Eden, reflects the mystical notion that Torah study constitutes the highest spiritual pleasure. The word 'Eden' literally means 'delight' or 'pleasure' in Hebrew.

[2] The sefirot are the ten divine emanations or attributes through which God interacts with the world according to Kabbalah. They serve as channels through which divine goodness flows from its infinite source into increasingly material realms.

[3] This passage outlines a hierarchical cosmology where divine light descends through four worlds: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action, our physical world). Each world contains its own version of the Garden of Eden appropriate to souls at different spiritual levels.

[4] This 'union' (zivug) has mystical significance in Kabbalah, referring to the spiritual connection that can be created between living humans and the souls of the righteous in the Garden of Eden, particularly through Torah study and contemplative practices.

[i] This suggests the ongoing divine process where creation is continuously sustained by being bound to the Torah, not just a one-time creative act in the past.

[ii] This identifies the Torah itself with the supernal Eden, suggesting that Torah study is not merely a means to access Eden but is itself the highest form of spiritual delight.

[iii] This refers to the mystical dimensions or esoteric teachings of the Torah, beyond its literal meaning. In Kabbalah, these secrets are considered the highest level of Torah understanding.

[iv] The text describes a hierarchical structure of multiple Gardens of Eden corresponding to different spiritual worlds: the upper Garden in Beriah (World of Creation) and the lower Garden in Yetzirah (World of Formation).

[v] This refers to the kabbalistic practice of creating mystical unifications or connections with the souls of the righteous who dwell in the Garden of Eden, typically through prayer, study, and contemplative practices.

[vi] Cf. Zohar — This passage reflects classic Zoharic cosmology where the Divine Presence interacts with the souls of the righteous in the Garden of Eden, especially at midnight. The Zohar frequently describes the hierarchical structure of reality (four worlds: Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) that is mentioned here. | Cf. Genesis 1:31 — The author uses this verse to develop the kabbalistic concept that everything created was first inscribed in the Torah and then bound back to it, illus-

ובחינותיו ובפרט באליך ה׳
נפשי אשא[i] כדכתיב ברכו ה׳
כל מלאכיו וכל צבאיו ואח״כ
ברכי נפשי כי בזה יזכה שבחצות
יבא הקב״ה להשתעשע ליטול
התעוררות מנשמתו אחרי מותו
בג״ע. והנה בגן בו באימת רבות
מתפשטות לכמה מציאיות[ii] ואין
כל צדיק מתפשט בכלו אלא
כפי הרשות הניתן לו והצדיקים
מתהלכים ומתעדנים בו עד
שהם מתהלכים אל סוד נקודה
האמצעית[iii] ששם סוד העדן
והשפעה לכל הגן יוצאת מאותה
נקודה האמצעית ומשתעשעים
בהשכלת ענייני הגן ונטיעותיו
עד שמגיעים אל סוד נקודת העדן
שמשם אורה והשפעה יוצאת לכל
הגן להאירו ולצחצחו ושם
עומדים האבים להשכיל בסוד
הנקודה ושם הם נעשים אשד
נהר הברכה המשקה ושם עקר
מעמד האדם כדכתיב וכל שיח
השדה וגו׳ בגין דאדם אין.
א״כ אדם עקר אשר על הברכה
באותה נקודה האמצעית. וקול
ה׳ אלהים מתהלך בגן לרוח
היום היינו סוד אותה הנקודה
אשר בגן שאותו העדן מכוון
נגדו להמשיך שם נהרי ההשפעה
ושם עקר התהלכות האדם
כדי להעלות סוד התעוררות
אל יחוד העדן בינה עם הגן

and its aspects, particularly in "To You, O LORD, I lift up my soul," as it is written, "Bless the LORD, all His angels, all His hosts," and afterward, "Bless the LORD, O my soul." For through this, one merits that at midnight the Holy One, blessed be He, comes to delight and take awakening from his soul after his death in the Garden of Eden. And behold, in the garden, with great awe,[1] many realities extend, and not every righteous person extends through all of it, but only according to the permission granted to him. The righteous walk about and delight in it until they walk to the secret of the central point, where the secret of Eden is, and influence for the entire garden flows from that central point. They delight in contemplating the matters of the garden and its plantings until they reach the secret of the point of Eden, from which light and influence emanate to the entire garden to illuminate and refine it. There they stand, yearning to comprehend the secret of the point, and there they become the waterfall of the river of blessing that waters, and there is the essential station of man, as it is written, "and every plant of the field," etc., "because there was no man." Thus, man is essentially established over the blessing at that central point.

75R 80R 85R 90R 95R

And "the voice of the LORD God walking in the garden in the cool of the day" refers to the secret of that point in the garden, which that Eden is directed toward to draw there the rivers of influence. There is the essential walking of man in order to raise the secret of awakening to the unification of Eden (Binah) with the garden (the six extremities), from which it divides into four heads of watches: the morning

100R 105R

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'באימת רבות' is challenging to translate precisely. It could also be rendered as 'with many fears/reverence' or 'with the awe of the many.' I've chosen to interpret it as describing the awesome or fearful experience of encountering divine realities in the Garden of Eden.

trating the Torah's central role in both creation and the souls' afterlife experience. | Cf. Proverbs 4:2 — The author draws on this biblical description of Torah as 'lekach tov' (good teaching) to connect it with the primordial goodness/light mentioned earlier, suggesting that the Torah contains and preserves this divine goodness. | Cf. Tikunei Zohar — This section echoes the Tikunei Zohar's detailed explanations of how divine influx descends through the four worlds (Atzilut/Emanation, Beriah/Creation, Yetzirah/Formation, Asiyah/Action), with souls experiencing different levels of Eden corresponding to these worlds.

[i] This phrase from Psalm 25:1 ("To You, O LORD, I lift up my soul") is interpreted here as a mystical practice for soul elevation and divine connection.

[ii] This describes the Garden of Eden as containing multiple mystical realities or dimensions that extend outward from a central point, reflecting the kabbalistic concept of divine emanation.

[iii] The 'central point' is a key kabbalistic concept representing the mystical center from which divine influence emanates throughout all realms of existence.

שש קצוות[i] שמשם יפרד לד׳
ראשי משמרות משמרת הבקר
מיכאל וכו׳ וכמה פעמים נשמע
בג״ע קול ה׳ אלהים כדאמרו
בזוהר חבירין אתכנשו ליחדא
האי איילתא כי קוראים על
נטיעות הגן והענפים כלם ליקשר
אל היחוד. ויחוד הצדיקים
הוא במה שהם נכללים באור
הספירות והם ב׳ מיני יחוד
א׳ בג״ע של מעלה הב׳ בג״ע
של מטה[ii] הצדיקים מתלבשים
באויר ג״ע בסוד ומרדכי יצא
מלפני המלך בלבוש מלכות
כי הצדיקים מתלבשים באויר
ג״ע אור מדת מלכות ואחר כך
אור הת״ת מאיר באויר גן עדן
ומאיר סוד לבושי הצדיקים וזהו
ג״כ סוד לבושי הצדיקים בגן
עדן של מעלה שהם שם בפלא
גדול הנשמות זכות וטהורות
לא כדמות גוף וגויה אלא שכל
זך מתלבשות בשכל נפלא אור
השכינה ואח״כ שכל הספירה
העליונה שהיא ת״ת משכלת
בהם ויתקשרו הספירות בסוד
הנשמות המתקשרות ומתלבשות
באור הספירות ומעין זה היה
ממש יחוד הספירות בימי אדם
בהיותו בסוד כתנות אור[iii] והיה
ממש לבוש באור השכינה עומד
ומצפה מתי יבא אור הת״ת ומאיר
בו ויתייחד קוב״ה ושכינתיה
באור אור לבושו ואופן היחוד

watch is Michael, etc. And many times in the Garden of Eden the voice of the LORD God is heard, as they said in the Zohar, "Beloved ones, gather to unify this hind," for they call upon the plantings of the garden and all the branches to bind to the unification. 110R

The unification of the righteous is in how they are included in the light of the sefirot, and there are two types of unification: one in the Garden of Eden above, and the second in the Garden of Eden below. The righteous are clothed in the atmosphere of the Garden of Eden, in the secret of "and Mordecai went out from before the king in royal garments," for the righteous are clothed in the atmosphere of the Garden of Eden with the light of the attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom). Afterward, the light of Tiferet (Beauty) illuminates the atmosphere of the Garden of Eden and illuminates the secret of the garments of the righteous.[1] This is also the secret of the garments of the righteous in the Garden of Eden above, where they exist in great wonder. The souls are pure and clean, not in the likeness of body and physical form, but rather as purified intellect clothed in wondrous intellect,[2] the light of the Divine Presence. Then the intellect of the supreme sefirah, which is Tiferet, comprehends them, and the sefirot are bound in the secret of the souls that are connected and clothed in the light of the sefirot. 115R 120R 125R 130R

Similar to this was the actual unification of the sefirot in the days of Adam when he existed in the secret of "garments of light" and was actually clothed in the light of the Divine Presence, standing and waiting for when the light of Tiferet would come and illuminate him. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence would be unified in the light 135R 140R

[1] The text presents a complex mystical process where righteous souls receive illumination first from Malkhut (Kingdom) and then from Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), representing a progressive integration with divine attributes after death.

[2] This passage describes the non-physical nature of souls in the Garden of Eden, emphasizing their purely intellectual or spiritual nature, free from bodily form but still possessing a kind of 'garment' or vehicle for expression.

[i] This describes the mystical unification between Binah (Understanding, the third sefirah) and the 'six extremities' (the six lower sefirot from Chesed to Yesod), representing the joining of higher and lower divine attributes.

[ii] The text distinguishes between two types of mystical unification experienced by righteous souls: one in the upper Garden of Eden (associated with higher divine realms) and one in the lower Garden of Eden (closer to our physical realm).

[iii] This refers to the 'garments of light' that Adam and Eve wore before the Fall, according to rabbinic interpretation. The biblical text in Genesis 3:21 mentions 'garments of skin' (כתנות עור), but a mystical reading suggests the original state was 'garments of light' (כתנות אור), differing only by the letter aleph.

הנעשה בלבוש הזה עתה אין
באן מקומו רק שאנו מוסרים
נפשותינו שם בסוד אליך ה׳
נפשי אשא. ואינו מגיע לנו אלא
ניצוץ נעלם מלבוש בעלי היחוד
כדכתיב ורוח לבשה את עמשי
ורוח לבשה את שמעיה ורוח
לבשה את זכריה וכדומה. וזה
נעלם ובלתי מושג בלבוש הזה.
ולבוש זה יתוקן בתחיה[i] כי
יעמדו הגופים גופי עור ויתהפכו
לאור ויתקיים בו במקום שבעלי
תשובה עומדים וכו׳ כי יזדכך
גם לבוש זה והדרוש הזה רחב
מאד במקומו. כי מה שאפילו
עתה רע הכל יתהפך לטוב. [ii]

of his garment. The manner of unification that occurs in this garment—this is not the place to discuss it now, except that we deliver our souls there in the secret of "To You, O LORD, I lift up my soul." And what reaches us is only a hidden spark[1] clothed in those who achieve unification, as it is written, "And a spirit clothed Amasai," "And a spirit clothed Shemaiah," "And a spirit clothed Zechariah," and the like. And this is hidden and unattainable in this garment. This garment will be rectified in the resurrection, for the bodies, bodies of skin, will arise and be transformed into light. And it will be fulfilled that "in the place where penitents stand,"[2] etc., for this garment too will be purified. This subject is very broad in its proper place. For what is even now evil will all be transformed to good.[3]

פרק ל״ח

Chapter 38

נחזור לדבר על דבר הרקיע
אשר זכרנו למעלה. רקיע שעל

Let us return to discuss the firmament which we mentioned above. The firmament above the garden is be-

[1]The text suggests that living humans can only experience a small 'spark' of the divine unification that righteous souls experience in the Garden of Eden, through moments of spiritual inspiration like those described in biblical verses about the spirit 'clothing' certain individuals.
[2]This is an allusion to a Talmudic teaching (Berakhot 34b) that 'In the place where penitents (ba'alei teshuvah) stand, even the completely righteous cannot stand,' suggesting that transformed bodies at resurrection will achieve an even higher spiritual status than their original state.
[3]This concluding statement reflects the optimistic eschatology of Jewish mysticism, suggesting that the ultimate purpose of creation is the transformation of all evil into good, a process that begins with individual spiritual practice and culminates in the resurrection.

[i]This refers to the Jewish belief in resurrection (techiyat ha-metim), when the author suggests that physical bodies will be transformed back into spiritual 'garments of light.'
[ii]Cf. Psalm 25:1 — The text interprets this psalm as a mechanism for mystical unification with divine attributes, suggesting that properly reciting this prayer facilitates the soul's elevation both in life and after death | Cf. Psalm 103:20-22 — This sequence is interpreted mystically as a pattern for spiritual ascension, suggesting that by following this order in prayer, humans can join with angelic hosts in unified divine service | Cf. Zohar on Song of Songs — This Zohar quote is used to illustrate how in the Garden of Eden, souls participate in the cosmic unification of divine attributes, particularly joining together to elevate the Divine Feminine | Cf. Genesis 2:5 — The text reinterprets this verse mystically to suggest that the 'absence of man' refers to the central position of human souls as connectors between divine realms | Cf. Genesis 3:8 — The text interprets this verse mystically to describe how divine influence emanates from a central point in the Garden of Eden that serves as a conduit between higher and lower realms | Cf. Book of Esther 8:15 — This historical narrative is reinterpreted mystically to represent how righteous souls are 'clothed' in the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) in the Garden of Eden | Cf. Genesis 3:21 — The text refers to a rabbinic interpretation that before sin, Adam and Eve wore 'garments of light' rather than skin, using this to explain the mystical state of souls before the resurrection | Cf. 1 Chronicles 12:18 — This verse and similar ones about Shemaiah and Zechariah are used to illustrate the rare phenomenon of divine spirit 'clothing' or enveloping certain individuals, which the text suggests is a glimpse of the soul's future state after resurrection | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Berakhot 34b — The text applies this teaching to the resurrection, suggesting that just as repentant sinners stand higher than the completely righteous, bodies transformed from 'skin' to 'light' will achieve an elevated spiritual status

הגן הוא למטה ויש עוד רקיע
של הנקודה העליונה העומד
על ארבע חיות גדולות[i] וכל
חיילות תחתונות מצפות מזונם
מההוא רקיע ובו ארבע פתחים
רשומים באותיות ההוי״ה
המאירים ומהם יורד טל לזון
כל חיילות ומחנות קדושות
וכל חיילות תחתונים מעלים
שירות ותושבחות בסיבוב רקיע
עליון זה ואומרים בקול נעים
ברוך כבוד ה׳ ממקומו ומתייחד
ה׳ אלהים ובו רשומים כמה
אותיות וכמה שמות הקדש
וממנו מקבלים כל הרקיעים
שלמטה שהם לצד הקדושה
עד שמגיעים לרקיעים אחרים
של סטרא אחרא הנקראים
יריעות עזים.[ii] העליונים
הם בסוד מרכבות עליונות
קדושות ואלה אחרים עומדים
לחוץ בדבריהעולם והם צדדין
של מעשי הגוף וחופים על
הרקיעים שבפנים כקליפה על
המוח.[iii] התחתונים נקראים
שמים והעליונים השמים שמים
לה׳. מכאן ולהלאה אין מי
שיוכל לידע רק אור קטן בלתי
אפשר להתקיים בו והכי חמרו
באדרא דנשא עדן דלעיל ליתמאן דידע ליה ולא שבלויי בר
ההוא אריך אנפין[iv] הדא הוא
דכתיב אלהים הבין דרכה והוא ידע את מקומה. וגם שגבהו

low, and there is another firmament of the supernal point that stands upon four great celestial creatures. All the lower hosts await their sustenance from this 5R firmament, which has four openings inscribed with the four letters of the divine name YHVH[1] that illuminate. From these openings descends dew to nourish all the hosts and holy camps. All the lower hosts offer songs and praises as they encircle this upper fir- 10R mament, saying in a pleasant voice,[2] "Blessed is the glory of the LORD from His place," and thus "the LORD God" becomes unified. Upon it are inscribed many letters and many holy names, and from it all the lower firmaments receive—those that are on the 15R side of holiness—until they reach other firmaments of the Other Side, called "curtains of goats' hair." The upper ones exist as holy celestial chariots, while these others stand outside in worldly matters, representing aspects of bodily actions, and cover the inner firma- 20R ments like a shell over the brain. The lower ones are called "heavens," and the upper ones "the heavens of heavens unto the LORD."

Beyond this point, no one can know more than a small light in which it is impossible to exist, as they 25R explained in the Idra of Nasso: "The Eden above—there is none who knows it or its paths except for that Long-Faced One (Arich Anpin)," as it is written, "God understands its way, and He knows its place." Even though His ways are elevated to the heights 30R of the universe, there is still some evidence for our inquiry: "Happy are those who dwell in Your house; they will continue to praise You, Selah."

From the words of the Zohar at the beginning of Parashat Yitro, pages 42-43, it appears that be- 35R sides the dwelling place of the Court of Death for

[1] The Hebrew text uses the term ההוי״ה, which is a conventional way of referring to the four-letter divine name (Tetragrammaton) without pronouncing it directly. This name is considered most sacred in Jewish tradition.

[2] This references the angelic praise from Ezekiel 3:12, which is incorporated in Jewish liturgy, particularly in the Kedushah prayer during the repetition of the Amidah.

[i] This refers to the four celestial creatures from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah), which are often depicted as having faces of a man, lion, ox, and eagle.

[ii] The 'Other Side' (Sitra Achra) refers to forces of impurity or evil in Kabbalistic thought. The metaphor of 'curtains of goats' hair' alludes to the coverings of the Tabernacle in Exodus 26:7, here repurposed as a metaphor for spiritual barriers.

[iii] This metaphor of shell (kelipah) and brain (moach) is central to Kabbalistic thought, where shells or husks represent barriers that conceal divine light (the 'brain' or inner essence).

[iv] Arich Anpin ('Long Face' or 'Long-Suffering') is a divine configuration in Kabbalah representing God's aspect of infinite patience and mercy, often associated with the divine attribute of Keter (Crown).

דרכיו ברומו של עולם מ״מ קצת
ראיה הוא על הדרוש שאנו בו
אשרי יושבי ביתך עוד יהללוך
40 סלה. מדברי הזהר ריש פ׳ יתרו
דף מ״ב ומ״ג נראה שמלבד מדור
חצר מות לנפש וג״ע תחתון לרוח
וג״ע עליון ללשמה וצרורא
דחיי למעלה שכל מדרגות אלו
45 הם בעולם הנשמות שהוא אחר
המות יש עוד עולם הבא שהוא
אחר התחיה כדברי הרמב״ן
בשער הגמול. ומלבד זה יש עוד
מעלה אחרת עליונה שהיא ביתא
50 עילאה קדישא דזכאה חולקיה
דההוא דמדוריה עם מלכא
בביתיה ועליו נאמר אז תתענג
על ה׳[i] ואמר כי ביתא דא נקרא
אי״ן[ii] ע״ש. ובטול הקליפה תלוי
55 בתחיה דאז נהירו ינהר בעלמא
בלא סתימו מגו מוחא כן כתוב
בפ׳ יתרו דף ס״ט ע״ב וכבר
דברנו מזה למעלה. וכתוב
בסבא דף ק״ח ע״ב דבבנין בית
60 המקדש העתיד יקדים מוחא
דכתיב הטיבה ברצונך את ציון
בקדמותא ולבתר תבנה חומות
ירושלם[iii] דלא יהיו מסטרא
דקליפא רק מצד הקדושה
65 דכתיב ואני אהיה לה חומת
אש סביב וזהו ראו עתה כי
אני אני הוא ואין אלהים עמדי
בקדמת דנא דעם אנ״י ה׳ למטה
אלהים אחרים עו״ג. אני אמית

the nefesh (vital soul), the lower Garden of Eden for the ruach (spirit), the upper Garden of Eden for the neshamah (higher soul), and the Bond of Life above—all these levels existing in the World of Souls after death—there is also the World to Come, which is after the resurrection, as Nachmanides writes in Sha'ar HaGemul. Beyond this, there is yet another higher level,[1] which is the holy supernal house, and fortunate is the portion of one whose dwelling is with the King in His house. Of this it is said, "Then you shall delight yourself in the LORD," and it is said that "this house is called 'Ayin' (Nothingness)."[2]

The nullification of the shell (kelipah) depends on the resurrection, for then light will shine in the world without being concealed from within the brain, as is written in Parashat Yitro, page 69b, and we have already discussed this above. And it is written in Saba, page 108b, that in the building of the future Temple, the brain will come first, as it is written, "Do good in Your favor unto Zion" at first, and afterward "build the walls of Jerusalem," which will not be from the side of the shell but from the side of holiness,[3] as it is written, "And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about." This is the meaning of "See now that I, even I, am He, and there is no god with Me," unlike before when alongside "ANI" (I) the LORD, below were "other gods" (idolatry). "I kill and I make alive"—those who will exist at that time and have not tasted the taste of death will nevertheless experience death, and He will resurrect them immediately, so that no impurity will remain at all, and the world will be renewed.

Each righteous person increases in stature in

40R 45R 50R 55R 60R 65R

[1]The text is describing a spiritual cosmology with multiple levels of afterlife experience, each more elevated than the previous. This highest level transcends even the World to Come after resurrection.

[2]The paradoxical concept of 'Ayin' (nothingness) as the highest divine realm is central to Kabbalistic thought, particularly in the school of Isaac Luria. It represents transcendence beyond all comprehensible attributes.

[3]The author is describing a transformation where the boundaries between holiness and impurity (represented by walls) will no longer function as barriers but will themselves become holy—transformed from physical limitations into divine protection.

[i]This is a quote from Isaiah 58:14, which in its original context refers to delighting in God through proper observance of the Sabbath. Here it is reinterpreted as referring to the ultimate spiritual delight in the highest level of the World to Come.

[ii]The term 'Ayin' (literally 'nothing' or 'nothingness') in Kabbalah paradoxically refers to the highest divine realm that transcends human comprehension, associated with the sefirah of Keter (Crown).

[iii]This comes from Psalm 51:20, but the author interprets it mystically to describe the future spiritual rebuilding of Jerusalem with walls of divine fire rather than physical barriers.

ואחיה[i] דמאן דהוו בההוא זמנא דלא טעמו טעמא דמותא מינה תהא לון מיתה ויקים להו מיד בגין דלא אשתאר מההיא זוהמא כלל ויחודש העולם. וכל צדיק וצדיק מוסיף במעלתו בעה״ב דאמרי׳ בשבת שלכל צדיק עושין לו מדור לפי כבודו ובסוף מס׳ תענית עתיד הקב״ה לעשות מחול לצדיקים בג״ע וכו׳ בפ׳ קמא דמגילה עתיד הקב״ה להיות עטרה בראש כל צדיק וכו׳ ובפ׳ המוכר את הספינה אמר משבעה חופות שיש לכל צדיק בג״ע וכל הנביאים לא נתנבאו אלא לימות המשיח כדאמרי׳ בפ׳ אין עומדים אבל לעה״ב וכו׳ והקפואים בעה״ז יקרים הם לעה״ב כדאמרי׳ בפ׳ אלו עוברין. וכתב בעל יפה מראה בדף ע״ח כי לעולם הצדיקים מוסיפין והולכים תמיד אחרי מותם ואמרו בקהלת רבתי כל מי שהוא יגע בתורה בעה״ז מוליכים אותו לבית מדרשו של שם ועבר ושל אברהם יצחק ויעקב ומשה ואהרן וכו׳ עד ועשיתי לך שם כשם הגדולים אשר בארץ. ובשוחר טוב מזמור פ״ד אין נחת רוח לחברים לעולם עד היכן עד יראה אל אלהים בציון ע״ד שאמרו בגמרין צדיקים אין להם מנוחה וכו׳ כפרש״י מג״ע לפרגוד ומפרגוד למחנה שבינה שנאמר ילכו מחיל אל חיל. ואחר התחיה אז יהיה עקר השגת עץ החיים ויזכו כלם לכתנות אור כי נשמות הצדיקים

the World to Come, as we say in Tractate Shabbat that for each righteous person, a dwelling place is made according to his honor. At the end of Tractate Ta'anit: "The Holy One, blessed be He, will make a circle for the righteous in the Garden of Eden," etc. In the first chapter of Megillah: "The Holy One, blessed be He, will be a crown on the head of every righteous person," etc. And in the chapter "The Seller of the Ship," it speaks of seven canopies that exist for every righteous person[1] in the Garden of Eden. All the prophets prophesied only about the days of the Messiah, as we say in the chapter "Ein Omdin," but regarding the World to Come, etc. Those who are deprived in this world will be precious in the World to Come, as we say in the chapter "Elu Ovrin."

The author of Yefeh Mareh writes on page 78 that the righteous continuously progress and advance after their death. And it is said in Kohelet Rabbati that whoever toils in Torah in this world is led to the academy of Shem and Ever, and of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and Moses and Aaron, etc., until "I will make for you a name like the name of the great ones who are in the earth." And in Midrash Shocher Tov, Psalm 84, "There is no contentment for the companions forever—until when? Until 'they appear before God in Zion,'" following what they said in our Gemara: "The righteous have no rest," etc., as Rashi explains: from the Garden of Eden to the curtain, and from the curtain to the camp of the Divine Presence,[2] as it is said, "They go from strength to strength."

After the resurrection, the primary attainment will be of the Tree of Life, and all will merit garments of light, for the souls of the righteous in the Garden of Eden enjoy the Tree of Life—some reach out with a hand alone, some take, and some eat,[3] each according to his measure that he achieved in this world.

[1] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Bava Batra 75a) that in the World to Come, each righteous person will have seven celestial canopies made from clouds of glory, based on Isaiah 4:5.

[2] This describes the continuous spiritual ascension of righteous souls, moving from one celestial realm to another. The 'curtain' (pargod) refers to the mystical veil separating the Divine Presence from lower realms.

[3] This metaphorical language describes different levels of spiritual attainment and comprehension of divine mysteries, with 'eating' representing the most complete absorption of divine wisdom.

[i] This quote from Deuteronomy 32:39 is interpreted here to mean that even those who survive until the messianic era will still experience death and immediate resurrection to ensure complete purification from spiritual impurity.

בג״ע נהנים מעץ החיים יש שולח
יד לבדו יש לוקח ויש אוכל כל
110 אחד לפי שעורו שעשה בעה״ז
אמנם אחר התחיה יתחדש העולם
בכח החיים העתידים בסוד
עולמו של יובל כי עסק התורה
שיהיה אחר התחיה יהיה בסודות
115 הנעלמות[i] אשר עדיין לא נתגלו
בעולם וכפי אותו עסק ירויחו
העה״ב ואותו העה״ב יהיה יותר
רוחני כלומר בלי התלבשות
אמא עלאה דמקננא בכורסיא
120 אלא בעה״ב העליון ממש הבינה
בעצמה בלי מסכים. וזהו סוד
בשנת היובל הזאת תשובו איש
אל אחוזתו.[ii] וכמו שאמרנו
למעלה כי בעה״ז עוסק האדם
125 במצות מעשיות ובפשטי התורה
וסודותיה אשר נתנו לידרש
בעה״ז ומתוכם יזכה לסודות
המתגלים בג״ע עליון ותחתון
שהם התעוררות אורות הבריאה
130 כמו כן תהיה התחיה הבנה
לעה״ב כנזכר מלבד כי העה״ב
אחר התחיה יהיה בגוף ונפש כי
יזדכך כל כך הגוף בטל התחיה
שיהיה רוחני כנשמה[iii] ובאותו
135 עסק התורה והמצות שיעסוק
בזמן הזה יזכה ליכנס בעוה״ב
בגוף ונפש ובזה לא יקפח הקב״ה
שכר הגוף שעסק בעה״ז:[iv]

However, after the resurrection, the world will be renewed with the power of the future lives in the secret of the world of Jubilee, for the study of Torah after the resurrection will concern hidden mysteries that have not yet been revealed in the world. According to that study, they will profit in the World to Come, and that World to Come will be more spiritual, meaning without the enclothement of the supernal Mother who nests in the Throne, but in the truly higher World to Come—Binah itself without veils.[1] This is the secret of "In this year of Jubilee you shall return, each man to his possession." 110R 115R

As we said above, in this world a person engages in practical commandments and in the plain meanings of the Torah and its mysteries that were given to be expounded in this world. Through these, one merits the mysteries revealed in the upper and lower Garden of Eden, which are the awakening of the lights of Creation. Similarly, the resurrection will be a preparation for the World to Come, as mentioned, except that the World to Come after the resurrection will involve both body and soul, for the body will be so purified by the dew of resurrection that it will be spiritual like the soul. And through that engagement in Torah and commandments in which one engages in this time, one will merit to enter the World to Come with body and soul. In this way, the Holy One, blessed be He, will not deprive the body of its reward[2] for its efforts in this world. 120R 125R 130R 135R

[1] Binah (Understanding) is the third of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah. The text suggests that in the highest World to Come, souls will experience this divine attribute directly, without the mediating 'veils' that normally separate humanity from direct divine experience.

[2] This addresses a theological question about bodily resurrection: if spiritual existence is superior, why resurrect bodies at all? The answer given is that the body deserves reward for its participation in fulfilling commandments during earthly life.

[i] The text suggests that Torah study after resurrection will involve mystical dimensions not yet revealed in our world, indicating a progressive revelation of divine wisdom across cosmic history.

[ii] This verse from Leviticus 25:13 about the Jubilee year (when ancestral lands were returned to their original owners) is interpreted mystically as referring to souls returning to their divine source in the World to Come.

[iii] The concept of 'dew of resurrection' (tal ha-techiyah) appears in rabbinic literature as the mystical substance that will resurrect the dead. Here it is described as having transformative properties that spiritualize the physical body.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Yitro, pages 42-43 — This reference establishes the hierarchical structure of the soul's journey after death through multiple celestial realms, providing the foundational cosmology that the current text elaborates upon. | Cf. Ramban (Nachmanides), Sha'ar HaGemul — The author cites Nachmanides to support the distinction between the intermediate state of disembodied souls in Gan Eden and the ultimate World to Come following resurrection, establishing a multi-

פרק ל״ט

Chapter 39

מלבד הנדרש בפרקים הקודמים מהצירוף שהתקין אלהינו מרחם לנפשות ורוחות ונשמות לבל ידח מהם נדח עוד בפרק זה נשוב להוסיף בו מה שהורונו מזה חכמינו ז״ל וההוגה בו ימצא איזה חדוש כאשר עשינו בדרושי ג״ע ברחמי שמים. אמרו בבראשית רבה כי האדים העולים מן השמים ומן הארץ הם נפשות הנדחים וכתב הראב״ד בהקדמתו לספר יצירה בדף ח׳ שהם עצמם מתפעלים להיות באוצרות שלג ואוצרות ברד[i] ובהם נפרע הקב״ה מן הרשעים שנאמר אשר חשכתי לעת צר ליום קרב ומלחמה כי באבני ברד נפרע מפרעה ומאנשי ארץ ישראל בימי יהושע וכן בכל יום נידונים הרשעים מאש לשלג ומשלג לאש וכן התמורות וכן הובא בירו׳ בפ׳ חלק וכאשר יתמו עונם יחזרו להיות אפר הרומז למלכות תחת כפות רגלי הצדיקים יסוד וזהו כי לשלג יאמר הוה ארץ. ותרגום

Beyond what was discussed in the previous chapters about the arrangement our God mercifully prepared for souls, spirits, and higher souls so that none of them would be cast away, in this chapter we will add what our Sages of blessed memory taught us about this. The reader will find some novel insights, as we did in our discussions of the Garden of Eden, with the help of Heaven. They said in Bereishit Rabbah that the vapors rising from the heavens and from the earth are the souls of those who have been cast away.[1] The RABD (Rabbi Abraham ben David) wrote in his introduction to Sefer Yetzirah on page 8 that these very souls are transformed to exist in the storehouses of snow and storehouses of hail, through which the Holy One, blessed be He, punishes the wicked, as it is said: "Which I have reserved for the time of trouble, for the day of battle and war" (Job 38:23). For with hailstones He punished Pharaoh and the people of the land of Israel in the days of Joshua. And so every day the wicked are judged, from fire to snow and from snow to fire,[2] and so are the transformations. This is also brought in the Jerusalem Talmud in chapter Chelek. And when their iniquity is complete, they will return to become ashes, which alludes to Malkhut (Kingdom) beneath the feet of the righteous ones,[3] which is Yesod (Foundation).

[1] The concept of 'souls of the cast away' (נפשות הנדחים) is a complex kabbalistic idea referring to souls that have been separated from their divine source due to sin. These souls are seen as existing in a state of spiritual exile, transformed into elemental forces used for divine punishment.

[2] This description of the wicked being judged through alternating extremes of fire and snow represents the kabbalistic understanding of purification through opposites. The soul must experience contrary states to be cleansed of impurity before it can be reintegrated into the divine order.

[3] This refers to the mystical hierarchy of souls in the afterlife, where the righteous stand above (spiritually superior to) the wicked. The metaphor of the wicked becoming ashes under the feet stage afterlife cosmology. | Cf. Zohar, Idra of Nasso — The citation establishes the epistemic humility required when discussing the highest celestial realms, noting that only Arich Anpin (a divine configuration) has access to the highest Eden. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Yitro, page 69b — The reference supports the text's claim that at resurrection, the spiritual 'shells' or barriers will be eliminated, allowing unmediated divine illumination to permeate the world. | Cf. Talmudic tractates—Shabbat, Ta'anit, Megillah, and Bava Batra (The Seller of the Ship) — These Talmudic citations collectively establish the traditional rabbinic understanding of the World to Come as including both spiritual and quasi-physical rewards for the righteous, which the author incorporates into his kabbalistic cosmology. | Cf. Kohelet Rabbati — This reference supports the text's conception of ongoing spiritual progress after death, with scholars continuing their studies in celestial academies led by biblical figures. | Cf. Psalm 84, as interpreted in Midrash Shocher Tov — This reference reinforces the text's view that souls don't remain static after death but continue ascending through spiritual realms, 'from strength to strength' as the psalm states.

[i] The 'storehouses of snow and hail' reference comes from Job 38:22, where God asks Job if he has seen these divine storehouses, establishing them as cosmic repositories of divine power.

אשר חשכתי וגו׳ די גנזית תלגא נעידן עקתא בגיהנם וברדא ליום קרבא דפרעה. ואמר הראב״ד שם כי יש שני מיני שלג[i] יעויין [ii] שם.

This is the meaning of "For to the snow He says, 'Fall on the earth'" (Job 37:6). And the translation of "Which I have reserved..." is "that I have stored snow for the time of distress in Gehenna, and hail for the day of battle with Pharaoh." And the RABD says there that there are two types of snow, see there for details.

ואיך גהינם מתהוה אחר המות לראויים אליו הוא כי צער החולי נדבק בו מיום אשר הנפש בחול עליו[iii] וחום החולי חוזר להיות חומר לחום האש היסודי אשר בצאת הנפש מגוף החולה תגיע ליסוד האש בכח הדמיון אשר הגיע לה מצער החולי וחומו[iv] וחנה האש היסודי נדבק בנפש ההיא ונוסף חום על חומה עד שיגיע אליה האש היורד מן נהר דינור ותחול על האש ההיא ועוד ירד עליה סערת ה׳ חמה וסער מתגורר על ראש רשעים יחול והוא הדין למת מקרירות שיתחבר אליו דינים ושפטים

How Gehenna forms after death for those deserving it: The pain of illness adheres to a person from the day the soul falls ill, and the heat of the illness transforms into material for the elemental fire. When the soul departs from the sick person's body, it reaches the element of fire through the power of imagination that it acquired from the suffering and heat of the illness. The elemental fire then adheres to that soul, and heat is added to its heat until it is reached by the fire descending from the River of Dinur,[1] which settles upon that fire. Additionally, "the storm of the LORD, wrath has gone forth, a whirling tempest; it will whirl upon the head of the wicked" (Jeremiah 23:19). The same principle applies to one who dies from cold conditions—judgments and punishments from snow and hail will attach to him.

of the righteous represents their total spiritual subjugation and the triumph of good over evil in the cosmic order.

[1] The River of Dinur (or River of Fire) appears in Daniel 7:10 and features prominently in rabbinic and mystical literature as a celestial river of fire where angels are purified and through which souls must pass after death.

[i] The RABD (Rabbi Abraham ben David) discusses two types of mystical snow, likely referring to different levels or qualities of divine judgment. This reflects the kabbalistic tendency to perceive dual aspects within cosmic forces.

[ii] Cf. Book of Job — The author cites Job 38:23 ('Which I have reserved for the time of trouble, for the day of battle and war') to support the idea that God uses the storehouses of snow and hail to punish the wicked, showing how natural elements are instruments of divine justice. | Cf. Bereishit Rabbah — The author cites this midrash to establish the concept that vapors rising from heaven and earth are actually the souls of the wicked who have been cast away, establishing a connection between natural phenomena and spiritual punishment. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah with RABD's commentary — The author relies on Rabbi Abraham ben David's commentary to expand on the mystical concept of souls being transformed into elements of divine punishment, showing how kabbalistic sources understand the afterlife of the wicked. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, chapter Chelek — The reference reinforces the concept of souls being judged through transformations between fire and snow, adding Talmudic authority to these mystical concepts of punishment in the afterlife. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's previous discussions on Garden of Eden — The author refers to his earlier discussions about the Garden of Eden, creating continuity within the book and suggesting that this chapter on Gehenna is a counterpart to the earlier discussions of paradise.

[iii] This passage reveals a fundamental kabbalistic concept where physical suffering during illness leaves a metaphysical imprint that affects the soul's experience after death. This establishes a direct connection between one's experience during life and their posthumous state.

[iv] The reference to 'power of imagination' (koach hadimyon) is significant in kabbalistic thought, suggesting that the soul retains impressions of physical experiences through a faculty that bridges material and spiritual realms.

מצד שלג וברד ושם הוי״ה יהיה
בידו החיים והבריאות כי שמש
ומגן ה׳ צבאות והוא משלח
החיים לכל הנמצאים אמנם לא
בשווי רק כפי הכנת כל אחד
ולכל איש יש לו נתיב ידוע שבו
יושפע שפע החיים אל הנתיב
ההוא הפרטי וכן לכל פרט
מפרטי הנמצאים וכן בעולם
הגלגלים וכן בשכלים וכן בעולם
המלאכים והמרכבות וכן בעולם
הספירות. הגיהנם של מטה
מצאתי שהוא בארקא הנקרא
ארץ נוד ושם קודמות הנשמות
קודם שיבואו אל עדן העליון
ושם לילית הרשעה שהיא קדמת
עדן נוכח הקדושה ואי אפשר
ליכנס אל העדן אם לא יקדים
האדם תחלה אל ארץ נוד וירצה
שם פעלו[i] ואמרו כי היא נמשכת
מן האש היסודי של מעלה הנקרא
פחד יצחק שהוא פנימי וחזק
יותר משאר אשות ובו יכולת
לשרוף רוח הנשמות הגם שהם
דקות שמעלת זאת האש גדולה
יותר ממקום שיוצאות הנשמות
כי יש אש אוכלת אש[ii] וכותל
אחד מפסיק בין ג״ע לגיהנם וג״ע
הוא מצד צפונית מזרחית שנאמר
וצפונך תמלא בטנם. ולצד

The name YHVH controls life and health, for "the LORD of Hosts is a sun and shield" (Psalms 84:12), and He sends forth life to all creatures—though not equally, but according to each one's readiness. Every person has a known pathway through which the flow of life is channeled to that particular path, and likewise for every detail of existence, and similarly in the world of celestial spheres, in the intellects, in the world of angels and chariots, and in the world of the divine emanations. 50R 55R

I have found that the lower Gehenna is in Arka, called the Land of Nod,[1] where souls arrive before they come to the upper Eden. There dwells the wicked Lilith, who is situated before Eden opposite holiness.[2] It is impossible to enter Eden unless a person first passes through the Land of Nod and makes amends for his deeds there. They say it derives from the elemental fire above called "the Fear of Isaac,"[3] which is internal and stronger than other fires. It has the power to burn the spirit of souls, though they are subtle, because the quality of this fire is greater than the place from which souls emerge, for "there is fire that consumes fire." 60R 65R 70R

A single wall separates the Garden of Eden from Gehenna. The Garden of Eden is located on the northeastern side, as it is said, "Your hidden treasure fills their bellies" (Psalms 17:14). On the northwestern side is Gehenna. A spring flows from the Garden of Eden, and the spring that flows from Gehenna is hot, as they said, "The hot springs of Tiberias pass 75R

[1] In kabbalistic cosmology, Arka is one of the seven earths or layers beneath our world. The identification with the biblical Land of Nod (where Cain was exiled after killing Abel, Genesis 4:16) creates a connection between the first murderer's punishment and the realm of posthumous suffering.

[2] Lilith appears in Jewish mystical texts as Adam's first wife who became a demon. Her positioning 'opposite holiness' reflects the kabbalistic concept of opposing spiritual forces, with Lilith representing the demonic feminine counterpart to the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah).

[3] The term 'Fear of Isaac' (Pachad Yitzchak) comes from Genesis 31:42 where Jacob refers to God as 'the Fear of Isaac.' In Kabbalah, this became associated specifically with the divine attribute of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), which manifests as fire and is connected to the left side of the divine structure.

[i] This presents the cosmological concept that souls must undergo purification in a realm of punishment before entering paradise, reflecting the kabbalistic understanding that spiritual ascent requires preliminary cleansing.

[ii] This paradoxical concept of 'fire consuming fire' appears in several kabbalistic texts to describe how higher spiritual forces can overwhelm lower ones of the same element, emphasizing the hierarchical nature of spiritual reality.

צפונית מערבית יש גיהנם[i] ומעין יוצא מג״ע והמעין היוצא מגיהנם הוא חם וכן אמרו חמי טבריא דחלפי אפתחא דגיהנם. ואמרו בפרשת תרומה דף ק״נ כי הגיהנם הוא אור דולק יום ולילה מחמימות יצה״ר של רשעים ובה ז׳ פתחים כנגד ז׳ מיני רשעים ובכל מדור יש מלאך ממונה תחת יד דומה[ii] וכמה חיילות עמהם. ואמרו כי אש הגיהנם הוא מאש גיהנם של מעלה ונשמות המתלבנות מזוהמת עוה״ז ועולים משם כאשר אמרנו נשארת הזוהמא ההיא שם ומדרגות רעות הממונים על אותה זוהמא נקרא צואה רותחת ושחטאו והחטיאו ומתו בלא תשובה נדונים שם ובו ז׳ מדורות עיין פרטותם בציוני פ׳ אחרי מות ושם האריך לבאר מהו דין הנקר׳ גיהנם בדף ס״ט וד׳ ע׳ ובדף ע״א וע״ב ביאר מהגמול בג״ע ועה״ב וימות המשיח והתחיה.[iii]

by the entrance of Gehenna."[1]

They said in Parashat Terumah, page 150, that Gehenna is a light burning day and night from the heat of the evil inclination of the wicked. It has seven entrances corresponding to seven types of wicked people, and in each section there is an angel appointed under the authority of Dumah, with many hosts accompanying them. They said that the fire of Gehenna comes from the fire of the upper Gehenna. Souls that are purified from the defilement of this world rise from there, as we have said, while that defilement remains there. The evil levels appointed over that defilement are called "boiling excrement."[2] Those who sinned and caused others to sin, and died without repentance, are judged there. It has seven sections—see their details in Tziyuni on Parashat Acharei Mot, where he elaborates on what is the judgment called Gehenna on pages 69 and 70, and on pages 71 and 72 he explains the reward in the Garden of Eden, the World to Come, the days of the Messiah, and the resurrection.

וכן ליצה״ר ז׳ שמות כי מתאנה ומחטיא לאדם בז׳ מיני

The evil inclination has seven names, for it entices and causes humans to sin through seven types of [1]This reference to the hot springs of Tiberias comes from the Talmud (Shabbat 39a), which explains their heat as resulting from passing by the entrance to Gehenna. This integrates physical geography with mystical cosmology, providing a tangible connection to otherworldly realms.

[2]This vivid and disturbing imagery draws on Talmudic descriptions (Gittin 57a) where sinners in Gehenna are punished in boiling excrement. The text interprets this metaphorically as representing spiritual levels that manage the defilement left behind when souls are purified.

[i]The text presents a detailed spiritual geography, placing Gehenna in the northwest. This directional symbolism is significant in Jewish mysticism, where north represents judgment and west represents the end/death.

[ii]The seven compartments of Gehenna are a common feature in rabbinic and kabbalistic literature, usually corresponding to seven categories of sin or seven levels of the soul's descent.

[iii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 150 — The text directly quotes the Zohar (Parashat Terumah) for its description of Gehenna as a light burning continuously from the heat of the evil inclination of the wicked, with seven entrances corresponding to seven types of sinners. | Cf. Tziyuni on Parashat Acharei Mot — The author directs readers to Tziyuni (a kabbalistic commentary) for additional details about the structure of Gehenna and the rewards in the Garden of Eden and World to Come. | Cf. Jeremiah 23:19 — The biblical verse is used to substantiate the claim that divine wrath descends upon the wicked after death, adding to their punishment in Gehenna. | Cf. Psalms 84:12 — This verse is cited to establish that God controls life and health, showing how divine mercy can counteract the judgments of Gehenna. | Cf. Psalms 17:14 — The verse is used to establish the northeastern location of the Garden of Eden, using biblical support for the mystical cosmography being described.

פתויים כפי שניו בי׳ שנים
ראשונים באופן אחד וכן בכל
עשר משבעים שנותיו[i] ושמותיו
הם כפי פתוייו כשתעיין בהם
והאחרון שהאדם זקן נקרא צפוני
כי מחטיאו בהצנע ובפתויי לבו
בדעות כוזבות[ii] והמתפתה
אחריו נופל באחד מז׳ מדורות
אלו המכוונים לעצות יצה״ר
למרק חטאו ממנו ולעתיד לבא
יוסר כל כחותיו ואפי׳ החלק
הנקרא צפוני וידחנו במקום
שאין בני אדם להחטיאם דכתיב
והדחתיו אל ארץ ציה וגו׳.
ואמרו כי באותו עולם מפשיטין
את הרשעים מעדיים ומלבישים
לצדיקים שאין להם כגון צדיק
שמת בחצי ימיו לובש עדיי
הרשע שתהה על מצותיו[iii] ועיין
מזה בס׳ פרדס בשער הנשמה
ותאנא כי בגיהנם יש מדורות
ששם יורדים מחטיאי הרבים
הנקרא צואה רותחת[iv] בנזכר
ואינם יוצאים משם לעולם וכן
המשחיתים זרעם נדונים שם
לדורי דורות[v] ובשבתות ור״ח temptations corresponding to their age:[1] in the first ten years of life in one manner, and similarly in each decade of their seventy years. Its names correspond to its methods of temptation, as you will find when examining them. The final one, when a person is elderly, is called "the hidden one" (tzefoni),[2] for it causes one to sin discreetly and through the enticements of the heart with false beliefs. One who is seduced by it falls into one of these seven chambers [of Gehenna] that correspond to the schemes of the evil inclination, in order to purge one's sin. In the future, all its powers will be removed, even the part called "the hidden one," and it will be banished to a place where there are no humans to lead astray, as it is written: "And I will drive him into a parched land, etc." (Joel 2:20).

105R

110R

115R

They said that in that world, the wicked are stripped of their adornments, which are then placed upon the righteous who lack them. For instance, a righteous person who died in the prime of life[3] wears the adornments of a wicked person who regretted his good deeds.[4] See more about this in Sefer Pardes, in the Gate of the Soul. And it was taught that in Gehenna there are chambers where those who lead the masses to sin descend, called "boiling excrement" as mentioned, and they never emerge from there.

120R

125R

[1]The Hebrew uses the expression 'כפי שניו' (according to one's years), suggesting that the evil inclination adapts its tactics based on a person's age and stage of life.

[2]The Hebrew term 'צפוני' has a dual meaning: it can mean both 'hidden' and 'northern.' In Jewish mysticism, the north is associated with evil forces, while in this context, it specifically refers to the subtle, concealed nature of temptation in old age.

[3]The Hebrew 'בחצי ימיו' literally means 'in half his days,' referring to someone who died young or in middle age before completing their natural lifespan.

[4]The Hebrew phrase 'שתהה על מצותיו' has a specific technical meaning in rabbinic literature, referring to someone who performed good deeds but later regretted them, thereby losing their spiritual merit.

[i]The text refers to the traditional Jewish view of human life spanning seventy years, as mentioned in Psalms 90:10, and suggests that the evil inclination (yetzer hara) uses different strategies in each decade of life.

[ii]The term 'tzefoni' (northern/hidden one) creates a wordplay connecting to Joel 2:20 about the 'northern one' (army) being driven away. In kabbalistic thought, the north is associated with evil and judgment. In old age, the text suggests that the evil inclination works more subtly through intellectual and theological errors rather than obvious physical temptations.

[iii]This reflects the kabbalistic concept of spiritual 'garments' or 'adornments' (attainments) that souls wear in the afterlife. The phrase 'תהה על מצותיו' (regretted his good deeds) refers to someone who performed good deeds but later regretted them, thereby forfeiting their spiritual merit.

[iv]This graphic term appears in Talmudic literature (Gittin 57a) to describe one of the worst punishments in Gehenna, specifically for those who mock the words of the sages. Here it is applied more broadly to those who lead others to sin.

[v]The extreme severity of punishment for sexual transgressions, particularly masturbation, reflects kabbalistic views about the cosmic significance of reproductive forces and the spiritual damage caused by their misuse.

וי״ט אינם נדונים אבל אינם
יוצאים משם כשאר רשעים
דיש להם מנוחה וישראל שלא
שמר שבת בעה״ז אין לו מנוחה
לעולם[i] וממונה אחד מוציא
גופו ומכנים אותו לגיהנם
לעין הרשעים ורואין כי סביבו
תולעים ונשמתו אין לה מנוחה
באור גהינם ועליהם כתיב ויצאו
וראו בפגרי האנשים הפושעים בי
וגו׳. וכשיוצא שבת אותו ממונה
מחזיר הגוף למקומו ונדונים כל
אחד לעצמו וכל זה בעוד שהגוף
הוא בקיומו כי אחר שכלה נאמר
ולא יעיר כל חמתו וכל הרשעים
בעוד הגוף שלם בכל אבריו
תוך הקבר נדונים גוף וריח כל
אחד הראוי לו כיון שהגוף נאכל
דין הרוח כלה הצריך לצאת
יוצא הצריך לנוח ינוח הצריך
להיות אפר תחת רגלי הצדיקים
כל אחד בראוי לו נעשה לו.
ולכן אפי׳ לצדיקים טוב להם
להקבר בקרקע שיכלה הגוף
מהר ושלא ידון הגוף והרוח
יחד בכל יום[ii] כי אין שום צדיק
שאין לו דין הקבר וכ״ש לרשעים
וכיון שהגוף כלה הדין נח מכל
אחד.[iii]

Similarly, those who destroy their seed [through masturbation][1] are judged there for all generations. On Sabbaths, New Moons, and festivals they are not judged, but unlike other wicked people, they do not leave that place though they have rest. A Jew who did not observe the Sabbath in this world has no rest forever. An appointed angel removes his body and brings it into Gehenna for the wicked to see, and they observe that it is surrounded by worms, while his soul has no rest in the light of Gehenna. Of them it is written: "And they shall go forth and look upon the corpses of the men who rebelled against Me, etc." (Isaiah 66:24). When the Sabbath ends, that appointed angel returns the body to its place, and each one is judged individually.

All this occurs while the body still exists intact. Once it has decomposed, it is said: "He will not awaken all His wrath" (Psalms 78:38). All the wicked, while their bodies remain whole with all their limbs inside the grave, are judged—both body and spirit—each according to what is appropriate for them. Once the body is consumed, the judgment of the spirit ends: that which needs to depart departs; that which needs to rest rests; that which needs to become ashes beneath the feet of the righteous[2]—each one receives what is appropriate. Therefore, even for the righteous, it is beneficial to be buried in the ground so the body decomposes quickly and the body and spirit are not judged together daily, for there is no righteous person who

130R 135R 140R 145R 150R 155R

[1] The Hebrew 'המשחיתים זרעם' is a euphemistic reference to masturbation or other non-procreative sexual activities. I've added clarification in brackets since this might not be immediately clear to modern readers.

[2] This is an allusion to Malachi 3:21 (4:3 in Christian Bibles): 'And you shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet.' In kabbalistic thought, this refers to souls that undergo complete dissolution or serve as a foundation for the righteous.

[i] The special severity for Sabbath violators reflects the central importance of Sabbath observance in Judaism, where it is considered equal to all other commandments combined and a testimony to belief in divine creation.

[ii] This statement offers a mystical justification for traditional Jewish burial practices that avoid embalming and use simple wooden coffins that decompose quickly, allowing the body to return to the earth promptly.

[iii] Cf. Joel 2:20 — The author uses this biblical verse to suggest that in the messianic future, the evil inclination (particularly its most subtle manifestation in old age) will be completely removed from humanity. | Cf. Isaiah 66:24 — This verse is applied specifically to Sabbath violators, suggesting their punishment is particularly severe and public, serving as an example to others in the afterlife. | Cf. Psalms 78:38 — The author uses this verse to suggest that once the body has decomposed, the punishment becomes less severe, as God does not maintain His full wrath eternally. | Cf. Sefer Pardes — The author refers readers to this text for more detailed information about the concept of the wicked's spiritual garments being transferred to the righteous in the afterlife. | Cf. Shabbat 152b (Talmud) — While not directly quoted, the passage's discussion of does not undergo the judgment of the grave, and certainly this applies to the wicked. Once the body has decomposed, the judgment rests from everyone. 160R

ואמרו בזהר פ׳ תרומה דף קנ״ב שאות קוף רומז לסטרא אחרא שהיא בקוף בפני הקדושה אינה מתיישבת בשום מקום בעולם וסי׳ איש לשון בל יכון בארץ ושולטת במקום הגיהנם[i] ואות טית מתיישבת בכל מקום ואין ישוב לאות ק׳ במקום ששולטת אור אות טית ועל עיר לוז[ii] נשארה בבריאת עולם אות טית תלויה באויר על אותו מקום ואור אות זה נותנת חיים בעה״ז ליושבים שם ובמקום המקדש וחמשכן נצטיירו ונחקקו כל האותיות יחד כראוי ולכן הוצרך בצלאל במשכן שהיה יודע לצרף כל האותיות[iii] דוגמת הצדיק עליון:[iv]

They said in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 152, that the letter Kuf alludes to the Other Side, which is like a monkey before Holiness[1]—it does not settle in any place in the world, as it is written, "A man of [evil] tongue shall not be established on earth" (Psalms 140:12). It rules in the place of Gehenna, while the letter Tet settles in every place. The letter Kuf has no settlement in a place where the light of the letter Tet dominates. Regarding the city of Luz, during the creation of the world, the letter Tet remained suspended in the air[2] above that place, and the light of this letter gives life in this world to those who dwell there. In the place of the Temple and the Tabernacle, all the letters were properly formed and engraved together. This is why Bezalel was needed for the Tabernacle, as he knew how to combine all the letters, resembling the Supernal Righteous One.[3] 160R 165R 170R 175R

[1] This simile portrays the 'Other Side' (forces of impurity) as merely imitating true holiness without genuinely embodying it, just as a monkey might mimic human behavior without human understanding. The letter Kuf (ק) visually resembles the letter Hei (ה) but with a descending tail, symbolizing how evil attempts to imitate good but ultimately descends into lower realms.

[2] In Jewish mysticism, letters were understood as actual cosmic forces that could physically manifest. The image of the letter Tet hovering above the city of Luz explains the city's legendary immortality through the protective power of this letter, which is the first letter of 'tov' (good).

[3] This reference to 'the Supernal Righteous One' (הצדיק עליון) likely refers to the divine attribute of Yesod (Foundation) in the kabbalistic Tree of Life. Bezalel's ability to properly combine letters mirrors the cosmic function of Yesod, which harmonizes and channels divine energies.

body decomposition and its relationship to spiritual judgment echoes Talmudic concepts about post-mortem experiences.

[i] The text establishes a cosmic geography where the letter Kuf (ק) has dominion in Gehenna (Hell), while Tet (ט) rules in places of holiness, revealing how Hebrew letters were understood to have actual metaphysical dominions.

[ii] Luz was a legendary city in rabbinic tradition that the Angel of Death could not enter. The passage explains this immortality as being due to the letter Tet (ט) hovering over it, since Tet is associated with 'tov' (good) and life.

[iii] This refers to the rabbinic tradition that Bezalel possessed knowledge of the combinations of letters with which heaven and earth were created, suggesting that building the Tabernacle required cosmic wisdom equivalent to creation itself.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah 152b — The author cites this Zohar passage to explain how Hebrew letters have cosmic significance beyond their linguistic function. The contrast between Kuf (associated with impurity) and Tet (associated with holiness) illustrates how even the building blocks of creation contain opposing spiritual forces. | Cf. Psalms 140:12 — This verse is used to connect the 'monkey-like' quality of the letter Kuf with spiritual instability and impurity. By citing this verse, the author establishes a link between biblical authority and kabbalistic letter symbolism. | Cf. The city of Luz — The reference to Luz connects to Jewish traditions about a mythical city where death had no dominion. The text explains this immortality through the protective presence of the letter Tet, establishing a mystical reason for the city's legendary status. | Cf. Bezalel's knowledge of פרק מ׳

Chapter 40

במתניתא תנא כי בגיהנם יש ב׳ סופרים הכותבים זה מקום פלוני וזה מקום פלוני זכה נוטל חלקו וחלק חבירו בג״ע ופי׳ מורי זלה״ה[i] כי נעשה צנור לשכר המגיע לחברו על דרך הנמנה מעשרה ראשונים שנוטל שכר כנגד כלן[ii] לא לגרוע חלקם אלא שכלם זוכים על ידו ונשאר לו כנגד כלן והוא אינו חסר ועיין בפ׳ י״ד ח״ב ממאמר חקור דין[iii] מהו עטרותיהם בראשיהם. והטיול בג״ע הוא כפי זכותן של צדיקים זכו ארוכות לא זכו קצרות כדאמרו על טיול דקב״ה עם אברהם אבינו ע״ה בחורבן הבית[iv] ואמרו כי נקרא גיהנם לפי שהיא שוחה עמוקה שיורדים בה על עסקי חנם[v] והנפשות שעולים מעלין אותם לשלוחי ג״ע ואומרים הנם כנזכר למעלה ועל הנפשות שאינם צריכים לבון צווחין לון הנם קחו ולכו

In a baraita [external teaching] it was taught that in Gehenna there are two scribes who write,[1] "This one's place is here," and "That one's place is there." If one merits, he takes both his portion and his fellow's portion in the Garden of Eden. And my teacher, of blessed memory, explained that he becomes a channel for the reward[2] that reaches his fellow, in the manner of one who is counted among the first ten [to arrive at synagogue], who receives reward equal to all of them. This is not to diminish their portions, but rather they all merit through him, and he retains a reward equal to all of them while he himself loses nothing. See chapter 14, part 2 of the discourse "Investigation of Judgment" regarding the meaning of "their crowns on their heads."[3]

The journeying in the Garden of Eden corresponds to the merit of the righteous[4]—if they merited much, they journey long distances; if they did not merit as much, they journey short distances, as they said regarding the Holy One, blessed be He, walking with our father Abraham, peace be upon him, during the destruction of the Temple.

[1] This image of two scribes in Gehenna who record the designated places of souls is a mystical concept not found in mainstream rabbinic literature, reflecting the kabbalistic nature of this text.

[2] The concept of becoming a "channel" (צנור) for divine blessing is central to kabbalistic thought, suggesting that righteous individuals serve as conduits through which divine abundance flows to others.

[3] This refers to the rabbinic teaching that in the World to Come, the righteous sit with crowns on their heads enjoying the radiance of the Divine Presence, a concept that the author apparently elaborated on in an earlier section of the work.

[4] The text presents a conception of the afterlife where even in Paradise, there are gradations of experience based on one's merits, with greater merit resulting in more expansive spiritual movement.

combining letters — By referencing Bezalel's mastery of letter combinations, the author connects the Temple/Tabernacle construction with cosmic creation, suggesting that sacred space required proper integration of all spiritual forces, including the reconciliation of opposing letters like Kuf and Tet.

[i] The author is referring to his teacher, Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620), whom he mentions repeatedly throughout Ma'avar Yabok as a source of kabbalistic teachings.

[ii] This is based on the talmudic teaching that one who arrives early to synagogue receives reward equivalent to all who come after him, without diminishing their reward.

[iii] "Chikor Din" (Investigation of Judgment) appears to be a section or discourse from an earlier part of Ma'avar Yabok that discusses the rewards of the righteous in the afterlife.

[iv] This refers to a midrashic account where God is described as walking with Abraham to show him the destruction of the Temple, emphasizing that even divine movements are measured according to the capacity of the recipient.

[v] The text employs a folk etymology to explain the name "Gehenna" (גיהנם) by breaking it into components that suggest "valley" (גיא) and "for nothing" (הנם), implying people descend there for worthless or meaningless activities.

כמבואר למעלה. ואין דבר
נצחי אלא במדת הטוב ופירוש
ותולעתם לא תמות דוקא אבל
תתבטל ואשו של גיהנם אין לו
כביה עולמית[i] [ii]

And they said that it is called Gehenna [גיהנם] because it is a deep pit into which people descend on account of worthless matters. When souls ascend from there, they are brought up to the emissaries of the Garden of Eden, who say, "Here they are" [הנם], as mentioned above. And regarding souls that do not require purification, they call out, "Here they are—take them and go," as explained above. Nothing is eternal except that which is in the attribute of goodness. The interpretation of "and their worm shall not die" is specific [to the worm], but [the worm] will eventually cease to exist. And the fire of Gehenna will never be extinguished [in this world], but after [the end of] the world it will be extinguished. This is the meaning of "there is no Gehenna in the future," referring to its fire, and we have already said that the space of Gehenna will be sanctified with the sanctity of the Garden, and the wicked will no longer exist, but they will be rectified.[1]

אבל אחר העולם יכבה וזהו אין
גיהנם לעתיד לבא[iii] וירצה על
אור דידה וכבר אמרנו כי חללה
של גיהנם יתקדש בקדושת הגן
ורשעים עוד אינם ברם יתוקנו.
וכתוב בתקון מ״ח שהמלאכים
קדושים שהם אש יסודם בגבורה
ומלאכי חבלה שהם אש יסודם

But after the world [comes to an end], it will be extinguished,[2] and this is the meaning of "There is no Gehenna in the World to Come"—referring to its fire. We have already said that the void of Gehenna will be sanctified with the same holiness as the Garden [of Eden], and the wicked will no longer exist, yet they will be rectified.

It is written in Tikkun 48 that the holy angels

[1] This statement reflects the author's ultimately optimistic view of divine judgment. Rather than eternal punishment, he suggests that even the wicked will eventually undergo rectification (תיקון), a concept central to kabbalistic thought that envisions the ultimate restoration of all creation to harmony with the divine.

[2] The phrase 'after the world' (אחר העולם) is somewhat ambiguous in the original. I've interpreted it as referring to the end of the current world-age, which is consistent with the discussion of the World to Come that follows.

[i] The text appears to end mid-sentence here, but the translation completes the thought based on the context, which discusses the temporary nature of Gehenna.

[ii] Cf. Chikor Din (Investigation of Judgment) — The author references his own earlier text to elaborate on the rewards that await the righteous in the World to Come. This adds depth to the discussion of how merit is distributed in the afterlife. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 47b — The text draws on this talmudic concept to explain how one righteous person can gain additional reward without diminishing others' rewards, using a familiar religious principle to explain a more mystical concept about the afterlife. | Cf. Isaiah 66:24 — The author reinterprets this verse, which seems to describe eternal punishment, to align with a more redemptive view where even Gehenna is temporary and ultimately all souls will be rectified. | Cf. Talmud Nedarim 8b — The text draws on talmudic discourse about whether punishment in Gehenna is eternal to support its more merciful view that ultimately even the space of Gehenna will be sanctified.

[iii] This is a rabbinic teaching that appears in Nedarim 8b, where it states that in the messianic future, Gehenna will cease to exist. The author qualifies this to mean specifically that its fire will be extinguished, while its space will be sanctified.

בגיהנם ויש מלאכים שיסודם
מרוח עמוד האמצעי ויש שהם
ממים שעל הרקיע וכל מלאך
יש בו שם הוי״ה כי הוא בכל
מקום עלת העלות מיחד ארבע
אותיות[i] ושם מפרש גדולת
שם הוי״ה בפ׳ פקודי מתבאר
התפשטות ראשון של הקליפה
הנקרא צלמות[ii] פירוש צלמות
רכיבת הזכר על הנקבה ומזה
נמשכות המלחמות וכל שופכי
דמים ומוצא רוגז ושנאה על אלה
במדרגה ראשונה של התפשטותה.
מדרגה שניה ממנה מוצא כל
המחבלים לעשות דין בגלוי
במסתרים מעשיהם ושם אף וחמה
ואלה הם הזרועות של הקליפה
ויש שלשה קשרים לימין ושלשה
לשמאל משם מוצא עברה וזעם
וצרה משלחת מלאכי רעים הוא
התפשטות שלישי לה. מדרגה
רביעית הוא התפשטות הגוף
ממנו יוצא כח לשפוך דמים.
מדרגה חמישית אינון ירכין
דילה ושם רצין בסטרא אחרא
בג׳ קשרים מימין וג׳ משמאל
ומרעין דרשעים מהכא נפקין
מדרגה ששית הוא יונק לההוא
נחש עקלתון[iii] והעובד ה׳ ירחיק
עצמו מהם במעשיו הטובים
וידיחם מעליו. [iv]

whose essence is fire have their foundation in Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), while the destructive angels whose essence is fire have their foundation in Gehenna. There are angels whose foundation is from the spirit of the central column,[1] and there are those from the waters above the firmament. Every angel contains within it the divine name YHVH, for He is everywhere—the Cause of all Causes unifies the four letters. There [in Tikkun 48], the greatness of the divine name YHVH is explained. 55R 60R

In Parashat Pekudei, the first expansion of the kelipah (negative force) called Tzalmavet is explained. The meaning of Tzalmavet is "the mounting of the male upon the female,"[2] and from this flow wars and all bloodshed, and the source of rage and hatred—these are in the first level of its expansion. The second level from it is the source of all destructive forces that execute judgment openly while their deeds are concealed—there [reside] anger and wrath. These are the arms of the kelipah, and there are three knots to the right and three to the left. From there emerges fury, indignation, and distress—"a company of evil angels"—this is its third expansion. 65R 70R

The fourth level is the expansion of the body, from which emerges the power to shed blood. The fifth level comprises its thighs, and there run in the Other Side three knots on the right and three on the left, and the diseases of the wicked emerge from here. The sixth level nurses that twisted serpent. One who serves the Lord will distance himself from them through his good deeds[3] and will drive them 75R 80R

[1] In kabbalistic literature, the 'central column' (עמוד האמצעי) refers to the middle line of the sefirot (divine emanations), particularly Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), which balances the right column of mercy and the left column of judgment.

[2] This sexual imagery is typical of kabbalistic texts that describe cosmic processes in terms of gendered interactions. Here, it portrays negative spiritual forces (kelipot) as originating from a distorted form of masculine-feminine union.

[3] This concluding ethical instruction shifts from cosmological description to practical guidance,

[i] This is a reference to a fundamental kabbalistic concept that God as the ultimate cause ('Cause of all Causes') unifies the four letters of the divine name YHVH, which represent different aspects of divine emanation.

[ii] This term appears in Job 10:21 and elsewhere in biblical literature, usually translated as 'shadow of death.' Here the author offers a kabbalistic interpretation, parsing it as 'tzelem-mavet' (image of death) and relating it to negative sexual forces.

[iii] This phrase 'twisted serpent' appears in Isaiah 27:1 and is traditionally identified with Leviathan. In kabbalistic literature, it represents the most fundamental negative spiritual force.

[iv] Cf. Tikkun 48 of Tikkunei Zohar — The text directly references Tikkun 48, which discusses the angelic hierarchy and how different types of angels derive from different divine attributes and elements. This reference establishes authority for the cosmological system being presented. | Cf. Parashat Pekudei — The text references this section of the Zohar that discusses the structure of the negative spiritual forces (kelipot). By citing this authority, the author demonstrates how away from himself.

ועיין בפ׳ בראשית ופקודי
מהיכלי התמורות כי שם מתפרש
דברים הרבה ממה שהם בגיהנם
כמו שבהיכלי הקדושה מתפרש
דברים הרבה וחיילות גדולות
שהם בחדרי גן עדן. ומשפטי
גיהנם כלים בי״ב חדש ולכן
יש שכתבו כשמזכירין הת״ח
אין צ״ל ז״ל כמו שאין אנו
אומרים אותו על משה ואהרן
והתנאים והאמוראים.[i] ואפי׳
צדיקים ובינונים יורדים לגיהנם
יש מי שיורד להצלת הזולת
כדאמרו בסוף תקון ל״ג ויש
מי שיורד ע״צ המרוק ויש מי
שיורד לראות חלילה והוא
דרך לשערי ג״ע כדרך מדבר
לבאי הארץ.[ii] וגיהנם אמרו
שהוא מזיעתן של חיות נושאי
הכסא[iii] בשעה שכסא הכבוד
מכביד עליהם בעת רעה
מחמת עבירות התחתונים ולכן

See [Zohar] Parashat Bereshit and Pekudei regarding the Palaces of Exchange, for there many things are explained about Gehenna, just as in the Palaces of Holiness many things and great hosts that dwell in the chambers of the Garden of Eden are explained. The judgments of Gehenna end after twelve months, and therefore some have written that when mentioning Torah scholars, it is unnecessary to say "of blessed memory," just as we do not say it for Moses, Aaron, the Tannaim, and the Amoraim. Even the righteous and the intermediate descend to Gehenna[1]—some descend to rescue others, as stated at the end of Tikkun 33; some descend for the purpose of purification; and some descend, heaven forbid, to observe, as it is a pathway to the gates of the Garden of Eden, like the wilderness for those entering the Land.[A] They said that Gehenna is formed from the sweat of the Chayot [celestial beings] who bear the Throne,[B] when the Throne of Glory weighs heavily upon them in times of evil due to the sins of those below. Therefore, Gehenna was created from their sweat, for in times of Divine

[A] Or: "like the desert for those who enter the Promised Land" — This alternate translation clarifies that 'the Land' refers specifically to the biblical Promised Land, which might not be immediately clear to readers unfamiliar with Jewish textual conventions.

[B] Or: "from the perspiration of the Living Creatures who carry the Throne" — The term 'Chayot' specifically refers to the Living Creatures described in Ezekiel's vision, so this alternate translation might be more precise in conveying the biblical reference, though 'celestial beings' in the original translation helps modern readers understand the context.

suggesting that understanding this complex spiritual structure has moral implications for human behavior.

[1] This challenges the simplistic notion that Gehenna is only for the wicked, presenting a more nuanced view where different souls experience it differently based on their spiritual level.

the Zohar's teachings on the kelipot support his explanation of Gehenna's structure and eventual transformation. | Cf. Exodus 23:20 and Psalm 78:49 — The phrase 'משלחת מלאכי רעים' (a company of evil angels) appears to reference Psalm 78:49, which describes God sending 'evil angels' as punishment. This biblical allusion establishes that even destructive forces operate under divine authority.

[i] The reference to not saying 'of blessed memory' for Moses, Aaron, and the Tannaim and Amoraim (early rabbinic sages) implies that these figures are considered so eternally alive in Jewish tradition that they don't need the honorific typically used for the deceased.

[ii] This is a significant cosmological concept in the text: Gehenna is portrayed not merely as a place of punishment but as a necessary pathway to the Garden of Eden, just as the Israelites had to traverse the wilderness before entering the Promised Land.

[iii] This striking image portrays Gehenna as originating from the struggle of celestial beings when burdened by human sin, suggesting an intimate connection between human actions and cosmic reality.

נברא מזיעתן גיהנם כי בעת רצון
הכסא נושא את נושאיו ק״ו מארון
הברית[i] ושמעתי אומרים כי נהר
דינור מתהוה ג״כ מזיעתן של
ת״ח העוסקים בתורה ומנצחין
זה את זה בהלכה.[ii] ועיין בפ׳
ל׳ ול״א בח״ב של עבודת הקדש
המדבר מזה. ואמרו בתקונים דף
צ״א כי מנהר דינור תלויים בו
ס׳ ענפים מאש הנקראים ששים
גבורים וחם שתין פולסי דנורא
דמחיוהו למטטרו״ן.[iii] ובנהר
דינור יש בו כחות ודינים קשים
מזיקים שצומחים ומתיילדים
להעניש שם הרשעים ונקראים
קוץ ודרדר ולמטה כיוצא בזה
ארץ הגשמית מוציאה חיצונים
באישות ועכברים ויתושים
ותולעים וקוצים וברקנים. ונחל
עדניך הוא נהר דנפיק מעדן
דעין לא ראתה ומשם יפרד לד׳
אתוון בשם בן ד׳ ויש נהר למטה
דהוא מטטרו״ן דאתפרש לד׳
סטרין שהם מיכאל וגבריאל
רפאל נוריאל שהם ד׳ מחנות
שכינה. ג״כ באדם יש רמז ג״ע

favor, the Throne carries its bearers[1]—all the more so [than] the Ark of the Covenant. I have heard it said that the River of Fire is also formed from the sweat of Torah scholars who engage in Torah study[2] and debate the law with one another. See chapters 30 and 31 in part two of Avodat HaKodesh which discusses this. And they said in Tikkunim, page 91, that from the River of Fire hang sixty branches of fire called "sixty mighty ones," and these are the sixty lashes of fire with which they struck Metatron. In the River of Fire there are harsh powers and judgments, harmful entities that sprout and are born to punish the wicked there, and they are called "thorns and thistles."[A3] Similarly below, the physical earth produces external entities such as ants, mice, mosquitoes, worms, thorns, and briers. "The river of Your delights" is the river that flows from Eden, which "no eye has seen," and from there it divides into the four letters of the four-letter Name.[4] There is also a river below, which is Metatron, which divides into four directions: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Nuriel, who are the four camps of the Divine Presence. Likewise, in humans there is an allusion to the Garden of Eden and Gehenna. The Garden of Eden is represented in the mystery of the neshamah,

110R 115R 120R 125R 130R

[A] Or: "thorns and brambles" — While 'thorns and thistles' is the traditional biblical translation (Genesis 3:18), 'thorns and brambles' might be more familiar to some contemporary readers.

[1] This refers to a paradoxical concept in Jewish mysticism where what appears physical (like people carrying the Ark) is actually spiritual (the Ark carrying them). The text extends this to the Throne relationship with celestial beings.

[2] This presents a positive counterpart to Gehenna's negative origins. While Gehenna comes from the sweat of celestial beings burdened by sin, the purifying River of Fire comes from the intellectual 'heat' of Torah study. This establishes Torah study as a cosmic force that creates purifying elements in the spiritual realms.

[3] This phrase from Genesis 3:18 (God's curse after Adam's sin) is applied metaphorically to spiritual entities in Gehenna, creating a parallel between physical and spiritual consequences of sin.

[4] This refers to the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) and establishes a correspondence between the mystical river, divine name, and four archangels mentioned next, showing how cosmic structures mirror divine attributes.

[i] This refers to the rabbinic tradition (Sotah 35a) that the Ark of the Covenant miraculously carried those who appeared to be carrying it. The author applies a fortiori reasoning (kal vachomer) to suggest that the Divine Throne has even greater supernatural powers.

[ii] This presents a fascinating parallel: just as negative forces create Gehenna through struggle, the intellectual 'heat' generated by Torah scholars debating creates the purifying River of Fire, suggesting that intense Torah study has cosmic effects.

[iii] This refers to a Talmudic story (Chagigah 15a) where the angel Metatron received sixty lashes of fire for sitting in heaven (an act that could be misconstrued as suggesting there are 'two powers in heaven'). The text connects this punishment to the cosmic River of Fire.

וגיהנם.[i] ג״ע בסוד הנשמה ורוח ונפש שבמוח ושבלב. וגיהנם היא הכבד שבו המרה [ii]

ruach, and nefesh[1] [soul components] in the brain and heart. And Gehenna is the liver, which contains the gall

שהיא חרבא דמלאך המות ומצד הטחול יש עצירות קטטה כי הם נגד ג׳ ראשי המשחית כנגדם בקדושה מוח לב ריאה כנגד שלשה פני המרכבה ואדם כוללם כלם. ובתקון נ״ג א׳ אמר ווי לבני נשא דלא משתדלי באורייתא דאתקריאו עצים יבשים[iii] דאינון עתידים לאתוקדא באשא דגיהנם וגם דמתרבא אילנא דהוא גופא דאורייתא ולית ליה איבא דאינון פקודין דעשה בתיב רק עץ אשר תדע כי לא עץ מאכל הוא אותו תשחית וכרת כי בעולם המעשה צריך לקשט נשמתו בסוד המעשה עם דבורו ומחשבה ורעותא ליחוד ארבע

which is the sword of the Angel of Death,[2] and from the side of the spleen there is constipation and strife, for they correspond to the three heads of the destroyer. Corresponding to them in holiness are the brain, heart, and lungs, which parallel the three faces of the Divine Chariot, and man includes them all. And in Tikkun 53 it states: "Woe to the people who do not engage in Torah study, who are called dry trees, for they are destined to be burned in the fire of Gehenna. Moreover, the tree, which is the body of the Torah, grows but has no fruit, which are the positive commandments." It is written, "Only a tree which you know is not a fruit-bearing tree, you may destroy and cut down," for in the World of Action one must adorn one's soul through action together with speech, thought, and intention to unify the four letters of the Divine Name, whose spirituality connects the four worlds[3]—Atzilut, 135R 140R 145R 150R

[1]The text presents the human soul components as corresponding to the Garden of Eden, while bodily organs like the liver correspond to Gehenna. This microcosmic-macrocosmic correspondence is a key concept in Jewish mysticism, suggesting that spiritual realms are reflected in human anatomy.

[2]The text uses a complex system of kabbalistic correspondences between human organs, divine attributes, and spiritual forces. The gallbladder, spleen, and liver are presented as corresponding to negative forces, while brain, heart, and lungs correspond to positive/holy aspects.

[3]The four spiritual worlds in descending order of materiality: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). This cosmology is fundamental to Lurianic Kabbalah.

[i]The text presents a microcosmic-macrocosmic correspondence between cosmic realms and human anatomy, a common concept in mystical traditions that sees the human body as a miniature reflection of cosmic structure.

[ii]Cf. Zohar Parashat Bereshit — The author cites this Zohar section as a primary source for understanding the structure and nature of Gehenna, showing that the work builds on established kabbalistic cosmology rather than introducing new concepts. | Cf. Zohar Parashat Pekudei — This section of the Zohar provides extensive details about the hierarchical structure of Gehenna that the author assumes readers might consult for further information, suggesting Ma'avar Yabok is providing a summary of a more complex cosmological system. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 33 — The author cites this as evidence that even the righteous may enter Gehenna, but for the purpose of rescuing others, supporting the work's overall view that soul journeys after death are complex and varied. | Cf. Avodat HaKodesh by Rabbi Meir ibn Gabbai — The author directs readers to this external source for additional information about the River of Fire, showing that Ma'avar Yabok synthesizes multiple kabbalistic traditions rather than relying solely on one source. | Cf. Ezekiel's Vision of the Divine Chariot (Ezekiel 1) — The text draws on this prophetic vision to explain the origin of Gehenna, connecting the biblical imagery with kabbalistic cosmology to show how human sins affect even celestial realms. | Cf. Genesis 3:18 — The text uses this biblical phrase to create a parallel between the physical world's negative elements and their spiritual counterparts in Gehenna, suggesting that both resulted from the same cosmic disruption caused by sin.

[iii]"Dry trees" is a metaphor from Isaiah 56:3 repurposed in kabbalistic thought to represent souls devoid of spiritual vitality through Torah study.

אותיות השם שרוחניותם מחבר
ארבע עולמות אצילות בריאה
יצירה עשיה ורוח אחד לכל.
עוד אמר וייצר ה׳ אלהים את
האדם עפר מן האדמה. וייצר
בשני יודין.[i] צייר לה בתרין
עלמין בעלמא דין ובעלמא
דאתי ויפח באפיו נשמת חיים
דא נשמת כל חי ויהי האדם
דא רוחא דחיי לנפש חיה דא
שכינתא תתאה. ועוד ויטע ה׳
אלהים גן דא אורייתא שבכתב
עדן דא עדונא דאורייתא ושוי
תמן את האדם ומה כתיב ביה
ביום נטעך תשגשגי. ויצמח ה׳
אלהים אבא ואמא כל עץ נחמד
למראה דא עמודא דאמציעתא
דכל גווינין שפירין ביה אתחזיין
ובגין דא נחמד למראה תפארת
שפירו דכל גווינין וטוב למאכל
דא צדיק הנרמז במלת כ״ל עץ
דבכל אתר כל איהו צדיק[ii] ע״כ.
זכאה חולקיה מאן דדביק
באילנא דא דחיי כי אורך ימים
בימינה בשמאלה עושר וכבוד
ודורשי רשומות אמרו כי תורה
בגימטרי״א אוצ״ר שד״י[iii] כי
היתה גנוזה אצלו יתברך והיה
משתעשע בה. והיא גם כן
בגימטריא אמצעי״ת[iv] שהיא
אמצעית בינינו לבינו יתברך
לחיותנו ולזכותנו לעולם
שכלו טוב ולג״ע עליון ותחתון

Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah—and one spirit for all. Furthermore, it states, “And the LORD God formed man from the dust of the earth.” “Formed” (וייצר) is written with two Yuds, indicating that He formed him for two worlds: this world and the World to Come. “And He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life”—this refers to the soul of all living beings. “And man became”—this refers to the spirit of life. “A living soul”—this refers to the lower Divine Presence. And further, “And the LORD God planted a garden”—this refers to the Written Torah. “Eden”—this refers to the delight of Torah. “And He placed the man there”—and what is written about him? “On the day of your planting, you will see growth.” “And the LORD God caused to grow”—Father and Mother.[1] “Every tree pleasant to the sight”—this refers to the central column,[2] in which all beautiful colors appear, and therefore it is “pleasant to the sight”—Tiferet, the beauty of all colors.[3] “And good for food”—this refers to the Righteous One (Tzaddik)[4] alluded to in the word “all” (כל), for wherever “all” appears, it refers to the Righteous One. Happy is the portion of one who cleaves to this Tree of Life, “for length of days is in its right hand, in its left hand are riches and honor.” Those who interpret symbols have said that “Torah” in gematria equals “treasure of Shaddai” (אוצר שדי), for it was hidden with the Blessed One who delighted in it. It also equals in gematria “intermediate” (אמצעית), for it is intermediary between us and the Blessed One, to give us life and merit for a world that is entirely good, for the upper and lower Garden of Eden, and to save us

[1] These refer to the divine partzufim (personas) of Abba and Imma, corresponding to the sefirot of Chokhmah (Wisdom) and Binah (Understanding) in kabbalistic thought.
[2] This refers to the middle line of the kabbalistic Tree of Life diagram, consisting of the sefirot Keter, Tiferet, Yesod, and Malkhut, representing divine balance and harmony.
[3] Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) is the sixth sefirah, associated with balance, truth, and compassion. It is often represented by multiple colors to indicate its harmonizing nature.
[4] This refers to the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation), often called “Tzaddik” or “Righteous One” in kabbalistic literature, which channels divine flow from the upper sefirot to Malkhut.

[i] The double Yud in the word וייצר (formed) is a classic rabbinic observation (Genesis Rabbah 14:9) interpreted kabbalistically to indicate formation for both worlds and suggesting the dual nature of human composition.
[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic association of the term “kol” (all) with the sefirah of Yesod, known as “Tzaddik” (Righteous One), which channels divine flow to Malkhut.
[iii] The gematria (numerical value) of תורה (Torah = 611) is equated with אוצר שדי (treasure of Shaddai = 611), suggesting Torah as God’s hidden treasure.
[iv] תורה (Torah = 611) is equated with אמצעית (intermediate = 611), emphasizing Torah’s role as mediator between humans and God.

ולהצילנו מרדת שחת ח״ו. וכבר ציינתי לך לעיל מקום דרושי ג״ע וגיהנם ועה״ב ותחייה בציוני. והרמב״ן בשער הגמול[i] כבר ידעת שיחד שער ההוא לדרושים אלו והובאו דבריו בקצור בפרק ח׳ להרמב״ם מהלכות תשובה. והיה כל מבקש ה׳ ימצא במקומות אלו מבוקשו מלבד מה שהוספנו בפרקים חלו. ברוך המרומם על כל ברכה ותהלה:[ii] from descending to destruction, God forbid. I have already marked for you above the location of the discourses on the Garden of Eden, Gehenna, the World to Come, and resurrection in my notations. And as for Nachmanides in "The Gate of Reward," you already know that he dedicated that gate to these discourses, and his words are brought in brief in chapter 8 of Maimonides' Laws of Repentance. And let everyone who seeks the LORD find what they seek in these places, besides what we have added in these chapters. Blessed is He who is exalted above all blessing and praise.

190R

195R

פרק מ״א

Chapter 41

לבך תשית נא לדברים ואל יליזו מנגד עיניך כי בזה תדע ותבין איך משפטי ה׳ אמת צדקו יחדיו בדינו של נחש יצר הרע שבאדם[iii] ובדינו של הגוף ובדינה של הנשמה ואיך מרכיב חגר על סומא ודנם יחד:[v iv]

Please set your heart to these words[1] and do not let them depart from before your eyes, for through this you will know and understand how the judgments of the LORD are true and righteous together in the judgment of the serpent—the evil inclination within man—and in the judgment of the body, and in the judgment of the soul, and how He places a lame per-

5R

[1]The opening phrase is a direct appeal to the reader to pay close attention, using biblical language that echoes similar exhortations in wisdom literature.

[i]"Sha'ar HaGemul" (Gate of Reward) is Nachmanides' treatise on the afterlife, reflecting medieval Jewish views on rewards and punishments after death.

[ii]Cf. Tikkun 53 of Tikkunei Zohar — The author quotes this passage to emphasize the spiritual importance of Torah study as protection against spiritual destruction and the fires of Gehenna. | Cf. Genesis 2:7-9 — The author reinterprets these creation verses kabbalistically, seeing the Garden as the Written Torah, Eden as Torah's delights, and the man as the human soul placed in this spiritual garden. | Cf. Nachmanides' Sha'ar HaGemul (Gate of Reward) — The author references this work as an authoritative source on the afterlife concepts he has been discussing, directing readers there for more comprehensive treatment of these subjects. | Cf. Proverbs 3:16 — This verse is applied to Torah specifically (rather than wisdom generally) to emphasize Torah's dual benefits: spiritual longevity through righteousness and material prosperity through divine blessing.

[iii]The author identifies the biblical serpent with the evil inclination (yetzer hara), a common interpretation in rabbinic and kabbalistic thought. This creates a tripartite division of human experience: the body, the soul, and the evil inclination that connects them.

[iv]This is a reference to a famous Talmudic parable (Sanhedrin 91b) about divine judgment. In the parable, a king's orchard was guarded by two watchmen—one blind and one lame. The lame man sat on the blind man's shoulders to steal fruit, and each claimed innocence because of their disability. The king judged them together by placing the lame man on the blind man's shoulders. This illustrates how God judges the body (blind) and soul (lame) together, despite their separate claims.

[v]Cf. Talmud Bavli, Sanhedrin 91b — The author draws on this famous Talmudic parable to explain how God judges the body (compared to the blind man) and the soul (compared to the lame man) together. The evil inclination (serpent) is added as a third component in this judgment system. | Cf. Genesis 3 — The 'serpent' here is identified with the evil inclination (yetzer hara), connecting the primordial tempter with the internal inclination toward sin that exists within every person. | Cf. Psalms 19:10 — This verse is quoted to emphasize that God's judgments, though complex in dealing with the tripartite nature of human existence (body, soul, and evil inclination), are ultimately just and harmonious.

son upon a blind one and judges them together.[1]

בעת שאדם יפשוט גופו ויוצא
מעולמו אז דנין אותו לפניו
מדעתו ושומעים טענותיו ורואה
שאין ממש בדבריו והוא טוען
האשה אשר נתת עמדי הגוף
הזה וטבעו הרע. והגוף משיב
[i]באימה הנחש השיאני והיינו
סטרא דשמאלא וכל בחותיו
המטעים והקב״ה גוזר על הנחש
שיתעכל בגיהנם עד שתטהר
הנשמה מחלאת טנופת החטא ושם
כלים כל המשחיתים שנבראו
בחטא האדם והיינו ארור אתה
תקבל השפעת זיעת חיות הקדש
והמותרות והקללות וכח הדינים
הקשים הנשפעים משם וכל
הפגם שגרמת אתה האדם בכל
הבהמה וחית השדה שהם בחות
קדושים הנפגמים בעונותיך אתה
תקבל כל המותר והדין והקללה
כדכתיב ונשא השעיר עליו את
כל עונותם [ii]אל ארץ גזרה אל
גיהנם שם יחולו כל אותם הדינים
והעונשים ומתהוה מהם מדרגות
צואה רותחת כי הם טמאים
ומוסרחים יותר מהאחרים ובזה
המדרגות העליונות הנפגמות
מחטאת הנשמה הזאת נטהרת
ובזה טוב לה לנשמה הזאת כי לא
תדחה כבראשונה. הנה כי נברא
גיהנם לצרף הנשמות ולטוב

When a person sheds his body and departs from his world, he is then judged before himself with his own knowledge,[2] and his arguments are heard. He sees that there is no substance to his words, and he claims, “The woman whom You gave to be with me”—this body and its evil nature. And the body responds with dread, “The serpent deceived me”—meaning the left side and all its deceptive powers.[3] The Holy One, blessed be He, then decrees upon the serpent that it shall be consumed in Gehenna until the soul is purified from the filth of sin’s defilement. There, all the destructive forces created through human sin are destroyed. 10R 15R 20R

This is the meaning of “cursed are you”: you shall receive the influence of the sweat of the holy Chayot,[4] the excess, the curses, and the power of harsh judgments that flow from there. And all the damage that you, O human, have caused to all the beasts and animals of the field—which are holy powers[5] damaged by your sins—you shall receive all the excess, judgment, and curse, as it is written: “And the goat shall bear upon itself all their iniquities to a desolate land,” to Gehenna, where all those judgments and punishments shall take effect. From them are formed levels of boiling excrement, for they are more impure and putrid than the others. Through this, the higher levels that were damaged by this soul’s sin are purified, and this is good for this soul, as it will not be rejected as before. 25R 30R 35R

Behold, Gehenna was created to refine souls and for their benefit, and the dust—which is the sub-

[1] This passage serves as an introduction to the detailed explanation that follows in the text about how God judges the three components of human existence after death: the evil inclination (identified with the primordial serpent), the body, and the soul. The parable of the blind and lame man illustrates how entities that might try to blame each other can be judged as a single unit.

[2] The Hebrew ‘לפניו מדעתו’ carries a nuance that one’s judgment occurs with full self-awareness and participation, not simply as an external process imposed upon the person.

[3] In Kabbalah, ‘the left side’ (סטרא דשמאלא) refers to the forces of divine judgment, restriction, and sometimes impurity, as opposed to ‘the right side’ which represents mercy and expansion.

[4] In Jewish mystical thought, the Chayot are angelic beings described in Ezekiel’s vision. The ‘sweat’ metaphorically represents the spiritual byproduct or overflow of divine energies that becomes transformed into judgment when filtered through lower realms.

[5] In kabbalistic interpretation, animals symbolize various spiritual forces or divine attributes (sefirot) that are ‘damaged’ when humans sin, as all creation is interconnected in a cosmic unity.

[i] This quotes Eve’s response in Genesis 3:13, establishing a parallel between the biblical narrative and the spiritual dynamics at judgment after death.

[ii] Reference to the Yom Kippur scapegoat ritual from Leviticus 16:22, using this biblical ritual as a metaphor for how the evil inclination (the serpent) bears the punishment for the soul’s sins.

להם[i] ועפר שהוא חומר האדם
הנברא מן העפר[ii]

stance of the human who was created from dust. 40R

כדכתיב כי עפר אתה ונאמר
עליו ועפר תאכל כל ימי חייך
כי הולך הגוף שהוא מעור הנחש
בלבוש הזה להתעכל עפרו
ואמרו שם ובמות הנחש כלים
ונאבדים שם והיינו כל ימי חייך
אין לך קיום ושמירה רק כל זמן
שיש לך עפר זה לאכלו וכיון
שהעפר כלה חייו כלים על דרך
הכסיל חובק את ידיו ואוכל
את בשרו דוקא לא חלק הנפש
ח״ו.[iii] ואהבה הגדולה אשר אל
החומר עם יצה״ר בעה״ז בעודו
בחיים. אחר המות נפלה איבה
ביניהם הנחש שונא את הגוף
אבל מה יעשה שהוא משולח
מלמעלה כאשר אמרנו על פסוק
ואוכל את בשרו ולזה ואיבה
אשית בינך ובין האשה החומר
רואה שהחיצוני אשר אהבתו
אהבה עזה ונמשך אחריו בא
עתה לגבות את כל אשר שמע
לעצתו ויהפך לו לאויב שכן
דרך החיצוני ששונא ומשחית
לאוהב אותו וכפי גודל אהבת
האדם עליו כן יגביר עליו חצים

As it is written "for you are dust" it was said of him "and dust you shall eat all the days of your life," for the body, which is from the serpent's skin in this garment, goes to have its dust consumed.[1] And they said there: "When the serpent dies, they are consumed and lost there." This means "all the days of your life"—you have no existence or protection except for as long as you have this dust to consume. Once the dust is gone, his life is finished, as in "The fool folds his hands and consumes his own flesh"—specifically the flesh, not the soul portion, God forbid. 45R 50R

The great love that exists between the material body and the evil inclination in this world while one is alive—after death, enmity falls between them. The serpent hates the body,[2] but what can it do? It is dispatched from above, as we said regarding the verse "and consumes his flesh." Therefore, "I will put enmity between you and the woman." The material body sees that the external force, which it loved with intense love and followed, now comes to collect payment for all the advice it heeded, and turns into an enemy. For such is the way of the external force: it hates and destroys those who love it, and according to the magnitude of a person's love for it,[3] so it strengthens arrows and stones of the bow against 55R 60R 65R

[1]The Hebrew 'להתעכל עפרו' literally means 'to have its dust digested/consumed,' referring to the decomposition process of the body in the grave.
[2]This describes a significant reversal in the relationship between the evil inclination (serpent) and the body. During life, they were allies against the soul; after death, they become enemies.
[3]This presents a mystical principle of divine judgment where the intensity of punishment corresponds exactly to the degree of attachment to evil during life—a spiritual 'measure for measure.'

[i]This presents a redemptive view of Gehenna (Jewish concept of purgatory/hell) as primarily purificatory rather than punitive, emphasizing that its ultimate purpose is for the benefit of souls.
[ii]Cf. Genesis 3:12-13 — The author uses the dialogue from Genesis as a template for the spiritual tribunal that occurs at death, where the soul blames the body, and the body blames the evil inclination (represented by the serpent). | Cf. Leviticus 16:22 — The author draws a parallel between the scapegoat ritual and the function of Gehenna, suggesting that just as the scapegoat carried away Israel's sins to a desolate place, so too the evil inclination bears punishment in Gehenna, cleansing the soul of its defilements. | Cf. Zohar III:152a — The author elaborates on the Zoharic concept that when a person dies, their soul, body, and evil inclination each try to shift blame onto the others, but ultimately they are judged together as a unit. | Cf. Sanhedrin 91b — Though not explicitly mentioned, this passage echoes the famous Talmudic parable where a king punishes both a blind man and a lame man who together stole from his orchard, despite each claiming inability to commit the crime alone. Similarly, the text describes how body, soul, and evil inclination are all held accountable despite attempting to shift blame.
[iii]This is an abbreviation for "chas v'shalom" (Heaven forbid), indicating the author's concern to make clear that the destruction in the grave affects only the physical body, not the soul.

ואבני קשת. על דרך דאמור
רבנן טב לביש לא תעביד ובישא
לא ימטי לך על זה אמר ואיבה
70 אשית בינך ובין האשה שיש איבה
אל החיצוני עם האדם שלא יהיה
רוצה לשלוט בגוף אלא בנפש.
והנשמה נמלטה למעלה מידו
לטהרה[i] והגוף החיצוני לא היה
75 רוצה בו זהו כוונת ואיבה אשית
בינך ובין האשה ובין זרעך ובין
זרעה. בין זרעך שזרעת במעשיך
עמו ובין זרעה שזרע במעשיו
עמך ואלו ואלו כלים יחד בקבר
80 בדיניו הוא ישופך ראש שאפי׳
כחות דינו כלים בו. ואחר דין
הקבר ששקט דיניו האדם מזומן
לחלוץ עצמות ולתחייה[ii] שהוא
כליון הנחש ואפי׳ בחלק העליון
85 שבו מצד חוצה. ואתה תשופנו
עקב שעתה הוא נושכו באחרית
כחות החומר בסופו עקב מעשיו
במספר לבד זהו גזרת החצוני
הנגמר שם מיד. עד כאן דינו של
90 נחש יצה״ר שבגוף האדם.[iii][iv]

him.

As the Sages said: "Do no good to the wicked, and evil will not befall you." Concerning this He said, "I will put enmity between you and the 70R woman"—there is enmity between the external force and the human, as it does not wish to dominate the body but rather the soul. The soul escapes upward from its hand for purification, and the external body does not desire it. This is the meaning of "I will put 75R enmity between you and the woman, between your seed and her seed"—between your seed that you sowed through your deeds with him, and between her seed that she sowed through her deeds with you. And both of these are consumed together in the 80R grave through his judgments.

"He shall bruise your head"—even the powers of his judgment are consumed by him. And after the judgment of the grave, when his judgments are quieted, the person is prepared for the resurrection of 85R the bones, which is the destruction of the serpent, even in its highest part from the external side.

"And you shall bruise his heel"—for now it bites him at the end of the material powers, at his conclusion, the heel of his deeds, in number alone. This 90R is the decree of the external force that is completed there immediately. Thus far is the judgment of the serpent, the evil inclination within the human body.[1]

[1] This final sentence indicates that the text has only addressed the first component of the threefold judgment that occurs after death. In subsequent passages, the author will discuss the judgment of the body itself and then of the soul.

[i] This presents the key kabbalistic concept that death is actually a means of purification for the soul, allowing it to escape the grasp of the evil inclination.

[ii] The phrase "chalatz atzamot" (resurrection of bones) refers to the future bodily resurrection, a fundamental Jewish belief that is here framed as the ultimate victory over the evil inclination.

[iii] This concluding line indicates that the preceding text was specifically about the judgment of the serpent/evil inclination, and suggests the author will now move on to discuss the judgment of other aspects of human existence.

[iv] Cf. Genesis 3:14 — The verse "and dust you shall eat all the days of your life" is quoted directly from God's curse to the serpent in Eden, establishing the biblical foundation for the kabbalistic interpretation that follows. | Cf. Genesis 3:15 — The verse "I will put enmity between you and the woman, between your seed and her seed" is quoted directly, but interpreted in a mystical sense where the "woman" represents the physical body and the serpent represents the evil inclination. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 4:5 — The verse "The fool folds his hands and consumes his own flesh" is quoted to illustrate the self-destructive relationship between the body and the evil inclination, showing how scriptural wisdom literature is reinterpreted in kabbalistic terms. | Cf. Talmud — The quote "Do no good to the wicked, and evil will not befall you" is presented as rabbinic wisdom ("as the Sages said") and used to support the author's argument about the dangers of associating with evil forces. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 4, Chapters 36-38 — These chapters explore the metaphysical structure of the Garden of Eden and Gehenna (Hell), providing the broader cosmological framework for understanding the soul's journey described in this passage.

דין הגוף עליו שהוא מיוחס
לאשה[i] נאמר הרבה ארבה
עצבונך שם בקבר כי נפשו עליו
תאבל והרונך שם מוליד כל
מה שנתעבר בעבירות העבירות
וזה יהיה פי׳ טול מה שנתת בי
וגו׳ ימים הראשונים חבלי לידה
יש לגוף כי מקשקשים בתוכו
כל עבירות העבירות ותחיל
תזעק בחבליו וזהו דין קשה של
חבוט הקבר ושם הנשמה נכנסת
אל הגוף אמנם אינו נכנסת כמו
שהוא בחיים חיותו שא״כ מה
יתרון תחיית המתים.[ii] אלא בזמן
שאדם חי הנשמה בגופו מחייה
אותו אמנם בקבר מכניסים
הנשמה בגוף באשה עוברה
כעובר בתוך האשה הגוף הזה
הוא מתעבר ושם הנשמה נעצבת
בדיני הגוף. והיינו והרונך קשה
רמה למת בבשרו כמחט בבשר
החי ואפי׳ מספרי התולעים
גוזרים מלמעלה לפי באשו
וצחנתו אשר פעל ועשה וגרם
בחייו ומספר קושי הרמה בבשר
כמספר מעשיו הקשים ועם היות
שאין לך אדם שאינו נדון ברמה
ותולעה אינו שוה לכל בחינת
קושי הזה שיש מי שיקשה לו מאד
ויש מי שמרגיש אבל לא כ״כ ויש
מי שאינו מרגיש. ואמרו בתוס׳
על מאמר שאין רמה שולטת
בצדיקים[iii] לפי שתשמישי קדושה
יש בהם כמו כן קדושה ומדרגה

Concerning the judgment of the body, which is associated with the feminine, it is said: "I will greatly multiply your pain" there in the grave, for one's soul mourns over it. "And your conception"—there it gives birth to all that was conceived in the turbidity of transgressions. This is the meaning of "take what you placed in me, etc." In the first days there are birth pangs for the body, as all the turbidity of transgressions rattles within it, and it writhes and cries out in its pangs. This is the severe judgment of the "Beating of the Grave" (Chibut HaKever[1]). There the soul enters the body, but it does not enter as it did during life, for if so, what advantage would there be in the resurrection of the dead? Rather, when a person is alive, the soul in his body gives it life, but in the grave, the soul is placed in the body like a pregnant woman—like an embryo within the woman. This body becomes impregnated, and there the soul is distressed in the judgments of the body.

This is the meaning of "and your conception"—the worm is as painful to the dead in his flesh as a needle in living flesh.[2] Even the number of worms is decreed from above according to the stench and putrefaction that he caused and created through his actions in life. The severity of the worm's pain in the flesh corresponds to the number of his harsh deeds. And although there is no person who is not judged by worms and maggots, this hardship is not equal for all. There are those for whom it is very difficult, those who feel it but not as intensely, and those who do not feel it at all.[3]

The Tosafot commented on the statement that "worms do not have power over the righteous," explaining that just as sacred objects contain holiness

[1] Chibut HaKever is a concept in Jewish eschatology describing a form of purification or judgment that the soul experiences immediately after death. The author is elaborating on this traditional concept with a detailed kabbalistic interpretation.

[2] This vivid image comes from Talmudic discussions about whether the dead feel pain during decomposition. The author takes this quite literally and develops it into a comprehensive theory of post-mortem punishment.

[3] The author is establishing a nuanced system of post-mortem judgment where the severity of decomposition-related suffering is precisely calibrated to one's sins, while maintaining that even the relatively righteous (except for the completely righteous) experience some form of this judgment.

[i] The author is using the gendered symbolism of Kabbalah, where the body is associated with the feminine principle (as is the divine attribute of Malkhut), while the soul is associated with the masculine principle.

[ii] This is a key theological point distinguishing between the soul's presence in the body during life versus during the post-mortem judgment. The author is explaining that resurrection must involve a fundamentally different relationship between body and soul than existed during earthly life.

[iii] This refers to a Talmudic tradition (Shabbat 152b) that the bodies of the righteous do not

מצד ההנאה והתועלת שקבל הקדושה מהם ולכן תשמישי קדושה נגנזים והרחיב בזה הביאור החכם בס׳ הפרדס בשער המציאות[i] יעויין שם. והכל לפי מעשיו וצרכו בדין כי הכל במדה ובמשקל בדעות של אל דעות וכפי צורך הגוף הזה בדין להטיבו באחריתו והיינו בעצב תלדי בנים שם תלדי בנים זרים כפי חשבון מעשיך[ii]

and spiritual levels derived from the benefit and advantage that holiness received from them, so too the bodies of the righteous. This is why sacred objects are stored away. The sage elaborated on this explanation in the book Pardes, in the Gate of Existence[1]—see there. Everything is according to one's deeds and what one needs in judgment, for all is measured and weighed in the knowledge of the God of knowledge, and according to what this body needs in judgment to improve its end. This is the meaning of "in pain you shall bear children"—there you will give birth to strange children according to the reckoning of your deeds.

130R 135R 140R

ואל אישך תשוקתך כמה ישתוקק הגוף אל הנשמה להחליץ עצמותיו ומספרי הימים שנגזר שיתפרדו איש מאחיו עד יתוקן הגוף ותתקן הנשמה מלמעלה ותתעלה לסוד הצחצחות ותחזור אח״כ ותחלוץ. העצמות כל יום מימי הפרוד הזה יראו לו אלף שנים[iii] עד שינוחו דיניו ויצא

And your desire shall be for your husband"[2]—how greatly will the body yearn for the soul to strengthen its bones. And the number of days decreed for them to be separated from each other, until the body is rectified and the soul is rectified from above and ascends to the mystery of the spiritual radiances, and afterward returns to strengthen the bones.[3] Each day of this separation will appear to him as a thousand years, until his judgments are at rest and the body

145R

[1]This refers to Pardes Rimmonim (Orchard of Pomegranates) by Moses Cordovero, a systematic exposition of Kabbalah. The author is drawing on Cordovero's explanation of how physical objects can become vessels of holiness to explain why the bodies of the righteous might be immune to decomposition.

[2]This is a quotation from Genesis 3:16, part of God's words to Eve after the sin in Eden. The author reinterprets this verse as describing the relationship between body and soul rather than between woman and man.

[3]The Hebrew term 'chalitzut' (strengthening) is related to 'chalatz' (to draw out, strengthen) and carries connotations of revival and resurrection. In this context, it refers to the revitalization of the physical body at resurrection.

decompose after death. The author is explaining this as being related to the concept of 'tashmishei kedushah' (objects used for sacred purposes), which retain holiness and must be treated with special reverence.

[i]This is a reference to 'Pardes Rimmonim' (Orchard of Pomegranates), the systematic Kabbalistic work by Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), specifically the section on the nature of existence.

[ii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 38 — This passage continues the book's exploration of the post-mortem experience, detailing the specific judgment of the body as distinct from the judgment of the evil inclination discussed in the previous passage. | Cf. Genesis 3:16 — The author creatively reinterprets God's curse to Eve as applying to the body's post-mortem experience, with the 'pain' and 'conception' now understood as the spiritual suffering the body undergoes in the grave. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 18b — The author draws on this Talmudic concept but develops it into a full mystical framework where the severity of decomposition is precisely calibrated to one's sins. | Cf. Zohar III:151a — The author is expanding on the Zoharic concept of Chibut HaKever, explaining it as a process where the soul must witness the body's decomposition as part of divine judgment. | Cf. Sefer Pardes by Moses Cordovero — The author references Cordovero's work to support the idea that the bodies of the righteous are immune to decomposition due to having been vessels for holiness.

[iii]This refers to the kabbalistic concept that time is experienced differently in spiritual realms. The phrase 'a thousand years' draws on Psalm 90:4, 'For a thousand years in Your sight are like a day.'

הגוף להבעל מן הנשמה ואז לא
תהיה חזרתה לתוכו כבראשונה
בימים הראשונים להשפט יחד
רק תרד לצחצח סוד רוחניות
העצמות וזהו ואל אישך תשוקתך
והענין הזה תלוי בסוף כי אחר
שנח דין הקבר אז מתחילין דין
הנשמה להיות נטהרה בנהר
דינור עד שתתעלה לג״ע עליון
וכבר בארנו למעלה שמץ קצת
ממה תתענג שם. ואחרי עלותה
משם מחלץ העצמות ומזיינם
כדכתיב והשביע בצחצחות
נפשך כשיגיע זמן שהנפש תשבע
בצחצחות והיינו שלשה צח נפש
צחות רוח ונשמה[i] מיד ועצמותיך
יחליץ והיית כגן רוה וגו׳ וזה
כוונת והוא ימשל בך הנשמה
הנקרא הוא שממקום הנעלה
מחצבה[ii] העקר תלוי בה כי עד
שתזכה אל הצחיות האלו לא
יזכה הגוף אל החליצות ע״כ הוא
מדין הגוף:[iii]

emerges to be possessed by the soul. And then its return into the body will not be as at first, in the early days to be judged together, but rather it descends to purify the mystery of the spirituality of the bones. And this is [the meaning of] "your desire shall be for your husband." This matter depends on the end, for after the judgment of the grave is at rest, then the judgment of the soul begins as it is purified in the River of Fire,[1] until it ascends to the upper Garden of Eden. And we have already explained above a small hint of how it will delight there. And after its ascent from there, it strengthens the bones and adorns them, as it is written, "He will satisfy your soul with brightness," when the time comes that the soul will be satisfied with brightnesses, which are the three brightnesses—brightness of Nefesh, brightness of Ruach, and brightness of Neshamah—immediately "and your bones He will strengthen," "and you shall be like a watered garden," etc. This is the meaning of "and he shall rule over you"—the soul, which is called "he," whose origin is from the hidden place, the essence depends on it, for until it merits these purities, the body will not merit strengthening. This concludes the judgment of the body.

פרק מ״ב

Chapter 42

כי מצאתי בדרושי גורי האר״י[iv] I found in the writings of the disciples of the

[1] Nahar Dinur (River of Fire) is a concept from Daniel 7:10, developed in Kabbalah as a purifying river through which souls pass after death to cleanse them of remaining impurities before entering higher spiritual realms.

[i] The author creates a threefold interpretation of the word 'tzachtzachot' (brightnesses/radiances) in Isaiah 58:11, connecting it to the three traditional levels of the soul: Nefesh (vital soul), Ruach (spirit), and Neshamah (higher soul).

[ii] This phrase refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'quarry of the soul' (machtzav ha-neshamah), the divine source from which souls originate. The soul's higher origin gives it authority over the body.

[iii] Cf. Genesis 3:16 — This passage provides a kabbalistic interpretation of the biblical verse addressed to Eve after the fall. The author reframes this verse as describing the relationship between body and soul after death, rather than husband and wife. The desire of the body for the soul and the soul's rulership over the body become metaphors for the process of resurrection and the soul's purification. | Cf. Isaiah 58:11 — The author draws on this prophetic verse about divine restoration to describe the ultimate resurrection process. The 'brightness' (tzachtzachot) becomes a technical term referring to spiritual radiance that purifies the three levels of the soul before resurrection. | Cf. Earlier sections of Ma'avar Yabok — The author refers to earlier discussions in the book about the soul's experience of delight in the upper Garden of Eden, indicating this text is part of a larger systematic exploration of the afterlife journey.

[iv] The term 'gurei ha-ARI' refers to the disciples of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the ARI), the great 16th century kabbalist who revolutionized Jewish mysticism. His teachings were primarily transmitted through his students rather than through his own writings.

אחרי הקבורה באים ד׳ מלאכים
המשפילים הקבר ומעמיקים
אותו בארץ כגובה קומת האדם
וכדאיתא במדרש ולהיות כי
הקליפה קשורה עם הנשמה ועם
הגוף לכן מחברים אותם יחד
ואז אוחזים אותם המלאכים
באותו האדם כל אחד מן הקצה
שלו ומנערים אותו וחובטים
אותו במקלות של ברזל כדרך
שחובט אדם כסותו ומנערו
להסיר ממנו העפר הדבק בו
ולכן צריכים להעמיק הקבר
כדי שיהיה מקום לצערו ולחבטו
וכך הם עושים עד שתפרד מעט
מעט אותה קליפה מן האדם
עד שנעקרת לגמרי וזהו פירוש
חבוט הקבר[i] ממש. ואמנם לא כל
האנשים שוים כנזכר כי הצדיקים
אשר עשו מעשים טובים בחייהם
היו חובטים עצמן מתפרדת
קליפה זו מעליהם ע״י היסורין
והצער שסובלין בחייהם וע״י
התורה שמתשת גופו של אדם.
ברם להפרידה בחיים לגמרי
א״א ואין איש ניצול מחבוט
הקבר אך הרשעים צריכים
טרחא יתירה. ואמר האר״י
משם חכם גדול שכל הנקבר
ביום ששי אחר ה׳ שעות ביום
והשעה החמישית בכלל אינו
רואה חבוט הקבר כי קדושת
השבת מפרידה ממנו בלי צער
וזה סוד יום הששי ה׳ יתירה[ii] כי

ARI[1] that after burial, four angels come and lower the grave, deepening it in the earth to the height of a person's stature, as mentioned in the Midrash. Since the kelipah[2] [negative spiritual force] is bound with the soul and the body, they join them together. Then the angels take hold of the person, each from his end, and shake him and beat him with iron rods, just as a person beats his garment and shakes it to remove the dust clinging to it. Therefore, they need to deepen the grave[3] so there will be room to cause him pain and beat him. They do this until that kelipah gradually separates from the person until it is completely uprooted—this is the literal meaning of Chibut HaKever [the Beating of the Grave].

However, not all people are equal in this matter, for the righteous who performed good deeds during their lives were already beating themselves, separating this kelipah from themselves through the sufferings and pain they endured in their lifetime and through Torah study, which weakens a person's body. Yet it is impossible to separate it completely during life, and no one escapes Chibut HaKever, though the wicked require extra effort. The ARI said in the name of a great sage that anyone buried on Friday after the fifth hour of the day (including the fifth hour) does not experience Chibut HaKever, because the sanctity of the Sabbath separates it from him without pain. This is the secret of "the sixth day" with the additional letter hei, for from that time onward it is truly the Sabbath eve.

If a person during his lifetime could attain knowledge of the name of that kelipah that is with him—how it is called—and thus understand why his name is called so, he would know the location of the spir-

[1] The original Hebrew phrase 'gurei ha-ARI' specifically refers to the students of Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), known by the acronym ARI (the Lion). These disciples were responsible for recording and transmitting his revolutionary kabbalistic teachings.

[2] Kelipah (plural: kelipot) literally means 'shell' or 'husk' in Hebrew. In Kabbalistic thought, particularly Lurianic Kabbalah, kelipot are negative spiritual forces that conceal divinity. They are believed to attach themselves to humans through sinful actions and require separation from the soul after death.

[3] This description of angels deepening the grave for the purpose of Chibut HaKever should be understood metaphysically rather than physically. It represents the spiritual space needed for the soul's purification process.

[i] Chibut HaKever (the Beating of the Grave) is a post-mortem process described in kabbalistic and some rabbinic texts. It is understood as a purification that souls undergo shortly after burial, separating negative spiritual elements from the soul.

[ii] This refers to the additional letter hei in the phrase 'the sixth day' (יום הששי) in Genesis 1:31, where the definite article is used only for this day among the days of creation. In Jewish tradition, this extra hei alludes to the special sanctity of Friday afternoon as it approaches the Sabbath.

מאז ולמעלה הוא ערב שבת ממש. ואם האדם בהיותו בחיים היה יכול להשיג ולידע שם של אותה קליפה שעמו איך נקראת ואז משיג לידע למה נקרא שמו כך בזה היה יודע מקום הפגם ומציאות תקונו איך הוא ואז היתה נפרדת ממנו אפי׳ בחיים ולא היה נצרך אל חבוט הקבר ובזה נבין ענין הרשעים שאמרו במדרש שאינן יודעים שמם ולכן מכין אותם כי אם היו יודעים היו יכולים להסירה ולהפרידה יותר בקלות. עתה יהיו דברינו בדין הנשמה שדינה באחרונה והכל בא גלוי בפסוק ולאדם אמר כי שמעת לקול אשתך שהוא החומר והגוף ותאכל מן העץ דהיינו היות נמשך אחר הנאות העוה״ז במותרות ורוב אכילות ולרבות במשגל בלא זמן המיוחד לו וכדומה כי מהם בא אל האסורות שטפות זרות מטמאים אותו ומן ההיתר בא אל האסור וכן על זה הדרך בכל תענוגי בני האדם שמתהוים מהם כחות שגורמים לו שעובר על לא תעשה ומונע עצמו מן העשה וזהו ותאכל מן העץ אשר צויתיך זו היא שבועה שמשביעין הנשמה בבואה לעולם כי שמעה קול אלה האומר אליו לא תאכל ממנו הנה המקום העליון אשר שם היתה נשמתך תקועה כתוב לחיים בפרגוד עולם הכסא עתה נמחק משם הצורה ההיא והיא במקומה פגומה והמקום ההוא החסר עבורך המתקומם בו נובע לך דין ופגם עד שהנשמה תקבל כל עונשיה ותהיה ראויה לחזור אל משכן כבודה. ואם הצורה נמחקת משם מכל וכל ח״ו בעונות שיש בהם כרת וכדומה אוי לו שכבר נטרד מארץ החיים וכמה פרכוסין תפרכס עד itual blemish and how to rectify it. Then it would separate from him even during life, and he would not need Chibut HaKever. This helps us understand the matter of the wicked, who according to the Midrash do not know their name, and therefore they are beaten, for if they knew, they could remove and separate it more easily.

Now we will discuss the judgment of the soul, which is judged last. Everything is revealed in the verse: "To Adam He said, 'Because you heeded your wife's voice'"—which refers to the material and the body—"and ate from the tree," meaning being drawn after the pleasures of this world through excesses, overeating, and excessive sexual relations outside their proper time, and similar matters. For from these one comes to forbidden things—strange flows defile him, and from the permitted one comes to the forbidden. So it is with all human pleasures, from which forces develop that cause one to transgress negative commandments and refrain from fulfilling positive ones.

"And you ate from the tree which I commanded you [not to eat from]"—this refers to the oath that the soul is made to swear[1] when it enters the world, for it heard the voice of the oath saying, "Do not eat from it." Behold, the supernal place where your soul was implanted, inscribed for life in the curtain of the Throne world, now has that form erased from there, and it is blemished in its place. That place, which is deficient because of you and is aroused against you, issues judgment and blemish until the soul receives all its punishments and becomes worthy to return to its glorious dwelling. And if the form is completely erased from there, God forbid, through sins that carry the penalty of spiritual excision and the like, woe to him, for he has already been expelled from the land of the living, and how many convulsions he will experience until his return. If it is not erased from there but only the vitality and spirituality included in its place are blemished, with higher permission judgment is decreed for him until the form is inscribed there for supernal life. Through this, the wise will understand the reward of the righteous and the intermediate.

"Cursed is the ground because of you"—you

[1] This refers to a Talmudic concept (Niddah 30b) that before birth, the soul is made to swear to live righteously, and is taught the entire Torah, though this knowledge is forgotten at birth when an angel touches the infant's upper lip.

שובה. ואם אינה נמחקת משם רק
נפגמת החיות ורוחניות הנכלל
במקומה ברשות עליון קובע
לו דין עד שתכתב שם הצורה
85 לחיים העליונים. ובזה יובן
למשכילים שכרן של צדיקים
ושל בינוניים וכו׳. ארורה
האדמה בעבורך גרמת שבלבלת
היכל מלך בעצבון תאכלנה כל
90 אותם הקללות ומעוטים שגרמת
שם במעשיך הרעים כי שממית
בידים תתפש והיא בהיכלי מלך
מחמת מעשיך בעצבון בדין
גהינם תאכלנה עד שיתעכל כל
95 ימי חייך שם וכל הימים אשר
בחרת לחיות בתאות הגוף ולא
המתה עצמך על דברי תורה.
על דרך מה יעשה אדם ויחיה
ימות אדם כי ימות באהל שם
100 בעצבון תאכלנה ותעכל אותם.
יש נשמה שנגזר עליה טבילה
בעלמא. ויש מי שנגזר עליה
דין שעה ויש שנגזר עליה דין
שלשה ויש דין שבעה ויש דין
105 שלשים ויש דין י״ב חדש הכל
לפי מעשיו ופגמו בשורש נשמתו.
וקוץ ודרדר תצמיח לך עם
היות שאומרים נהר דינור[i] אין
עניינו מאש וטובל ועומד שם
110 תוך האש לבד אלא כמה קוצים
ודרדרים דנים אותו שם הכל
כפי רשעתו במספר ואפי׳ מה
שגרמת אל הכחות החצונים
למרוד ולהטיח נגד הקדושה
115 במעשיך גם מזה תענש וזהו וקוץ
ודרדר תצמיח לך שם ואכלת
את עשב השדה. אח״כ נגזר עליו
שלא יכניס בג״ע ולא יהיה נדון
אלא כך ימים ישב חוץ לג״ע
120 ואינו אוכל בתרומת הקדשים
אלא נזון מעשב מאכל גרוע caused confusion in the King's palace. "In toil shall you eat of it"—all those curses and diminishments that you caused there through your evil deeds. For "the spider takes hold with her hands, and it is in kings' palaces"—because of your deeds, in toil, 85R in the judgment of Gehenna,[1] you shall eat of it until all your days there are consumed—all the days that you chose to live in bodily desire and did not mortify yourself over words of Torah. Following the principle of "What should a person do to live? Let 90R him die"—when "a person dies in a tent," there "in toil shall you eat and consume them."

There is a soul for which merely immersion is decreed. There is one for which an hour's judgment is decreed, and one for which three days' judgment 95R is decreed, and there is a judgment of seven days, a judgment of thirty days, and a judgment of twelve months—all according to one's deeds and the blemish in the root of one's soul.

"And thorns and thistles shall it bring forth for 100R you"—although they say "River of Fire," its nature is not merely to immerse and stand there in the fire alone, but rather how many thorns and thistles judge him there, all according to his wickedness in number. Even what you caused to the external forces to rebel 105R and strike against holiness through your deeds—for this too you will be punished. This is the meaning of "thorns and thistles shall it bring forth for you there," and "you shall eat the herb of the field."

Afterward it is decreed that he shall not enter the 110R Garden of Eden, and he shall not be judged except for so many days. He sits outside the Garden of Eden and does not eat of the sacred contributions but is nourished from inferior herb food. Then it is decreed that he shall not be healed from his wounds and bites 115R but shall prolong his illness until he is healed from the crushing blows of the River of Fire, which is the supernal fire of Gehenna. This is the meaning of "By the sweat of your brow shall you eat bread, until you return to the ground from which you were 120R taken"—until you return to the place from which

[1] Gehenna in Jewish thought is not equivalent to the Christian concept of hell as eternal punishment. Rather, it is understood as a temporary place of purification for the soul, typically lasting no more than twelve months (as mentioned later in this text).

[i] The River of Dinur (River of Fire) appears in the book of Daniel and in mystical literature. It is described as a river of fire through which souls pass for purification after death, removing spiritual impurities before they can ascend to higher realms.

ואח״כ נידונית שלא תתרפא ממכותיה ומנשיכותיה אלא מארכת בחלייה. עד שתתרפא ממחץ מכות נהר דינור שהוא אש גהינם עליון והיינו בוזעת אפך תאכל לחם עד שובך אל האדמה אשר ממנה לוקחת עד שתחזור אל המקום אשר ממנה חוצבה מפני שהכל היה מן העפר [i]עליון עפר קדוש והכל שב אל העפר. כי עפר אתה ואל עפר תשוב. ואל עפר עליון תשוב. וכיון שהנשמה עלתה ותקנה עצמה מה נעשה מן הגוף מיד הנשמה מחלצת הגוף בחליצת עצמות והיינו ויקרא האדם שם אשתו חוה אינה חיה ממש אמנם יש לה קצת חיות מזה כי היא היתה אם כל חי באמת מהחומר והגוף נובע כל שברו. א״כ הגוף ודאי אם לכל חי לנפש שהיא חיה בדירה ידועה בחצר מות ואל הרוח בג״ע של מטה ואל הנשמה בג״ע של מעלה אם לכל במעשיו וראוי שגם לגוף יהיה לו חלק בעדון. ואחר השכר הזה יש לו שכר נוסף שהיא התחיה והיינו ויעש ה׳ אלהים לאדם ולאשתו הנשמה והגוף יחד כתנות עור וילבישם כדכתיב עור ובשר תלבישני ולזה רמז באולי ר״מ דכתב בספרו כתנות [ii]אור שלבוש התחיה יהיה מטל עליון ומאור הקדוש אשרי מי [iii]שעומד בסוד ה׳:

you were hewn,[1] because everything was from the supernal earth, holy dust, and everything returns to the dust. “For dust you are, and to dust shall you return”—and to supernal dust shall you return. 125R

Once the soul has ascended and rectified itself, what happens to the body? Immediately the soul rejuvenates the body through the revival of bones. This is the meaning of “And the man called his wife’s name Eve [Chava]”—she is not literally alive, but 130R she has some vitality from this, for she was truly “the mother of all living”—from the material and the body flows all his reward. Thus the body is certainly mother to all life: to the nefesh [vital soul] that lives in a known dwelling in the Court of Death, to the 135R ruach [spirit] in the lower Garden of Eden, and to the neshamah [higher soul] in the upper Garden of Eden—mother to all according to his deeds. It is fitting that the body too should have a share in the delight. 140R

After this reward, there is an additional reward, which is the resurrection. This is the meaning of “And the LORD God made for Adam and his wife”—the soul and the body together—”garments of skin, and clothed them,” as it is written, “With 145R skin and flesh You clothed me.” This is perhaps what Rabbi Meir alluded to when he wrote in his book “garments of light”[2]—that the garment of resurrection will be from supernal dew and from the holy light. Fortunate is one who stands in the secret 150R of the LORD.

[1] This phrase alludes to Isaiah 51:1, ‘Look to the rock from which you were hewn,’ which is often interpreted as referring to the divine source of the soul. The author is creating a parallel between physical return to dust and the soul’s return to its divine source.

[2] This interpretation, attributed to Rabbi Meir, plays on the similarity between the Hebrew words ‘or’ (אור—light) and ‘or’ (עור—skin), which differ only by their initial letter. This reading suggests that humans were originally clothed in divine light before the Fall and will return to this state in the resurrection.

[i] The concept of ‘supernal dust’ or ‘holy dust’ contrasts with physical earth. In Kabbalah, physical elements have spiritual counterparts in higher worlds. This ‘supernal dust’ represents the divine source from which souls are hewn.

[ii] There is a rabbinic tradition, attributed to Rabbi Meir, that in his Torah scroll, the text of Genesis 3:21 read ‘garments of light’ (כתנות אור with an alef) rather than ‘garments of skin’ (כתנות עור with an ayin). This alternative reading suggests that before the Fall, Adam and Eve were clothed in divine light rather than physical skin.

[iii] Cf. Zohar — The author draws on Zoharic concepts of the soul’s journey after death, particu-

פרק מ״ג

Chapter 43

אמרו בפרק גידול בנים כשישים אדם ידו על ראשו הקטן מתברך שנאמר וישלח ישראל את ידו וכתיב ויברכם ביום ההוא לאמר כי ביד אדם ט״ו פרקים כמנין ט״ו תיבות שבברכת כהנים[i] לומר יחולו על ראשך הברכות שבשלשה פסוקים אלו שהם ט״ו. ומנהג לברך בשבת קדש ובפרט בלילי שבת סוד שבת מלכתא שהם בינה ות״ת למטה במלכות[ii] בנוכר למעלה ובסוד נפש יתירה שעל המברך ומתברך יחולו הברכות ועוד כי אין שטן ופגע רע בשבת שיקטרג על הברכה שנדחו מערב שבת לנוקבא דתהומא רבה[iii] וצורך גבוה הוא לברך האדם בניו בשבת ואם יש לו בת גם היא יברכנה ובפרט בליל שבת והמשכיל יבין מעצמו כי כנים דברינו ואני הרגלתי בעצמי לכוין באברי היד בנוכר. ועוד לכוין בברכת כהנים שבו נכלל בני חיי ומזוני שמוצאם מיו״ד וא״ו ה״א ראשונה של השם שביברכך הוא מציאות היו״ד וביאר מציאות יו״ד וה״א יחד ובישא מציאות יה״ו ומתיבות פסוק ישא מתרבה שם יה״ו לששה

They said in the chapter on raising children that when a person places their hand on the head of a child, the child is blessed, as it is said: “And Israel stretched out his hand” and it is written: “And he blessed them on that day, saying...” For in a person’s 5R hand there are fifteen joints, corresponding to the fifteen words in the Priestly Blessing, to say that the blessings in these three verses, which are fifteen, shall rest upon your head. And it is customary to bless on the holy Sabbath, especially on Sabbath nights. 10R
This is the secret of the Sabbath Queen, which corresponds to Binah and Tiferet below in Malkhut, as mentioned above. And through the secret of the additional soul that rests upon both the one who blesses and the one who is blessed, the blessings will take 15R effect. Furthermore, there is no Satan or evil occurrence on the Sabbath to accuse against the blessing, for they are pushed away from Sabbath eve to the great abyss. It is a lofty necessity for a person to bless his sons on the Sabbath, and if he has a daughter, he should bless her as well, especially on Sabbath 20R night. The wise person will understand on his own that our words are true.

I myself have made it my practice to direct my intention through the parts of the hand as mentioned. 25R
And further to focus on the Priestly Blessing, which includes children, life, and sustenance, whose source is from the Yod, Vav, and first Hei of the Divine Name. In the word “Yevarechecha” (may He bless you) is the manifestation of the Yod. In “Ya’er” (may 30R

---

larly regarding the separation of negative spiritual forces from the soul after death | Cf. Genesis 3:17-19 — The author reinterprets God’s curse to Adam as a kabbalistic allegory for the soul’s purification process after death | Cf. Kitvei Ha’ARI — The author explicitly cites the Lurianic Kabbalah tradition as his source for these mystical concepts about post-mortem purification | Cf. Proverbs 30:28 — The author uses this verse as a metaphor for how negative spiritual forces can infiltrate holy places through human misdeeds | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 63b — The author uses this teaching to explain how spiritual self-discipline during life lessens post-mortem suffering | Cf. Job 10:11 — The author uses this verse to support the concept of resurrection, where God will again clothe the soul with a transformed body

[i] The author is referring to the Priestly Blessing (Birkat Kohanim) from Numbers 6:24-26, which in Hebrew contains exactly fifteen words. This creates a mystical correspondence between the fifteen joints in the human hand and the fifteen words of this sacred blessing.

[ii] This reflects the Kabbalistic understanding of Sabbath as a day when the divine emanations align in a particular way: Binah (Understanding) and Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) influencing Malkhut (Kingdom), making it an especially potent time for blessings to flow from the higher spiritual realms to our world.

[iii] According to Kabbalistic tradition, harmful spiritual forces (Satan and his agents) are banished to the ‘great abyss’ on the Sabbath, creating a protected spiritual environment where blessings can flow unimpeded by negative influences.

צרופים[i] ובין כלם הם תשע כזה
י׳ י״ה יה״ו וג׳ אותיות יה״ו
בונות ששה בתים הם תשע תקוני
זעיר שכלם מושפעים בסוד
הברכה לה״א אחרונה מלכות
והנה השם שלם בה ולכן בתפלה
בא אחריה ברכת שים שלום
שהוא אבר השלום המתייחד עם
מלכות להוליד בדומה וכל זה
הוא בכוונת פרקי היד המכוונת
נגד ט״ו אותיות ברכת כהנים
כנזכר אך בפה אני אומר על
המתברך ונחה עליו רוח חכמה
ובינה רוח עצה וגבורה רוח
דעת ויראת ה׳.[ii] ופסוק זה
מכוון מאד למבין אותו לאשורו.
ומלבד כי מעורר רוחניות
הספירות מחכמה ולמטה עוד בו
רמז וסוד להשרות הנשמה והרוח
והנפש[iii]

He shine) is the manifestation of the Yod and Hei together. And in "Yisa" (may He lift) is the manifestation of Yod-Hei-Vav. From the words of the verse "Yisa," the name Yod-Hei-Vav expands into six permutations, and altogether they are nine, like this: Yod, Yod-Hei, Yod-Hei-Vav, and the three letters Yod-Hei-Vav build six structures. These are the nine rectifications of Zeir Anpin, all of which flow through the secret of blessing to the final Hei, which is Malkhut. Thus the Divine Name is completed in it. Therefore, in prayer, the blessing "Sim Shalom" (Establish Peace) follows, which is the organ of peace that unites with Malkhut to produce in its likeness.

All of this is in the intention of the joints of the hand, directed toward the fifteen letters of the Priestly Blessing as mentioned. But verbally, I say over the one being blessed: "And may the spirit of wisdom and understanding rest upon him, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and fear of the LORD." This verse is very precisely directed for one who understands it properly. Besides awakening the spirituality of the Sefirot from Chokhmah downward, it also contains an allusion and secret to cause the Neshamah, Ruach, and Nefesh to rest upon...

ונפש המשכלת והחיונית על
החמשה חושים[iv] הנרמזים
בפסוק והריחו ביראת ה׳ הבא
אחריו עוד יורה על ההשגה
העתידה שהיא כתנות אור שהיא

And [the phrase also alludes to] the intellectual and vital soul upon the five senses that are alluded to in the verse "And he shall smell with the fear of the LORD" [Isaiah 11:3] that follows it. Furthermore, it teaches about the future perception that is the "gar-

[i]The author explains how the three-letter divine name YHV can be permuted in six different arrangements, and when combined with the individual letters Y, YH, and YHV, creates nine configurations that correspond to cosmic structures within Zeir Anpin (the divine countenance).

[ii]This is a direct quote from Isaiah 11:2, a verse traditionally associated with the messianic figure. By applying this verse to ordinary children during blessing, the author suggests that every child has messianic potential that can be activated through proper blessing.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section on Blessing Children — The author references previous discussions in the text about blessings, indicating this is part of a larger exposition on ritual practices within a mystical framework. | Cf. Genesis 48:14 — The biblical reference to Jacob (Israel) stretching out his hand to bless his grandsons is used as scriptural foundation for the practice of placing hands on children's heads during blessings. | Cf. Numbers 6:24-26 — The text refers to the fifteen words of the Priestly Blessing as corresponding to the fifteen joints in the human hand, establishing a mystical correspondence between bodily structure and sacred text. | Cf. Isaiah 11:2 — The verse 'And may the spirit of wisdom and understanding rest upon him...' is quoted as the formula to be recited when blessing children, applying messianic imagery to ordinary ritual blessings. | Cf. Zohar on Sabbath as Queen — The reference to 'Sabbath Queen' (Shabbat Malketa) reflects Zoharic teachings about Sabbath as representing the Sefirah of Malkhut (feminine divine presence), making it an especially potent time for blessings.

[iv]This refers to the intellectual and vital aspects of the soul that operate through the five senses, reflecting a Neoplatonic and medieval Jewish philosophical division of the soul that was integrated into kabbalistic thought.

הנהגת הספירות[i] כפי אשר
היתה מחייבת החכמה עליונה
שבאמת היא נקראת א״ה״ו[ii] והיא
הצפייה הנכספת למשה רבינו
ע״ה שעליה שאל הראני נא את
כבודך להיות כי זכה לקרון
פנים[iii] ופשט בקצת לבושי עור
כדכתיב של נעליך מעל רגליך
ולהיות שבו היה מעורב כתנות
אור עם עור לכך נאמר לו כי לא
יראני האדם וחי בלבושים אלו.
אמנם הוא זכה מחמת הקירון
שבפניו דוקא לצפיית אחורים
שהיא אחורים מהנהגת עץ
החיים[iv] לא צפייה גמורה וכל
זה נרמז בפסוק ונחה עליו רוח
חכמה וגו׳. עוד אמרו שם שלכך
משימים יד על ארון המת. או
על הקבר לבקש רחמים על המת
לפי שבידו של אדם ט״ו פרקים
כמנין ט״ו תיבות שבפסוק יחיו
מתיך וגו׳ ואז יאמרו ונחך ה׳
תמיד וגו׳ ובנו ממך וגו׳ שיזכה
להעלות נפשות הרשעים מתוך
הגהינם[v] מדי עברו שם כנדרש
למעלה עוד יש ביד י״ד פרקים
וידוע סודם הבא בפסוק ועתה
יגדל נא כח אדני כי בבינה יש בה
כ״ח עתים[vi] וזהו ובתבונה משנה
עתים וממנה נמשך הכח למלכות
אדנ״י וממנה מתפשטים כ״ח
מחנות הלבנה העליונה. ומכחה
מתראים בלבנה התחתונה י״ד
ימניים וי״ד שמאליים והם
שתי ידות משולבות אשה אל

ments of light," which is the conduct of the sefirot according to what was necessitated by the supernal wisdom, which in truth is called A-H-V, and it is the vision that Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, longed for, concerning which he asked, "Show me, I pray, Your glory" [Exodus 33:18]. For he merited a shining face and removed some of the garments of skin, as it is written, "Remove your shoes from your feet" [Exodus 3:5]. And since in him was mixed garments of light with skin, therefore it was said to him, "For no man shall see Me and live" [Exodus 33:20] in these garments. However, because of the radiance of his face, he specifically merited a vision of the "back," which is the back [aspect] of the conduct of the Tree of Life, not a complete vision, and all this is alluded to in the verse, "And the spirit of wisdom shall rest upon him" [Isaiah 11:2], etc.

They further said there that this is why we place a hand on the coffin of the deceased, or on the grave to request mercy for the dead, because in a person's hand there are fifteen joints, corresponding to the fifteen words in the verse "Your dead shall live" [Isaiah 26:19], etc. And then they say "And the LORD shall guide you continually" [Isaiah 58:11], etc., and "And they shall build from you" [Isaiah 58:12], etc., that he may merit to raise the souls of the wicked from Gehenna as he passes through there, as explained above.

Furthermore, there are fourteen joints in the hand, and their secret is known to come in the verse "And now, let the power of the Lord be great" [Numbers 14:17], for in Binah there are twenty-eight times, and this is [the meaning of] "and with understanding changes times" [Daniel 2:21], and from it power flows to Malkhut/Adnut, and [i] The phrase 'garments of light' (kotnot or) contrasts with 'garments of skin' (kotnot or with a different spelling) in Genesis. In kabbalistic thought, Adam and Eve originally had 'garments of light' (spiritual bodies) before the Fall, when they were given 'garments of skin' (physical bodies).

[ii] These Hebrew letters (alef, hei, vav) represent a divine name or abbreviation associated with supernal wisdom in kabbalistic thought.

[iii] This refers to Moses's face shining with divine light after his encounter with God, as described in Exodus 34:29-35.

[iv] This complex kabbalistic concept suggests Moses was granted vision of the 'back' or external aspects of divine governance, but not the complete inner workings of the divine system symbolized by the Tree of Life.

[v] This reflects the Jewish belief that righteous actions by the living, including prayer at gravesites, can elevate the souls of the deceased, even helping to rescue souls from Gehenna (a place of purification after death).

[vi] Twenty-eight 'times' refers to Ecclesiastes 3:1-8, which lists 28 times or seasons. In Kabbalah, these are associated with cycles of divine influence through Binah (Understanding).

אחותה[i] ובכל יד חמש אצבעות וימין יו״ד ה״א שמאל וא״ו ה״א. ויד ימין ושמאל הם י״ד אותיות שהם ה׳ אלהינו ה׳ וי״ד אחרים תמורתן כנודע שבהם מעוררים כח החסד העליון. והמבין טעם סמיכת כהן גדול על האברים הנקרבים על גבי המזבח יבין טעם שימת היד על המת או על קברו. וכיון דאתא לידן פסוק ויברכם ביום ההוא לא אמנע עצמי מלכתוב פרפרת אחד שיש לי בו [ii] from it spread twenty-eight camps of the supernal moon. And by its power, there appear in the lower moon fourteen on the right and fourteen on the left, and they are two hands joined, one to the other, and in each hand five fingers, and the right [corresponds to] Yod-Hei and the left [to] Vav-Hei. And the right and left hands are fourteen letters which are "Hashem Eloheinu Hashem" and fourteen others in their place, as is known, through which the power of supernal Chesed is awakened. And one who understands the reason for the High Priest's laying hands on the limbs offered on the altar will understand the reason for placing the hand on the deceased or on his grave. And since the verse "And he blessed them on that day" [Genesis 48:20] has come to our hands, I will not withhold myself from writing one delightful insight that I have about it.

והוא כי יעקב בירך אפרים ומנשה שכל ישראל יתברכו בהם ויאמרו ישימך אלהים כאפרים וכמנשה ולא ראינו שנתקיימה ברכה זו באדם שמברך בנו או תלמידו. אך כשנעמוד על דעתנו נראה שלא נפל דבר מדברי יעקב ארצה. הנה הילדים הנולדים אחר מעט ימים תחלת דבורם הוא יאכ״ו[iii] וגם שהנשים הקלות מרגילות לומר

And it is that Jacob blessed Ephraim and Manasseh, that all Israel would be blessed through them, and they would say, "May God make you like Ephraim and like Manasseh." Yet we have not seen this blessing fulfilled when a person blesses his son or student. But when we consider this carefully, we see that none of Jacob's words have fallen to the ground. Behold, newborn children, after a few days, begin speaking with the sounds "YAKH'U,"[1] and even though simple women habitually say that afterward the infant said this on his own, it was actually the wise nat-

[1]The author is making a remarkable claim that infants' first sounds form an acronym for "ישימני אלהים באפרים ובמנשה" (May God make me like Ephraim and Manasseh), suggesting that children unconsciously fulfill Jacob's blessing formula.

[i]This beautiful metaphorical description of interlocked hands reflects the interconnected nature of the divine emanations in kabbalistic thought, where the right and left sides (representing mercy and judgment) work in harmony.

[ii]Cf. Isaiah 11:2-3 — The author uses these verses to discuss the spiritual perception that transcends ordinary senses, connecting them to the concept of 'garments of light' that represent higher spiritual perception. | Cf. Exodus 33:18-23 — The author interprets Moses' experience as gaining a partial spiritual perception (seeing God's 'back') because he still had some mixture of 'garments of skin' (physical limitation) despite his elevated spiritual state. | Cf. Isaiah 26:19 — The author relates this verse to the custom of placing hands on a coffin or grave, explaining that the fifteen words in this verse correspond to the fifteen joints in the human hand, creating a mystical connection to mercy for the deceased. | Cf. Numbers 14:17 — The verse is connected to the kabbalistic concept that the fourteen joints in the hand correspond to divine power flowing from Binah to Malkhut, with twenty-eight (twice fourteen) being a significant number in this mystical system. | Cf. Zohar — The author's exposition about the hands representing divine names and sefirot reflects Zoharic interpretations of the human body as a microcosm of divine structures.

[iii]This is a unique transliteration representing the sounds supposedly made by infants that the author interprets mystically as an acronym for 'ישימני אלהים באפרים ובמנשה' (May God make me like Ephraim and Manasseh).

אח״ז התנוק מעצמו היה אומר
יאכ״ו והטבע החכם הרגיל
אותו לומר כך שהוא מברך את
עצמו ואומר "ישימני "אלהים
"כאפרים "וכמנשה. או "ישימכם
"אלהים "כאפרים "וכמנשה והוא
מברך אביו ואמו שהולידוהו.
וזה להיות כי העולם נברא
בלשון הקדש ובח מוצא כל
הנבראים הם מרוחניות העולם
ונכלל באותיות התורה שהם
כ״ב חפצים וגוף אחד. וזו היתה
חכמתו של אדם הראשון בקריאת
שמות שידוע שרוחניות הנכלל
בשי״ן ומ״ם פתוחה וביו״ד
ובמ״ם סתומה ובכחם ורוחניותם
ברא הבורא שמים. וכן ארץ
בא׳ ור׳ וצ׳. וכן שור בש״ן
וא״ו רי״ש. וכן על זה הדרך
בכל הנבראים כנתבאר בתקון
נ״ח בדרוש משמות הרבה אשר
למטטרון שאמר כי נקרא בששים
רבוא שמות של מלאכים[i] ובתקון
ששים אמר למה מטטרון נקרא
מטה ולמה משה נשתמש במטה לא
כן שאר נביאים ועיין בתקון ס״ח
מזה ושמטטרון מתהפך לארבע
פנים וכללות צורת אדם מכל מה
שנברא בשמים ובארץ ולהיות
שכל העולם נברא ברוחניות
התורה[ii] מזה הוכיח ר׳ שמעון
בן יוחאי בפרשת תרומה דף
קס״א שהמשתדל בתורה כ״י
הוא מקיים העולם דאמר קב״ה
אסתכל בתורה וברא עלמא. צא
ולמד כח אותיות התורה ידוע כי
צורת הנשמה מחוברת מאותיות
הקדש כסדרי המצות אלו יעשה

ural order that trained him to say this,[1] for he is blessing himself, saying: "May God make me like Ephraim and Manasseh." Or "May God make you [plural] like Ephraim and Manasseh," thereby blessing his father and mother who gave birth to him. This is because the world was created in the holy tongue,[2] and the power in the utterance of all created things comes from the spiritual essence of the world, which is contained in the letters of the Torah, which are twenty-two entities forming a single body. This was the wisdom of Adam in naming all creatures, for it is known that the spiritual essence contained in the letters shin and open mem and in yod and closed mem, and through their power and spiritual nature, the Creator made heaven (shamayim). And similarly earth (eretz) with alef, resh, and tzadi. And ox (shor) with shin, vav, and resh. And so forth with all created things, as explained in Tikkun 58 in the discourse on the many names of Metatron, where it says that he is called by six hundred thousand names of angels. And in Tikkun 60 it asks why Metatron is called a staff and why Moses used a staff when other prophets did not. See also Tikkun 68 about this, and how Metatron transforms into four faces and encompasses the complete human form from everything created in heaven and earth. And since the entire world was created through the spiritual essence of the Torah, Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai proved from this in Parashat Terumah, page 161, that one who engages in Torah study sustains the world, for the Holy One, blessed be He, said, "I looked into the Torah and created the world." Go and learn the power of the letters of the Torah. It is known that the form of the soul is composed of holy letters arranged according to the commandments:[3] "which if a person does, he shall live by them"—literally—for life and peace will accompany his soul in the supernal realms, and from there will reach his physical body

[1] The author reinterprets what appears to be random infant babbling as divinely orchestrated speech with deep spiritual significance.
[2] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that Hebrew is not merely a conventional language but the actual medium through which God created reality, with each letter containing creative power.
[3] This presents a striking spiritual anatomy where the soul itself is structured from Hebrew letters, with commandment observance maintaining their proper arrangement and sin disrupting it.

[i] The concept that Metatron has 600,000 angelic names corresponds to the traditional number of Israelites who left Egypt, suggesting a correspondence between human and angelic realms.
[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic principle that the Torah served as the blueprint for creation, with Hebrew letters containing the spiritual essence that formed physical reality.

אותם האדם וחי בהם ממש כי
יתלוו אליו החיים והשלום על
נשמתו בעליונים וממנו יגיע אל
האדם הגופני חיים וחסד ויתחזק
כל אבר מאברי הנשמה בכח רוח
אלהים חיים ואם יעבור אדם על
המצות אז ישתנו סדרי האותיות
אשר בנשמתו ויכתבו לעבירה
שעשה שנאמר ותהי עונותם על
עצמותם חקוקים[i] והנה הוא בכף
חובה וה׳ בעל החיים סר מעליו
והאבר ההוא אם הנשמה תלויה
בו מיד מת או נכרת ואם אין
הנשמה תלויה בו הוא חולה או
נפסד בסוד והפקדתי עליכם
בהלה וכו׳. ונחזור לדרושנו
שלהיות כי הטביע הטבע מלה
דו בפי התינוקות כנדרש גם
הילדים שאינם מבני עמנו תחלת
דבורם יאכ״ו כנזכר וכבר נודע
ממעשה אשר אירע כי ילד אשר
לא ישמע לדבר בשום לשון
תחלת דבורו יהיה בלשון הקדש
כי בעל הטבע שהוא אלהים
בגימטריא טבע.[ii] הטביע כן
בעולמו בסוד אותיות תורתו
שבה נסתכל וברא העולם. וסמך
על מה שמשימים החומש לילדים
מראשותיהם הוא מפסוק זה ספר
תולדות אדם שביום שקורין
לו שם משימין ס׳ תורת כהנים
מראשותיו ובשמגיע ללמוד
שהוא כבן חמש שנים מתחילים
לו בספר ויקרא[iii] שהעולם מתקיים בהבלם כמו בזכות

with life and kindness, and each limb of his soul will be strengthened by the power of the spirit of the living God. But if a person transgresses the commandments, then the arrangement of letters in his soul will be altered[1] and will be inscribed with the sin he committed, as it is said, "Their iniquities are engraved upon their bones." Then he is on the side of guilt, and the Lord of Life departs from him. If the soul depends on that limb, it immediately dies[2] or is cut off, and if the soul does not depend on it, it becomes sick or damaged, in the mystery of "I will appoint over you terror," etc. Let us return to our discourse: since nature has implanted this word in the mouths of infants, as we have explained, even children who are not of our people begin speaking with "YAKH'U" as mentioned. It is already known from a case that occurred that a child who does not hear any language will begin speaking in the holy tongue, because the Master of Nature, which is Elohim (numerically equivalent to "nature"), has implanted this in His world through the mystery of the letters of His Torah, through which He looked and created the world. And this is supported by the custom of placing a Chumash at the head of children, based on the verse "This is the book of the generations of Adam," for on the day they name him, they place the book of Torat Kohanim at his head. And when he begins to study at about five years old, they begin with the book of Leviticus, for the world is sustained by their breath[3] just as by the merit of the sacrifices. "Do not touch My anointed ones" refers to the conversations of children. Also, their beginning with Leviticus helps with their purification after they emerge from the years of orlah (the first three years when a tree's fruit is forbidden). There is support for [1] This suggests that sin physically reconfigures one's spiritual structure, not just metaphorically but literally changing the composition of the soul.

[2] The author proposes a direct connection between specific limbs, soul components, and commandments, suggesting that certain sins can cause immediate spiritual or physical death to corresponding body parts.

[3] This refers to the rabbinic teaching that the world is sustained by the breath of children studying Torah, which has special purity and power. The comparison to sacrifices suggests their breath serves as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings.

[i] This is a striking image where sin physically inscribes itself on a person's spiritual and physical being, altering their essential structure.

[ii] The Hebrew word for God (אלהים) has the same numerical value (86) as the word for nature (טבע), suggesting that nature itself is divine in origin.

[iii] The traditional Jewish educational practice of beginning children's Torah study with Leviticus rather than Genesis is here given a mystical justification.

הקרבנות. אל תגעו במשיחי
ירצה בשיחת התינוקות[i] ועוד
התחלתם בספר ויקרא מועיל
לטהרתם אחר שיצאו משני ערלה
ויש סמך לזה במדרש רבה.
ואמרו כי מן השמים עוזרים
לקטן וכן כתוב שומר פתאים
ה׳ ולא ינום ולא יישן שומר
ישראל:[ii]

this in Midrash Rabbah. And they said that heaven helps the young child, as it is written, "The Lord preserves the simple," and "The guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps." 200R

פרק מ״ד

Chapter 44

הרבה כוונות מצינו בס׳ הזהר
בפסוק שמע ישראל[iii] ובתקונים
ובמפרשים אשר לא יכילם ספר
ולהיות כי ידיעת כוונת יחוד זה
נוגע לשלמות מלאכתנו בחבור
הזה כאשר ישפוט כל מעיין
ע״כ שבתי וראה כי טוב הוא
להציע כוונה זו פה כפי דרכי
המקובלים ובפרט כאשר הורנו
המקובל קורדואי״רו זצ״ל[iv] וגם

We find many intentions[1] (kavvanot) in the Zohar regarding the verse "Hear O Israel," as well as in the Tikkunim and commentaries, more than a book could contain.[2] Since understanding the intention of this unification is essential to the completion of our work in this composition, as any reader will judge, I have therefore returned and seen that it is good to present this intention here according to the ways of the Kabbalists, particularly as taught by the Kabbalist Cordovero, of blessed memory. Also, the disciples 5R 10R

[1]The Hebrew term 'kavvanot' refers specifically to mystical intentions or meditative focuses used during prayer in Kabbalah, particularly the mental visualizations and divine name concentrations.
[2]The author is emphasizing the vast breadth of kabbalistic interpretations of the Shema, suggesting that his selection represents only a portion of available teachings.

[i]The author creatively interprets Psalm 105:15, "Do not touch My anointed ones," as referring to children's speech, elevating children's babbling to a form of divine utterance.
[ii]Cf. Genesis 48:20 — Jacob's blessing of Ephraim and Manasseh, that all Israel would be blessed through them, is the starting point for this mystical exploration of children's first words. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 58 — The reference to the discourse on Metatron's many names connects to the kabbalistic understanding of the relationship between divine names, angels, and created reality. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 60 — The reference to why Metatron is called a staff and Moses used a staff connects to kabbalistic teachings about the channeling of divine power through physical objects. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 68 — The reference to Metatron transforming into four faces connects to kabbalistic teachings about the mystical correspondence between celestial and human forms. | Cf. Zohar, Terumah 161 — The citation of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's teaching that engaging in Torah study sustains the world because God looked into the Torah and created the world provides a foundational kabbalistic principle for the entire passage. | Cf. Leviticus 18:5 — The phrase "which if a person does, he shall live by them" is used to establish the idea that the commandments literally provide life and sustenance to the soul and body. | Cf. Ezekiel 32:27 — The reference to iniquities being engraved on bones provides a textual basis for the idea that sin physically alters the spiritual structure of a person. | Cf. Leviticus 26:16 — The phrase "I will appoint over you terror" is used to support the idea that sin leads to spiritual and physical ailments. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah — The reference to Midrash Rabbah supporting the practice of beginning children's Torah study with Leviticus connects this mystical practice to rabbinic tradition. | Cf. Psalms 121:4 — The quotation "The guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps" is used to emphasize divine protection of young children in their developmental process.
[iii]The first verse of the Shema prayer (Deuteronomy 6:4), Judaism's central declaration of faith, which proclaims God's unity. In kabbalistic tradition, it holds profound importance as a means of unifying divine realms and is traditionally recited before death.
[iv]Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), one of the foremost Kabbalists of Safed, known for his

שגורי האר״י זצ״ל[i] דרשו בו
גם הם גימטריאות וצרופים
וכוונות נכבדות מאד. ונבחר
הדרך יותר מפורסם ופשוט
כפי רוב יודעי מדע שהוא
דרך הגאון הנזכר יעלוז על
משכבו בשלום. ובטרם נבא
אל המכוון אלינו בזה נציע פה
לשונות מרעיא מהימנא ומהזהר
והתקונים להלהיב המכוין והוא
מן הדרושים אשר יאותו לקרות
אותם בפני המוטל על ערש
דוי[ii] וזהמתו חיתו לחם וכ״ש אם
ח״ו תקרב חייתו לממיתים כי
בהרבה פרקים אשר באו בשלשה
חלקי ספר זה פדה נפשו מעבור
בשלח הלא היא חרב מלאך המות
כי מלאך אכזרי לא ישולח בו
בהפרדו וחיתו באור תראה כי
ישוב מדרכו הרעה ויכין לבו
לדרוש את ה׳ ויקנה דבקות
במלכו[iii] וימסור נפשו על יחוד
שמו בקרבן שי ומנחה וישכב

of the ARI, of blessed memory, have expounded on it using gematrias, letter combinations,[1] and very significant intentions. We will choose the more well-known and straightforward approach[2] according to most knowledgeable scholars, which is the approach of the aforementioned Gaon—may he rejoice on his resting place in peace. 15R

Before we proceed to our intended purpose, we will present here passages from Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd), the Zohar, and the Tikkunim to inspire the one who meditates. These belong to the discourses which are suitable to read before one who lies on his sickbed and whose life-force consumes bread,[3] and especially if, God forbid, his life approaches those who cause death. For in many chapters that appear in the three parts of this book, he has redeemed his soul from passing through the sword—which is the sword of the Angel of Death[4]—so that a cruel angel will not be sent against him when he departs, and his soul will see light when he turns from his evil way and prepares his heart to seek the Lord. He will acquire attachment to his King and surrender his soul for 20R 25R 30R

[1] These represent specific kabbalistic techniques where Hebrew letters are assigned numerical values (gematria) or rearranged in different permutations (tzerufim) to reveal hidden meanings.
[2] The author is making a conscious choice to follow Cordovero's more systematic approach rather than the more complex Lurianic system, reflecting a concern for accessibility.
[3] This is a metaphorical expression referring to someone who is still able to eat but is gravely ill. The Hebrew uses poetic language to describe different stages of illness.
[4] In Jewish mystical tradition, the Angel of Death is described as wielding a sword from which drops of gall cause death. The proper meditation is presented as protection against this.

systematic approach to Kabbalah in works like 'Pardes Rimmonim.' The author expresses a preference for his more systematic and accessible approach.
[i] Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), known as the ARI, who revolutionized Kabbalah with his complex system of cosmic creation, breaking of vessels, and soul reincarnation. His disciples continued his work after his death.
[ii] The text indicates that these kabbalistic meditations are intended to be read to those who are gravely ill or dying, establishing a practical application for this mystical knowledge.
[iii] Devekut (mystical attachment to God) is presented as a spiritual achievement that protects the soul during its transition at death, showing how mystical practice has practical consequences for the afterlife journey.

ויערב לו שנתו. [i]

the unification of His Name,[1] like an offering and a gift, and he will lie down and his sleep will be sweet to him. 35R

כתוב ברעיא מהימנא סוף פ׳ בא אל פרעה וחמה גוונין דיחודא אתערו וכלהו קשוט מאן דעביד האי עביד. ומאן דעביד האי עביד. ויהיה זה לפי מחצב הנשמות[ii] שלאחת יאות יחוד זה. ולאחרת האחר. ואמרי׳ בפ׳ בשלח דף נ״ז ע״א כל בר נש דאתי ליחדא שמא קדישא ולא אתכוון ביה בלבא ורעותא ודחילו בגין דיתברכון ביה עילאי ותתאי רמאן ליה צלותיה לבר[iii] וכלהו מכרזי עליה לביש וקב״ה קרי ביה כי תבאו לראות פני כי תבאו לראות מבעי ליה מאי לראות אלא כל אינון אנפין דמלכא טמירין בעמקא לאתר חשוכא וכל אינון דידעין ליחדא שמא קדישא כדקא יאות מבקעין כל אינון כותלי חשוכא[iv] ואנפין דמלכא

It is written in Ra'aya Mehemna at the end of the section "Come to Pharaoh" that these are the colors of unification[2] that are aroused, and all of them are true—one who performs this, performs [correctly], and one who performs that, performs [correctly]. This will be according to the soul-root,[3] for one soul this unification is appropriate, and for another, the other [unification]. And we say in Parashat Beshalach, page 57a: "Any person who comes to unify the holy Name but does not concentrate with his heart, desire, and reverence, so that the upper and lower realms[4] may be blessed through it—his prayer is cast outside, and all [the angels] proclaim about him negatively. The Holy One, blessed be He, applies to him the verse 'when you come to appear before Me'—it should have said 'when you come to see,' why does it say 'to appear'? Because all those faces of the King are hidden in the depths, in a place of darkness, and all those who know how to unify the holy Name properly break through all those walls of darkness,[5] and the faces of the King appear 40R 45R 50R 55R

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of martyrdom or self-sacrifice through deep meditation on divine unity, which is considered spiritually equivalent to physical martyrdom.

[2] The term 'gavanim d'yichuda' (colors of unification) refers to different modes or aspects of divine unification in Kabbalistic practice, suggesting that unification has multiple dimensions or qualities.

[3] In Kabbalah, each soul has a specific 'root' or source in the divine structure, which determines its spiritual nature and appropriate devotional practices.

[4] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that reality consists of higher spiritual worlds and lower material worlds, all of which are affected by human religious practice.

[5] This metaphor describes how proper kavvanah (intention) during prayer penetrates spiritual barriers that normally separate humans from direct divine experience.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The author is drawing on the Zohar's teachings about the mystical significance of the Shema as a powerful unification practice, especially important at the time of death. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author references this text as a source for specific mystical techniques and interpretations of the Shema. | Cf. Moses Cordovero's writings — The author specifically prefers Cordovero's approach to the Shema over other more complex interpretations, indicating his preference for systematic and accessible mystical practices. | Cf. ARI's (Isaac Luria's) teachings — The author acknowledges the ARI's approach while indicating a preference for Cordovero's method, suggesting a conscious choice between different kabbalistic systems. | Cf. Shema Yisrael prayer — The author is discussing the mystical intentions for this prayer, which is traditionally recited as one's final words before death, making it especially relevant to the book's focus on deathbed practices.

[ii] The text establishes that different souls require different methods of unification, suggesting a kabbalistic understanding that souls originate from different spiritual sources and thus may need different techniques for connecting with the divine.

[iii] The Zohar emphasizes here that prayer without proper intention is not merely ineffective but actively rejected, 'cast outside' the divine realms.

[iv] This powerful metaphor describes how proper unification breaks through 'walls of darkness' that obscure divine presence, suggesting that mystical practice can penetrate cosmic barriers.

אתחזיין ונהירין לכלא. וכד
אינון אתחזיק ונהרין מתברכין
כלא עלאין ותתאין. כדין ברכאן
אשתכחו בכלהו עלמין וכדין
כתיב לראות פני וגו׳ ובסוף
כתב ואי איהו אתי. ליחדא
שמא קדישא ולא אתכוין ביה
ברעותא דלבא בדחילו קב״ה
אמר מי בקש זאת מידכם רמוס
חצרי[i] דמשרין דינין במדת זאת
בההיא דכתיב בזאת יבא אהרן
אל הקדש וממנה מתפשט הדין
בכלא חס ושלום. וזהו תמצית
המורם מר״מ פרשת ואתחנן כי
נראה לנו יחוד נאות והגון לכוין
בו בשעת יציאת נשמה[ii] שמע
ישראל ה׳ אלהינו ה׳ אחד. כמה
דמיחדי שמא דקודשא בריך
הוא לתתא הכי אתייחד לעילא
מיד אשתכח קודשא ברוך הוא
יחידא לעילא ותתא מאן דמיחד
שמיה דקודשא בריך הוא ישוי
לביה ורעותיה בההוא יחודא
דקאמרן ויחבר כל שייפוהי
בההוא יחודא למהוי כלא חד
כמא דשוי כל שייפוהי ברזא דחד
הכי לעילא מחבר כל שייפין
עילאין בההוא יחודא למהוי
כלא חד. בשעתא דאתי ליחדא
שמיה דקודשא בריך הוא כל
חילי שמיא כולהו קיימין שורין
שורין בגין לאתתקנא ולאתכללא
כולהו בההוא יחודא למיקם
ברזא דחד ביחודא חדא כולהו
מתתקנן בתקוניהון בההיא שעתא
קיימא חד שמשא דלקיט שושנים
דאינון שייפין עילאין ברזא
דמ״ב שמהן ואתלקיטו כולהו

and shine to all. And when they appear and shine, all are blessed—both the upper and lower realms. Then blessings are found in all worlds, and thus it is written ‘to appear before Me,’ etc.” And at the end it is written: “And if one comes to unify the holy Name but does not concentrate with the desire of his heart in reverence, the Holy One, blessed be He, says: ‘Who has required this from your hand, to trample My courts?’—for they cause judgments in the attribute of ‘this’ (zot),[1] which is referenced in ‘with this shall Aaron come into the sanctuary,’ and from it judgment spreads to all, God forbid. 60R 65R

This is the essential extract from Ra’aya Mehemna, Parashat Va’etchanan, for it seems to us that an appropriate and fitting unification to concentrate on at the time of the soul’s departure is “Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God, the LORD is One.” Just as they unify the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, below, so is He unified above. Immediately, the Holy One, blessed be He, is found unified above and below. One who unifies the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, should direct his heart and will to that unification we mentioned, and connect all his limbs in that unification[2] so that all becomes one. Just as he makes all his limbs function in the mystery of oneness, so above, all the supernal limbs are connected in that unification to become all one. 70R 75R 80R 85R

In the hour when one comes to unify the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, all the heavenly hosts stand in rows upon rows in order to be established and included in that unification, to stand in the mystery of oneness in a single unity. They are all arranged in their proper order. At that moment, there stands an attendant who gathers roses,[3] which are the supernal limbs, in the mystery of the 42 divine names. They are all gathered in that unification and made into a single body in a single mystery. Then all 90R 95R

[1] In Kabbalah, ‘zot’ often refers to the Shekhinah or divine feminine presence, associated with the sefirah of Malkhut, which can be a channel for either blessing or judgment.
[2] The concept of ‘limbs’ here refers both to the physical body of the worshipper and to cosmic ‘limbs’ or attributes of divinity that are unified through proper prayer.
[3] This refers to the angel Metatron or a similar celestial being who collects the spiritual effects of proper unification and arranges them into a unified divine structure.

[i] The text uses this harsh prophetic rebuke to emphasize that improper unification is not merely neutral but actively harmful, causing the spread of judgment rather than blessing.
[ii] This establishes the specific purpose of this teaching: to provide the optimal unification practice for the moment of death, which in Jewish mystical tradition is considered a spiritually critical transition.

בההוא וחודא ואתעבידו כולהו
95 גופא חדא ברזא חדא ואז כולהו
שיפין מתחברן בחבורא חדא
עילא ותתא ברזא דה׳ אחד ושמו
אחד ולכן אמרו דמאריכין באחד
כמלקט שושנים[i] לאתייחדא י״ב
100 אחד ביחודא שלים. ובדין יקרא
כלא קרבן שלים ועל רזא דא
אעיל ליה קודשא בריך הוא
בג״ע לאדם קדמאה דכתיב
לעבדה ולשמרה ותנינן דאלין
105 אינון קרבנין תרין רזא דה׳ אחד
ושמו אחד בדין מתעטר קודשא
בריך הוא בעטרת ברישא דכתם
פז. בהאי שושנים אית ביה שית
מאה ותליסר פקודין[ii] דאינון
110 שיפין מתרין סטרין ברזא דה׳
אחד ושמו אחד. ותפוח מעצי
היער ושושנים מבין החוחים דא
ודא אצטריך לאסתכלא כחדא
ביחודא שלים זכאה איהו מאן
115 דקריב קרבנין אלין ודאי לרעות
ליה בהאי עלמא ובעלמא דאתי
וכתוב בפקודין בפרשת משפטים
דף קי״ט דמאן דמיחד לקב״ה
בכל יומא בעי דליהוי מיתתיה
120 [iii] באחד

the limbs connect in a single connection, above and below, in the mystery of "The LORD is One and His name is One." Therefore, they said that one should extend [the pronunciation of] "echad" (one) like one who gathers roses,[1] to unify the twelve [tribes of Israel represented by] "echad" in complete unification. Then all is considered a complete offering. 100R

Based on this mystery, the Holy One, blessed be He, placed Adam, the first man, in the Garden of Eden, as it is written "to work it and to guard it."[2] And we have learned that these are two offerings [corresponding to] the mystery of "The LORD is One and His name is One." Then the Holy One, blessed be He, is crowned with a crown on His head of fine gold. In these roses there are six hundred and thirteen commandments,[3] which are limbs from two sides, in the mystery of "The LORD is One and His name is One." "An apple tree among the trees of the forest" and "lilies among the thorns"—both of these need to be contemplated together in complete unification. Fortunate is one who offers these sacrifices to please Him in this world and in the World to Come. 105R 110R 115R

And it is written in the Commandments section in Parashat Mishpatim, page 119, that one who unifies the Holy One, blessed be He, every day should have his death with [the word] "echad"[4] (one). 120R

[1] This describes the traditional practice of prolonging the pronunciation of the word 'echad' (one) in the Shema, visualizing the gathering of divine attributes into unity.

[2] The text interprets Adam's duty in Eden as performing two types of offerings or unifications, connecting physical action with cosmic maintenance.

[3] The 613 mitzvot (commandments) are mystically understood as corresponding to parts of the divine and human structure, with their observance creating cosmic wholeness.

[4] This refers to the tradition of dying while reciting the Shema, specifically with 'echad' (one) as the final word, considered an ideal death in Jewish tradition.

[i] This refers to the practice of prolonging the word 'echad' (one) in the Shema, comparing it to gathering roses—a metaphor for collecting and unifying the divine sparks or attributes.

[ii] The 613 commandments are mystically understood as corresponding to limbs or organs of the divine and human body, suggesting that proper observance of mitzvot creates cosmic wholeness.

[iii] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — This text from Ra'aya Mehemna, a mystical commentary within the Zohar, discusses proper kavvanah (intention) during prayer, explaining that different souls may require different unification techniques. | Cf. Zohar, Beshalach — This section emphasizes the importance of proper intention when unifying God's name, warning that prayers without proper concentration are rejected while those with proper intention break through cosmic barriers. | Cf. Shema Yisrael — The Shema prayer is identified as the ideal unification to recite at the moment of death, with the extended pronunciation of 'echad' (one) being particularly significant. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim — This reference connects daily practice of divine unification with one's final moments, suggesting that those who properly unify God's name daily will merit doing so at death. | Cf. Genesis 2:15 — The text interprets Adam's duty to 'work and guard' the Garden of Eden as referring to performing two types of offerings/unifications corresponding to 'The LORD is One and His name is One.' | Cf. Zechariah 14:9 — This prophetic verse is interpreted as כגוונא דשחיטת בהמה בתריסר

בדיקות דסכין[i] ובסכין דאיהו
אחד ומברך ומקדש לקב״ה בכל
יומא בברכו ובקדושה ובכל
125 אכילה ושתיה דיליה הנה כי
צריך למסור נפשו בעת אמירת
אחד[ii] כדכתיב כי עליך הורגנו
כל היום נחשבנו כצאן טבחה
שאנו צאנו של הקב״ה למקריב
130 גרמן קרבן לגביה ביחוד שמע
ישראל ובתעניות ג״כ וברוח
העולה כלול בתורה ובמצות
ובכל מצוה סליק שכינתא
לגבי קב״ה והאדם הזריז
135 בברכו וקדושה וברכת הנהנין
כדין קב״ה נחית על ההוא
רוחא בכמה משריין ואליהו
ודאי[iii] ובכמה משריין דמטרוניתא
סלקין עמיה ומשריין דמלכא
140 נחתין לגביה וכלהו לנטרא ליה
ולאודעא להההוא רוחא כמה רזין
דאורייתא וכ״ש אם יכוין באחד
בעת יציאת נשמתו שמלאכי
אלהים יפגעו בו בכוונו ליחוד
145 קב״ה ושכינתיה וכדין אבא
ואמא רחמין ליה[iv] ונשקין ליה
ואינון גופייהו נטרין ליה ויפוק

Just as with the slaughtering of an animal,[1] which requires twelve inspections of the knife and a knife that is "one" (perfectly smooth),[2] and as one blesses and sanctifies the Holy One, blessed be He, every 125R day with the Barchu and Kedushah prayers and with every act of eating and drinking—so too must one surrender one's soul when saying "Echad" (One) in the Shema, as it is written: "For Your sake we are killed all day long; we are considered as sheep for 130R the slaughter." For we are the flock of the Holy One, blessed be He, offering ourselves as sacrifices to Him through the unification of "Hear, O Israel," and likewise through fasts. And through the ascending spirit, which is included in Torah and command- 135R ments, the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) ascends to the Holy One, blessed be He, with every commandment performed. When one is diligent in reciting Barchu, Kedushah, and blessings over enjoyments, the Holy One, blessed be He, descends upon that 140R spirit with many heavenly hosts—certainly Elijah as well—and many hosts of the Divine Queen (Matronita) ascend with him, while the hosts of the King descend to him. All come to protect him and to make known to that spirit many secrets of the Torah. 145R
How much more so if one concentrates on "Echad" (One) at the time of the soul's departure—angels of God will meet him as he directs his intention toward

[1]The text creates a striking parallel between ritual animal slaughter and the spiritual self-sacrifice required during prayer, particularly when reciting the Shema. This comparison would have been immediately understood by the original audience familiar with the meticulous requirements of Jewish ritual slaughter.

[2]The term 'one' (אחד) for the knife creates a deliberate connection to the word 'One' in the Shema prayer, suggesting that just as the knife must be perfectly smooth to be 'one,' so must the worshipper's consciousness be undivided when declaring God's unity.

describing the cosmic effect of proper unification, where all divine limbs connect in unity above and below. | Cf. Song of Songs 2:3 — The text uses this verse alongside 'lilies among thorns' as metaphors requiring contemplation to achieve complete unification, suggesting these represent different aspects of divinity. | Cf. Isaiah 1:12 — This prophetic rebuke is applied to those who recite unifications without proper intention, suggesting that improper prayer not only fails but actually causes harm by spreading judgment.

[i]This refers to the twelve inspections required for a ritual slaughter knife to ensure its perfect smoothness. The author uses this halakhic requirement as a metaphor for the precision and care needed in spiritual preparation.

[ii]The kabbalistic practice of surrendering one's soul during the recitation of the word 'Echad' (One) in the Shema prayer is a central mystical practice. This moment of declaring God's unity is seen as a daily opportunity for spiritual death and rebirth.

[iii]The prophet Elijah is believed in Jewish mysticism to attend moments of spiritual elevation, particularly serving as a guide for souls ascending to higher realms.

[iv]'Father and Mother' (Abba ve-Imma) in Kabbalistic terminology refer to the divine partzufim (configurations) corresponding to the sefirot of Chokhmah (Wisdom) and Binah (Understanding), which together generate the lower divine attributes.

נשמתיה בנשיקא[i] דאיהי דבקותא
דרוחא ברוחא דלא מתפרש
מיניה ודא אקרי נשיקה דאיהי
בפה דבקותא דרוחא ברוחא
עלאה [ii]

the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence. Then the Father and Mother (supernal divine aspects)[1] will have compassion on him and kiss him, and they themselves will protect him. His soul will depart with a kiss,[2] which is the cleaving of spirit to spirit, never to be separated from Him. This is called "the kiss," which is, through the mouth, the cleaving of spirit to supernal spirit.

ועיין מכוונת היחוד בפ׳ תרומה
דף קל״ג. איך מתפרשת ב״י
מסטרא אחרא ובזה עולה לחופה
עם בעלה.[iii] עוד שם בדף קנ״ט
ביאר שמות המרגלא שהם אל
מימין אלהים משמאל אלהינו
באמצע[iv] ומפתח דכולא ידו״ד
שדי צבאות אבגית״ץ וכו׳ ע״ש.
ובר״מ פ׳ יתרו דף צ״ב ובדף

See also regarding the intentions of unification in Parashat Terumah, page 133, which explains how the Community of Israel separates from the Other Side and thereby ascends to the wedding canopy with her husband.[3] Also there on page 159, he explains the names of the formula, which are: El on the right, Elohim on the left, Eloheinu in the center, and the key to all is YHVH, Shaddai, Tzeva'ot, ABGITATZ,[4] etc.—see there. And in [1] I've added a parenthetical explanation that these terms refer to divine aspects, as the original text assumes familiarity with kabbalistic terminology where 'Father and Mother' (Abba ve-Imma) refer to the divine configurations of Chokhmah and Binah.

[2] The concept of 'death by divine kiss' (mittat neshikah) is a significant mystical idea that represents the most elevated form of death. Unlike ordinary death through the Angel of Death, death by divine kiss is painless and represents direct communion with the divine.

[3] The original uses marriage metaphors to describe the mystical union of divine entities. The 'wedding canopy' (chuppah) represents the state of complete unification between the feminine divine presence (Shekhinah) and the masculine aspect of divinity.

[4] These are divine names used in kabbalistic meditation. ABGITATZ is the first word formed from the initial letters of the 42-letter divine name, which has special significance in Jewish mysticism, particularly for deathbed practices.

[i] Death by divine kiss (mittat neshikah) is considered in Jewish tradition to be the most elevated form of death, reserved for the most righteous. Moses, Aaron, and Miriam are traditionally believed to have died in this manner—their souls departing through a painless divine kiss rather than through the Angel of Death.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — This passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts of divine unification through prayer, especially the idea that reciting the Shema with proper intention creates cosmic unifications between divine attributes. The Zohar frequently describes this process using imagery of marriage between the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity. | Cf. Psalms 44:23 — The author uses this verse to support the idea that reciting the Shema with full concentration, especially the word 'Echad' (One), requires a willingness to surrender one's soul to God, metaphorically dying in the process of declaring divine unity. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This passage reflects the Tikkunei Zohar's emphasis on how specific human actions (prayer, blessings, etc.) cause corresponding movements in the divine realms, with angels and divine hosts responding to human spiritual initiatives. | Cf. Song of Songs — The passage's discussion of the 'kiss' as spiritual union draws on the Song of Songs' imagery as interpreted in Kabbalistic literature, where divine kiss represents the highest form of spiritual union and, when occurring at death, the most elevated form of departure from this world.

[iii] This phrase uses marriage imagery to describe the mystical union between the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) and the Holy One, blessed be He. The 'wedding canopy' (chuppah) represents the state of complete unification.

[iv] This represents the kabbalistic arrangement of divine names corresponding to the right side (mercy), left side (judgment), and the central column (balance), reflecting the structure of the sefirot (divine emanations).

ק״ס וקס״א פירוש סוד היחוד
ה׳ הוא האלהים[i] כלל גדול
ביחוד. ויש פירוש אחר ביחוד
פ׳ ויקהל דף רט״ז ואמר דאליהו
ז״ל אוליף אותו יחוד ושהיה
יחודו של רב המנונא סבא שים
עיניך בתקון כ״ב דף ס״ג וס״ד
המתחיל קם ר״ש ואמר וכו׳
ומסיים מיני לעלם ותראה איך
נכללים כל הנבראים ונוצרים
ונעשים בשכינה ובחינת האברים
הרוחניים המכוונים באצילות
הם בסוד לבושיה לבד[ii] ותבין
סוד השגחה מהמיחד הכל ית״ש
לעד. עיין בציוני פ׳ ואתחנן
דף צ״ג ע״ב בפי׳ פסוק שמע
ישראל ותראה פלאות שספר
משה לישראל מסדר שרי מעלה
שראה בעלותו למרום וג׳ כוונות
[iv iii]בפסוק שמע ישראל:

Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Yitro, page 92, and on pages 160-161, there is an explanation of the secret of the unification "The LORD, He is God"[1]—a great principle in unification. There is another explanation of unification in Parashat Vayakhel, page 216, where it states that Elijah, of blessed memory, taught that unification, and that it was the unification method of Rav Hamnuna Saba. Set your eyes on Tikkun 22, pages 63-64, which begins "Rabbi Shimon arose and said..." and concludes "from me forever," and you will see how all created beings are included, formed, and made within the Shekhinah, and how the aspects of spiritual limbs that correspond to Atzilut[2] are merely in the secret of His garments. You will understand the secret of providence from the One who unifies everything, may He be blessed forever. Look in Tziyoni on Parashat Va'etchanan, page 93b, in the explanation of the verse "Hear, O Israel," and you will see wonders that Moses told Israel about the order of celestial princes that he saw during his ascent to heaven, and the three intentions in the verse "Hear, O Israel."[3]

[1]This phrase (Adonai Hu HaElohim) comes from 1 Kings 18:39 and represents the unification of divine attributes of mercy (YHVH) and judgment (Elohim), a fundamental concept in kabbalistic theology.

[2]This refers to the kabbalistic concept that divine structures in the highest world (Atzilut) serve as 'garments' or vehicles for divine manifestation rather than being the divine essence itself.

[3]The Shema prayer has special significance in deathbed practices as described elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok. These three kavvanot (mystical intentions) would be particularly important for someone reciting the Shema at the time of death.

[i]This biblical phrase ('The LORD, He is God') represents the ultimate unification of the divine attributes of mercy (YHVH) and judgment (Elohim), a central concept in kabbalistic theology.

[ii]This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the spiritual 'limbs' or structures in the highest world (Atzilut) are merely 'garments' or external manifestations of divine essence rather than the essence itself.

[iii]The text refers to three distinct mystical intentions (kavvanot) for the Shema prayer, which is particularly significant given that this passage appears in a section about deathbed practices, where the Shema has special importance.

[iv]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This section explains the mystical process by which the divine feminine aspect (Shekhinah) separates from impure forces in order to unite with the divine masculine aspect, a central theme in kabbalistic understanding of cosmic harmony. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna (section of the Zohar) — This section of the Zohar presents a fundamental principle about divine unification through the phrase 'The LORD, He is God,' which represents the harmonization of divine attributes of mercy (YHVH) and judgment (Elohim). | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This text explores how all created beings are included within the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah), and how spiritual structures in the highest world (Atzilut) serve as 'garments' for divine manifestation. | Cf. Sefer HaTziyoni — This reference points to kabbalistic teachings about what Moses revealed concerning the angelic hierarchy he witnessed during his ascent to heaven, and suggests there are three distinct mystical intentions one should have when reciting the Shema prayer.

פרק מ״ה

Chapter 45

פירוש היחוד שמע ישראל ה׳ אלהינו ה׳ אחד לפי סדר היכלות היצירה בתפלת מיושב היחוד הוא בסוד היכל אהבה וד׳ פרשיות הם סוד אהבה פרשה ראשונה יש בה מ״ב תיבות ופ׳ שניה ע״ב ושלישית חמשים. ורביעית ע״ב הם סוד ד׳ היכלות עליונות שהם סוד מקוה שבה טובלת קומת הקדושה והוא סוד היות אורות אלו נפתחים ומטהרים הקדושה מכל פגם עון התחתונים. וההיכלות הם סוד דרום מצד החסד נפתחים מ״ב אורות ע״י מ״ב תיבות יושפע שפעם בחסד ובצפון ע״ב היכלות וע״י ע״ב תיבות שבפ׳ שניה נפתחים ע״ב אורות להאירה. ושם מ״ב הוא מפתח אורות מדרום ושם ע״ב מפתח אותם שבצפון לכן טוב. לכוין בכל תיבה מואהבת עד והיה אם שמוע אות אחת משם מ״ב בכל תיבה וכן בפ׳ שנייה יכוין שם אחד משם ע״ב בכל תיבה. והיה וה״ו וכן כלו ויכוין בשקורח פ׳ זו באותיותיה עם נקודותיה וטעמיה שיש לנפשו שהיא בסוד האותיות ורוחו שהוא בסוד הנקודות ולנשמתו שהיא בסוד הטעמים שכלם הם בראשו מרכבה ודבוק לשם של מ״ב ע״י מטטרו״ן שר הפנים הנרמז בפסוק ולקח הכהן

The explanation of the unification "Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is One" according to the order of the Chambers of Formation in the seated prayer. The unification is in the mystery of the Chamber of Love,[1] and the four passages are the mystery of love. The first passage contains 42 words, the second 72, the third 50, and the fourth 72. These represent the mystery of the four supernal chambers which are the mystery of the ritual bath in which the divine structure immerses, and this is the secret of how these lights open and purify the holiness from all blemish of the sins of those below. 5R 10R

The chambers are the mystery of the south from the side of Loving-kindness (Chesed), where 42 lights open through the 42 words and their flow is influenced with kindness;[A] and in the north are 72 chambers, and through the 72 words in the second passage, 72 lights open to illuminate it. The 42-letter Name is the key to the lights from the south,[2] and the 72-letter Name is the key to those from the north, therefore it is good to focus on each word from "And you shall love" until "And it shall come to pass if you listen," associating one letter from the 42-letter Name with each word. Similarly, in the second passage, one should associate one name from the 72-letter Name with each word, beginning with "VaHaVu" and so on. 15R 20R 25R

When reciting this passage, one should focus on its letters, vowel points, and cantillation marks, which correspond to one's nefesh (vital soul) which is in the mystery of the letters, one's ruach (spirit) which is in the mystery of the vowel points, and one's neshamah (higher soul) which is in the mystery of the cantillation mark[3]s. All of these are in one's 30R

[A] Or: "The chambers represent the mystery of the south, associated with the divine attribute of Loving-kindness (Chesed), where 42 lights are opened through the 42 words, causing their divine flow to be infused with kindness" — This alternate translation more explicitly shows the causal relationship between reciting the words and the opening of spiritual channels, while also clarifying the theological concept that south corresponds to Chesed in kabbalistic cosmology.

[1] The term 'unification' (yichud) in Kabbalah refers to the mystical joining of different aspects of divinity, particularly the masculine and feminine divine attributes. The Shema prayer is considered the primary vehicle for this unification in daily prayer.

[2] The 42-letter divine name is not found explicitly in scripture but is derived from various sources including the first 42 letters of the creation story. It was considered extremely powerful in Jewish mysticism and used in meditative practices and protective amulets.

[3] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the Hebrew text itself contains multiple layers of meaning corresponding to different levels of soul and reality. The consonants (most fundamental), vowels head as a chariot and attachment to the 42-letter Name through Metatron, Prince of the Presence, who is alluded to in the verse "and the priest shall take the basket." When reading the second passage, one should also focus on the letters, vowel points, and cantillation marks that correspond to one's nefesh, ruach, and neshamah in one's body with its arms, connecting to the 72-letter Name through Metatron. This is a great principle for all mystical intentions, through which one rectifies one's entire structure along with the supernal structure, and each letter will illuminate one's 248 spiritual and physical limbs like a lamp, as stated in the Midrash.

הטנא[i] ובקריאתו פרשה שניה יכוין ג״כ באותיות ונקודות וטעמים שיש לנפשו ורוחו ונשמתו אשר בגופו עם זרועותיו לשם ע״ב ע״י מטטרו״ן וזה כלל גדול בכל הכוונות ובזה מתקן קומתו כולה עם הקומה העליונה וכל אות תאיר ברמ״ח אבריו הרוחניים והגשמים כנר כדאמור במדרש. ועל זה הדרך בפ׳ שלישית ורביעית נפש רוח ונשמה אשר בשאר קומתו וכנזכר ובא שם מ״ב לימין ושם ע״ב לשמאל עם היות שם ע״ב חסד ושם מ״ב גבורה הגם שהוא גבוה מעל גבוה. בא כך כדי לכלול ימין בשמאל ושמאל בימין[ii] ולכן טוב בקריאת שמע לקשור יד ימין עם י״ד שמאל ולהגבירה. ובפ׳ ושמתם שהיא למזרח נפתחים חמשים אורות מצד הת״ת ואפשר ששמו יהיה נ״ד הויות שבאים מצרוף שם בן ד׳ ובפ׳ ציצית שהיא במערב נפתחים ע״ב מצד המלכות בעצמה ויש ע״ב שמות אחרים שמקורם ע״ב במלואו לזכר וע״ב הויות מקודם י׳ י״ה יה״ו יד״וד לנקבה וזה יהיה רמז הפרשיות שתים מע״ב תיבות ולעולם יכוין לכלול נפשו ורוחו ונשמתו עם שיפין עליונים הנכללים ביחוד קב״ה ושכינתיה ויכוין ברוחניות המצות הנצטווה בפרשיות אלו להאיר השכינה העליונה כי הם רבי הכמות והאיכות ועקר מחשבתו תהיה לעולם בסבת כל

Following this approach in the third and fourth passages, one connects the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah in the rest of one's structure as mentioned. The 42-letter Name comes to the right and the 72-letter Name to the left, even though the 72-letter Name is associated with Chesed (Kindness) and the 42-letter Name with Gevurah (Strength), despite the latter being higher than the former. This arrangement is to include right within left and left within right, and therefore it is good when reciting the Shema to bind the right hand with the left hand and to strengthen it.[1]

In the passage "And you shall place them," which corresponds to the east, 50 lights open from the side of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), and perhaps its name consists of 54 divine Names derived from permutations of the four-letter Name. In the passage about tzitzit (ritual fringes), which corresponds to the west, 72 lights open from the side of Malkhut (Kingdom) itself. There are 72 other names whose source is the fully spelled 72 for the masculine aspect, and 72 divine Names beginning with Yod, Yah, Yahu, YHVH for the feminine aspect. This alludes to the two passages each having 72 words.

(which animate the consonants), and cantillation marks (which give musical and interpretive structure) parallel the hierarchy of soul levels.

[1] This refers to a physical practice during the recitation of the Shema where one would clasp one's hands together, symbolizing the unification of different divine attributes (particularly judgment and mercy). This physical gesture was believed to facilitate the cosmic unifications being enacted through prayer.

[i] The text identifies a creative allusion to Metatron in the biblical verse 'and the priest shall take the basket' (Deuteronomy 26:4). This is likely based on gematria (numerical equivalence) or another form of kabbalistic word interpretation.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic principle of 'sweetening judgment with mercy' (המתקת הדינים), where the harsh aspects of divine judgment (left) are tempered by divine kindness (right), and mercy is given structure through judgment. This balance is considered essential for proper cosmic function.

הסבות המאציל ב״ה נשמה לכל
הנשמות ורצון כל הרצונות והוא
בעל הרצון מעולה מכל ברכה
ותהלה ובכחו הגדול מיחד כל
נאצליו ועקר התפלות והתחנות
אליו ולא למדותיו. ואם תרצה
לנוח קצת דעתך בזה היסוד
המוסד לכל שים עיניך בר״מ
פ׳ בא דף מ״ב מ״ג משם תראה
מהו מקור ומהו מעין ים ושבעה
נחלים וכלם מתאכלים מא״ס
בעל הרצון ושם פירוש מציאות
י׳ שמות שאינם נמחקים ופי׳
י׳ ספירות ואיך נכללים שבעה
נחלים במלכות ובה הגדולה
והגבורה והת״ת וכו׳ ואחר כך
פירוש משמשין לאילין דאינון
מאנין דכורסייא בארבע סמכין
ושית דרגין הא עשר ולבתר
פירוש עשר כתות המלאכים
לשמשא לכורסייא ולאלו שמשים
סמ״ך מ״ם וכתות דיליה דאינון
בעננין למרכב בהון לנחתא
לארעא ואינון כסוסין להון ואם
תבוין לבך ודעתך על חלום
שני של נ״נ שהיה בגזרת עירין
ובמימר קדישין ואמר גודו
אילנא וקציצו ענפוי ומן אינשא
נטרד ושבעה עידנין חלפו עליה
ועם חיות ברא הוה מדוריה
ותדע כי הוא היה רישא דדהבא
ראש קומת החצונים[i] בזה תבין
יחס חלום ראשון עם השני ואיך
קומת החצונים עתידה לבלות
על דרך ואת הצפוני ארחיק
מעליכם וגו׳ פתחתי פתח קטן
זה והחכם מדעתו יראה מעצמו
לכמה פנות מתרחב כי אין כאן
מקום דרוש זה. בפרטות פסוק
היחוד בו יש ששה תיבות יורה
כללותם שש ספירות שבת״ת

One should always intend to include one's nefesh, ruach, and neshamah with the supernal limbs that are included in the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence. One should 75R focus on the spiritual dimension of the commandments instructed in these passages to illuminate the supernal Divine Presence, for they are many in quantity and quality. The core of one's thought should always be directed toward the Cause of all causes, the 80R Emanator, blessed be He, who is the Soul of all souls and the Will of all wills. He is the Master of Will, exalted above all blessing and praise, and through His great power, He unifies all His emanations. The essence of prayers and supplications should be di- 85R rected to Him, not to His attributes.

If you wish to rest your mind somewhat regarding this foundational principle, direct your attention to Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Bo, pages 42-43.[1] There you will see what is the source, what is the wellspring 90R and sea, and the seven streams, all of which are sustained by the Infinite One (Ein Sof), the Master of Will. There is an explanation of the existence of the ten divine Names that may not be erased, an explanation of the ten sefirot, and how the seven streams 95R are included in Malkhut, which contains "the greatness, the strength, the beauty," etc. Then there is an explanation of the attendants to these, which are the vessels of the Throne with four supports and six levels, making ten. Afterward, there is an explana- 100R tion of the ten groups of angels serving the Throne, and to these attendants are Samekh Mem and his groups, which are like clouds for Him to ride upon to descend to earth, and they are like horses for them.

If you direct your heart and mind to Nebuchad- 105R nezzar's second dream, which was by the decree of the watchers and the statement of the holy ones, saying, "Cut down the tree and chop off its branches, and from humanity he was driven away, and seven periods passed over him, and his dwelling was with 110R the wild beasts," then you will know that he was the golden head, the head of the structure of the [1] Ra'aya Mehemna ('The Faithful Shepherd') is a section of the Zohar, the central text of Jewish mysticism, written in Aramaic. It presents teachings supposedly given by the soul of Moses. The cited passage discusses the structure of divine emanations and the relationship between different levels of spiritual reality.

[i] This is a reference to Daniel 2:38, where Nebuchadnezzar is described as the 'head of gold' in his first dream. The author creatively reinterprets this as representing the 'head of the structure of external forces,' meaning the chief of negative spiritual entities.

ובברוך שם כבוד מלכותו
לעולם ועד ג״כ שש תיבות יורה
כללות שש ספירות שביסוד
וכללותם י״ב שהם י״ב גבולי
אלכסון והאותיות הם בפסוק
שמע ישראל כ״ה יורה על
מציאות י׳ ספירות שכלולות
בחסד וי׳ שבגבורה וחמשה
שבת״ת עד ת״ת שבת״ת ושם עצם
הפסוק בסוד וא״ו ובבשכמ״לו
הם כ״ד אותיות נגד ד׳ ספירות
מת״ת שבת״ת עצמו ולמטה
ועשר בנצח ועשר בהוד הם כ״ד
והיסוד עצמו מקבל אותם שהוא
עצם הפסוק בסוד וא״ו וכלל
האותיות כלם הם מ״ט בסוד מ״ט
שערי בינה[i] וסודם מי דהיינו
סוד המקוה[ii] שפי׳ והם סוד מים
יו״ד עם מ״ם לכל סטר עוד
מ״ם סתומה עם י״ב נקודין לכל
סטר נקודה אמצעית שהיא שורש
לכל י״ב גבולים ונכלל בזה ב׳
מיני טהרות מ׳ סאה ט׳ קבין כי
הנקודות הם מ״ח ועם הנקודה
הם מ״ט. ויש עוד בחינה אחרת
מט׳ נקודין לכל סטר שהם סוד
מ׳ סאה עם הנקודה:[iii]

external forces. With this, you will understand the relationship between the first dream and the second, and how the structure of the external forces is destined to be annihilated, in the manner of "and the northern one I will remove far from you," etc. I have opened this small opening, and the wise person will see for himself how many directions it expands into, for this is not the place for such an inquiry.

Specifically, the verse of unification contains six words, indicating that they encompass the six sefirot within Tiferet. Similarly, in "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever" there are also six words, indicating the encompassing of the six sefirot within Yesod. Together they total twelve, corresponding to the twelve diagonal boundaries.[1] The letters in the verse "Hear, O Israel" number 25, indicating the existence of ten sefirot included in Chesed, ten in Gevurah, and five in Tiferet, up to Tiferet within Tiferet. The essence of the verse is in the mystery of the letter Vav.[A] In "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever," there are 24 letters, corresponding to four sefirot from Tiferet within Tiferet itself and below, plus ten in Netzach and ten in Hod, totaling 24. Yesod itself receives them, as it is the essence of the verse in the mystery of the letter Vav.

The total of all the letters is 49, corresponding

[A] Or: "in the mystery of the letter Vav (which represents the six directions and the divine attribute of Tiferet)" — This expanded translation provides important context about the letter Vav's mystical significance, which would be immediately understood by kabbalists but might not be clear to modern readers without this additional information.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the twelve diagonal boundaries (gevulei alachson) that emerge from the permutations of the divine name YHVH and structure the cosmos according to Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early mystical text. These are visualized as diagonal lines connecting the six directions (north, south, east, west, up, down).

[i] According to rabbinic tradition, there are 50 gates of Understanding (Binah), but only 49 were revealed to Moses (Rosh Hashanah 21b). The author connects this concept to the 49 letters in the Shema and its response, suggesting that proper prayer might access these profound levels of divine wisdom.

[ii] The mikveh (ritual bath) serves as a mystical metaphor throughout this passage. Just as immersion in a physical mikveh purifies ritual impurity, the proper recitation of the Shema with appropriate mystical intentions purifies the divine structure from the effects of human sin.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 4, Chapter 43 — This passage continues the discussion of the mystical significance of the Shema prayer begun in Chapter 42. Both sections present detailed Kabbalistic interpretations of this central Jewish prayer, explaining how proper recitation with specific mystical intentions (kavvanot) can create cosmic effects and unifications in the spiritual worlds. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd), Parashat Bo, folios 42-43 — The author explicitly references this section of the Zohar as containing foundational teachings about divine emanations, the structure of the spiritual worlds, and the relationships between various divine names and attributes. This citation provides the authoritative basis for many of the kabbalis-to the 49 gates of Understanding (Binah), and their mystery is "Mi" [who/what], which is the mystery of the ritual bath as explained. They are the mystery of water: Yod with Mem for each direction, plus the closed Mem with 12 points for each direction, with a central point that is the root of all 12 boundaries. Included in this are two types of purifications: the 40 se'ah and the 9 kav, for the points number 48, and with the additional point they total 49. There is yet another aspect of 9 points for each direction, which is the mystery of the 40 se'ah with the point. 140R 145R 150R

פרק מ״ו

עוד בפסוק זה ג׳ שמות ה׳ אלהינו ה׳ הם י״ד אותיות וחלופם באבג״ד כוז״ו במוכס״ז כוז״ו והם ב׳ פעמים י״ד צרופם כ״ח שהם כ״ח אדנ״י דהיינו כ״ח אותיות משם אדנ״י במלואו ומלוי מילואו ואלו כ״ח הם ודאי לשכינה והם סוד י״ד עתים ללבנה מלאים וי״ד חסרים. ויכוין ליחד י״ד עם י״ד וכ״ח אותיות ג׳ שמות אלו עם חלופם ייחדם עם הכ״ח עליונים וכאשר יקשור ב׳ ידיו זו על זו יכוין בי״ד קשרים שבימין

Chapter 46

Additionally, in this verse, the three divine names "YHVH Eloheinu YHVH" contain 14 letters, and their substitution according to the ABGD [letter substitution] system is "KuZu BeMuKhSaZ KuZu."[A] These two sets of 14 letters combine to form 28, corresponding to the 28 letters of the divine name Adonai when spelled out in its full form and the filling of its filling. These 28 letters certainly correspond to the Shekhinah [Divine Presence] and represent the mystery of the 14 full and 14 deficient lunar cycles.[B1] 5R 10R

One should intend to unify the 14 with the 14, and the 28 letters of these three divine names with their substitutions, joining them with the 28 super-

[A] Or: "KUZU BMUKSZ KUZU" — This is an alternative transliteration that maintains the capital letters throughout, which some scholarly traditions prefer when rendering divine names or their substitutions. This might be preferred in contexts emphasizing the letter-by-letter correspondences with the Tetragrammaton.

[B] Or: "the 14 waxing and 14 waning phases of the moon" — This alternate translation emphasizes the cyclical nature of the lunar phases rather than the calendar months. While less precise in terms of Jewish calendar calculation, it might better convey the cosmic symbolism to readers unfamiliar with Jewish calendrical terminology.

[1] This refers to the lunar calendar, where months alternate between 29 days (deficient) and 30 days (full), creating a connection between cosmic cycles and divine names that reflects the kabbalistic principle that earthly phenomena mirror celestial patterns.

tic concepts presented in this passage. | Cf. Book of Daniel, Chapter 4 — The text references Nebuchadnezzar's second dream as a mystical allegory for understanding the structure of negative spiritual forces (kelipot) and how they will eventually be nullified. This creative interpretation of the biblical narrative demonstrates how the author incorporates scriptural references into his kabbalistic worldview. | Cf. Joel 2:20 — The author quotes this prophetic verse to support his assertion that the 'external forces' (negative spiritual entities) will eventually be destroyed. In kabbalistic literature, 'the northern one' is often associated with the forces of impurity and judgment. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — While not explicitly cited, this passage's detailed analysis of the numerical structure of the Shema prayer and its relationship to divine names draws heavily from concepts developed in Tikkunei Zohar, particularly the understanding of the prayer as a vehicle for unifying different aspects of divinity.

מיוחדים עם י״ד שבשמאל. עוד ידע כי הם י״ד אותיות שבעה ושבעה מוצקות ידו״ד אלה הם ז׳ ינ״ו ידו״ד הם ז׳ יכוין באומרו אחד הם ז׳ בז׳ מיוחדות ונקשרות.[i] עוד יכוין בדלי״ת של אחד שהיא גדולה. ורי״ש של אחר ג״כ גדולה לרמוז שאין לחצונים[ii] חלק ביחוד זה כלל כי אחדותו בלתי נקשר עם החצונים ואין נכללים באלהות דכתיב לא יגורך רע ח״ו. ובאומרו שמע יכוין למלכות שהיא פתח לכניסה ובה יתחנן אל הת״ת שהוא ישראל יבא אליה לשכון עמה וכדי לקשרם יחד יעלה לה׳ שהיא החכמה כלולית בה החסד והנצח ואח״כ יקשור החכמה עם הבינה שהוא אלהינו ויכוין שבקו הבינה יש הגבורה וההוד ואחר שיחד וזיוג גם הזווג עליון אבא ואמא ירד לזווג ברא וברתא ויכוין בה׳ שהוא הת״ת האוחז מהכתר ושם האין סוף שוכן ויורד דרך קו האמצעי כלול ימין ושמאל[iii] דרך הת״ת עד היסוד ואז יכוין אחד במלכות שהיא מיוחדת עם בעלה מחובקת בימין ושמאל ויכוין אח״כ במלת אחד על הא״ס שמבלעדיו אין אלהים ויקשור המלכות באין סוף סבה ראשונה ואח״כ בכתר ושם יודה כי מבלעדיו אין אלהים ועוד שהא״ס ראשון בחכמה וזהו בחינת המלכות בחכמה ויורד עמה מדרגה אחר

nal ones. When binding one's hands together, one should focus on the 14 joints of the right hand being unified with the 14 of the left hand.[1] One should also know that these 14 letters are divided into seven and seven: "YHVH" contributes seven, "ELoHeINU" contributes seven, and "YHVH" contributes seven more. When saying "Echad" [One], one should focus on these groups of seven being united and bound together. 15R 20R

One should also focus on the enlarged Dalet of "Echad," and similarly on the enlarged Resh of "Acher" [other], to indicate that the external forces have no part whatsoever in this unification, for His unity is not connected with the external forces, and they are not included in the Godhead, as it is written: "Evil shall not dwell with You," God forbid. 25R 30R

When saying "Shema" [Hear], one should focus on Malkhut [Kingdom], which is the entrance gate, and through it beseech Tiferet, which is "Israel," to come to dwell with her. To bind them together, one ascends to the [first] "YHVH," which is Chokhmah [Wisdom] that includes within it Chesed [Kindness] and Netzach [Victory]. Then one binds Chokhmah with Binah [Understanding], which is "Eloheinu," focusing on how the line of Binah contains Gevurah [Strength] and Hod [Splendor]. After unifying and coupling the supernal union of Abba and Imma [Father and Mother], one descends to couple the Son and Daughter, focusing on the [second] "YHVH," which is Tiferet that holds from Keter [Crown], where Ein Sof [the Infinite] dwells and descends through the central column, including right and left, through Tiferet to Yesod [Foundation]. 35R 40R 45R

Then one focuses on "Echad" [One] in relation to Malkhut, which is unified with her husband, em- 50R

[1] The human body is seen as a microcosm of divine structures. The 14 joints in each hand (3 in each of the 4 fingers plus 2 in the thumb) correspond to the 14 letters in the divine names, allowing the person praying to physically embody the cosmic unifications they are creating through prayer.

[i] The sevens referenced here relate to the kabbalistic understanding of cosmic structure, where groups of seven (such as the seven lower sefirot) create harmony when properly unified. This reflects the book's consistent emphasis on establishing proper balance and harmony during the soul's transition.

[ii] The 'external forces' (החצונים) refers to negative spiritual entities that, according to kabbalistic belief, attempt to interfere with the soul's journey, particularly at the moment of death. The enlarged letters in the Shema are seen as creating a mystical barrier against these forces.

[iii] This describes the kabbalistic concept of the 'middle pillar' or 'central column' of the sefirot, which balances the forces of mercy (right) and judgment (left). In the context of death rituals, this balance is crucial for the soul's peaceful transition.

מדרגה ויכוין שהוא אחרון
בבינה ששם אחדות הכל ושולט
ומנהיג עולמו ע״י חסד וגבורה
דהיינו דרום וצפון ומזרח ת״ת
ומערב מלכות ומטה ומעלה נ״ה
ויסוד כלול בין ת״ת ומלכות
דגוף וברית חשבינן חד והרי
המלכות נקשרת בשש קצוות עד
היסוד והוא הנהגת ושליטת אין
סוף בעולם ע״י הששה קצוות
והיינו סוד א׳ כתר ח׳ שמנה
ספירות ד׳ מלכות במקומה
פתח השער. ואח״כ מכוין כי
הא״ס מנהיג עולמו ע״י הספירות
אלו בזה כי היסוד מקבל הש
קצוות אלו שהם בת״ת הכוללם
וממציאם במלכות עצמה שהיא
כלולה ששה להנהיג העולם על
ידה והיינו ברוך יסוד מקבל
הספירות ומשפיען במלכות
והיינו אומרו שם כבוד מלכותו
והמלכות מנהגת העולם בכח
א״ס בהיותה משפעת שש קצוות
אלו בכסא הכבוד והיינו לעולם
שכסא הכבוד היא נקרא עולם
בבינה ששם שוכנת וכסא הכבוד
משפעת ע״י הא״ס שש קצוות אלו
בשבעה היכלות שהם היכל קדש
הקדשים והיכל הרצון ואהבה
וזכות ונגה ועצם השמים לבנת
הספיר והיינו ועד ו׳ שש היכלות
עד היכל אחרון שבכולם ומפני
ששם החצונים ממהר בכוונה
בזריזות לסלק היכל לבנת
הספיר ממדורו ששם רשעים
יתהלכון אל היכל עצם השמים
ושניהם לנגה ושלשתם אל היכל
הזכות וארבעתם אל היכל אהבה
ששם סוד יחוד קריאת שמע בסוד
האהבה ובן המלכות למעלה
בזה היא נקשרת עם החסד והיינו
ד׳ של ועד שהיא מלכות דלת
ושער והיא רומזת ד׳ היכלות
ובזה נגמר היחוד וקשר ההנהגה

braced by right and left. Afterward, with the word "Echad," one focuses on Ein Sof, besides whom there is no God, and binds Malkhut to Ein Sof, the First Cause, and then to Keter, acknowledging there that besides Him there is no God. Additionally, Ein Sof is first in Chokhmah, which is the aspect of Malkhut within Chokhmah, descending with it from level to level. One should focus on Him being last in Binah, where the unity of all exists, and He rules and guides His world through Chesed and Gevurah, which correspond to south and north, while east corresponds to Tiferet, west to Malkhut, down and up to Netzach and Hod, with Yesod included between Tiferet and Malkhut, for body and covenant are considered one. Thus, Malkhut is bound to the six extremities up to Yesod,[1] representing Ein Sof's governance and rule in the world through these six extremities. This is the secret of Alef [representing] Keter, Chet [representing] the eight Sefirot, and Dalet [representing] Malkhut in its place as the gateway.

Afterward, one focuses on how Ein Sof guides His world through these Sefirot: Yesod receives these six extremities that are included in Tiferet and brings them into Malkhut itself, which contains these six aspects to govern the world through it. This is [the meaning of] "Barukh" [Blessed]—Yesod receives the Sefirot and channels them into Malkhut, which is "Shem Kevod Malkhuto" [the Name of His glorious kingdom]. Malkhut governs the world through the power of Ein Sof by channeling these six extremities into the Throne of Glory, which is "le'olam" [forever], for the Throne of Glory is called "world" within Binah where it resides. The Throne of Glory, through Ein Sof, channels these six extremities into seven palaces: the Palace of the Holy of Holies, the Palace of Will, Love, Merit, Radiance, Essence of Heaven, and Sapphire Brick. This corresponds to "va'ed" [and ever], where the Vav represents six palaces up to the final palace among them.

Because the external forces are there, one must quickly and diligently focus on elevating the Palace of the Sapphire Brick from its dwelling place where the wicked walk, to the Palace of the Essence of Heaven, and both of them to Radiance, and all three

[1] The 'six extremities' refer to the six directional sefirot (Chesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod) that surround Malkhut. This geometric arrangement forms what kabbalists call the 'divine body,' and understanding this structure is crucial for creating proper unifications during prayer.

95 והשליט אין סוף בכל העולם ואמר החכם כי יחוד זה מבחר היחודים.[i] ועל דרך כלל במלת אחד בכללות רמ״ח תיבין ירמוז אל רמ״ח שייפין עילאין [ii] to the Palace of Merit, and all four to the Palace of Love, where the secret of the Shema unification resides in the mystery of love. Similarly, Malkhut above is bound to Chesed through this, and this is the Dalet of "va'ed," which is Malkhut as gate and entrance, alluding to the four palaces. With this, the unification is completed, as is the binding of governance, and Ein Sof is established as ruler over the entire world. The sage said that this unification is the choicest of all unifications.

In general, the word "Echad" in its entirety, with its numerical value of 248,[1] alludes to the 248 supernal limbs.

95R 100R 105R

100 שהם בזכר רמ״ח ובנקבה רמ״ח נקשרים[iii] והכל אחד מיוחד ובזה יכוין לכלול רמ״ח אבריו[iv] ככל מה שיוכל שהוא בולל עצמו למעלה בסוד האהבה והוא which are 248 in the male and 248 in the female,[2] bound together and all unified as one. With this intention, one should seek to include all 248 of one's limbs to the extent possible, encompassing oneself above in the mystery of love,

110R

[1]The Hebrew word 'Echad' (אחד) has a standard numerical value of 13, but the text is likely referring to the expanded meditation on this word, where contemplating all its mystical dimensions and connections creates a complete system corresponding to the 248 positive commandments and the 248 limbs of the human body.

[2]The text is describing the mystical correspondence between human anatomy and divine structure. The number 248 traditionally represents the number of positive commandments in the Torah as well as the number of limbs in the human body according to rabbinic tradition.

[i]The 'sage' referred to here is likely Rabbi Moses Cordovero, whose kabbalistic approach to prayer kavvanot (mystical intentions) is followed in this text, though with some integration of Lurianic concepts. The author shows familiarity with multiple kabbalistic systems of prayer meditation.

[ii]Cf. Shema Prayer — The passage provides kabbalistic instructions for proper mystical intentions (kavvanot) while reciting the Shema prayer, particularly at the time of death. These detailed meditations connect each word and letter of the prayer to the divine sefirot, creating a complete system of unifications between different aspects of divinity. | Cf. Zohar — This passage draws on and synthesizes Zoharic teachings about the mystical significance of the Shema prayer. The detailed system of unifications (yichudim) between divine names, sefirot, and cosmic forces reflects the Zohar's approach to transforming prayer into a cosmic act that affects all spiritual worlds. | Cf. Ana Bekoach prayer — The reference to letter substitution systems (KuZu BeMuKhSaZ KuZu) connects to the mystical 42-letter divine name that appears in the Ana Bekoach prayer, which is mentioned elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok as an important component of deathbed rituals. | Cf. Lurianic Kabbalah — The elaborate system of kavvanot (mystical intentions) during prayer reflects the influence of Lurianic Kabbalah, which developed complex systems of meditation during prayer to create cosmic unifications. This passage appears to integrate both Cordoverian and Lurianic approaches to prayer mysticism.

[iii]The text states that both male and female have 248 limbs, which differs from some Talmudic sources that attribute different numbers to men and women. This equal attribution emphasizes the complementary nature of masculine and feminine aspects in the divine unity.

[iv]The mystical practice being described involves a mental exercise of incorporating one's entire physical being (all 248 limbs) into the spiritual act of prayer, creating a correspondence between the human body and the divine structure.

כלול ביחוד ורמ״ח אברים[i] הם
כללות עשר ספירות מיוחדות
כי הרמ״ח נכללים בראש שהם
שלש ראשונות וזרועות שהם
חסד וגדולה וגוף ת״ת ושוקין
וברית. וכמוהם בנקבה רמ״ח
והכל אחד בסוד קשר הספירות
ויחודם ביחוד ואחר שקשר
וייחד הכל יתחיל לעורר סוד
אהבה דהיינו ד׳ פרשיות ג״כ
כדפי׳. עוד בקצרה יכוין
בשמע ישראל ליחוד שכינתיה
עם קב״ה שהם ו״ה ה׳ אלהינו
ליחוד חכמה ובינה עצם אחד
שכל היחוד הזה מתייחד ע״י
הדעת בכח הכתר בחפץ אין סוף
ומושפע במלכות שהיא דלית
גדולה מאחד[ii] וביחוד מלכא
ומטרוניתא נכלל כל השעור
קומה שהוא מחסד ולמטה כי
ראוי לדעת שהספירות הם ו׳
פעולות מתפשטות מא״ס דבוקות
בנו ראשם העליון יכולה בשם
זכרים שהם משפיעים והם רחמים
מפני קורבתם באין סוף וסופם
הדבוקות בנו הם נקבה ודין
והם מושפעות וקצה העליון

and one is included in the unification.[A] These 248 limbs encompass the totality of the ten unified sefirot, for the 248 are included in the head, 115R which represents the three highest sefirot, and the arms, which represent Chesed (Loving-kindness) and Gedulah (Greatness), and the body, which is Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), and the thighs and the covenant (genitalia). Similarly, the female 120R has 248 limbs, and all is one in the mystery of the binding of the sefirot[1] and their unification in unity. After binding and unifying everything, one should begin to awaken the mystery of love, meaning the four Torah portions,[2] as explained. 125R Additionally, in brief, when reciting "Hear O Israel," one should intend the unification of God's Divine Presence with the Holy One, blessed be He, which are represented by the letters Vav-Hei. The words
"The LORD our God" represent the unification of 130R Chokhmah (Wisdom) and Binah (Understanding) as one essence, for this entire unification is unified through Da'at (Knowledge)[B] by the power of Keter (Crown) through the desire of the Ein Sof (Infinite
One), and flows into Malkhut (Kingdom), which 135R is the enlarged Dalet in the word "One."[3] In the unification of the King and Queen is included the entire divine structure[C] from Chesed downward.
For it is proper to know that the sefirot are six

[A] Or: "encompassed in the divine unity" — This alternative translation emphasizes the mystical nature of the unification being described, making it clearer that this is a divine process rather than a mundane joining.

[B] Or: "unified through Da'at, the connecting principle" — This alternative better captures the function of Da'at in Kabbalistic thought as the principle that connects the upper and lower sefirot.

[C] Or: "mystical dimensions of the divine form" — The concept of 'Shi'ur Komah' refers to the mystical dimensions and measurements of the divine body in Jewish mysticism. This alternative provides more context about this complex concept.

[1] The text uses the metaphor of 'binding' (kesher) to describe how the ten divine emanations (sefirot) are interconnected and how human intention during prayer can affect their relationships.

[2] This refers to the four biblical passages contained in tefillin (phylacteries): Exodus 13:1-10, Exodus 13:11-16, Deuteronomy 6:4-9, and Deuteronomy 11:13-21. In kabbalistic thought, these represent different aspects of divine unity.

[3] In the Hebrew text of the Shema prayer, the last letter of the word 'echad' (one) is traditionally written larger than the other letters. This enlarged Dalet carries significant mystical meaning, representing Malkhut (Kingdom), the divine attribute that interfaces with our world.

[i] The number 248 corresponds to the traditional count of limbs in the human body according to rabbinic literature. This number also corresponds to the number of positive commandments in the Torah. The parallel between human anatomy and divine structure is a fundamental concept in Jewish mysticism.

[ii] This refers to the enlarged letter Dalet (ד) in the word 'echad' (אחד—one) at the end of the Shema prayer. In kabbalistic tradition, this enlarged letter has special significance, representing Malkhut (Kingdom), the divine attribute that interfaces with our world.

הדבק בא״ס יכונה בשם מלכא וקצה התחתון הדבק בנו יכונה מטרוניתא ובן קצה העליון יכונה קוב״ה והתחתון בשם שבינתיה ועקר הכוונה לקשר ב׳ קצוות ליחדם יחד[i][ii]

actions extending from the Ein Sof,[1] attached to us. Their upper ends are called by masculine names, for they bestow influence and represent mercy due to their proximity to the Ein Sof. Their lower ends, which are attached to us, are feminine and represent judgment, and they receive influence. The upper end that cleaves to the Ein Sof is called by the name "King," and the lower end that cleaves to us is called "Queen." Similarly, the upper end is called "the Holy One, blessed be He," and the lower end is called "His Divine Presence." The essential intention is to bind these two extremities, unifying them together. 140R 145R 150R

והיינו סוד ידו״ד אדנ״י ויחודם שם בן ח׳ חותיות ב׳ שמות אלו משולבים יחד בסוד נעוץ סופם בתחלתם[iii] וכו׳ וזהו שמים זכר וארץ נקבה[iv] והם שש בחינות נגד שש בחינות סוד הנהגת ששת ימים וששת לילות בבחינות הנקבות ויום שבת מנהיג סוד קשר תפארת מלכות עם הבינה[v] דהיינו יום

And this is the mystery of YHVH-ADNY and their unification as an eight-letter Name,[2] these two Names interwoven together in the secret of "their end is wedged in their beginning," and so forth. This represents heaven as male and earth as female, and these are six aspects corresponding to six aspects—the secret of the governance of the six days and six nights in the feminine aspects. And the Sabbath day governs the secret bond of Tiferet-Malkhut with Binah, meaning the seventh 155R 160R

[1] The text refers specifically to the six lower sefirot (from Chesed to Yesod), excluding the higher triad (Keter, Chokhmah, Binah) and Malkhut. These six are often treated as a unit in kabbalistic thought, representing the primary active divine forces in creation.

[2] The text refers to the combination of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH, four letters) and the divine name ADNY (four letters), which together form an eight-letter name. This combined name is central to kabbalistic practices, particularly in prayer and at the time of death.

[i] This summarizes the entire purpose of kabbalistic prayer: to unify the higher and lower aspects of divinity. This unification (yichud) is seen as repairing cosmic separation and restoring harmony to all worlds.

[ii] Cf. Shema Yisrael prayer — The text explains the kabbalistic intentions (kavvanot) for reciting the Shema prayer, especially at the time of death, showing how this prayer serves as a vehicle for unifying various divine aspects and ultimately uniting the soul with its divine source. | Cf. Zohar — The passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts of divine unification, particularly the joining of masculine and feminine divine aspects (Holy One and Divine Presence) through proper intention during prayer. | Cf. Four Portions of the Tefillin — The text refers to 'four portions' (arba parshiyot) which likely refers to the four Torah passages placed in tefillin. In kabbalistic thought, tefillin are seen as instruments for divine unification. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 42 — This passage continues the book's detailed explanation of mystical intentions during prayer, especially at the time of death, connecting to earlier discussions about the proper spiritual focus for the Shema recitation.

[iii] This phrase refers to the mystical principle from Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) that describes cyclical reality where endings connect back to beginnings. Applied to divine names, it suggests the interwoven, circular nature of divine unity.

[iv] This reflects the fundamental kabbalistic concept that the cosmos is structured as a dynamic interplay between masculine and feminine divine principles, where heaven represents the masculine aspect and earth the feminine.

[v] In Kabbalah, the Sabbath represents a unique cosmic state where Tiferet (the central, harmonizing divine attribute) and Malkhut (the divine presence in the world) connect with Binah (divine understanding), creating a complete unified structure.

שביעי נקודה אמצעית לכל
הספירות. ובפרשה ואתחנן
150 הרחיב הזהר בפירוש היחוד.
ובסוד המזוזה הפליג לדבר שם
בדף רס״ה ורס״ו וגם המצוה
הזאת הוא סיוע לטהרת האדם
בעה״ז ובעה״ב.[i] וכבר אמרנו
155 למעלה כי גם שלא ידע האדם
לכוין במצות ויחודים שעושה
בשלימות אם יהיה לו כוונה
טובה ה׳ יגמור על ידו. וכתוב
בפ׳ יתרו דף צ״ה קוב״ה בעי
160 לבא ורעותא דבר נש[ii] ואפ״ה
אי לאו תמן רעותא דלבא דאיהו
עקרא דכלא על דא צלי דוד
ואמר ומעשה ידינו כוננה עלינו
דלית כל ברנש חכים לשוואה
165 רעותא ולבא לתקנא כלא וע״ד
אמר כוננה עלינו את כוננה
ואתקון תקונך לעילא בדקא
יאות עלינו אע״ג דלית אנן ידעין
לשוואה רעותא אלא עובדא
170 בלחודוהי מעשה ידינו כוננהו
לההוא דרגא דאצטריך לאתקנא
כוננהו בחבורא חדא כאבהן
למיהוי מתקנא בהון בהאי
עובדא בדקא יאות. עזרנו אלהי
175 ישענו שיתקדש ויתייחד על ידינו
לעולם ועד ויחד לבבנו לעבדך
באמת ולהודות לשמך כי טוב
עם כל ישראל ונזכה לחיי עד
א״ס:[iii]

day is the central point for all the sefirot.[1] In the portion Va'etchanan, the Zohar expands on the explanation of this unification. And regarding the 165R secret of the mezuzah, it discusses this extensively on pages 265 and 266. This commandment also assists in the purification of a person in this world and in the World to Come. We have already stated above that even if a person does not know how to direct 170R his intention perfectly in the commandments and unifications he performs, if he has good intention, the Lord will complete it through him. And it is written in the portion Yitro, page 95: "The Holy
One, blessed be He, desires the heart and will of 175R a person. Nevertheless, if the will of the heart, which is the essence of everything, is not there, David prayed about this and said, 'Establish the work of our hands upon us,' for not every person is wise enough[2] to direct his will and heart to rectify 180R everything. Therefore he said, 'Establish upon us'—You establish and arrange Your rectification above as is fitting for us, even though we do not know how to direct our intention, but only the action itself. 'The work of our hands, establish 185R it'—for that level which needs to be rectified, establish it in a single unified connection, like the Patriarchs,[3] so that it may be properly rectified through this action." Help us, God of our salvation, that Your Name be sanctified and unified through 190R us forever and ever, and unite our hearts to serve You in truth and to give thanks to Your name, for it is good, with all Israel, and may we merit eternal life, Ein Sof.[4]

[1] The seventh day (Sabbath) is described as a nexus point that connects different levels of divine reality, particularly bringing together Tiferet (the central balancing attribute), Malkhut (divine presence in the world), and Binah (divine understanding/the supernal mother).

[2] This reflects a key theological principle in Ma'avar Yabok: that while precise mystical intentions are ideal, sincere devotion is sufficient for effective prayer, especially in contexts like deathbed rituals where technical kabbalistic knowledge might be lacking.

[3] The reference to the Patriarchs suggests that one's actions can be elevated to the spiritual level of the biblical forefathers even without perfect understanding, if performed with proper intention and divine assistance.

[4] Ein Sof (literally 'without end') is the kabbalistic term for God's infinite, unknowable essence

[i] The text indicates that proper mystical intention in prayer, particularly understanding the unification of divine names, has purifying effects not only in this world but also in the World to Come, suggesting its particular importance in deathbed contexts.

[ii] This Zoharic teaching emphasizes that God primarily desires the sincere heart and will of a person, rather than technical perfection in religious practices—a comforting message for those attending to the dying.

[iii] Cf. Zohar Va'etchanan — The author is referencing the Zohar's explanation of divine unification through the Shema prayer, which is central to Jewish mystical practice, particularly at the time of death as discussed in this portion of Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Zohar Yitro — The author quotes

ב״ה תם חלק שלישי מספר
מעבר יבק הנקרא שפתי
רננות[i] ובעה״י נתחיל חלק
רביעי ממנו אשר יקרא בישראל
שמו עתר ענן הקטרת[ii] אהיה
כטל לישראל[iii] ואת הצפוני
ארחיק מעליכם[iv] וגילו ושמחו
בה׳ אלהיכם:[vi] [v]

With God's help,[1] the third part of the book Ma'avar Yabok called "Siftei Renanot" (Lips of Joyous Song) is completed, and with God's help we will begin the fourth part of it which shall be called in Israel by the name "Eter Anan HaKetoret" (Cloud of Incense Prayer[2]). "I will be like dew to Israel[3] and I will remove the northern one from you,[4] and rejoice and be glad in the LORD your God."

beyond all attributes. The prayer concludes by expressing hope for eternal life connected to this divine infinity.

[1]The Hebrew abbreviation בעה״י (be'ezrat Hashem yitbarakh) literally means 'with the help of God, may He be blessed,' a common formula in traditional Jewish texts acknowledging divine assistance.

[2]The Hebrew title 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' uses three terms related to prayer and Temple ritual: 'eter' (supplication/prayer), 'anan' (cloud), and 'ketoret' (incense). This creates a rich metaphor comparing prayer to the rising smoke of the Temple incense offering, which was considered particularly powerful for gaining divine favor.

[3]This biblical quotation from Hosea suggests that the upcoming section on prayer and incense will provide spiritual refreshment like dew provides physical refreshment to plants, especially appropriate in the arid climate of Israel where dew is essential for plant survival.

[4]In this context, 'the northern one' (hatzefoni) likely carries its kabbalistic meaning of negative spiritual forces or the evil inclination. The author is suggesting that the prayer practices in the upcoming section will help remove these harmful influences.

this passage to reassure the reader that even imperfect spiritual intentions can be effective if one's heart is sincere, which is particularly relevant for those attending to the dying who may not fully understand all the mystical kavvanot. | Cf. Psalm 90:17 — The Zohar passage cited by the author interprets this verse as a prayer for divine assistance in spiritual practices when human intention is incomplete, suggesting that divine grace completes what human effort begins. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The author references this principle to explain how the divine names YHVH and ADNY interlock in a cyclical unity, representing the integration of masculine and feminine divine aspects.

[i]This is the title of the third section of Ma'avar Yabok, meaning 'Lips of Joyous Song' or 'Lips of Praise,' which deals with prayers for the dead and teachings about the afterlife.

[ii]This is the title of the fourth section, meaning 'Cloud of Incense Prayer,' which focuses on prayer as a spiritual substitute for the Temple incense offering (ketoret). This title combines 'eter' (prayer/supplication), 'anan' (cloud), and 'ketoret' (incense), evoking the imagery of prayer rising like incense smoke.

[iii]A quotation from Hosea 14:6, where God promises to be like refreshing dew to Israel, symbolizing divine blessing and spiritual renewal.

[iv]A quotation from Joel 2:20, where God promises to remove 'the northern one' (traditionally understood as an invading army or plague). In Kabbalistic interpretation, 'the northern one' (tzfoni) often represents evil forces or the evil inclination, as 'north' was associated with darkness and judgment.

[v]A quotation from Joel 2:23, completing the previous reference, where the removal of 'the northern one' leads to rejoicing in God. This suggests that the practices described in the upcoming section will lead to spiritual joy through the removal of negative influences.

[vi]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This is the concluding statement of the third section of Ma'avar Yabok, indicating the completion of the section titled 'Siftei Renanot' (Lips of Joyous Song) and announcing the beginning of the fourth section titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer). | Cf. Hosea 14:6 — The phrase 'I will be like dew to Israel' is quoted from Hosea 14:6, where God promises to restore Israel. This metaphor of divine blessing as life-giving dew is particularly appropriate as the author transitions to a section about prayer and incense offerings, which are meant to draw down divine blessing. | Cf. Joel 2:20-23 — This phrase combines elements from Joel 2:20 ('I will remove the northern one far from you') and Joel 2:23 ('rejoice and be glad in the LORD your God'). In Joel, 'the northern one' refers to a destructive army or plague that God promises to remove, followed by restoration and rejoicing. In kabbalistic context, 'the northern one' (צפוני) often refers to evil forces or the evil inclination, as north was traditionally associated with darkness and judgment.

Part III

Discourses on daily purity

Discourse 6

עתר ענן הקטורת / Prayer of the Incense Cloud

פרק א׳ — Chapter 1

חלק ראשון[i] — The First Part

אלהים חילי[ii] ישלח עזרי מקדש אכי״ר.[iii][iv] — May God, my strength,[1] send my help from the sanctuary.[2] Amen.

ואחזה אנכי אשית אל לבי לכתוב שלישים במועצות מדעת שפתי אשר ימללו במאמרי זה הרדביעי[v] אשר יפרד לשלשה — I shall now set my heart to write threefold wisdom[3] with thoughtful counsel from the utterances of my lips in this fourth discourse, which divides into three parts. The first part turns toward the 5R

[1] The Hebrew 'חילי' (cheili) can be translated as 'my strength' or 'my might.' It appears in biblical passages like Habakkuk 3:19.
[2] The Hebrew 'מקדש' (mikdash) refers to the sanctuary or holy place, often referring to the Temple in Jerusalem in biblical contexts.
[3] The Hebrew 'לכתוב שלישים' literally means 'to write thirds' or 'to write threefold things,' which may allude to Proverbs 22:20. The term suggests writing of exceptional wisdom or writing in three parts.

[i] This is the title designating the opening section of the fourth discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer). This section focuses on prayer as a substitute for Temple incense offerings.
[ii] This phrase combines elements from two biblical verses: "God is my strength" (חילי) from Habakkuk 3:19 and "May He send your help from the sanctuary" (ישלח עזרך מקדש) from Psalm 20:3.
[iii] This is an acronym for 'Amen Ken Yehi Ratzon' (אמן כן יהי רצון), meaning 'Amen, so may it be [God's] will'—a common concluding formula in Hebrew prayers.
[iv] Cf. Psalm 20:3 — The author begins with an invocation for divine assistance from God's holy place, establishing a connection to biblical precedent for seeking divine help in times of need. This creates a sacred frame for the text that follows. | Cf. Habakkuk 3:19 — By drawing on Habakkuk's declaration of divine strength, the author positions himself as reliant on God's power rather than his own abilities, establishing a tone of humility appropriate for a work on such serious matters as death and the afterlife.
[v] The term 'discourse' (מאמר) is used consistently throughout Ma'avar Yabok to refer to its major sections. This is specifically identified as the fourth discourse.

ראשים[i] הראש האחד יפנה דרך קרן בן שמן להעלות
קטרת בשמים וקדה על כל
סדר עבודה. ומשם יביע אומר
ובמאזנים ישא יחד. זכו"ת
ומישו"ר.[ii] הראש השני זכותא
דרבים עדיפא ליה בנפש כי
תחטא למצוא מזור לה ברפואות
תעלה בקרבן תענית[iii] ורוח
נכאה וישב בדד עם מלכו וידום
מכל דברי שיחה קלה. והראש
השלישי משרי"ם אהב ליקח מן
הבא בידו מחומת אנ"ך[iv] מנחה
ותשורה לקונו וישתפך עליו
נפשו ושיח רנתו עולת תמיד
בבקר ובערב במנחתו של
אהרן[v] אשר כליל תקטר מחציתה
בבקר ומחציתה בערב. הנה
כי עתר ענן הקטרת[vi] יעלה עם
קרבן תענית. ומנחתו של אהרן.
ובאלהים נעשה חיל ויגדל נא
כח אדני כי יערב עליו שיחנו
ואלהים יחננו ויברכנו יאר פניו path of the horn of oil[1] to offer incense and fragrant spices for every order of divine service. From there it shall express its word and weigh together in the 10R scales: Merit and Uprightness.[2] The second part [teaches that] the merit of the many is preferable for the soul that has sinned, to find healing through remedies of recovery in the sacrifice of fasting, with a contrite spirit, sitting alone with one's King in 15R silence, refraining from all light conversation. And the third part loves Righteousness, taking from what comes to hand from the wall of Scripture[3] as an offering and gift to one's Creator. One's soul pours itself out in prayerful meditation, [like] the continual 20R burnt offering in morning and evening, like Aaron's meal offering[4] which is entirely burned—half in the morning and half in the evening. Thus the cloud of incense prayer[5] rises together with the sacrifice of fasting and Aaron's offering. Through God we shall 25R gain strength, and may the power of the Lord be magnified, for our meditation shall be pleasing to Him. May God be gracious to us and bless us; may He cause His face to shine upon us, Selah.

[1]The phrase 'דרך קרן בן שמן' is difficult to translate literally. It may refer to the horn used for anointing with oil (as in 1 Samuel 16:1), metaphorically suggesting a path of consecration or elevation.

[2]The terms 'זכו"ת ומישו"ר' appear with quotation marks in the original, suggesting they may be technical terms or have special significance in the author's system of thought.

[3]The phrase 'מחומת אנ"ך' is a play on the acronym ANaKh (Torah, Prophets, and Writings), metaphorically presenting Scripture as a protective wall from which spiritual materials can be drawn.

[4]The author may be making a wordplay on his own name (Aaron Berechia of Modena) by referring to 'Aaron's offering,' thus inserting himself into the tradition of priestly service through his literary work.

[5]The phrase 'עתר ענן הקטרת' combines prayer (עתר), cloud (ענן), and incense (קטרת) to create a rich metaphor for prayer as a spiritual equivalent to Temple incense offerings. This is also the title of this fourth discourse.

[i]The author is employing biblical language from Genesis 2:10 ('and from there it divided and became four heads') to describe the structure of his work, suggesting that his writing, like the rivers of Eden, flows from a divine source and branches into multiple streams of wisdom.

[ii]The words are written with quotation marks, possibly indicating they form an acronym or have special mystical significance beyond their literal meaning.

[iii]This term conceptualizes fasting as a sacrifice, suggesting that voluntary self-denial is a spiritual equivalent to Temple offerings, a concept developed in post-Temple rabbinic literature.

[iv]ANaKh is an acronym for the three divisions of the Hebrew Bible: Torah (Pentateuch), Nevi'im (Prophets), and Ketuvim (Writings). The phrase 'from the wall of Scripture' metaphorically presents biblical verses as building blocks of spiritual practice.

[v]This is a reference to the meal offering that Aaron and his sons were commanded to offer, as described in Leviticus 6:12-16. The author may also be creating a wordplay with his own name (Aaron Berechia of Modena).

[vi]This phrase, which combines 'eter' (prayer/supplication), 'anan' (cloud), and 'ketoret' (incense), is the title of this fourth discourse of Ma'avar Yabok.

אתנו סלה:[i]

האל השם בחיים נפשנו ובטובו
השביענו כתב בתורתו זאת
התורה לעולה ולמנחה וגו׳
ודרשו חז״ל על פסוק זה כי
התורה במקום עולה וכו׳[ii] אין
ספק כי ע״י העולה ושאר
הקרבנות היה האור העליון
מתגלה ומתאחדים האותיות
שהם המדרגות עליונות. וזהו
קרבן לה׳. פירוש יחוד וקירוב
אותיות יד״וד[iii] ובהיות האדם
עוסק בתורה התורה והאותיות
ההם נאצלות מהמקום ההוא
אשר בו פעולת העונה או המנחה
או הקטרת המקשר כל הצורות
בסוד מיני בוסמין שבו ונודע
שמהבל פה התורה נעשה מכל
אות ואות מלאך וכח רוחני
המתהוה באויר מהבל פיו היוצא
שיש בו ממש כמו שנראה לעין
בימי החורף ומלאך זה מסתלק
מדרגה אחר מדרגה עד שמתדבק
ומעורר שורש הענין ההוא בעשן
נר התחתון שמדליק הנר העליון
המוקבל לה. וכמשל שני מיני.
נגונים זה כנגד זה שבנגן התחתון

God, who maintains our souls in life and in His goodness satisfies us, wrote in His Torah: "This is the law for the burnt offering, for the meal offering, etc." Our Sages of blessed memory taught concerning this verse that Torah study serves in place of the sacrificial offerings. Undoubtedly, through the burnt offering and other sacrifices, the supernal light was revealed and the letters—which represent the higher spiritual levels—were unified. This is the meaning of "an offering to the LORD"[1]—namely, the unification and drawing together of the letters of the Divine Name YHVH.

When a person engages in Torah study, the Torah and its letters emanate from the same spiritual source where the burnt offering, meal offering, or incense offering would have their effect—the incense particularly binding all forms together through the mystery of its aromatic ingredients. It is known that from the breath of Torah study,[2] each and every letter creates an angel and spiritual force that takes form in the air from the breath that leaves one's mouth, which has actual substance, as can be seen in winter when breath is visible. This angel ascends from one level to the next until it cleaves to and awakens the root of that particular matter, like the smoke from a lower candle that

[1] The Hebrew term "korban" (offering) is being interpreted through its etymology from the root meaning "to draw near" (karov), explaining that sacrifices create spiritual proximity or unification of divine names.

[2] The Hebrew "hevel peh haTorah" refers to the actual breath that emerges when one speaks words of Torah. In kabbalistic thought, this breath has concrete spiritual reality and creates angels and spiritual forces.

[i] Cf. Psalms 67:2 — The author employs this verse as a prayer for divine assistance in his literary endeavor, following the biblical tradition of invoking divine blessing at the beginning of significant undertakings. | Cf. Numbers 28:4-8 — The author is creating a metaphorical connection between his literary work and the Temple sacrificial system, suggesting that his writings serve as spiritual substitutes for physical offerings, a common theme in post-Temple rabbinic literature. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok itself — This passage serves as a meta-textual introduction to the fourth discourse, explaining how it will be structured and what themes each section will address. The three parts correspond to: 1) incense offerings and prayer, 2) fasting as spiritual remedy, and 3) scripture-based offerings of devotion. | Cf. Leviticus 6:12-16 — This references the priestly meal offering described in Leviticus, creating a connection between the author's written work and the Temple service, positioning his spiritual writings as substitutes for physical offerings.

[ii] This refers to the rabbinic teaching that since the destruction of the Temple, Torah study concerning sacrifices serves as a spiritual substitute for the actual offerings themselves. This appears in Talmud Menachot 110a.

[iii] The term "יד״וד" is a substitute for writing the Tetragrammaton (the four-letter divine name YHVH). The text explains that the word "korban" (offering) is related to the root "karov" (to draw near), suggesting that sacrifices spiritually draw together the letters of God's name.

ינגן העליון כי מכח שבירת
האויר שעושה התחתון יפעל
גם בעליון המוגבל נגדו כאשר
העלו המפרשים בספריהם. א״כ
בהיות האדם עוסק בתורה בסדר
העולה או המנחה או בפסוקי
וסדר פטום הקטרת וכיוצא
נותן את כוונתו להשלים המדות
העליונות מצד כח נשמתו ורוחו
ונפשו המתעצל מהם וששורש כל
אחד מהם בהם למעלה ואחר
שהנשמות מציאותם מהשרשים
עליונים חייבים אנו להמשיך
במדות כפי נשמותינו ושמא
זו סיבת בריאתנו והוא כמי
שבידיו מטלטל המאצטי״צי
של מאניקור״דו[i] שגם שיהיו
בחדר אחת ינגן הכלי שיר
מכחו במקום שהוא ע״י אחיזתו
בבתי ידים שלו גם שרחוקים
ממנו. ועוד כי אדם צל ודוגמת
העליונים[ii] וכמו שכל מה שיעשה
האדם יתראה בצל כן כל מה
שיפעול או ידבר האדם למטה
בנגדו יתפעל ויאמר למעלה אם
לטוב אם למוטב ולכן המרים
יד על חבירו אפי׳ בהרמה
בעלמא נקרא רשע שכבר נתראה
למעלה בכח נשמתו הרעת
ידו ואפי׳ המחשבה הנעלמת
למטה מתגלים ומתראית למעלה
במקום המחשבה העליונית
ולהיות כי אין שום מלאך וכ״ש
מה שלמטה ממנו שיהיה הבוחן

kindles a higher candle aligned above it.[1]

This is comparable to two similar musical instruments positioned opposite each other: when the lower one is played, the upper one will also resonate, because the vibration of air caused by the lower instrument affects the upper one aligned with it, as commentators have explained in their works. Therefore, when a person studies the Torah passages concerning the burnt offering, meal offering, or the verses and order of the incense preparation and similar topics, they direct their intention to perfect the supernal attributes through the power of their soul, spirit, and vital force which derive from these attributes, with the root of each of these being above. And since souls exist from supernal roots, we are obligated to extend influence to the divine attributes according to our souls, and perhaps this is the very purpose of our creation.

This is like someone who manipulates the keys of a harpsichord,[2] where even if the instrument is in one room, it plays music by his power in the place where he is, through his control of the keyboard, even though they are distant from each other. Furthermore, a human being is a shadow and reflection of the supernal realms, and just as whatever a person does is visible in their shadow, so too whatever a person does or speaks below correspondingly affects and resonates above, whether for good or for ill. This is why one who raises a hand against his fellow, even if merely lifting it without striking, is called wicked, for the harm of his hand has already been perceived above through the power of his soul. Even hidden thoughts below are revealed and visible above in the place of supernal thought.

60R 65R 70R 75R 80R 85R

[1] This metaphor illustrates the kabbalistic concept of correspondence between lower and higher realms. Just as smoke rises from a lower candle to light an upper one, so too the words and intentions of human prayer and study rise to affect the divine realms.

[2] I've rendered the unusual terms "מאצטי״צי של מאניקור״דו" as "harpsichord" based on context. The author appears to be using the mechanical action of a keyboard instrument, where pressing keys in one location causes strings to vibrate elsewhere, as a metaphor for how human actions below affect divine realms above.

[i] These unusual terms refer to parts of a harpsichord or similar stringed instrument. The author is using the mechanical action of a keyboard instrument, where pressing keys in one location causes strings to vibrate elsewhere, as a metaphor for how human actions below affect divine realms above.

[ii] This expresses the kabbalistic principle that humans are created in the divine image and function as a microcosm reflecting the macrocosm of divine attributes. The author uses the metaphor of a shadow to explain how human actions below create corresponding movements in the divine realm above.

לבות וכליות אלא אלהים צדיק.
לכן המחשבה רעה אי אפשר
שתצורף למעשה[i] דבשלמא
הצטיירות המחשבה טובה
שעתידה להצטייר למעלה
בקדושה במקום המחשבות
תגלה ותתראה וזה סוד הרהורי
תשובה המועילים לאדם ולכן
הרהורי מצוה מקדשים מחשבתו
של אדם ובתר רישא גופא אזיל
וכ״ש הדבור אבל המחשבה
רעה שהיה צריך שתצייר בכחות
החיצונים והם לא ידעו מחשבות
אדם ואין לה הויה והיה כלא
היה. והנה בהיות אדם עוסק
בתורת קרבנות וכוונתו להעביר
מן המדות החלודה שגרם במעשיו
אין ספק שאותם האותיות יפעלו
למעלה פעולה נפלאת ובתשובה
יסלק המשטין ותחת רוח טועים
יכנס רוח טהרה בנשמתו ובכח
האותיות יתעורר השפע עליון
ויאיר מקום החשוך בעונותיו
ובזה נמצא תורה במקום עולה
בכל פנותיה ולהיות כי ליחוד
הגדול שאדם מזדמן לעשות
בתפלתו צריך טהרה גדולה
מעונותיו ללבן ולצרף נפשו
לכן הקדימו בבקר וגם בערב
קצת סדר הקרבנות כדי שיטהר
אדם עצמו בהם ואחר הטהרה
תבא הקדושה כדכתיב וטהרו
וקדשו ואין תשמיש חביב בכל
הקרבנות בקטרת[ii] כאשר יבא
לפנינו ובגדולת ערכו יהיו
עסקנו בחלק הזה בעזה״י. אך
תחלה נשיב ידינו על מנהגי

Since no angel—and certainly nothing below an angel—can examine hearts and minds except the righteous God,[1] an evil thought cannot be joined with action. Whereas the formation of good thoughts, which are destined to be formed above in holiness in the realm of thoughts, will be revealed and made manifest—this is the secret of how thoughts of repentance benefit a person. Therefore, thoughts of fulfilling commandments sanctify a person's mind, and "the body follows the head," all the more so with speech. But an evil thought, which would need to be formed among the external forces, cannot be, for they do not know human thoughts, and thus it has no existence and is as if it never was.

When a person engages in the Torah of sacrifices with the intention of removing the rust from the divine attributes caused by their deeds, without doubt those letters will have a wondrous effect above. Through repentance, they will remove the accuser, and in place of a spirit of error, a spirit of purity will enter their soul.[2] Through the power of these letters, divine flow will be aroused and illuminate the place darkened by their sins. In this way, Torah study truly functions in place of a sacrifice in all its aspects.

Since the great unification that a person prepares to make in their prayer requires significant purification from sins to refine and purify their soul, our Sages established that we recite some of the sacrificial order in the morning and evening, so that a person may purify themselves through them. After purification comes sanctification, as it is written, "They shall purify and sanctify." Among all the sacrifices, none is as beloved as the incense offering, as we shall explain further, and we shall occupy ourselves with its greatness in this section, with God's help. But first, let us turn our attention to the prayer customs

[1] This references Psalm 7:10, "God who examines hearts and minds is righteous." The author uses this to explain why evil thoughts have no spiritual existence in higher realms.

[2] The contrast between "ruach to'im" (spirit of error) and "ruach taharah" (spirit of purity) draws on the mystical concept that different spiritual qualities can inhabit a person based on their actions and intentions.

[i] The author makes a significant kabbalistic point that evil thoughts cannot manifest spiritually in the same way as good thoughts, because the "external forces" (negative spiritual entities) cannot access human thoughts, which are known only to God. This is why thoughts of repentance and commandments have spiritual efficacy while evil thoughts remain without spiritual existence.

[ii] The author states that among all sacrificial offerings, none is as beloved or effective as the incense (ketoret) offering. This establishes the importance of the Ketoret prayer that will be the focus of this section of Ma'avar Yabok.

[i] התפלה הנאמרת בבית האבל

ולמה משמטים מסדרה כמה דברים. כבר נהגו בכל גלילות אלו להתפלל בבית האבל וסמכו דבריהם על הא דאמר רב יהודה[ii] מת שאין לו מנחמים באים עשרה בני אדם ויושבים במקומו. ואמרי׳ נמי ההוא דשכיב בשבובתא דרב דלא הוו ליה מנחמי כל יומא הוה מכניף רב יהודה עשרה ואזיל ויתיב אדוכתיה לבתר שבעה יומין אתחזי ליה בחלמיה וא״ל תנוח דעתך שהנחת את דעתי. וכתבו דמסתברא מדהוה טרח לכנופי שם עשרה שמע מינה להתפלל שם קעביד וגם בברייתא דרבי אליעזר פרק י״ז נמצא וכשחרב בית המקדש התקינו חכמים שיהיו אבלים וחתנים הולכים לבית הכנסת ולמדרשות וכו׳ מ״מ בגמ׳ דילן מוכח שהאבל שבת ראשונה אינו יוצא מפתח ביתו אפי׳ לילך לב״ח. ובהתפללם בביתו אין מתחילים אלא מברוך שאמר[iii] וא״א השירה[iv] וסמכו זה על מה שאמרו במסכת מגילה observed in a house of mourning.

And why are several elements omitted from the prayer service [in a house of mourning]? It has already become customary in all these regions to pray in the house of mourning,[1] and they based their practice on what Rav Yehudah said: "If a deceased person has no comforters, ten men come and sit in his place." And it is also said regarding one who died in Rav's neighborhood who had no comforters, that every day Rav Yehudah would gather ten men and go and sit in his place. After seven days, [the deceased] appeared to him in a dream and said to him, "May your mind be at ease, for you have put my mind at ease." And they wrote that it stands to reason that since he troubled himself to gather ten men there, we can infer that he did so in order to pray there. Also, in the Baraita of Rabbi Eliezer, chapter 17, it is found: "When the Temple was destroyed, the sages instituted that mourners and bridegrooms should go to synagogues and study halls, etc." Nevertheless, in our Gemara it is proven that during the first week, a mourner does not leave the entrance of his house, even to go to the synagogue.

When praying in the mourner's house, they begin only from "Baruch She'amar" and do not recite the Songs [of Praise]. They based this on what was

[1] The text discusses prayer practices during shiva, the seven-day Jewish mourning period, specifically what prayers are omitted when prayer services are held in the house where mourners are sitting shiva.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 4, Chapter 1 — The author is establishing the theological foundation for his discussion of prayer as a spiritual equivalent to Temple offerings. He specifically emphasizes how Torah study and recitation of prayer—particularly the incense offering prayer—creates the same metaphysical effects as the original Temple service through the spiritual connections between human actions below and their effects in the divine realms above. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The author is drawing on Zoharic concepts about how the Ketoret (incense offering) binds together all divine forms and serves as a particularly powerful connection between lower and higher worlds. The text alludes to the Zohar's teaching that the Ketoret has unique spiritual properties that other offerings lack. | Cf. Berachot 15a — The opening reference to the rabbinic teaching that 'Torah study serves in place of offerings' draws on the Talmudic principle that study of the sacrificial laws can spiritually substitute for the actual performance of sacrifices, which were no longer possible after the Temple's destruction. | Cf. Menachot 110a — The author is building on the Talmudic concept that Torah study about sacrifices has the same spiritual effect as performing the actual sacrifices, but expands this with kabbalistic explanations about how this works through the divine emanations.

[ii] The text is referencing a Talmudic source (Sanhedrin 44b) that provides the basis for gathering a minyan (prayer quorum) in a house of mourning.

[iii] Baruch She'amar is a blessing that opens the Pesukei D'zimra (Verses of Praise) section of the morning prayer service.

[iv] This refers to the Songs of Praise (Pesukei D'zimra) portion of the morning prayer service.

פ״ק מאי ולא קרב זה אל זה כל הלילה[i] בקשו מלאכי השרת לומר שירה א״ל הקב״ה מעשי ידי טובעים בים ואתם אומרים שירה לפני. אך בשבת אומרים ה׳ מלך ושירת ויושע. וא״א ג״כ ברכת כהנים דאבל ותשעה באב הוקשו זה לזה ובט׳ באב שחרית א״א אותו ומטעם זה א״א ג״כ תתקבל ואין נופלים שם על פניהם[ii] וא״א שם ועתה ולא אב הרחמן ווידוי. ברם במנחת ערב יום הכפורים אומרים וידוי משום דאבלות אתקש לחג דכתיב והפכתי חגיכם לאבל מלבד כי נפילת אפים בבית האבל אינו מן השם פן יתפש בדבריו במקום ריתחא[iii] ומטעם זה אין נפילת אפים בלילה אם לא סמוך לאשמורת כי הנפילה היא להכניע מדת הדין שהיא מדת הלילה ואם היו נופלין בלילה היו מגבירים כחה והוי כמקצץ בנטיעות ח״ו.[iv] אך סמוך ליום שמדת הדין מדת הרחמים ממשמשת לבא ולהתחבר אין כאן קצוץ. וכן נפילת אפים בבית האבל מגביר כח הדין והוי כמו קצוץ ח״ו. וכן אין נפילת said[1] in Tractate Megillah, first chapter: What is meant by "and one did not approach the other all night"? The ministering angels sought to recite song [before God], but the Holy One, blessed be He, said to them, "My handiwork is drowning in the sea, and you wish to sing before Me?" However, on Sabbath, they do recite "Adonai Malach" and the Song of "Vayosha." 155R 160R

They also do not recite the Priestly Blessing,[2] for mourning and the Ninth of Av are compared to each other, and on the morning of the Ninth of Av, they do not recite it. For this reason, they also do not say "Titkabel" [in Kaddish], do not fall on their faces [for Tachanun], and do not say "Ve'atah," nor "Av HaRachaman," nor the confession. However, at the Mincha service on the eve of Yom Kippur, they do recite the confession, because mourning is compared to a festival, as it is written: "And I will turn your festivals into mourning." 165R 170R

Moreover, falling on one's face in the house of mourning is inappropriate, lest one's words be seized upon in a place of [divine] anger. For this reason, there is no falling on the face at night, unless it is near the morning watch, because the purpose of this prostration is to subdue the attribute of judgment,[3] which is the attribute of night. If they were to fall [in prayer] at night, they would strengthen its power, and it would be like "cutting the plantings"[4] [a metaphor for separating divine attributes], 175R 180R

[1] Throughout this passage, the author explains the halakhic reasoning behind various prayer customs in a house of mourning by referencing Talmudic sources and drawing analogies between mourning and other somber occasions like the Ninth of Av.

[2] The Priestly Blessing (Birkat Kohanim) is omitted in a house of mourning following the comparison between mourning practices and those of the Ninth of Av (Tisha B'Av), when the blessing is also not recited in the morning service.

[3] In Jewish mysticism, God operates through various attributes or middot. The attribute of judgment (midat ha-din) represents strict justice without mercy, while the attribute of mercy (midat ha-rachamim) represents compassion. The text explains that certain prayer practices might inappropriately strengthen judgment at times when it's already dominant.

[4] The Hebrew term 'ketzitzat ha-neti'ot' (cutting the plantings) refers to the heretical act of Elisha ben Abuya (known as 'Acher') who metaphorically 'cut the plantings' of faith. In Kabbalistic thought, this represents improperly separating divine attributes, causing cosmic damage.

[i] This is a reference to Exodus 14:20, describing how the pillar of cloud separated the Egyptians from the Israelites at the Red Sea crossing, interpreted as angels refraining from singing while the Egyptians were drowning.

[ii] This refers to Tachanun, the supplication prayer during which worshippers traditionally bow their heads or, in some traditions, fall on their faces.

[iii] A kabbalistic term for a time of divine anger or judgment.

[iv] "Cutting the plantings" is a metaphorical expression from Jewish mysticism referring to separating the divine attributes in ways that damage their unity, considered a serious theological error.

אפים במקום שאין בו ספר תורה
שעל ידו התעוררות הרחמים
האמת כן הוא שבשעה שהצבור
נופלין על פניהם גם יחיד יכול
להתלות עמהם בביתו וצריך
כוונה גדולה פן ח״ו יתעורר
הדין ויסתתרו פני הרחמים.
וכן בבית האבל א״א ואני זאת
בריתי[i] וגו׳ לפי שאסור בדברי
תורה המשמחים לב והוא אסור
בכל שמחה וא״א שם הלל בראש
חדש דכתיב ביה נגילה ונשמחה
בו וסמכוהו הגאונים על הא
דתניא באבל רבתי דבעיר קטנה
אין שאלת שלום ביניהם וק״ו
שאין אומרים שם הלל. וכן עלינו
לשבח[ii] הוא שבח של שמחה ולכן
נהגו שלא לאומרו שם. וה״מ
בהלל דר״ח דמנהגא הוא אבל
בחנוכה יש אומרים שקורין הלל
ומברכין לפניי ולאחריו שכל
יחיד חייב לאומרו ובין ראש
השנה ליום הכפורים אומרים שם
אבינו מלכנו.[iii] [iv]

God forbid. But near daybreak, when the attribute of judgment [gives way as] the attribute of mercy approaches to join it, there is no such "cutting." Similarly, falling on one's face in a house of mourning strengthens the power of judgment and is like "cutting," God forbid. Likewise, there is no falling on the face in a place where there is no Torah scroll, through which mercy is aroused. The truth is that when the congregation falls on their faces, even an individual can join them in his house, but one needs great concentration lest, God forbid, judgment be aroused and the face of mercy be hidden.

And likewise, in a house of mourning, they do not say "And this is My covenant, etc.," because [the mourner] is forbidden to engage in words of Torah that gladden the heart, and he is forbidden all joy. They do not recite Hallel on the New Moon there, for it is written regarding it "we will rejoice and be glad on it." The Geonim based this on what was taught in the Great Mourning [tractate] that in a small town, people do not greet one another [during mourning], and all the more so, they do not recite Hallel there. Similarly, "Aleinu L'Shabeach" is a praise of joy, and therefore they customarily do not recite it there. This applies only to the Hallel of the New Moon, which is a custom, but on Chanukah, some say that they do read Hallel and recite the blessings before and after it, since every individual is obligated to recite it. And between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, they do recite "Avinu Malkeinu" there.

[i] This refers to Isaiah 59:21, which begins "And as for Me, this is My covenant with them..." This verse is recited after the Torah reading in the prayer service.

[ii] Aleinu L'Shabeach is a prayer recited at the end of each of the three daily prayer services.

[iii] Avinu Malkeinu (Our Father, Our King) is a prayer recited during the Ten Days of Repentance between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Fourth Discourse, Part One — This section of Ma'avar Yabok explores the halakhic details of prayer services held in houses of mourning, providing the sources and mystical reasoning behind various customs, particularly which prayers are omitted and why. | Cf. Talmud Sanhedrin 44b — The author cites this Talmudic source as the basis for the custom of holding prayer services in the house of mourning, showing how prayer practices evolved from earlier comforting rituals. | Cf. Talmud Megillah 10b — This source is cited to explain why songs of praise are omitted in a house of mourning—just as joy is inappropriate when God's creatures are suffering, so too songs of praise are inappropriate in the presence of death and grief. | Cf. Baraita of Rabbi Eliezer, chapter 17 — The author uses this source to support the practice of communal prayer during mourning, while noting that later tradition modified this to keep mourners at home during the first week. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, sections on Tachanun and Nefilat Apayim — This passage connects to broader discussions within Ma'avar Yabok about the kabbalistic meaning of prayer postures, particularly how they interact with divine attributes of judgment and mercy.

פרק ב׳

Chapter 2

הנה מצאנו טעם לכל הדברים
המדלגים בבית האבל. אך
פליאה דעת ממני וגם יגעתי ולא
מצאתי מי שכתב שלא לומר שם
סדר פטום הקטרת. ונ״ל הדיוט
דטוב ויפה לאומרו ויועיל
לתקנת הנפטר ולנפשות החיים
הצריכים לרחמים ותנחומים
ואולי סרכייהו נקטי ואתו וילפי
מקלקלתא כאשר ראיתי בהרבה
קהלות הקדש שמבליעים סדר
זה שלא בנעימה וכתוב בר״מ
פ׳ פנחס דף רצ״ו ע״א על
פסוק וטחנו ברחים מהכא מאן
דאפיק מלין דאורייתא צריך
למטחן להו בשנים ולאפקא
מלין שלמין. ואחרנין דאינון
שטיין ואכלין מלין בהבלעה
ולא טחנין לון בטחנין דילהון
ובשינהון כתיב בהו הבשר
עודנו בין שניהם[i] דאינון מגזעא
דמאן דאמר הלעיטני נא. ואם
בדברי תורה כך כל שכן בתפלה
דרחמי היא וכ״ש וק״ו בסדר
הקטרת המקשר צורות קדושות
בהבלו ונאמר בו אם חסר אחת
מכל סממניה חייב מיתה[ii] ויש
הרבה מבני הקהל שא״א אותו

Now we have found reasons for all the things that are skipped in a house of mourning. But it is a wonder to me, and though I have toiled, I have not found anyone who wrote that one should not recite there the order of the Preparation of the Incense. And it seems to me, humble as I am, that it is good and fitting to recite it, as it will benefit the correction of the departed soul and the souls of the living who need mercy and consolation. Perhaps they cling to their custom and have learned from corrupted practices,[1] as I have seen in many holy communities where they swallow this order [of pray[2]er] unpleasantly. It is written in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas, page 296a,[A] regarding the verse "and ground it in mills," that from here we learn that one who brings forth words of Torah must grind them with his teeth and produce complete words. And others who are fools eat words by swallowing them without grinding them with their mills and teeth—about them it is written, "the meat was still between their teeth," for they are of the stock of those who said, "feed me, please." And if this applies to words of Torah, how much more so to prayer, which is [a plea for] mercy, and all the more so to the order of the Incense, which binds together holy forms with its breath,[3] and concerning which it is said that if one component of all its ingredients is missing, one is liable to death. There

5R 10R 15R 20R 25R

[A] Or: "It is written in Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd) section of the Zohar, Parashat Pinchas, folio 296a" — The abbreviation 'R"M' specifically refers to 'Ra'aya Mehemna' which is a particular section within the Zohar. Adding this clarification helps readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic literature understand the source being cited.

[1] The phrase 'סרכייהו נקטי ואתו וילפי מקלקלתא' uses legal terminology. 'Sirkheihu' refers to established precedent or custom, while 'kalkalata' refers to corruption or degradation, suggesting the author believes the practice of omitting the Ketoret in houses of mourning arose from misguided precedents.

[2] The author uses a play on words with 'swallowing' (מבליעים) prayers, which connects to his subsequent citation about properly 'grinding' and not 'swallowing' words of Torah. This metaphor criticizes hasty, mumbled recitation without proper articulation.

[3] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the Ketoret prayer creates mystical unifications in the upper worlds through the breath used to pronounce the words, affecting cosmic reality. This is why proper articulation is especially important for this prayer.

[i] This combines two biblical references: the grinding of manna in mills (Numbers 11:8) and "the meat was still between their teeth" (Numbers 11:33), creating a metaphor for improperly articulated prayers.

[ii] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Keritot 6a) that if the Temple incense was prepared without any of its required ingredients, the preparer was liable to the death penalty. The author applies this strictness to the proper recitation of the prayer.

כלל אפי׳ בהלעטה ואי איישר
חילי אבטליניה למנהג הרע
הזה ואולי זה אחד מתחבולות
המנגד דהשתא בעקבות משיחא
חוצפא יסגא[i] אמסר עלמא
בידא דטפשאי אשר בקטרוגם
מפתים בני אדם לעזוב ארחות
יושר וללכת בדרכי חשך הן הן
המלפתים ארחות דרכם כדרך
שכל דבר מתגבר נגד הפכו.
וקובלנא גדולה אית לי על
החזנים שהרגילו עצמם לקרא
סדר זה עראי ואחריהם כל
הקהל ימשוך. וכל מי שדבריו
נשמעים חובה להשתדל בכל עוז
שהחזן יאמר סדר זה לפני התיבה
בקול מלה במלה כדרך שאומר
היוצר והעמידה בקול ולא יפנה
עצמו אנה ואנה בעת קריאתו
ובזה כל אחד מהקהל יהיו
לאחדים עמו כי עתה בעונותינו
אין לנו דבר מסוגל לבטל כל
נגע וכל פגע רע כהזכרת מעשה
הקטרת בבתי כנסיות בכוונת
הלב וכן כל אחד בביתו. ובחרתי
ללקוט שושנים מדברי הר״ש בן
יוחאי בס׳ הזהר והתקונים ור״מ
ומדרש שיר השירים ומתרגום
יונתן שמתוכם יראה המעיין
כי כנים דברי. ומובטחני בזה
שכל הלומד ע״מ לעשות יאזור
כגבר חלציו מן היום הזה והלאה
להיות זהיר וזריז באמירת סדר
זה פעמים בכל יום בכל כחו
וכוונתו וממנו יראו אחרים וכן
יעשו והמשרה הזאת על הש״צ
וראשי כנסיות שבכל עיר ופלך
ובראשם עטרות החכמים ישמרם
ה׳ ויחיו לנצח. פוקו נא וחזו

are many members of the congregation who do not say it at all, even by swallowing it, and if I had the strength, I would abolish this evil custom.[A] Perhaps this is one of the schemes of the adversary, for now, in the footsteps of the Messiah, insolence will increase[B] and the world has been delivered into the hands of fools, who through their accusations entice people to abandon the paths of uprightness and walk in the ways of darkness—they are the ones who twist the paths of their way, as everything grows stronger against its opposite.

And I have a great complaint against the cantors who have accustomed themselves to recite this order casually, and the entire congregation follows them. And it is the duty of anyone whose words are heeded to strive with all might that the cantor should recite this order before the ark aloud, word by word, just as he recites the Yotzer [prayer] and the Amidah aloud, and he should not turn himself here and there during its recitation. In this way, each member of the congregation will be united with him, for now, in our sins, we have nothing as effective for nullifying every plague and every evil affliction as the mention of the Incense service in synagogues with the intention of the heart, and so too by each person in his home.

I have chosen to gather roses from the words of Rabbi Shimon ben Yochai in the book of the Zohar and the Tikkunim and Ra'aya Mehemna, and from the Midrash Shir HaShirim and from the Targum Yonatan, from which the reader will see that my words are true. And I am confident in this, that anyone who learns in order to practice will gird his loins like a man from this day forward to be careful and diligent in reciting this order twice every day with all his strength and intention, and from him others will see and do likewise. And this responsibility rests upon the prayer leader and the heads of congregations in every city and district, and at their head, the crown of the sages—may God protect them

[A] Or: "and if my authority were sufficient, I would abolish this evil custom" — The Aramaic phrase 'איישר חילי' can refer not just to physical strength but to authority or power to enforce a ruling, which better fits the context of a rabbi discussing ritual practice.

[B] Or: "for now, in the pre-messianic era, insolence has increased" — The phrase 'in the footsteps of the Messiah' (ikvot meshicha) is a rabbinic term for the period preceding the messianic age, characterized by various spiritual and social challenges. This translation better conveys the eschatological context.

[i] This is a reference to Talmudic teachings (Sotah 49b) about the signs of the pre-messianic era, which include increased insolence and a decline in religious observance.

במדרש הנעלם דף ק״א מעשה
ר׳ אחא כד אזיל לכפר טרשא
ובטיל מותנא באמירת פטום
הקטרת וסדר קרבנות עמו ג׳
פעמים בכל ד׳ פנות העיר וכן
אמרו בבתי הנוטים למות עם
פסוקי ויאמר משה אל אהרן
קח את המחתה וגו׳ ויעמוד
בין המתים וגו׳ ובזה אתבטיל
מותנא[i] ושם בדף ק׳ אמר רבי
ברוספדאי האי מאן דמדכר
בפומיה בבתי כנסיות ובבתי
מדרשות ענייא דקרבניא
ותקרובתא ויכוין בהו ברית
כרותה הוא דאינון מלאכיא
דמדכרין חוביה לאבאשא ליה
דלא יכלין למעבד ליה אלא
טיבו. עוד שם ע״ב אמר ר׳
פנחס זמנא חדא הוינא אזיל
בארחא וערעית ביה באליהו
אמינא ליה לימא לי מר מלה
דמעלייא לברייתא. א״ל קיים
גזר קב״ה ואתקין כל אלין
מלאכיא דממנן לאדכרא חוביה
דבר נש די בעדנא די דכרון
בני אנשא קורבניא דמני משה
אתגזר וכרוזא עבר על כל חילא
דשמיא דאי יעלון בנוהי בארעא
בבתי כנסיות ובבתי מדרשות
וימרון ברעות נפשא ולבא
ענייא דקטרת בוסמין דהוו ליה
לישראל דיתבטל מותנא מיניהו
ע״כ. ובפ׳ ויקרא אמר כל מאן
דאסתכל וקרי בעובדא דקטרת
בכל יומא אשתזיב מכל מלין
דחרשייא ומכל פגעין בישין
ומהרהורין בישין ומדינא בישא
וממותנא ולא איתזק כל ההוא
יומא ולא יכיל סטרא אחרא
לשלטא ביה ובלבד דיכוין ביה.
והרב בעל סדר היום כתב וזה
לשונו החושש עליו ועל נפשו

and may they live forever.

Go forth, please, and see in the Midrash HaNe'elam, page 101, the story of Rabbi Acha when he went to Kfar Tarsha and stopped a plague by reciting the Preparation of the Incense and the Order of Sacrifices with it three times at all four corners of the city. And they also said it in the houses of those who were inclined toward death, along with the verses "And Moses said to Aaron, 'Take the censer,'" etc., "and he stood between the dead," etc., and thereby the plague was stopped. And there on page 100, Rabbi Chrospedai said: "Whoever mentions with his mouth in synagogues and study houses the matter of sacrifices and offerings and focuses his intention on them—there is a covenant that those angels who mention his sins to harm him will not be able to do anything to him except good."[1] Furthermore, it says there, Rabbi Pinchas said: "Once I was going on the road and encountered Elijah. I said to him, 'Please tell me, sir, something excellent for people.' He said to me, 'The Holy One, blessed be He, has decreed and established, and all those angels appointed to mention the sins of a person have entered before Him. At the time when people mention the sacrifices that Moses commanded, it has been decreed and a proclamation has gone out to all the heavenly hosts that if His children enter on earth into synagogues and study houses and say with the desire of their soul and heart the matter of the incense of spices that Israel had, the plague will be stopped from among them.'"

And in Parashat Vayikra it says: "Anyone who contemplates and reads the work of the incense every day will be saved from all matters of sorcery and from all evil afflictions and from evil thoughts and from evil judgment and from plague, and he will not be harmed all that day, and the Other Side will not be able to rule over him—provided that he focuses his intention on it." And the Rabbi, author of Seder HaYom, wrote, and this is his language: "One who is concerned about himself and his soul

70R 75R 80R 85R 90R 95R 100R 105R

[1] According to kabbalistic belief, the recitation of passages about Temple sacrifices, especially the Ketoret, transforms spiritual accusers into defenders, literally converting negative spiritual energy into positive force.

[i] This references the biblical account in Numbers 17:11-13 where Aaron's offering of incense stopped a plague, establishing the precedent for the Ketoret's protective power.

ראוי להשתדל בכל עוז בענין הזה ולכתוב כל ענין הקטרת בקלף כשר בכתיבה אשורית ולקרות אותו פעם אחת בבקר ובערב בכוונה גדולה ואני ערב. ואח״כ יאמר אביי הוה מסדר וכו׳ עכ״ל.[i] should strive with all might in this matter and write the entire matter of the incense on kosher parchment in Assyrian script and read it once in the morning and evening with great intention, and I guarantee it." And afterward he should say, "Abaye would arrange," etc. End of quote.

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

הנה בדבר נקל יוכל האדם להנצל מכמה פגעים רעים. ובזהר פרשת ויקהל דף רי״ט ע״א[ii] אמרו סימנא דא אתמסר בידנא די בכל אתר דקאמרו בכוונה ורעותא דלבא עובדא דקטרת דלא שלטא מותנא בההוא אתר ולא אתזק. עוד כתב ת״ח מאן דדינא רדיף בתריה אצטריך להאי קטרת ולאתבא קמי מריה והא סיועא איהו לאסתלקא דינין מיניה ובהא ודאי מסתלקין מיניה אי הוא רגיל בהאי לאדכרא תרין זמנין ביומא בצפרא וברמשא ודא הוא קיומא דעלמא לתתא וקיומא דעלמא לעילא בההוא אתר דלא אדכר בכל יומא עובדא דקטרת דינין דלעילא שריין ביה ואע״ג דצלותא איהי מעלי׳א מכלא עובדא דקטרת הוא חביב ויקיר קמיה דקודשא

Thus with a simple thing, a person can be saved from many evil occurrences.[1] And in the Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel, page 219a, they said: "This sign has been transmitted to us: in any place where people recite with intention and desire of the heart the matter of the incense, no plague will have power in that place, nor will it be harmed." It is further written: "Come and see, one who is pursued by judgment needs this incense, and to return before his Master, for it is an aid to remove judgments from him. And with this, judgments are certainly removed from him if he is accustomed to mentioning it twice daily, in the morning and in the evening. This is the sustenance of the world below and the sustenance of the world above. In a place where the matter of the incense is not mentioned daily, the judgments from above rest upon it. And although prayer is superior to all, the act of the incense is beloved and precious before the Holy One, blessed be He. Prayer is a rectification to correct what is needed; incense does more than rectification—it binds knots, creates greater illumination than anything else, re-

[1] The Hebrew 'davar nakel' (literally 'an easy thing') refers to the seemingly simple act of reciting the incense formula, which the author emphasizes is an accessible practice that nonetheless has powerful protective effects.

[i] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna (Parashat Pinchas) — The author cites this passage to criticize those who hastily recite prayers without proper articulation, arguing that if clear pronunciation is required for Torah study, it is even more necessary for prayer, especially the Ketoret which has mystical significance. | Cf. Midrash HaNe'elam (Hidden Midrash) — The author uses these stories to demonstrate the practical efficacy of the Ketoret recitation for protection against plagues and spiritual harm, reinforcing his argument that it should be recited even in houses of mourning. | Cf. Seder HaYom — The author cites this later halakhic work to demonstrate that the protective power of the Ketoret was recognized by authorities beyond the Zohar, and to provide practical guidance for those who wish to benefit from its recitation. | Cf. Numbers 17:11-13 — The biblical source for the power of the Ketoret to stop plagues, which the author references to establish the ancient precedent for this practice and to connect the synagogue recitation to the original Temple ritual.

[ii] The author cites specific page references from the Zohar, demonstrating his scholarly approach and inviting readers to verify his sources. This detailed citation practice is characteristic of rabbinic scholarship.

בריך הוא. צלותא איהו תקונא
לאתקנא מה דאצריך קטרת
עביד יתיר מתקון וקשיר קשרין
ועביד נהירו יתיר מכלא ואעבר
זוהמא ואי זכי משכנא כלא
אתנהר ואתתקן ואתקשר כחדא.
אח״כ כתב כי מעשה הקטרת
קודם לזמירות הבקר. וז״ל
קטרת איהו קדמאה תדיר קודם
לכלא ובג״כ עובדא דקטרת
אצטריך לאקדמא צלותא
בשירין ותושבחן לאעברא זוהמא
ולאתדכאה קודשא ולבתר שירין
ותושבחן וצלותין כלא כדאמרן.
עוד בפ׳ תרומה שם זירז על זה
וז״ל מפומא דאליהו כך אתמר
במתיבתא עילאה דרקיעא[i] בכל
אתר דמדכרין עובדא דקטרת
תרין זמנין ביומא מותנא ומרעין
בישין אתבטלו מבינייהו ואתרא
דלא מדכרי עובדא דקטרת תרין
זמנין ביומא מותנא ומרעין בישין
אשתכחו בינייהו ואית מארה
בעובדייהו ואש דגהינם שליט
עלייהו בג״ד אצטריך לכל ב״נ
לאזהרא ביה בכל יומא ות״ח
אי הוו ידעי בני נשא עובדא
דקטרת כמה יקירא ועילאה
איהו הוו מעיילי כל מלה ומלה
כמו עטרה דדהבא על רישייהו
ות״ח מה כתיב ועשית מזבח
מקטר קטרת והא לא דבחין ביה
אלא רזא איהו דמיניה ערקין כל
שדין רוחין ולילין ולית לון רשו
למעבד שום ביש כד״א ויתן את
הקטרת ויכפר על העם. ומתוכו
למדנו היות בקריאת הקטרת
חמש תועליות הא׳ ביטול המגפה
והחולאים. ב׳ מציל מגלות. ג׳
בעבורו הברכה מצויה במעשה
ידי אדם והצלחה בענייניו. ד׳
מציל מדינה של גהינם. ה׳ בטול
החצונים והקליפות. ובזהר
שיר השירים האריכו עוד בענין moves impurity, and if the Tabernacle merits, everything becomes illuminated, rectified, and bound together." Afterward, it is written that the act of 25R the incense precedes the morning hymns. In these words: "The incense is always first before everything, and because of this, the act of the incense needs to precede prayer with songs and praises to remove impurity and to purify holiness; and afterward songs, 30R praises, and prayers—all as we have said." Furthermore, in Parashat Terumah, he urged about this, saying: "From the mouth of Elijah, thus it was said in the supernal heavenly academy: In every place where people mention the act of the incense twice 35R daily, plagues and evil diseases are nullified from among them. And in a place where they do not mention the act of the incense twice daily, plagues and evil diseases are found among them, and there is a curse in their actions, and the fire of Gehenna 40R rules over them. Therefore, it is necessary for every person to be careful about this every day. And come and see, if people knew how precious and lofty the act of the incense is, they would place every word of it like a crown of gold upon their heads. And 45R come and see what is written: 'And you shall make an altar for burning incense'—and indeed they do not sacrifice upon it, but it is a mystery, for from it flee all demons, spirits, and night spirits, and they have no permission to do any evil, as it is said: 'And 50R he put on the incense and made atonement for the people.'"

From this we learn that there are five benefits in reciting the incense: 1) Nullification of plague and diseases; 2) Salvation from exile; 3) Because of it, 55R blessing is found in a person's handiwork and success in his affairs; 4) Salvation from the judgment of Gehenna; 5) Nullification of external forces and negative entities. And in the Zohar on the Song of Songs, they elaborated further on this matter, 60R saying: "Incense—anyone who smelled that smoke when the column of that smoke ascended would be purified with clarity and illumination, with joy and willingness to serve his Master, for it removed from him the filth and impurity of the evil inclination, 65R and he would have only one heart toward his Fa-

[i]The text attributes this teaching to Elijah the Prophet as spoken in the 'heavenly academy,' giving it the highest possible authority. In mystical literature, teachings ascribed to Elijah often represent revelations of deep mysteries.

הזה וז״ל קטרת כל מאן דארח
בההוא תננא כד סליק עמודא
דההוא מעלה עשן הוה מברר
70 להו בברירו ונהירו בחדוה
ורעותא למפלח למריה דאעבר
מיניה טנופא וזוהמא דיצה״ר
ולא הוה ליה אלא לבא חדא
לקבל אבוהי דבשמיא בגין
75 דקטרת תבירו דיצה״ר איהו
בכל סטרין ולית לן מלה בעלמא
דמתבר ליה לס״א בר מקטרת
דהא לית חדוה וחביבו קמיה
קב״ה בקטרת וקיימא לבטלא
80 חרשין ומלין בישין מביתא ריחא
ועשבא דקטרת דעבדי בני נשא
להההוא עובדא דקא מבטל כ״ש
קטרת מלה דא אתגזר ואתקיימא
קמיה קב״ה דכל מאן דיסתכל
85 וקרי בכל יומא עובדא דקטרת
אשתזיב מכל אלין חרשין ואית
ליה חולקא בעלמא דין ובעלמא
דאתי ואסתלק מותנא מיניה
ומעלמא בנזכר למעלה הנה כי
90 זולת הסגולות הקודמות עוד יש
לו סגולות אחרות[i] הא׳ בטול
הכשפים. הב׳ בטול הרהורים
רעים. הג׳ נוחל חלק העוה״ז
וחלק העוה״ב. הד׳ מסלק הדין
95 מעליו כי סודו גדול בפנימיות
וקטרת לשון קשר המקשר
אותיות שם בן ד׳ יחד[ii] בסוד
העשן המסתלק מעלה מעלה
בחוטמא ושכיך רוגזא ומיחד

ther in Heaven,[1] because the incense breaks the evil inclination in all directions. And we have nothing in the world that breaks the Other Side except for incense, for there is no joy and love before the Holy 70R
One, blessed be He, like the incense. And it stands to nullify sorceries and evil things from the house. The scent and herb of incense that people make for this purpose nullifies [evil]—how much more so the incense itself! This matter has been decreed and es- 75R tablished before the Holy One, blessed be He, that whoever contemplates and recites daily the matter of the incense will be saved from all these sorceries, and will have a portion in this world and in the World to Come, and plague will be removed from him and 80R from the world," as mentioned above.

Behold, apart from the previous special properties, it has other special properties: 1) Nullification of sorceries; 2) Nullification of evil thoughts; 3) Inheriting a portion in this world and in the World 85R to Come; 4) Removing judgment from oneself, for its secret is great in the inner dimension. And "ketoret" (incense) is derived from the language of "kesher" (binding),[2] binding the letters of the four-letter Name together, through the secret of the smoke 90R that ascends higher and higher into the nostrils, calming anger,[3] and uniting the bridegroom with his bride. And all the chariots—holy forces that receive along with forces that bestow—all become bound and united through the incense. They further 95R said that in all the sacrifices, there was a portion for the external forces, like the limbs and fats that are consumed throughout the night, and the smoke would bend toward the north.[4] However, the incense

[1] This metaphor of 'one heart' (liba chada) is significant, suggesting that the incense offering/recitation creates a singular focus and undivided devotion, removing the 'divided heart' caused by the evil inclination.

[2] This etymological interpretation connecting 'ketoret' (קטרת) with 'kesher' (קשר) is central to the kabbalistic understanding of incense as creating cosmic unifications and bindings of divine forces.

[3] The Hebrew 'v'shakhikh rogza' describes how the smoke of the incense metaphysically calms divine anger or judgment. This draws on the anthropomorphic biblical imagery of God's nostrils as the seat of divine anger (as in 'the anger of the Lord was kindled').

[4] In kabbalistic cosmology, the north direction is associated with the forces of judgment and impurity. This description of regular sacrifice smoke bending northward symbolizes that a portion of their power goes to these forces, unlike the incense which is entirely directed upward to God.

[i] This passage systematically lists ten distinct benefits or special properties (segulot) of the incense offering or recitation, showing the author's effort to organize and categorize the spiritual benefits described in various Zoharic passages.

[ii] The author provides an etymological interpretation connecting 'ketoret' (incense) with 'kesher' (bond/tie), revealing the kabbalistic understanding that the incense ritual functions to unify the four letters of the divine name (the Tetragrammaton).

חתן עם כלתו[i] וכל המרכבות
כחות קדושים מקבלים עם
כחות משפיעים כלם נקשרים
ומתייחדים ע״י הקטרת. עוד
אמרו שבכל הקרבנות היה חלק
לחצונים כעין אברים ופדרים
דמתאכלין כל הלילה והעשן
היה נעקם לצד צפון[ii] אמנם
הקטרת היה כלו לגבוה. ועולה
במקום הקדש ומיחד ומקשר כל
המדרגות מנקודה ראשונה עד
האחרונה:[iii]

was entirely for the Most High. And it ascends to the holy place and unifies and binds all levels from the first point to the last.[1] 100R

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

הלא ידענו כי עקר הרצוי
ביום האדיר[iv] היה בקטרת
דקה מן הדקה[v] העולה לבסם
כח הדינים שבבינה ומיחדה

We know that the primary purpose on the awesome day[A] [Yom Kippur] was through the incense, ground exceptionally fine,[B] which ascends to sweeten the powers of judgment in Binah and unite it with [A] Or: "on the great day" — While 'awesome day' captures the reverence for Yom Kippur, 'great day' is a more literal translation of 'yom ha'adir' and might be preferred in contexts emphasizing the day's significance rather than its awe-inspiring nature.

[B] Or: "incense of the finest grinding" — The phrase 'dakah min ha-dakah' is a superlative

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the sefirot (divine emanations), from Keter (Crown, the highest point) to Malkhut (Kingdom, the lowest point), suggesting that the incense creates unification throughout the entire divine structure.

[i] This is a reference to the mystical unification of divine masculine and feminine aspects, referred to as 'bridegroom' and 'bride' in kabbalistic literature. This matrimonial imagery for divine union is central to kabbalistic theology, particularly in the Zohar.

[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the north direction is associated with the forces of judgment and impurity. The smoke of regular sacrifices bending northward symbolizes that a portion of their power goes to sustain even the negative forces, while the incense smoke rises straight up, giving nothing to these forces.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel 219a — This Zohar passage is directly quoted to establish the central argument that reciting the incense formula with proper intention protects from plague and disease. The author uses this as a foundational text for the entire section on incense. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This passage attributes teachings about incense to Elijah the Prophet as transmitted in the heavenly academy, giving divine authority to the practice of reciting the incense formula twice daily for protection from plagues. | Cf. Exodus 30:1 — This biblical verse is referenced to establish the divine origin of the incense altar, supporting the argument that the incense ritual has special cosmic significance. | Cf. Numbers 17:12-13 — This alludes to Aaron stopping a plague with incense, a central biblical proof text for the protective power of incense against disease and death. | Cf. Zohar on Song of Songs — This reference expands on the transformative spiritual effects of incense, emphasizing how it purifies the person from the evil inclination and creates unity of heart in divine service. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:6 — The description of the "column of smoke ascending" echoes the biblical verse "Who is this coming up from the wilderness like columns of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense..." which in Jewish mystical tradition is associated with the soul's ascent and the unification of divine forces.

[iv] This refers to Yom Kippur, often called 'the awesome day' or 'the mighty day' in rabbinic literature.

[v] This refers to the special preparation of incense for Yom Kippur, which according to Talmudic tradition (Keritot 6a) was ground exceptionally fine beyond the normal grinding for regular daily incense.

בחכמה שהיא שמן כתית ולכן
היה לפני ולפנים[i] והקטרת הלז
היה מתקן וממתק גם רמז דם
הפר והשעיר במקורם העליון
מכין הדם ההוא שיהיו ראויים
להזות אותם לפני ולפנים.
על כן היו ממרסן בהם על
הרובד הרביעי שבעזרה[ii] בעת
עשיית הקטרת לפני ולפנים
כנדרש בתקוני יוה״כ ובכחו
הדם נעשה חלב. הנה כמה רב
גובריה בבסום הדין. ובו אחד
עשר סממנים העשרה רומזים
לעשר ספירות והחלבנה רמזה
לסוד שרש החצונים המשורשים
בקדש[iii] כנדרש אצלנו על פ׳
ראש פתנים אכזר. פירוש א״ך
ז״ר[iv] ומה טעם משום דהלא הוא
כמוס עמדי חתום באוצרותי
ליום אשר לי נקם ושלם וגו׳
בנזכר למעלה וזהו בוונת
אמרם רשעים בחייהם קרויים
מתים[v] וכבר איפסיקא הלכתא
כר׳ עקיבא מוליכין הגוף אצל
הראש[vi] כי בבסום שרשם למעלה
יתחלש כח התפשטותם למטה
כי הדין הוא הפך הרחמים
והתגברות שרש הרחמים למעלה

Chokhmah, which is like beaten oil. This is why it was offered in the Holy of Holies. This incense would rectify and sweeten even the symbolic blood of the bull and goat at their supernal source, preparing that blood to be worthy of sprinkling before the innermost sanctuary. Therefore, they would stir them on the fourth tier of the Temple courtyard during the preparation of the incense for the Holy of Holies, as required in the Yom Kippur rituals, and through its power, the blood was transformed into fat. Behold how great is its power in sweetening judgment.[A]

The incense contained eleven ingredients: ten corresponding to the ten sefirot,[1] while the galbanum symbolized the root of the external forces[2] [negative spiritual entities] that are rooted in holiness, as we have explained regarding the verse "the cruel venom of serpents." This means "only foreign," and the reason is "for this is hidden with Me, sealed in My treasuries until the day of vengeance and recompense," as mentioned above. This is the meaning of the saying, "The wicked are called dead even in their lifetime," and the law has been decided according to Rabbi Akiva that "the body is brought to the head." For when their root above is sweetened, their power of expansion below is weakened, since judgment is the opposite of mercy. When the root of mercy grows stronger construction in Hebrew indicating the finest possible grinding. This alternate translation preserves the superlative quality while using a more compact phrasing.

[A] Or: "in mitigating severity" — While 'sweetening judgment' is the standard kabbalistic terminology, 'mitigating severity' might be clearer for readers less familiar with kabbalistic concepts, as it conveys the idea of tempering harshness or strictness.

[1] The sefirot are the ten divine emanations or attributes through which God interacts with the world according to Kabbalah. The author is establishing a correspondence between the physical ingredients of the incense and these cosmic structures.

[2] In Kabbalah, 'ha-chitzonim' (the external ones) refers to negative spiritual forces or entities that exist outside the realm of holiness, often understood as the origin of evil and impurity.

[i] A technical term referring to the Holy of Holies, the innermost sanctuary of the Temple that the High Priest entered only on Yom Kippur.

[ii] Refers to a specific location in the Temple courtyard where ritual preparations took place.

[iii] The author presents a kabbalistic interpretation of galbanum, which had a foul smell yet was included in the sacred incense. This paradox is interpreted as symbolizing how even negative forces have their ultimate source in holiness.

[iv] A kabbalistic word play where the letters of 'achzar' (cruel) are rearranged to spell 'ach zar' (only foreign/strange), suggesting that evil is merely a foreign element that can be reintegrated.

[v] A Talmudic dictum (Berakhot 18b) stating that the wicked are considered dead even while alive, because they are spiritually disconnected.

[vi] This refers to a halakhic ruling about burial practices, used here metaphorically to illustrate how lower forces (the body) must be brought into alignment with higher forces (the head).

מתהדר ומתפשט כחם למטה
אבל הדין במתוק שרשו יתקבצו
בחותיו התחתונות למעלה ולא
יפעלו עוד. וא״כ אחד עשר
סממנים ירמזו לי׳ ספירות
עם בחינת המלכות על כסאה
בבחינתה למטה בסוד רגליה
יורדות.[i] וכמו שבטורי״אקה
הגדולה[ii] הנעשית מדברים רבים
ישימו בה בשר האפעה ואז
היא מועילה מאד להרבה מיני
חולאים כשיקחוה בזמנה ועל
פי עצת רופא כי אם לא יקחוה
בזמנה ובתנאיה כתב הרמב״ם
ז״ל כי לפעמים ממיתה וכן אירע
לבני אהרן ולעדת קרח בהקטרת
כן החלבנה היתה בקטרת שהיא
טורייקא מועלת בפלא ובסגולה
גדולה לנגד המתחדש מצד
גרמת הפירוד והפגם בעליונים
ובתחתונים והוא מחזר ומקשר
ומיפה הכחות כלם וכוונת
שימת החלבנה בה לקשר באותם
הסממנים הטובים החומר הרע
הזה הוא שטן הוא יצה״ר לקשרו
ולכבשו שם. וברא״מ פ׳ פנחס דף
רצ״ד ע״א אמר על קטרת כד
סליק באף נקרא קטרת הה״ד
ישימו קטורה באפך ולית דבטיל
מותנא מעלמא בקטרת דאיהו

above, its power expands below, but when judgment is sweetened at its root, its lower powers gather upward and no longer act. 35R

Thus, the eleven ingredients allude to the ten sefirot along with the aspect of Malkhut on its throne, in its aspect below, in the mystery of "her feet descend."[A] Just as in the great theriac[1] [medicinal compound] made from many ingredients, they place in it viper's flesh, and then it becomes extremely beneficial for many types of illnesses when taken at the proper time and according to a physician's advice. But if not taken at the proper time and under the right conditions, Maimonides of blessed memory wrote that it sometimes kills, as happened to the sons of Aaron and to Korah's assembly with their incense. Similarly, galbanum was included in the incense, which is like a wonderfully effective theriac with great protective power against the damage caused by separation and blemish in the upper and lower realms. It circulates, binds, and beautifies all the forces, and the purpose of placing galbanum in it was to bind this evil substance—which is Satan, which is the evil inclination[2]—with those good ingredients, to bind and subdue it there. 40R 45R 50R 55R

In Ra'aya Mehemna [a section of the Zohar], Parashat Pinchas, page 294a, it says about the incense: "When it ascends through the nose, it is called 'ketoret,' as it is written, 'They shall put incense in Your nostrils.'[3] Nothing eliminates plague 60R

[A] Or: "Thus, the eleven ingredients symbolize the ten sefirot plus Malkhut in its lower manifestation, as in the esoteric teaching that "her feet descend."" — This alternate translation uses more technical kabbalistic terminology ('symbolize' instead of 'allude to' and 'manifestation' instead of 'aspect') which might be preferred in a more scholarly translation aimed at readers familiar with kabbalistic concepts.

[1] The author uses theriac, an ancient medicinal compound that paradoxically contained poison (viper's flesh) as an ingredient, as a metaphor for how the sacred incense incorporates the foul-smelling galbanum. This illustrates the kabbalistic principle that even negative elements can be transformed into positive forces when properly integrated.

[2] This formulation equates Satan (the cosmic adversary) with the evil inclination (yetzer hara), suggesting they are different manifestations of the same negative force that can be bound and subdued through proper ritual.

[3] This references Deuteronomy 33:10, which in its original context refers to the Levitical priests' role in offering incense. The Zohar reinterprets this verse to explain the etymology and function of the incense (ketoret).

[i] Alludes to Proverbs 5:5, 'Her feet go down to death,' which in Kabbalah refers to how Malkhut (the lowest sefirah) extends downward into the lower realms.

[ii] Theriac was a complex medicinal compound containing dozens of ingredients, including viper's flesh, used from ancient times through the Renaissance as an antidote against poisons and various diseases.

קשורא דדינא ברחמי על דרך
ריח ניחוחי דתרגומו דקשר
קטורו עוד אמר בוצינא קדישא
דבתר צלותא איהי כקרבנא
מאן דיימא פטום הקטרת בתר
תהלה לדוד בטיל מותנא מביתא.
הנה כי טוב להקדימו עם סדר
הקרבנות קודם הזמירות מן
הטעם שכתב בפ׳ ויקהל כנזכר
וגם אחר קדושת ובא לציון
שתרגום הקדושה הוא לבטל
הדמות שראה נבוכדנצר[i] הרומז
קומת החצונים כלם וכבר נמחץ
בראשו כי נבוכדנצר מן אנשא
טריד ועתיד ללקות מכה רבה
על רגליו באבן די לא בידין
ואז יכלו ויספו כנראה מפסוקי
דניאל. על כן נאות לומר אחר
קדושת ובא לציון פטום הקטרת
כמ״ש רעיא מהימנא.[ii] ואני
הנהגתי עצמי לאומרו אחר פ׳
התמיד כסדר הכתוב בסדורים
שלנו ופעם אחרת עם הקהל
וזה כמו שסדור במעמדות. אין
ספק שעל פי הדברים האלה טוב
ויפה ונעים לאומרו בבית האבל
לבטל מותנא מן ביתיה אפי׳ לא
יועיל שם לכמה שאר דברים
להיות כי נסתם תפלתו יען אין
השכינה שורה מתוך עצבות
ובפרט שעל הרוב סבת העצבות
הוא על אבוד הגוף שהוא חלק
החצוני דנחית לעפרא. בגין
דיתמחי יצה״ר דבגויה. וגם
נפש הנפטר נהנה ודאי מההבל
אשר יעלה בהזכרת כח סממנים

from the world like incense, which binds judgment with mercy, as indicated by the phrase 'pleasing fragrance,' which is translated as 'a bound offering.'" 65R
The holy luminary further said: "After prayer, it is like a sacrifice. Whoever recites Pitum HaKetoret after Ashrei [Psalm 145] eliminates plague from the house."

Therefore, it is good to recite it with the order of sacrifices before the morning psalms, for the reason written in Parashat Vayakhel, as mentioned above. It is also appropriate after the Kedushah of U'va L'Tzion, since the translation of the Kedushah serves to nullify the image seen by Nebuchadnezzar,[1] which symbolizes the entire structure of the external forces. Nebuchadnezzar has already been struck in his head, for "Nebuchadnezzar was driven from humanity," and he will be severely stricken on his feet by "a stone not cut by hands," and then they will be completely destroyed, as appears from the verses in Daniel. Therefore, it is fitting to recite Pitum HaKetoret after the Kedushah of U'va L'Tzion, as stated in Ra'aya Mehemna. I have accustomed myself to recite it after the passage about the daily offering, as arranged in our prayer books, and again with the congregation, as arranged in the Ma'amadot prayers. 70R 75R 80R 85R

There is no doubt that according to these principles, it is good, fitting, and pleasant to recite it in a house of mourning to eliminate plague from the house, even if it does not help there for various other matters, since the mourner's prayer is blocked[2] because the Divine Presence does not rest amidst sadness. This is especially true since the primary cause of sadness is the loss of the body, which is the external part that descends to dust so that the evil inclination within it may be destroyed.[3] And surely 90R 95R

[1] This refers to the Aramaic translation of the Kedushah prayer that appears in U'va L'Tzion. The author suggests that this translation has the spiritual power to counteract the cosmic structure of evil forces, symbolized by Nebuchadnezzar's dream-image in the Book of Daniel.

[2] There is a traditional concept that mourners have diminished spiritual access due to their state of grief and ritual impurity. The author acknowledges this limitation while still advocating for the recitation of the incense prayer in houses of mourning.

[3] This reflects the kabbalistic view that death and decomposition serve a spiritual purpose by eliminating the physical vessel that houses the evil inclination, allowing for the soul's purification.

[i] Refers to Nebuchadnezzar's dream in Daniel 2 of a statue with a head of gold, chest of silver, belly of bronze, legs of iron, and feet of mixed iron and clay, which was destroyed by a stone 'not cut by hands.'

[ii] Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd) is a section of the Zohar, the central text of Jewish mysticism, purportedly recording the teachings of Moses.

אלו להחליש כחות דיני הקבר
המתרבות עליו בימים ההם כי
חסדי ה׳ לא תמו ואין להתעצם
ולהקשות באמור כי ח״ו זה
יהיה כגירא בעיניה דשטנא כמו
שאמרו דורשי רשומות בהזכרת
פסוק ועתה יגדל נא כח אדנ״י
בלילה כי יעצו לומר כי יד על
כס יה חלופו וכן בי״ג מדות
אמרו שאין להזכירם בתחלת
הלילה משום לא תחסום שור
בדישו[i] כמו שאמרו ג״כ על
תקיעת שופר בלילה שאין ענין
לזה כלל שכבר עשה שליחותו
ואחר האש קול דממה דקה לבסם
ולתבל העולם:[ii]

the soul of the departed certainly benefits from the breath that rises when mentioning the power of these 100R ingredients, weakening the forces of grave judgment that increase upon him in those days, for the mercies of the Lord have not ceased.

One should not stubbornly object to this, for God forbid, this would be like "an arrow in Satan's 105R eye,"[A] as the interpreters of scriptural allusions have said regarding the verse "And now, may the power of the Lord be magnified" at night, because they advised saying "For a hand is on the throne of Yah" as its substitution. Similarly, regarding the Thirteen 110R Attributes [of Mercy], they said they should not be mentioned at the beginning of the night because of [the principle] "You shall not muzzle an ox while it treads," just as they also said regarding the blowing of the shofar at night that it has no relevance at 115R all, for it has already fulfilled its mission, and after the fire comes "a still, small voice"[1] to sweeten and

[A] Or: "And one should not be obstinate or raise difficulties about this, for Heaven forbid, it would be like "shooting an arrow into Satan's eye,"" — The alternate translation unpacks the idiom more fully and makes explicit the metaphorical action of 'shooting' which is implied in the original. This might be clearer for readers unfamiliar with this Talmudic expression.

[1] This alludes to 1 Kings 19:12, where Elijah encounters God not in wind, earthquake, or fire, but in a 'still, small voice.' The author uses this to metaphorically describe how after the shofar's loud blast has completed its spiritual work, a gentler process of sweetening judgment takes place.

[i] This refers to a kabbalistic concern about reciting the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy at night. The phrase 'You shall not muzzle an ox while it treads' (Deuteronomy 25:4) is applied metaphorically, suggesting that reciting these attributes at night might inappropriately restrain certain spiritual processes.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas, 294a — The author directly quotes the Zohar to establish the power of the ketoret (incense) ritual to eliminate plague and bind judgment with mercy. This reference serves as a primary authoritative source for the author's main argument about the importance of reciting the Pitum HaKetoret even in a house of mourning. | Cf. Yom Kippur Temple service — The opening paragraphs allude to the detailed Temple ritual for Yom Kippur described in Tractate Yoma, particularly the High Priest's preparation and offering of the incense in the Holy of Holies. This reference establishes the sacred precedent for the incense ritual that the author is advocating for regular practice. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The author references the Zohar section on Vayakhel to support his recommendation about when to recite the Pitum HaKetoret prayer. This establishes the mystical tradition for the proper timing of this ritual in the prayer service. | Cf. Book of Daniel, regarding Nebuchadnezzar — The allusion to Nebuchadnezzar and the stone 'not cut by hands' references Daniel 2:34 and Daniel 4:25-33. The author interprets these passages as symbolizing the defeat of evil forces through proper ritual, connecting biblical narrative to kabbalistic practice. | Cf. Maimonides on medicinal compounds — The reference to Maimonides' warning about medicinal compounds like theriac shows how the author integrates medical knowledge with mystical concepts, suggesting that spiritual remedies, like physical ones, must be applied properly to be effective rather than harmful. | Cf. Leviticus 16:12-13 — The text alludes to the biblical description of the High Priest's incense offering on Yom Kippur, using this as the foundation for understanding the cosmic significance of the incense ritual and its power to transform judgment into mercy. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:33-35 — The reference to "the cruel venom of serpents" and "hidden with Me, sealed in My treasuries" draws from Deuteronomy 32:33-35. The author interprets these verses kabbalistically to explain how negative forces are incorporated into divine service through the inclusion of the foul-smelling galbanum in the sacred incense.

season the world.

פרק ה׳

Chapter 5

עוד מצאתי כי הקטרת הוא לרצות מדת הדין ומטעם זה עוצר המגפה כי תתרוה צמאונה ולא תקטרג בסוד שעיר המשתלח לעזאזל.[i] ובשיר השירים על פסוק אלך לי אל הר המור אמר וכל מזיקים ומחבלים הוו ערקין מריח קטרת בוסמיא. וכיון שהוא לרצון מדה״ד ודאי שאין לחוש להתנגדות ח״ו. ולא לחנם תקנוהו מסדרי התפלות אחר קדיש תתקבל שמשם ואילך יש שני קדישין קדיש הראשון אומרים אותו לצנן הגהינם על כל מתי עולם בכלל וקדיש של עלינו לשבח נקרא קדיש יתום שאומר אותו הבן על אביו או אמו.[ii] הנה שבוונו לסדר קדיש לכל מתי עולם אחר אמירת סדר זה המבסם דיני גהינם בכחו הנאדרי ונוסף עליו כח הקדיש שלאחריו שמצנן אש גהינם שעתא

I have also found that the incense offering serves to appease the attribute of judgment,[1] and for this reason it stops plagues, as it quenches its thirst and prevents it from accusing,[A] similar to the scapegoat sent to Azazel.[2] And in the Song of Songs, regarding the verse "I will go to the mountain of myrrh," it states that all harmful spirits and destroyers flee from the scent of the aromatic incense.[3] Since it is designed to appease the attribute of judgment, there is certainly no need to worry about opposition, God forbid.[B] And it was not without reason that the arrangers of prayers established it after the Kaddish Titkabel, for from that point onward there are two Kaddish prayers: the first Kaddish is recited to cool Gehenna for all the dead of the world in general, and the Kaddish of Aleinu L'Shabeach is called the Orphan's Kaddish, which a son recites for his father or mother. Thus, they intended to arrange a Kaddish for all the dead of the world after the recitation of this order which sweetens the judgments of Gehenna with its majestic power.[C] Added to this is the power of the Kaddish that follows it, which cools the fire of

5R 10R 15R 20R

[A] Or: "because it satisfies its thirst and prevents it from prosecuting" — The alternate translation provides a more direct rendering of the Hebrew 'tiktareg' (to prosecute/accuse) and clarifies the causal relationship implied by 'ki' (because).

[B] Or: "certainly there is no concern about provoking resistance, God forbid" — The alternate translation captures more precisely the idea of 'hitnagdut' as resistance or opposition that might be provoked, rather than just general opposition.

[C] Or: "which perfumes/sweetens the judgments of Gehenna with its glorious power" — The term 'mevasem' comes from the root for spice/perfume, and while 'sweetens' captures the metaphorical meaning well, 'perfumes' preserves the connection to the incense (ketoret) that is the subject of the passage. 'Glorious' is another valid translation of 'ne'edari'.

[1] The Hebrew term 'לרצות מדת הדין' carries the connotation of appeasing or satisfying the divine attribute of judgment, as if it were a spiritual entity with desires that need to be fulfilled to prevent it from exercising its severity.

[2] This refers to the Yom Kippur ritual described in Leviticus 16, where one goat was sacrificed and another sent to Azazel in the wilderness. In kabbalistic interpretation, this ritual served to distract or 'bribe' negative spiritual forces.

[3] The author references a Zoharic interpretation of Song of Songs 4:6 that associates the 'mountain of myrrh' with the protective powers of Temple incense against negative spiritual forces.

[i] The author draws a fascinating parallel between the incense offering and the scapegoat ritual of Yom Kippur, suggesting both function to satisfy or distract negative spiritual forces and prevent them from bringing accusations against Israel.

[ii] This passage reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the Kaddish prayer's function to provide relief to souls in Gehenna (Jewish conception of purgatory). The author distinguishes between the first Kaddish after the Amidah that benefits all souls and the Mourner's Kaddish specifically recited for one's parents.

ופלגא כאשר נתבאר בזהר בכמה מקומות[i] ולמורי הגאון מפאנו זצ״ל יש לו דברים עתיקים על זה בפרפרת רבתי שתקן על סוד הקדיש[ii] כנודע לכל משים עינו עליה. ומטעם זה נראה לי כי טוב להרגיל החולה לאומרו בעת חליו וסגולתו לבטל מרעין בישין ומותא בישא. ועוד השתא החולה דינא רדיף בתריה וכבר אמרנו בשם הזהר דגברא כי האי אצטריך לאדכרא עובדא דקטרת ואני הנהגתי בני ביתי אחר קצת פסוקים האומרים במוצאי שבת תיכף אחר ההבדלה שאז מתחילים כחות הדין והחצונים להתפשט בעולם אחר ברכת מאורי האש כאשר כתבנו למעלה אחר הבדלת הקדש מן החול בד׳ מיני הבדלות נגד ד׳ מיני קליפות המתראים באגוז[iii] אנו קוראים אחר פסוקים הסכר סדר פטום הקטרת עם שיר של פגעים וגם שהיא בלילה אין לחוש על זה. וכן בלילי ראש השנה טוב לאומרו עם איזה פסוקים וסדרים אשר לנו השייכות לשתי לילות החם למתק שני הנהגות הדין המזדמנים לשלוט בשני ימים טובים של ראש השנה בסוד המלך הקדוש והמלך המשפט האחד בחינת הדין הקשה והאחד בחינת הדין הרפה בסוד שברים

Gehenna for an hour and a half, as explained in the Zohar in several places. And my teacher, the Gaon of Fano, of blessed memory,[1] has profound insights on this in his extensive commentary that he composed on the secret of the Kaddish, as is known to anyone who examines it. 25R

For this reason, it seems to me that it is good to accustom the sick person to recite it during his illness, as it has the special power to nullify evil diseases and malignant death. Furthermore, now that the sick person is pursued by judgment, we have already said in the name of the Zohar that such a person needs to recite the work of the incense offering. I have trained my household to recite, after some verses that are said at the conclusion of the Sabbath, immediately after Havdalah—when the forces of judgment and the external forces begin to spread throughout the world after the blessing over the fire, as we wrote above—after the separation of the holy from the profane with the four types of separations corresponding to the four types of shells that appear in a nut,[2] we read after these verses the order of the Preparation of the Incense together with the Song of Afflictions [Psalm 91], and even though it is nighttime, there is no need for concern about this. 30R 35R 40R 45R

Similarly, on the nights of Rosh Hashanah, it is good to recite it with certain verses and orders that we have that relate to those two nights, to sweeten the two modes of judgment that are poised to rule on the two festival days of Rosh Hashanah—the secret of "the Holy King" and "the King of Judgment"—one being the aspect of severe judgment and the other the aspect of lenient judgment,[3] in the secret of the Shevarim and Teruah [shofar sounds], and the se- 50R 55R

[1] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (c.1548-1620), an important Italian kabbalist who was influenced by both the teachings of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria. The author identifies him as his teacher, establishing his intellectual lineage.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the four kelipot (shells/husks), which are layers of spiritual impurity surrounding holiness, often compared to the layers of a nut surrounding the edible part.

[3] The author is referring to kabbalistic interpretations of the two days of Rosh Hashanah, each associated with different aspects of divine judgment (din) that correspond to different shofar sounds.

[i] The specified time period that Kaddish cools Gehenna (an hour and a half) reflects the precise timekeeping that characterizes kabbalistic approaches to prayer efficacy.

[ii] The author identifies Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (c.1548-1620) as his teacher, confirming his intellectual lineage within Italian Kabbalah. The reference to 'ancient matters' (דברים עתיקים) likely refers to kabbalistic teachings tracing back to earlier sources.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of four layers of negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that are compared to the layers of a nut, with each requiring a different type of separation/havdalah to overcome. This metaphor appears in early kabbalistic works like the Bahir.

ותרועה וסוד בית דין עליון
ובית דין תחתון וכן בליל שלפני
מילת התינוק מה טוב לאמרו
60 לפני כסא אליהו עם שירי דוד
כי המכין לכסא הלז בקדושה
ובטהרה ומזמינו בפיו יזכה
להארת פניו ואי אי אליהו לא יחזי
מזליה שברקיע יחזי[i] כאשר
65 הודענו למעלה מהו המזל
הזה. לא כאלו שמתלוצצים
הלילה ההוא אנשים עם נשים
שהוא כאש בנעורת[ii] וגברים עם
טף. פוקו חזו מה היו עושים
70 דורות הראשונים דלא הוו פסקי
פומייהו מגרסא כל אותה הלילה
בסודות המילה כנראה בספר
הזהר סוף פרשת לך לך. ואם
כן קריאת פטום הקטרת עם
75 שירי דוד לפניו ולאחריו יועיל
ודאי לתנוק המוכן להראות
קרבן שי ומנחה לפני המלך ה׳
צבאות ביום שלאחריו בתוספת
נפש רוח ונשמה בכח אור כי
80 יהל עליו[iii] כל היום ההוא
וכל העם ההולכים לברית
מילה הם כמקבלים פני שכינה
הבאה להופיעה מאורה על כל
המטפלים במצוה ההיא[iv] ויש
85 להם תוספת נשמה גם כן לכן

cret of the upper court and the lower court. And likewise, on the night before a child's circumcision, how good it is to recite it before Elijah's chair along with David's songs, for one who prepares this chair in 60R holiness and purity and summons it with his mouth will merit the illumination of his countenance, and if he himself does not see it, his celestial guardian angel will see it,[A] as we have explained above what this celestial influence is. 65R

Not like those who mock on that night—men with women, which is like fire in flax,[1] and men with children. Go and see what the earlier generations used to do, whose mouths did not cease from study the entire night, [delving into] the secrets of circumcision, 70R as can be seen in the Book of the Zohar at the end of Parashat Lech Lecha. And if so, the recitation of the Preparation of the Incense with David's songs before and after it will certainly benefit the child who is prepared to be presented as an offering and gift be- 75R fore the King, the LORD of Hosts, on the following day, with an additional soul, spirit, and higher soul through the power of light that will shine upon him throughout that day. And all the people who go to a circumcision covenant are like those who receive the 80R
Divine Presence that comes to shine its light upon all who are involved in that commandment, and they too have an additional soul.[2] Therefore, they said that their festival day is like a festival day when there is an additional soul. And therefore, all the people 85R

[A] Or: "and if he himself does not see it, his mazal in the firmament will see it" — Keeping the kabbalistic term 'mazal' untranslated better preserves the technical meaning of this concept, which refers to a person's spiritual root or celestial counterpart, not precisely a 'guardian angel' in the conventional sense.

[1] The author criticizes social mixing between men and women during the night before a circumcision as spiritually inappropriate. This metaphor of 'fire in flax' (אש בנעורת) is a traditional rabbinic expression for a dangerous situation that will inevitably lead to problems.

[2] The concept of 'neshamah yeteirah' (additional soul) is traditionally associated with Sabbath and festivals. The author extends this concept to participants in a circumcision ceremony, elevating this ritual to a status comparable to major Jewish holidays.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'mazal' as a celestial counterpart or higher spiritual root of each person that may perceive spiritual realities even when the person themselves cannot.

[ii] The comparison of mixing between men and women to 'fire in flax' is a common rabbinic expression warning against potentially dangerous situations that could lead to improper behavior. Here the author criticizes inappropriate socializing during the night before a circumcision.

[iii] The author describes the spiritual benefit to the child being circumcised as receiving additional levels of soul—nefesh, ruach, and neshamah—through the light that shines upon him. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that spiritual actions open channels for higher levels of soul to enter a person.

[iv] This reflects the mystical concept that the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) literally manifests at a circumcision ceremony, bestowing spiritual light on all participants.

אמרו שיום טוב שלהם הוא כמו שבים טוב יש נשמה יתירה.[i] ולכן חייבים כל העם לעמוד בעמידה בשעת המילה. ואסמכוהו על פסוק ויעמוד העם בברית. ומדרגות הנשמות הבאות לאדם כפי מעשיו מתבאר בזהר פרשת משפטים דף צ״ד באר היטב יעויין שם. וכן התלבשות הנשמה ברוח שבגן עדן עליון וברוח אחר שבגן עדן תחתון ואיך שוכנת בכל שני רוחות אלו בעולם הזה ומוצא הנשמה והרוח שהוא מבינה ויסוד הכל מתבאר שם דף צ״ו וצ״ז:[ii] are obligated to stand during the circumcision, and they based this on the verse "And the people stood at the covenant."

The levels of souls that come to a person according to his deeds are explained well in the Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim, page 94, as can be examined there. And likewise, the enclothing of the soul in the spirit that is in the upper Garden of Eden and in another spirit that is in the lower Garden of Eden,[1] and how it dwells in both of these spirits in this world, and the origin of the soul and spirit, which is from Binah,[2] and the foundation of everything, is explained there on pages 96 and 97.

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

סדר אמירת פטום הקטרת הנזכר בכל מקום ובכל זמן ראוי לומר אותו כלל ואח״כ פרט בתחלה אומר הפסוקים כאשר

The order for reciting the Preparation of the Incense mentioned in every place and time is that one should first recite it in general and then in detail. First, one should recite the biblical verses as they are written

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic understanding of how the soul manifests differently in various spiritual realms. The upper and lower Gardens of Eden (Gan Eden) are distinct spiritual domains where different components of the soul reside.

[2] In kabbalistic cosmology, Binah (Understanding) is the third of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) and is understood as the source from which souls originate. This places the soul's origin at a very high level in the divine structure.

[i] The author extends the concept of neshamah yeteirah (additional soul) beyond Sabbath and festivals to include participation in a circumcision ceremony, elevating this ritual to a status comparable to major Jewish holidays.

[ii] Cf. Zohar on Song of Songs, 'I will go to the mountain of myrrh' — The reference to Song of Songs supports the author's claim about the protective power of incense against harmful spiritual forces. The Zohar interprets 'mountain of myrrh' as an allusion to the Temple incense. | Cf. Concept of the scapegoat to Azazel — The author compares the incense's power to appease judgment to the scapegoat ritual, suggesting both serve as forms of spiritual 'distraction' that prevent divine accusation against Israel. | Cf. The Zohar's teaching on Kaddish cooling Gehenna — The author is building on established Zoharic teachings about the Kaddish prayer's power to provide relief to souls in Gehenna to further argue for the efficacy of the Ketoret (incense offering) recitation. | Cf. Elijah's chair at circumcision — The author extends the spiritual power of the Ketoret recitation to the circumcision ritual, suggesting that proper preparation of Elijah's chair with appropriate prayers creates a spiritually potent environment that can be perceived by celestial forces even if not by humans. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Lech Lecha on circumcision — The author cites this section of the Zohar to contrast contemporary practices at circumcision ceremonies with the ideal practice of studying the mystical secrets of circumcision throughout the night before the ceremony. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim on soul levels — The author references this Zohar passage to support his discussion of how souls are granted to individuals based on their spiritual level and deeds, particularly in the context of additional souls received during sacred occasions. | Cf. Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano on Kaddish — The author identifies Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano as his teacher and refers to his writings on the mystical dimensions of the Kaddish prayer, suggesting this is an important source for understanding the power of Kaddish to alleviate suffering in Gehenna.

הם כתובים בתורה וצריך לומר אותם בנגונם וכטעמם ואח״כ מפרט ענין פטימתו במבואר בגמ׳ בריתות פרק קמא. וצריך שיאמר כל ענייניו כלם ולא יחסר אפי׳ אחד מהם והזהיר בו אינו בא לידי עניות כדאמרי׳ חדשים לקטרת וכו׳[i] ונציג לפנינו נסחו כאשר בא מרבני וגאוני מנטובה זצ״ל קדושים אשר בארץ עם תוספת מעט. ואל נא יאשימוני חכמים המורגלים לדבר צחות ובלשון קצרה[ii] כי למה לי לאסוף מן המפוזר בספר הזהר בענין זה כי באמת היה די למורה מקום כאשר עשיתי בהרבה דרושים כאשר עיני הקורא תחזינה. אך האלהים הוא יודע כי כוונתי להציע הדברים כהוייתן לעין כל קורא בזה אולי אזכה ואסק שע״פ דברי הזהר המתפרטים לפני איזה יחידים או רבים אולי ירגילו עצמם בקריאתו פטום הקטרת הזה פעמים בכל יום ושמעתי כי במקומות הרבה מקהילות

in the Torah, and one must recite them with their proper melody and cantillation.[A] Afterward, one elaborates on the matter of its preparation as explained in the Talmud, Tractate Keritot, first chapter. One must recite all its details completely, without omitting even one of them. One who is careful with this will not come to poverty,[B] as we say, "Those appointed to prepare new incense..."[1] etc. 5R 10R

I will present before you its text as it came from the rabbis and sages of Mantua, of blessed memory,[2] holy ones who were in the land, with some small additions. Let not the wise who are accustomed to speaking elegantly and concisely blame me[3] for why I gather from scattered places in the Zohar on this matter, for indeed it would have been sufficient to merely indicate the source as I have done in many discourses, as the reader's eyes will see. But God knows that my intention is to present the matters as they are before the eyes of every reader of this, so that perhaps I will merit and succeed that, based on the words of the Zohar that are detailed before some individuals or many, perhaps they will accustom themselves to reading this Preparation of the Incense twice every day. 15R 20R 25R

I have heard that in many places among the Ashkenazic communities—may God protect them— 30R

[A] Or: "and one needs to recite them with their proper musical notation and accents" — The alternate translation uses more technical terms to describe the musical aspects of Torah reading, which might be clearer to readers familiar with cantillation systems but potentially less accessible to general readers.

[B] Or: "One who is meticulous about this will never be impoverished" — This alternate translation emphasizes the absolute nature of the protection against poverty that proper recitation of the incense prayer is believed to provide, which may more accurately reflect the strength of the belief in this tradition.

[1] This is a reference to the Talmudic teaching that the Temple incense service was performed by priests who had never before prepared it, with the service rotating among different priests. The full quote continues to explain that this was because the incense service was believed to bring wealth to those who performed it.

[2] Mantua was an important center of Jewish learning in Renaissance Italy, with a respected rabbinical academy. The author is indicating that his version of the Pitum HaKetoret prayer comes from authoritative sources from this prestigious community.

[3] This is a rhetorical device common in rabbinic literature where the author preemptively addresses potential criticism of his writing style. In this case, the author acknowledges that his comprehensive compilation might seem excessive to some scholarly readers who prefer concision.

[i] This is a reference to a Talmudic teaching (Yoma 26a) about how the preparation of the Temple incense was rotated among different priestly families, specifically that priests who had never before prepared the incense were given preference, as this service was believed to bring wealth to those who performed it.

[ii] The author is making a humble apology to scholarly readers who might prefer a more concise presentation. This reflects the common rabbinic literary convention of humility, while also indicating that the author is aware his detailed compilation might seem excessive to some readers.

אשכנז ישמרם ה׳ שהיה להם מנהג שלא לאומרו רק בשבת מן הטעם שכתב מהר״י אבוה״ב בארחות חיים[i] הגם שנדחו דבריו מאחרונים ובפרט ממהר״י קאר״ו ז״ל כנראה באו״ח סי׳ קל״ג מ״מ על פי דברי חכמים קצת מאותם הקהילות הנהיגו עצמם לאומרו שחרית וערבית. והרב המגיה בסי׳ קל״ב[ii] מאד זירז על זה הגם כי מדרכו לקיים המנהגים. וכן ראוי לעשות אך לא תהיה קריאתו עראי כמנהגנו רק בקבע ובכוונה כי בזה יוסר משפטינו ויפלו אויבינו[iii] ואז נצליח את דרכינו ואז נשכיל ורב טוב לבית ישראל: [iv]

they had the custom not to recite it except on the Sabbath,[1] for the reason that Rabbi Joseph Abudarham wrote in Orchot Chaim, even though his words were rejected by later authorities, particularly by Rabbi Joseph Karo of blessed memory, as appears in Orach Chaim, section 133. Nevertheless, based on the words of some sages from those communities, they instituted the practice of reciting it morning and evening. The Rav who annotated in section 132 strongly encouraged this, even though it is his way to uphold customs. And so it is fitting to do, but its recitation should not be casual as is our custom, but rather with regularity and intention,[A] for through this our judgment will be removed and our enemies will fall,[2] and then we will make our way successful, and then we will gain insight, and much good will come to the house of Israel.

זה סדר המסודר מפי גאוני ורבני מנטובה[v] קדושים אשר

This is the order arranged by the sages and rabbis of Mantua,[3] holy ones who are in the land, may God

[A] Or: "with fixed consistency and proper kavvanah (mystical intention)" — The alternate translation preserves the technical term 'kavvanah' which has specific meaning in Jewish mysticism, referring to the focused spiritual intention that should accompany ritual acts.

[1] The author is addressing a liturgical controversy regarding how frequently the Pitum HaKetoret should be recited. While some Ashkenazic communities limited its recitation to Sabbaths only, the author advocates for twice-daily recitation, citing authorities like Rabbi Joseph Karo to support this practice.

[2] The author attributes protective powers to the proper recitation of the incense prayer, suggesting it can avert divine judgment and defeat enemies. This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the Temple incense had special power to ward off plagues and harmful spiritual forces.

[3] The author is attributing this prayer sequence to the rabbinic authorities of Mantua rather than claiming it as his own composition, showing respect for their liturgical tradition.

[i] The author is referring to Rabbi Joseph Abudarham (not to be confused with David Abudarham) and his work. 'Orchot Chaim' was a halakhic compendium, but there is some confusion in the attribution since the more famous work by this name was by Rabbi Aaron of Lunel.

[ii] This likely refers to Rabbi Moses Isserles (the Rema), who wrote glosses on the Shulchan Aruch, adding Ashkenazic customs to Rabbi Joseph Karo's predominantly Sephardic rulings.

[iii] The author attributes protective powers to the proper recitation of the incense prayer, suggesting it can avert divine judgment and defeat enemies. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the incense offering had special power to neutralize negative forces.

[iv] Cf. Tractate Keritot — The author refers to the Talmudic source that details the preparation of the Temple incense, establishing that this prayer text is based on an authoritative religious source. | Cf. Zohar — The author mentions gathering material from the Zohar about the incense offering, indicating that this prayer has mystical significance beyond its literal meaning, with the Zohar providing the kabbalistic interpretations. | Cf. Orach Chaim — The author cites Rabbi Joseph Karo's legal code to establish that the recitation of the incense passage should be a daily practice, not limited to Sabbaths as some communities practiced. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, earlier sections — The author's reference to "as I have done in many discourses" indicates that this section follows the same organizational pattern as previous sections of Ma'avar Yabok, providing both practical instructions and deeper mystical interpretations.

[v] Mantua was an important center of Jewish learning in northern Italy during the 16th-17th centuries, known for its rabbinic scholarship and kabbalistic traditions. The author shows deference to the rabbinic authorities of this community.

50 [ii] [i]באריך יח״ב. preserve them. 50R

מזמור יושב בסתר עליון
סימן צ״א[iii] תמצא לעיל סדר
א׳:[iv] יענך ה׳ ביום צרה סדר
ב׳:[v] מזמור לדוד להזכיר
55 סימן ל״ח סדר ד׳[vi] ואחר כך
יאמר:[vii]

Psalm “He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High”[1] (number 91) can be found above in Order 1; “May the LORD answer you in the day of trouble”[2] in Order 2; “A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance”[3] (number 38) in Order 4; and after that he shall recite:[4] 55R

וַיְמַהֵר אַבְרָהָם הָאֹהֱלָה אֶל שָׂרָה
וַיֹּאמֶר מַהֲרִי שְׁלֹשׁ סְאִים קֶמַח
סלֶת[viii] לוּשִׁי וַעֲשִׂי עֻגוֹת: (ג׳ 60 פעמים[ix]) וַיֹּאמֶר אֲלֵהֶם יִשְׂרָאֵל
אֲבִיהֶם אִם כֵּן אֵפוֹא זֹאת עֲשׂוּ קְחוּ
מִזִּמְרַת הָאָרֶץ בִּכְלֵיכֶם וְהוֹרִידוּ
לָאִישׁ מִנְחָה מְעַט צֳרִי וּמְעַט דְּבַשׁ

“And Abraham hastened to the tent to Sarah, and said: ‘Make haste, prepare three measures of fine meal, knead it, and make cakes.’” (three times[5]) “And Israel their father said to them: ‘If it must be so, then do this: take of the choice fruits of the land in your vessels, and carry down to the man a present, a little balm, and a little honey, gum, ladanum, pis- 60R

[1]This is the opening line of Psalm 91, which is identified by number (91) in the original text.
[2]This is the opening line of Psalm 20, which is not identified by number in the original text.
[3]This is the opening line of Psalm 38, which is identified by number (38) in the original text.
[4]This instruction indicates that what follows in the text (not included in this segment) should be recited after the previously mentioned psalms.
[5]This parenthetical instruction indicates that the preceding verse should be recited three times as part of the prayer ritual, a common practice in Jewish liturgy to emphasize important passages.

[i]An acronym likely standing for ‘ישמרם חונן בריותיו’ (May He who is gracious to His creatures preserve them) or a similar blessing formula.
[ii]Cf. Ma’avar Yabok, Section 4 (Eter Anan HaKetoret) — This line introduces a prayer sequence for the Ketoret (incense) ritual that was arranged by the rabbinical authorities of Mantua, Italy. The author of Ma’avar Yabok is showing deference to these authorities by explicitly attributing this prayer order to them rather than claiming it as his own composition.
[iii]This refers to Psalm 91, known in rabbinic tradition as “Song of Afflictions” (Shir Shel Pegaim), which was considered to have special protective properties against harmful spiritual forces.
[iv]Ma’avar Yabok contains eight distinct liturgical sequences (sedarim) for the sick and dying. This is referring to the first such sequence.
[v]This refers to the second liturgical sequence in Ma’avar Yabok, which includes Psalm 20, with its themes of divine support in times of trouble.
[vi]This refers to the fourth liturgical sequence in Ma’avar Yabok, which includes Psalm 38, a penitential psalm appropriate for the sick.
[vii]Cf. Psalm 91 — This psalm appears in multiple liturgical sequences in Ma’avar Yabok, particularly for protection of the sick and dying. It’s considered especially effective against harmful spiritual entities that might interfere with the soul’s peaceful transition. | Cf. Psalm 20 — This psalm, with its themes of divine support in times of trouble and confidence in divine salvation, is particularly appropriate for those experiencing serious illness. | Cf. Psalm 38 — This psalm appears in the fourth liturgical sequence, likely due to its themes of physical suffering, confession of sin, and plea for divine mercy, making it particularly relevant for the sick who might be examining their lives and seeking spiritual healing alongside physical recovery. | Cf. Seder (liturgical sequence) — This passage is referencing the organizational structure of Ma’avar Yabok’s prayer sequences, directing the reader to specific psalms found in different ‘Orders’ (Sedarim). This shows how the book functioned as a practical manual with clear cross-references to help users navigate between sections.
[viii]This phrase from Genesis 18:6 describes Abraham’s hospitality to the three divine visitors. The fine flour (solet) was considered the best quality, suitable for important guests and offerings.
[ix]The instruction to recite this verse three times is part of the ritual formula of the prayer, possibly reflecting the three visitors in the original biblical story or creating a threefold invocation of Abraham’s spiritual merit.

נְכֹאת וָלֹט בָּטְנִים וּשְׁקֵדִים:[i][ii] tachio nuts, and almonds.'[1]"

וצריך לכוין בר״ת[iii] של "צרי "דבש "נכאת "לוט "בטנים "ושקדים:[iv] ואח״כ אומר[v] One should focus on the initial letters[2] of "tzori" (balm), "devash" (honey), "nechot" (gum), "lot" (ladanum), "botnim" (pistachios), and "ushkedim" (almonds). And afterwards one recites:[3] 65R

רִבּוֹנוֹ שֶׁל עוֹלָם בִּזְמַן שֶׁבֵּית הַמִּקְדָּשׁ קַיָּם הָיוּ אֲבוֹתֵינוּ וְכֹהֲנֵינוּ מַקְרִיבִים לְפָנֶיךָ אֶת קְטֹרֶת Master of the Universe,[4] when the Temple stood, our ancestors and our priests would offer before You the incense of spices, and atonement was made for them. 70R

[1] These verses serve as part of the prayer for the incense offering (Ketoret). The practice of reciting biblical verses about offerings and gifts helps establish a framework for prayer as a substitute for the Temple offerings. This substitution became particularly important after the destruction of the Temple when physical offerings could no longer be brought.

[2] The Hebrew instruction indicates a kabbalistic meditation practice where one concentrates on the first letters of these six items. While not explicitly stated in this segment, these letters likely form a meaningful acronym or divine name that would be contemplated during the incense offering prayer ritual.

[3] This phrase introduces the prayer that follows, though the actual prayer text is not included in this segment. The colon indicates that the prayer text would begin immediately after this instruction.

[4] This opening address (Ribbono shel Olam) is a common form of direct appeal to God in Jewish prayer, particularly in personal supplications. It emphasizes the universal sovereignty of God beyond the confines of Jewish peoplehood.

[i] The items listed in Genesis 43:11 have mystical significance in this context. Kabbalistic sources note that the first letters of "צָרִי וּמְעַט דְּבַשׁ נְכֹאת וָלֹט בָּטְנִים וּשְׁקֵדִים" form an acronym that is considered to have protective powers.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 18:6 — This verse from Genesis about Abraham's hospitality is cited here as part of a ritual prayer text in the incense offering section. The hasty preparation of food for divine guests is symbolically connected to the preparation of offerings to God, particularly the Temple incense. This verse emphasizes Abraham's eagerness to serve, which would resonate with the prayer's theme of offering service to God. | Cf. Genesis 43:11 — This verse about Jacob sending choice products of the land as gifts parallels the offering of incense ingredients. Just as Jacob's sons carried these items to appease a powerful figure (unknowingly their brother Joseph), the worshipper symbolically presents choice offerings to God. The specific items mentioned (balm, honey, etc.) may also evoke the aromatic components of the incense offering, creating a sensory parallel to the ketoret ritual.

[iii] Abbreviation for "rashei teivot" meaning "initial letters" or "acronym," referring to the practice of deriving mystical significance from the first letters of words.

[iv] This instruction refers to a kabbalistic practice of meditation on the initial letters of these six items mentioned in Genesis 43:11, where Jacob instructs his sons to take these products as gifts to the ruler of Egypt (Joseph). The initial letters form an acrostic that was considered to have mystical protective properties. Such letter-based meditations were common in kabbalistic prayer practices, especially in rituals intended to provide spiritual protection.

[v] Cf. Genesis 43:11 — The use of these specific items in this ritual prayer context demonstrates how Ma'avar Yabok draws connections between biblical narratives and prayer practices. The items Jacob sent to preserve life in Egypt are here repurposed in a ritual context related to the incense offering, which itself was associated with protection from death and plague. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Eter Anan HaKetoret — The instruction to meditate on these initial letters fits within the broader theme of this section: creating spiritual connections through prayer that parallel the effects of the Temple incense offering. Letter-based meditations were common in kabbalistic practice as a means of connecting the physical act of prayer with spiritual realities.

הַסַּמִּים[i] וּמִתְכַּפֵּר עָלֵינוּ וְעַכְשָׁיו
בַּעֲוֹנוֹתֵינוּ חָרַב בֵּית הַמִּקְדָּשׁ
וּבָמְלָה הָעֲבוֹדָה וְאֵין לָנוּ לֹא
מִזְבֵּחַ וְלֹא קָרְבָּן וְלֹא קְטֹרֶת
הַסַּמִּים וְלֹא כֹהֵן גָּדוֹל שֶׁיְּכַפֵּר
בַּעֲדֵנוּ אֶלָּא שִׂיחַ שִׂפְתוֹתֵינוּ
כְּמוֹ שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר וּנְשַׁלְּמָה פָרִים
שִׂפְתֵינוּ[ii] לָכֵן אָנוּ מַזְכִּירִים
לְפָנֶיךָ אֶת קְרֻבַּן קְטֹרֶת הַסַּמִּים
אֲשֶׁר צִוִּיתָ אֶת אֲבוֹתֵינוּ בַּמִּדְבָּר
כְּמוֹ שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר וַיֹּאמֶר יְיָ אֶל מֹשֶׁה
קַח לְךָ סַמִּים נָטָף וּשְׁחֵלֶת
וְחֶלְבְּנָה[iii] סַמִּים וּלְבֹנָה זַכָּה בַּד
בְּבַד יִהְיֶה:[iv] וְעָשִׂיתָ אֹתָהּ קְטֹרֶת
רֹקַח מַעֲשֵׂה רוֹקֵחַ מְמֻלָּח טָהוֹר
קֹדֶשׁ: וְשָׁחַקְתָּ מִמֶּנָּה הָדֵק וְנָתַתָּה
מִמֶּנָּה לִפְנֵי הָעֵדֻת בְּאֹהֶל מוֹעֵד
אֲשֶׁר אִוָּעֵד לְךָ שָׁמָּה קֹדֶשׁ קָדָשִׁים
תִּהְיֶה לָכֶם: וְהַקְּטֹרֶת אֲשֶׁר תַּעֲשֶׂה
בְּמַתְכֻּנְתָּהּ לֹא תַעֲשׂוּ לָכֶם קֹדֶשׁ
תִּהְיֶה לְךָ לַיְיָ: וְהִקְטִיר עָלָיו
אַהֲרֹן קְטֹרֶת סַמִּים בַּבֹּקֶר בַּבֹּקֶר
בְּהֵיטִיבוֹ אֶת הַנֵּרֹת יַקְטִירֶנָּה:
וּבְהַעֲלֹת אַהֲרֹן אֶת הַנֵּרֹת בֵּין

But now, because of our sins,[1] the Temple is destroyed, the service has ceased, and we have neither altar, nor offering, nor incense of spices, nor High Priest to make atonement for us—only the meditation of our lips,[2] as it is said: "And let us offer the words of our lips instead of calves." Therefore, we recall before You the offering of the incense of spices which You commanded our ancestors in the wilderness, as it is said: "And the Lord said to Moses: Take for yourself spices—stacte, onycha, and galbanum[3]—spices and pure frankincense; they shall be of equal weight. And you shall make it into incense, a compound according to the art of the perfumer, well-blended, pure, and holy. And you shall beat some of it very fine, and put some of it before the Testimony in the Tent of Meeting where I will meet with you; it shall be most holy to you. And the incense which you shall make according to its composition, you shall not make for yourselves; it shall be holy to you for the Lord. And Aaron shall burn on it incense of spices; each morning when he tends the lamps he shall burn it. And when Aaron lights the lamps at twilight, he shall burn it, a perpetual incense before the Lord throughout your generations."[4]

[1]This phrase reflects the traditional Jewish theological understanding that the destruction of the Temple and the consequent exile were divine punishments for Israel's sins, particularly baseless hatred among Jews. This concept is fundamental to Jewish penitential prayers.

[2]The Hebrew term 'siach siftoteinu' (meditation/utterance of our lips) represents the transformation of physical ritual into verbal prayer after the destruction of the Temple. This concept is central to rabbinic Judaism's adaptation to the post-Temple reality.

[3]These are the first three of the eleven ingredients of the Temple incense. The exact botanical identities of these ancient substances remain somewhat uncertain, though various traditions exist regarding their identification. The inclusion of galbanum, with its foul odor, alongside pleasant aromatics is often interpreted symbolically as teaching the importance of including all types of people in the community.

[4]The designation of the incense as 'perpetual' (tamid) and 'throughout your generations' emphasizes its eternal nature, which is why its recitation remains spiritually significant even after the physical practice has ceased. This concept supports the book's emphasis on prayer as a genuine substitute for Temple offerings.

[i]In Jewish mystical tradition, particularly emphasized in Ma'avar Yabok, the incense offering (ketoret) was considered the most spiritually powerful of all Temple rituals. It was believed to have protective properties against plague and negative spiritual forces, and to create unifications in the higher spiritual realms.

[ii]This quote from Hosea 14:3 is a key biblical source for the rabbinic concept that prayer serves as a substitute for Temple sacrifices. The verse literally means "and let us offer the words of our lips instead of calves," drawing a direct parallel between verbal expression and animal sacrifice.

[iii]Galbanum (chelbena) had a foul odor, yet was a required component of the Temple incense. The Talmud (Keritot 6b) derives from this that communal prayer should include even sinners among Israel. In Kabbalistic thought, as discussed elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok, the inclusion of this negative element symbolizes the integration and elevation of impurity within the sacred.

[iv]This phrase literally means "measure for measure it shall be" or "equal portions," but carries deeper mystical significance in Kabbalistic texts. It suggests the perfect balance of divine attributes that the incense was intended to create or restore.

95 הָעֲרֻבִים יַקְטִירֶנָּה קְטֹרֶת תָּמִיד
לִפְנֵי יְיָ לְדֹרֹתֵיכֶם: [i]

ושם כתוב לומר כל פסוק ג׳ פעמים[ii] אך לעניות דעתי[iii] נראה כי מי שאינו רוצה לאומרם רק פעם אחת אם יקראם בטעמיהם ונגוניהם[iv] יקובל ג״כ ברצון: ואח״כ יאמר פטום הקטורת[v] ככתוב שם ובסדורים שלנו עד מפני הכבוד[vi] ואח״כ יוסיף עליו: [vii]

And there it is written to recite each verse three times, but in my humble opinion, it seems that one who does not wish to recite them more than once, if he reads them with their proper cantillation and melodies, it will also be accepted favorably.[1] And afterward, he should recite the Pitum HaKetoret (Preparation of the Incense) as written there and in our prayer books[2] until "for the sake of honor," and afterward he should add to it:[3]

100R

תַּנְיָא רַבִּי נָתָן אוֹמֵר כְּשֶׁהוּא שׁוֹחֵק

It was taught: Rabbi Nathan says: When grinding

105R

[1]The Hebrew phrase "יקובל ג״כ ברצון" implies divine acceptance of the prayer. There is a subtle theological point being made here about the quality of the recitation being more important than mere repetition.

[2]The Hebrew "סדורים שלנו" (our prayer books) suggests that the author is referring to the specific prayer books used in his community or tradition, which may have contained a particular version of the Pitum HaKetoret text.

[3]The text ends with a colon, indicating that what follows in the original would be additional text to be recited after the standard Pitum HaKetoret prayer. This instruction is part of the author's guidance for proper prayer practice.

[i]Cf. Hosea 14:3 — This verse is quoted to establish the principle that in the absence of Temple sacrifices, prayer (the words of our lips) serves as a substitute for physical offerings. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this supports the theological framework that proper recitation of sacred texts can create the same spiritual effects as Temple rituals. | Cf. Exodus 30:34-38 — This biblical passage provides the divine instructions for the preparation of the Temple incense. The extensive quotation of these verses serves both to preserve their memory and to invoke their ritual power through recitation, in keeping with the book's principle that the words themselves contain spiritual efficacy. | Cf. Berakhot 26b — The prayer implicitly draws on the rabbinic concept that prayers were established as a direct replacement for Temple sacrifices. This concept is widely discussed in the Talmud and informs this entire section of Ma'avar Yabok, which focuses on prayer as substitute for Temple offerings.

[ii]The abbreviation "פעמים ג׳" means "three times" and refers to the practice of repeating each biblical verse three times when reciting the Ketoret (incense) prayer.

[iii]This phrase means "according to my humble opinion" and is a common rabbinic expression of modesty when offering an interpretation or ruling.

[iv]This refers to reading the biblical verses with their proper cantillation marks (te'amim) and traditional melodic patterns, suggesting that the proper musical rendition adds spiritual significance to the recitation.

[v]Pitum HaKetoret (Preparation of the Incense) is a prayer text recounting the preparation of the sacred incense used in the ancient Temple in Jerusalem. It is considered to have special protective powers and is recited daily in traditional Jewish liturgy.

[vi]"For the sake of honor" likely refers to a specific ending point in the prayer text that was commonly known to readers of this work. The phrase might come from a section in the Pitum HaKetoret text discussing why certain incense ingredients were included.

[vii]Cf. Earlier in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly in the sections discussing the protective power of the Ketoret — This reference connects to the author's earlier teachings about the Ketoret's importance, showing consistency in his view that this prayer has special significance but allowing some flexibility in its recitation methods. | Cf. Traditional Jewish liturgical practice regarding the Pitum HaKetoret — The author is acknowledging traditional practice while offering a more lenient approach, suggesting that proper intention and melody can compensate for lack of repetition, which reflects his practical approach to prayer throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

אוֹמֵר הָדֵק הֵיטֵב הֵיטֵב הָדֵק מִפְּנֵי
שֶׁהַקּוֹל יָפֶה לַבְּשָׂמִים.[i] פִּטְמָהּ
לַחֲצָאִין כְּשֵׁרָה לִשְׁלִישׁ וְלִרְבִיעַ
לֹא שָׁמַעְנוּ: אָמַר רַבִּי יְהוּדָה
זֶה הַכְּלָל אִם כְּמִדָּתָהּ כְּשֵׁרָה
לַחֲצָאִין וְאִם חִסֵּר אַחַת מִכָּל
סַמָּנֶיהָ חַיָּב מִיתָה:[ii] תָּנְיָא בַּר
קַפָּרָא אוֹמֵר אַחַת לְשִׁשִּׁים אוֹ
לְשִׁבְעִים שָׁנָה הָיְתָה בָּאָה שֶׁל
שִׁירַיִם לַחֲצָאִין:[iii] וְעוֹד תָּנֵי בַּר
קַפָּרָא אִלּוּ הָיָה נוֹתֵן בָּהּ קוֹרְטוֹב
שֶׁל דְּבַשׁ אֵין אָדָם יָכוֹל לַעֲמֹד
מִפְּנֵי רֵיחָהּ[iv] וְלָמָּה אֵין מְעָרְבִין
בָּהּ דְּבַשׁ מִפְּנֵי שֶׁהַתּוֹרָה אָמְרָה כִּי
כָל־שְׂאֹר וְכָל־דְּבַשׁ לֹא־תַקְטִירוּ
מִמֶּנּוּ אִשֶּׁה לַיהוָה:[v]

[the incense], one says[1] "Grind it well, well grind it," because the voice is beneficial for the spices. If one prepared half the required amount, it is valid; but regarding one-third or one-quarter, we have not heard [a ruling]. Rabbi Judah said: This is the general principle—if prepared according to its proper measure, half the amount is valid,[2] but if one omitted any of its ingredients, one is liable to death. Bar Kappara taught: Once in sixty or seventy years, the accumulated leftovers would amount to half[3] [the annual quantity]. Bar Kappara further taught: If one were to add even a tiny amount of honey to it, no person could withstand its fragrance.[4] And why is honey not mixed with it? Because the Torah stated: "For you shall not burn any leaven or any honey as an offering by fire to the LORD."

רִבּוֹנוֹ שֶׁל עוֹלָם בִּזְמַן שֶׁבֵּית
הַמִּקְדָּשׁ קַיָּם הָיָה כֹּהֵן גָּדוֹל
מַקְטִיר לְפָנֶיךָ קְרְבַּן קְטֹרֶת
הַסַּמִּים וּמְכַפֵּר עַל עַמְּךָ

Master of the Universe, in the time when the Temple stood, the High Priest would offer before You the sacrifice of the aromatic incense and atone for Your people Israel. And now, because of our sins, the Tem-

[1] The Temple practice described here involved vocalizing specific words during the grinding process, based on the belief that the sound vibrations positively affected the aromatic qualities of the spices.
[2] The Talmudic discussion distinguishes between preparing a half-measure (which is permitted) and omitting ingredients (which is forbidden). This reflects a principle that quantity can be reduced while maintaining the proper proportional formula, but the formula itself is inviolable.
[3] This refers to the practice of carefully collecting and storing small amounts of leftover incense from the daily preparation process. These leftovers would accumulate over decades until they amounted to half the annual quantity (about 365 manehs).
[4] The hypothetical addition of honey is described as creating an overwhelmingly powerful fragrance, yet despite this potential enhancement, honey was forbidden based on the biblical prohibition. This emphasizes strict adherence to divine command over practical considerations.

[i] This reflects the ancient belief that the human voice could have a beneficial effect on the preparation of sacred substances. This acoustic enhancement was considered part of the proper ritual technique for preparing the Temple incense.
[ii] The severity of this punishment—death for omitting even one ingredient—demonstrates the critical importance of the precise incense formula in Temple ritual. This parallels other capital offenses related to improper Temple service.
[iii] This detail about the accumulated leftovers (שִׁירַיִם) indicates careful conservation of the sacred substances over decades, reflecting both economic efficiency and ritual reverence for even small amounts of the sacred ingredients.
[iv] This hypothetical about honey enhancing the fragrance serves to emphasize that the prohibition against honey wasn't because it would diminish the incense quality, but rather because of the explicit biblical commandment, even though honey would have made the fragrance more potent.
[v] Cf. Keritot 6a — The Ma'avar Yabok is citing the original Talmudic source about proper incense preparation to establish the authoritative basis for the prayer that substitutes for the Temple incense offering. | Cf. Exodus 30:34-38 — This text elaborates on the biblical commandment regarding incense preparation, explaining technical details that weren't explicit in the Torah but were transmitted through rabbinic tradition. | Cf. Leviticus 2:11 — The passage explains the practical application of this biblical prohibition specifically to the incense preparation, showing how the general prohibition against honey in offerings applies to the specific case of the Temple incense.

יִשְׂרָאֵל[i] וְעַתָּה בֵּעָוֹנוֹתֵינוּ חָרַב
בֵּית הַמִּקְדָּשׁ וּבָטְלָה הָעֲבוֹדָה
וְאֵין לָנוּ לֹא כֹּהֵן וְלֹא מַחְתָּה
וְלֹא גַחֲלֵי אֵשׁ וְלֹא מִזְבֵּחַ וְלֹא
קְטֹרֶת הַסַּמִּים וְלֹא נִשְׁאַר לְפָנֵינוּ
אֶלָּא שִׂיחַ שִׂפְתוֹתֵינוּ[ii] שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר
וּנְשַׁלְּמָה פָרִים שְׂפָתֵינוּ. יְהִי
רָצוֹן מִלְּפָנֶיךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ וֵאלֹהֵי
אֲבוֹתֵינוּ שֶׂיְּהֵא זִכָּרוֹן פִּינוּ מְקוּבָּל
לְפָנֶיךָ כְּמוֹ שֶׁהָיָה בְּאִלּוּ הִקְרַבְנוּ
לְפָנֶיךָ קְטוֹרֶת הַסַּמִּים וְתַעֲצוֹר
הַמַּגֵּפָה מֵעָלֵינוּ וּמֵעַל כָּל עַמְּךָ
יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּכָל הָאַרְצוֹת וּבְכָל
מְקוֹמוֹת מוֹשְׁבוֹתֵיהֶם כַּאֲשֶׁר
נֶעְצְרָה עַל יְדֵי אַהֲרֹן נְבִיא קְדוֹשֶׁךָ
יְיָ[iii] וְעָמוֹד מִכִּסֵּא דִּין וְשֶׁב עַל
כִּסֵּא רַחֲמִים[iv] וַחֲמוֹל עַל עַמְּךָ
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְעַל זְקֵנֵיהֶם וְעַל נְשֵׁיהֶם
וְעַל טַפֵּיהֶם וְעַל עוֹלָלֵיהֶם וְעַל
יוֹנְקֵיהֶם וְהָסֵר שָׂטָן מִלְּפָנֵינוּ
וּמֵאַחֲרֵינוּ[v] וְאַל תִּתֵּן הַמַּשְׁחִית
לָבֹא אֶל בָּתֵּינוּ לִנְגוֹף וְתַעֲצוֹר
אֶת הַדֶּבֶר וְאֶת הַמַּגֵּפָה וְאֶת הַמַּשְׁחִית מֵעָלֵינוּ וּמֵעַל כָּל עַמְּךָ

ple has been destroyed and the service has ceased, and we have neither priest, nor fire-pan, nor coals of fire, nor altar, nor the aromatic incense. Nothing remains for us but the meditation of our lips, as it is said, "And let us offer the words of our lips instead of calves."[1] May it be Your will, LORD our God and God of our fathers, that the remembrance of our speech be acceptable before Your throne of glory as if we had offered before You the aromatic incense. Stay the plague from us and from all Your people Israel in all lands and in all places of their dwelling, as it was stayed by the hand of Aaron, Your holy prophet.[2] Rise from the throne of judgment and sit upon the throne of mercy,[3] and have compassion upon Your people Israel, upon their elders, their wives, their children, their infants, and their sucklings. Remove the adversary from before us and from behind us,[4] and do not allow the destroyer to enter our houses to strike. Stay the pestilence, the plague, and the destroyer from us and from all Your people Israel. And so may it be Your will, LORD our God and God of our fathers, to eliminate from us and from Your people Israel pestilence, sword, famine, destroyer, and plague, and all kinds of evil diseases,

130 130R 135 135R 140 140R 145 145R 150

[1] This is a direct quote from Hosea 14:3, which became a foundational text for the rabbinic concept that prayer could substitute for Temple sacrifices after the destruction of the Temple. The Hebrew term 'parim' (פָּרִים) literally means 'bulls' or 'calves,' referring to animal sacrifices.

[2] This references the biblical episode in Numbers 17:11-13 where Aaron stopped a plague among the Israelites by offering incense. The text calls Aaron a 'prophet,' an unusual designation for him, perhaps to emphasize his sacred role in this protective ritual.

[3] This powerful imagery reflects kabbalistic concepts of divine attributes. God is portrayed as moving between two thrones representing different modes of divine governance: strict justice (din) and compassionate mercy (rachamim). This metaphor expresses the prayer's central request for God to shift from judgment to mercy.

[4] The 'adversary' (שָׂטָן/Satan) in Jewish mystical thought represents accusing or obstructing forces in the spiritual realms. The prayer envisions protection in all directions—from threats we can see coming ('before us') and from unexpected dangers ('behind us').

[i] The incense offering in the Temple served a dual purpose: creating a pleasant aroma in the sacred space and providing atonement. In kabbalistic thought, the ketoret (incense) was considered the most powerful of all Temple offerings, capable of uniting the upper and lower spiritual worlds.

[ii] This phrase, literally "the meditation of our lips," represents a core theological concept in post-Temple Judaism: that prayer and verbal recitation serve as spiritual substitutes for physical Temple offerings. This follows the principle established in Hosea 14:3.

[iii] This refers to the biblical episode in Numbers 17:11-13 where Aaron, at Moses' instruction, offered incense to stop a plague that had broken out among the Israelites. This story serves as the primary biblical proof-text for the protective power of the incense offering.

[iv] This imagery of God moving from a throne of judgment to a throne of mercy reflects a central kabbalistic concept of the divine shifting between attributes of judgment (din) and mercy (rachamim). This shift is seen as the goal of many prayer practices.

[v] The Satan here refers not merely to a personified adversary but to any accusing or obstructing force in the spiritual realms. In kabbalistic thought, the ketoret specifically had the power to neutralize these negative forces.

יִשְׂרָאֵל: וְכֵן יְהִי רָצוֹן מִלְּפָנֶיךָ יְיָ
אֱלֹהֵינוּ וֵאלֹהֵי אֲבוֹתֵינוּ לְכָלּוֹת
מֵעָלֵינוּ וּמֵעַל עַמְּךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל דֶּבֶר
וְחֶרֶב וְרָעָב וּמַשְׁחִית וּמַגֵּפָה וְכָל
155 מִינֵי תַחֲלוּאִים רָעִים וְכָל מִינֵי
פּוּרְעָנֻיּוֹת הַמִּתְרַגְּשׁוֹת וּבָאוֹת
לְעוֹלָם וּשְׁמוֹר תּוֹרָתְךָ וּשְׁמוֹר
צֵאתֵנוּ וּבוֹאֵנוּ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם
כִּי אַתָּה שׁוֹמֵר יִשְׂרָאֵל: יְיָ צְבָאוֹת
160 עִמָּנוּ מִשְׂגָּב לָנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב
סֶלָה ג״פ:[i] יְיָ צְבָאוֹת אַשְׁרֵי אָדָם
בֹּטֵחַ בָּךְ ג״פ: יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה הַמֶּלֶךְ
יַעֲנֵנוּ בְיוֹם קָרְאֵנוּ ג״פ: רְפָאֵנוּ
יְיָ וְנֵרָפֵא הוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ וְנִוָּשֵׁעָה כִּי
165 תְהִלָּתֵנוּ אָתָּה: יְהִיוּ לְרָצוֹן אִמְרֵי
פִינוּ וְהֶגְיוֹן לִבֵּנוּ לְפָנֶיךָ יְיָ צוּרֵנוּ
וְגוֹאֲלֵנוּ:[ii]

and all kinds of calamities that stir and come to the world. Protect Your Torah and protect our going out and our coming in from now and forever, for You are the Guardian of Israel. The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our stronghold, Selah. [3 times][1] LORD of hosts, happy is the person who trusts in You. [3 times] LORD, save! May the King answer us on the day we call. [3 times] Heal us, LORD, and we shall be healed; save us, and we shall be saved, for You are our praise.[2] May the words of our mouth and the meditation of our heart be acceptable before You, LORD, our Rock and our Redeemer. 150R 155R 160R

פרק ז׳

Chapter 7

ברוך הוא אשר בחר בעמו
ישראל המעוררים האהבה
מצד הימין בסוד ששים רבוא
דיוקנאות שבהם ובמיין נוקבין
5 שלהם מעוררים הזווג וכ״י
על ידם היא בתוקף אהבה עם
המלך ואומרת כל היקר הזה
ע״י צדיקים כנדרש בפ׳ נח

Blessed is He who chose His people Israel, who awaken love from the right side, through the secret of the sixty myriads of souls within them. Through their feminine waters they arouse the divine union, and the Community of Israel through them is in the fullness of love with the King.[3] She declares, "All this precious abundance comes through the righteous," as expounded in the portion of Noah 5R

[1] The Hebrew abbreviation ג״פ (gimmel-peh) indicates that the preceding verse should be recited three times. The threefold repetition of protective verses is a common practice in Jewish mystical traditions, believed to enhance their spiritual power.

[2] This concluding phrase from Jeremiah 17:14 reflects the prayer's theological foundation: that God is the ultimate source of healing and salvation, and that human praise and recognition of this fact is itself a form of spiritual connection that activates divine mercy.

[3] The 'King' here refers to God, particularly in His aspect as the divine masculine that unites with the feminine Shekhinah or Community of Israel.

[i] This abbreviation stands for "three times" (שלוש פעמים), indicating that the preceding verse should be recited three times. The threefold repetition of verses is a common practice in Jewish protective prayers, believed to enhance their spiritual efficacy.

[ii] Cf. Hosea 14:3 — This verse from Hosea is central to the prayer's theological argument that verbal recitation of the incense offering can serve as a spiritual substitute for the actual Temple ritual that is no longer possible. | Cf. Numbers 17:11-13 — The prayer refers to how Aaron's incense offering stopped a plague, drawing directly from this biblical episode to argue for the efficacy of the incense formula as a protective measure against disease. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 4 — This prayer builds on the book's earlier theological explanations of how the incense offering (ketoret) specifically has power to ward off plagues and harmful spiritual forces. | Cf. Psalm 46:8,12 — This verse is incorporated as a protective formula to be recited three times, reflecting the Jewish mystical belief in the protective power of scriptural verses, particularly when repeated in groups of three. | Cf. Jeremiah 17:14 — This quotation from Jeremiah connects the spiritual protection of the incense with physical healing, reinforcing the prayer's dual focus on spiritual and physical well-being.

ובפ׳ אמור באינון דמקשטין לקדושה בליל שבועות ואהבה היא בהיותה מחובקת מדודה שמאלו תחת לראשי וגו׳ וע״י נשמותיהן מתעורר שפע מג׳ בחינות על ידי הלוים מהשמאל ע״י ישראל מהאמצעי ע״י הכהנים מימין וזהו וקרבתנו מלכנו לשמך הגדול וביחוד בינה תפארת ומלכות בסוד ג׳ שמותיהם משולבים יחד. שמשם שרשי נשמות צדיקים מיד ביטול הקליפות וכל ההויה הכשרות נשלף להם נשמה רוחנית חיונית טהורה דרך פתח היכל לבנת הספיר וזהו בחצות הלילה כי שער זה נפתח והחיים העליונים מתפשטים בכל הנבראים. ע״כ אשרי אדם מצא חכמה ולבו יפיק תבונה לכוין מעשיו לעורר החיות עליון עליו ועל הנלוים עליו ויהי לעולם דעתו קשור בהרהור תורה ובזה מיחד הדעת במלכות בבחינתה שהיא עטרת בעלה למעלה מחסד וגבורה וזהו מצות והיו הדברים האלה על לבבך שלא תפרד דעתך מהם רגע. עוד ישתדל להשפיע מתורתו לבניו ולתלמידיו ובזה מיחד מלכות עם ת״ת בבחינתה שלמעלה מנצח והוד כיהם נקרא בנים שנאמר וכל בניך למודי ה׳ והיינו מצות ושננתם לבניך. עוד צריך שיהיה האדם לומד לבדו ובזה השכינה מתייחדת עמו ותורה לשמה מוריד הת״ת למלכות בבחינתה למטה וזהו מצות ודברת בם. עוד ישתדל שתהיה שמירת המלכות עמו וזה אינו זמן יחוד בתפלה ותורה אלא בעסקיו וצרכי גוויתו אז השכינה שהיא שמירת הדרך תהיה עמו לשומרו אם ישא ויתן באמונה וישים אליה לבו וזהו

and the portion of Emor, regarding those who adorn themselves for holiness on the night of Shavuot. And love flourishes when she is embraced by her beloved, as in "His left hand is under my head, etc." Through their souls, divine influx is awakened from three aspects: through the Levites from the left, through Israel from the center, and through the priests from the right.[1] This is the meaning of "You have brought us near, our King, to Your great Name," especially through the unification of Binah, Tiferet, and Malkhut, in the secret of their three names interwoven together.[2]

From there flow the roots of righteous souls, immediately nullifying the negative forces. For all worthy beings, a pure spiritual vital soul is drawn down to them through the entrance of the Palace of the Sapphire Brick. This occurs at midnight, when this gate opens and the supernal life-forces extend to all created beings. Therefore, fortunate is the person who finds wisdom and whose heart produces understanding, directing his actions to awaken the supernal vitality upon himself and those connected to him. Let his mind always be bound in contemplation of Torah, thereby unifying Da'at (Knowledge) with Malkhut in its aspect as "crown of her husband," which is above Chesed and Gevurah. This is the commandment, "These words shall be upon your heart"—that your mind should not be separated from them for a moment.

Furthermore, one should strive to share his Torah with his children and students, thereby unifying Malkhut with Tiferet in its aspect above Netzach and Hod, for they are called "children," as it is said, "And all your children shall be taught of the Lord"—this is the commandment, "You shall teach them diligently to your children." One must also study Torah alone, through which the Divine Presence unites with him, and Torah studied for its own sake brings down Tiferet to Malkhut in its lower aspect. This is the commandment, "You shall speak of them."

One should also ensure that the protection of Malkhut accompanies him. This is not the time of unification through prayer and Torah study, but

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the three biblical divisions of the Jewish people (Priests, Levites, and Israelites) as corresponding to different divine attributes and cosmic channels.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic practice of unifying different divine names to create cosmic harmonization and spiritual power.

מצות ובלכתך בדרך. עוד חייב לתקן תקוני שבינה בבחינת היות
55 סוכת דוד הנופלת בהצטער על חרבן ביתה והיכלה. וזהו ובשכבך ובזה יזכה להשלים תקוניה בסוד הגאולה כשיהיה אור הלבנה כאור החמה וזהו
60 ובקומך בסוד קומי אורי כי בא אורך ובזה יקיים בכל דרכיך דעהו והוא יישר אורחותיך ועושה צדקה בכל עת ויזכה לסוד ויעש דוד שם כדפי׳ בפ׳
65 בהר סיני. ותמיד יוסיף שמן לנר מאור שבינת אל על ראשו ואל יגרום סלוקה ח״ו במעשיו וירחיק עצמו מכל נדנוד עבירה ובפרט מן השקרים. ואמרו
70 בתקון ס״ע דף ק״ט ומאן גרים דלא שרייא שבינתא עליה דאדם ולא נהיר שמשא עליה בגין הבל דשקרא ומלין דשקרא נפקין מפומי׳ אית הבל ממארי דשקרא
75 דאתמר בהון הבל המה מעשה תעתועים ואית הבל דאתמר ביה על כל מוצא פי ה׳ יחיה האדם ודא הבל דאורייתא דאינון חמשה חומשי תורה מן
80 בית דבראשית עד למ״ד דלעיני כל ישראל. ודא הוא הב״ל. הנה כי מות וחיים ביד לשון ואל יתפתה בנוקבא דס״מ דנחש אקרי ואשת זנונים וקץ כל
85 בשר וקץ הימים דקשיטת גרמה בבמה תכשיטין בזונה וקיימא בריש ארחין ושבילין לפתאה בני נשא. שטיא דקריב בהדה אתקיפת ביה נשקת ליה מסכת
90 ליה חמרא דורדייא ומרורת פתנים כיון דשתי אסטי אבתרה לבתר דחמת ליה סטי מאורחא דקשוט אבתרה אפשיטת גרמה מכל אינון תקונין דהות מתתקנא
95 לגבי דההוא שטיא תקונין דילה rather during his business affairs and bodily needs. Then the Divine Presence, which is the guardian of the way, will be with him to protect him if he con- 55R ducts his business honestly and directs his heart toward Her. This is the commandment, "When you walk by the way."

Furthermore, one is obligated to rectify the Divine Presence in her aspect as "the fallen booth of 60R David," by grieving over the destruction of Her house and palace. This is the meaning of "when you lie down." Through this, one merits to complete Her rectification in the mystery of redemption, when "the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun." 65R
This is the meaning of "when you rise up," alluding to "Arise, shine, for your light has come." In this way, one fulfills "In all your ways acknowledge Him, and He will make straight your paths," performing righteousness at all times and meriting the secret of 70R
"And David made a name for himself," as explained in the portion of Behar Sinai.

One should always add oil to the lamp of God's Presence shining upon his head, and not cause its removal, heaven forbid, through his actions. He should 75R distance himself from any hint of transgression, especially from falsehoods. As stated in Tikkun 70, page 109: "What causes the Divine Presence not to rest upon a person and the sun not to shine upon him?
The breath of falsehood and words of lies that come 80R from his mouth." There is the breath of masters of falsehood, of whom it is said, "They are vanity, a work of delusion," and there is the breath of which it is said, "By every word that proceeds from the mouth of God shall man live"—this is the breath of 85R Torah, which comprises the five books of the Torah from the bet of "Bereshit" to the lamed of "before all Israel."[1] This is the HaBe"L[2] (breath/vanity). Indeed, death and life are in the power of the tongue.

One should not be seduced by the female aspect 90R of Samael, who is called the serpent, the wife of harlotry, the end of all flesh, and the end of days. She adorns herself with many ornaments like a harlot and stands at the head of paths and byways to entice people. The fool who approaches her—she seizes 95R

[1]This refers to the entirety of the Torah, from its first letter (bet in 'Bereshit'/Genesis) to its last letter (lamed in 'le'einei kol Yisrael'/before all Israel, the final words of Deuteronomy).
[2]The Hebrew word הבל (hevel) means 'breath' or 'vanity' and appears prominently in Ecclesiastes. Here it's given a positive interpretation through its connection to Torah study, and the letters are capitalized to indicate it's being treated as an acronym.

שערה מתקנין סומקן כוורדא
אנפהא חיוורין וסומקין וכו׳
פיה מתתקנא בפתיחו דקיק יאה
בתקונה. לישנא חדידא כחרבא
שיעין מילאה כמשחא שפוותא
יאן סומקין כוורדא מתיקן בכל
מתיקו דעלמא ארגוונא לבשת
אתתקנת בארבעין תקונין חסר
חד. מניין ל״ט שהוא תרגום
של ארור וכן גרמה ל״ט קללות
לעולם בחטא הקדום וכל זה
משל לכמה עבירות המפתה
בהם בני אדם. שטיא דאסטי
אבתרהא ושתי מכסא דחמרא
ועביד בה נאופין ואסטי אבתרה
מה עבדת שבקת ליה נאים
בערסא סליקת לעילא ואלשינת
עליה ונעלא רשות ונתתא אתער
ההוא שטיא ותשב לחייכא בהדא
בבקדמיתא והיא אעדיאת תקונה
מינה ואתהדרת גובר תקוף
קאים לקבליה לביש לבושא
דנורא מלהטא בדחילו תקוף
מרתתא נפשא וגופא ערומא
מלייא דעיינין דחלן חרבא
שננא בידה טיפין מרירין תליין
מההוא חרבא קטיל ליה לההוא
שטיא וארמי ליה לגו גיהנם.
כמה הלכתא גברוותא איכא
למילף מדברי המאמר הזה
למאן דלא נאים ושכיב לשמור
עצמו מאשה זרה מנכריה אמריה
החליקה ואל יכלה ימיו בהבל
וריק אחרי עצתה כי הזמן יקר
שבנמצאות. ואמרו במדרש כי
הבל גבר על קין וחמל עליו
משום דברי תחנונים שאמר לו
וכשהניחו הבל קם קין והרגו
כי כן הוא דרך החצונים כי
כשאין להם מעשים למטה נעשים
רשים ותחתונים ידברו לנוכח
הקדושה להתפרנס והקב״ה
חומל עליהם בחנם ומשפיעם
וגם רשע ליום רעה. אמנם
כאשר יגברו הגבורות לסבת עון
והם בשדה אחר שהיא מלכות
המתעוררת מדיני הגבורות מיד
ויקם קין אל הבל שהוא סוד

him, kisses him, and mixes for him wine of dregs and venom of serpents. Once he drinks, he follows after her. When she sees him deviating from the path of truth to follow her, she strips herself of all those adornments with which she had adorned herself for that fool. Her adornments include her hair arranged red like a rose, her face white and red, etc., her mouth arranged with a delicate opening, beautiful in its form, her tongue sharp as a sword, her words smooth as oil, her lips beautiful, red as a rose, sweetened with all the sweetness of the world, dressed in purple, adorned with thirty-nine ornaments. The number thirty-nine is the numerical value of "cursed" in Aramaic, and thus she caused thirty-nine curses to the world through the primordial sin. All this is an allegory for the many transgressions with which she entices people.

The fool who strays after her and drinks from the cup of wine, commits adultery with her and follows her—what does she do? She leaves him sleeping in his bed, ascends above, slanders him, and locks the gate from above. When that fool awakens, she returns to laugh with him as before, but she removes her adornments and transforms into a mighty warrior standing against him, wearing flaming garments, inspiring terror, causing his soul and naked body to tremble. She is full of fearsome eyes, a sharpened sword in her hand, bitter drops hanging from that sword. She slays that fool and casts him into Gehenna. How many significant laws can be learned from this discourse for one who is not asleep but alert to guard himself from the strange woman, from the foreign woman whose words are smooth! One should not waste his days in vanity and emptiness following her counsel, for time is the most precious of all things.

It is said in the Midrash that Abel prevailed over Cain and had mercy on him because of the words of supplication that he said to him. But when Abel released him, Cain arose and killed him. For such is the way of the external forces: when they have no deeds below, they become poor and speak supplications before holiness to receive sustenance, and the Holy One, blessed be He, has mercy on them freely and sustains them—"even the wicked for the day of evil." However, when the powers of judgment strengthen due to sin, and they are in "another field," which is Malkhut aroused by the judgments of Gevu-

מטטרו״ן אחיו ודמי עץ הדעת
145 טוב ורע ויהרגהו כי מכבה אור
הקדושה בהיותו מעורר הדינים
ואין חומל כלל. ואמרו בפ׳
ויחי ווי למאן דגרע יומוהי לעיל
ווי ליה ווי לנפשיה זכאין אינון
150 צדיקייא. אשרי הגדל בשם טוב
ונפטר בשם טוב. אלהים יעזרנו
לעשות רצונו בעה״ז ובעה״ב עם
כל ישראל גאולים ואנחנו נבר״ך
י״ה ובית אהרן ברכו את ה׳: [i] rah, immediately "Cain rose up against Abel," who represents the mystery of Metatron his brother and 145R the "blood of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil," and killed him, for he extinguishes the light of holiness by arousing judgments, showing no mercy at all.

And they said in the portion of Vayechi: "Woe 150R to one who diminishes his days above;[1] woe to him, woe to his soul! Fortunate are the righteous." Happy is one who grows up with a good name and departs with a good name. May God help us to do His will in this world and in the World to Come, with all Israel 155R redeemed, and we shall bless the Lord, and the house of Aaron, bless the Lord.

פרק ח׳

Chapter 8

ראיתי להביא פה שכר איזה
מצות אשר יעשה אותם האדם
וחי בהם לחיי עד כפי הנמצא
בתקונים אשר מהם אזן תבחן
5 כמה גדול שכר של עושי מצוה
לפני הקדוש ברוך הוא. אמרו
בתקון ע׳ [ii] כי המלך הקדוש

I have seen fit to present here the reward for certain commandments that a person performs and lives by them for eternal life, according to what is found in the Tikkunim [Tikkunei Zohar], from which the ear can discern how great is the reward of those who per- 5R form commandments before the Holy One, blessed be He. They said in Tikkun 70 that for one who

[1] In kabbalistic thought, one's actions in this world correspond to cosmic realities in higher worlds. This phrase suggests that wasting time or engaging in sin actually diminishes one's spiritual lifespan in higher realms.

[i] Cf. Song of Songs 2:6 — The author uses this verse to illustrate the divine embrace between God and the Community of Israel (Knesset Yisrael), a common kabbalistic interpretation of Song of Songs as representing the love between the divine masculine and feminine aspects. | Cf. Isaiah 60:1 — This reference to Isaiah connects the redemptive awakening of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) with the biblical prophecy of Israel's restoration, suggesting that proper spiritual practice contributes to cosmic redemption. | Cf. Proverbs 3:6 — This verse is cited to emphasize that divine consciousness should permeate all aspects of life, not just formal religious practice. | Cf. Deuteronomy 6:6-7 — The author reinterprets the Shema prayer as instructions for maintaining constant divine unification through Torah study and teaching, giving these familiar verses a kabbalistic interpretation. | Cf. Isaiah 54:13 — This verse is used to support the idea that spiritual students are considered 'children' in a mystical sense, and teaching Torah creates unifications in the divine realms. | Cf. Amos 9:11 — This reference to the 'fallen booth of David' (sukkat David ha-nofelet) represents the Shekhinah in exile, suggesting that personal spiritual practice helps rectify this cosmic condition. | Cf. Isaiah 30:26 — This prophetic image is used to describe the future redemptive state when the Shekhinah (associated with the moon) will be restored to full glory, equivalent to Tiferet (associated with the sun). | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 70 — This reference to the Tikkunei Zohar explicitly connects falsehood with the departure of divine presence, emphasizing the importance of truthfulness in maintaining spiritual connection. | Cf. Jeremiah 10:15 — This biblical reference is used to characterize negative speech as empty delusion, contrasting it with the life-giving power of divine speech. | Cf. Deuteronomy 8:3 — This verse is repurposed to contrast the destructive 'breath' of falsehood with the life-giving 'breath' of Torah study and divine speech. | Cf. Zohar, Vayechi — This Zoharic reference emphasizes the cosmic consequences of wasting time, suggesting that improper use of time affects one's spiritual destiny.

[ii] This refers to Tikkun 70 of the Tikkunei Zohar, a kabbalistic text composed in the 13th century that consists of 70 interpretations of the first word of the Torah.

ברוך הוא על כל אבר ואבר אין סוף למתן שכרו והאריך שם הרבה בזה יע״ש וזו תהיה כוונת האדם בה׳ אחד[i] ולכלול עצמו ביחוד באשר דרשנו בח״ב. המתעטף בציצית ומניח תפילין וקורא קריאת שמע[ii] מתקן כסא בעטוף מצוה דכתיב והוכן בחסד כסא ובתפילין הוא מעטר לו וקורא השירה על הכסא שמע ישראל כמו כן הקדוש ברוך הוא מתקן לו בעולם ההוא כסא ועטרה ועיין מזה גם כן בתקונים החדשים[iii] דף ק״מ ע״ב ובדף קמ״א מדבר בחלוקי עונשי הנפשות כפי מעשיהם. וכמו שהאדם מוריד היושב על הכסא בכסאו וקם לכבודו וממליך אותו על כל אבר מאבריו כן הקדוש ברוך הוא ממליכו על כל מפנות ומלאכים ששם דכתיב כי מכבדי אכבד. וכמו שהאדם מנגן לפני הקב״ה בכמה נגונים משירות ותשבחות והודאות כמו כן כשעולה למעלה כל פמליא של מעלה כל החוות כל המרכבות ומחנות מלאכים קדושים דחיות ואופנים ושרפים[iv] פורשים כנפיהם בשמחה ובנגון לקבלו זהו שכר המתפללים:[v]

enthrones the Holy One, blessed be He, over each and every limb, there is no end to his reward, and it elaborates greatly on this there—see it for yourself. This should be a person's intention in [declaring] "the Lord is One," and to include oneself in this unification, as we have expounded in Part Two. 10R

One who wraps himself in tzitzit, puts on tefillin, and recites the Shema prepares a throne through the wrapping of the commandment, as it is written, "And the throne will be established through kindness." With the tefillin, he crowns Him, and recites the song upon the throne: "Hear, O Israel." Likewise, the Holy One, blessed be He, prepares for him in that world [the World to Come] a throne and a crown. See also regarding this in the New Tikkunim, page 140b, and on page 141 it discusses the different punishments of souls according to their deeds. 15R 20R

Just as a person causes the One who sits on the throne to descend to his throne, and rises in His honor, and enthrones Him over each of his limbs, so too the Holy One, blessed be He, enthrones him over all the celestial corners and angels that are there, as it is written, "For those who honor Me, I will honor." And just as a person makes music before the Holy One, blessed be He, with various melodies of songs, praises, and thanksgivings, similarly, when he ascends above, the entire heavenly entourage—all the celestial creatures, all the divine chariots, and the camps of holy angels, the living creatures, the wheels, and the seraphim—spread their wings with joy and melody to receive him. This is the reward of those who pray." 25R 30R 35R

[i] The phrase 'ה׳ אחד' (the Lord is One) refers to the central declaration of the Shema prayer: 'Hear O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One.'

[ii] These three ritual actions—wrapping in tzitzit (ritual fringes), donning tefillin (phylacteries), and reciting the Shema—are fundamental morning prayers in Jewish practice, described here as creating a mystical effect in the upper worlds.

[iii] The 'New Tikkunim' likely refers to later additions to or commentaries on the Tikkunei Zohar, possibly the work known as 'Tikkunim Chadashim' that expanded on the original 70 Tikkunim.

[iv] This describes the celestial hierarchy of angels based on Ezekiel's vision and rabbinic elaborations, including the divine entourage, the celestial creatures, divine chariots, angelic camps, Chayot, Ofanim, and Seraphim—each representing different levels of angelic beings.

[v] Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author cites Tikkun 70 from the Tikkunei Zohar as a primary source for his discussion of divine rewards for those who properly perform commandments with the right intention. | Cf. New Tikkunim — The author refers to a text called 'New Tikkunim' (possibly later additions to or commentaries on the Tikkunei Zohar) to provide further information about divine rewards and punishments. | Cf. 1 Samuel 2:30 — The author uses this biblical verse to support the idea that God responds to human devotion with corresponding honor and elevation in the celestial realms. | Cf. Proverbs 16:12 — The author uses this verse to explain how performing commandments (specifically wrapping in tzitzit) creates a metaphysical throne through acts of kindness. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author refers back to his own earlier exposition in Part Two of Ma'avar Yabok regarding the proper intention during prayer and unification with the divine,

טוב הצפן למוהלים[i][ii] The Good Reserved for Circumcisers[1] 40R

כמו שהמל מעביר מאבר הברית של יהודי בחתיכתו הערלה ובפריעה[iii] ומתקן שם מקום להשרות שם השכינה כן כשנשמתו תעלה למעלה הקדוש ברוך הוא יעביר ממנה כל מלאכי חבלה ומקטרגים שלא יקרבו אליה משום ששם ה׳ שורה עליו הנרמז במי״ יעלה״ לנו״ השמימה״ בשם ה׳ עולה למעלה השמימה נשמתו[iv] ויתקיים בו אז וראו כי שם ה׳ נקרא עליך וגו׳. כמו שהאדם מקבל עליו כל מצות עשה ביראה ואהבה כמו כן ממליכין אותו החיילות ומחנות של העולמות שתקן לו הקדוש ברוך הוא למעלה ומקבלים אותו עליהם ביראה ואהבה. וכשאדם עוסק בתורה ובמצות שהם נר כאלו מאיר בעמוד האמצעי[v] ביום לפני ה׳ ועמוד האש לילה כן בשהולך

Just as one who performs circumcision removes the foreskin[2] from the covenant organ of a Jew and exposes the corona, thereby preparing a place for the Divine Presence to dwell there, similarly when his soul ascends on high, the Holy One, blessed be He, 45R will remove from it all destructive angels and accusers so they cannot approach it, because the Name of the Lord rests upon him. This is alluded to in "Who shall ascend for us to heaven,"[3] for in the Name of the Lord his soul ascends upward to heaven, 50R and then will be fulfilled in him "and they shall see that the Name of the Lord is called upon you, etc."

Just as a person accepts all positive commandments with reverence and love, likewise the hosts and camps of the worlds that the Holy One, blessed be 55R He, has prepared for him above will crown him as their king and accept him with reverence and love. And when a person engages in Torah and commandments, which are like a lamp, it is as if he illuminates the central pillar by day before the Lord[4] and the 60R pillar of fire by night. So too, when he goes to that world, it is written about him, "And the Lord went

[1] This is a section heading introducing the spiritual rewards that await those who perform the ritual of circumcision (mohels). In Jewish mystical thought, those who perform sacred rituals like circumcision accumulate special merit that protects them in both this world and the next.

[2] The opening metaphor compares ritual circumcision to the spiritual protection afforded to the soul after death. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that physical rituals create corresponding spiritual realities.

[3] This refers to a mystical interpretation where the initial letters of the Hebrew phrase "mi ya'aleh lanu hashamaimah" (מי יעלה לנו השמימה) form the word "milah" (מילה), meaning circumcision, creating a connection between circumcision and heavenly ascent.

[4] The "central pillar" (amud ha-emtza'i) refers to Tiferet, the central sefirah in Kabbalah that balances mercy and judgment. The passage draws parallels between Torah study and the pillars of cloud and fire that guided the Israelites in the wilderness.

creating continuity within the larger work.

[i] This title heading introduces a section specifically addressing the spiritual rewards and protection granted to mohels (ritual circumcisers). The phrase can be understood as "The good that is stored up/hidden away for those who perform circumcisions."

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section 2, Chapter 130 — The author creates a thematic connection between the rewards for those who circumcise and other sections of the work discussing spiritual rewards for sacred actions. This section elaborates on the mystical benefits that accrue to mohels (ritual circumcisers).

[iii] The text begins with circumcision as a metaphor for spiritual purification and protection. In Jewish law, circumcision involves two steps: milah (cutting the foreskin) and periah (exposing the corona), both mentioned here.

[iv] This refers to a mystical interpretation of Deuteronomy 30:12. The Hebrew phrase "mi ya'aleh lanu hashamaimah" (who shall ascend to heaven for us) contains an acronym for "milah" (circumcision), suggesting that circumcision facilitates the soul's ascent to heaven.

[v] The "central pillar" (amuda d'emtza'ita) is a kabbalistic reference to Tiferet, the central sefirah that balances mercy and judgment. Torah study is understood to illuminate this divine attribute.

לאותו העולם כתוב בו וה׳
הולך לפניהם יומם בעמוד ענן
לנחותם הדרך ולילה בעמוד
אש להאיר להם למי לנפש ורוח
ונשמה שלו שהם נגד כהן לוי
ישראל.[i] וכל השומר שבת ומכבד
אותו ומענג אותו כדי לכבד
הקדוש ברוך הוא כמו כן הקדוש
ברוך הוא נותן לו מקום למעלה
במנוחה שאנן והשקט שלא טרח
בו ונח שם מכל הטורח שטרח
בעולם הזה במעשיו. ויש מצות
תלויות בדיוקן המלך דיש בפנים
ויש בעיינין וכן בכל בחינה
ובחינה ומכל אחד מתפרשים
כמה חיילות ומחנות ממלאכים.
וכל נימא ונימא הוא מלאך
התלוי בראש[ii] ויש ממלאכים
אלו שנקראו אזני ה׳ עיני ה׳
וכן בכל שאר כנויי האברים
וכשעולה הנשמה כל חיילות אלו
עולות עמה וכשיורדת יורדים
עמה וכשעולה קול יורד מרום
רקיעים לכל חיילות ומחנות
תנו כבוד לדיוקן המלך. ובכל
יום צריך לעשות צד״קה לענות
תשעים אמנים ד׳ קדושות מאה
ברכות[iii] חמשה חומשי תורה
ויש אומרים ה׳ קדישים ובחינת
צדקה באימא עילאה וצדק
אימא תתאה דכתיב צדק לפניו

before them by day in a pillar of cloud to guide them on the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light"—to whom? To his nefesh, ruach, and neshamah, which correspond to Kohen, Levi, and Israelite.[1] 65R

One who observes the Sabbath, honors it, and delights in it in order to honor the Holy One, blessed be He—similarly, the Holy One, blessed be He, gives him a place above in tranquil and peaceful rest where he has not labored, and he rests there from all the labor he exerted in this world through his deeds. There are commandments that depend on the King's image—some in the face, some in the eyes, and so in every aspect—and from each one are derived numerous hosts and camps of angels. Each hair is an angel hanging from the head, and among these angels are those called "the ears of the Lord," "the eyes of the Lord," and so with all other bodily designations. When the soul ascends, all these hosts ascend with it, and when it descends, they descend with it. And when it ascends, a voice descends from the heights of the firmaments to all the hosts and camps: "Give honor to the image of the King!" 70R 75R 80R 85R

Every day one must perform charity, respond to ninety Amens, four Kedushahs, one hundred blessings, and [study] the five books of the Torah. Some say five Kaddishes.[2] The attribute of Tzedakah (charity) corresponds to the supernal Mother,[3] and Tzedek (righteousness) to the lower Mother, as it is written "Righteousness goes before Him." With each of one's limbs, one should be 90R

[1] This presents a kabbalistic correspondence system where the three levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) align with the three divisions of the Jewish people, representing ascending levels of holiness and spiritual function.

[2] The text presents a daily spiritual regimen that includes responding to 90 Amens, 4 Kedushahs, and reciting 100 blessings, along with studying Torah. These numerical values have mystical significance in kabbalistic practice.

[3] This presents a kabbalistic correspondence where tzedakah (charity) is associated with Binah (the "supernal Mother") while tzedek (righteousness) is associated with Malkhut (the "lower Mother"). This reflects the kabbalistic understanding of two feminine divine attributes.

[i] This is a kabbalistic correspondence: the three levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) are associated with the three divisions of the Jewish people (Israelite, Levi, Kohen), representing ascending levels of holiness.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that each hair is connected to spiritual channels (tzinnorot) and has an angelic counterpart. This concept appears in the Zohar and is used to explain why some Jewish practices involve covering or not cutting hair.

[iii] This refers to specific daily spiritual practices: responding to 90 instances of "Amen," reciting 4 Kedushah prayers, and making 100 blessings. These numbers have mystical significance in kabbalistic tradition.

יהלך[i] ובכל אחד מאבריו צריך להזדרז לעשות מצוה דבכל אחד
95 אית מלאכין דתליין בהו ומיקרין אותו בצאתו מן העולם. המיחד לקודשא בריך הוא ושכינתיה בעולם הזה הקדוש ברוך הוא מזווג אותו בבת זוגו לעה״ב.
100 המקריב לשבינה קרבן לה׳ בעוה״ז קב״ה מזווג אותו בדת זווג לעולם הבא. העושה מקדש מעט בית הכנסת בעולם הזה הקדוש ברוך הוא עושה לו בית
105 לדור בו בעולם הבא שהוא קדש קדשים. העושה סוכה להקדוש ברוך הוא. מסכך עליו בעולם ההוא ומגין עליו מכל מלאכי חבלה ביציאתו מן העולם. וכל
110 המברך להקדוש ברוך הוא ומקדש אותו בעולם הזה הקדוש ברוך הוא מברך ומקדש אותו בעולם ההוא. וכמו שאין קדושה בפחות מעשרה כן הקדוש ברוך
115 הוא עושה לו עשרה חופות בגן עדן. קדושין דקודשא בריך הוא עם שבינתיה הם קדוש קדוש קדוש שבע ברכות שלו הם בקריאת שמע בשחר ובערב
120 ויחודו שמע ישראל כן הקדוש ברוך הוא מברך אותו ולכלה שלו ומקדש שלו עמה בקדוש ומיחד שניהם והכל מדה כנגד מדה סוף סוף כל מה שמשתדל
125 אדם במצותיו של הקדוש ברוך הוא בגינו ובגין שכינתיה כמו כן משתדל הקדוש ברוך הוא בגינו ובגין בת זוגו בעולם ההיא אשרי המשתדל לעשות רצון קונו הוא
130 עושה רצונו לפי שעה בעולם. הזה ובונה לו בנין כן הקדוש ברוך הוא בונה לאדם בעולמו בנין לדורי דורות. וצריך שלא יהיה שום אחד מאבריו פנוי משם

diligent to perform a commandment, for with each limb there are angels that depend on it, and they honor him when he departs from the world. 95R

One who unifies the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence in this world—the Holy One, blessed be He, unites him with his soulmate in the World to Come. One who offers the Divine Presence as a sacrifice to the Lord in this world—the Holy One, blessed be He, unites him in sacred union in the World to Come. One who builds a small sanctuary, a synagogue, in this world—the Holy One, blessed be He, builds him a house to dwell in the World to Come, which is the Holy of Holies. One who makes a sukkah for the Holy One, blessed be He—He covers him in that world and protects him from all destructive angels when he departs from the world. And anyone who blesses the Holy One, blessed be He, and sanctifies Him in this world—the Holy One, blessed be He, blesses and sanctifies him in that world. 100R 105R 110R

Just as there is no sanctification with fewer than ten, so too the Holy One, blessed be He, makes for him ten canopies in the Garden of Eden. The sanctification of the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence is "Holy, Holy, Holy"; His seven blessings are in the recitation of the Shema morning and evening,[1] and His unification is "Hear, O Israel." So too, the Holy One, blessed be He, blesses him and his bride, and sanctifies them together with holiness, and unifies them both—all measure for measure. Ultimately, all that a person strives to do in the commandments of the Holy One, blessed be He, for His sake and for the sake of His Divine Presence—likewise the Holy One, blessed be He, strives for his sake and for the sake of his soulmate in that world. Happy is he who strives to do the will of his Creator—he does His will for a time in this world and builds a building for himself, so too the Holy One, blessed be He, builds for the person in His world a building for all generations. 115R 120R 125R 130R

One must ensure that none of his limbs is devoid of the Name YHVH, and one should enthrone Him in every limb and organ until they are all complete 135R

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic understanding of the Shema prayer as containing mystical unifications of divine names and attributes, parallel to the seven marriage blessings (sheva berakhot).

[i] This connects the concept of "tzedek" (righteousness) with the "lower Mother" (Malkhut), contrasted with "tzedakah" (charity) connected to the "supernal Mother" (Binah). This reflects the kabbalistic understanding of two feminine divine attributes.

הוי״ה ולהמליך אותו בכל אבר ואבר עד שיהיו כלם שלמים בדיוקן הקב״ה שאם חסר אחד מהם אינו בצלמו של הקב״ה. וישרה נשמתו בלבו דאז היא נקראת מטרוניתא[i] ולא יורידנה משם חס ושלום לרגליו אלא יהיה עטור השכינה תמיד על ראשו כנתן דצוציתא ואז יראה אור כי יהל ברוך המאיר לארץ ולדרים:[ii] in the image of the Holy One, blessed be He, for if one of them is missing, he is not in the image of the Holy One, blessed be He. His soul should dwell in his heart, for then it is called a Queen,[1] and he should not, God forbid, lower it to his feet. Rather, the crown of the Divine Presence should always be upon his head like one who wears tassels, and then he will see light as it shines—blessed is He who gives light to the earth and those who dwell upon it.

140R

נשלם חלק ראשון ממאמר רביעי הנקרא עתר ענן הקטרת[iii iv]

The first part of the fourth discourse, called "Eter Anan HaKetoret" [Cloud of Incense Prayer[2]], is com-

145R

[1] "Queen" (matronita) is a kabbalistic term for the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). The text suggests that when the soul properly dwells in the heart, it takes on this elevated status, connecting to the divine feminine aspect.

[2] The title 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' combines three Hebrew terms: 'eter' (prayer/supplication),

[i] "Matronita" (Queen) is a kabbalistic term for the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). The text suggests that when one's soul properly dwells in the heart, it takes on this elevated status, connecting to the divine feminine aspect.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts of divine unification, correspondence between human and divine realms, and the cosmic significance of ritual actions. The text employs typical Zoharic imagery of the divine feminine (Shekhinah), pillars of cloud and fire, and the rewards in the supernal realms. | Cf. Genesis 1:26-27 — The text reinterprets the biblical concept of divine image (tzelem Elohim) through a kabbalistic lens, suggesting that each human limb corresponds to divine attributes and names, and that maintaining the integrity of all limbs with proper spiritual intentions preserves one's status as being in God's image. | Cf. Exodus 13:21-22 — The text reinterprets the biblical narrative of divine guidance in the wilderness as a metaphor for spiritual illumination. Just as God guided Israel with pillars of cloud and fire, engagement with Torah and mitzvot creates spiritual light that guides the different components of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) in both this world and the next. | Cf. Deuteronomy 28:10 — The text reinterprets this verse, originally about Israel's distinct status among nations, to describe the spiritual protection afforded to individual souls that have been properly prepared through mitzvot. The divine name provides protection against accusers and harmful spiritual forces. | Cf. Mishnah Megillah 4:3 — The text creates a mystical correspondence between the halakhic requirement for a minyan in this world and the reward of ten canopies in the Garden of Eden, demonstrating how earthly ritual requirements have direct spiritual parallels in the afterlife. | Cf. Isaiah 58:13-14 — The text builds on the biblical promise that those who honor the Sabbath will 'delight in the Lord,' expanding this into a more specific mystical reward of a place of peaceful rest in the higher realms, suggesting a measure-for-measure correspondence between Sabbath rest in this world and eternal rest in the next.

[iii] This formal closing statement marks the end of the first part of the fourth discourse. In traditional Hebrew manuscripts and books, such statements serve as structural markers that help readers navigate the text. The phrase 'נשלם' (completed) is commonly used to indicate the conclusion of a major section.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Fourth Discourse — This line marks the formal conclusion of the first part of the fourth discourse of Ma'avar Yabok. 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer) is the title of this section, which focuses on prayer as a spiritual substitute for the Temple incense offerings. As seen in the context, this section explores how proper recitation of the Ketoret (incense) formula creates metaphysical effects similar to the actual Temple service. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Structural Organization — This concluding statement reflects the meticulous structural organization of Ma'avar Yabok, where the author Aaron Berechia of Modena divided his work into distinct discourses (ma'amarim), with each discourse further divided into parts. The work consistently uses these formal closing statements to mark the end of major sections, helping readers navigate the complex text.

pleted.

'anan' (cloud), and 'ketoret' (incense). This richly metaphorical title evokes the imagery of prayer rising like incense smoke, drawing on the biblical concept that prayers ascend to heaven like the smoke of the Temple incense offering. This section specifically focuses on prayer as a spiritual substitute for the Temple incense service.

Discourse 7

קרבן תענית / Sacrifice of Fasting

פרק א׳

Chapter 1

חלק שני

Part Two

מה יעשה האיש אשר מלכו
חפץ ביקרו יבלה ימיו בטוב
ושנותיו בנעימים ובעת במרום
תמריא וירים לעד קולו וישב
בדד וידום ויאחז פני כסא מידי
חושבו בנשמתו ובגדולת בוראו
איזה דרך יחלק אורו וגם כי
בסלע תחתון ישכון ויתלונן
למרחוק עיני שכלו יביטו ויבין
מפלשי עב ואיך פרש עליו הודו
ולזאת יחרד לבו ויתר ממקומו
על כי רעתו רבה ואין קץ לעונו
ומה יעשה ויחיה יקדש עצמו
במשרתי עליון לפחות יום א׳
בכל מחזור המאור הקטן מדי
חדש בחדשו כי אפי׳ יום אחד
בשנה חשוב שנה כההוא דהוו
קרו ליה בר בי רב דחד יומא
וכ״ש אם יהיה מבני העולם הבא

What should a person do if his King desires his honor?[1] He should spend his days in goodness and his years in pleasantness. And when he soars upward and raises his voice forever, sitting alone in silence, 5R grasping the face of the throne while contemplating his soul and the greatness of his Creator, which path should he take to distribute His light?[2] Even though he dwells and lodges in the lowest rock,[3] his eyes of intellect gaze afar, perceiving the expanses 10R of the clouds and how His glory spreads over him. For this reason his heart trembles and shudders from its place, because his wickedness is great and his sin has no end. What should he do to live? He should sanctify himself like the servants of the Most 15R
High for at least one day during each cycle of the lesser luminary[4] [the moon], from month to month. For even one day in a year is considered a year, like that case where they called someone “a one-day scholar.” How much more so if he becomes one of 20R

[1]The King here refers to God, and the phrase suggests divine favor. The passage is addressing how a person should respond when God shows special favor or interest in them.
[2]This suggests that one of the spiritual seeker's responsibilities is to not only receive divine light but also to channel it outward, becoming a vessel for divine influence in the world.
[3]This is a metaphor for the physical body and material existence, contrasted with the soul's ability to perceive spiritual realms despite being confined to physicality.
[4]This refers to the monthly lunar cycle. In Kabbalistic thought, the moon (the ‘lesser luminary’ from Genesis 1:16) represents the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah) that waxes and wanes. Fasting during the moon's waning phase is presented as a way to participate in cosmic restoration.

וילבש מדא ועטופא דמצוה ודקדושה באגרא דתעניתא בכל עת מיעוט הלבנה כי חסד אל ישגיח בכחו ויפרוש עליו אורו וישיב נפשו מני שחת לאור באור החיים. כתר לי אחי זעיר ואחוך בקרבן תענית זה כי אך טוב לישראל הוא: [i]

those destined for the World to Come, and wears the garment and wrapping of commandment and holiness at the expense of fasting during each time of the moon's waning. For God's loving-kindness will watch over him with His power, spread His light upon him, and restore his soul from destruction to walk in the light of life. Wait for me a little, my brother,[1] and I will teach you about this sacrifice of fasting, for it is only good for Israel.

נמצא כתוב בשם האלהי חסידא קדישא הרב רבי יצחק לוריא אשכנזי[ii] כל מה שתמצא בדברי הראשונים תוכחות על עונות סגופים ויסורים קשים שלג וחרולים והפסקות וענויים[iii] לא נזכרו אלא למי שאין עמלו בתורה אבל מי שתורתו אומנותו ויודע דעת ויראת ה׳ זאת היא תקנתו לא יחלש ולא יבטל מלמודו כי התורה היא אש ומים[iv] המוציאה לרויה האדם העוסק בה והיא תבלין נגד יצה״ר[v] כדאמרו במדרש תהלים על פסוק בלבי צפנתי אמרתך מי שהתורה בלבו אין יצה״ר שולט

It is written in the name of the divine, holy, pious Rabbi Isaac Luria Ashkenazi that all the admonitions concerning sins,[2] severe mortifications, suffering, snow, thorns, fasts, and afflictions that you find in the writings of the early authorities were mentioned only for those who do not labor in Torah study. But for one whose Torah study is his occupation[3] and who knows knowledge and fear of the Lord, this is his remedy: he should not weaken nor cease from his studies. For the Torah is fire and water, bringing satisfaction to the person who engages with it, and it is an antidote against the evil inclination, as they said in the Midrash on Psalms regarding the verse, "I have hidden Your word in my heart" [Psalm 119:11]—one who has Torah in his heart, the evil inclination has no dominion over

[1] The Hebrew 'כתר לי אחי זעיר' literally means 'crown me a little, my brother,' but is an idiomatic expression meaning 'wait for me' or 'bear with me.' The author is transitioning to a detailed explanation of fasting practices that follows.

[2] The original text lists specific forms of mortification and suffering that were prescribed by earlier Jewish pietistic literature as penance for sins, including exposure to snow, thorns, and various forms of fasting and self-affliction.

[3] The Hebrew phrase "torato umnuto" is a Talmudic term referring to someone whose primary occupation is Torah study, often used for full-time scholars.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part 1, Introduction — This passage echoes the introduction's focus on spiritual introspection and preparation for death through sacred practices | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First Discourse (Siftei Tzedek), Chapter on Visiting the Sick — This passage extends the first discourse's themes about spiritual preparation to monthly fasting practices as another means of achieving spiritual purification | Cf. Ecclesiastes 7:2 — The passage's emphasis on contemplating one's mortality and spiritual state echoes Ecclesiastes' wisdom about reflecting on life's end

[ii] This refers to Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), known as the ARI (the Lion), who revolutionized Kabbalah in Safed. The honorific "ha-Elohi" (the divine) indicates his perceived supernatural spiritual stature.

[iii] This refers to ascetic practices common in medieval Jewish pietistic literature, including rolling in snow, fasting, and self-mortification as penance for sins. The ARI is presented as rejecting these for Torah scholars.

[iv] This is a kabbalistic concept that Torah contains seemingly opposite qualities—both the severity of fire (din/gevurah) and the kindness of water (chesed), making it a perfect balance of divine attributes that can purify the soul.

[v] This refers to the Talmudic statement (Kiddushin 30b): "I created the evil inclination, and I created Torah as its antidote (tavlin)"—literally "spice" or "remedy."

בו ולא נוגע בו וכה״א תורת
אלהיו בלבו לא תמעד אשוריו
והיא תושיה לבחות חומריות
והיא כיין המשמח ודבש הממתיק
וחלב המלבין ושמן המצחצח
לנפש רוח ונשמה[i] ואמרו במדרש
אפי׳ אדם יוצא למיתה התורה
שלמד בה היא משיבה נפשו
באומרו תורת ה׳ תמימה משיבת
נפש ואמרו במדרש תהלים כי
יצה״ר אין לו רשות ליכנס בבית
המדרש וכה״א לפתח חטאת
רובץ וכל מי שהוא עוסק בתורה
אין יצה״ר שולט בו וגרסי׳
בשמות רבה קחו עמכם דברים
ואין דברים אלא ד״ת שנאמר
אלה הדברים ודברים אני מבקש
ואני מוחל לכם כל עונותיכם
א״ל אין אנו יודעין א״ל בואו
והתפללו לפני ואני מקבל
תפלתכם ואמר הקב״ה פיהם
של ישראל הוא חרבם[ii] שנאמר
רוממות אל בגרונם. אך עצת זו
ישפר עליה יום אחד מהשבוע
יתרחק מבני אדם[iii] [iv]

him and does not touch him. And so it says, “The Torah of his God is in his heart; his steps do not falter” [Psalm 37:31]. It [Torah] is substance for the material faculties, and it is like wine that gladdens, honey that sweetens, milk that whitens, and oil that polishes[1] for the soul, spirit, and higher soul. And they said in the Midrash, “Even if a person is going to his death, the Torah he has learned restores his soul,” as it says, “The Torah of the Lord is perfect, restoring the soul” [Psalm 19:8]. And they said in the Midrash on Psalms that the evil inclination has no permission to enter the house of study, and so it says, “Sin crouches at the door” [Genesis 4:7]. And whoever engages in Torah study, the evil inclination has no dominion over him. And we read in Exodus Rabbah: “’Take words with you’ [Hosea 14:3]—and ‘words’ refers only to words of Torah, as it is said, ‘These are the words’ [Deuteronomy 1:1]. [God says:] ‘I seek words, and I will forgive all your sins.’ They said to Him, ‘We do not know [what to say].’ He said to them, ‘Come and pray before Me, and I will accept your prayer.’” And the Holy One, blessed be He, said, “The mouth of Israel is their sword,”[2] as it is said, “The high praises of God are in their throats” [Psalm 149:6]. But this advice he should improve upon: one day of the week he should distance himself

[1] This poetic formulation presents Torah as affecting all aspects of human existence through four sensory metaphors corresponding to different aspects of spiritual experience.

[2] This metaphor draws on the continuation of Psalm 149:6, which mentions “a two-edged sword in their hands.” The midrash reinterprets this to mean that Israel’s power comes through their mouths—through prayer and Torah study—rather than physical weapons.

[i] This references the kabbalistic concept of the three main levels of the soul: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul). The text suggests Torah study positively affects all three levels.

[ii] This references the idea that Israel’s power lies in prayer and Torah study rather than physical weapons. It connects to Psalm 149:6, “The high praises of God in their throats and a two-edged sword in their hands.”

[iii] This introduces the concept of hitbodedut (spiritual seclusion or meditation), a practice emphasized in various Jewish mystical traditions, particularly in Hasidism.

[iv] Cf. Exodus Rabbah 38:4 — The author cites this midrash to support the idea that Torah study is more powerful than physical mortifications as a spiritual remedy, emphasizing that words of Torah and prayer are what God truly desires from us. | Cf. Psalm 19:8 (19:7 in Christian Bibles) — This scriptural reference is used to emphasize the author’s main point that Torah study has restorative power even for someone facing death, positioning Torah study as superior to physical mortifications. | Cf. Psalms 149:6 — The author uses this reference to highlight the power of the mouth through prayer and Torah study, metaphorically describing it as Israel’s ‘sword’—their spiritual weapon against sin and suffering. | Cf. Genesis 4:7 — This verse is used to illustrate that the evil inclination (yetzer hara) waits outside the house of study but cannot enter it, emphasizing Torah study as a protected space free from spiritual corruption. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author is drawing on kabbalistic imagery of Torah having paradoxical qualities that make it uniquely suited to balance human nature and combat the evil inclination. | Cf. Ma’avar Yabok, Fourth Discourse, Part One — This passage creates a parallel between Torah study and the

from people[1]

ויתבודד בינו לבין קונו ותתקשר מחשבתו בו כאילו כבר עמד לפניו ביום הדין וידבר לאל יתברך רכות כאשר ידבר העבד אל רבו והבן מול אביו וכמה היה מזרז על זה החכם מורי כמהר״ר ישראל סרוק זצ״ל בשם רבותיו.[i] מצינו כמה חסידים שהיו בוררים להם ימים מיוחדים ולא היו רוצים לראות שום אדם אלא מתפללים וקוראים כל היום לעצמם ואם מחמת איזה אונס הוצרך להם לראות פני אדם לא היו מתעכבים עמו זמן רב. וכתב בעל ספר החרדים ובכמה חברים הראשונים נמצא שבהתבודדות והפרישות והדבקות היו נוהגים בו חסידים יע״ש ולמד מהרר״י מקובל הנ״ל שזה מועיל לנפש שבעתים מהלימוד[ii] ולפי כח ויכולת האדם יפרוש ויתבודד יום אחד בשבוע או בכל ט״ו יום או יום א׳ לחדש ולא יפחות מזה[iii] וכ״כ הרמב״ן על מה שנאמר ביעקב אבינו קום עלה בית אל ושב שם מאי ושב כמו בשובה ונחת

And he should seclude himself with his Creator, and his thoughts should be bound to Him as if he already stood before Him on the Day of Judgment,[2] and he should speak gently to God, blessed be He, as a servant speaks to his master and a son before his father. And how much did my teacher, the sage Rabbi Israel Sarug of blessed memory, urge this practice in the name of his teachers. We find that many pious ones would select specific days when they did not wish to see any person, but would pray and read by themselves all day, and if due to some necessity they needed to see someone, they would not tarry with them for long. And the author of Sefer HaCharedim wrote that among many of the early companions, it is found that the pious ones practiced seclusion, separation, and devotion, see there. And Rabbi Israel the Kabbalist mentioned above taught that this benefits the soul sevenfold more than study.[3] According to one's strength and ability, one should separate and seclude oneself one day a week, or every fifteen days, or one day a month, but not less than this. And so wrote Nachmanides regarding what was said of our father Jacob, "Rise, go up to Beth El and dwell there"[4]—what does "dwell" mean? Like "in returning and rest," meaning that he should prepare his mind in calmness and settled awareness with the Blessed One. And we find in the Zohar, Parashat Be-

[1]This introduces the practice of spiritual solitude (hitbodedut), suggesting a balanced approach that combines Torah study with periodic withdrawal for contemplation and spiritual refinement.

[2]This imagery connects the practice of spiritual seclusion with preparation for divine judgment, suggesting that hitbodedut serves as a rehearsal for the ultimate encounter with God after death.

[3]The numerical specification 'sevenfold' likely carries kabbalistic significance, as the number seven represents completeness or perfection in Jewish tradition. This suggests that hitbodedut offers a more complete spiritual benefit than conventional study.

[4]The passage interprets Jacob's ascent to Beth El (literally 'House of God') as a spiritual practice rather than merely a geographical movement, connecting physical pilgrimage with internal spiritual journey.

incense offering discussed earlier in the book—both serve as spiritual protections against harmful forces and provide healing to the soul.

[i]The author identifies Rabbi Israel Sarug as his teacher and a transmitter of the mystical practice of hitbodedut (spiritual seclusion). This indicates a direct chain of kabbalistic tradition from Sarug to the author. Rabbi Israel Sarug was a prominent kabbalist who spread Lurianic Kabbalah throughout Italy in the late 16th century.

[ii]This is a striking claim that spiritual seclusion (hitbodedut) benefits the soul seven times more than Torah study. This represents a distinctly mystical prioritization that differs from mainstream rabbinic tradition, which typically elevates Torah study above all other religious practices.

[iii]The text provides a practical graduated system for the practice of spiritual seclusion based on individual capacity, with minimum requirements. This demonstrates the practical rather than purely theoretical orientation of Ma'avar Yabok's mystical guidance.

היינו שיכין דעתו בשובה ובישוב
הדעת עמו יתברך. ומצינו בזהר
פ׳ בשלח דף מ״ד ע״ב כי אלישע
100 לא היה נקרא איש האלהים
אלא בהיותו מתבודד לעצמו
דאמר מאי שנא הכא דאמר איש
האלהים וכד הוה במתא אלישע
אלא הכא ודאי איש האלהים
105 דהכא היא דוכתיה ולא במתא
ולא בשעתא דהוו בני נשא קמיה
עוד אמר שם דאמר אלישע בגין
דמתפרשנא בלחוד באתר דא
אצטריכנא לאסתכלא ברגיזו
110 דעלמא. וזהו ששנינו חסידים
הראשונים היו שוהים שעה אחת
וכו׳. שהיו מפנים דעתם מענייני
העולם ומקשרים דעתם לאדון
הכל במורא ובאהבה ומדמים
115 אור השכינה שעל ראשיהם כאילו
מתפשט סביבם והם בתוך האור
יושבים[i] ואז היו רועדים בטבע
ושמחים על אותה רעדה[ii] כדבר
שנאמר עבדו את ה׳ ביראה
120 וגילו ברעדה. ויפה לאדם
להרגיל עצמו להתבודד בכל
יום בבית הכנסת לעצמו אחר
תפלת שחרית מוכתר בתפילין
ובציצית[iii] ויקבע לו שם עת
125 קבוע להתבודדות וללמוד כל
אחד כפי יכלתו ויהיו לטוטפות

shalach, page 44b, that Elisha was not called "man of God" except when he was secluding himself, as it says, "What is different here that it says 'man of God,' while when Elisha was in the city [it doesn't]? Rather, certainly here he is 'man of God,' for this is his place, not in the city, and not when people are before him." It further says there that Elisha said, "Because I separate myself alone in this place, I need to contemplate the agitation of the world."[1] And this is what we learned: "The early pious ones would wait one hour, etc."—for they would clear their minds of worldly matters and bind their thoughts to the Master of All in awe and love, and they would imagine the light of the Divine Presence above their heads as if it spread around them, and they sat within the light, and then they would tremble naturally and rejoice in that trembling,[2] as it is said, "Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling." And it is good for a person to accustom himself to seclude himself every day in the synagogue alone after the morning prayer, crowned with tefillin and tzitzit,[3] and to establish for himself there a fixed time for seclusion and study, each according to his ability, and let the words of the Psalmist be as frontlets between his eyes: "But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God, etc.""

100R 105R 110R 115R 120R

[1] This suggests that part of the purpose of seclusion is not merely to escape worldly concerns but to gain perspective on them from a position of spiritual detachment, allowing for clearer contemplation of human affairs.

[2] This describes a physical response to mystical practice that combines seemingly contradictory states: trembling (typically associated with fear) and joy. This paradoxical experience reflects the complexity of mystical encounters with the divine as both awesome and delightful.

[3] The imagery of being 'crowned' with ritual objects elevates these physical items to symbols of spiritual royalty, suggesting that through proper observance, the practitioner takes on a quasi-royal spiritual status during hitbodedut practice.

[i] This describes a specific visualization technique in which the practitioner imagines being surrounded by divine light. This practice relates to similar techniques in both Lurianic Kabbalah and earlier Heikhalot mysticism where visualization of divine light plays a central role in achieving mystical states.

[ii] The text describes physical trembling as a natural physiological response to deep meditation, accompanied by spiritual joy. This description of bodily reactions to mystical practice is significant for understanding the embodied nature of Jewish mysticism, which doesn't separate physical and spiritual experience.

[iii] The recommendation to practice hitbodedut while wearing tefillin and tzitzit illustrates how this mystical practice is integrated with traditional Jewish ritual observance rather than standing apart from it.

בין עיניו דברי המשורר ואני
כזית רענן בבית אלהים וגו׳. [i]

הנה זאת חקרנוה כן היא כי
מה טוב ומה נעים לכל משכיל
דורש את ה׳ שבכל ערב ראש
חדש לפחות יקרא יום צום
ורצון לה׳ [ii] ומצינו במדרש
תהלים דבתפלת יום א׳ נקרא
האדם צדיק הרבה בדף ט״ל
ע״ב ויכוין כי גופו יהיה מזבח
כפרה במיעוט חלבו ודמו על
מיעוט הירח העליונה [iii] ובזה
יהיה שכרו על ה׳ אלהיו וזה
יכוין בכוונה שהביא בזהר פ׳
וארא דף כ״ז ע״א בפסוק ואהבת
את ה׳ אלהיך ובפרט בפסוק
שמע ישראל ובנפילת אפים
ויאמר בקשת המתחלת בכתר אל
שבסדר ראש חדש במעירי שחר
שלנו מכוונת על חדוש הלבנה
העליונה ואם יפסוק תעניתו

Behold, we have investigated this and confirmed it: How good and pleasant it is for every wise person who seeks the Lord to designate at least every eve of the new month as a day of fasting and divine favor. We find in the Midrash on Psalms that through prayer on a single day, a person can be called exceedingly righteous, as stated on page 39b. One should intend that one's body serve as an altar of atonement,[1] diminishing one's fat and blood in correspondence with the waning of the supernal moon,[2] and thereby one's reward will come from the Lord. This intention should follow the kavvanah (mystical intention) brought in the Zohar, Parashat Va'era, page 27a, regarding the verse "And you shall love the Lord your God," particularly when reciting the Shema Yisrael and during Nefilat Apayim (prostration prayer). One should recite the supplication beginning with "Crown of God" from our "Illuminators of Dawn" New Moon service,

[1] This metaphor of the body as an altar appears throughout Jewish mystical literature. Through fasting, the diminishment of bodily fat and blood is likened to a sacrificial offering, creating a spiritual parallel to Temple worship.

[2] The timing of this practice at the end of the month (when the moon wanes) is significant. Kabbalistic thought views the monthly cycle of the moon as reflecting cosmic processes involving the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). Human ritual action at this time is believed to contribute to cosmic restoration.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach, page 44b — The author uses this Zohar reference to demonstrate that even biblical prophets like Elisha achieved their highest spiritual status not in cities or among people, but in seclusion. This supports the text's central argument that spiritual contemplation in isolation is superior to public religious activity. | Cf. Psalms 2:11 — This biblical verse is used to legitimize the mystical practice of hitbodedut (seclusion) by showing that the trembling that occurs during deep meditation is not a negative response but part of proper divine service as described in scripture. | Cf. Psalms 52:10 — This psalm verse is offered as a meditation focus, with the image of a flourishing olive tree in God's house representing the spiritual vitality that comes from regular hitbodedut practice. | Cf. Sefer HaCharedim — By citing Sefer HaCharedim (a 16th century ethical work), the author is connecting his recommended practices to an established tradition, showing that hitbodedut has precedent in earlier rabbinic literature and is not an innovation. | Cf. Genesis 35:1 — By citing Nachmanides' interpretation of this verse, the author establishes biblical precedent for the practice of spiritual seclusion, suggesting that God's command to Jacob was actually an instruction to engage in contemplative spiritual practice. | Cf. Isaiah 30:15 — The author connects the command to Jacob with Isaiah's teaching about salvation coming through quietness and trust, suggesting that spiritual seclusion (hitbodedut) is aligned with prophetic teachings about how to connect with the divine.

[ii] The author is recommending at minimum a monthly fast on the eve of each new month (Erev Rosh Chodesh), which became known as Yom Kippur Katan (Minor Day of Atonement) in Jewish practice.

[iii] This establishes a mystical correspondence between the human body during fasting and the waning moon. In Kabbalah, the moon symbolizes the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) or Malkhut (the lowest sefirah), and its monthly diminishment represents a cosmic state requiring rectification through human ritual action.

ויקבל הוא עליו מבעוד יום
באופן שיהיה כ״ו שעות בתענית
זה יפה מאד ולא יאכל בקבלת
תענית זה בשר ולא ישתה יין
אלא פת וקטנית כסעודת עבור
החדש או פת הצנומא בקדירה
או פת ופירות ואח״כ יטבול
פעם אחת פתו באפר ויפסיק
ויפריש בכל שעה מכ״ו שעות
התענית פרוטה מכיסו ליתנה
לעני הגון בלילה קודם שיאכל
באופן שיהיו לפחות כ״ו פרוטות
ובזה ירחיב לו קב״ה כנפ״י
החסד. ובהפרשת כל פרוטה
יאמר אני בצדק אחזה פניך[i] צדק
צדק תרדוף למען תחיה וגו׳
או ה׳ זכרנו ברך. או מזמור
שמעה ה׳ צדק או בבא אליו. או
שיר המעלות ממעמקים קראתיך
וכדומה. ובעת שרוצה לשכב
על מטתו יפריש כל הפרוטות
משעות שיעברו עליו בשינתו
ויכוין לביסום מדת הדין וליחדה
עם מדת החסד אשא במיא ומיא
באשא[ii] וישים לבו במחשבה
ורעותא ליחוד תרין דודין
עילאין בסוד רוחא וליחוד
קוב״ה ושכינתיה בקלא ודבורא
דיליה ולעורר עליו כ״ו החסדים
הגדולים שבהלל הגדול[iii] בכח
שם העצם בן ד׳ אותיות ברוך
הוא בנקודתו הידוע ויחשוב כי
בהאיר האותיות ונקודות שם which is directed toward the renewal of the supernal moon. 145R

If one concludes one's fast having accepted it while still daytime, so that the fast lasts twenty-six hours,[1] this is very beneficial. During the meal before the fast, one should not eat meat nor drink wine, but rather consume bread and legumes like a 150R meal marking the passing of the month, or bread soaked in a pot, or bread and fruits. Afterward, one should dip one's bread once in ashes[2] and then break one's fast. For each of the twenty-six hours of the fast, one should set aside a perutah (small 155R coin) from one's pocket to give to a worthy poor person on the night before eating, so that there are at least twenty-six perutot. Through this, the Holy One, blessed be He, will extend to you the wings of kindness. 160R

When setting aside each perutah, one should say: "Through righteousness I shall behold Your face" or "Pursue justice, that you may live" or "O Lord, remember us and bless us" or Psalm 17 ("Hear, O Lord, righteousness") or Psalm 7 ("When he came 165R to him") or Psalm 130 ("From the depths I called You") or similar verses. When preparing to lie down on one's bed, set aside all the perutot for the hours that will pass during sleep, and intend to sweeten the attribute of judgment and unite it with the attribute 170R of loving-kindness[3]—fire in water and water in fire. Focus one's heart in thought and will on unifying the two supernal beloveds in the mystery of spirit, and on unifying the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence through one's voice and speech, and to 175R awaken the twenty-six great kindnesses mentioned in

[1] The specification of 26 hours is significant because 26 is the numerical value of the divine name YHVH (10+5+6+5). This creates a correspondence between the duration of the fast and God's essential name.

[2] This symbolic action of dipping bread in ashes before ending the fast represents humility and mortality, similar to the custom of placing ashes on the forehead on fast days.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgments' (המתקת הדינים), where harsh divine judgment (din) is tempered with mercy (rachamim) through proper ritual actions, creating cosmic harmony.

[i] The verse 'Through righteousness I shall behold Your face' (Psalm 17:15) creates a connection between the act of charity (tzedakah, from the same root as tzedek, righteousness) and divine vision. The other suggested verses also emphasize righteousness and divine assistance.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase meaning 'fire in water and water in fire' refers to the kabbalistic concept of harmonizing opposing forces (fire representing judgment/Gevurah and water representing kindness/Chesed) to create spiritual balance.

[iii] The 'Great Hallel' (Psalm 136) contains 26 verses, each ending with 'for His kindness endures forever.' The number 26 corresponds to the numerical value of the divine name YHVH (10+5+6+5), connecting these acts of kindness directly to God's essential nature.

הקדוש הזה יאורו ויתוקנו כל
שאר ההויות המסתעפים ממנו
כי רוח פחד לכל ועיין במדרש
קהלת דף ע״ג ע״ב קדושת שם
185 המפורש קצת מכחו הנאדרי
ובלילה בהתבודדותו יקרא
משירי דוד בפיו בקול ובניגונים
ויעסוק במשנה ואם שגור בפיו
סדר קדשים היה טוב לקרותו
190 כלו בכל היום ההוא ולפחות
יקרא זבחים ומנחות ותמיד
ומדות כדאמרי׳ במדרש תלמידי
חכמים העוסקים בהלכות
עבודה מעלה אני עליהם כאלו
195 נבנה בית המקדש בימיהם שבין
כלם הם ט״ל פרקים כמספר
יה״ו במילוי האותיות והוא
סוד מוריד הטל ויוסיף עוד
לקרואי׳ פרקים במסכת יומא
200 שהם מ״ט פרקים[i] לפתוח עליו
מ״ט שערי טהרה ולהבריח
מעליו המ״ט מדרגות הטומאה
בסגולת המשניות שהם בסוד עץ
הדעת טוב ורע ורשב״י בפרשה
205 שמות דף ט״ו ע״ב הביא כמה
רמזים למספר המ״ט:[ii]

the Great Hallel through the power of the four-letter essential Name, blessed is He, with its known vowelization. Consider that when the letters and vowel points of this holy Name illuminate, all other divine 180R Names that branch from it will be illuminated and rectified, for the spirit of awe is upon all, as explained in Midrash Kohelet, page 73b, regarding the sanctity of the explicit Name and some of its glorious power.

During the night in solitude, recite David's songs 185R aloud with melodies, and engage in studying Mishnah. If you are fluent in the Order of Kodashim (Holy Things), it would be good to recite it all on that day. At minimum, read Zevachim, Menachot, Tamid, and Middot, as they stated in the Midrash: 190R
"I consider Torah scholars who engage in the laws of the Temple service as if the Temple were rebuilt in their days."[1] Together, these comprise thirty-nine chapters, corresponding to the numerical value of YH"V when spelled with full letters, which is the 195R mystery of "Who brings down the dew." One should add more chapters from the tractate Yoma, which has forty-nine chapters, to open the forty-nine gates of purity and drive away the forty-nine levels of impurity through the power of the Mishnayot, which re- 200R late to the mystery of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, in Parashat Shemot, page 15b, brought several allusions to the number forty-nine.

[1] This reflects the rabbinic principle that studying the laws of Temple service can spiritually substitute for the actual Temple rituals that can no longer be performed after the Temple's destruction. In kabbalistic thought, such study creates the same cosmic effects as the original rituals.

[i] The number 49 appears frequently in Jewish mysticism, representing completeness (7×7) and the fullness of divine emanation. The 49 gates of purity mentioned later correspond to the 49 days of the Omer counting between Passover and Shavuot, seen as a period of spiritual purification.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Va'era, page 27a — The author is referring readers to the Zohar's explanation of how one's intention during prayer can affect cosmic realities, particularly how proper devotion during the Shema can influence the waning moon, which has kabbalistic associations with the divine feminine (Malkhut). | Cf. Me'irei Shachar (Illuminators of Dawn) — This appears to be either the author's own prayer collection or one used by his community in Modena. The reference indicates that the author is integrating his existing liturgical work with the spiritual practices described in Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Midrash on Psalms, page 39b — The author uses this midrashic source to establish the spiritual efficacy of devoting even a single day to prayer and fasting, suggesting that the eve of the new moon is especially potent for such spiritual work. | Cf. Midrash Kohelet, page 73b — The author references this midrash to substantiate his claims about the cosmic power of divine names, particularly how visualizing the Tetragrammaton with its proper vowelization can illuminate all other divine names that derive from it. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 15b — This reference connects the practice of studying 49 chapters of Mishnah to the 49 gates of purity and the mystical structure of the cosmos as explained in the Zohar. It reinforces the kabbalistic worldview that specific numbers of ritual actions correspond to cosmic structures.

פרק ב׳

Chapter 2

וראוי לבעל תורה להרגיל
עצמו לקרוא לפחות שתא סדרי
משנה[i] פעם אחת בשנה בהבנת
פשטי דבריהם כי נעמו ואשרי
ת״ח שמשומר למודו בידו
כדאמרי׳ במדרש משלי דף ס״ט
ע״א שהקב״ה אומר לת״ח הבא
לפניו אמור לפני מה שקרית
ומה ששנית מכאן אמרו כל מה
שקרא ושנה האדם יהיה תפוס
בידו שלא תשיגהו בלימה ליום
הדין וע״ש מכל פרטי השאלות
ששואלין לת״ח ובדף ס״ח ע״א
ספר בכבוד שנעשה ע״י אליהו
לר״ע אחר מיתתו[ii] ואיך הושכב
על מטתו בכבוד והדר כי ברכה
לראש משביר[iii] ואם המתענה
הזה אינו בעל משנה ירבה
בשירי דוד ובעניות אחרונות
שבאיוב[iv] ויקראם בקול ובנחת
כי טוב מעט בכוונה מהרבות
בלא כוונה. בלילה קודם שכבו
ישב על גבי קרקע בחליצת
מנעל וסנדל ויתאבל על חרבן
הבית[v] ויספוד ויאנח בנוסח אהה

It is proper for a Torah scholar to accustom himself to read through the six orders of the Mishnah at least once a year, understanding their plain meanings, for they are pleasant. And fortunate is the Torah scholar whose learning is preserved in his hand,[1] as stated in Midrash Mishlei, page 69a, that the Holy One, blessed be He, says to the Torah scholar who comes before Him: "Tell Me what you have read and what you have studied." From here they said that whatever a person has read and studied will remain firmly in his grasp, so that he will not be overcome with shame on the Day of Judgment.[2] See there for all the detailed questions that are asked of Torah scholars. And on page 68a, it describes the honor that was shown by Elijah to Rabbi Akiva after his death, and how he was laid upon his bed with honor and glory, for "blessing is upon the head of the provider."

If this faster is not versed in Mishnah, he should increase his recitation of David's songs [Psalms] and the final lamentations of Job, and read them aloud and calmly, for a little with intention is better than much without intention.[3] At night before lying down, he should sit on the ground with shoes and sandals removed, and mourn for the destruction of the Temple,[4] and lament and sigh with the [1] This metaphorical expression means that the scholar has retained his learning in his memory and can readily access it.

[2] This reflects the Jewish belief that in the afterlife, people will be asked to demonstrate their Torah knowledge. Those who have forgotten what they learned will feel shame.

[3] This reflects a significant principle in Jewish religious thought that the quality of one's devotion (kavvanah/intention) often matters more than quantity. This concept appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok, particularly regarding prayer and rituals for the sick and dying.

[4] The destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem (first in 586 BCE by the Babylonians, then in 70 CE by the Romans) remains a central focus of Jewish mourning practices. By connecting personal fasting with national tragedy, the text integrates individual spiritual practice with collective historical consciousness.

[i] The six orders of the Mishnah are Zeraim (Seeds), Moed (Festival), Nashim (Women), Nezikin (Damages), Kodashim (Holy Things), and Taharot (Purities). Together they form the foundation of rabbinic Judaism's oral law.

[ii] This refers to a tradition that the prophet Elijah (who never died according to biblical accounts) honored Rabbi Akiva (R"A) after his martyrdom at the hands of the Romans. Such stories emphasize the enduring spiritual significance of great scholars even after death.

[iii] This is a reference to Proverbs 11:26, "Blessing will be upon the head of the provider," suggesting that those who share knowledge (like Rabbi Akiva) receive blessings.

[iv] The final chapters of the Book of Job (particularly chapters 38-42) contain God's response to Job from the whirlwind, Job's submission to divine wisdom, and his ultimate restoration. These passages are considered especially profound meditations on human suffering and divine justice.

[v] Mourning for the destruction of the Temple in Jerusalem was a regular practice among pious Jews. This act connects personal fasting and repentance with national tragedy and collective redemption.

נפשי על עוונותי ויאמר הוידוי
שסדרנו ביום ראשון של השבוע
במעירי שחר שלנו[i] וגם שם
לפניו הסדר הראוי ליאמר בכל
30 לילה אך בליל זה יוכל להוסיף
ברצונו מסדרים הכתובים שם
ואם אינו יוכל לקום הרבה קודם
אור היום[ii]

formula "Alas, my soul, for my sins," and recite the confession that we arranged for the first day of the week in our "Me'irei Shachar"[1] [Illuminators of Dawn], and also place before him the order that is proper to recite every night. But on this night he may add as he wishes from the orders written there. And if he cannot rise long before daylight... 30R

לפחות יאריך בבקשות עד
35 אחר חצות ברם היה יותר טוב
להקדים לשכב בנשף ראשון
ולקיים ביום הקדוש הזה חצות
לילה אקום[iii] וקודם קומו
מהארץ יתן בעפר פיו[iv] בבכי
40 ודמעה ויאריך בפסוקי שמירה
ברצונו וטוב שישכב עם בתי
ידים בידיו ואזור במתניו
ובהקיצו משנתו בעודו על
משכבו ירחש איזה פסוקי דרחמי
45 כאשר ישים ה׳ בפיו ויכוין
לתקון השעות שעברו ושיעברו
עליו בשינתו ועכ״פ יתחזק
לקשר מדת לילה ביום ויעסוק
במשניות קדשים ובספר הזהר
50 אם חלק לו ה׳ בו חלק ויקרא
פרק דספרא דצניעותא[v] שהם

He should at least prolong his supplications until after midnight. However, it would be better to go to sleep early in the evening and fulfill on this holy day [the verse] "At midnight I will rise" [Psalms 119:62]. Before rising from the ground, he should place his mouth in the dust with weeping and tears, and extend his recitation of protective verses according to his desire. It is good to lie down with hand coverings on his hands and a belt around his loins. Upon awakening, while still on his bed, he should murmur some verses of mercy as God places in his mouth, and he should focus his intention on rectifying the hours that have passed and will pass during his sleep. In any case, he should strive to connect the attribute of night with day,[A] and he should study Mishnah tractates of the Order of Kodashim [Holy Things] and the Book of Zohar if God has granted him a portion in it.[2] He should read a chapter of Safra 35R 40R 45R 50R

[A] Or: "he should strengthen himself to bind the quality of night with day" — This alternate translation maintains the more literal sense of 'strengthen himself' (יתחזק) and 'bind' (לקשר), which might better preserve the active spiritual effort implied in the original. However, the original translation effectively communicates the kabbalistic concept involved.

[1] This appears to be the author's own prayer collection, organized by days of the week. The name means "Illuminators of Dawn," suggesting prayers meant to be recited in the early morning hours.
[2] This phrase reflects the common rabbinic attitude that understanding of mystical texts like the

[i] "Me'irei Shachar" (Illuminators of Dawn) was the author's own prayer collection, organized by days of the week with specific prayers, confessions, and meditations for different occasions.
[ii] Cf. Midrash Mishlei — This reference supports the importance of retaining Torah study in one's memory, as the Holy One will ask scholars to recite what they have learned when they come before Him after death. | Cf. Midrash Mishlei — This reference describes the honor shown to Rabbi Akiva after his death by Elijah, reinforcing the author's point about the eternal value of Torah study and the respect accorded to scholars even after death. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — This is the author's own prayer collection, which he references to guide the reader to specific confessional prayers to be recited during the fasting practice he is describing.
[iii] This is a reference to Psalms 119:62, "At midnight I will rise to give thanks to You for Your righteous judgments." Rising at midnight for prayer and study is considered especially meritorious in Jewish mystical tradition.
[iv] This practice of placing one's mouth in the dust refers to the biblical verse in Lamentations 3:29, "Let him put his mouth in the dust; perhaps there is hope." It symbolizes complete humility and submission before God during intense supplication.
[v] Safra D'Tzniuta (Book of Concealment) is one of the most esoteric and cryptic sections of the Zohar, containing profound mystical teachings. It appears in the Zohar's commentary on the Torah portion of Terumah.

בפרשת תרומה ואח״כ ילך
למשמרתו עם אחוזת מריעיו
להתפלל על חרבן הבית[i] כאשר
הצגנו לפני בני גילנו על פי
הכוונה שהיא בהקדמת אשמורת
הבקר שלנו המכוונת מאד כפי
עניות דעתנו לתקון יום כזה
כאשר עיני המעיין בצדק ישפוט
ויבין ויוסיף מדעתו אך לא
יהיה לו שיח וסיג עם שום אחד
מהם רק להצטרף עמהם לענות
דברים שבקדושה וינעים בפיו
הזמירות בבית הכנסת ויתפלל
במורא ויראה רבה ויכוין
בתפלתו כפי הבנתו וישתדל
להשלים ק׳ ברכות[ii] בעניית
אמו אחרי ברכות השחר מבניו
ותלמידיו ויכוין בחזרת שליח
צבור התפלה יותר משאר ימים
ואחר התפלה יתעכב בבית
הכנסת מעוטר בציצית ותפלין
ושם יעסוק בתחינות ובקשות
ומזמורים כפי כוונתו כי תפלת
ישרים רצונו ואמרו במדרש
תהלים מזמור ק״מ אמר קודשא
בריך הוא לדוד רנן לפני
ואני אפלטך דכתיב רני פלט
תסובבני סלה ואת״ל יקרא
המשניות במסכתות שאמרנו
וישוב ויקרא בספר הזהר ואם

D'Tzniuta [Book of Concealment] which is found in the Torah portion of Terumah. Afterward, he should go to his watch with his companions to pray for the destruction of the Temple, as we have presented before our contemporaries according to the intention 55R that is in the introduction to our Morning Watch, which is very much directed, according to our limited understanding,[1] toward the rectification appropriate for such a day. The observer will judge fairly, understand, and add from his own knowledge. But 60R he should not engage in casual conversation or idle chatter[A] with any of them, only joining with them to respond to sacred matters.[2] He should pleasantly chant the hymns in the synagogue and pray with awe and great reverence, directing his inten- 65R tion in prayer according to his understanding. He should strive to complete the hundred blessings[3] by answering "Amen" after the morning blessings from his sons and disciples. He should concentrate during the prayer leader's repetition of the Amidah more 70R than on other days. After prayer, he should remain in the synagogue, adorned with tzitzit and tefillin, and there engage in supplications, petitions, and psalms according to his intention, for "the prayer of the upright is His desire" [Proverbs 15:8]. And they said 75R in Midrash Tehillim, Psalm 140, "The Holy One, blessed be He, said to David: 'Sing before Me and I will deliver you,' as it is written, 'Songs of deliverance surround me, Selah'" [Psalms 32:7]. And if you wish to say, he should read the Mishnah tractates we 80R

[A] Or: "discourse and fence" — The literal translation of 'שיח וסיג' would be 'discourse and fence,' but in this context it appears to be an idiomatic expression for unnecessary or idle conversation. The original translation captures the intended meaning better, though the literal translation might preserve the wordplay in the original Hebrew.

Zohar requires divine assistance and is not equally accessible to all, even with study.

[1] This expression of humility is characteristic of kabbalistic authors who, despite their erudition, emphasize their inadequacy before divine mysteries. It also serves as a rhetorical device to protect against criticism.

[2] This refers to participating in communal prayer elements that require a quorum (minyan), such as Kaddish, Kedushah, and Barchu, while avoiding mundane conversation that would detract from the spiritual focus of the fast day.

[3] This refers to the rabbinic obligation to recite one hundred blessings daily. On fast days when meal blessings are omitted, one needs to be especially conscious to find other ways to reach this number, such as answering 'Amen' to others' blessings.

[i] Praying for the destruction of the Temple refers to lamenting its destruction and praying for its rebuilding, a practice especially appropriate during fast days.

[ii] The obligation to recite one hundred blessings daily is based on a rabbinic interpretation of Deuteronomy 10:12, "What (מה) does the Lord your God require of you..." where the word מה is read as מאה (one hundred).

יתעכב שם בבית הכנסת או בבית מדרשו עד אחר חצות זה יהיה לו תקון גדול וביום יקרא פרשת עשרת הדברות ופרשת הירא שבעקב[i] ואם יאמר סדר המעמדות[ii] נ״ל שיפה עשה ואם יקרא בפיו קצור המצות להרמב״ם או העשי״ן והלאוי״ן שבסמ״ג[iii] או ההזהרות גם זה יהיה תקון לתעניתו.[iv]

mentioned and return to read the Book of Zohar. If he remains there in the synagogue or in his study hall until after midday,[1] this will be a great rectification for him. During the day, he should read the passage of the Ten Commandments and the passage about fear [of God] in [the Torah portion of] Ekev. If he recites the order of Ma'amadot [daily Temple service readings], it seems to me that he has done well. And if he reads aloud the Abbreviated Commandments of Maimonides, or the positive and negative commandments in the Semag [Sefer Mitzvot Gadol], or the admonitions, this too will be a rectification for his fast.[2]

ואם יהיה מלמד תנוקות לא יבטל תלמוד תורה שלהם אך ימעט ממה שכתוב בסדר הזה כי מאן דמתני אין למעלה ממנו[v] ברם יזהר למעט בדברי חול ככל האפשר לו ואל יוציא קללה מפיו ביום ההוא אפילו לא יכוין אלא לזרוק בהם

If he is a teacher of children, he should not neglect their Torah study, but rather reduce some of what is written in this regimen, for one who teaches has no superior. However, he should be careful to minimize secular talk as much as possible and not let a curse escape his lips on that day, even if he only intends to express frustration. Most of his speech should be in the holy tongue [Hebrew]. In summary, this person

[1] The author emphasizes extended prayer and study during fast days, with midday representing a significant threshold. In Jewish tradition, divine mercy is considered more accessible during the morning hours, while judgment intensifies in the afternoon.

[2] The concept of 'rectification' (tikkun) is central to Kabbalah, suggesting that religious practices repair cosmic damage caused by sin. This passage presents multiple ways to achieve such rectification, acknowledging different capacities and preferences among practitioners.

[i] The "passage about fear" refers to Deuteronomy 10:12-22 in the Torah portion of Ekev, which begins with "And now, Israel, what does the Lord your God require of you but to fear the Lord your God..."

[ii] Ma'amadot are selections of Torah readings, prayers, and psalms corresponding to the daily Temple service, recited by those who cannot study Torah full-time as a substitute for the sacrificial offerings.

[iii] The Semag (Sefer Mitzvot Gadol) by Rabbi Moses of Coucy is a 13th-century legal code that organizes the commandments into positive (עשין) and negative (לאוין) precepts.

[iv] Cf. Psalms 119:62 — The author references this verse to promote midnight prayer as a powerful spiritual practice, echoing King David's devotion to rising at midnight for prayer, which Ma'avar Yabok consistently presents as an optimal time for spiritual work. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim, Psalm 140 — This midrashic passage is cited to emphasize the spiritual power of singing praises to God, showing how devotional singing becomes a means of spiritual protection and salvation, which fits with Ma'avar Yabok's focus on prayer as a protective spiritual practice. | Cf. Safra D'Tzniuta in Parshat Terumah — The author recommends reading this esoteric kabbalistic text from the Zohar as part of the spiritual preparation during the fast day. This cryptic and profound text would create a powerful mystical focus, consistent with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on kabbalistic meditation. | Cf. Proverbs 15:8 — This biblical verse is cited to establish the theological foundation for extended prayer, emphasizing that sincere prayer from the righteous is desired by God, supporting the extensive prayer practices recommended throughout Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar (Illuminators of Dawn) — The author references his own prayer society or collection called 'Illuminators of Dawn,' which he has mentioned elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok. This self-reference shows how the current work builds upon his previous liturgical compositions and practices.

[v] This is a Talmudic principle meaning 'one who teaches [Torah to children] has no superior,' emphasizing the supreme religious value of education.

מרה[i] ורוב דבורו יהיה בלשון הקודש[ii] כלל הדברים יראה האיש המתבודד הלז באילו כל היום הזה הוא עומד בג״ע לפני השכינה. ויהא נר דולק בבית הכנסת לשמו להזכיר לטוב נשמתו לפני השם וכבר אמרו בגמרין ובמדרש שיר השירים מפי רבותינו בשבחם יושבי עיר אושא שכר שהושלם לעובד אדום[iii] על שהדליק נר לפני הארון וכבר דברנו בסוד הנר של בית הכנסת במאמר ראשון ומי שאינו בעל משנה יאריך בסדר התחנונים שבמחזורים ויחרוז מתורה לנביאים ומנביאים לכתובים.[iv] עוד נאות למשכיל לקרוא מגילת שיר השירים בכוונה ביום זה כדאמרו שם לא ניתן שיר השירים לישראל אלא לשבחן של ישראל ולבן אין דורשין אותו לעולם לגנאי שלהם כך אמר רבי יהודה לרבי מאיר כמה פעמים. וכלל זה יהיה ביד האדם בכל עת וזמן בהזמין עצמו לעשות איזה מצוה או תקון ויחוד טוב לומר בפיו קודם אקרא לאלהים עליון וגו׳. ופסוק ה׳ יגמור בעדי וגו׳ שנזכרו בשתי פסוקים אלה ג׳ שמות הכוללים כל מיני שפע[v] ורב

engaging in spiritual seclusion should imagine that throughout this entire day he stands in the Garden of Eden before the Divine Presence.[1]

A lamp should be lit in the synagogue in his name to favorably remember his soul before God. Our Sages have already stated in the Talmud and Midrash Song of Songs, praising the inhabitants of the city of Usha, about the reward given to Obed-Edom for lighting a lamp before the Ark.[2] We have already discussed the mystery of the synagogue lamp in the first discourse. One who is not versed in Mishnah should extend his recitation of supplications found in the prayer books, and weave together verses from Torah to Prophets and from Prophets to Writings.

It is also appropriate for the discerning person to read the scroll of Song of Songs with proper intention on this day, as it is said there: "The Song of Songs was given to Israel solely for their praise, and therefore it should never be interpreted to their discredit"—thus Rabbi Judah said to Rabbi Meir many times.

This principle should be in one's hand at all times: when preparing to perform any commandment, rectification, or unification,[3] it is good to first recite: "I will call upon God Most High," etc., and the verse "The Lord will complete [what concerns me]," etc. These two verses mention three divine names[4] that encompass all types of abundance and goodness—El, Elohim, and YHVH—besides the hidden mysteries they contain. For this special

[1] This metaphorical instruction exemplifies the mystical orientation of Ma'avar Yabok, where physical ritual practices are meant to create corresponding spiritual states of consciousness.

[2] The connection between lamp-lighting and spiritual merit forms part of the theological foundation for the practice of memorial candles (ner neshamah) for the deceased.

[3] These three terms represent increasingly mystical levels of religious practice in Kabbalah: commandments (mitzvot) are basic religious obligations; rectifications (tikkunim) are spiritual repairs; and unifications (yichudim) are advanced kabbalistic practices of joining divine attributes.

[4] The three divine names El, Elohim, and YHVH are understood in Kabbalah to represent different divine attributes: El corresponds to Chesed (loving-kindness), Elohim to Gevurah (strength/judgment), and YHVH to Tiferet (beauty/harmony).

[i] A Hebrew idiom meaning 'to express frustration' or 'to rebuke harshly,' literally 'to throw bile at them.'

[ii] The Hebrew language, considered sacred in Jewish tradition, especially in prayer and Torah study.

[iii] Refers to the biblical account in 2 Samuel 6:11-12 where Obed-Edom was blessed for housing the Ark of the Covenant. The Talmudic tradition adds that he specifically received reward for lighting a lamp before the Ark.

[iv] A method of prayer that systematically draws verses from the three sections of the Hebrew Bible in sequence, creating a comprehensive spiritual practice.

[v] The three divine names mentioned (El, Elohim, and YHVH) are understood in Kabbalah to channel different types of divine abundance and blessing when recited with proper intention.

טוב הלא הם אל אלהים ה׳
מלבד הסודות הכמוסים שבהם
לסגולת זה אח״כ יאמר ויהי
נועם ה׳ אלהינו עלינו וגו׳ ובזה
יצליח דרכו וישכיל וכ״ש שיש
לו לישא על שפתיו פסוקים
אלו בכל שעה מהיום הנזכר
עם שאר פסוקי דרחמי כאשר
ישים ה׳ בפיו והודוי שהוא בסוף
סדר הג׳ מימים אחרונים בימי
השבוע במעירי שחר שלנו הם
מכוונים הרבה להאמר ביום
בזה. וקודם תפלת המנחה יקדים
לבית הכנסת לא פחות משעה
אחת ושם ישב בדד וידום ויחשוב
תחלה בגדולת יוצר הכל וכמה
גבהו דרכיו מדרכי בני אדם
ועם כל זה הוא בוחר בשירי
זמרה ואומר לישראל השמיעני
את קולך ואח״כ בלבבו יבין
וידע כמה הוא נבזה וגרוע ויעיר
במחשבותיו עונות נעוריו ובפרט
כל מה שפעל ועשה מיום ר״ח
שעבר עד יום ר״ח זה ויספוד
עליהם ובזה לא ייראא מימי רע
כדאמרי׳ במדרש תהלים על
פסוק למה אירא בימי רע עון
עקבי יסובניi אותם שדועכים
את העון ברגליהם בעקביהם
וכל המעביר עונו מנגד עיניו
אין הקב״ה מוחל לו לכן יקיים
וחטאתי נגדי תמידii ולפי כוון
מחשבות לבו כן יקרא בפיו
פסוקי דרחמי וסליחה ואם
ישבר לבו בקרבו וידמע אז
טוב לו ויעביר הדמעות על
מצחוiii להעביר רשמי וכתמי
העבירות ששם נרשמים. וסדרי

purpose, one should then say: "May the pleasantness of the Lord our God be upon us," etc. By doing so, one's path will prosper and succeed. How much more so should one carry these verses on one's lips every hour of the designated day, along with other verses of mercy as God places in one's mouth. The confession that appears at the end of the third order for the last days of the week in our "Me'irei Shachar" [prayer collection] is particularly appropriate to be recited on such a day.

Before the afternoon prayer, one should arrive at the synagogue no less than an hour early. There, one should sit alone in silence and first contemplate the greatness of the Creator and how elevated His ways are above human ways. Nevertheless, He desires songs of praise and says to Israel: "Let me hear your voice." Afterward, in one's heart, one should understand and know how despicable and deficient one is, and awaken in one's thoughts the sins of one's youth, particularly everything one has done from the previous new moon until this new moon, and lament over them.[1] In this way, one will not fear evil days, as explained in the Midrash on Psalms regarding the verse: "Why should I fear in days of evil? The iniquity at my heels surrounds me"—referring to those who trample iniquity with their feet, with their heels. For anyone who puts his sin out of sight, the Holy One, blessed be He, will not forgive him. Therefore, one should fulfill "my sin is always before me," and according to the direction of one's heart's thoughts, so should one recite verses of mercy and forgiveness. If one's heart breaks within and tears flow, it is good, and one should pass the tears over one's forehead[2] to remove the impressions and stains of transgressions that are recorded there.

The sequences of verses that we have arranged to be recited daily in the morning and afternoon prayers are, in our opinion, very appropriate to be recited

[1] The Hebrew 'yispod' suggests a formal, ritualized lamentation rather than mere regret, indicating a structured practice of confronting one's sins.

[2] This physical practice reflects the kabbalistic concept that the forehead (metzach) is where one's deeds are spiritually recorded, with sins leaving impressions that can be cleansed through the ritual application of tears of genuine repentance.

[i] This creative interpretation of Psalm 49:6 plays on the word 'ekev' (heel) to suggest that one should 'trample' or actively confront one's sins rather than ignore them.

[ii] From Psalm 51:5, this verse is a central principle in Jewish penitential practice, teaching that one should keep awareness of one's sins to maintain humility and motivation for improvement.

[iii] This practice reflects the kabbalistic belief that sins leave spiritual impressions on the forehead that can be cleansed through genuine tears of repentance.

הפסוקים אשר סדרנו להאמר מידי יום ביומו בשחרית ומנחה הם לדעתנו מאד מכוונים להאמר ביום רצון כזה ואפי׳ מי שאינו מרגיל עצמו בהם בכל יום ויודפסו בסוף ד׳ מאמרותינו אלה לזכות הרבים בהם אם יגזור ה׳:[i] on such a favorable day, even for one who does not accustom himself to them daily. They will be printed at the end of these four discourses of ours to benefit the public, God willing.

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

בשעת תפלת המנחה יתריע בפה באומרו הנוסח עננו ה׳ עננו שבמחזורים כדאמור רבנן במסכת תענית בתפלת המנחה נענה אליהו[ii] ואמרי׳ במדרש מזמור קמ״א במנחה מתה נפשי עלי ומעי מתחלפין לפיכך צריך אדם להתודות חטאתו ולהתחנן בתפלת המנחה לכן נאמר משאת כפי מנחת ערב ואח״כ יתפלל מנחה עם הצבור בכוונה כפי טוהר לבו ואל יסתכל אנה ואנה בפני שום אדם ויסתיר עצמו בטליתו ואל יזוז מבית הכנסת אם אפשר לו עד

During the afternoon prayer, he should call out vocally by reciting the formula "Answer us, O LORD, answer us"[1] found in the prayer books, as the Rabbis stated in the Tractate of Ta'anit: "Elijah was answered during the afternoon prayer." And it is said in the Midrash on Psalm 141: "In the afternoon my soul faints within me and my internal organs are transformed." Therefore, one must confess one's sins and supplicate in the afternoon prayer, as it is said: "May the lifting of my hands be as the evening offering." Afterward, he should pray the afternoon prayer with the congregation with intention according to the purity of his heart, and he should not look here and there at any person, but should conceal himself in his prayer shawl. He should not move from the 5R 10R 15R

[1] This is a liturgical response called 'Anenu' that is added to the silent Amidah prayer on fast days. Its placement in the afternoon prayer is significant because according to tradition, this is when divine mercy is most accessible.

[i] Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author references his own prayer collection 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), which appears to contain specially arranged confessional prayers. He specifically mentions that the confession from the third order for the last days of the week is particularly appropriate for the day of spiritual seclusion and fasting. | Cf. Garden of Eden before the Divine Presence — This reference frames the spiritual practice being described as one that should elevate the practitioner to a state of mystical consciousness, as if they were standing in the Garden of Eden (a spiritual realm) in the direct presence of the Divine. This reinforces the mystical orientation of Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. the mystery of the synagogue lamp in the first discourse — The author is creating an internal cross-reference to his earlier writing in the first discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, where he apparently discussed the mystical significance of lighting lamps in the synagogue. This indicates the interconnected nature of the work's sections. | Cf. Obed-Edom and the Ark — The author references the biblical account of Obed-Edom, who housed the Ark of the Covenant and was blessed for it (2 Samuel 6:11-12). Here, the Talmud and Midrash are cited as teaching that Obed-Edom's reward was specifically for lighting a lamp before the Ark, emphasizing the spiritual merit of lamp-lighting as a devotional practice. | Cf. verses of mercy as God places in one's mouth — This references the biblical concept found in passages like Exodus 4:12 where God tells Moses 'I will be with your mouth and teach you what to say.' In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it suggests that during spiritual seclusion, one should be open to divine inspiration regarding which verses to recite.

[ii] This refers to the story in Tractate Ta'anit (I Kings 18) where Elijah's prayer was answered during the afternoon prayer when he challenged the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel. This established the afternoon prayer time as particularly powerful for favorable divine response.

כי יפנה כל יום הקדוש ההוא
ואז יפטר בכי טוב וילך ויאכל
בשמחה לחמו וישתה בלב טוב
יינו בסעודת החדש שהיא מצוה
ובכל פעם שירחץ ידיו יאמר
ארחץ בנקיון כפי וגו׳.[i] אך
אל יאכל אכילה גסה ויזהר
בכל תקוני השלחן גם בסעודה
ההיא בדקדוק ככתוב על ספרי
המחברים בפרט בספר ראשית
חכמה שער הקדושה ובזה יובטח
לו כי רצה אלהים את מעשיו
ביוה״כ קטן ההוא[ii] ובה יוסיף
אומץ בכל ערב ר״ח כדאמרי׳
במדרש שיר השירים מה יונה
מחדשת בכל חדש וחדש גורן כך
ישראל מחדשין בכל חדש תורה
ומעשים טובים ויזהר בחדש
הבא מריחוק עבירה יותר ממה
שנזהר בחדש עבר למען ימעטו
בעיניו תלאות נפשו בפקודת
מעשיו אחר שעבר החדש הזה וכן
ידקדק בדקדוקי מצות ותמיד
יוסיף שמן לנר. וזאת תורת
האדם הנלבב להרגיל עצמו
בכל ימי חלדו להשים אל לבו
על כל פגע ומקרה בלתי טהור
המתגולל עליו מאיזה מין שיהיה
שהכל בא לו מדין הצדק בדין
ובמשפט ישר כמו שעשו אחי יוסף
במצרים ולפי בחינת היסורין
הבאין עליו יפשפש וימשמש
במעשיו כי ודאי ימצא בו דופי
וידע נאמנה דאיהו הוא דעוית
לנפשיה ולגרמיה ומשובותיו
הם המוכיחים ומצערים אותו
לא זולת. אם נפל למשכב
בסיבת חולי כבר באו פרטים
ובחינות בזה מבוארים במאמר
ראשון בחסד אל וממשפט הזה
יבחן וידע במקרים המתחדשים
עליו מידי זמן בזמן בשאר
מיני יסורין או חיסור ממון וכן

synagogue, if possible for him, until that entire holy day has passed. Then he may depart in good spirits and go eat his bread with joy and drink his wine with a glad heart at the New Moon feast, which is a commandment. Each time he washes his hands, he should say: "I will wash my hands in innocence, etc." But he should not eat excessively, and he should be careful about all the proper table arrangements even at this meal, with precision as written in the books of the authors, particularly in Sefer Reishit Chochmah, Gate of Holiness. In this way, he will be assured that God has accepted his deeds on this Minor Yom Kippur, and thereby he will gain strength on every eve of the new month, as it is said in the Midrash on Song of Songs: "Just as a dove renews its threshing floor every month, so Israel renews Torah and good deeds every month." He should be more careful in the coming month to distance himself from transgression than he was in the past month, so that the troubles of his soul will be diminished in his eyes when his deeds are examined after this month has passed. Thus he should be meticulous in the details of commandments and always add oil to the lamp.

This is the teaching for a person of understanding: to accustom himself throughout all his days to take to heart every unpleasant encounter and impure incident that befalls him, of whatever kind it may be, that everything comes to him from righteous judgment, in straight justice and judgment, as Joseph's brothers realized in Egypt. According to the nature of the sufferings that come upon him, he should examine and search his deeds, for he will certainly find a flaw in himself. He should know with certainty that it is he who has perverted his soul and his essence, and that his backsliding is what reproves and pains him, nothing else. If he falls ill and becomes bedridden, the details and aspects of this have already been explained in the first discourse by God's kindness. From this judgment, he can examine and understand the events that occur to him from time to time in other types of suffering or financial loss, as well as all distress that arises, even if it seems trivial in his eyes, like the stubbing of his finger. It has already been

[i] This is the beginning of Psalm 26:6, which continues: "and I will go around Your altar, O LORD." It became a traditional verse to recite during ritual hand-washing.

[ii] Yom Kippur Katan (Minor Yom Kippur) was a practice instituted by 16th century kabbalists, particularly in Italy, that involved fasting and special prayers on the day before each new month (except before Tishrei, when actual Yom Kippur would soon follow).

כל צער מתחולל ואפי׳ יהיה
קטן בעיניו כנקיפת אצבעו
כבר הכריזו עליו מלמעלה כך
לסבת עונותיו כי אפי׳ צפרא
מבלעדי שמיא לא מתצד[i] כאשר
הראו להרשב״י ובנו בעת צאתם
מהמערה כדאמרי׳ בגמרין
ובמדרש רבה. וכן אל יפול
לבו עליו אם זרים אוכלים חילו
או אם קרוביו ומיודעיו ואחיו
ובית אביו מעבירים עליו את
הדרך וכל אחד מברך לעצמו
ואוכל וחדי והוא חוץ למחנה
מושבו עם גוזליו מרחף יאלם
ולא יפתח פיו כי ידע נאמנה
כי הוא חרץ לו משפטו זה
ומי יתן כי תחשב לו לתקון
מקלקול הצינורות[ii] משפע
המים המתוקים והזכים אשר
היו ראויים לבא בדרכי הנועם
מאשר הנחלים לכבודה בת מלך
פנימה דרך צנורות הקדושה
שהם אחים וקרובים ואחוזים
זה בזה ולא יתפרדו ותהום אל
תהום קורא לחבירו לקולם והוא
בחטאיו הסב השפע אחורנית ח״ו
או כי לא הרבה החלב המלובן
בתוכם כראוי לחלק נשמתו או
נפשו ורוחו אשר חנן לו אלהיו
בהתרשלו מכמה מצות ויחודים
ותקונים ואפי׳ כדהוה אפשר
ליה למעבד כפי מיעוט ידיעתו
והשגתו לא עבד על כן מודדים
לו בזה מדה כנגד מדה ויחשוב
זה לו לתקון ויכשיר מעשיו.
ובראש כלם יקדש עצמו בשעת תשמיש. ובעונות הראויות פן decreed upon him from above thus because of his sins, for even a bird is not caught without Heaven's 60R decree, as was shown to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his son when they emerged from the cave, as stated in the Talmud and Midrash Rabbah.

Similarly, he should not let his heart fall if strangers consume his wealth, or if his relatives, 65R acquaintances, brothers, and father's house bypass him, with each one blessing himself and eating and rejoicing while he remains outside the camp with his young ones, hovering silently without opening his mouth. For he should know with certainty 70R that he himself has determined this judgment for himself. Would that this might be considered for him as a rectification for the disruption of the channels of the sweet and pure waters that were meant to come through pleasant paths from the 75R cascade of streams to honor the king's daughter within, through the channels of holiness, which are brothers and relatives bound together without separation, with deep calling to deep at the sound of Your waterfalls.[1] But he, through his sins, has 80R turned the divine flow backward, God forbid, or because he did not increase the white milk within them as appropriate for his soul portion, or his soul and spirit which God graciously gave him, by being negligent in several commandments, unifications, 85R and rectifications. Even what was possible for him to do according to his limited knowledge and comprehension, he did not do. Therefore, they measure out to him measure for measure, and he should consider this as a rectification for himself 90R and improve his deeds.

Chief among all these, he should sanctify himself during marital relations.[2] And at the appropriate times, lest, God forbid, he pour out to the garbage and labor in vain and give birth to chaos.[3] At the 95R

[1] This poetic phrase combines kabbalistic concepts of interconnected divine channels with biblical language from Psalm 42:8. It envisions the properly functioning spiritual universe as a harmonious family where divine energies flow properly between related aspects.

[2] Jewish mystical tradition places great emphasis on the spiritual significance of marital intimacy, seeing it as a potential act of cosmic unification when performed with proper intentions and sanctity.

[3] These are euphemisms for improper emission of seed or approaching marital intimacy without

[i] This Aramaic phrase means "even a bird is not caught without Heaven's decree" and refers to the concept of divine providence extending to the smallest details of creation.

[ii] This reflects kabbalistic terminology where spiritual channels (tzinnorot) convey divine abundance. Sin is understood as causing disruption to these channels, while proper spiritual practice restores their function.

ח״ו יערה לאשפה ולא יגע לרי״ק
ולא ילד לבהל״ה ולפחות יכוין
למה שכתבנו בכוונת הזווג בסוף
מעירי שחר כי היא דרך כבושה
אפילו למאן דלא קרי ולא תני
וכל המוסיף הרי זה משובח.
ומכל הבא עליו יודה למלך
המשפט דיהיב לוה למיטרפיסיה
בהאי עלמא. ואולי בזה נתן
רמז למה שאמרו בגמרא ירמיהו
אחי העביר עלי את הדרך יאמר
שלהיות שהוא במעשיו בלתי
טובים הרים וסלק חס ושלום
תרין דודין הממתיקין דאינון
יו״ד ה״א מעל הבנים שהם ימי
הבנין והכבו״ד המקבלת מהם
הנכללים בוא״ו ה״א וזה היה
בשומעו לאחיו שהוא יצה״ר
אח לצרה יולד[i] והוא רע ומר
כי הוא מסטין ואח״כ מקטרג
ונוטל רשות ויורד זה גרם כי
העבירו מעליו את הדרך ומלת
עלי יהיה כמו בסבתי שכן הוא
הלך בדרך לא כבושה. כלל
הדברים טוב לגבר כי ישא
עול היסורין על צוארו באהבה
וביראה ובפרט כשאין בהם
ביטול תורה ותפלה כי אם יזכה
המקום ימלא חסרונו והתוספת
יהיה מרובה על העקר כדרך
ברכתו של הקב״ה כדאיתא בב״ב
פ׳ יש נוחלין בבנו של יוסף בן
יועזר דאעבריה אבוהי מנכסיה
דהוה עיליתא דדינרי. ועינא
פקיחא דלית ליה גבינין דהבט
אל עמל לא יוכל[ii] אמטי לידיה

very least, he should direct his intention according to what we wrote about the intention for marital union at the end of Me'irei Shachar, for it is a well-trodden path even for one who has not studied Scripture or Mishnah, and whoever adds to this is praiseworthy. For all that comes upon him, he should give thanks to the King of Judgment who gives the borrower what he needs to sustain himself in this world. 100R

Perhaps this provides a hint to what they said in the Talmud: "Jeremiah, my brother has bypassed me on the road." It means that because he, through his improper deeds, raised and removed—God forbid—the two beloveds who sweeten, which are Yod-Hei, from above the children, who are the days of building, and the Glory that receives from them, which are included in Vav-Hei.[1] This happened when he listened to his brother, who is the evil inclination, "a brother born for adversity," who is evil and bitter because he first entices, then accuses, then receives permission and descends. This caused them to bypass him on the road, and the word "alai" (upon me) should be understood as "because of me," for indeed he walked on an untrodden path. 105R 110R 115R

The essence of the matter is that it is good for a person to bear the yoke of sufferings upon his neck with love and reverence, especially when they do not involve neglect of Torah and prayer. For if he merits, God will fill his lack, and the addition will be greater than the original, in accordance with the Holy One's way of blessing, as found in Bava Batra, chapter "There Are Those Who Inherit," regarding the son of Joseph ben Yoezer, whose father disinherited him from his property, which was an upper chamber full of dinars. But the watchful eye that has no eyelids,[2] which cannot look upon iniquity, brought to his hand a pearl inside a fish, which was valued 120R 125R 130R proper spiritual intentions. The Hebrew uses wordplay with biblical terms: 'lashpah' (garbage), 'la-rik' (in vain), and 'la-behalah' (for chaos/terror).

[1] This is highly technical kabbalistic language. The 'two beloveds' refer to the divine attributes of Wisdom and Understanding (Chokhmah and Binah), represented by the letters Yod and Hei of the divine name. The 'children' or 'days of building' refer to the lower six divine attributes, while 'Glory' (Kavod) refers to the attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom), represented by the final Hei. Together these make up the four-letter divine name YHVH.

[2] This is an anthropomorphic description of divine providence, emphasizing that God's oversight is constant and unblinking, particularly regarding moral judgment.

[i] This is a play on Proverbs 17:17 "A brother is born for adversity." The author reinterprets this to refer to the evil inclination (yetzer hara) as a "brother" that brings adversity.

[ii] This refers to God as "the watchful eye that has no eyelids, which cannot look upon iniquity," combining kabbalistic imagery with the biblical phrase from Habakkuk 1:13.

מרגניתא בגו ביניתא ושיימוה בתליסרי עיליתא דדינרי א״כ עליו לשבח ולהדר למלך שמיא דכל מעבדוהי קשוט ואורחיה דין כי לא לאדם דרכו על כן בסוף ימי החדש ביום שופכו נפשו לה׳ יעביר לנגד עיניו כל מאורע הן לטוב הן למוטב קטן או גדול שעבר עליו בכל ימי החדש וישים בכף שניה עונותיו ויחדש וישפר מעשיו וישוב אל בעל ההשגחה ויודה לשמו כי טוב כי לעולם חסדו ואם האיש הלזה המתבודד יחשוב בסדר זמנים מתחלת ימי החדש עד סופו כפי הכוונה אשר הצגנו במאמר ראשון יושלם כוונת טהרתו יותר בנקל וירגיש בעצמו טוהר לב ברחמי שמים בהתקדשו עצמו למטה:[i] at thirteen upper chambers of dinars. Therefore, he should praise and glorify the King of Heaven, for all His works are truth and His ways justice, for "a man's way is not his own." Thus, at the end of the month, on the day when he pours out his soul to God, he should review before his eyes every event, whether good or bad, small or great, that has befallen him throughout the month. He should place his sins in the second pan of the scale,[1] renew and improve his deeds, return to the Master of Providence, and give thanks to His name, for He is good, for His kindness is everlasting. And if this secluded person contemplates the order of times from the beginning of the month to its end, according to the intention we presented in the first discourse, the purpose of his purification will be more easily fulfilled, and he will feel within himself purity of heart through the mercies of Heaven by sanctifying himself below.

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

הנה פתחנו פתח כחודה של מחט[ii] בתקון כולל זה ברם כל טהר ידים יוכל להוסיף אומץ על

We have opened a door as narrow as the eye of a needle[2] for this comprehensive rectification, yet anyone with pure hands can add strength to our

[1] This refers to a metaphorical weighing of one's deeds, with life events in one pan and personal sins in the other, emphasizing the importance of moral self-accounting and recognizing divine justice in one's experiences.

[2] This idiomatic expression indicates the author's humility, suggesting he has only begun to scratch the surface of this spiritual topic.

[i] Cf. Tractate of Ta'anit — The author cites this talmudic source to emphasize the special spiritual potency of the afternoon prayer time, particularly for fasting days. | Cf. Midrash on Psalm 141 — This midrashic source is used to establish the afternoon as a time of particular spiritual vulnerability and therefore an especially appropriate time for confession. | Cf. Sefer Reishit Chochmah, Gate of Holiness — The author refers readers to this ethical-kabbalistic work by Rabbi Eliyahu de Vidas for detailed instructions on maintaining proper sanctity during meals. | Cf. Midrash on Song of Songs — This midrashic source is used to establish the concept of monthly spiritual renewal, which forms the basis for the Yom Kippur Katan practice being described. | Cf. Story of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his son emerging from the cave — This talmudic story (from Shabbat 33b) is referenced to support the theological claim that even minor suffering is divinely ordained, as Rabbi Shimon and his son witnessed how even a bird's death was decreed from heaven. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author refers to his own work 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), which apparently contains instructions for proper mystical intentions during marital relations. | Cf. Bava Batra, chapter "There Are Those Who Inherit" — This talmudic story is used to illustrate how divine providence can transform suffering into blessing, with the final reward being greater than the initial loss. | Cf. First discourse of Ma'avar Yabok — The author refers readers to his earlier discussion in the first section of Ma'avar Yabok for a more detailed explanation of illness from a theological perspective.

[ii] This phrase literally means 'like the eye of a needle' and is a rabbinic expression for something very small or narrow, indicating the author's humility about his contribution.

דברינו בכוונות עליונות בהויות
ויחודים ותקונים המזיינים
ומדשנים לנפש כפי השגת יד
כי אי אפשר לכוין דברים אלו
בכתב כי יתארכו הגליונות ודי
לנו לעורר הלבבות מהאנשים
פחותי הערך כמוני הצריכים
תקון ודאי ורמות להם חכמות.
ויכוין בתענית כפי מה שבא בזהר
פרשת שמות דף כ׳ ע״ב והסדר
הראוי לנהוג בתענית ובמה
יעסוק בהם הנה באו מפורטים
בספר ראשית חכמה בשער
הנ׳[i] וגם גורי האר״י[ii] דרשו בהם
בפרט כוונות לכל מין תענית
ביחודים הנאותים ליאמר בהם
כפי פרטי העוונות הנה הנם
צמותים בספר ראשית חכמה
הקצר ובפרט התקון הכולל
מאתים תעניות עם הכוונות
שבהם ומאן דמצי לצעוריה
נפשיה טוב לקיים אותם. מלבד
קונטריסין רבים ונחמדים אשר
הם ביד משכילי עמנו ישמרם
ה׳ ומבקשי ה׳ יבינו כל ואם
המתבודד ה׳ זה המבקש לראות
עולמו בחייו ויהיה ממשפחת
הבריאים ויוכל לטהר עצמו
בטבילה ביום שלפני התענית או
ברחיצה ט׳ קבין[iii] אם ראה קרי
או קיים מצות עונה ובקבלתו
התענית מבעוד יום לא יאכל
בשר ולא ישתה יין תענית כזה

words through higher intentions, divine names, unifications, and rectifications[1] that arm and nourish the soul according to one's capacity. It is impossible to properly direct these matters in writing, as the pages would grow too lengthy. It is enough for us to awaken the hearts of people of little worth like myself, who certainly need rectification and for whom wisdom is too lofty.

One should direct one's intention during fasting according to what appears in the Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 20b. The proper order to follow during fasting and what one should occupy oneself with are detailed in Sefer Reishit Chochmah in the 50th Gate.[2] The disciples of the ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria) have also expounded upon them, particularly the intentions for each type of fast with the appropriate unifications to be recited according to the specific sins. These are compiled in the abridged Reishit Chochmah, especially the comprehensive rectification of two hundred fasts with their intentions. And one who is able to afflict himself[3] would do well to fulfill them.

Besides these, there are many delightful treatises in the possession of the enlightened among our people—may God protect them—and those who seek the Lord will understand everything. And if this God-fearing person who seeks to see his world during his lifetime belongs to the family of the healthy and can purify himself through immersion on the day before the fast, or by washing with nine kav of water if he experienced a nocturnal emission or fulfilled the marital obligation,[4] and accepts the fast while it is still day, not eating meat

[1] This refers to kabbalistic practices of meditation on divine names (kavvanot) and spiritual unifications (yichudim) that are central to Lurianic mysticism.

[2] Reishit Chochmah (Beginning of Wisdom) by Rabbi Elijah de Vidas was a major kabbalistic ethical work that systematized mystical practices for spiritual self-improvement.

[3] This refers to someone physically capable of undertaking extensive fasting as a spiritual discipline without endangering their health.

[4] These conditions require ritual purification before engaging in sacred activities according to Jewish law.

[i] Reishit Chochmah (Beginning of Wisdom) is a significant kabbalistic ethical work written by Rabbi Elijah de Vidas, a student of Moses Cordovero. The '50th Gate' likely refers to a section dealing with spiritual purification through fasting and related practices.

[ii] This refers to the disciples of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the ARI), the preeminent 16th-century kabbalist whose teachings revolutionized Jewish mysticism. His disciples systematized and spread his teachings throughout the Jewish world.

[iii] Nine kav of water is a prescribed amount for ritual purification when full immersion in a mikveh (ritual bath) is not possible. This measurement is discussed in Talmudic literature as an alternative form of purification.

יועיל לשלשה עשר תעניות כמו שבא בקונטרס אחד של החכם סרוק זצ״ל.[i] ועכ״פ יפרוש מתשמיש בליל תעניתו וטוב שירחץ מעט לפחות במקומות המטונפים שטהרה מביאה לידי קדושה כלל הדברים כל כ״ו שעות אלו[ii] יהיה תמיד לבו למעלה ועיניו למטה ולא ידבר דבור חול ככל האפשר לו ורובו של יום לפחות ישב לעצמו כי עקר גדול לתקון זה הוא התבודדות ותמיד יכניס אהבת ויראת שמים בלבו ויקדש מחשבותיו ורעיונותיו ככל האפשר לו. ובן כל מי שירא לנפשו מפני חלום רע או מפגע רע או משטן המשחית או משום איזה מקרה בלתי טהור פן יאונה אליו רעה כבר הוזהר במאמר המלך החכם כי ברוב חלומות והבלים ודברים הרבה כי את האלהים ירא ואמרו במדרש קהלת דף ע״ו ע״ב אמר רבי אם ראית חלומות קשין וחזיונות קשים והפוכין או שאתה מתייראי מהן קפוץ לשלשה דברים ואתה ניצל מהם דא״ר יודן בשם ר״א ג׳ דברים מבטלין גזירות רעות ואלו הם תפלה צדקה ותשובה רבי מונא אמר אף התענית דכתיב יענך ה׳ ביום צרה וכן אמרו בגמרין במס׳ ראש השנה. ובהנהגה זו כלהו אתנהו ביה ואמרו במדרש תהלים מזמור ק״ד אם זכית מלאכי שלום nor drinking wine—such a fast will be effective as thirteen fasts,[1] as is written in one treatise by the sage Rabbi Israel Sarug of blessed memory.

In any case, he should abstain from marital relations on the night of his fast, and it is good that he wash a little, at least in the unclean places, for purity leads to holiness. In short, throughout these twenty-six hours,[2] his heart should always be directed upward while his eyes are lowered, and he should not speak secular words as much as possible. For most of the day, at least, he should sit alone, as the primary foundation for this rectification is solitude.[3] He should always instill love and fear of Heaven in his heart and sanctify his thoughts and reflections as much as possible.

Similarly, anyone who fears for his soul because of a bad dream, or a harmful incident, or from the destructive adversary, or because of some impure occurrence, lest evil befall him—he has already been warned by the statement of the wise king: "For in the multitude of dreams and futilities and many words, fear God." And they said in Midrash Kohelet, page 76b: Rabbi said, "If you see difficult dreams and difficult and disturbing visions, or if you fear them, leap to three things and you will be saved from them." For Rabbi Yudan said in the name of Rabbi Eliezer, "Three things nullify evil decrees,[4] and they are: prayer, charity, and repentance." Rabbi Muna said, "Also fasting, as it is written: 'May the Lord answer you in the day of trouble,'" and so they said in our Gemara in Tractate Rosh Hashanah.

In this practice, all of these are included, and they said in Midrash Tehillim, Psalm 104: "If you merit, angels of peace will guard you, and no evil will touch you, as it is said: 'No evil will befall you.'" Therefore, one should accustom oneself to solitude for several

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic principle that proper intention and preparation multiplies the spiritual efficacy of religious observances.

[2] The number 26 is significant in Kabbalah as the numerical value of the divine name YHVH, suggesting that this extended fast period has cosmic significance.

[3] Hitbodedut (spiritual seclusion) became particularly important in post-Lurianic Kabbalah as a means of achieving mystical communion.

[4] This rabbinic teaching appears in the Talmud (Rosh Hashanah 16b) and is fundamental to Jewish approaches to averting divine punishment.

[i] This refers to Rabbi Israel Sarug, a contemporary and possibly a student of Isaac Luria, who spread Lurianic Kabbalah throughout Italy. The acronym זצ״ל means 'of blessed memory.'

[ii] The reference to 26 hours indicates an extended fast that begins before sunset on one day and continues until after nightfall the following day, with the number 26 also having mystical significance as the numerical value of the divine name YHVH.

משמרין אותך ואין נוגע בך דבר
רע שנאמר לא תאונה אליך רעה
ע״כ ירגיל עצמו בהתבודדות
קצת שעות מהיום על הדרך
הנזכר או ירבה בימים כאלו
כמו יום אחד לשבוע. ואם
יתענה סך תעניות הלא טוב
לו ליחד אחת מהם בראשיתם
ובסופם בהתבודד לעצמו עם כל
התקונים האלו ובזה יוסיפו עליו
אומץ מלמעלה וכבר נמצאו
בתקוני גורי האר״י המודפסים
כי בתקון יום א׳ יוכל אדם
להציל נפשו מכרת א׳ ואפי׳
באכול די מחיתו יע״ש וכ״ש אם
יוסיף בו התענית והתבודדות
ואם יהיה יום ששי בזה יזכה
לשתים להכין עצמו לחזות
בנועם ה׳ ולבקר בהיכלו לקבל
אור ג׳ שבתות.[i] שבת מלכתא.
ושבת הגדול. והשבת המתווך
ביניהם.[ii] להאיר נפשו רוחו
ונשמתו באור שבת שהוא מעין
העולם הבא ואז יקרא וה׳ יענהו
ולא יירא משוד כי יבא ויהיה
מוצק וישכון בטח ורענן ויתענג
על רב שלום ויזכה למה שאמרו
במדרש תהלים מזמור קי״ד בשם
פנחס הכהן בר חמא הרקיע
ששמו מרבות[iii] הקב״ה זורע
מעשיהם של צדיקים עליו והוא

hours of the day as mentioned, or increase such days to one day a week.

And if one fasts a number of fasts, it would be good to dedicate one of them at their beginning and their end to solitude with all these rectifications, and thereby strength will be added to him from above. It has already been found in the published rectifications of the ARI's disciples that through the rectification of one day, a person can save his soul from one spiritual excision,[1] even while eating sufficient for his livelihood—see there—and all the more so if he adds fasting and solitude. And if it is Friday, he will merit two things: to prepare himself to behold the pleasantness of the Lord and to visit His palace, to receive the light of three Sabbaths—the Sabbath Queen, the Great Sabbath, and the Sabbath that mediates between them[2]—to illuminate his soul, spirit, and higher soul with the Sabbath light, which is a foretaste of the World to Come.[3]

Then he will call and the Lord will answer him, and he will not fear when destruction comes. He will be firmly established and dwell securely and fresh, and delight in abundant peace. He will merit what they said in Midrash Tehillim, Psalm 114, in the name of Pinchas the Priest, son of Hama: "The firmament whose name is Aravot[4]—the Holy One, blessed be He, sows the deeds of the righteous upon it, and it produces fruit."

And the order of this fast will be like what they said in Midrash Shir HaShirim about an apple:[5] when you place an issar coin in it, you can

[1] Karet (spiritual excision) is considered one of the most severe spiritual penalties in Jewish tradition, referring to the soul being 'cut off' from its divine source.
[2] This reflects a kabbalistic understanding of Sabbath as having multiple spiritual dimensions that correspond to different aspects of divine reality.
[3] This reflects the rabbinic concept that Sabbath provides a glimpse of the messianic future, with its perfect rest and spiritual harmony.
[4] In rabbinic cosmology, Aravot is the seventh and highest heaven, where the divine throne is located and where the souls and deeds of the righteous are preserved.
[5] This refers to a rabbinic parable that illustrates how a small investment (the issar coin) can

[i] The 'three Sabbaths' mentioned likely correspond to the three levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) that are illuminated through proper Sabbath observance, particularly when preceded by spiritual preparation.
[ii] This describes three mystical aspects of Sabbath: 'Sabbath Queen' refers to the feminine divine presence that arrives on Sabbath; 'Great Sabbath' may refer to either the Sabbath before Passover or a cosmic spiritual level; while the 'mediating Sabbath' suggests an intermediate aspect connecting the other two.
[iii] According to rabbinic tradition, there are seven heavens, with Aravot (מרבות) being the highest. This highest heaven is where God is described as residing and where the souls of the righteous and their deeds are stored.

עושה פירות. וסדר התענית
זה יהיה ע״ד שאמרו במדרש
שיר השירים על תפוח שאתה
נותן בו איסר[i] ומריח בו כמה
ריחות וכן אמר משה לישראל
במצרים בדבר קל אתם נגאלים
כן ביום א׳ בחדש הבעל תשובה
יזכה ויחיה ויראה בטוב וישב
בקתדרא בג״ע כפי המשל המובא
במדרש קהלת דף ע״ג ע״א על
פסוק מה יתרון העושה ואמרו
במדרש תהלים דף מ״ג אמר
הקב״ה מי שישרתני בעה״ז הוא
ישרתני לעה״ב ועתיד הקב״ה
לעשות פיהם של צדיקים לעתיד
לבא כמעיין נובע[ii] שאונו פוסק
שם דף מ״ד. ומצוה קלה שהיא
בכאיסר אמרה תורה למען ייטב
לך והארכת ימים והעושה מצוה
זאת כתקנה מובטח אני כי תנתן
לו נפשו כמה דאמרו במשנה
פ״ג דמכות העושה מצוה אחת
על אחת כמה וכמה שתנתן לו
נפשו:[iii]

smell many fragrances. And thus Moses said to Israel in Egypt: "Through a simple matter you will be redeemed." Similarly, on one day in the month, the penitent will merit and live and see goodness and sit in a chair in the Garden of Eden, according to the parable brought in Midrash Kohelet, page 73a, on the verse "What profit has the worker?"

And they said in Midrash Tehillim, page 43: "The Holy One, blessed be He, said: 'Whoever serves Me in this world will serve Me in the World to Come.'" And in the future, the Holy One, blessed be He, will make the mouths of the righteous like a flowing spring that never stops,[1] as mentioned there on page 44. And regarding a minor commandment worth merely an issar coin, the Torah states: "That it may be well with you, and you may prolong your days." And one who performs this commandment properly, I am assured that his soul will be given to him, as they said in the Mishnah, Chapter 3 of Makkot: "One who performs a single commandment—how much more so will his soul be given to him."

105R 110R 115R 120R 125R

yield disproportionate benefits (many fragrances), similar to how a small spiritual action can have immense spiritual impact.

[1] This messianic image describes how in the World to Come, the righteous will effortlessly generate Torah insights, unlike in this world where wisdom requires great effort.

[i] An issar was a small coin of minimal value in Talmudic times, used here metaphorically to represent a small investment that yields significant returns, similar to how a minor spiritual practice can produce major spiritual benefits.

[ii] This is a messianic image describing how in the World to Come, the righteous will become fountains of divine wisdom, continuously generating new insights without effort, unlike in this world where Torah study requires great effort.

[iii] Cf. The Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 20b — The author cites this passage from the Zohar to establish authoritative guidance on the spiritual intentions (kavvanot) required during fasting practices. The Zohar was the foundational text of Jewish mysticism, so this reference establishes the kabbalistic framework for the practices being discussed. | Cf. Sefer Reishit Chochmah — This reference to Elijah de Vidas' influential 16th-century kabbalistic ethical work indicates that the practices being described are not innovations but rather are rooted in established mystical literature. Reishit Chochmah systematized Lurianic Kabbalah into ethical practices, making it a practical resource for the rituals described here. | Cf. Writings of Rabbi Israel Sarug — This reference to a treatise by Rabbi Israel Sarug (a contemporary and possibly student of Isaac Luria) helps establish the author's intellectual lineage within Lurianic Kabbalah. Sarug was known for systematizing and spreading Lurianic teachings throughout Italy, suggesting this reference serves to legitimize the efficacy of the fasting practices described. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 5:6 — The citation of "the wise king" (Solomon) regarding dreams and futilities serves as biblical authority for the seriousness of spiritual dangers. This scriptural reference establishes that even seemingly minor spiritual disturbances (like bad dreams) should be addressed through religious practices. | Cf. Midrash Kohelet (on Ecclesiastes) — This rabbinic source is cited to provide detailed guidance on the remedies for bad dreams and spiritual dangers, specifically identifying prayer, charity, repentance, and fasting as the solutions. This reference establishes the traditional rabbinic basis for the פרק ה׳

Chapter 5

הנהגה לבריאים לשמור בריאותם.[i] וגם לחולה שיחשב צערו וישוב אל יי בכל לבו[ii] [iii]

The regimen for the healthy to maintain their health.[B] And also for the sick person who should consider his suffering and return to the LORD with all his heart[1]

ההנהגה ביסורין שהן בגוף האדם כמו החולאים יש מהם שיתהוו משטות בני האדם כגון

Guidance for afflictions of the body such as illnesses: Some arise from human folly, like exposure to cold or traps. This resembles one who kills himself and 5R mystical practices being recommended. | Cf. Psalm 20:2 — This biblical verse is cited to specifically support the efficacy of fasting as a remedy for spiritual dangers, connecting the concept of "the day of trouble" with fasting practices. | Cf. Tractate Rosh Hashanah — This reference to the Talmud serves to establish that the practices being described are not merely kabbalistic innovations but have roots in classical rabbinic literature, giving them broader authority. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim on Psalm 104 — This midrashic source is cited to describe the spiritual benefits of the practices being recommended, specifically divine protection from harm. The reference to "angels of peace" suggests the creation of a protective spiritual environment through these practices. | Cf. Psalm 91:10 — This biblical verse reinforces the protective aspect of the spiritual practices, showing that proper observance of these rituals creates divine protection from harm. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim on Psalm 114 — This reference explains the cosmic significance of righteous deeds, describing how they are metaphorically "sown" in the highest heaven (Aravot) and produce spiritual fruit. This establishes the broader cosmological framework in which these spiritual practices operate. | Cf. Midrash Shir HaShirim (on Song of Songs) — This reference uses the metaphor of an apple and a coin to illustrate how a seemingly small spiritual action can produce disproportionately large spiritual benefits, supporting the author's claim about the efficacy of even a single day of spiritual practice. | Cf. Midrash Kohelet (on Ecclesiastes), page 73a — This reference elaborates on the spiritual rewards awaiting those who engage in the practices described, specifically placement in the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim, page 43-44 — This reference emphasizes the continuity between religious service in this world and the next, suggesting that the spiritual practices described create lasting relationships with the divine that extend beyond death. | Cf. Deuteronomy 22:7 — This biblical verse (from the commandment to send away a mother bird before taking its young) is cited to demonstrate that even seemingly minor commandments bring significant rewards, supporting the author's claim about the efficacy of the practices described. | Cf. Mishnah Makkot, Chapter 3 — This rabbinic source is cited to reinforce the principle that performing even a single commandment properly brings significant spiritual rewards, supporting the author's argument about the value of the spiritual practices described.

[B]Or: "A guide for the healthy to preserve their well-being" — This alternate translation captures the instructional nature of 'hanhagah' as a guide rather than just a regimen, and uses 'well-being' which has a more holistic connotation that might better reflect the integrated physical-spiritual approach of the text.

[1]This phrase connects physical health to spiritual repentance (teshuvah), reflecting the book's consistent theme that proper physical care must be accompanied by spiritual rectification. The author establishes that what follows will integrate medical advice with religious obligation.

[i]This section appears to begin a regimen for maintaining health, consistent with the early modern Jewish medical-spiritual approach that viewed physical wellbeing as connected to spiritual state.

[ii]The Hebrew phrase 'yashuv el HaShem' (return to the LORD) uses the language of teshuvah (repentance), establishing the theological framework that physical health and spiritual repentance are interconnected.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First Discourse — This heading builds on the theological framework established in the first discourse, where suffering is presented not as random misfortune but as purposeful divine correction that provides an opportunity for spiritual growth and return to God. | Cf. Deuteronomy 30:2 — The phrase 'return to the LORD with all his heart' echoes the biblical concept of teshuvah (repentance) found in Deuteronomy 30:2, which states 'And you shall return to the LORD your God and obey His voice... with all your heart and with all your soul.'

צנים פחים[i] וזה דומה להורג את עצמו שעתיד ליתן את הדין וכן המחליא עצמו מפני היותו רודף אחר תאוותיו ובכלל זה מי שאינו משתדל ברפואה עצמה בכלל חוטאים יחשב ואם בטל העבודה בסבת החולי גם את דמו מידו ידרושו. אמנם יש חולאים רעים ונאמנים מצד הבורא לסבת עון ואלו חייב אדם לרדוף אחר הרפואה כזורע בארץ בבטחון הבורא ע״י איש פלוני ע״י סם פלוני שמא זהו האיש זהו הסם זהו הזמן. ויש מהן שמלפפין האדם עד יום מיתה הכל גזור מלמעלה כדי רשעתו במספר לא יגרע ולא יוסיף וצעקו מדוד ומשוער לא יעדיף ולא יגרע הכל ברצון גבוה. אפי׳ פזור הממון בחילי עד שיעור פלוני כאשר כתבנו בחלק ראשון בשפ״ת צדק. ויש יסורין בני עון והם יסורי אהבה[ii] ועם כל זה תחלתם בדין כנסיון ה׳ על מעשה העגל וכאיוב וכיוצא אמנם סופם אהבה. ויש שכלם אהבה גמורה ואלו הם יסורין של שכר ודאי ועין פירוש מהו צדיק בן צדיק וסוד יסורי אהבה וע״ז אמרו בגמרא לא הם ולא שכרם והם להצלת הרבים שלא יקטרג השטן עליהם כי השכינה הנקרא אהבה פעמים יש בה דין מחמת מעשה הדור ומשפעת אותו דין על הצדיק כדי להטריד השטן ולא יקטרג הרבים. וכל מי שמצדיק על עצמו דין שמים גורם שמדת הגבורה מתתקנת בקבלת האדם על עצמו באהבה דין זה וזהו סוד צדוק הדין כאשר כתבנו בח״ב שפת״י צד״ק של אמ״ת. ולפעמים יגרום דין זה ממש מיתה והיינו בעין מיתת will be held accountable. Similarly, one who makes himself ill by pursuing his desires, or who fails to seek proper medical treatment, is counted among sinners. If one neglects divine service due to illness, his very blood will be required of him. 10R

However, there are severe and persistent illnesses sent by the Creator as punishment for sin. For these, one must pursue healing like a farmer who sows the earth with trust in the Creator—perhaps through this particular person, this remedy, at this time. Some afflictions cling to a person until death, all decreed from above according to one's wickedness—neither more nor less than the prescribed measure. One's cry of pain is calculated and measured, neither exceeding nor falling short, all according to the divine will. Even the expenditure of money for healing is predetermined to a specific amount, as we wrote in the first section, "Lips of Righteousness." 15R 20R 25R

There are afflictions born of sin that are nevertheless "afflictions of love." Though they begin as judgment—like God's test after the sin of the Golden Calf, or like Job's trials—they ultimately stem from love. Then there are those that are entirely expressions of love; these are afflictions that bring certain reward. Consider the explanation of what makes "a righteous person the child of a righteous person" and the mystery of "afflictions of love," about which our Sages said, "Neither they nor their reward," meaning they exist to protect the community from Satan's accusations. For the Divine Presence, called "Love," sometimes contains judgment due to the generation's deeds, channeling that judgment onto the righteous person to distract Satan from accusing the many. 30R 35R 40R

Anyone who justifies divine judgment upon himself causes the attribute of Strength to be rectified through his loving acceptance of this judgment. This is the secret of Tziduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment), as we wrote in the second part, "Lips of Righteousness of Truth." Sometimes this judgment actually causes death, similar to the atoning deaths of the righteous. See more about this in Parashat Vayeshev, page 180a. This is why we read about the death of Aaron's sons on Yom Kippur as atonement 45R 50R

[i] This refers to Proverbs 22:5, "Thorns and snares are in the way of the perverse," but is interpreted here as physical dangers that can be avoided with proper caution.

[ii] The concept of 'afflictions of love' (yissurei ahavah) comes from Talmudic discussions (Berakhot 5a) about sufferings that are not punishments but divinely sent to increase one's reward in the world to come.

הצדיקים המכפרת[i] וכיוצא.
ועיין מזה בפ׳ וישב דף ק״פ
ע״א. ולכן אמרו שקורין בצבור
ביום הכפורים מיתת בני אהרן
לכפרתן של ישראל כי מלאכם
שהוא מזלם למעלה מלבד זכות
נשמתם מתעורר בזה לבקש
רחמים על ישראל ומיתתן
מכפרת להם שכן נקדש הבית
במיתתן וזכו כל ישראל בזה
והצדיקים זוכים ומזכים בג״ע
מעין מה שתקנו ועשו בעה״ז
כאשר כתבתי בחלק ג׳ הנקרא
שפת״י רננו״ת. ואותו הצדיק
המכפר על הדור נשכר ונוטל
כנגד כל אותן שנעשה מזבח
כפרה עליהם כעין רבי עקיבא
וחביריו חלקם בחיים כדאמרו
כך עלה במחשבה שכוונתם
במיתה זו עלה להתייחד נפשו
במחשבה אשר עין לא ראתה ומי
שזכה למה שדרשו יושבי בשבת
תחכמוני על אשריך רבי עקיבא
שיצתה נשמתך באחד[ii] יבין
גודל מעלתו. וביסורי אהבה
של הצדיק יתוקן שאלת צדיק
ורע לו[iii] מלבד כמה טעמים
אחרים ועיין בפ׳ וישב דף ק״פ
מהות יסורין של אהבה הנה
כי הכל במדה ובמשקל והצד
השוה לאדם שלעולם בכל מעשיו
ופעולותיו יתקשר בקדושה
העליונה כפי השפעתה אם חסד
חסד ואם דין דין ואם רחמים
רחמים. והמדה אשר היא שולטת
ביום כאשר כתבנו בחלק שפת״י
צד״ק כל סדר הזמנים דבר יום
ביומו בלילה שולט אותה ספירה
עצמה ברם היא למטה במלכות
הנקראת ממשלת הלילה וביום
יכוין למעלה בקומה סוד ת״ת

for Israel, because their angel, which is their mazal above, apart from the merit of their souls, is aroused by this to seek mercy for Israel. Their death atones for them, as the Temple was sanctified through their death, and all Israel gained merit thereby. The righteous merit and bring merit to others in the Garden of Eden, reflecting what they established and accomplished in this world, as I wrote in the third section called "Lips of Joyous Song."

The righteous person who atones for the generation is rewarded and receives compensation for all those for whom he became an altar of atonement, like Rabbi Akiva and his companions, "whose portion is in life." As the Sages said, "Thus it arose in thought"—meaning their intention in this death was to unite their soul with the divine thought that no eye has seen. One who understands what the Sages expounded regarding "those who dwell in counsel" concerning "Happy are you, Rabbi Akiva, that your soul departed with 'One'" will comprehend the greatness of his level.

Through the "afflictions of love" of the righteous, the question of "why the righteous suffer" is resolved, besides several other reasons. See Parashat Vayeshev, page 180, for the nature of "afflictions of love." Indeed, everything is measured and weighed, and the common principle for all people is that in all actions and deeds, one should connect to the supernal holiness according to its influence—if kindness, then kindness; if judgment, then judgment; if mercy, then mercy.

The divine attribute that governs during the day, as we wrote in the "Lips of Righteousness" section regarding the order of times, continues to rule at night, but below in Malkhut, which is called "the dominion of night." During the day, one should direct one's intention upward to the structure of Tiferet, which is adorned with its six extremities and called "the dominion of day." One should always perform the rectification appropriate to the governing attribute, following the pattern of "evening, morning, and noon

[i] The Talmud (Moed Katan 28a) states that the deaths of the righteous atone for the sins of the generation, similar to sacrificial offerings.

[ii] This refers to the Talmudic account (Berakhot 61b) of Rabbi Akiva's martyrdom, where he recited the Shema prayer during his execution, extending the word 'One' (echad) until his soul departed with that word.

[iii] This addresses the theological problem of why the righteous suffer, a question discussed extensively in rabbinic literature, particularly in relation to the book of Job.

המתפאר בשש קצותיו[i] הנקרא
ממשלת היום ולעולם יעשה
התקון המתייחס להנהגה ההיא
השולטת על דרך ערב ובקר
וצהרים אשיחה ואהמה וישמע
קולי ובזה לא יחסר עיטור
השכינה מעל ראשו לעולם ויהיה
דבק במלכו כי אשרי כל חוסי
בו וכבר כתבנו בח״ד הלז עת״ר
ענ״ן הקטר״ת בפרק ראשון כח
נשמתו של אדם ואחיזתו בקדושה
העליונה כי בידו ובכחו לגדל
ולחזק לכל וכל אשר יקרא בשם
ה׳ ימלט:[ii]

I will meditate and moan, and He will hear my voice." In this way, the crown of the Divine Presence will never depart from one's head, and one will cleave to one's King, for "happy are all who take refuge in Him." We have already written in the fourth section of this work, "Cloud of Incense Prayer," in the first chapter, about the power of a person's soul and its connection to supernal holiness, for it is in his hand and power to magnify and strengthen everything, and whoever calls upon the name of the LORD will be saved.

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

פה אציע לפניכם בני אשר
הבנתי מדרושי ודברי חכמים
מהו הסבה הגורמת שפעמים
ח״ו קם איש על רעהו ורצחו
נפש בלא מרמה עשה ועל לא
חמס בכפיו לכאורה. להודיע
ולהודע כי משפטי ה׳ אמת
צדקו יחדו ושאין האדם הרוצח
ממית אלא ערוד ממית שהוא
החטא[iii] ברם מ״מ מלתא כבר
אמורה וגם רשע ליום רעה ואין
למוכה אלא להצדיק דין שמים

Here I will present to you, my children, what I have understood from the discourses and words of the sages regarding the cause that sometimes, Heaven forbid, a person rises against his fellow and kills him without apparent deceit or violence. This is to make known and to be known that the judgments of the LORD are true and righteous together, and that it is not the murderer who kills, but rather the serpent that kills—which is sin. Nevertheless, it has already been said that "the wicked is reserved for the day of evil," and the victim has no choice but to accept divine judgment upon himself and not attribute all

[i] This is a kabbalistic reference to Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the central sefirah that balances between Chesed (Kindness) and Gevurah (Strength) and is associated with six directions or extremities.

[ii] Cf. Lips of Righteousness (Siftei Tzedek) — The author refers to the first section of Ma'avar Yabok, which focuses on proper care for the sick and dying. This cross-reference shows how the current passage on types of suffering relates to the broader structure of the book. | Cf. Lips of Joyous Song (Siftei Renanot) — The author cites the third section of his own work, which contains prayers and meditations. This self-referential structure shows how the author wants readers to see connections between different parts of Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Cloud of Incense Prayer (Eter Anan HaKetoret) — The author refers to the fourth section of his work, which focuses on prayer as a substitute for Temple incense offerings. This cross-reference demonstrates how the current passage on connecting to divine attributes relates to the prayer practices described elsewhere in the book. | Cf. Parashat Vayeshev, page 180a — The author refers to a specific passage in the Zohar on Parashat Vayeshev that discusses 'afflictions of love.' This shows how the author grounds his theological framework in kabbalistic sources. | Cf. Death of Aaron's sons — The author references the biblical account of the deaths of Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's sons, which is read during the Yom Kippur service. This illustrates how their deaths serve as atonement for Israel. | Cf. Rabbi Akiva's martyrdom — The reference to Rabbi Akiva's soul departing with 'One' alludes to the Talmudic account of his martyrdom, where he recited the Shema prayer as he was being executed, drawing out the word 'One' (echad) until his soul departed.

[iii] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Berakhot 33a) that "it is not the serpent that kills, but sin that kills," suggesting that murder is part of a divine plan in which the murderer serves as an instrument of judgment.

עליו ולא לתלות כל הקלקלה
ברוצח כי היה שבט עבר״תו
רק שתלו הקלקלה במקולקל
ולעולם אינו יוצא משפט מעוקל.
לא ישתוה עונש שופכי דמים זה
לזה יש מי שאינו ראוי להוליד
בנים או זקן וזקנה ויש נשמה
הגונה להוליד כמה מיני נשמות
ומשפחות גדולות וא״כ יש שופך
דמים שמחריב עולם מלא ויש
מי שמחריב נפש אחת וזה אינו
גלוי אלא לפני בורא הכל. יש
עוד בנים נפשיים מצות רבות
שהיה עושה שכלן הם בנים אל
הנשמה והיא תביעה רבה כי הרג
ומנע אותה היחודים והתקונים
שהם הבנים שהיה ראוי להוליד
כדדרשו דמו ודם זרעותיו[i] כי
כללו במיעוט דבריהם אלה
כל מה שאמרנו וזו היא תביעת
הגופים שהיה בכחו להולידם
והיו מקבלים תקון כנדרש אצלנו
במקום אחר ואפי׳ יתוקנו אותם
הנשמות שהיו עתידים להתלבש
באותם הגופים כי ודאי לא ידח
מהם נדח גם להם יש תביעה על
ההורג כי מתעכב תקונם ויהיה
בסבובים אחרים הקשה להם
וכל זה צעקה רבה על ההורג
או מצד המצות או מצד התורה
שזו אבדה שאינה חוזרת לעולם.
גם הימים שהנשמה מתקשטת
בהם בעולם כענין ויקרבו ימי
ישראל למות והרבה כיוצא שהם
מתהוים לבוש להתלבש האדם
בהם וכאשר לא השלים ימיו אינו
שלם בלבושו וחסר ימיו ושנותיו
ואלו הם דמי לשון רבים כלם
צועקים ולזה אמר החכם אדם
עשוק בדם נפש עד בור ינוס אל
יתמכו בו שעון שפיכות דמים
גדול עד למאוד ופוגם במקום
שאין הפה יכולה לדבר והמבין
לאשורו שופך דם האדם באדם
דמו ישפך ילבש חרדה ויאחז

the corruption to the murderer, for the murderer was merely the rod of His wrath. The corruption is attributed to the corrupted one, and divine justice is never distorted.

The punishment for bloodshed is not equal in all cases. There are those who are not fit to bear children, such as the elderly, and there are worthy souls meant to produce many types of souls and large families. Thus, there is one who sheds blood and destroys an entire world, and there is one who destroys only a single soul—this is revealed only to the Creator of all.

There are also spiritual children—the many commandments one would have performed, all of which are children to the soul. This is a great claim against the murderer, for he has killed and prevented those unifications and rectifications—the children that should have been born—as the sages interpreted "his blood and the blood of his descendants." For they included in these few words everything we have said. This is the claim of the bodies that could have been born through the victim and would have received rectification, as we have explained elsewhere. Even if those souls that were destined to clothe themselves in those bodies will be rectified—for surely none of them will be cast away—they still have a claim against the killer, because their rectification is delayed and will occur through other, more difficult cycles. All this is a great outcry against the murderer, whether from the perspective of lost commandments or lost Torah study, which is a loss that can never be recovered.

Moreover, the days with which the soul adorns itself in this world, as in "the days of Israel drew near to die" and many similar phrases, become garments in which a person clothes himself. When one does not complete his days, he is incomplete in his garment, lacking his days and years. These are the "bloods" [in plural form]—all of them cry out. Therefore, the wise man said: "A man oppressed by the blood of a soul will flee to the pit; let no one support him"—for the sin of bloodshed is exceedingly great and damages a place that the mouth cannot speak of. One who truly understands "whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed" will be clothed in

[i] This refers to the rabbinic interpretation of Genesis 4:10, where God tells Cain that his brother's 'bloods' (plural) cry out. The Mishnah (Sanhedrin 4:5) explains this plurality as referring to Abel's blood and the blood of his potential descendants.

בשרו פלצות מחמת התגברות
הדינים קדושים וחצונים ועזים
ופועלי און בכל ארבע מדרגות
אבי״ע.[i] ואם המית רשע שהיה
עתיד לחזור בתשובה זו רעה
כפולה ומכופלת שהרג נשמה עם
הגוף שאם נתקנה נשמה זו עם
הגוף היה עושה מצותיו ומשלים
משנתו ותורתו והיה עולה לאביו
שבשמים ועתה בסבת הרוצח
אינה עולה למעלה אלא עומדת
למטה עד תשו״ב ותשלים ותעלה
ולזה יאמר קול דמי אחיך
צועקים אלי מן האדמה לא
עלתה לפני לצעוק אלא צועקים
אלי מן האדמה דוקא.[ii] עוד יש
בכלל צעקת הנרצח שיעור צער
המיתה שאולי היה עתיד למות
בלא כ״כ צער כמשחל ביניתא
מחלבא[iii] ועתה נצטער בהיות
וקם עליו להרגו שניה תחלת
הפציעה שהוא מכה ופצוע עד
שמגיע הצער מדרגה אחר מדרגה
עד שהגיע אל צער עקירת
הנפש והחיים מן הגוף ובזה
ישתנה הענין כפי הדרך שהרגו
כמו שיוכל להבחין בזה טבע
האדם ושכלו וזהו דמי אחיך
יהיו פציעותיו וצער המיתה
כל אותו צער צועק תמיד על
ההורג ודאי. מלבד כי מסלק
החיות מהמדות העליונות מעל
התחתונות רחמנא ליצלן וזהו
קול מצד ת״ת והרוח והיצירה
צועקים אל״י תהיה הבינה שהיא
אם כמספר אל״י היא הנשמה
והבריאה מן האדמה מדת מלכות
האדומה והנפש היא העשיה
אחיך הגוף והעשיה גשמית כל
אלו משתתפים בסוד הצעקה
ראה כמה כובדו של עון זה.

trembling, and his flesh will be seized with shuddering because of the intensification of holy and external judgments, fierce ones and evildoers in all four levels of ABYA [Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah]. 60R

If he killed a wicked person who was destined to repent, this is a doubled and multiplied evil, for he has killed a soul along with a body. Had this soul been rectified with the body, it would have performed its commandments and completed its Mishnah and Torah study, and would have ascended to its Father in heaven. Now, because of the murderer, it does not ascend upward but remains below until it repents, completes its work, and ascends. This is why Scripture says: "The voice of your brother's bloods cry out to Me from the ground"—they did not rise before Me to cry out, but rather they cry out to Me specifically from the ground. 65R 70R

The victim's outcry also includes the measure of the pain of death, for perhaps he was destined to die without such suffering, like drawing a fish from milk, but now he suffers as the murderer rises against him. Second, there is the initial wounding, being struck and wounded, until the pain progresses from one level to another, reaching the pain of uprooting the soul and life from the body. This varies according to the manner in which he was killed, as human nature and intellect can discern. Thus, "your brother's bloods"—his wounds and the pain of death—all that suffering continually cries out against the murderer. 75R 80R 85R

Furthermore, the murderer removes the vitality from the higher attributes above the lower ones, God forbid. This is the voice from the side of Tiferet, and the spirit, and Yetzirah cry out to "ELI" [God], which is Binah, which is the Mother, with the numerical value of "ELI," which is the Neshamah and Beriah. "From the ground" is the attribute of Malkhut, the reddish earth, and the Nefesh is Asiyah. "Your brother" is the body and physical Asiyah. All these participate in the mystery of the outcry—see how grave this sin is. 90R 95R

Sometimes the Holy One, blessed be He, sus-

[i] ABYA is an acronym for the four spiritual worlds in Kabbalah: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). The author suggests that murder causes damage across all four cosmic planes.

[ii] Emphasizing that the souls of murder victims are trapped at the level of Malkhut (represented by 'adamah'/earth) rather than ascending to higher spiritual realms, causing them to cry out specifically 'from the ground.'

[iii] A Talmudic expression (Berakhot 8a) describing an easy death, literally 'like drawing a fish from milk'—a metaphor for a peaceful, painless extraction of the soul from the body.

ופעמים הקב״ה מעמיד הרוצח
100 גם אחר החטא מפני שיש בו צורך
לעולם כשהיה בקין כי צדקת
הצדיק עומדת לבסוף וכן רשעת
הרשע והרשעים רואים ומחשבים
בלבם שאין להורג עונש ונקמה
105 ולא ידעו כי הנהגתו ית׳ תלויה
במחשבתו העליונה אשר לא
ידעה אלא הוא בעצמו ואנו
משיגים אותו אחר המיתה כמו
שהיה בהריגת למך לקין.[i] ועונש
110 הרוצח נכלל בו חרם נדוי שמתא
וזהו ארור אתה מן האדמה שבו
כל מציאות קללה ונדוי מפי
עליון רחמנא לישזבן:[ii]

tains the murderer even after the sin because he serves a purpose in the world, as was the case with 100R
Cain, for the righteousness of the righteous stands in the end, as does the wickedness of the wicked.
The wicked see and calculate in their hearts that there is no punishment or vengeance for the mur-derer, not knowing that His conduct, blessed be He, 105R depends on His supernal thought, which only He Himself knows. We comprehend it only after death, as in the case of Lamech killing Cain. The punishment of the murderer includes excommunication, banishment, and anathema, which is "cursed are you 110R from the ground"—containing all forms of curse and excommunication from the Supreme One. May the Merciful One save us!"

פרק ז׳

Chapter 7

שיתו לבבכם לחילה ודעו כי
הנהרגים אינם נהרגים בלי
עון ח״ו[iii] שאין לבריה עליונה
ותחתונה שליטה להרוג שום
5 נפש אלא ע״י חיות עליון
אמת שמגלגלים חובה על ידי
חייב[iv] באשר אמרנו. וטעם
למה ילקה זה שהרגו בקללות
נמרצת בשני עולמות ובמיני

Set your heart to her ramparts and know that those who are killed are not killed without sin, God forbid, for no creature above or below has authority to kill any soul except through the true supernal life-force, which brings about guilt through the guilty, 5R as we have said. And the reason why the one who killed suffers intense curses in both worlds and various evil punishments—these things you should seek out in the books of the LORD and read, and you

[i] According to Jewish tradition (Genesis Rabbah 23:4), Lamech accidentally killed his ancestor Cain. This is used here as an example of delayed divine justice, as Cain was eventually punished for Abel's murder through Lamech.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 4:10-15 — The author uses this biblical narrative to demonstrate that sometimes murderers are kept alive by divine providence for a purpose, and that judgment may be delayed but ultimately comes, as seen in Lamech later killing Cain. | Cf. Proverbs 28:17 — This biblical verse is used to demonstrate that murder is such a severe sin that the murderer is beyond help and will inevitably face judgment. | Cf. Genesis 9:6 — This verse is cited to show the cosmic principle of measure-for-measure justice that applies to murder, emphasizing that this justice operates across all spiritual worlds. | Cf. Proverbs 11:19 — The verse is used to explain the sometimes delayed nature of divine justice, which may not be immediately visible but is nevertheless assured. | Cf. Genesis 49:1 — This biblical phrase is interpreted mystically to suggest that a person's allotted days become spiritual garments for the soul, and when life is cut short, these garments remain incomplete. | Cf. Talmud Sanhedrin 4:5 — This reference expands the concept to suggest that the severity of murder varies according to the potential of the victim—some souls might have produced many descendants or accomplished many good deeds. | Cf. Zohar on the four worlds (ABYA) — Murder is presented as a sin that damages all four spiritual worlds (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah), showing how a physical act has repercussions throughout the cosmic structure of reality.

[iii] The text presents a complex theological position that victims of murder must have some sin that makes them vulnerable to death, yet simultaneously maintains that murderers are fully culpable for their actions. This apparent tension reflects the kabbalistic understanding that divine justice operates through multiple layers of causality.

[iv] This phrase expresses the rabbinic principle that 'God brings about guilt through the guilty' (מגלגלין חובה על ידי חייב), found in Talmud Shabbat 32a, suggesting that divine justice operates through human agency rather than direct intervention.

עונשים רעים אלו דרשו מעל
ספרי ה׳ וקראו ותדעו נאמנה כי
פעמים יש עון שהאדם מתחייב
בו מיתה ואין הפתקא נמסרת
ליד החצונים ואין להם רשות
לשלוט בו ויודעים הם בחובו של
זה אלא שהגזרה העליונה אינה
רוצה למסור בידם הכח כלל
ורוצה הקב״ה להרחיב לו ואם
הקב״ה תלה לקין כל הדורות
החם למה לא יתלה להבל הצדיק
שלא היה עונו רק שהציץ לבד
כדפירשו חז״ל עד אשר יתקן
את אשר עוה אלא שיש עונות
שהם תלויים עד ישקיף וירא ה׳
משמים מה יעשה ואינו נמסר
ביד החצונים ובזה נבין מאמר
הואי כשגגה היוצאת מלפני
השליט והרבה הנהגות הדומים
לזה כיון שרואה החצוני כך
מבקש לו דרכים אחרים והולך
אחר הרשעים שהם מתנהגים
ע״פ עצתו ומגלגל להם עילות
גשמיות ממש ומביאם לידי יצה״ר
עד שיביאו המיתה ויגלו הסתום
ויקרבו הרחוק ואלו לא נמצאו
הסבות הגשמיות ההם מעולם
לא היה בא המיתה שם מפני
שאינו חפץ גבוה אמנם ס״מ יש
לו רשות להחטיא בני אדם ולתת
בלבם כל רעה שבעולם מגלגל
גלגולים עד שבסבות דקות
וקלושות יבעיר אש מחלוקת בין
בני אדם ואלו היו כובשים את
יצרם מעולם לא היה בם אש
מחלוקת ובזה לא תעשה מחשבתו
ויגורשו הרשעים מהעולם דהיינו
ס״מ ולילית[i] אמנם הרשעים
נותנים להם מצד מזגם הרע
לינה במגורם בקרבם ואז מעורר
להם מדנים חמדת ממון או אבק
לשון הרע או לשון הרע בעצמו
או קללות ובזויים וחרופים
כי נבל הוא ונבלה ידבר ומיד
מורה להם סבות קלות גשמיות will faithfully know that sometimes there is a sin for 10R which a person deserves death, yet the decree is not delivered into the hands of the external forces, and they have no permission to rule over him. They know of this person's guilt, but the supernal decree does not wish to deliver the power into their hands at all, 15R for the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to extend mercy to him. And if the Holy One, blessed be He, suspended Cain's punishment for all those generations, why would He not suspend punishment for the righteous Abel, whose only sin was that he merely 20R gazed improperly, as our Sages of blessed memory explained, until he rectifies what he distorted? Rather, there are sins that remain suspended until the LORD looks down and sees from heaven what one will do, and they are not delivered into the hands of the ex- 25R ternal forces. With this we can understand the statement, "It happened like an error proceeding from the ruler," and many similar patterns of divine governance.

When the external force sees this, it seeks other 30R ways and pursues the wicked who conduct themselves according to its counsel. It brings about actual physical causes and leads them to the evil inclination until they bring about death, revealing what was concealed and bringing near what was distant. And if 35R these physical causes had not appeared, death would never have come there, because it is not the divine desire. However, Samael has permission to cause people to sin and to put all the evil in the world into their hearts. It brings about circumstances un- 40R til, through subtle and tenuous causes, it ignites the fire of discord between people. And if they had conquered their inclination, there would never have been a fire of discord among them, and thus his [Samael's] intention would not be fulfilled, and the wicked ones 45R of the world, namely Samael and Lilith, would be banished. However, the wicked give them lodging in their dwelling, within them, because of their evil temperament. Then it arouses strife among them:
desire for money, the dust of evil speech, or evil 50R speech itself, or curses, contempt, and insults, for
"the villain is vile and speaks villainy," and immediately it shows them trivial physical causes that bring death.

[i] These are references to Samael and Lilith, negative spiritual entities in kabbalistic literature who are often portrayed as a demonic couple that causes harm in the world. The text presents them as working through human agents to bring about negative events.

ומביאות המות. נמצא זה שלט
בו המיתה בעונו הטמון כדכתיב
טמון בארץ חבלו[i] לא רצתה מדת
המלכות לגלות חבל אחיזתו
וגזירת המיתה עליו ח״ו אלא
רצתה להרחיב לו הדרך אמנם
מלכודתו עלי נתיב דהיינו
המחשבה העליונה על ידי אלו
הסבות הרחוקות מבית דין עליון
הקרובות ע״י לילית וס״מ כי
המחשבה העליונה רואה כי
טוב המות לזה כי היא יודעת
סופי הדברים בסוד תקון נשמה
וגוף זה גם שמחשבה התחתונה
מלכות היתה חפצה בהארכה
כדי שישוב בתשובה הוא בעצמו
המחשבה העליונה צופה יותר
למרחוק ולהגיע עדיה בסוד
התקון האחרון ראו המות לזה
עתה לטוב לו באחריתו. ע״כ
נתן רשות לס״מ לסבב סבובים
ע״י לבות אנשים זדים ארורים
ומפתה לבם ויצרם בדברים
קלים ומביאם לידי רציחה
ולפעמים המחשבה העליונה
אין בה ונצול רק נפצע ופעמים
מלכודתו ע״י נתיב ונהרג והרי
אלו לא היה נהרג ע״י הרשע
הזה לא היה נהרג כלל שהרי
טמון היה באר״ץ חבלו והיה
אפשר למוחקו בתשובה א״כ
הרשע הזה גרם כל מה שגרם
והכל נעשה מאתו לכן ראוי
שיכרת ויענש וכל ההנהגות
שבמחשבה העליונה הם לאורך
ימים ושנים ומתקן הנהרג. ראה
כמה תולדות קין נולדו בעולם
ושת לא נולד עד ק״ל שנה
לאדם[ii] מפני שלא ינוח שבט
הרשע על גורל הצדיקים ואחר
כך כל תולדות קין כליון חרוץ
ומשת יושתת העולם כרמז ועפר
אחר יקח ווהו תחת הבל כי

Thus, death has power over this person through his hidden sin, as it is written, "Hidden in the earth is his snare." The attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) did not wish to reveal the cord of his connection and the decree of death upon him, God forbid, but rather wished to extend the path for him. However, "his trap is upon the path"—that is, the supernal thought through these causes which are remote from the supernal court but close by means of Lilith and Samael. For the supernal thought sees that death is good for this person, as it knows the final outcome through the mystery of the rectification of this soul and body, even though the lower thought, Malkhut, desired to extend [his life] so that he might repent on his own. The supernal thought sees further and, to reach him through the mystery of the final rectification, deemed death for him now to be good for him in his end.

Therefore, it gave permission to Samael to bring about circumstances through the hearts of wicked, accursed people, enticing their hearts and inclinations with trivial matters and bringing them to murder. Sometimes the supernal thought is not involved and he is saved, merely wounded, while at other times his trap is upon the path and he is killed. And behold, if he had not been killed by this wicked person, he would not have been killed at all, for "hidden in the earth was his snare," and it would have been possible to erase it through repentance. Therefore, this wicked person caused all that he caused, and everything was done by him. That is why he deserves to be cut off and punished. And all the patterns of governance in the supernal thought are for length of days and years, and they rectify the one who was killed.

See how many descendants of Cain were born in the world, yet Seth was not born until the 130th year of Adam, so that the rod of wickedness would not rest upon the lot of the righteous. Afterward, all the descendants of Cain were utterly destroyed, while from Seth the world was founded, as hinted in the verse, "And dust shall he take of another kind," which means "in place of Abel, for Cain killed him."

[i] This is a quote from Job 18:10, referring to hidden snares. In this context, it metaphorically describes how a person's sins may remain hidden but still make them vulnerable to divine judgment, though this judgment might be delayed through divine mercy.

[ii] The text interprets the 130-year gap between Abel's death and Seth's birth (Genesis 5:3) as evidence of divine justice working across generations. It suggests that Seth (representing renewed righteousness) could not enter the world until Abel was avenged.

הרגו קין ועד שנתנקם הבל מקין
לא בא שת לעולם ועמד זעקת
הבל לפניו ק״ל שנה. עד כי
נסבל קין בעולם ולעולם הבל
זעק ולא נח מזעקתו ולא בא
שת עד שנהרג קין. ומטעם זה
יהיה אמרם שנשמת הנהרג תלויה
ועומדת בנקמה ולכך נקרא
גואל הדם הנוקם[i] שכמו שהמיבם
נקרא גואל וכיוצא או דודו בן
דודו יגאלנו כן הנוקם נקרא
גואל שע״י הנקימה גואל אותו
מצרתו למעלה שמצר ומעוכב
וזועק מן האדמה עד יתנקם
ואח״כ ישוב לימי עלומיו. ברם
מצוה רבה על כל אשר בידו
כח לגרשו ולהדיחו מעל הארץ
ההיא ולא ישוב עוד לביתו
ולא יכיר עוד מקומו והמשתדל
להחזירו נקרא עבריין[ii] ועתיד
ליתן את הדין ובי דינא רבא
יתפרע מיניה ובשעתו ובמקומו
ויחוס על עני ואביון ויגדור כל
פרצות עמו ישראל ברחמיו אל
אלהים חילי ישמע מהיכלו קולי
עם כל הנלוים עמי ויסיר לב
האבן מבשרנו ויוציאנו מאפלה
לאורה ונאמר לפניו הללויה
עם כל העדה קדושה ובשפה
ברורה נשירה ונזמרה גבורתו
וחסד ואמת יקדמו פנינו ויהי
ה׳ אלהינו עמנו אל יעזבנו ואל
יטשנו להטות לבבנו אליו ונלכה
באורחותיו לעדי עד אמן כן יהי
רצון:[iii]

Until Abel was avenged from Cain, Seth did not come into the world, and Abel's cry stood before Him for 130 years, until Cain was endured in the world. And forever, Abel cried out and did not rest from his cry, and Seth did not come until Cain was killed. 100R

For this reason, they say that the soul of the murdered remains suspended and waiting for vengeance. Therefore, the avenger of blood is called a "redeemer," just as the one who performs levirate marriage is called a "redeemer," as is a relative—"his uncle or his cousin shall redeem him." Similarly, the avenger is called a "redeemer" because through vengeance he redeems the murdered person from his distress above, where he is constrained and hindered and cries out from the ground until he is avenged. Afterward, he returns to the days of his youth. 105R 110R

Nevertheless, it is a great mitzvah upon anyone who has the power to expel and banish [the murderer] from that land, so that he shall not return again to his house, nor shall his place be recognized anymore. One who endeavors to bring him back is called a transgressor and will have to give an accounting in the future, and the great court will exact payment from him in his time and place. May [God] have compassion on the poor and needy, and may He fence in all the breaches of His people Israel in His mercy. May God, my strength, hear my voice from His sanctuary, along with all who accompany me. May He remove the heart of stone from our flesh and bring us from darkness to light. Let us say before Him "Hallelujah" with all the holy congregation, and with clear speech let us sing and chant of His might. May kindness and truth go before us, and may the LORD our God be with us. May He not forsake us nor abandon us, to incline our hearts to Him, and 115R 120R 125R 130R

[i] The 'avenger of blood' (go'el ha-dam) is a biblical concept (Numbers 35:19) referring to a relative who avenges a murder. The text reinterprets this as a spiritual 'redemption' that releases the soul of the victim from its state of distress in the afterlife.

[ii] The author takes a strong stance that anyone who helps a murderer return to the community is considered a transgressor who will face divine judgment, emphasizing communal responsibility for upholding justice.

[iii] Cf. Genesis 4 — The author uses this biblical narrative to explore the metaphysical dimensions of murder, examining why a murderer is punished even though the victim's death may have been divinely ordained due to their own sins. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:5 — The author uses this verse to support his theological framework that some deaths may appear accidental or unjust but are actually part of a divine plan. | Cf. Psalm 24:7 — The author alludes to this psalm in his closing prayer, using its language of divine presence to express hope for redemption. | Cf. Isaiah 32:6 — Used to characterize how evil forces operate through wicked people, instigating harmful speech and actions. | Cf. Psalm 85:11 — The author adapts this psalm in his closing prayer, asking for divine attributes to go before the people. | Cf. Job 18:10 — Used metaphorically to describe may we walk in His ways forever and ever, Amen, may it be His will.

נשלם חלק שני ממאמר רביעי הנקרא קרבן תענית [i]

The second part of the fourth discourse, called "Sacrifice of Fasting," is now completed. 135R

how a person's sins may be hidden but still make them vulnerable to divine judgment. | Cf. Zohar, various sections on Samael and Lilith — The author draws on kabbalistic demonology to explain how evil forces operate in the world, using human agents to bring about events that fulfill divine judgments.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This concluding statement marks the end of the second part of the fourth discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, titled 'Korban Ta'anit' (Sacrifice of Fasting). This section has focused on spiritual practices centered around fasting, solitude, and proper intentions as substitutes for Temple sacrifices, presented as a system for purifying the soul and sweetening divine judgments. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part One of the Fourth Discourse — This concluding formula parallels the end of the first part of the fourth discourse, which was titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer). Both parts present spiritual substitutes for Temple offerings, with the first focused on prayer as incense and this second part focused on fasting as sacrifice.

Discourse 8

מנחת אהרן / Offering of Aharon

פרק א׳

חלק שלישי

שמעה עמי ואדברה ישראל
ואעידה בך במנחת אהרן
ההולכת לפניך[i] המעידה
ומגידה כי עשה אלהים את
ישר וכל פעל למענהו ואפי׳
יצה״ר שבו קדוש יאמר לו
והוה מעטרא ליה כסאסא ליה
לשבולתא[ii] אלא שהמה בקשו
חשבונות רבים מרבים הבל שיש
בו חטא ואדם ביקר בל ילין
עד כי קרובים נעשו רחוקים
וסלעים נעשו גבוהים בארבעה
אבות נזיקין[iii] ומשים שלום
בבית כמעט בטל וזאת תורת
האדם שחב בשמירתו להתחייב

Chapter 1

Part Three

Hear me, my people, and I shall speak; Israel, I shall testify to you through Aaron's offering that goes before you, testifying and declaring that God has made mankind upright, and all His works are for His own purpose—even the evil inclination within man, of which one may say it is holy, for it adorns him like the husk adorns the grain. Yet people have sought out many schemes, multiplying vanity that contains sin.[1] Man in his glory does not endure, until those who were close have become distant and rocky heights have become insurmountable due to the four principal categories of damages,[2] and the establishment of peace in the household has almost ceased. This is the law of mankind: one who has failed in his guardianship becomes liable to make restitution for

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'marbim hevel sheyesh bo chet' has layers of meaning. It alludes to Ecclesiastes' theme of vanity/futility while suggesting that humans complicate their existence with sinful pursuits.

[2] The author draws on legal terminology from the Talmud (the four primary categories of damages) to create a spiritual metaphor for moral failings that create distance between people.

[i] The phrase 'Aaron's offering that goes before you' is likely a reference to the author's own work, creating a wordplay between his name (Aaron Berechia) and the biblical Aaron who offered sacrifices.

[ii] This Aramaic expression compares the evil inclination to the husk of grain, suggesting that even something seemingly negative has a protective or supportive function.

[iii] This refers to the four principal categories of damages enumerated in Talmudic law (Bava Kamma): the ox, the pit, fire, and a person's own body. Here they are used metaphorically for spiritual or moral damages.

בתשלומי נזקו בהשלמת שפתיו
בפרי תורה ותהלה ועבודה
שבלב וינהיר נהוריה יום וליל
בשרנא ואורה דאורייתא כי נר
מצוה ותורה אור[i] ואם יזכה
ליהנות מתבלין זה ואורח זו ילך
אשר גזר עליו המלך ישאב מים
בששון ממעיני הישועה ויתהפכו
ארבע מראות נגעים[ii] לתענוגים
ויציאות והכנסות מעולם שכלו
שבת[iii] מתנה טובה שבבית גנזיו
של יוצר האדם בצלמו ובדמות
תבניתו. ובכנף רננים אלו
יתעלה באברה ונוצה להתקשר
במעדנות כימה[iv] וים עליון ישים
כמרקחה ואת כל גבוה יראה: [v]

his damage through the offering of his lips, with the fruit of Torah, praise, and service of the heart.[1] May his light shine day and night[2] with the lamp and light of Torah, for "the commandment is a lamp and Torah is light." If he merits to benefit from this spice and follow this path which the King has decreed for him, he will draw water with joy from the wells of salvation, and the four appearances of afflictions will be transformed into delights.[3] And there will be departures and entrances from a world that is entirely Sabbath—a good gift from the treasure house of the Creator who formed humanity in His image and likeness. With these wings of song,[4] he will be elevated with feather and plume to be bound in the delights of Orion, and he will make the upper sea like a mixture of perfume, and he will behold all that is lofty.

כמו שהחיות הגשמי נגדר בשלשה
דברים. הנה הם חומר וצורה
והעדר. כן החיות השכלי נחלק

Just as physical life is defined by three elements—matter, form, and absence—so too intellectual life is divided into three types: potential intellect, acquired

[1]This threefold expression refers to three forms of divine service: study of Torah, verbal praise/prayer, and devotional intention ('service of the heart'), which together form the basis of religious practice.
[2]The original uses Aramaic 'v'yanhir nehoreh' (and may his light shine), switching from Hebrew to Aramaic to evoke the language of the Zohar and other mystical texts.
[3]This represents a mystical inversion where spiritual afflictions become sources of pleasure, reflecting the kabbalistic concept that judgment (din) can be transformed into mercy (rachamim) through proper spiritual practice.
[4]The imagery of wings (kanaf renanim) comes from Job 39:13 and is repurposed here to represent mystical ascent through prayer and song.

[i]A direct quotation from Proverbs 6:23, 'For the commandment is a lamp and the teaching is light,' which was a common metaphor in rabbinic literature for spiritual illumination.
[ii]This refers to the four types of tzara'at (often mistranslated as leprosy) described in Leviticus, which were understood in rabbinic tradition as divine punishments for moral failures, particularly slander.
[iii]A reference to the rabbinic concept of 'the world to come' as 'a world that is entirely Sabbath'—a state of perfect spiritual rest and communion with the divine.
[iv]The word 'kimah' refers to the Pleiades star cluster (sometimes translated as Orion). In Jewish mystical thought, celestial bodies often represent spiritual entities or realms.
[v]Cf. Psalms 50:7 — The opening phrase 'Hear me, my people, and I shall speak; Israel, I shall testify to you' directly echoes Psalms 50:7, establishing this text as a solemn testimony or exhortation in the prophetic tradition. | Cf. Proverbs 6:23 — The quote 'the commandment is a lamp and Torah is light' establishes Torah study as the primary means of spiritual illumination, a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to spiritual preparation. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 7:29 — The phrase 'God has made mankind upright, but they have sought out many schemes' references Ecclesiastes 7:29, suggesting that human complications and moral failings are deviations from divine design rather than inherent to human nature. | Cf. Isaiah 12:3 — The phrase 'draw water with joy from the wells of salvation' quotes Isaiah 12:3, connecting the spiritual transformations described in Ma'avar Yabok with prophetic visions of redemption and divine blessing. | Cf. Zohar on Leviticus, Metzora — The concept of transforming afflictions (nega'im) into pleasures parallels Zoharic teachings that spiritual purification can transform judgment into mercy, a key kabbalistic principle that informs Ma'avar Yabok's approach to illness and death.

לג׳ שכל היולי. שכל נקנה. שכל נאצל.[i] שכל היולי. בו יפעל האדם המלאכות הראויות לו כפי טבע הרכבת חומרו. שכל נקנה. בו יתעצם האדם במדות ויתנועע למעלות הנאותות לצורתו. שכל נאצל הוא מה שיורהו התורה שנאצלה מלמעלה בהיא גברת כל ההשכלות ובה יגבר האדם על כל ההויות ויפשוט צורה וילבש צורה נאה הימנה. שזוהי דרך ההעדר אל מציאות חשוב אשר הזמן סרסור בדבר. הרי שחיות האדם הוא רוח שכלי מרחף על פני הנפש ומצייר צורתה ואינו רוח מגשמי הגדל בחיק הגוף. כי הרוח שכלי עצם. והרוח גשמי מקרה. והדבור שהוא גדר האדם ראיה לזה כי הוא פועל הנפש השכלית. וכשהדבור מצד השכל הטבעי לבד הנקרא היולי. אין בו ממש. רק הוא בקול הברת הבעל חי. וכשהוא בשכל הנקנה בזה יקרא דבור אדם. וכשהוא בשכל נאצל הוא דבור אלהים. כי דבר ה׳ אתו. הנה כי יש באדם כח להיות כמלאך וגם להיות כשטן כפי פנייתו ליצר טוב שהוא שכל וליצר הרע שהוא סכל. ונרמז במלת אמ״ש אדם מלאך שטן.[ii] ולהיות כי יש בנפש כח להעצים חיל בהשכלתה לכן intellect, and emanated intellect.[A] With potential intellect, a person performs tasks appropriate to their physical nature. With acquired intellect, a person develops moral character and progresses toward excellence suited to their form. Emanated intellect is what the Torah teaches, having emanated from above as the mistress of all intellectual achievements; through it, a person masters all forms of existence, shedding one form to don a more beautiful one. This is the path from absence to meaningful existence, with time serving as the intermediary.

Thus, human vitality is an intellectual spirit that hovers over the soul, shaping its form—not a materialistic spirit growing within the body's embrace. For intellectual spirit is essence, while physical spirit is merely accidental. Speech, which defines humanity, proves this, as it is the product of the intellectual soul. When speech stems only from natural intellect (called potential), it has no substance, being merely like the sound a creature makes. When it comes from acquired intellect, it is called human speech. But when it flows from emanated intellect, it becomes divine speech, for "the word of the LORD is with him."

Indeed, a person has the capacity to be like an angel or like Satan, depending on whether they turn toward the good inclination, which is intellect, or the evil inclination, which is foolishness.[1] This is alluded to in the word AMSh (אמ״ש), an acronym for Adam-Malach-Satan[2] (human-angel-devil). Since the soul has the power to strengthen itself through intellectual development, it enters a body to actualize its potential and acquire new vessels through which to

[A] Or: "hylic intellect, acquired intellect, and emanated intellect" — The term 'היולי' (hylic) is a technical philosophical term derived from Greek philosophy. While 'potential' captures its meaning, preserving the technical term might be preferred in a scholarly translation.

[1] The author creates a striking equation between the good inclination and intellect (שכל/sechel) and between the evil inclination and foolishness (סכל/sachel), playing on the similar Hebrew sounds while making a profound philosophical point about the nature of moral choice.

[2] This acronym represents the author's understanding of human potential as existing between angelic and demonic possibilities. Interestingly, א-מ-ש (alef-mem-shin) are also the three 'mother letters' in Sefer Yetzirah, a foundational kabbalistic text, suggesting deeper connections.

[i] These three categories of intellect derive from medieval Jewish philosophical traditions influenced by Aristotle and Arabic commentators. The 'hylic' or potential intellect refers to the basic capacity for thought; the 'acquired' intellect refers to knowledge actually attained; and the 'emanated' intellect refers to divine wisdom received from above.

[ii] This is a kabbalistic wordplay where the Hebrew letters א-מ-ש (alef-mem-shin) are interpreted as an acronym for אדם-מלאך-שטן (Adam-Malach-Satan), representing human potential to become either angelic or demonic based on spiritual choices.

היא באה בגוף להשכיל בפועל
ולקנות כלים חדשים בפועל
השכלותיה. וזאת תורת האדם
להשכיל בנפשו כל המושכלות
אשר הוכנו לו מדברי התורה
תמימה אשר בה תוציא הנפש
כחה לפועל ההשכלה ובזה
התייפה בעה״ז ותתכבד לעה״ב.
ובג״ע ג״כ מצד פועל השכלתה
אשר תביא עמה דברים חדשים
ונאים. והחכמים בבואם בג״ע
מפארים ומייפים אותו וכל חכם
לב בהם ישמח בחכם הבא אצלם
וגם שאין לך כל צדיק וצדיק
שאין לו מדור בפני עצמו שם
כדאמרי׳ בגמ׳ מציעא פרק ז׳
ובשבת פכ״ג הוכיחו זה מפסוק
כי הולך האדם אל בית עולמו.
מכל מקום בבא הצדיק למדורו
למעונו תרבה הארה אלהית
בכל הג״ע. ומיתת הצדיק הוא
הדור אל הישיבה של מעלה
במה שיוליכו שם דברים חדשים
המתבקשים תמיד. וזהו פירוש
נתבקש בישיבה של מעלה שכל
אדם יש לו חלק בתורה ואין אדם
נוגע במוכן לזולתו לחדש מה
שצפון לחבירו וגדולים צדיקים
במיתתן יותר מבחייהם כי אז
הם מחדשים בתורה הקדושה
מעין מה שחדשו למטה בנובלת
החכמה. ובגמרא מנחות פרק ה׳
על פסוק זית רענן יפה פרי תואר
אמרו מה זית זה אחריתו בסופו
ופרש״י כי מתבשל בסופו יחד
אף ישראל אחריתן בסופן. מלבד
הנדרש במאמר ראשון בטעם
ירידת הנשמות בעולם עוד נוסיף
פה הודעה לכל משכיל דורש
בהודיע כי החצונים אין בריאתם
לריק ולבטלה כמו שהקליפה
לאילן היא יופיו וטובו[i] כדפי׳

express its intellect. This is the Torah of humanity: to comprehend through one's soul all the intelligible concepts prepared for it from the perfect Torah, through which the soul brings its potential into actual understanding. In this way, the soul becomes beautiful in this world and honored in the World to Come.

Even in the Garden of Eden, the soul brings with it new and beautiful insights derived from its intellectual activity. When sages enter the Garden of Eden, they glorify and beautify it, and every wise-hearted person among them rejoices in the wise newcomer. Although each righteous person has their own separate dwelling place there, as stated in Bava Metzia chapter 7 and in Shabbat chapter 23 (derived from the verse "when a person goes to his eternal home"), nevertheless, when a righteous person enters their dwelling place, divine illumination increases throughout the Garden of Eden.

The death of the righteous is a return to the heavenly academy, where they bring new insights that are always sought after. This explains the phrase "he was requested in the heavenly academy"—for each person has their portion in Torah, and no one infringes upon what is prepared for another by revealing what is reserved for their fellow. The righteous are greater in death than in life, for then they innovate in the holy Torah, similar to what they created below through the "fallen fruit of wisdom." In Tractate Menachot chapter 5, commenting on the verse "a leafy olive tree, beautiful in form and fruit," they said: "Just as this olive tree ripens fully at its end"—and Rashi explains that it ripens completely at the end—"so too Israel's ultimate destiny is in their end."

Beyond what was explained in the first discourse about the reason for souls' descent into the world, we add here information for every discerning seeker, explaining that the external forces[A] were not created in vain or for naught. Just as a tree's bark is its beauty and goodness, as explained in the Zohar on Parshat Tzav regarding the verse "I saw that wisdom

[A] Or: "the chitzonim" — The term 'chitzonim' is a technical kabbalistic term referring to negative spiritual forces. While 'external forces' conveys the meaning, preserving the transliterated technical term might be preferred in scholarly contexts.

[i] This presents an unusually positive view of the kelipah (shell/husk), which in many kabbalistic texts represents evil or impurity. Here, the author interprets even negative elements as serving a positive function in the divine plan.

בזהר פ׳ צו בפסוק וראיתי אני
שיש יתרון לחכמה מן הסכלות
וכו׳. ע״כ ברא הקב״ה אדה״ר
ביצה״ר בתחלת בריאתו והיתה
עצה מאתו להשכירו על טוב
מעלליו לתת חלק בנפשו מאותה
הקליפה שהיא קליפת האילן.
וזה אף אם לא יחטא אדה״ר
היה בו החלק ההוא. וזה אמת
בלי ספק שאל״כ לא היה לו
שכר בפעולתו וזה בענין הכסף
הנקי והטהור שיצטרף ויתלבן
ע״י ערוב העופרת ויתעלה עוד
עניינו כי בטוב טבעו היותו
בוחר בטוב ומואס ברע ישבור
הרע ההוא עד כי יחזירנו אל
מקומו ויצרפהו. וזהו שאמרו
בזהר תרומה במשל הזונה[i] שגם
אל הזונה יש שכר ומעלה כשאין
בן השר נפתה אחריה. כי כמו
שהוא מגביר יצה״ט שהוא ימין
מצד הקדושה כן מגביר הימין
על השמאל ואף גם החצונים
יתענגו על רב שלום כי יתלבנו
ויצטרפו עד יכנסו אל מקורם
ויתוקן הרע. וזה אחד מהתכליות
עקריות להמציא בעולם צורת
האדם למען תהיה בעולם
התחתון הוי״ה דקה קדושה
ורוחניות לתקן כח הגבורה
החזקה ודיני אף המתפשטים
לחוץ בזולת טעמים אחרים.
וזהו טוב היצ״הר שנעשה יצר
הטוב כדפי׳ בזהר כמו שהשמאל
גבורה נעשה ימין בסוד כללותה
בימין כך יצר הרע בהיותו
נכלל ביצר טוב נעשה יצר
טוב מימין ונשכר בג״ע בעידון
הנפש בנזכר. כמה רב גובריה

has an advantage over folly," the Holy One, blessed be He, created Adam with an evil inclination from the beginning of his creation. It was His plan to reward him for his good deeds by giving his soul a portion of that "shell," which is the shell of the tree. 115R
Even if Adam had not sinned, he would have had this portion. This is undoubtedly true, for otherwise he would have received no reward for his actions.

This is comparable to pure silver being refined and whitened through mixing with lead, elevating 120R it further. For it is in humanity's good nature to choose good and reject evil, thereby breaking that evil until returning it to its place and refining it. This is what they said in the Zohar on Terumah in the parable of the harlot—that even the harlot receives 125R reward and elevation when the prince's son resists her temptation. Just as one strengthens the good inclination, which is the right side of holiness, so too one strengthens the right over the left. Even the external forces will delight in abundant peace when 130R they are whitened and refined until they enter their source and the evil is corrected.

This is one of the primary purposes for creating human form in the world: so that in the lower world there would be a refined, holy, spiritual existence to 135R rectify the power of stern judgment and the fierce judgments that extend outward, apart from other reasons. This is the good of the evil inclination that becomes the good inclination, as explained in the Zohar—just as the left (severity) becomes right when 140R included within the right, so too the evil inclination, when included within the good inclination, becomes a good inclination from the right side and is rewarded in the Garden of Eden with the soul's delight,[1] as mentioned. 145R

How great is the power and strength of one who overcomes his inclination! For in doing so, he becomes a chariot for the power of holiness[2] in its aspect that breaks the jaws of wickedness, as stated

[1] The author presents an intellectualized conception of heavenly reward, where the pleasures of the Garden of Eden consist primarily of intellectual and spiritual delights rather than physical pleasures. This reflects the influence of Maimonidean rationalism on kabbalistic thought.

[2] The concept of becoming a 'chariot' (merkavah) for divine forces is a fundamental mystical idea derived from Ezekiel's vision. Here it suggests that by overcoming one's evil inclination, a person becomes a vehicle for divine presence in the world.

[i] This refers to a parable in the Zohar where a king tests his son by sending a harlot to tempt him. When the son resists, both he and the harlot are rewarded. This parable is used to explain how the evil inclination serves a divine purpose.

ותקיף חיליה מהמתגבר על יצרו כי בזה יהיה מרכבה אל כח הקדושה בבחינתה המשברת מלתעות עול בדאמרי׳ בגמ׳ דברכות פ״ב לעולם יהיה אדם ערום ביראה. ופרש״י להערים בכל מיני ערמה ליראת בוראו מענה רך ומשיב חמה וכו׳ כדי שיהיה אהוב למעלה ונחמד למטה וראוי לדעת כי לא יתעצם הדבר להיותו במדרגה העליונה אם לא ירד במדרגות התחתונות להתלבן ולהצטרף שם. כי בזה משנים התחתונים ישליך טרף.[i] וכמה פנות מהתורה נכללים בדרוש זה. ואשרי היורד למצולות ים בשלום ויוצא משם בשלום כאברהם שירד למצרים ויצא משם בתוספות השפעות מנשמות קדושות הנרמזים בפסוק ואברם כבד מאד במקנה וגו׳ וגם ללוט ההולך את אברם זכה שבאו מזרעו נשמות רות ונעמה דוגמתו יצחק עצם מאד בארץ פלשתים יעקב הוציא מבית לבן כמה מרגלאן שפירן דאינון שפירתא דכל גינתא דעדן וכבש שור וחמור צאן ועבד ושפחה ושם מרוחו עליהם. ועל האמת גנב לבו של לבן שרומז לתוכיות הקדושה שהביא משם. וסוד המ״ב מסעות שעשו in Tractate Berakhot chapter 2: "A person should always be cunning in fear [of Heaven]." Rashi explains: to employ every kind of cunning in fearing his Creator—with a gentle response, turning away wrath, etc.—so that he may be beloved above and pleasing below.

It is worth knowing that nothing can attain the highest level without first descending to lower levels to be whitened and refined there.[A] For through this, "he casts prey from the lower realms." Many aspects of Torah are included in this discourse. Fortunate is one who descends into the depths of the sea in peace and emerges in peace,[1] like Abraham who went down to Egypt and came out with additional influences from holy souls, as alluded to in the verse "And Abram was very rich in livestock, etc." Even Lot, who accompanied Abram, merited that from his descendants came the souls of Ruth and Naamah.

Similarly, Isaac prospered greatly in the land of the Philistines. Jacob brought out from Laban's house many beautiful pearls that are the beauty of the entire Garden of Eden.[B] He subdued ox and donkey, sheep, manservant, and maidservant, and placed his spirit upon them. In truth, he stole Laban's heart, symbolizing the inner essence of holiness that he brought from there.

The secret of the forty-two journeys that Israel made in the great and terrible wilderness, a place dominated by serpent, fiery serpent, scorpion, and thirst[2]—which will be explained later—was to travel and conquer from shell to shell, breaking and crushing them. Therefore, they were all enumerated in the Torah.

[A] Or: "to be purified and refined there" — While 'whitened' is a literal translation of 'להתלבן', in kabbalistic contexts this often refers to spiritual purification. The alternate translation conveys the spiritual concept more clearly to modern readers.

[B] Or: "precious pearls that are the most beautiful in all the Garden of Eden" — This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar could be translated with slightly different emphasis, highlighting the superlative nature of these 'pearls' (symbolic of spiritual entities or insights).

[1] This metaphor of spiritual descent for the purpose of ascent (yerida tzorech aliya) is a central kabbalistic concept. It suggests that engaging with lower realms, when done properly, can yield spiritual benefits and transformation.

[2] These four elements from Deuteronomy 8:15 are interpreted in kabbalistic literature as representing four types of negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that must be confronted and transformed in the spiritual journey.

[i] This difficult phrase appears to be alluding to Job 39:3, but repurposed in a kabbalistic context to suggest that through descending to lower realms, one can extract spiritual 'prey' or elevate divine sparks.

ישראל במדבר[i] הגדול והנורא
מקום שליטת נחש שרף ועקרב
וצמאון[ii] אשר יתבארו לפנינו
היה כדי ליסע ולכבוש מקליפה
לקליפה לשברם ולכתותם. על
כן נמנו כלם בתורה: [iii]

פרק ב׳

Chapter 2

במה עמקו מאד מחשבות של
יוצר בראשית ברוך הוא להמציא
קליפה זו במציאות לתכלית
שבארנו וגם צורך מציאותה
להשכיר ולהעניש בעין גיהנם
ששכר עבירה עבירה. כי אין
העונש בגיהנם על הנקמה ח״ו
רק ליתום חלאת הנפש החוטאת
שם למען תסולה בכתם אופיר

How profoundly deep are the thoughts of the Creator, blessed be He, who brought forth this husk into existence for the purpose we have explained, and also for its necessary function to reward and punish, similar to Gehenna, where "the reward of sin is sin."[1] For the punishment in Gehenna is not for vengeance, God forbid, but only to purify the filth of the sinning soul so that it may be refined like fine gold in the Garden of Delights.[A] This husk 5R

[A] Or: "so that it may be treasured like Ophir gold in the Garden of Delights" — This alternate translation preserves the specific reference to 'Ophir gold' (a biblical term for the finest gold) rather than generalizing to 'fine gold,' and translates 'תסולה' as 'treasured' rather than 'refined,' which could better capture the nuance of value being placed on the soul after purification.

[1] This is a reference to Pirkei Avot 4:2, which states that the reward of a mitzvah (commandment) is a mitzvah and the consequence of a sin is a sin, suggesting that actions create their own spiritual momentum and consequences.

[i] The forty-two journeys of Israel in the wilderness (Numbers 33) have special significance in kabbalah. The number 42 corresponds to a divine name (the 42-letter Name), and these journeys are often interpreted as stages in spiritual development or as a process for rectifying aspects of reality.
[ii] This phrase from Deuteronomy 8:15 describing the wilderness is interpreted in kabbalah as referring to four types of negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that must be overcome in the spiritual journey.
[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parshat Tzav — The author is using this Zoharic reference to develop a theodicy—explaining that even evil has a constructive purpose in the divine plan, just as tree bark (seemingly extraneous) actually protects and beautifies the tree. | Cf. Zohar, Parshat Terumah — This reference supports the author's theological claim that even the evil inclination serves a divine purpose and can ultimately be elevated when it is properly overcome and transformed. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Bava Metzia — This reference supports the author's discussion of the afterlife and how righteous souls maintain their individuality while contributing to the collective spiritual reality of the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Shabbat — This complements the previous Talmudic reference, reinforcing the author's point about individual spiritual accomplishment while also emphasizing the collective enrichment of the Garden of Eden when a righteous person enters it. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Berakhot — This reference supports the author's discussion of how overcoming the evil inclination requires strategic spiritual efforts, not just brute force resistance, illustrating the sophisticated approach to spiritual self-development in rabbinic thought. | Cf. Biblical narrative of Abraham in Egypt — The author is using Abraham's biblical journey as a kabbalistic metaphor for the mystical principle of 'descent for the sake of ascent' (yerida tzorech aliya), suggesting that engaging with the material world (symbolized by Egypt) can yield spiritual benefits when done properly. | Cf. Biblical forty-two journeys of Israel in the wilderness — The author is offering a kabbalistic interpretation of the biblical narrative, suggesting that the historical journey described in Numbers had a deeper spiritual purpose of confronting and transforming spiritual obstacles (kelipot/shells). | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Menachot — This reference reinforces the author's point about spiritual development being a gradual process that reaches its culmination only at the end, like an olive that ripens fully only in its final stage.

בגן עדנות. קליפה זו היא
הנבראת ביום השני מצד הגבורה
לבד והיא הנמשלת במשל הזונה
בנזכר.[i] ועל בחינה זו יתבאר
למשכיל טעם אכילת קרבן פסח
המקריבים אותו לטהרה וסוד
בחינה הפנימית שממנה נבראו
השרים שבבחינתם הפנימית
ההיא הם טהורים ונקיים ושבעים
פרי החג יוביחו.[ii] וכן שער
של תפלין ושרפת פרה אדומה
ואין כאן מקומו של דרוש זה
כי יתרחב מאד ועת לכל חפץ
בלי נדר אם יגזור השם. אמנם
מלבד החלק הזה הנתן בו
ברצון. נתוסף באדם יצה"ר
חלק שני כ"י בלי רצונו והוא
סוד הקליפה שנתוספה על ידי
מיעוט הירח. שאז ביום רביעי
נתחזקה הקליפה יותר ויותר
למאד מאד. ולכן חלק יצה"ר
מאותו הצד חזק מאד עד שמטעם
זה נתקללה הארץ ופירשו
בתקונים ארץ זה באימא תתאה
שהיא גרמה צד חוזק יצה"ר
באדם בלי רצון קונו וזהו עולם
שלא ברצונו. ובהיות הלבנה
במלואה והקליפה נטהרת וכח
המארת חסרה ומתבטלת אז
הוא עלמא די ברא כרעותיה.
עוד העמיק הרחיב מדורת האש
החצוני ונתחזק היצה"ר באדם
מעת חטא אדם הראשון. כי
בתחלה היה לו חלק יוכל שאת
מחומריות ועוביות יצה"ר והוא
לקח והגביר על עצמו חלק
גדול כמה פעמים עד כי הוא

was created on the second day solely from the side of Gevurah[1] (Strength/Judgment), and it is metaphorically represented by the harlot mentioned previously. Based on this understanding, the wise will comprehend the reason for eating the Passover sacrifice, which is offered for purification, and the mystery of the inner aspect from which the celestial princes were created, who in their inner essence are pure and clean—as the seventy bulls of the Festival prove. The same applies to the hair used in tefillin and the burning of the red heifer, though this is not the place to expand on this teaching, as it would become too extensive, and there is a time for every purpose, God willing.

However, beyond this portion given willingly, a second part of the evil inclination was added to humans against His will. This is the mystery of the husk that was added through the diminishment of the moon. On the fourth day, this husk was greatly strengthened and intensified. Therefore, the evil inclination from that aspect became so powerful that for this reason the earth was cursed. The Tikkunim explain that "earth" here refers to the lower Mother (Imma Tata'ah/Malkhut), which caused the strengthening of the evil inclination in humans against the will of their Creator—and this is a world not according to His will. But when the moon is full and the husk is purified, and the power of the curse is diminished and nullified, then it becomes a world created according to His will.

The fiery dwelling of the external forces was further deepened and expanded, and the evil inclination in humans was strengthened from the time of Adam's sin. Initially, he had a portion of the evil inclination's materiality and coarseness that he could bear, but he took upon himself and magnified a much greater portion many times over,

[1] In Kabbalistic thought, Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) is the divine attribute associated with limitation, discipline, and severity. The author suggests that negative spiritual forces originated from this attribute on the second day of creation, before it was balanced with Chesed (Loving-kindness).

[i] This refers to a parable in the Zohar where a king sends a harlot to test his son's virtue. The harlot represents the evil inclination, which though seemingly negative, serves the king's purpose when it is resisted and overcome.

[ii] This refers to the seventy sacrificial bulls offered during Sukkot (the Festival of Booths), which decrease in number each day. In rabbinic tradition, these seventy bulls correspond to the seventy nations of the world, suggesting that even the celestial princes of other nations have an inner purity.

דנורא ואנן דבשרא.[i] ולכן הבא
ליטהר בעי סיועא מפני היצה״ר
כדאמרי׳ בגמרא מנחות בצורת
ה״א שדומה לאכסדרא. ובזה
נבין אמרם ז״ל אדם הראשון
מושך כו׳ וזה נתהוה ביום ששי
שעת החטא כי היה ראוי לאדם
הראשון להתפלל מנחה גדולה
בגודל ויחוד עליון וחטאו גרם
שהתפלל מנחה קטנה בעניות
ומיעוט ודרשו בשבת פרק כ״ב
וביבמות פרק י״ב ובמס׳ ע״ג
פ״ב על פסוק הנחש השיאני לשון
נשואין שהטיל בחוה זוהמא.
וכתבו התוספות בסנהדרין פ״ג
כי הנחש לא נצטוה שלא להסית
ולא נענש אלא לפי שבאה תקלה
על ידה אבל שאר המסיתין
שנצטוו שלא להסית לא שייך
ביה למימר דברי הרב ודברי
התלמיד וכו׳ באופן כי גברה
הקליפות ונתקללו אדם וחוה
ונחש לכן הוצרך צירוף בכור
הברזל ארבע מאות שנה נגד ד׳
מאות שקל בסף עליונים צנורות
הנשמות שסתמו בחטאם ועד
סוף הזמן ההוא הוצרכו להצרף
בכור הברזל במצרים כי היו
מכח החצוניות הרבה ואחר זמן
זה יצאו נשמות טהורות וזהו
ואחרי כן יצאו ברכוש גדול
ויהיה רכוש מלשון שרי הרכש.

until "he is of fire and we are of flesh." Therefore, one who comes to purify himself needs assistance because of the evil inclination, as stated in the Talmud Menachot regarding the shape of the letter Hei, which resembles a portico.[A] Through this we understand our Sages' statement that "Adam drew down [the foreskin],"[B] which occurred on the sixth day at the time of the sin, for Adam should have prayed the "great Mincha" with greatness and supreme unification,[1] but his sin caused him to pray the "small Mincha" in poverty and diminishment.

The Sages expounded in Shabbat chapter 22, Yevamot chapter 12, and Avodah Zarah chapter 2 on the verse "The serpent deceived me" (hishi'ani), interpreting it as related to marriage (nisu'in), meaning that the serpent injected impurity into Eve. Tosafot wrote in Sanhedrin chapter 3 that the serpent was not commanded not to entice and was only punished because harm came through it, but regarding other enticers who were commanded not to entice, the principle "when faced with the words of the master and the words of the student..." does not apply. Thus, the husks grew stronger, and Adam, Eve, and the serpent were cursed. Therefore, purification in the iron furnace was required for four hundred years, corresponding to the four hundred shekels of silver representing the supernal channels of souls that were blocked by their sin. Until the end of that period, they needed to be refined in the iron furnace in Egypt, as they were greatly affected by external forces. After this time, purified souls emerged—this is the meaning of "afterward they

[A] Or: "Therefore, one who seeks purification requires divine assistance against the evil inclination, as explained in the Talmud Menachot regarding the letter Hei's shape resembling a portico with an opening at the bottom through which one might fall" — This alternate translation makes more explicit the talmudic reference about the letter Hei's shape, which serves as a metaphor for how someone seeking spiritual purification needs divine assistance to avoid falling through the 'opening' that represents vulnerability to the evil inclination.

[B] Or: "Adam drew down his foreskin" — This alternate translation explicitly states what was being drawn down, referring to a rabbinic teaching that Adam pulled his foreskin to extend it, symbolizing his movement away from the covenant with God. The abbreviated expression 'וכו" (etc.) in the original text assumes familiarity with this teaching.

[1] This refers to kabbalistic prayer intentions. The 'great Mincha' likely refers to the afternoon prayer with proper mystical intentions (kavvanot) that would have created divine unifications in upper realms. Adam's sin reduced this to a 'small Mincha,' symbolizing diminished spiritual capacity.

[i] This is an Aramaic expression meaning 'he is of fire and we are of flesh,' indicating the immense power of the evil inclination compared to human frailty. It appears in Talmudic literature to express the difficulty of spiritual struggle.

ברם נשמת יעקב בחיר האבות
והשבטים עד תשלום שבעים נפש
יש לדרוש בהם מה טיבם אז
והשתא לאו להכי אתינא. ויציאת
מצרים היתה מצד הבינה הנוגפת
ומבערת החצונים ומשם יצאו
דור דעה המושפעים מבינה.
ומשה רבינו ע״ה בראשם פני
חמה. אמנם כיבוש הארץ היתה
מצד מלכות על ידי יהושע פני
לבנה. ומלכות אינה חפצה
רק להכניע החצונים מפני
שהם צורך העולם. ולכן מהם
עזבו ישראל בכוונה עליונה
להוכיחם. כי גם הם לא תוהו
נבראו בדכתיב והשיבו את
האבן על פי הבאר למקומה.
והנה הקליפה הרביעית שהיא
המזיקים שנבראו בששי היא
מעין הקליפה שנבראת ביום
שני דהיינו גיהנם אמנם נתחזקה
הרבה במה שקדם אליה מנין
יום רביעי דהיינו המיעוט וחטא
אדם ביום ששי. ופסיקת הזוהמת
שהיתה בסיני היה תקון מה שמשך
כו׳. וחלק שני שהוא מיעוט
הירח היה תלוי עד שיכנסו
לארץ ושם תהיה הלבנה במלואה
כמו שהיתה בזמן שלמה ולא היה
ראוי להשאר אליהם אלא חלק
יצה״ר שאינו זוהמא מהנחש.
אבל הוא סוד הזונה שיש לה
שכר לפעולתה. כי זוהמת הנחש
אין לו שכר לפעולתו כלל אבל
יצר הרע יכיל למהוי יצר טוב.
והיינו חלק הניתן בו ברצון קונו
והיה להם לישראל אחר שיעמדו
זמן מה בארץ לזכות אל זמן
התחיה שהוא זמן תקון יצר הרע
מכל וכל. והטעם כי בקימת
הצדיקים מעפרם שהגבירו חלק

shall come out with great wealth," where "wealth" (rechush) is related to "officers of the chariots" (sarei harechesh).[1] 80R

Regarding the soul of Jacob, the chosen one of the Patriarchs, and the tribes, up to the completion of seventy souls, one could investigate their nature at that time, but that is not our present purpose. The 85R exodus from Egypt occurred through Binah (Understanding), which strikes and eliminates the external forces, and from there emerged the Generation of Knowledge, influenced by Binah. Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, was at their head with "the 90R face of the sun." However, the conquest of the land came from the aspect of Malkhut (Kingdom) through Jo[2]shua, "the face of the moon." Malkhut desires only to subdue the external forces because they are necessary for the world. Therefore, some of them 95R were deliberately left by Israel to prove them, for even they were not created for chaos, as it is written, "And they returned the stone to the mouth of the well in its place."

The fourth husk, which is the harmful entities 100R created on the sixth day, is similar to the husk created on the second day, namely Gehenna, but it was greatly strengthened by what preceded it—the count of the fourth day, meaning the diminishment, and Adam's sin on the sixth day. The cutting off of the 105R impurity that occurred at Sinai was a correction of what he "drew down." The second part, which is the diminishment of the moon, was suspended until they entered the land, where the moon would be full as it was in Solomon's time. It was appropriate that only 110R the portion of the evil inclination that is not the serpent's impurity should remain with them. Rather, it is the mystery of the harlot who receives reward for her work. For the serpent's impurity receives no reward for its work at all, but the evil inclination has 115R the potential to become the good inclination. This is the portion given with the Creator's will, and it was meant for Israel, after they had been in the land for some time, to merit the time of resurrection, which

[1] The author makes a creative etymological connection between the biblical term for wealth (רכוש/rechush) and the term for chariot officers (שרי הרכש/sarei harechesh), suggesting that the spiritual 'wealth' gained from Egypt was actually purified souls that would serve as spiritual vehicles.

[2] This uses kabbalistic symbolism where the sun represents Tiferet (associated with Moses and direct revelation from Binah) while the moon represents Malkhut (associated with Joshua and the more limited revelation appropriate for life in the physical world).

היצר טוב על יצר הרע[i] בזה
כבר נתקן ונעשה ימין אם כן שוב
לא ישוב לכסלה. ובנס התחיה
יובללו כל הנסים והוא תכלית
תקון החומרים והצורות ויש
לדרוש בתחיה מהותה ואיכותה
וכמותה וסגולתה וזמנה ומקומה
והדרוש רחב במקומו ובה
יתחברו ארבע יסודות רוחניות
של נשמה שהם צלם נפש רוח
נשמה וזהו מארבע רוחות בוא
הרוח וכמו שטל חרמון שהוא
שפע יהו מלא באלפין שעולה
ט״ל[ii] בן השמן של מעלה ירד
על הר המשחה להעיר הנפש
לתחיה ולזה נקרא הר המשחה
והר הזתים מפני מרירות המיתה
שקבלו הגופים. וחלק הנתוסף
בעון הנחש והמיעוט כבר נתקן
עם המיתה והגאולה. אם כן שוב
אינן חוזרים לעפרם. וכבר ידעת
כי המיתה היא מתיחת הדין לא
לבד על הנפטר גם על המשפחה
ועל הפגם העשוי במשפחה לזה
תקנו שיקרעו קרוביו ומיודעיו
עליו וכפי גודל הפגם כן תהיה
הקריעה ולבן באביו ואמו קורע
כל בגדיו עד שיגלה לבו ובשאר
מתים קורע העליון לבד. וכן
הרבה חלוקים באבילות בין
אביו ואמו לשאר מתים והכל נתן
לידרש כפי דרך זה:[iii]

is the time of complete rectification of the evil inclination. The reason is that when the righteous rise from their dust—those who strengthened the good inclination over the evil inclination—it has already been rectified and made "right," so it will not return to folly. The miracle of resurrection will include all miracles and is the ultimate rectification of the material and forms.

One could expound on resurrection: its essence, quality, quantity, virtue, time, and place—this is a broad subject in its own context. In resurrection, the four spiritual elements of the soul will unite, which are the divine image (tzelem), vital soul (nefesh), spirit (ruach), and higher soul (neshamah), and this is the meaning of "from the four winds, come, O spirit." Just as the dew of Hermon, which is the divine flow of the name YHV filled with the letter alef (which equals 39 in gematria), so will the supernal oil descend upon the Mount of Anointing to awaken the soul to resurrection. For this reason, it is called the Mount of Anointing (Har HaMishchah) and the Mount of Olives (Har HaZeitim) because of the bitterness of death experienced by the bodies.

The portion added due to the serpent's sin and the diminishment has already been rectified through death and redemption. Therefore, they will not return to dust again. You already know that death is an extension of judgment not only upon the deceased but also upon the family and the blemish created within the family. For this reason, they instituted that relatives and acquaintances should tear their garments for him, and according to the magnitude

[i]The author presents a theology where the righteous, through their spiritual struggles in life, transform the evil inclination itself into something positive. At resurrection, this transformation becomes permanent, representing the ultimate cosmic rectification.

[ii]This involves complex kabbalistic letter-mysticism: the divine name YHV (יהו) with the letter alef (א) inserted between each letter creates a numerical value of 39 (י=10, ה=5, ו=6, and three alephs at 1 each). This equals the numerical value of טל (tet=9, lamed=30), the Hebrew word for 'dew,' which rabbinic tradition associates with resurrection.

[iii]Cf. Zohar — The author draws on the Zoharic concept that negative spiritual forces were created on the second day as a necessary aspect of Creation, specifically from the divine attribute of Gevurah (severity/judgment) | Cf. Talmud — The author uses this talmudic reference to explain how the soul needs divine assistance for purification, as the letter Hei's design shows how one might fall through the bottom opening (representing spiritual vulnerability) without support | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author incorporates the kabbalistic teaching that the diminishment of the moon represents a cosmic imbalance affecting the lower divine feminine aspect (Malkhut), which strengthened negative forces in creation | Cf. Genesis — The author uses this biblical reference metaphorically to explain that some external forces were deliberately left in the world because they serve a necessary purpose in creation, just as the stone was returned to cover the well | Cf. Midrash — The author integrates the midrashic concept of resurrection dew with kabbalistic letter-mysticism, connecting it to divine names and the numerical value of טל (dew) equaling 39, of the blemish, so will be the tearing. Therefore, for one's father and mother, one tears all garments until exposing the heart, but for other deceased, one tears only the upper garment. Similarly, there are many distinctions in mourning between parents and other deceased, and all of this can be interpreted according to this approach. 155R

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

טל אורות עליונים[i] שהכין יוצר בראשית לבני התחיה היה מזומן להחיות הדורות שקדמו לדור שיצאו ממצרים שכבר מתו מאז כאבות העולם ושאר מתים ח״ל וא״י. אמנם דור דעה היה ראוי להיות חירות ממ״ה[ii] וחירות משעבוד וזה על ידי קיום המצות בארץ זמן מה ידוע ליוצר אמנם לא נמשכה כוונה זו על הדרך הנזכר יען כי קלקלו בעגל בעון חטא אדה״ר ממש שמשך עליו כו׳[iii] אף הם משכו עליהם כו׳ ונשאר העולם שומם כשהיה. ועכ״ז היה אפשר להם התקון השני. על ידי הכניסה לארץ. וגם לזה לא זכו וקלקלו לעצמם כדפירשו בההוא עובדא דינוקא בפ׳ ופגריכם אתם יפלו במדבר הזה. ובזה נדע כי בגאולה יתוקן מה שנתוסף מצד מיעוט הירח. ויהיה אור הלבנה כאור החמה וישארו האנשים קרובים לעבודת קונם. ועוד נהיה פנויים לענייני העולם הגשמי לרוב העידון והזהב הכסף והמזון עד שיתבטל

The supernal dew of lights that the Creator of the Beginning prepared for those destined for resurrection was ready to revive the generations that preceded those who left Egypt, who had already died long before, such as the Patriarchs and other deceased, both outside the Land of Israel and within it. However, the Generation of Knowledge[1] (those who left Egypt) was worthy of freedom from the Angel of Death and freedom from servitude through fulfilling the commandments in the Land for a specific time known to the Creator. But this purpose did not proceed as planned because they corrupted themselves with the Golden Calf, committing exactly the same sin as Adam, who "drew upon himself, etc."—likewise, they "drew upon themselves, etc.," and the world remained desolate as it was before. 5R 10R 15R

Nevertheless, a second rectification was possible for them through entering the Land. Yet they did not merit even this and corrupted themselves, as explained in the story of the child in the section "And your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness." From this we understand that in the final redemption, what was added due to the diminishment of the moon[2] will be rectified. The light of the moon will become like the light of the sun, and people will remain close to the service of their Creator. We will also be free from 20R 25R

[1] This term (דור דעה) specifically refers to the Israelites who left Egypt and received the Torah at Mount Sinai, so named because they directly experienced divine revelation.

[2] This refers to a midrashic concept that the moon was originally equal to the sun in size and brightness but was diminished after complaining to God. In kabbalistic thought, this represents cosmic imbalance that will be rectified in the messianic era.

which represents divine revitalizing energy

[i] This "dew of supernal lights" is a kabbalistic concept referring to divine effluence that will resurrect the dead. It appears in Isaiah 26:19: "For Your dew is a dew of lights."

[ii] The acronym מ״ה likely refers to מלאך המות (Malakh HaMavet), the Angel of Death. The Generation of Knowledge could have achieved immortality had they not sinned with the Golden Calf.

[iii] The abbreviation כו׳ (etc.) refers to a well-known teaching that Adam "drew upon himself the foreskin/serpent" through his sin. This is a euphemistic reference to the introduction of sexual desire and death into human existence.

חלק גדול מהחמדה והצורך אל
הדברים הגשמיים. והמיתה היא
תקון אל מה שמשך בו׳ ומכ״ש
כי יתוקן חלק שנתן הבורא בהם
במה שהם צדיקים והגבירו הימין
על שמאל ויצה״ר נעשה טוב.
אמנם החיים שלא מתו אם יהיה
צורך המיתה להם לפחות שעה
אחת לתקון חלק מה שמשכו
בערלה זה מקום ספק. ואחר
התחיה עדיין ישארו מבעלי
חיים הדברים הטמאים מפני
שהם חלק צד הרע הנכנע אל
הטוב ולכן אז יכנעו אל הימניית
כאומרו לא ירעו ולא ישחיתו
וגר זאב עם כבש וכן יהיו אז
כל אותם העתידים לחוג את
חג הסכות בסוד שבעים פרי
החג ואולם אחר זמן התחיה
הוא דבר לא נודע מה יהיה
אפילו לצדיקים בג״ע בדפי׳
בזהר רות. וארבע בחינות
יצה״ר שהזכרנו הם נזכרים
ונרמזים במזמור קי״ח מלבד מה
שדרשנו בו במאמר ג׳ פרק כ׳
אחר שהזכיר ד׳ פעמים כל״ח
לעורר כח החסדים גדולים
מאריך שהוא כתר האצילות
ואח״כ השפיע מהחכמה שהיא
אימא שבה שם י״ה בפ׳ מן המצר
קראתי יה. ואח״כ המשיך מאימא
דלא דחילת מנין הטורף והיא
שוברת כח החצונים וזה בפסוק
ה׳ לי לא אירא מה יעשה לי
אדם. שרומז לאדם בליעל
מרכבת ס״מ ולילית. ומשם
השפיע ויחד כל ו׳ קצוות של
ז״א בפסוק ה׳ לי בעוזרי ואני
אראה בשונאי. ובפסוק טוב
לחסות בה׳ יחד כל האצילות עם
נוקביה דזעיר ובפסוק מלאחריו
הזכיר דרגין דכורסייא שהם
עלמות שיר והיכלות שבע

material concerns due to the abundance of refinement, gold, silver, and food, until a large portion of desire and need for physical things will be nullified.

Death is a rectification for what Adam "drew upon himself," and all the more so will the portion that the Creator placed in the righteous be rectified when they strengthen the right (mercy) over the left (judgment), and the evil inclination becomes good. However, for those who remain alive, whether they will need to experience death, even for just one hour, to rectify the portion they "drew through the foreskin"—this remains doubtful. 30R 35R

After the resurrection, unclean animals will still exist because they represent the aspect of evil that is subjugated to good. Therefore, they will submit to the right side, as it is said, "They shall not hurt nor destroy," and "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb." So shall it be with all those destined to celebrate the Festival of Sukkot, in the mystery of the seventy bulls of the festival.[1] But what will happen after the time of resurrection is unknown, even for the righteous in the Garden of Eden, as explained in the Zohar on Ruth. 40R 45R

The four aspects of the evil inclination that we mentioned are referenced and alluded to in Psalm 118, beyond what we expounded on in Discourse 3, Chapter 20. After mentioning "His kindness endures forever" four times to awaken the power of great mercies from Arich, which is Keter of Emanation,[2] the psalmist then draws from Wisdom, which is Imma (Mother), in which resides the divine name Yah, in the verse "From distress I called upon Yah." He then draws from Imma, who does not fear the tearing predator[3] and breaks the power of the external forces, as in the verse "The LORD is for me, I shall not fear; what can man do to me?"—referring to the wicked man who is the vehicle of Samael and Lilith. 50R 55R 60R

From there, he unified all six extremities of Zeir Anpin in the verse "The LORD is for me among my helpers; therefore I will look upon those who hate me." In the verse "It is better to take refuge in the LORD," he unified all of Emanation with the female aspect of Zeir, and in the following verse, he 65R

[1] This refers to the total number of bull sacrifices offered during the seven days of Sukkot, which traditionally were understood to correspond to the seventy nations of the world.

[2] In Kabbalah, Keter (Crown) is the highest of the ten sefirot (divine emanations), and is associated with God's will and the aspect called Arich Anpin (Long-Faced One).

[3] In kabbalistic symbolism, Imma (Mother) corresponds to the sefirah of Binah (Understanding) which has the power to overcome and neutralize negative spiritual forces.

דיצירה ואמר כי אין לבטוח בהם הנקרא נדיבים להיות בה׳ מבטחנו ואליו ולא למדותיו וכ״ש לנבראיו ומלאכיו. בהגיעו לעולם העשייה ששם סביבו רשעים יתהלכון נגד ארבע בחינות יצה״ר שהזכרנו שהם ארבע מסכים שהזכיר יחזקאל רוח סערה. ענן גדול. ואש מתלקחת. ונגה. אמר נגד הג׳ ראשונות ממטה למעלה ג׳ פעמים בשם ה׳ כי אמילם. כי מלכותו בכל משלה לאכנעא לון כנזכר למעלה במאמר ג׳ פרק הנ״ל. ברם נוגה אינה קליפה טמאה אלא שאין השפע מתגלה בה כדי שלא יהנו ממנו החצונים השוכנים אצלה. ושמות ארבע קליפות אלו הם נחש שרף ועקרב וצמאון כנזכר. וזוהי קליפת נגה הצמאה לקדושה הנמנעת ממנה מחמת שכנותה אצל שלש האחרים הטמאים וזהו אוי לרשע ואוי לשכנו[i] ובהדי הוצא לקי כרבא.[ii] לכן בקליפה הרביעית הזאת לא נאמר בה כי אמילם כראשונים רק וה׳ עזרני. ומצינו בגמ׳ שלשה מיני חמורים. בשבת פרק ט״ו חמורו של רבי חנינא בן דוסא ושל רבי פנחס בן יאיר בפרק הכל שוחטין ובתענית פ״ג חמורו של ר׳ יוסי דמן יוקרת. ואולי כוונת החסידים אלו היה לעשות מצע תחתיהם ולכבוש ג׳ קליפות קשות שאינם נכללים בקדושה. והצליחו במעשיהם כי חזרו להיות עושים רצונם על דרך שאמרו בסנהדרין פ״ז על נחש. חבל על שמש גדול שאבד מן העולם כו׳ וחמורו של אברהם אבינו ע״ה ושל ר״מ ושל משיח צדקנו אולי יהיו מקובלים לשלש מדרגות mentioned the levels of the Throne, which are the maidens of song and the seven palaces of Formation. He said not to trust in these, called "nobles," but to place our trust in the LORD Himself, not in His attributes, and certainly not in His creations and angels. 70R 75R

When reaching the World of Action, where "the wicked walk around," corresponding to the four aspects of the evil inclination we mentioned—which are the four screens that Ezekiel mentioned: stormy wind, great cloud, flashing fire, and brightness—he said against the first three, from bottom to top, "In the name of the LORD I will surely cut them off" three times, for His kingdom rules over all, to subdue them, as mentioned above in Discourse 3 in the aforementioned chapter. However, nogah (brightness) is not an impure shell, but rather the divine flow is not revealed in it so that the external forces dwelling near it should not benefit. The names of these four shells are serpent, fiery serpent, scorpion, and thirst, as mentioned. This nogah shell thirsts for holiness but is prevented from receiving it due to its proximity to the other three impure shells. This is the meaning of "Woe to the wicked and woe to his neighbor," and "With the thorns, the cabbage is also smitten." Therefore, regarding this fourth shell, it does not say "I will cut them off" as with the first three, but rather "The LORD helped me." 80R 85R 90R 95R

We find in the Talmud three types of donkeys: in Shabbat Chapter 15, the donkey of Rabbi Chanina ben Dosa; in the chapter "All May Slaughter" and in Ta'anit Chapter 3, the donkey of Rabbi Pinchas ben Yair; and the donkey of Rabbi Yose of Yokeret. Perhaps the intention of these pious ones was to create a foundation beneath themselves and to conquer the three severe shells that cannot be included in holiness. They succeeded in their deeds, for these shells returned to doing their will, as they said in Sanhedrin Chapter 7 regarding the serpent: "It is a pity that a great servant was lost from the world, etc." And the donkey of our father Abraham, peace be upon him, and of Rabbi Meir, and of our righteous Messiah—perhaps they correspond to three levels that are close 100R 105R 110R

[i] This is a rabbinic saying from the Talmud (Sukkah 56b): "Woe to the wicked and woe to his neighbor." It expresses that proximity to evil can contaminate even that which is not inherently evil.

[ii] This Aramaic expression from the Talmud (Bava Kamma 92a) means "along with the thorns, the cabbage is also smitten"—a metaphor for collateral damage.

הקרובים אל הקדושה זה יותר מזה שהם בקליפת נגה. ובשבת
115 פ׳ ר׳ עקיבא ובילמדנו פ׳ יתרו דרשו שם הרבה דברים משולשים שנוכל לדרוש הרבה מהם כדרך זה:[i] to holiness, each more so than the other, which are in the shell of nogah. In Shabbat, in the chapter of Rabbi Akiva, and in Yelamdenu, Parashat Yitro, they expounded on many things that come in threes, from which we can derive many teachings in this manner. 115R

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

כוונת האדם בכל מעשה תוקפו בעוה״ז תהיה להחליש כח הדין ולהגביר ימין ה׳[ii] שתהיה רוממה ותעשה חיל ולעולם ישריש
5 נפשו ונפשות החיים ההולכים אחר עצתו במקום עליון דלא שלטת תמן מותא שהוא עלמא דדכורא[iii] סוד ז״א בסוד שימני כחותם[iv] שהוא המציאות אשר
10 למלכות עם ת״ת ממש. כי יש כח וספוק ביד צדיק אחד לזכות הרבה אחרים עמו כפי מחצב נשמתו על דרך שנאמר באברהם וארבה אותך במאד
15 מאד. שאמרו כי יפה כחה

A person's intention in all their powerful actions in this world should be to weaken the power of judgment and strengthen God's right hand, that it may be exalted and perform mightily. One should always root one's soul and the souls of those living who follow one's counsel in the supernal place where death has no do[1]minion—the masculine realm, the secret of Zeir Anpin,[2] in the mystery of "Set me as a seal," which is the reality that belongs to Malkhut with Tiferet itself. For a single righteous person has the power and capacity to bring merit to many others along with themself, according to the source of their soul, as it was said of Abraham: "I will multiply you exceedingly." For they said that the soul of Abraham had the beautiful power to gather all the songs and 5R 10R 15R

[1] This passage suggests the kabbalistic concept that human souls can be spiritually elevated to transcend the realm of mortality through proper spiritual practice and intention.

[2] I've maintained the technical kabbalistic terminology here, as Zeir Anpin (literally 'Small Face' or 'Lesser Countenance') is a specific divine configuration in Kabbalah that doesn't have a simple English equivalent.

[i] Cf. Psalm 118 — The author interprets Psalm 118 through a kabbalistic lens, seeing the psalm as describing the flow of divine energy through the various sefirot (divine emanations) and their effects on the evil inclination. | Cf. Ezekiel's vision — The author interprets these elements from Ezekiel's vision as corresponding to the four aspects of the evil inclination, connecting biblical imagery to kabbalistic concepts of spiritual impurity. | Cf. Zohar on Ruth — The author references the Zohar's commentary on Ruth as an authoritative source regarding the mysteries of the afterlife and resurrection, showing how kabbalistic texts were used to supplement biblical understanding. | Cf. Talmudic stories about donkeys — The author interprets these Talmudic references mystically, suggesting that these sages' donkeys symbolically represent conquest over impure spiritual forces (kelipot). | Cf. Isaiah 11:6 — The author uses these prophetic verses from Isaiah to describe the messianic era after resurrection, when even impure forces will be transformed and subdued rather than eliminated.

[ii] This phrase reflects a core kabbalistic concept that divine judgment (din) needs to be tempered by divine mercy (often associated with the right side or 'right hand' of God). This is a fundamental theological framework in Jewish mysticism.

[iii] The text refers to 'the supernal place where death has no dominion' as 'the masculine realm' (alma de-dichura), reflecting the kabbalistic concept that masculine divine energy is associated with life and mercy, while feminine energy (alma de-nukba) is associated with judgment and, in some contexts, death.

[iv] Z"A (Zeir Anpin) is a central kabbalistic term referring to the six sefirot from Chesed to Yesod as a unified structure, representing the 'Small Face' of divinity. The phrase 'Set me as a seal' comes from Song of Songs 8:6, interpreted kabbalistically as referring to the union between Zeir Anpin and Malkhut.

של נשמת אברהם לאסוף כל השירים והשבחים הנאמרים מפי כל הנמצאים ולכלול כלם בעולם העשייה והיינו ואברה
20 אותך כעין מה רבו מעשיך ה׳. במאד רומז לעולם היצירה בסוד מטטרו״ן הכולל שיר המלאכים.[i] מאד אדם דבריאה הכולל שיר עולמות כנודע.
25 כי היה אברהם בסוד הנפש כולל כל עולם העשייה. וזהו ואברה אותך ובסוד הרוח היה כולל עולם היצירה וזהו במאד. ובסוד הנשמה אדם דבריאה
30 וזהו מאד. ולהגיע למעלות אלו הוצרך ליבחן בעשרה נסיונות ועמד בכולן להודיע כמה חבתו וכחו של אברהם אבינו. בדוגמא זו כל צדיק מיוצאי חלציו
35 יכול להשלים עצמו לכל אחד מארבע פני המרכבה[ii] הכוללים כל מיני אורה והם ארבעה ראשים המאירים לארץ ולדרים בכח ארבע אותיות שמו הגדול
40 המבורך. ובזה הקדושה שאננה ושקטה במעשי ידיהם של צדיקים המוסיפים כח בגבורה של מעלה. על כן ראוי לאדם לפשפש במעשיו ולשוב בתשובה
45 או למשמש פירוש לעת שבא דבר לידו יחשוב הפסד מצוה וכו׳ כדפרש״י בגמ׳ דערובין פ״ק. ויבקש רחמים שיהו הכל מאמצים את כחו כדאמרי׳ praises uttered by all created beings[1] and include them all in the World of Action. This is the meaning of "I will multiply you," similar to "How numerous are Your works, O Lord." "Exceedingly" alludes to the World of Formation through the mystery of Metatron, who encompasses the song of angels. "Exceedingly" also refers to the Adam of Creation who encompasses the song of worlds, as is known. For Abraham, in the mystery of Nefesh, encompassed the entire World of Action[2]—this is "I will multiply you." And in the mystery of Ruach, he encompassed the World of Formation—this is "exceedingly." And in the mystery of Neshamah, the Adam of Creation—this is "exceedingly." To reach these levels, he needed to be tested through ten trials, and he withstood them all, to demonstrate the greatness of Abraham our father's divine love and power. Following this model, every righteous person descended from him can perfect themselves to become one of the four faces of the Divine Chariot,[3] which include all types of light. These are the four luminous heads that shine upon the earth and its inhabitants through the power of the four letters of His great blessed Name. Through this, holiness dwells tranquil and peaceful in the handiwork of the righteous, who add strength to the supernal might. Therefore, it is proper for a person to examine their deeds and repent, or to be attentive—meaning that when something comes to hand, one should consider the loss of a commandment, etc., as Rashi explained in the Talmud, Eruvin, first chapter. And one should pray for mercy that all will strengthen one's power, as we say in Tractate Sanhedrin, chapter 7, where Rashi explained that the ministering angels will assist in seeking mercy,

20R 25R 30R 35R 40R 45R

[1] This portrays Abraham's soul as having a cosmic role in collecting and elevating the praises of all creation, suggesting a view of righteous human souls as active participants in divine cosmic processes.

[2] The text presents a sophisticated spiritual hierarchy where Abraham's soul operated simultaneously at three levels (Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah), each corresponding to a different cosmic world (Asiyah/Action, Yetzirah/Formation, and Beriah/Creation).

[3] The text presents spiritual perfection as becoming integrated into the divine manifestation itself, represented by Ezekiel's vision of the Chariot. This represents a high mystical goal where the righteous person becomes a vehicle for divine presence.

[i] Metatron is an archangel in Jewish tradition considered the highest of the angels. In the kabbalistic system referenced here, Metatron is associated with the World of Formation (Yetzirah) and is seen as conducting the angelic choir.

[ii] The 'four faces of the Divine Chariot' refers to the vision in Ezekiel 1, where the prophet sees a divine chariot with four faces: man, lion, ox, and eagle. In kabbalistic thought, these represent different aspects of divine manifestation and correspond to the four letters of God's name.

במסכתא סנהדרין פ״ז ופרש״י
שמלאכי השרת יסייעוהו לבקש
רחמים ולא יהיו לו צרים
מלמעלה ויעשה שלום במרומיו.
ולפי מה שבארנו במאמר ראשון
על מזלו של אדם שיש לו ברקיע
וכדפירש״י בתענית ובמ״ק
כי מרוז היה מזלו של סיסרא
ולמען לא ינגד למלחמת שמים
נגד סיסרא לכן שמתיה ברק
בד׳ מאה שיפורי. יצא לנו
מזה כמה גדול כח מזלו של
אדם ברקיע וכ״ש מזלן של
צדיקים. גם לזה יכוין בתפלתו
שיאמץ כח מלמעלה. ובמה
יזכה האדם ארחו לקשט ד׳
פני המרכבה. הנה בצד צפון
ממרכבת הרוכב בשמי שמי
קדם שם פני שור.[i] ובהיות
הצדיקים כובשים יצרם בכל
ד׳ בחותיו[ii] אלו הנזכרים והם
גבורים לעמוד בפרץ נגדו בזה
מתקנים צד הצפון וכובשים דיני
הגבורה. קשוט מן המערב ששם
פני נשר[iii] תלוי באותם השומרים
משמרת המערב שלא תחשך אורה
ולא תעריב וזה על ידי עסקם
בדין אמת ומעמידים שורת הדין
על מכונו ונעשים שותף להקב״ה
במעשה בראשית ושונאים ממון
שאינו שלהם. וכן לתקון זה
הפן אותם המסתפקים בעניים
וסובלים יסורים ועונשים גופן
מזבח כפרה כי ה׳ צדיק יבחן

and there will be no adversaries from above, and He will make peace in His heights. According to what we explained in the first discourse about a person's celestial guardian that exists in the firmament,[1] and as Rashi explained in Taanit and Moed Katan that Meroz was Sisera's guardian angel, and so that it would not oppose the war of heaven against Sisera, Barak excommunicated it with four hundred shofar blasts. From this we learn how great is the power of a person's guardian in the firmament, and how much more so the guardians of the righteous. One should also focus on this in prayer—to strengthen power from above. And how can a person make their path worthy to adorn the four faces of the Divine Chariot? Behold, on the northern side of the chariot of the Rider in the ancient heavens is the face of the ox.[2] When the righteous conquer their evil inclination in all four of its aforementioned powers and are mighty to stand in the breach against it, they thereby repair the northern side and subdue the judgments of Gevurah. Adorning the western side, where the face of the eagle is located, depends on those who guard the western watch, ensuring its light does not darken or set. This is accomplished through their engagement with true judgment, establishing justice on its foundation, becoming partners with the Holy One, blessed be He, in the work of creation,[3] and hating money that is not rightfully theirs. Similarly, for the repair of this aspect are those who are satisfied with little, endure suffering and punishments, their body an altar of atonement, for "the Lord tests the righteous," and sufferings of love—when there is judgment above that prevents unification, that judgment flows to the righteous person, and then She [the [1] This refers to the concept that each person has a spiritual counterpart or guardian angel in the celestial realms. The example of Meroz as Sisera's guardian being excommunicated illustrates the belief that actions in the earthly realm affect these celestial counterparts.

[2] The text maps Ezekiel's vision of the four-faced chariot onto the cardinal directions, with specific correspondences between directions, divine attributes, and spiritual practices. The north is associated with the ox face and divine judgment.

[3] This reflects the rabbinic concept that judges who render true judgments become partners with God in creation, as they maintain the ethical order that sustains the cosmos.

[i] The northern side is traditionally associated with Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) in kabbalistic tradition, and the ox/bull face from Ezekiel's vision is placed there. The north is often connected with the source of harsh judgment that needs to be conquered.

[ii] The evil inclination (yetzer) is described as having four powers, likely corresponding to the four elements or four primary character traits that need to be mastered for spiritual advancement.

[iii] The west is associated with the eagle face from Ezekiel's vision and with sunset/decline, hence the emphasis on guarding against darkness. In kabbalistic thought, the west is often associated with Malkhut, the final divine emanation.

ויסורים של אהבה[i] כשיש דין
למעלה המונע היחוד מושפע
הדין ההוא לצדיק ואז היא
מתייחדת ואומרת הרי הצדיק
הזה פלוני בני סובל יסורין
דין העולם ועומד בצדקו וכל
העולם לא ניזון אלא בשביל
חנינא בני.[ii] ואמרו בגמ׳
דקדושין ס״פ קמא כי הצדיקים
ביסורים הבאים עליהם נמשלים
לאילן שכלו עומד במקום טהרה
ונופו פירוש קצת ממנו נוטה
למקום טומאה וכו׳ ומסיים
כך הקב״ה מביא יסורים על
הצדיקים בעוה״ז בשביל שיירשו
עה״ב שנאמר והיה ראשיתך
מצער ואחריתך ישגה מאד.
ואהרן הכהן שידע שמיתת בניו
היה כמו עקידת יצחק שממש
בידו עקד אברהם איש החסד
ויקח המאכלת לשחוט ולמצות
כח הדין מבנו יצחק בסוד המים
הרו וילדו אפלה.[iii] אף כאן
נדב ואביהוא מתו לעקור הדין
וזהו ואל זועם בכל יום.[iv] וכ״ש
אז שירידת השכינה בתחתונים

Shekhinah] unites and says:[1] "Behold, this righteous one, my child So-and-so, suffers the judgment of the world yet stands firm in righteousness, and the entire world is sustained only for the sake of Hanina my son."[2] And they said in Tractate Kiddushin, at the end of the first chapter, that the righteous with the sufferings that come upon them are compared to a tree that stands entirely in a place of purity while its branches—meaning part of it—extend toward a[3] place of impurity, etc. It concludes: "Thus the Holy One, blessed be He, brings suffering upon the righteous in this world so that they may inherit the World to Come, as it says, 'Though your beginning was small, your end will increase greatly.'"
And Aaron the Priest knew that the death of his sons was like the binding of Isaac, for Abraham, the man of kindness, literally bound him with his own hands[4] and took the knife to slaughter him and exhaust the power of judgment from his son Isaac, in the mystery of "the waters conceived and gave birth to darkness." So too here, Nadab and Abihu died to uproot judgment—this is "God who is angry every day." All the more so then, when the descent of the Divine Presence into the lower realms was contrary to the attribute of judgment,[5] as explained in the Zohar at the end of Parashat Pekudei. It was necessary

[1] I've added the bracketed clarification to indicate that 'She' refers to the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), which is grammatically feminine in Hebrew. This reflects the kabbalistic concept of the feminine aspect of divinity.

[2] This is a reference to the Talmudic statement (Berakhot 17b) that the entire world is sustained because of Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa. Here it's used to illustrate how the suffering of a righteous person can sustain the world.

[3] This metaphor illustrates how the righteous, while remaining essentially pure, may have some connection to impurity through their physical existence. Their suffering purifies these extended aspects.

[4] The text interprets the binding of Isaac (Akedah) and the deaths of Nadab and Abihu as divinely ordained events that channeled judgment in specific ways, suggesting that these apparent tragedies had cosmic purposes in balancing divine attributes.

[5] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the Tabernacle's purpose was to create a dwelling place for divinity in the physical world, which requires a mitigation of strict judgment to allow divine presence to coexist with material existence.

[i] The concept of 'sufferings of love' (yissurim shel ahavah) is a traditional rabbinic idea that certain suffering is sent not as punishment but as an expression of divine love to purify the righteous person and elevate them spiritually.

[ii] This is a reference to the Talmudic statement about Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa, whose extraordinary righteousness was said to sustain the entire world. The author uses this to illustrate how a righteous person's suffering can benefit everyone.

[iii] This mystical phrase 'the waters conceived and gave birth to darkness' appears to refer to the kabbalistic concept of how divine judgment (often symbolized by water) can manifest as darkness or suffering in the world.

[iv] This is a quote from Psalm 7:12, 'God is angry every day,' used here to illustrate the constant presence of divine judgment that must be addressed through spiritual actions.

היתה הפך מדת הדין כדפי׳ בזוהר סוף פ׳ פקודי. והוצרך ליתן מקום אל הדין להשפיעו שיטפל בו בענין איוב שפירשו בזוהר פרשת אמור. לכן וידום אהרן כאדם שמודה על העשוי כי הכל במשפט ישר מלבד כי ידע שעקר קדושת המשכן היה בקרבן נפש אדם דכתיב אדם כי יקריב מכם. הה״ד הוא אשר דבר ה׳ בקרובי אקדש. ועתה אהרן איש החסד קדשו בבניו. וזה וימותו לפני ה׳. ולא היו ראויים לאותו מעשה רק חטאם היה כדי לגלגל עליהם הדין כענין יסורי רבי שבאו על ידי מעשה וכבר נודע כי היו לכפרת הדור על כן כתיב ואחיכם כל בית ישראל יבכו את השריפה.[i] כי הבכיה מצד הדין לתקנו לעורר המים מצד החסד נגדו לכן הם יבכו הדין אשר שרף ה׳ והשפיע אל מקום יניקתם כדי שיתעוררו הרחמים עליהם כדוגמא זו יצתה בת קול ואמרה כל דהוה באשכבתיה דרבי מזומן לחיי העוה״ב[ii] כדאיתא בכתובות פ׳ י״ב ושם פירש״י מזומן פירוש בלא דין ובלא יסורים וכן פירשו בכל מקום וזו היתה כוונתו לזכות את הרבים בהספדו וצוויו בשעת מיתתו אל תספדוני בעיירות.[iii] [iv]

to give place to judgment, to channel it to be concerned with it, similar to the case of Job, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Emor. Therefore, "Aaron was silent" like one who acknowledges what has been done,[1] for everything is with righteous judgment. Moreover, he knew that the essence of the Tabernacle's sanctity was in the sacrifice of a human soul, as it is written, "When a person from among you brings an offering." This is what is meant by "This is what the Lord spoke, saying: 'Through those near to Me I will be sanctified.'" And now Aaron, the man of kindness, was sanctified through his sons. This is "and they died before the Lord." They were not deserving of that deed, but their sin was to bring judgment upon them, similar to the sufferings of Rabbi [Judah the Prince] that came about through an incident. And it is already known that they were for the atonement of the generation, therefore it is written, "And your brethren, the entire house of Israel, shall weep for the burning." For weeping stems from judgment, to repair it and arouse the waters from the side of kindness against it. Therefore, they shall weep for the judgment that the Lord burned and channeled to the place of their nourishment, so that mercy would be aroused for them. Similar to this, a heavenly voice went forth and said, "Whoever was present at Rabbi's funeral is destined for the life of the World to Come," as stated in Tractate Ketubot, chapter 12. And there Rashi explained "destined" to mean without judgment and without suffering, and so they explained in every place. And this was his intention: to bring merit to the many through his

[1] Aaron's silence after the death of his sons (Leviticus 10:3) is interpreted here as his recognition of the cosmic necessity of their deaths, despite his personal grief.

[i] This is a quote from Leviticus 10:6, referring to how the entire house of Israel should mourn the burning of Nadab and Abihu. The author interprets this communal mourning as a means to transform divine judgment into mercy.

[ii] This Talmudic quote (Ketubot 103b) states that all who were present at Rabbi Judah the Prince's funeral were destined for the World to Come. The author interprets this as indicating that Rabbi's death and funeral served as an atonement for others.

[iii] This was Rabbi Judah the Prince's instruction before his death (Ketubot 103a), requesting that his eulogies not be delivered in small towns. The author suggests this was to benefit the maximum number of people with the merit of participating in his funeral.

[iv] Cf. Ezekiel 1 — The text draws on Ezekiel's vision of the four-faced divine chariot (merkavah) as a framework for understanding how righteous humans can embody different aspects of divine manifestation. The four faces (man, lion, ox, eagle) become spiritual archetypes that the righteous can perfect in themselves. | Cf. Song of Songs 8:6 — The phrase 'Set me as a seal' (שימני כחותם) is quoted from Song of Songs 8:6. In kabbalistic interpretation, this verse is understood as describing the unification of the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, specifically between Zeir Anpin and Malkhut. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The text refers explicitly to the Zohar's explanation eulogy and his instruction at the time of his death: "Do not eulogize me in the towns."[1]

פרק ה׳

Chapter 5

לצד דרום מן המרכבה שם פן אריה[i] הם אותם השומרים משמרת הדרום בגמול חסדים תמיד שכל צד גמילות חסדים תלוי בחסד באשר פירשנו למעלה במאמרות הקודמים בגמילות חסדים הנעשה עם המתים. ואמרו בגמרא סוטה פרק ד׳ גדול גמ״ח יותר מן הצדקה ובגמרא ע״ג פרק קמא כל זמן שישראל עוסקים בתורה ובגמ״ח יצרם מסור בידם. ובאבלות שעושים על הנפטר מעוררים מעשיו הטובים שעשה בעולם. ובזה מגבירים מדת החסד ונודע כי בשעת פטירתו כל מעשיו נפרטים לפניו והוא

On the south side of the divine chariot is the face of a lion,[C][2] representing those who guard the southern watch through constant acts of loving-kindness,[3] for all aspects of loving-kindness depend on the attribute of Chesed, as we explained above in previous discourses concerning the loving-kindness performed for the dead. The Talmud states in Sotah, chapter 4, "Acts of loving-kindness are greater than charity," and in Avodah Zarah, chapter 1, "As long as Israel engages in Torah and acts of loving-kindness, their evil inclination is delivered into their hands." Through the mourning performed for the deceased, we awaken the memory of the good deeds they performed in this world, thereby strengthening the attribute of loving-kindness.[D] It is known that at the moment of death, all of one's deeds are enumerated before them, and they write

[C] Or: "lion-face aspect" — This more technical translation might better convey the kabbalistic concept of the divine 'faces' or aspects of the merkavah (divine chariot), though it is less natural in English.

[D] Or: "the sefirah of Chesed" — For a more technical kabbalistic rendering, this term could be translated using the specific sefirot terminology, though the current translation better conveys the meaning to readers unfamiliar with kabbalah.

[1] Rabbi Judah the Prince's instruction about his funeral arrangements is interpreted as his desire to maximize the spiritual benefit of his death for others, consistent with the text's overall theme that the deaths of the righteous serve greater cosmic purposes.

[2] The text is drawing from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (merkavah) with four faces. In kabbalistic tradition, each face corresponds to a direction and divine attribute. The lion (south) represents Chesed (loving-kindness).

[3] The concept of 'watching' or 'guarding' (משמרת) a direction refers to cultivating the corresponding divine attribute through appropriate spiritual practices.

of how the Divine Presence descending to the Tabernacle represented a cosmic event that required balancing divine judgment with mercy. This illustrates how the author grounds his mystical interpretations in earlier kabbalistic sources. | Cf. Talmud, Tractate Ketubot 103b — The author quotes the Talmudic account of Rabbi Judah the Prince's death to illustrate how the death of a righteous person can serve as atonement for others, creating a connection between personal suffering and cosmic benefit. | Cf. Leviticus 10:1-3 — The author draws a parallel between the biblical account of Nadab and Abihu's death and the binding of Isaac, suggesting both were cosmic events that channeled divine judgment in particular ways. This exemplifies the author's approach of finding mystical patterns across seemingly disparate biblical narratives. | Cf. Genesis 22 — The binding of Isaac (Akedah) is interpreted kabbalistically as Abraham, the embodiment of divine kindness, participating in an act of judgment (binding his son) that ultimately transformed judgment into mercy. This illustrates the text's recurring theme of righteous suffering as a means of cosmic transformation.

[i] This draws on Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1:10) of the divine chariot with four faces. The author is using this vision as an organizing principle to explain different spiritual virtues, with the lion face representing acts of loving-kindness (Chesed).

כותב וחותם עליהם כדאמרי׳ בגמרא תענית פ״ק. ובהספד מעוררים מעשיו להתראות לפני המלך ה׳ צבאות ועל החכם קורעין וחולצין ומברין כפי מה שמצאתי כתוב לחכם אחד שלהיות שהוא היה מקיים שאר כסות ועונה[i] היה עוסק בתורה ובעל מדות ומתפלל לעתות על הגזרות לכן קורעים על מדותיו המשולות לבגדיו הן קודמות אצל ההמון. חולצין על שנפטר מי שהיה חולץ מנעליו בהתפללו על צרות צבור. עוד היה מרחיק מעליו ככל האפשר לו לבוש עור הנחש להתלבש בכתנות אור.[ii] ומברין על שמת מי שהיה לומד תורה שהיא שאר לנפש.[iii] ומטוביה אוטיב לעמיה. ולהיות החכם הנאתו קרובה לכל העולם בנזכר לפיכך הכל חייבים בהספדו לכבדו. ובזה עושין כבוד לתורה וכבוד לנפש וכבוד לגופו וכמו שלחי שואלין בשלומו כדי לחזק ולהוסיף שלימות הנשאל וה״ה למי שמשיבין לו. כך ע״י ההספד שהם דברים של מיתה[iv] and seal their acknowledgment of them, as stated in the Talmud, Taanit, first chapter. Through the eulogy, we awaken their deeds to appear before the King, the Lord of Hosts. 20R

For a deceased sage, we rend our garments, remove our shoes, and partake of the mourner's meal. As I found written by one sage: since the deceased fulfilled the obligations of "food, clothing, and conjugal rights"[1] through engaging in Torah study, possessing good character traits, and praying at times of harsh decrees, therefore we rend our garments for his virtues, which are likened to his garments and take precedence among the masses. We remove our shoes in honor of one who would remove his own shoes when praying for the community's troubles. Furthermore, he would distance himself as much as possible from the "garment of the serpent's skin" to clothe himself in "garments of light."[2] We partake of the mourner's meal because the deceased studied Torah, which is sustenance for the soul, and "from his goodness, he benefited his people." 25R 30R 35R

Since a sage's benefit extends to the entire world as mentioned, therefore everyone is obligated to honor him with a eulogy. In this way, we show honor to the Torah, honor to his soul, and honor to his body. Just as for the living, we inquire after their welfare to strengthen and add to the wholeness of the one being asked about (and the same applies to 40R 45R

[1]The Hebrew phrase 'שאר כסות ועונה' refers to the three biblical obligations of a husband to his wife from Exodus 21:10. The author creatively applies these material obligations to spiritual practices.
[2]This kabbalistic concept draws on an interpretation of Genesis 3:21 where 'garments of skin' (כתנות עור) given after the Fall replaced the original 'garments of light' (כתנות אור). The sage strives to reverse this process through spiritual discipline.

[i]These three terms refer to the biblical obligations of a husband to his wife (Exodus 21:10): food, clothing, and conjugal rights. The author creates an analogy between these physical obligations and the sage's spiritual obligations.
[ii]This refers to the kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 3:21. Before Adam's sin, humans wore 'garments of light' (כתנות אור), but after sin, these became 'garments of skin' (כתנות עור). The change involves only the Hebrew vowel points between אור (light) and עור (skin).
[iii]A wordplay on 'שאר' (food/sustenance) and its metaphorical application to Torah as spiritual sustenance for the soul.
[iv]Cf. Sotah, chapter 4 — The author quotes this to establish the theological importance of acts of loving-kindness, particularly those performed for the dead, which is a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Avodah Zarah, chapter 1 — This reference supports the author's theological framework that proper ritual practices and Torah study create spiritual protection and power over negative forces. | Cf. Taanit, first chapter — The author uses this to establish the theological significance of the moment of death as a time of spiritual accounting, explaining why proper mourning practices are important for the deceased's soul. | Cf. Four faces of the divine chariot (Ezekiel 1) — The author uses this prophetic vision as an organizing principle, with each face representing a different spiritual virtue. In this passage, the lion face represents the attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness) associated with the south direction. | Cf. Garments of light vs. garments

the one who responds), so too through the eulogy, which consists of words concerning death

ילכו להם מלאכי חבלה כי נתקררה דעתם ונעשה רצונם בזה.[i] ואמרו בפרשת שלח לך דף קע״ב דמלאך המות נייחא שלו בהספדא דנשין איהו רקיד ואזניה להספדא.[ii] וכתב רבינו בחיי בפ׳ ויחי כי יש תשעה מינין של הספד כתובים בתורה בנביאים ובכתובים וכן עלו תשע כתות עם יוסף באבלו של אביו כדי להספיד עליו ט׳ מיני הספד. וממה שכתבנו למעלה בפראים שמתקבצים תשעה ותשעה יובן דעת וטעם לט׳ מיני הספד. וגם ראיתי קצת שמדקדקים בליל בעור חמץ לחזור אחר תשעה פרוסות של חמץ[iii] הגם שהוותיקין אומרים שטוב שיהיו י״א בסוד עשתי עשרה יריעות ע״ד כל המוסיף גורע. עוד על ידי ההספד מקילין צער המת ודוחקו כמ״ש בהקפות שהם למנוע מעליהם כחות המזיקים הקשים והאבלות הוא על צער וטרדת המת לפי ששורה רוח הטומאה על הגוף בסלוק הנשמה זולתי על הפרושים שנשמתם

...the angels of destruction will depart because their minds have been calmed and their will has been done. It is said in Parashat Shelach Lecha, page 172, that the Angel of Death finds satisfaction in the lamentations of women; he dances and inclines his ear to hear the eulogies. Rabbeinu Bachya wrote in Parashat Vayechi that there are nine types of eulogies written in the Torah, Prophets, and Writings, and similarly nine groups accompanied Joseph in his mourning for his father to deliver nine types of eulogies for him. From what we have written above about the "wild ones" who gather in groups of nine, one can understand the reasoning behind the nine types of eulogies. I have also seen some who are meticulous on the night of searching for chametz to look for nine pieces of chametz, although the pious ones say it is better to have eleven, corresponding to the secret of the eleven curtains, following the principle that "whoever adds, diminishes."

Furthermore, through eulogies, the deceased's suffering and distress are eased, as we explained regarding the circuits [around the bier],[1] which serve to keep away the severe harmful forces. The mourning is over the suffering and distress of the deceased, since the spirit of impurity rests upon the body when the soul departs,[2] except in the case of the ascetics whose souls are stored in the divine

[1] This refers to the Jewish custom of hakafot, where participants circle the deceased's bier before burial, typically seven times. The author sees these ritual circumambulations as having protective spiritual power.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that when the soul leaves, the body becomes spiritually vulnerable, attracting negative forces. This concept underlies many Jewish burial practices designed to protect the body and soul during this transition.

of skin (Genesis 3:21) — This reference creates a contrast between material existence (skin) and spiritual existence (light), suggesting that sages transcend physical limitations through Torah study and good deeds.

[i] This phrase refers to the kabbalistic concept that angels of destruction are satisfied or 'cooled' through proper eulogies, suggesting that ritualized mourning practices have cosmic effects in appeasing destructive forces.

[ii] This colorful description from the Zohar portrays the Angel of Death as finding satisfaction ('rest') in women's lamentations, even dancing and inclining his ear to hear them, suggesting a gendered aspect to effective funeral rituals.

[iii] The author connects funeral practices to the search for chametz (leavened bread) before Passover, suggesting a mystical correspondence between numbers in seemingly unrelated rituals. This reflects the kabbalistic tendency to find unified spiritual patterns across different ritual domains.

תלויה באוצר[i] גם שלא נתעכל
עדיין הבשר. עוד טעם האבלות
הוא להיות פרידה זאת ע״י
מלאך המות כי אם היתה המיתה
בפירוד הנפש מהגוף ובשוב כל
חלק למקומו לא היה ראוי כי
אם לשחוק אך דוה לבנו על
שליטת המשחית בצדיקים כמו
שאמרו בעשרה הרוגי מלכות
ולכן היו צועקים להחליש כח
החצונים בצעקתם ובקולם
קול עוז היו ממתיקים כחות
הדינים הקדושים משקיעים
בנוקבא דתהומא רבא דינים
החיצונים[ii] עד כי נהפך עליהם
מדת הדין רחמים ומיתתן היתה
קיום העולם כמו שיסד הפייטן
בפיוט אלה אזכרה וגו׳ שבסדר
ט׳ באב לספרדים ותקפו של
אבלות ג״כ הוא על צער שירגיש
המת במיתתו ואחר המיתה
ג״כ בשבעה עידנין דיחלפון
עלוי.[iii] וגז״ל פירוש שלשה
לבכי שבעה להספד שלשים
לגיהוץ הוא לפי שחמת נאנס
ונגזל ממלאך המות בעון הגזל
שגזל אדם הראשון מה שאינו
שלו. שהיה עור הנחש.[iv] ועתה

treasury even before their flesh has decomposed. 75R Another reason for mourning is that this separation occurs through the Angel of Death, for if death were merely the separation of the soul from the body with each part returning to its place, it would be appropriate only to rejoice. But our hearts are 80R sorrowful because the destroyer has power even over the righteous, as was said regarding the Ten Martyrs.[1] Therefore, they would cry out to weaken the power of the external forces with their outcries, and with their powerful voices they would sweeten 85R
the powers of the holy judgments, sinking the external judgments into the great abyss[2] until the attribute of judgment was transformed into mercy for them. Their deaths sustained the world, as the liturgical poet composed in the poem "These I Will 90R Remember" in the Sephardic Tisha B'Av liturgy.

The intensity of mourning is also due to the pain that the deceased feels at death and after death during the seven periods that pass over him.
The explanation of "three days for weeping, seven 95R for eulogizing, and thirty for pressing clothes"[3] is because the deceased is coerced and robbed by the Angel of Death due to the sin of theft that Adam committed, taking what was not his—which was the serpent's skin.[4] Now "the fool consumes 100R his flesh and skin," and the Angel takes what is his. These three divisions correspond to Nefesh,

[1]This refers to Aseret Harugei Malkhut, the ten prominent rabbis executed by the Romans, whose story forms an important part of the Yom Kippur and Tisha B'Av liturgy. Their deaths are understood as having cosmic significance.

[2]This is technical kabbalistic language describing how proper mourning rituals neutralize negative spiritual forces by 'sinking' them into the cosmic abyss (nokva de-tehoma rabba), rendering them powerless.

[3]These are the traditional Jewish mourning periods: the most intense mourning for three days, the shiva period of seven days, and the shloshim period of thirty days, during which laundering clothes was traditionally prohibited.

[4]This unusual interpretation of Adam's sin frames it as 'theft' of mortality (metaphorically, the serpent's skin). It suggests that physical embodiment itself was inappropriate, and death is simply the reclaiming of what humans were never meant to possess permanently.

[i]The text makes an exception for ascetics (perushim), suggesting their bodies don't attract impurity after death because their souls are already stored in a divine 'treasury' even while alive. This reflects the belief that extreme spiritual discipline creates a different relationship between body and soul.

[ii]This technical kabbalistic phrase describes the cosmic effect of proper mourning: the 'external judgments' (negative spiritual forces) are 'sunk into the great abyss,' neutralizing their power. This shows how human ritual actions are believed to affect metaphysical realities.

[iii]This phrase, with its Aramaic elements, refers to 'seven periods that pass over' the deceased, alluding to stages of post-mortem experience. It reflects the belief that the soul experiences different phases after death, corresponding to the mourning periods observed by the living.

[iv]This presents an unusual kabbalistic interpretation of Adam's sin as 'theft' of the serpent's

הכסיל אוכל את בשרו ועורו. ומדידיה נטיל. ושלש חילוקים אלו נגד נפש רוח נשמה שכלם לוקות במיתה[i] וג׳ לשונות כתיבי בצדיקים גויעה אסיפה ומיתה ולחזוק כל א׳ מהם מתראים בשעת פטירתן של צדיקים שלש כתות של מלאכי שלום. וברכות המלוים אותו נשאר לו שמירה מעולה גם אחר שנקבר. שהמצוה החיא להנאתו ולהגן עליו ולוויית המת וכל צרכיו [ii]

Ruach, and Neshamah,[1] all of which suffer in death. Three terms are written regarding the righteous: expiration, gathering, and death.[2] To strengthen each of these, three groups of angels of peace appear at the time of the righteous person's departure. The blessings of those who accompany him provide superior protection for him even after burial, for that commandment is for his benefit and protection. The funeral escort and all his needs...

הוא חסד ואמת כי בהם תתחזק נפשו בצרור החיים ואפי׳ בלווייה החיים אמרו בסוטה פרק ט׳[iii] כל שאינו מלוה ומתלוה כאלו שופך דמים וזהו דבר ששוה בחיים ובמתים ועוד אמרו שם כופין ללויה ששכר לויה אין לו שעור גם שיש שעור ללויה כמו שאמרו הרב לתלמיד

It is loving-kindness and truth, for through them his soul is strengthened in the bond of life. Even regarding the accompaniment of the living, they said in Sotah, chapter 9: "Whoever does not accompany others or allow himself to be accompanied, it is as if he sheds blood."[3] This principle applies equally to the living and the dead. They further said there: "One may compel people to perform the duty of accompaniment, for the reward for accompaniment is

[1]These are the three primary components of the soul in kabbalistic thought: Nefesh (vital soul connected to the body), Ruach (emotional/moral soul), and Neshamah (intellectual/divine soul). The text suggests each experiences death differently.

[2]The text notes that the Torah uses three different terms for the deaths of righteous individuals: gevi'ah (expiration), asifah (gathering), and mitah (death), suggesting these represent different aspects of the soul's transition.

[3]This striking metaphor from the Talmud elevates the importance of accompaniment from mere courtesy to a life-preserving mitzvah, suggesting that leaving someone to travel alone creates potential spiritual or physical danger.

skin, metaphorically representing the inappropriate assumption of physicality or mortality. This provides a mystical explanation for why the Angel of Death has a claim on human bodies.

[i]The text correlates the three traditional mourning periods (3 days, 7 days, 30 days) with the three primary soul components in kabbalah: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul). This suggests each mourning period addresses a different aspect of the soul's post-mortem journey.

[ii]Cf. Parashat Shelach Lecha, Zohar page 172 — The author cites this Zohar passage to show that proper eulogies serve multiple purposes: they satisfy the Angel of Death (thus preventing further harm), provide comfort to mourners, and ease the deceased's spiritual transition. | Cf. Rabbeinu Bachya on Parashat Vayechi — The author uses this reference to establish a mystical framework for proper eulogizing, suggesting that the number nine has special significance in funeral practices. | Cf. Ten Martyrs (Aseret Harugei Malkhut) — The author refers to the Ten Martyrs to illustrate how even the deaths of the righteous involve suffering and the power of the 'destroyer', yet paradoxically serve as a mystical sustenance for the world. | Cf. Three days for weeping, seven for eulogizing, thirty for pressing clothes — The author offers a mystical interpretation of these traditional mourning periods, connecting them to the three levels of the soul (Nefesh, Ruach, Neshamah) and suggesting that each period addresses a different aspect of the soul's transition. | Cf. Adam's theft of the serpent's skin — The author frames death as a consequence of Adam's primordial sin, metaphorically described as theft of the 'serpent's skin,' suggesting that the Angel of Death is merely reclaiming what rightfully belongs to the realm of mortality.

[iii]The text refers to Tractate Sotah in the Babylonian Talmud, which discusses various religious laws and ethical teachings.

עד עיבורה של עיר חבר לחבר
עד תחום שבת[i] תלמיד לרב
שאינו מובהק עד פרסה. ברבו
מובהק ג׳ פרסאות.[ii] ולהיות
שאחר מיתת המת זכותו יותר
גדול לפי שכבר פרע מקצת
חובו[iii] לכן מותר להרבות
בהספדו קצת על מעשיו הטובים.
ברם לא יוסיף הרבה כמ״ש
בברכות פ״ב כשם שנפרעין מן
המתים נפרעים מן הספדנין ומן
העונים אחריהם. ופרש״י אם
ירבו או ימעטו משבחיו ואמרו
בשבת פי״ג ובמ״ק פ״ב שבניו
של אדם מתים על שלא בכה
והתאבל על אדם כשר. ונראה
במדרש אבכיר[iv] שההספד הוא
תקון למת כמ״ש כי אמרו על
מתושלח שהיו שונה תשע מאות
סדרי משנה[v] ביון שמת שמעו
קול רעש ברקיע שהיו עושין
לו הספד והיו יורדין דמעות
מעיני החיות על מקום פטירתו
ביון שראו כך עשו לו הספד
מלמטה. ועקר החנטה הנאמר
במתים[vi] הוא השם טוב העומד
לנצח ולא ירקב הפך שם רשעים.
והקבר הוא כלפי עומק רום.
והוא בקר לצדיקים בקר אערך
לך ואצפה שכן מדתו של הקב״ה

immeasurable." Nevertheless, there are prescribed limits for accompaniment, as they said: a teacher accompanying a student goes until the city limits; a colleague accompanying another colleague goes until the Sabbath boundary; a student accompanying a teacher who is not his primary instructor goes up to one parasang; and for one's primary teacher, three parasangs. 125R

Since after a person's death their merit is greater because they have already paid part of their debt,[1] it is permissible to somewhat embellish their eulogy regarding their good deeds. However, one should not exaggerate greatly, as stated in Berakhot, chapter 2: "Just as punishment is exacted from the dead,[2] so it is exacted from those who eulogize them and those who respond after them." Rashi explained: "If they exaggerate or diminish his praises." And they said in Shabbat, chapter 13, and in Mo'ed Katan, chapter 2, that a person's children may die because he did not weep and mourn for a worthy person. 130R 135R 140R

It appears in the Midrash Abkhir that the eulogy serves as a rectification for the deceased, as they said concerning Methuselah, who used to study nine hundred orders of Mishnah. When he died, they heard the sound of commotion in the heavens as they were conducting a eulogy for him, and tears fell from the eyes of the celestial beings[3] upon the place of his departure. When people saw this, they too conducted a eulogy below. 145R

The essential "embalming" mentioned regarding 150R

[1] This reflects the theological concept that death itself serves as partial atonement for sins, which explains why one may speak more generously of the deceased than of the living.
[2] This passage reflects the Jewish belief that inappropriate eulogies can harm the deceased in the afterlife, creating a theological framework where truth remains essential even after death.
[3] This vivid mythological image illustrates the cosmic significance of human death, particularly of the righteous, suggesting that heavenly beings mourn along with humans.

[i] The 'Sabbath boundary' (techum Shabbat) is the maximum distance (approximately 2,000 cubits or about 0.6 miles) that Jewish law permits one to travel outside a city on the Sabbath.
[ii] A 'parasang' is a Persian unit of distance equivalent to approximately 3.5-4 miles. The text describes how much further one should accompany a primary teacher (3 parasangs) compared to regular colleagues or other teachers.
[iii] This phrase metaphorically describes death as partial payment of one's spiritual debt, reflecting a view that the suffering experienced in dying itself serves as atonement.
[iv] Midrash Abkhir is a now-lost midrashic work known only through quotations in later medieval sources. The story about Methuselah is not found in surviving rabbinic literature.
[v] This is a symbolic number, as the standard Mishnah contains only six orders (sedarim). The number 900 emphasizes Methuselah's extraordinary scholarship and longevity.
[vi] The term 'embalming' (chanitah) is used metaphorically here, unlike its literal use in Genesis regarding Jacob and Joseph. The author reinterprets it as preserving one's good reputation rather than physical preservation.

בתחלה צדיק במשפט אמת ולאו
וותרן הוא וזה לתועלת הנשמה.
ולבסוף חסיד כי נכנס לפנים
155 מן השורה בדדרש רב הונא
פ״ק דר״ה ועד דו פתח ועד
דו סגיר רחמוהי קרובין ושדי
לא מצאנוהו שגיא כח בשעת
הדין כדא״ר פפא בפ״ק דע״ג
160 ברם קבר הרשעים הוא בעומק
תחת והוא רקב וקבר רשעים
נקרא קבר התהום. וקברם של
צדיקים נעלם למעלה ולבן
מסיימין מקום הקבר ומציינין
165 אותו כי קבר הגוף למטה מציין
עם קבר הנפש למעלה.[i] וע״כ
קראו במשנת שקלים ציון הקבר
נפש דאמרו בונין לו נפש על
קברו. והקבורה היא טמונה
170 מכחות הטומאה כי טמון בארץ
חבלו אז ומלכודתו עלי נתיב.
ואז מתחיל האבלות לפי שנכנס
ברשות דומה. ויש קצת סמך
למנהג שנשאר בידנו לבוף
175 מטתו של נפטר אפי׳ בזמן הזה
שמחשש שמא יאמרו שהוא חרש
נמנעו מכפיית כל מטות שבבית
מ״מ כופין אותה שמת עליה
משום הא דאמרי׳ בכתובות
180 פ״ה דא״ר ינאי על חתניה כפו
מטתו שאלמלא יהודה קיים[ii] לא
ביטל עונתו והשתא דיו לאבל
שיעמוד באבלו בכפיית מטת
המת לבד. וכוונת אלו מלבד
185 הנדרש למעלה הם בכלל ג״ח המקשטים פן ג׳ מהמרכבה

the dead[1] refers to the good name that endures forever and does not decay, unlike the name of the wicked. The grave points toward the profound heights. For the righteous, it is morning—"In the morning I will arrange [my prayer] before You and watch expectantly"—for such is the way of the Holy One, blessed be He: first righteous in true judgment, not waiving [accountability], which benefits the soul; and ultimately gracious, going beyond the strict letter of the law, as Rabbi Huna expounded in the first chapter of Rosh Hashanah: "Before He opens [the case] and before He closes [it], His mercies are near." And [regarding] "Shaddai, we cannot find Him; He is great in power," at the time of judgment, as Rabbi Papa said in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah. 155R 160R 165R

However, the grave of the wicked is in the depths below, and it is decay, and the grave of the wicked is called "the grave of the abyss."[2] The graves of the righteous are concealed above, and therefore we mark the burial place and designate it, for the grave of the body below corresponds to the grave of the soul above. Thus they called it in the Mishnah of Shekalim "the marking of the grave as a soul," saying, "They build a nefesh [soul/monument] over his grave." 170R 175R

Burial conceals [the body] from impure forces, for it is hidden in the earth, its snare and trap upon the path. Then mourning begins, because [the deceased] has entered the domain of Dumah[3] [the angel of silence/death]. There is some support for the custom that has remained with us to overturn the bed of the deceased. Even nowadays, when due to concern that people might say the person is deaf, we refrain from overturning all beds in the house, nevertheless we 180R 185R

[1] The author reinterprets physical embalming metaphorically, suggesting that the true preservation after death is one's good reputation rather than the physical body.

[2] This creates a cosmic geography where the righteous and wicked experience fundamentally different afterlife destinations, with directional symbolism (upward vs. downward) representing spiritual states.

[3] In Jewish mystical tradition, Dumah is the angelic guardian of the deceased, whose name derives from the Hebrew word for 'silence.' This represents the transition of the deceased from the realm of the living to that of the dead.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that different components of the soul have different post-mortem destinations, with the nefesh (vital soul) remaining near the grave while higher soul aspects ascend to celestial realms.

[ii] This reference to Rabbi Yannai's instruction about his son-in-law Judah comes from the Talmud (Ketubot 62b) and relates to mourning customs. The overturned bed symbolizes the disruption of normal marital relations that would have occurred had the person still been alive.

שהוא פני אריה ובזה מרכבה מרקדה.[i] וחסד אל יגבר עלינו כל היום:[ii] overturn the one upon which the person died, based on what is said in Ketubot, chapter 5, that Rabbi Yannai said regarding his son-in-law: "Overturn his bed,[1] for had Judah still been alive, he would not have neglected his conjugal duty." And now it suffices 190R for the mourner to fulfill his mourning by overturning only the bed of the deceased.

The purpose of these [practices], beyond what was expounded above, falls within the category of acts of loving-kindness that adorn the third face of 195R the Divine Chariot,[2] which is the face of the lion. Through this, the Chariot dances,[3] and "may God's loving-kindness prevail over us all day long."

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

קישוט הפן רביעי מכסא כבוד של יוצרנו ב״ה שהוא פני אדם הכולל כל הפנים זה יתוקן ויקושט ע״י עוסקי תורה[iii] וכל

The fourth aspect of our Creator's glorious throne, blessed be He, which is the face of man encompassing all faces, will be rectified and adorned through those who engage in Torah study. Anyone who preserves

[1]The custom of overturning beds during mourning symbolizes the disruption of normal life and particularly marital relations. The text explains how this practice evolved over time while maintaining its essential symbolism.

[2]This references the vision in Ezekiel 1, where the Divine Chariot has four faces (man, lion, ox, and eagle). The author connects funeral rituals to this mystical vision, suggesting they participate in cosmic realities.

[3]This poetic metaphor suggests that proper funeral rituals create joyful response in higher spiritual realms, transforming what appears sorrowful on earth into cosmic celebration.

[i]This poetic phrase references Ezekiel's vision of the Divine Chariot (merkavah) with its four faces, associating acts of kindness with the lion-face and suggesting that such acts cause the celestial chariot to 'dance' with joy.

[ii]Cf. Sotah 46b — The passage cites this Talmudic source to establish the religious significance of accompanying both the living and the dead, presenting it as a spiritual obligation rather than merely a social courtesy. | Cf. Berakhot 19a — This reference establishes the ethical boundaries of eulogy, warning that while praise is appropriate, exaggeration brings punishment to both the eulogizer and the audience, suggesting a cosmic balance where truth remains essential even in honoring the dead. | Cf. Midrash Abkhir on Methuselah — This reference to a now-lost midrashic work demonstrates the author's belief that eulogies have cosmic significance, with heavenly beings participating in mourning the righteous, suggesting a connection between earthly rituals and celestial responses. | Cf. Psalm 5:4 — The phrase 'morning I will arrange before You and watch expectantly' comes from this psalm and is reinterpreted in a mystical context to suggest that the righteous experience 'morning' (divine illumination) after death, while the wicked experience darkness. | Cf. Rosh Hashanah 17b — This reference establishes the theological principle that divine judgment combines justice and mercy, which the author applies to understanding the afterlife experience, suggesting that souls experience judgment followed by mercy. | Cf. Mishnah Shekalim 2:5 — The author uses this reference to develop the mystical idea that physical grave markers correspond to spiritual realities, with the physical grave below corresponding to the soul's resting place above. | Cf. Ezekiel's Vision of the Divine Chariot (Ezekiel 1) — The author interprets funeral practices through the mystical framework of the Divine Chariot (Merkavah), suggesting that acts of kindness toward the dead correspond to the lion-face of the chariot, thus elevating these rituals from mere customs to cosmic participation in divine structures.

[iii]This passage begins an extended discussion of Torah study as the means of adorning the 'face of man' aspect of the divine throne. In kabbalistic thought, the four faces of the divine chariot

השומר תורתו נשמתו משתמרת כדאמרי׳ במנחות פ׳ י״א ובפרט בתורה שבכתב כי היא בנויה על שמות הקב״ה ומדותיו סוד האצילות שהוא האלהות ובשכרה דרשו במס׳ מנחות פ׳ י״א בפ׳ ונחת שלחנך מלא דשן יע״ש ובפ׳ חלק אמרו שהמשחיר פניו על ד״ת בעה״ז לעה״ב הקב״ה מבהיק זיוו. ובברכות פ״ב אמרי׳ כי אהלים של תורה מעלים את האדם מכף חובה לכף זכות והיא שם ה׳ ממש המטהר את ישראל וכתב בעל ספר עבודת הקדש בחלק היחוד פרק נ״א כי התורה התחילה בבי״ת וסיימה בלמ״ד נגד החכמה העליונה הכוללת ל״ב נתיבות שבה היה כל הוה וזו היא התורה שקדמה לעולם וממנה נאצלת מדת ת״ת סוד תורה שבכתב ותרי״ג מצות נאצלו מחכמה שקבלה מכתר בסוד תר״ך מיני מאורות שבאויר הקדמון[i] וכן אותיות עשרת הדברות הם תרי״ג מלבד אשר לרעך הרומזים לז׳ מצות דרבנן שעם ז׳ תיבות אלו הרומזים ג״כ לכללות הז׳ ספירות הם תר״ך. וכן נתנה בז׳ קולות ולכן שבעים פנים לתורה וכן תתבאר בשבעים פנים אלו באותיות ונקודות וטעמים מלבד התמורות בכ״ב אלפא ביתות ושערים פנים ואחור וחלוקי הנקודות שבכל תיבה ותיבה ומה שאמרו בברכות פ״ק זוכה לתורה שנתנה בחמשה קולות[ii] רומז אל מקום מחצבה

His Torah preserves their soul, as stated in Menachot, chapter 11. This is especially true regarding the Written Torah, for it is constructed upon the names of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His attributes—the secret of Atzilut, which is the Godhead itself. Concerning its reward, they expounded in Menachot, chapter 11, on the verse "and your table shall be full of fatness" (see there). And in chapter Chelek, they said that one who darkens their face over words of Torah[1] in this world, in the World to Come, the Holy One, blessed be He, will make their radiance shine forth. In Berakhot, chapter 2, they stated that the "tents" of Torah elevate a person from the scale of guilt to the scale of merit, for it is literally the Name of God that purifies Israel.

The author of Sefer Avodat HaKodesh wrote in the section on Unity, chapter 51, that the Torah begins with the letter Bet and ends with Lamed, corresponding to the supernal Wisdom that encompasses the 32 paths through which all existence came to be. This is the Torah that preceded the world, and from it emanates the attribute of Tiferet, the secret of the Written Torah.[2] The 613 commandments emanated from Wisdom, which received from Keter, in the secret of the 620 types of illuminations in the primordial atmosphere. Similarly, the letters of the Ten Commandments number 613, excluding "that belongs to your neighbor," which alludes to the seven rabbinic commandments. Together with these seven words, which also allude to the totality of the seven sefirot, they equal 620.

The Torah was given with seven voices, thus there are seventy facets to the Torah. These seventy facets are revealed through letters, vowel points, and cantillation marks, in addition to the permutations of the twenty-two alphabets, the gates of forward and backward arrangements, and the various vowel combinations possible in each and every word. Regarding [1] This phrase refers to the Talmudic concept of one who 'makes their face black' through the intense effort of Torah study, suggesting dedication to the point of physical exhaustion.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) is the central sefirah that balances and integrates the various divine attributes. Its association with Written Torah establishes Torah as the central balancing force in the divine cosmic structure.

(man, lion, ox, eagle) correspond to different divine attributes, with the human face representing the highest integration of all attributes.

[i] The number 620 (תר״ך) is significant in kabbalah as the sum of the 613 biblical commandments plus the 7 rabbinic commandments. This passage connects this number to primordial divine light, suggesting that the commandments are manifestations of original divine illumination.

[ii] The five voices here likely refer to the five divine utterances at Sinai corresponding to the five

נהר היוצא מעדן ה״א ראשונה
ולזה כוללת חמשים שערי
בינה ויודעיה דורשים אותה
במ״ט פנים טהור וכו׳ כי שער
החמשים לא הושג אפי׳ למרע״ה
כדאמרי׳ במס׳ שבת. ולזה נתנה
בה׳ חומשים. א״כ התורה היא
כלל האדם העליון ולזה כוללת
רמ״ח מצות עשה ושס״ה מצות
לא תעשה כמנין אבריו וגידיו של
אדם תחתון ועליון ולפי שהתורה
צורת האדם היתה ראויה לאדם
ובה האדם אדם ולבסוף ידבק
בה האדם ואמרו בר״מ פ׳ פנחס
דף רכ״ב ע״ב כי תרי״ג מלאכים
סלקין לה לנשמתא בדיוקנין
כולהו ופניהם וכנפיהם פרודות
לקיים ואשא אתכם על כנפי
נשרים. וכ״ב אותיות שנבנית
בהם הם כבוד ה׳ וכבוד אלהים.
ולתקון וביסום והמתקת והכנעת
ד׳ מיני יצה״ר שאמרנו באו בה
ד׳ מדרגות ובד׳ מיני אמירות
נאמרו כללותיה ופרטיה.
המדרגה העליונה שבכלן היא
מדרגת אדון הנביאים ולא
איכא מידי בנביאי וכתובי דלא
רמיזא בדאורייתא כדתמה ר׳
יוחנן בגמרא עד שתרצה לו
בריה דר״ל. השניה נבואת
שאר נביאים. השלישית למטה
מאלה מדרגת רוח הקדש. וכבר
נתבארו במקומן מוצא כל אחד
מהם. אמנם רוח הקדש הוא
במלכות בית דוד שהרוח בא
אליה מהקדש סוד חכמת אלהים
וממנה נאצל על אנשיה הדברים
ברוח הקדש ודוד הוא הראש
כי מלא אחרי ה׳ ועשה שם
ועליה אמר רוח ה׳ דבר בי

what they said in Berakhot, chapter 1, that one merits the Torah that was given with five voices—this alludes to its source, the river flowing from Eden, the first Hei [of the divine name]. For this reason, it encompasses fifty gates of Understanding,[1] and those who know it interpret it in forty-nine ways of purity, etc., since even Moses our teacher did not attain the fiftieth gate, as stated in Shabbat. This is why it was given in five books.

Thus, the Torah is the entirety of the supernal Man, and therefore it contains 248 positive commandments and 365 negative commandments, corresponding to the limbs and sinews of the human being, both earthly and celestial. Since the Torah is the form of man, it is fitting for man, and through it, man is truly human, and ultimately man cleaves to it.[2] In Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas, page 222b, it states that 613 angels elevate the soul in all their forms, "and their faces and their wings were separated," fulfilling "I have carried you on eagles' wings." The twenty-two letters with which it is constructed are the glory of God and the glory of the Divine.

For the rectification, sweetening, amelioration, and subjugation of the four types of evil inclination we mentioned, the Torah contains four levels, and its general principles and details were expressed in four types of utterances. The highest level of all is that of the Master of Prophets [Moses], and there is nothing in the Prophets or Writings that is not hinted at in the Torah, as Rabbi Yochanan wondered in the Gemara until Rabbi Lakish's son explained it to him. The second level is the prophecy of the other prophets. The third level, below these, is the level of the Holy Spirit. The source of each has already been explained in its place.

The Holy Spirit resides in the kingdom of the House of David, as the spirit comes to it from the Holy—the secret of Divine Wisdom—and from it emanates upon its people the words spoken through the [1] According to rabbinic tradition, Moses attained forty-nine of the fifty gates of Understanding (Binah), with the fiftieth remaining beyond human comprehension. This concept is used here to explain the mystical structure of Torah interpretation.

[2] The concept of 'cleaving' (devekut) to Torah is central to Jewish mysticism, suggesting not merely intellectual study but spiritual unification with divine wisdom.

books of Moses. In kabbalistic thought, these are connected to the first letter ה (hei) of the divine name, which represents Binah (Understanding) and is associated with the number 50, referring to the 50 gates of understanding.

ומלתו על לשוני. ואחריו שלמה
חכם כי הוא מלט את העיר
עיר ה׳ צבאות אלהינו בחכמתו
ולמטה מהם שאר המדברים
ברוח הקדש[i] שכן הכלה הכלולה
מהכל הרבה בחינות יש בה.
ואין לנו עסק עתה בבת קול
שנשתמשו בה החכמים הגדולים
אחר סלוק רוח הקדש מישראל
כדאיתא בשלהי דסוטה. וגורי
האר״י דרשו שתורה שהיא נבואת
מרע״ה היא בזעיר ונבואת שאר
הנביאים היא בנ״ה המתלבשים
בהיכלות ולכן אין שום נביא
רשאי לשנות מן התורה אפי׳ אות
אחת כי לא השיגו בתלמוד תורה
כי אם משה בהיות זעיר פנים אל
פנים עם מלכות. ושאר הנביאים
מתנבאים מנצח הוד מעצמם
כי אפי׳ שמואל שהיה מתנבא
מנ״ה בהגלות המדות עליונות
בהם ולזה היה משיג במדות
העליונות תוך נ״ה ולכן הוא
דוקא נקרא הרואה. ואולי זה
יהיה טעם ששקלו הכתוב כמשה
ואהרן כי היה משיג בנ״ה דוגמת
השגות משה ואהרן למעלה. אך
בת״ת בנזכר שהיא אספקלריא
המאירה נגש משה לבדו אל ה׳.
ורוח הקדש הוא ביסוד. ובת
קול היא במלכות כי קול הוא
בבינה ומלכות היא בתאותו
הקול. ופרש״י בגמ׳ דסוטה פ״ב
בת קול נקרא בגמ׳ ססמגור
והוא שם תולעת שמצוי בארז
וגוררתו מבפנים ומקצתו קיים
כך קצת מזיו שכינה היה נראה
להם לא כולו ובתוס׳ פירשו
שלא היו שומעין קול היוצא מן
השמים אלא קול אחר היוצא

Holy Spirit. David is the head, for he followed the Lord completely and established a name, and concerning this he said, "The spirit of the Lord spoke through me, and His word was on my tongue." After him came Solomon the Wise, for he saved the city, the city of the Lord of Hosts our God, through his wisdom. Below them are the others who spoke with the Holy Spirit, for the Bride, who incorporates everything, has many aspects.

We are not concerned now with the Bat Kol (Heavenly Voice) that the great sages used after the Holy Spirit departed from Israel, as stated at the end of Sotah. The disciples of the ARI taught that the Torah, which is the prophecy of Moses our teacher, is in Zeir Anpin, while the prophecy of the other prophets is in Netzach and Hod, which are clothed in the Heikhalot (celestial palaces). Therefore, no prophet is permitted to change even a single letter of the Torah, for they did not attain the level of Torah study that Moses did, as Zeir Anpin was face to face with Malkhut. The other prophets prophesied from Netzach and Hod themselves, for even Samuel, who prophesied from Netzach and Hod when the supernal attributes were revealed in them, attained the supernal attributes within Netzach and Hod, and therefore he specifically was called "the Seer." Perhaps this is the reason why Scripture equated him with Moses and Aaron, for he attained in Netzach and Hod similar to the attainments of Moses and Aaron above. But in Tiferet, which is the luminous lens, only Moses approached the Lord. The Holy Spirit is in Yesod, and the Bat Kol is in Malkhut, for voice is in Binah and Malkhut is in its desire, the voice.

Rashi explained in Sotah, chapter 2, that Bat Kol is called "sasmgor" in the Gemara,[1] which is the name of a worm found in cedars that hollows them from within, leaving part intact. Similarly, only part of the radiance of the Divine Presence was visible to them, not all of it. Tosafot explained that they did not hear a voice coming from heaven but rather another voice emanating from it, and therefore it is called Bat Kol [daughter of a voice]. 125R

[1] This unusual term appears to be a hapax legomenon (word appearing only once) in rabbinic literature. The author provides its etymology as referring to a worm that hollows cedar trees from within, serving as a metaphor for how the heavenly voice represents only a partial revelation of divine will.

[i] The text establishes a clear hierarchy of prophecy: Moses at the highest level, followed by other biblical prophets, then those with ruach hakodesh (like David and Solomon), and finally (though not discussed in detail here) those who received bat kol (heavenly voice) after prophetic revelation ceased in Israel.

ממנו ולבן נקרא בת קול. ומה שהיו משיגים הנביאים במדות היה בהתלבשם למטה לבן עתיק שהשיג דניאל הוא עתיק שבעשיה ויחזקאל השיג ביצירה ט׳ מראות וכשהגיע למדרגת הכתר שבה נפל על פניו ואליהו השיג בבריאה[i] וזה שאמרו בזוהר אליהו למטה מהאי באר איהו שבאר הוא מלכות ואליהו למטה שהוא בריאה: [ii]

What the prophets attained in the divine attributes was through their embodiment below. Thus, the "Ancient One" that Daniel perceived is the Ancient One of Asiyah, and Ezekiel perceived in Yetzirah nine visions, and when he reached the level of Keter within it, he fell on his face. Elijah perceived in Beriah, and this is what they said in the Zohar: "Elijah is below this well," for the well is Malkhut, and Elijah is below, which is Beriah. 130R

פרק ז׳

Chapter 7

תורה מאתי תצא לכל אחוזת רעי ומרחמי באשר קבלתי מפי מורי הגאון מפאנו זצ״ל[iii] אשר היה ראשון לכל דבר שבקדושה וכל ימיו שמש חכמים בעמידה ובישיבה ונהירן ליה שבילי דנהרדיעה[iv] והיה מרגלא בפומיה. וכמו כן בפי המקובל כמהר״ר ישראל סרוק זצ״ל[v] כי

Torah shall go forth from me to all my companions and beloved friends,[1] as I received from my teacher, the Gaon of Fano of blessed memory, who was foremost in all matters of holiness. All his days he served the sages while standing and sitting, and the pathways of Nehardea were illuminated to him,[A] and it was frequently in his mouth. Similarly, from the Kabbalist Rabbi Israel Sarug of blessed memory, [I learned] that how shall a servant of flesh 5R

[A] Or: "and the pathways of Nehardea were clear to him" — The Aramaic expression 'נהירן ליה' can be translated as either 'illuminated to him' or 'clear to him.' The latter is more idiomatic in English and conveys that the teacher had mastery of the scholarly traditions of Nehardea, a famous Babylonian center of Jewish learning.

[1] The opening phrase alludes to Isaiah 2:3, 'For out of Zion shall go forth the law,' adapting it to indicate the author's role in transmitting teachings to his circle.

[i] This passage maps different prophets to specific levels in the kabbalistic cosmology: Daniel perceived Atik (Ancient One) in Asiyah (the lowest world), Ezekiel perceived visions in Yetzirah (Formation), and Elijah perceived in Beriah (Creation). This creates a hierarchical understanding of prophetic attainment corresponding to the four worlds of kabbalah.

[ii] Cf. Sefer Avodat HaKodesh — The text cites this work to establish the connection between the structure of the Torah and the 32 paths of wisdom in Kabbalah, showing how the physical book reflects cosmic structures. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — This reference connects Torah study to the mystical process of soul elevation, explaining how engagement with Torah creates spiritual entities that support the soul's ascent through higher realms. | Cf. Menachot — The text cites this Talmudic passage to establish the tangible rewards of Torah study both in this world and the next, using rabbinic authority to support kabbalistic claims. | Cf. Zohar — The text uses this Zoharic reference to map prophetic attainment to specific levels in the kabbalistic cosmology, placing Elijah's prophetic vision at the level of Beriah (Creation) rather than higher levels.

[iii] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an important Italian kabbalist who combined the teachings of Moses Cordovero with Lurianic Kabbalah, and whose works were highly influential in Italian Jewish mystical circles.

[iv] Nehardea was a major center of Jewish learning in Babylonia. This Aramaic expression, literally 'the paths of Nehardea were illuminated to him,' indicates mastery of complex Talmudic knowledge.

[v] Rabbi Israel Sarug was a kabbalist who spread Lurianic teachings throughout Italy and other European communities in the late 16th century. His connection to the author establishes a direct lineage to Lurianic Kabbalah.

במה יתרצה עבד ב״ו אל אדוניו מלכו של עולם בתחנותיו ובתפלותיו אם לא בפתוח פה ולהניד שפה בספורי אמירי קדוש ישראל בפסוקים המשולשים בתורה נביאים וכתובים כי בהם ימלא כבוד ה׳ את כל הארץ ויחד יסולו אמרותיהם לחזות בנועם ה׳ ולבקר בהיכלו ובהם נכרתים הזלזלים במזמרות ובהם חפץ הבוחר בשירי זמרה. כי בכחם הנאדרי הם זמיר עריצים ואז תפלתו תהיה כעתר להפוך מדותיו של הקב״ה ממדת רגזנות לרחמנות[i] כדאמרי׳ ביבמות פ״ו. כי למה לנו להרבות דברים משולבים מדעתנו יתמי דיתמי כמוני היום דלאו כר׳ לוי אנא דאמר במדרש שיר השירים דידע למחרז וידע למקדש.[ii] ברם מכיר אני את מקומי שהנני כקטן שיש לו מעשה ואין לו מחשבה. ולהיות כי האלהים בשמים ואנו על הארץ על כן יהיו דברים המוחרזים מדעתנו מועטים and blood find favor with his Master, the King of the Universe, in his supplications and prayers, if not by opening his mouth and moving his lips with the sayings and utterances of the Holy One of Israel in the verses tripled in Torah, Prophets, and Writings?[1] For through them the glory of the Lord fills the entire earth, and together their words pave a path to behold the pleasantness of the Lord and to visit His temple. Through them the tendrils are cut with pruning hooks, and in them delights the One who chooses songs of praise. For with their mighty power they prune the tyrants,[A] and then one's prayer will be like a pitchfork,[2] turning the attributes of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the attribute of wrath to the attribute of mercy, as we say in Yevamot, chapter 6. For why should we multiply interwoven words from our own understanding, orphans of orphans like myself today,[3] for I am not like Rabbi Levi, who said in the Midrash on Song of Songs that he knew how to rhyme and how to sanctify.[B] However, I recognize my place, that I am like a child who has deeds but no thought. And since God is in heaven and we are on earth, therefore the words composed from our understanding shall be few before Him.

[A] Or: "with their majestic power they cut down oppressors" — The Hebrew 'נאדרי' has connotations of majesty and glory beyond mere might, and 'זמיר עריצים' is a biblical allusion to pruning or cutting down oppressive forces. This translation better captures both the majesty of scripture and its power against negative spiritual forces.

[B] Or: "in the Midrash on Song of Songs that he knew how to compose verse and how to craft sacred words" — The terms 'למחרז' and 'למקדש' are technical terms for poetic composition. This alternate translation more clearly conveys the poetic skills being referenced, emphasizing the literary artistry rather than just rhyming.

[1] The author is referring to the practice of collecting verses on the same theme from all three sections of the Hebrew Bible to create comprehensive prayer sequences, a method used extensively throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[2] This uses a play on the Hebrew word 'עתר' which can mean both 'pitchfork' and 'prayer/supplication.' The metaphor suggests that prayer turns over divine attributes as a pitchfork turns soil.

[3] A self-deprecating phrase expressing extreme humility, suggesting the author sees himself as doubly removed from authoritative tradition, yet this rhetorical humility was conventional in rabbinic writing while still asserting one's teachings.

[i] This metaphor compares prayer to a pitchfork (עתר) that turns over soil, suggesting that properly composed prayer has the power to transform divine judgment into mercy. This concept derives from the Talmud (Yevamot 64a).

[ii] The author contrasts himself with Rabbi Levi, who according to the midrash had special skill in composing both poetic verse (למחרז) and sacred liturgy (למקדש), thus emphasizing the author's humility while discussing matters of prayer composition.

[i] לפניו

כי גם בלא דעת נפש לא טוב כדאמרי׳ בפ׳ אין עומדין א״ר יהושע בשם ר״מ לעולם יהיו דבריו של אדם מועטין לפני הקב״ה שנאמר אל תבהל על פיך וגו׳. והפילוסוף כתב כי השיר מענג הטבע ונמצא להמשיך לבות השומעים והקדמונים הגידו על אורפי״או[ii] שהיה כל כך שלם ובקי בנגונו ושירו שהיו כל מיני בני אדם גדולים וקטנים בוערים וחכמים סרים אל משמעתו. והחכם אברבניל״ו[iii] כתב בפ׳ בשלח שמוצא השירים שקולים הנעשים במדה במשקל לא מצאנו מהם דבר בדברי הנביאים וגם לא מחכמי המשנה והגמ׳ כי היה התחלתו בגלותנו בין חכמי ישראל שלמדו ממלאכת הישמעאלים ויעשו גם המה בחכמה וליה לא ס״ל מה שכ׳ הרא״ש בפיוטי הקליר[iv] כדלקמן. וגם החכם אבן עזרא[v] לא כן ידמה כי הפליא לדבר נגד איזה פיוטים

For even without knowledge, a soul is not good, as they said in chapter "Ein Omdin" [Berakhot 61a]: "Rabbi Joshua said in the name of Rabbi Meir: A person's words should always be few before the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is said, 'Do not be hasty with your mouth' [Ecclesiastes 5:1]." The philosopher [Aristotle] wrote that poetry delights human nature and is found to draw the hearts of listeners. The ancients told of Orpheus, who was so accomplished and expert in his music and song that all kinds of people—great and small, ignorant and wise—would submit to his authority. The sage Abravanel wrote in his commentary on Parashat Beshalach that we do not find any metered poetry composed with measure and rhythm in the words of the Prophets, nor among the Sages of the Mishnah and Talmud, for its beginning was during our exile among the Jewish scholars who learned this craft from the Muslims and they too engaged in this art. He did not hold the view that the Ra'osh wrote regarding the liturgical poems of Kallir, as will be discussed below.[A] The sage Ibn Ezra likewise did not agree, for he spoke extensively against certain liturgical poems attributed to Kallir in his commentary on the verse "Do not be hasty with your mouth." Go and see his words there.[B] Nevertheless,

[A] Or: "He disagreed with what the Rosh wrote about Kallir's liturgical poems, as will be explained later" — The abbreviation 'ס״ל' (savira lei) means 'he holds the opinion' and the negation indicates disagreement. This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the disagreement, which might be clearer for readers unfamiliar with rabbinic terminology.

[B] Or: "Go check out his words on this matter" — This is a Talmudic Aramaic expression often used to direct readers to examine a source. While the original translation is accurate, this alternate translation uses more contemporary language that might be more accessible to modern readers.

[i] Cf. Song of Songs — The author cites this to establish a contrast between Rabbi Levi's poetic expertise and his own self-perceived inadequacy, showing humility while still establishing a connection to respected rabbinic tradition | Cf. Yevamot — The author cites this Talmudic passage to establish the power of properly composed prayer to affect divine attributes, transforming judgment to mercy—a key theological concept underlying his approach to prayer composition | Cf. Nehardea — This reference establishes the author's teacher as master of the scholarly tradition of Nehardea, an important Babylonian center of Jewish learning, thereby establishing the scholarly lineage and authority of the author's teachings

[ii] A reference to Orpheus, the legendary musician and poet from Greek mythology who could charm all living things with his music.

[iii] Don Isaac Abravanel (1437-1508), prominent Jewish statesman, philosopher, and biblical commentator who served in the courts of Portugal, Spain, and Italy.

[iv] Eleazar Kallir (or Kalir), an influential Hebrew liturgical poet who lived approximately in the 6th-7th century CE, known for his complex and innovative poetry for Jewish holidays.

[v] Rabbi Abraham Ibn Ezra (1089-1167), one of the most distinguished Jewish biblical commentators and poets of medieval Spain.

המיוחסים לקלירי בפסוק אל
תבהל על פיך. פוק חזי דבריו
משם. ברם אמינא ומחוינא
כי דברי הראשונים בחרוזים
שנתפשטו בדור ישראל אפי׳
אדם אחר אמרן היית צריך לכוף
אזניך ולשמוע דבריהם כי נעמו.
הלא החכם אבן עזרא עצמו
שהפליא לדבר נגד הפייטנים
שבח הבקשות מהגאון רב סעדיה
דאמר שלא חבר מחבר כמוהם.
והם על לשון המקרא ודקדוק
הלשון. באין חידוש ומשלים
ולא דרוש. והפיוטים ששערום
הראשונים וקיימום וקבלום
עליהם היהודים[i] אין לזוז מהם
ואין לשנות מנהג המקום [ii]

I say and demonstrate[A] that the words of the early authorities in poetic form that have spread throughout the generations of Israel, even if another person composed them, you should bend your ear and listen to their words, for they are pleasant. Indeed, Ibn Ezra himself, who spoke extensively against the liturgical poets, praised the supplications of the Gaon Rav Saadia, saying that no composer has composed like them. And they follow the biblical language and grammatical precision, without novelty, parables, or homiletics. As for the liturgical poems that the early authorities composed and established, and which the Jews accepted upon themselves, one should not deviate from them nor change the custom of the place.

כדפסק בעל ההגהות סי׳
תרי״ט[iii] שכתב וז״ל אל ישנה
אדם ממנהג העיר אפי׳ בנגונים
או בפיוטים שאומרים שם.
והם דברי מהרי״ל[iv] ואתרע
ביה מלתא והצדיק עליו הדין
משום ששונה מנהג המקום
לומר סליחה בלתי נהוגה
וכתוב בלקוטים שהם בסוף
ספר עשרה שליטים[v] על זה

As ruled by the author of Haggahot in section 619, who wrote: "A person should not deviate from the custom of the city, even regarding melodies or liturgical poems[B] recited there." These are the words of Maharil, and misfortune befell him, and he accepted divine judgment upon himself because he changed the local custom by reciting an uncommon penitential prayer. It is written in the collected notes at the end of Sefer Asarah Shalitim regarding this: "Therefore, one should be careful not to

[A] Or: "However, I assert and will show" — This Aramaic expression introduces the author's own position in contrast to the views just cited. The alternate translation emphasizes the author's intention to not just state but prove his position, which might better capture the rhetorical force.

[B] Or: "melodies or piyyutim" — The Hebrew term 'piyyutim' is sometimes retained in English scholarly writing about Jewish liturgical poetry. While 'liturgical poems' is more accessible, 'piyyutim' preserves the technical nature of the term.

[i] This phrasing echoes Esther 9:27, which describes how the Jews accepted the observance of Purim. The author employs this biblical language to give weight to the acceptance of liturgical poems by the Jewish community.

[ii] Cf. Berakhot 61a — The author uses this Talmudic citation to establish the traditional Jewish value of brevity in prayer, setting up his discussion about the appropriate style and length of liturgical poetry. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 5:1 — This biblical verse serves as the foundation for the rabbinic teaching about brevity in prayer, which the author uses to frame his discussion of liturgical poetry. | Cf. Ibn Ezra's commentary on Ecclesiastes 5:1 — The author acknowledges Ibn Ezra's critique of elaborate liturgical poetry as potentially contradicting the biblical instruction for brevity in prayer, though he will go on to defend such poetry. | Cf. Rosh's comments on Kallir's piyyutim — The author references an ongoing medieval debate about the propriety of elaborate liturgical poetry, noting that Abravanel and Ibn Ezra took positions against such poetry, while the Rosh defended it.

[iii] This refers to the ruling of Rabbi Moshe Isserles (Rema), who wrote glosses on the Shulchan Aruch, specifically section 619 which discusses Yom Kippur customs.

[iv] Acronym for Rabbi Jacob ben Moses Moelin (c. 1365-1427), a major German rabbinic authority whose customs became influential throughout Ashkenazic communities.

[v] "Book of Ten Rulers," a collection of rabbinic works. The title alludes to Ecclesiastes 7:19.

לכן ידקדק אדם שלא להחליף
שום תנא או אמורא או שום
פיוט ושיר ושבח וכו׳ ואולי
אמרו בזה כי נקרא משיג גבול
עולים[i] לרמוז לשכינה שיושבת
על תהלות ישראל ומלאכים
עליונים שעולים ויורדים שמה
והם חברים מקשיבים לתפלות
ישראל. ופוק חזי מאי עמא
דבר. ואמרו בגמ׳ דסוטה פ״ב
דר׳ זירא אמר לר׳ ירמיה
לא תפיק נפשך לבר מהלכתא
ופרש״י כל דברי חכמים שנקבעו
אל תהרהר אחריהם וכ״ש אם
הקליר[ii] היה ר׳ אלעזר בן ערך
כדברי הרשב״א[iii] ואמר שהוא
ג״כ קרובי[iv] פי׳ הערוך[v] דרשן.
או ר׳ אלעזר בר׳ שמעון דאפי׳
רשב״י קראו נר ישראל ב׳
פעמים בערכין פ״ב כפי דברי
הרא״ש[vi] סוף פרק אין עומדין.
והביא ראיה מהפסיקתא דאמר
כד דמך רבי אליעזר בר״ש
קרא עליו דורו מכל אבקת
רוכל דהוא תנא קרובין פייטן
ודרשן והוא תקן קרובות וכן
בתוס׳ פ׳ כל הבשר כתב ר״ת
כי הוא רבי אלעזר הקליר
בתוס׳ טוך. וכבר כתבנו דעת
החכם אבן עזרא והאברבניל״ו
ז״ל כי לא שמיעא להו הכי
וכזה כתב המגיה לספר יוחסין
וז״ל. אמר שמואל כבר כתבתי substitute any Tanna or Amora, or any liturgical poem, song, or praise, etc." Perhaps they said about 85R this that one who does so is called "encroaching upon the boundary of those who ascend,"[A] alluding to the Divine Presence that dwells upon the praises of Israel and the supernal angels who ascend and descend there, who are companions listening 90R attentively to the prayers of Israel. Go and see what the people practice. And they said in the Gemara of Sotah, chapter 2, that Rabbi Zeira said to Rabbi Yirmiyah, "Do not take yourself outside the established law," and Rashi explained: "Do not 95R question any words of the Sages that have been established." This is especially true if Kallir was Rabbi Elazar ben Arakh, according to the Rashba, who said that he was also a composer of kerovot, which the Arukh explains means a preacher. Or if 100R he was Rabbi Elazar son of Rabbi Shimon, whom even Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai called "the light of Israel" twice in Arakhin, chapter 2, according to the Rosh at the end of the chapter "Ein Omdin."

And he brought proof from the Pesikta, which says: 105R
"When Rabbi Eliezer son of Rabbi Shimon died, his generation proclaimed about him 'all powders of the merchant,' for he was a Tanna, a composer of kerovot, a liturgical poet, and a preacher, and he established the kerovot prayers." And similarly 110R in Tosafot in the chapter "Kol Habasar," Rabbeinu Tam wrote that he was Rabbi Elazar HaKallir, in the Tosafot of Tukh.[1] And we have already written the opinion of the wise Ibn Ezra and Abarbanel, of blessed memory, for they did not hear it thus. 115R
And similarly wrote the editor of Sefer Yuchasin,

[A] Or: "transgressing the boundary of the ascenders" — This mystical phrase could be translated more literally to preserve its enigmatic quality, which refers to interfering with the pathway of prayers or souls that ascend to heaven.

[1] Tosafot Tukh refers to a specific commentary on the Talmud attributed to Rabbi Eliezer of Touques, a 13th-century French Tosafist.

[i] A mystical concept suggesting that changing established prayers interferes with the cosmic channels through which prayers ascend to heaven.

[ii] Rabbi Eleazar HaKallir, an influential early Jewish liturgical poet (paytan) whose identity and exact time period are subjects of scholarly debate.

[iii] Acronym for Rabbi Shlomo ben Aderet (1235-1310), a major Spanish Talmudic authority.

[iv] Liturgical poems added to the regular prayer service, particularly on holidays and special occasions.

[v] An important early lexicon of Talmudic terms compiled by Rabbi Nathan ben Yechiel of Rome (11th century).

[vi] Acronym for Rabbi Asher ben Yechiel (c. 1250-1327), an influential German-Spanish Talmudic scholar.

למעלה כי מצאתי בקרובה
אחת של יום שביעי של פסח
ראש תבותיה אני אלעזר ברבי
יעקב הקליר מקרית ספר.[i] וגם
הרא״ש מדעת עצמו ס״ל שהיה
זה שאמר בסוף פרק הנזכר וכן
ר׳ אלעזר הקליר שהיה מארץ
ישראל מקרית ספר ובימיו היו
מקדשין על פי הראיה שהרי
לא תקן שום קרובת ליום שני
ובערוך פירוש קליר לשון עוגה
וכו׳. ויהי מה דברי הקדמונים
היה להם משל ומקרא ומליצה
ובעי למידע המחבר מאן דמחוי
במחוג קמי מלכא רבא[ii] על
הדרך שכתב ר״מ בפ׳ פנחס דף
רנ״ד דאומן דמחתך מאני לבושין
דמלכותא שלפי דרכנו הם ראשי
פסוקים וסופי פסוקים שמשימים
הפייטנים בפיוטיהם כדי לעשות
שירים ערבים וזהו שאמרו
ועביד מינהון חתיכן סגיאן.
אינון דידעין אתרין דחסרין אלו
חתיכות. או אלין דמשתארין
אינון מתקנן לון לבושין ושוין
אינון חתיכות דאיתוספן באתר
דמעוטין וחתיכות דאינון מעטין
מוסיפין עלייהו. דלאו כל
מפרקי תכשיטין דכלה ידעין
בחתיכות לאן אזלן. ושם כתוב saying: "Samuel says: I have already written above that I found in a kerovah for the seventh day of Passover, with its initial letters spelling out 'I am Elazar son of Rabbi Jacob HaKallir from Kiryat Sefer.'" And the Rosh himself was of the opinion that this was the one who said at the end of the aforementioned chapter: "And so Rabbi Elazar HaKallir, who was from the Land of Israel, from Kiryat Sefer, and in his days they sanctified the new month based on visual sighting,[1] for he did not establish any kerovah for the second day of festivals." And in the Arukh, "kallir" is explained as a term for "cake," etc. Whatever the case, the words of the ancients contained parables, scripture, and eloquence, and one needs to know who is the composer who makes indications with a compass before the great King, in the way that Rabbi Moshe wrote in Parashat Pinchas, page 254,[2] regarding "a craftsman who cuts garments of royalty,"[3] which according to our approach refers to the beginnings and endings of verses that liturgical poets place in their compositions to create pleasant songs. And this is what they meant by saying "and he makes many pieces from them."[A] Those who know the places where these pieces are lacking, or those that remain, they fix them into garments and place those pieces that are added in places where they are diminished, and pieces that are diminished, they add to them. For not all who disassemble the bride's ornaments[4] know where the pieces go.

120R 125R 130R 135R 140R 145R

[A] Or: "and he fashions many fragments from them" — The Aramaic phrase could be rendered more poetically as 'fashions fragments' to better capture the artistic nature of the composition process being described.

[1] This refers to the ancient practice of determining the beginning of the Hebrew month through visual observation of the new moon, which was done in the Land of Israel until around the 4th century CE. This is mentioned as evidence that Rabbi Eleazar HaKallir lived during this earlier period.

[2] This refers to a section in the Zohar, the primary text of Jewish mysticism, discussing the spiritual significance of crafting sacred texts.

[3] This is a metaphor from the Zohar comparing the composition of sacred poetry to the skilled work of a royal tailor. Just as a tailor carefully cuts and arranges fabric to create a royal garment, a liturgical poet must carefully arrange verses and divine names.

[4] Another metaphor for working with sacred texts. In Kabbalistic thought, the "bride" often represents the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), and her ornaments are the sacred words and verses that adorn her.

[i] A city mentioned in the Bible (Joshua 15:15), here possibly referring to a place of scholarship. This passage discusses the debated identity of Rabbi Eleazar HaKallir.

[ii] A metaphorical expression describing the poet's craft as a divine service, carefully measuring and arranging words before God.

בזהר דמאן דבעי למיצד צידא
דציפרא קדישא[i] בעי צפצופין
לגבה בדקא יאות ומילי דשמיא
לא מקניין בכל מילי. וכבר
האריכו המפרשים והדרשנים
בזה בכמה מקומות פוק חזי
ספר דברי שלמה בפ׳ בשלח
דף ק״ה ע״ב אחר שפירש כמה
פסוקים בשלמות שצריך שיהיה
למחברי השירים אמר אחר כך
לכן בפי כל זה מתבאר שלא
יצדק עניין השיר הנעשה לאל
יתברך אלא לאיש שלם במדות
ובדעות שיהיו דבריו פועלים
ועושים רושם ותועלת בשומעם
עוד אמר כי צריך שיהיה שלם
המשורר באהבת הש״י ובאופן
אחר לא יצדק שירו ונמצא
במדרש כי ר׳ אלעזר הקליר
כשרצה ליסד פיוטיו עלה לרקיע
על ידי שם[ii] ושאל למיכאל היאך
המלאכים משוררים והיאך
שירתם מיוסדת ואמר ליה שהם
באלפא ביתא וכו׳ עיין בלקוטים
שהם בסוף ספר עשרה שליטים
דף פ״ד. אם כן חרוזי האחרונים
יופי להם ויופי להם אם יהיו
מחרוזות פסוקים הקוראים זה
לזה.[iii]

And there it is written in the Zohar that one who wishes to hunt the holy bird needs to chirp to it appropriately, and heavenly matters are not acquired through just any means. The commentators and preachers have already elaborated on this in many places. Go and see the book Divrei Shlomo on Parashat Beshalach, page 105b, after he explained several verses thoroughly about what is required of composers of songs, he then said: "Therefore, according to all this, it is clear that the matter of composing a song to the blessed God is only fitting for a person who is complete in character and knowledge,[A] whose words have impact and create an impression and benefit for those who hear them." He further stated that "the composer must be complete in his love for the Holy One, blessed be He, and otherwise his song will not be fitting." And it is found in the midrash that when Rabbi Elazar HaKallir wanted to establish his liturgical poems, he ascended to heaven through the use of a divine Name and asked Michael how the angels sing and how their song is structured, and he told him that they use the alphabet, etc. See the collected notes at the end of Sefer Asarah Shalitim, page 84. If so, the rhymes of later composers are beautiful for them and beautiful for them if they are strands of verses that call to one another.[1]

[A] Or: "for a person perfected in ethical virtues and correct beliefs" — The terms 'midot' and 'de'ot' have specific meanings in Jewish philosophy, particularly in Maimonidean thought, referring to ethical virtues and correct theological beliefs respectively.

[1] This poetic phrase describes the ideal way of composing liturgical poetry—creating connections between biblical verses so they respond to and complement each other, creating a harmonious whole that has spiritual power.

[i] A mystical metaphor from the Zohar, where the "holy bird" represents the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) that can be attracted through proper prayer.

[ii] Refers to a mystical tradition that Rabbi Eleazar HaKallir used a divine Name to ascend to heaven, suggesting his poetry was divinely inspired.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas — The Zohar reference establishes a mystical understanding of poetic composition, where arranging sacred texts is seen as similar to arranging divine garments, suggesting that prayer composition has cosmic significance. | Cf. Talmud, Sotah — This Talmudic reference is used to argue against questioning or changing established liturgical traditions, suggesting that prayer texts have similar authority to rabbinic legal decisions. | Cf. Midrash on Rabbi Elazar HaKallir — This reference establishes the divine origin of traditional liturgical poetry, suggesting that the earliest piyyutim were based on heavenly models and therefore should not be altered. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:6 — This biblical allusion compares the liturgical poet to a merchant of fine spices, suggesting that his compositions contain various precious spiritual elements blended together into a beautiful whole.

הנה תקיפי קדמאי אלופנו
המסובלים[i] תקנו לנו להתחנן
בימי אשמורות שבין ר״ה ליוה״כ
את שערי רצון להפתח בפסוקי
אנ״ך מחוברים יחד כפי רוחב
דעתם וכן הם רוב התחנות מקק״י
ספרדים וזה כי סמא דכולא איתי
בפסוקים ומי כמוהם מורה איזה
דרך ישכון אור וכמה מרגניתי
דלית בהו טימי תותייהו.[ii] בהם
יהא שמיה רבא בעלמא די ברא
כרעותיה[iii] וינהירו נהוריה
דהדין גברא באבוקה ויגינו עליו
מן הפחתים ומן הקוצים ומן
הברקנים ויגיעוהו לפרשת דרכי
אור[iv] כי יהל עליו ובזה יהיה
ניצול מכל מין נגע ומחלה הדין
דמשתעי בלשון חכמת הנבואה.
וישור אל מלאך ויוכל[v] כי
התורה היא לבדה תרומם גבר
ותוליכהו קוממיות כדאמרי׳
במדרש שיר השירים נאוו לחייך
בתורים זה התורה צוארך

Behold, the mighty scholars of old, our masters versed in Kabbalah,[1] established for us the practice of supplicating during the vigil days between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur,[2] when the gates of favor are about to open, using verses from the Tanakh [Scripture][3] arranged together according to their broad understanding. This is how most of the supplicatory prayers of the holy Sephardic communities are structured, for the remedy for everything exists in the biblical verses, and who better than they show which path the light shall dwell upon, and how many pearls of immeasurable value lie beneath them. Through these verses, may His great Name be magnified in the world that He created according to His will, and may the light of this person shine like a torch,[4] and may they protect him from pitfalls, thorns, and thistles,[5] and bring him to the crossroads of the paths of light that shine upon him. In this way, he will be saved from every kind of affliction and disease, as expressed in the language of prophetic wisdom.[6] He will see an angel and prevail, for the Torah alone elevates a person and leads them upright, as we say in the

175R

180R

185R

190R

195R

[1] I've translated this as 'our masters versed in Kabbalah' to capture both the sense of authority ('alufenu'—our champions/leaders) and the kabbalistic background ('mesubalim'—those bearing the tradition of Kabbalah).

[2] I've translated 'ashmorot' as 'vigil days' rather than literally as 'watches' to convey the sense of spiritual watchfulness during the Ten Days of Repentance between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

[3] ANaKh is an acronym for the three sections of the Hebrew Bible: Torah (Pentateuch), Nevi'im (Prophets), and Ketuvim (Writings). I've translated it as 'Tanakh' with the bracketed explanation 'Scripture' for clarity.

[4] This Aramaic phrase literally means 'and may the light of this man shine like a torch.' It uses distinctly zoharic language, reflecting how prayer illuminates the person spiritually.

[5] I've translated these three terms as 'pitfalls, thorns, and thistles' to maintain the metaphor of dangers on a path, though they could also be interpreted more broadly as different types of spiritual or physical dangers.

[6] This phrase literally means 'which speaks in the language of prophetic wisdom.' I've rendered it as 'as expressed in the language of prophetic wisdom' to make it clearer that this refers to the divine speech embedded in scripture.

[i] The term 'mesubalim' indicates those bearing the tradition of Kabbalah, showing that the author sees the practice of arranging biblical verses in prayer as stemming from kabbalistic tradition.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase meaning 'pearls without price beneath them' reflects the rabbinic belief in multiple layers of meaning within scripture, with deeper mystical interpretations hidden beneath the surface meaning.

[iii] This phrase echoes the Kaddish prayer, connecting the use of scriptural verses in prayer to the cosmic power of the Kaddish to sanctify God's name throughout creation.

[iv] The metaphor of the 'crossroads of paths of light' reflects the kabbalistic concept that proper prayer practices create illuminated spiritual pathways for the soul's ascent.

[v] This alludes to Jacob's wrestling with the angel at the Jabbok River (Genesis 32:25-31), connecting to the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Jabbok) and its theme of spiritual struggle and transformation.

בחרוזים אלו הנביאים תורי זהב
אלו הכתובים.[i] ואמרי׳ במדרש
תהלים דף ט״ו הא למדת שצריך
אדם לסמוך על דברי הראשונים
ולסדר את דבריו על דברי תורה
שכן מצינו בדוד שהתפלל בלשון
משה רבו וכן הוא אומר מזקנים
אתבונן:[ii]

Midrash on Song of Songs: "Your cheeks are comely with plaits" refers to the Torah; "your neck with strings of jewels" refers to the Prophets; "plaits of gold" refers to the Writings. And we say in the Midrash on Psalms, page 15: "From this you learn that a person should rely on the words of the early authorities and arrange his words according to the words of Torah, for we find that David prayed in the language of his teacher Moses, as it says, 'From elders I gain understanding.'"

פרק ח׳

Chapter 8

אל נא יחשדני שומע פתח
אמרי בנהום על דברי כי
ח״ו היום יצאתי להטיל מום
בקדשים[iii] מרבים ונכבדים
מבני עמנו אשר קול להם לשם
שמים בשיר ערב אל נא ינקטו
לי בדעתייהו כי אין משיבין
את הארי שלא בפניו[iv] וכ״ש
אחר מותו וצריך עיון גדול
וחכמה רבה קודם שיוכל האדם
לנגד שום חכם נוח נפש והביא
בעל הלקוטים מעשה מרש״י

Let no listener suspect me[1] as I begin my discourse, groaning over my words,[A] for heaven forbid that today I have come to cast blemish upon the many holy and honored members of our people who have a voice for the sake of heaven in pleasant song.[2] Let them not harbor resentment against me in their thoughts, for one does not respond to the lion in his absence, and certainly not after his death. Great consideration and much wisdom are required before one can oppose any sage of gentle spirit. The author of "The Compilations" brought a story about Rashi, of blessed memory, who appeared to someone in [A] Or: "sighing over my discourse" — The Hebrew term "nahom" suggests a deep sighing or moaning sound, which could be rendered as "sighing" to better capture the author's emotional state as he presents his apologetic introduction.

[1] The author begins with a rhetorical defensive posture, anticipating criticism for what he's about to argue regarding religious poetry and song compositions.

[2] The context suggests the author is addressing liturgical poetry or religious compositions, possibly defending his preference for biblical verses over composed prayers.

[i] The midrashic interpretation connects different types of jewelry to different sections of scripture, suggesting that adorning oneself with scripture through prayer is spiritually equivalent to wearing precious ornaments.

[ii] Cf. Midrash on Song of Songs — The author uses this midrashic interpretation to elevate the spiritual significance of incorporating biblical verses in prayer. By connecting jewelry and adornments to sacred texts, the midrash suggests that incorporating scripture into prayer spiritually adorns and elevates the one who prays. | Cf. Midrash on Psalms — This reference reinforces the author's argument for using scriptural verses in prayer by appealing to tradition and the practice of King David, who supposedly modeled his prayers on those of Moses. This establishes both the authority and antiquity of the practice. | Cf. Psalm 119:100 — This biblical verse serves as the capstone of the author's argument, providing scriptural authorization for the practice of modeling one's prayers after those of earlier authorities, just as David did with Moses.

[iii] This phrase uses Temple language metaphorically—"casting a blemish on holy things" would disqualify sacrifices, and here refers to criticizing respected religious compositions.

[iv] This is a rabbinic saying meaning "one should not respond to (criticize) a lion (great scholar) in his absence," indicating proper intellectual etiquette.

ז״ל[i] הבא לאחד בחלום וא״ל
יפה כוונתי ויפה פירשתי והאמת
כוונתי ומצדך יבצר שלא הבנת
בראוי ועיין בספר החסידים
סי׳ תקנ״ט שכר המפרש דברי
חבירו ועונש הסותר דברו חנם
כי קובל עליו במותו וכו׳.
וכבר אנו מותרים ועומדים
בדברי הזהר שדבריו אמתיים
ומוסכם בישראל שהדבר שלא
יחלוק על הגמרא ואין מפורש
שם ובו בא מפורש שמקבלים
אותו והביא בעל ספר יוחסין
בדף מ״ב הרבה דברים בזה וכן
בתפלין של ח״ה[ii] כי לא נשאר
גאון וכן הראב״ד והרמב״ן לא
אסרו אותו חוץ מבעל ספר
המצות והרא״ש[iii] כי סמכו
על הירושלמי כאשר הביאו
בספריהם. וכיון דבגמ׳ בבלית
שלנו אינו מפורש אנו לוקחים
סברת הזהר שאוסר וכתוב שם
בפ׳ יתרו[iv]

a dream[1] and said to him, "I intended well and I explained well, and I meant the truth. Your failure was that you did not understand properly."[A] See also in Sefer Hasidim, section 559, regarding the reward for interpreting a colleague's words and the punishment for contradicting them needlessly, for the colleague complains about him after death, etc. 15R

We are already permitted and established in the words of the Zohar, which are truthful and accepted in Israel,[2] that matters which do not contradict the Talmud and are not explicitly addressed there, but are explicitly explained in the Zohar, are to be accepted. The author of Sefer Yuhasin on page 42 brought many examples of this, as with the head tefillin, for no Gaon remained,[B] and neither did the Ra'avad nor the Ramban prohibit it, except for the author of Sefer HaMitzvot and the Rosh, because they relied on the Jerusalem Talmud as they cited in their books. And since in our Babylonian Talmud it is not explicitly stated, we adopt the view of the Zohar which prohibits it, and it is written there in Parashat Yitro...[3] 20R 25R 30R

[A] Or: "it was beyond you to understand correctly" — The Hebrew term "yivatzer" has connotations of something being inaccessible or beyond reach, suggesting not just failure but inability, which this alternate translation captures more precisely.

[B] Or: "no Gaonic authority maintained the prohibition" — This expanded translation clarifies that the phrase refers to the absence of any remaining Gaonic authorities who upheld a particular prohibition, making the legal discussion more clear to readers unfamiliar with rabbinic discourse patterns.

[1] Dreams featuring deceased sages were considered a legitimate form of posthumous communication in Jewish mystical thought, and could serve as validation for interpretations or rulings.

[2] This statement reflects the author's position on the authority of the Zohar, the central text of Jewish mysticism. The passage establishes a principle for resolving conflicts between different Jewish legal sources.

[3] The text is cut off here in the original, but was leading into a quote from the Zohar on the portion of Exodus containing the Ten Commandments, likely to further support the author's argument.

[i] "The author of HaLikutim" likely refers to a collection of rabbinic stories. The anecdote about Rashi appearing in a dream illustrates the reverence for deceased scholars and caution about misinterpreting their words.

[ii] This refers to the controversial question of the head tefillin (phylacteries) and a specific ritual law about them, likely the acronym ח״ה (ḥoleh) refers to a specific ritual position or status of the tefillin.

[iii] The "author of Sefer HaMitzvot" refers to either Maimonides or another medieval authority, while "the Rosh" refers to Rabbi Asher ben Yechiel (c. 1250-1327). The passage discusses scholarly disagreement about accepting Zoharic rulings.

[iv] Cf. Sefer Hasidim — The author cites this source to establish a principle of intellectual ethics—that one should be careful about criticizing the works of scholars, especially after their death, as there are spiritual consequences for misrepresenting someone's views. | Cf. Zohar — The author is establishing the Zohar's authority in matters not explicitly addressed in the Talmud, reflecting the book's integration of kabbalistic thought into halakhic discussions. | Cf. Sefer Yuhasin — The

דף ס״ח ת״ח לא ינהיג בר נש
קלנא באחרא ומלה דהדיוטא
מלה איהו דהא במשה כתיב
וישמע משה לקול חותנו וגם
שחבורים אלו ספיר גזרתם ויש
בהם הרבה מעיינות של תורה
וחכמה ואגדה שעל האגדה
בפרט אמרו במדרש שיר השירים
על פסוק מעיסים רמוני אלו
האגדות שטעמם כרמון נגד
סברת ר׳ זעירא בירושלמי
דמעשרות דהוה מקנתר לאילך
דאגדתא וצווח להון ספרי
קסמי. וכתב על זה בעל יפה
מראה שהיה קוראם כן לפי
דס״ל שאומרים דברי שקר
בפתרון הכתובים שלא קבלום
מהראשונים. ובירושלמי דשבת
פ׳ כל כתבי אמר ר׳ יהושע בן
לוי אנא מן יומוי לא אסתכלית
בספרא דאגדתא וכו׳ וכבר בא
בהקדמת הספר כוונת חכמינו
ז״ל באמרם במציעא ובירושלמי
דשבת פרק כל כתבו העוסק
במקרא מדה שאינה מדה ומשם
יתברר ודאי כי בתפלה ובתחנה
המקרא קודם למשנה וגמרא
ואין לך מדה גדולה הימנה.
וכ״ש שקודם לדברים המיוסדים
מדעת האחרונים. ורבי יהושע
בן לוי וכן רבי חייא בר אבא

Talmud folio 68 teaches us: "A person should not 35R treat another with contempt,[A] nor dismiss ordinary speech, for it is written of Moses, 'Moses listened to the voice of his father-in-law.'" Moreover, these compositions have exquisite structure[B1] and contain many wellsprings of Torah, wisdom, and aggadah 40R (narrative). Regarding aggadah in particular, the Midrash Song of Songs comments on the verse
"from the juice of my pomegranates"—these are the aggadot whose taste is like pomegranates. This stands in contrast to Rabbi Ze'ira's opinion in the 45R Jerusalem Talmud of Ma'aserot, who would mock those who taught aggadah and called them "books of divination." The author of Yefeh Mareh wrote that Rabbi Ze'ira called them this because he believed they presented false interpretations of Scripture 50R that were not received from earlier authorities. In the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shabbat, chapter
"All Sacred Writings," Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said, "In all my days I never looked into a book of aggadah," etc. Yet the intention of our Sages 55R has already been explained in the introduction to this book,[C] regarding their statement in Bava Metzia and in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shabbat, that "one who engages in Scripture follows a measure that is not [the best] measure."[2] From 60R there it will certainly be clarified that in prayer and supplication, Scripture takes precedence over Mishnah and Gemara, and there is no greater measure than this. How much more so does it take precedence over compositions based on the opinions 65R

[A] Or: "A Torah scholar should not behave contemptuously toward another" — The abbreviation ת״ח could specifically refer to 'תלמיד חכם' (Torah scholar) rather than any person, making this instruction specifically for scholars. The original Aramaic 'בר נש' is also more literally 'son of man' rather than simply 'person'.

[B] Or: "are cut like sapphires" — This phrase uses gem-cutting imagery that could be preserved more literally, though the metaphorical meaning would be the same—suggesting carefully crafted, precious compositions.

[C] Or: "And the intention of our blessed Sages has already been addressed in the introduction to this book" — This translation includes the honorific 'blessed' (ז״ל—of blessed memory) which I omitted in the main translation for flow, and uses 'addressed' rather than 'explained' for 'בא'.

[1] The Hebrew 'ספיר גזרתם' literally means 'their cutting is sapphire-like,' using gem-cutting imagery to describe the polished and precise structure of these compositions. I've chosen 'exquisite structure' to capture this metaphorical sense.

[2] The original statement 'מדה שאינה מדה' is ambiguous and could be translated various ways. I've added clarification in brackets to reflect the author's interpretation that this is a comparative statement rather than an absolute dismissal of Scripture study.

citation supports the author's position on accepting Zoharic rulings when they don't contradict the Talmud, demonstrating how he builds his argument through established scholarly sources.

בירושלמי ס״ל כי אם הותר
בתיבת משנה והגמרא לא הותר
בתיבת ההגדה וטעמו פירש בעל
יפה מראה בשבת דף ק״ז ומ״מ
המנהג אינו כדבריו. וא״כ גם
שפיוטי האחרונים כחם יפה
בכל האפשר להם מ״מ מלה
דהדיוט אינון לגבי תורה נביאים
וכתובים. והגם דמינייהו ג״כ
אתקלס עילאה ביוצאם מפי
נפש זכה וברה. דברכת הדיוט
אינה קלה בעיניו כד איהי דוקא
ברעותא דלבא כמה שכתב
במסכתא ערכין פ״ב איזוהי
עבודה שהיא בטוב לב זו שירה.
בלי ספק עלה יעלה על בלנה
תחנות בפסוקי אנ״ך כדאמרי׳
במדרש שיר השירים דף י״ט
ע״ב אמר ר׳ לוי הקורא מקרא
בעגונו ובנגונו עליו נאמר דבש
וחלב תחת לשונך וקל וחומר
זה כל אדם יכול לדונו מעצמו
על כן את רעי עמי עיפה ועפר
אתי בדומים לי. לי ולהם אשים
דברתי ולפניהם ולפני העירוני
רעיוני להציג קדמיהון בשולי
מאמרי זה פסוקים אשר יחדו
יהיו תמים ואיש באחיו ידובקו
יתלכדו ולא יתפרדו בעבותות
אהבה ויחוד אשר מימים ושנים
סדרתים לפני בהכשר ובמחשבה.
וגם כי הרואה אותם בסקירה
ראשונה יאמר כי קבוצם אינה
מלאכה ואולי גם לא חכמה מכל
מקום ספיר גזרתם. ומעצמם
אתם תלין סגולה להפיל ארצה
מן הצבא ומן הכוכבים ולא
יערכום שירים אחרים. והנה הם
לפני למאורים להיות נבונים על
שפתי ובעתותי בקר וערב בהם of later authorities. Rabbi Joshua ben Levi and Rabbi Hiyya bar Abba in the Jerusalem Talmud held that while the writing of Mishnah and Gemara was permitted, the writing of aggadah was not permitted. The Yefeh Mareh explained the reason for this on Shabbat page 107, though common practice does not follow this opinion. Therefore, even though the liturgical poems of later authorities are as excellent as possible, they are still considered "ordinary speech" compared to the Torah, Prophets, and Writings. Nevertheless, the Supreme One is also praised through them when they come from a pure and clear soul. For the blessing of an ordinary person is not insignificant in His eyes when it comes with sincerity of heart, as stated in Tractate Arakhin, chapter 2: "What is the service that is with a good heart? It is song." Without doubt, supplications composed of verses from the Torah, Prophets, and Writings surpass them all, as stated in the Midrash Song of Songs, page 19b: "Rabbi Levi said, 'Of one who reads Scripture with its proper melody and cantillation,[1] it is said: Honey and milk are under your tongue.'" This is a logical inference that anyone can deduce for themselves. Therefore, my friends who are weary like me and dust like me, to me and to them I will direct my words, and for them my thoughts have stirred me to present before them, in the margins of this discourse, verses that together will be perfect, cleaving to one another, united and inseparable in bonds of love and unity, which I have arranged before me over days and years with proper intent and thought. Even though one who sees them at first glance might say their collection is not a craft and perhaps not even wisdom, nevertheless, their structure is beautiful. And inherent in them is the power to cast down [negative forces] from the heavenly host and stars,[2] which other songs cannot match. These verses serve as illumination for me, ready upon my lips in my appointed times, morning and evening, with which I joyfully express myself in

70R 75R 80R 85R 90R 95R 100R 105R

[1] The Hebrew 'בעגונו ובנגונו' uses two similar-sounding terms, possibly creating a rhyming effect. The first term refers to the emotional quality or sorrow expressed in reading, while the second refers more specifically to musical cantillation. I've simplified this to 'proper melody and cantillation' but the original has more emotional resonance.

[2] The original text is more metaphorical and doesn't explicitly identify what is being cast down. I've added 'negative forces' in brackets to clarify the intended meaning, based on the kabbalistic context and the author's view of properly arranged scriptural verses as having protective spiritual power.

[i] ארנין ואפגין בב״ה ובב״ה

the synagogue and study hall.[1]

פעמים בקול ערב ופעמים
בקול עצב כפי המורם מהם וכפי
התעת והזמן והמשתרג עלי מדי
יום ביומו ואוכל מתוך אוכל
בררתים וצרפתים אחד לאחד
בהתפללי בהם לאל חיי יפיק
לי בכחם ובזכותם (כי רב הוא
מאד) שובע שמחות בנעימות
אשר בימין עליון נצח ממרי
נצחן קרבייא. ובהם מקריב
אדם צורתו הנכבדת אל יוצרו
ליחד למעלה בסוד קרבן לה׳
שהם הוי״ה ואדנ״י משולבים
יחד. והיינו יחוד וקירוב רמ״ח
כחות זכרים ברמ״ח נקבות וכבר
ידענו שהנשמות נתונות בגוף
וכדפרש״י ביבמות ונדה וע״ג
גוף הוא פרגוד שחוצץ בין שכינה
למלאכים ושם רוחות ונשמות
וסי׳ ועל כן יחוד כל העולמות
הם ביד הצדיקים ולהיות מקומם
למעלה ממלאכי השרת הם
חשובים ברקיע. והחצונים חתים

Sometimes with a sweet voice and sometimes with a sorrowful voice, according to what is elevated from them[2] and according to the time, season, and what entangles me daily.[A] I have selected and refined them from amongst others, one by one, as I pray with them to the God of my life. May He grant me through their power and merit (for it is exceedingly great) abundant joy and pleasantness in the victorious right hand of the Most High, triumphing over the masters of battle.[B]

Through these verses, a person offers his noble form to his Creator, unifying the realms above through the mystery of sacrifice to the LORD, which are the Divine Names YHVH and ADNY interwoven together.[3] This constitutes the unification and drawing near of the 248 masculine powers with the 248 feminine powers.[4] We already know that souls are placed within the body, as Rashi explained in tractates Yevamot and Niddah. The body is a partition that separates between the Divine Presence and the angels, and there dwell spirits and souls. Therefore, the unification of all worlds is in the hands of the righteous, and because

[A] Or: "and what befalls me day by day" — The Hebrew term משתרג can be rendered as 'entangles' or 'befalls/happens to,' with the latter being slightly more natural in English while still preserving the sense of external circumstances affecting the author.

[B] Or: "over the masters of spiritual warfare" — The Aramaic phrase refers to spiritual conflict rather than literal battle, so this alternate translation emphasizes the mystical context, though it adds an interpretive element not explicitly in the original.

[1] The Hebrew abbreviations 'בב״ה ובב״ה' likely refer to 'בבית הכנסת ובבית המדרש' (in the synagogue and in the study hall). I've translated them accordingly, though some interpretations might read the second as 'in the house of God.'

[2] This phrase refers to the spiritual essence or teaching that the author extracts from the biblical verses used in prayer.

[3] In Kabbalah, the combination of these two divine names (the Tetragrammaton and Adonai) represents the unification of divine masculine and feminine aspects, or mercy and judgment. This unification is considered a primary goal of prayer and mystical practice.

[4] The number 248 corresponds to the traditional count of positive commandments in Judaism and also to the number of limbs in the human body according to Talmudic anatomy. This creates a correspondence between human physicality, divine law, and cosmic structure.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The author is drawing on the Zohar's teaching about respecting all speech to support his argument about the value of using scriptural verses in prayer rather than composed poetry. | Cf. Midrash Song of Songs — The author cites this midrash to establish the superior spiritual value of scriptural recitation in prayer compared to composed liturgical poetry. | Cf. Tractate Arakhin — The author uses this talmudic reference to acknowledge that even non-scriptural compositions have spiritual value when offered with sincerity. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — The author mentions this position but ultimately argues against it, suggesting that Scripture's use in prayer supersedes rabbinic opinions that devalue aggadah.

מיראתם[i] כדאמרי׳ בפסחים פרק
אלו דברים על ר״ח ובקדושין
פ״ב על ר״מ ור׳ עקיבא ובחגיגה
פ״ב על ר׳ יוחנן דאמר על אחר
אי נקיטנא ליה בידי מאן מירמי
ליה מנאי.[ii] וביחוד שעושה
האדם בסוד צורתו כזה מקריב
למעלה קרבן גם לבוש נשמתו
כמו שעל ידי סמיכת הקרבן
בכל כחו שהוא כחו ונשמתו
מקריב ג״כ לבוש נשמתו על ידי
קרבן הבהמה וכמו שאדם עליון
מתלבש בסוד ארבעה פנים כן
יש מציאות לאדם להאחז נשמתו
בכח הקדושה אשר לבהמה
כי בצורת אדם נכלל כל מין
רוחניות משאר הנבראים כלם
ומצא מין את מינו וניעור ועל
ידי שחיטתו וזריקת דמו הרי
ממש לבוש נשמתו נקרב. ולהיות
כי הת״ח מרבים שלום בעולם.
לכן אמרו במס׳ תענית פ״ג על
כמה צדיקים שהיה בא להם שלום
בבת קול ממתיבתא דרקיעא.
ואם כח קרבן בהמה יפה כ״כ.
כ״ש כי על ידי ההבל העולה מן
הנשמה בפסוקי יחודים אלו אשר
אורם כמוס בתוכם ומניעים אור
עליון כמי שנוגן במנגן התחתון
ומכוון בנגד העליון אשר הביא
בעל העקדה בפרק הניגון. כי

their place is above the ministering angels, they are esteemed in the heavens. 130R

The external forces tremble in fear of them, as we learn in Pesachim, chapter "These Things," concerning Rabbi Hanina; in Kiddushin, chapter two, concerning Rabbi Meir and Rabbi Akiva; and in Hagigah, chapter two, concerning Rabbi Yohanan, who said regarding Aher (Elisha ben Abuya):[1] "If I were to take him by the hand, who could cast him away from me?" 135R

Through the unification that a person performs through the mystery of his form in this way, he offers above a sacrifice that includes the garment of his soul.[A] Just as through the act of placing his hands upon the animal sacrifice with all his might—which represents his strength and soul—he also offers the garment of his soul through the sacrifice of the animal. And just as the Supernal Man is clothed in the mystery of the four faces, so too there exists for a human being the possibility for his soul to grasp hold of the holy power that belongs to the animal. For within the human form is included every type of spirituality from all other created beings, and like finds like and is awakened.[2] Through the animal's slaughter and the sprinkling of its blood, the garment of one's soul is truly offered up. 140R 145R 150R 155R

And since Torah scholars increase peace in the world, our Sages said in Tractate Ta'anit, chapter three, regarding several righteous individuals that they would receive greetings through a heavenly voice from the celestial academy. And if the power 160R

[A] Or: "And through the unification that a person performs in the secret of his form in this manner, he offers upward not only a sacrifice but also the garment of his soul" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the sense that both the sacrifice and the soul's garment are being offered, which seems to be the intention of the Hebrew text with its use of 'גם' (also).

[1] Elisha ben Abuya was a famous rabbinic figure who became an apostate and was given the nickname "Aher" (Other). Despite his spiritual fall, Rabbi Yohanan maintained that his spiritual power was sufficient to rescue even Aher, demonstrating the author's belief in the cosmic authority of the righteous.

[2] This phrase reflects the kabbalistic principle that spiritual entities of similar nature are naturally drawn to each other, creating connections across different levels of reality. Here it explains how human prayer can activate corresponding spiritual forces.

[i] The term "chitzonim" (external forces) refers to negative spiritual entities that oppose holiness. The passage suggests that righteous individuals who properly unify divine realms through prayer gain authority over these harmful forces.

[ii] This refers to the story of Elisha ben Abuya (known as "Acher"/"Other") who became an apostate. Rabbi Yochanan's statement expresses confidence that if he were to take Acher by the hand, no one could separate them—suggesting the power of the righteous to rescue even those who have fallen spiritually.

יתקדש ויקריב קרבן לה׳ גופו
ונשמתו ויסולו לפניו המסלה
וירימו מכשול מדרך נפשו ויקרא
165 וה׳ יענהו.[iii][iii]

of an animal sacrifice is so effective, how much more so through the breath that ascends from the soul when reciting these verses of unification, whose light is hidden within them. They stir the supernal light like one who plays a musical instrument below while 165R focusing on the one above, as the author of the Akedah brought in the chapter on music.[1] Thus, one sanctifies and offers his body and soul as a sacrifice to the LORD, and they pave the way before Him, removing obstacles from the path of his soul. 170R
He calls out, and the LORD answers him.

פרק ט׳

Chapter 9

בינו נא זאת אלופי רעי שיתו
נא לבכם אפי׳ לפשטי פסוקים
אלו בהם תמצאו נהרי נחלי
דבש וחמאה וכל צרכי עמו
5 ישראל המרובין יביעו ידברו
הן צרכי הגוייה הן צרכי
הנשמה וכל איש ואיש ימצא
בהן מבוקשו לפי העת והזמן
וסבותיו ומאורעיו המתגלגלים

Please understand this, my noble friends: direct your hearts to these verses. Even in their plain meaning, you will find rivers and streams of honey and cream. All the abundant needs of God's people Israel will flow forth from them—both physical needs and spir- 5R itual needs.[2] Each person will find what they seek according to the time, circumstances, and events unfolding in their lives. These verses will meet them where they are, enabling them to entreat God and

[1]This refers to Sefer HaAkedah (The Binding of Isaac) by Rabbi Isaac Arama (1420-1494), a philosophical work that uses the musical metaphor to explain the relationship between human spiritual practice and divine response.

[2]The Hebrew terms 'צרכי הגוייה' and 'צרכי הנשמה' literally mean 'needs of the body' and 'needs of the soul,' establishing the text's holistic approach to human wellbeing.

[i]The passage represents a sophisticated kabbalistic understanding of prayer where human recitation of scriptural verses creates metaphysical connections between earthly and divine realms. The author draws on Zoharic concepts of masculine and feminine divine powers, the correspondence between upper and lower worlds, and the spiritual mechanisms through which human actions affect cosmic reality.

[ii]This concludes with an allusion to Psalm 20:10, "LORD, save! May the King answer us on the day we call." The entire passage explains how reciting scriptural verses in prayer serves as a spiritual substitute for Temple sacrifices, unifying cosmic realms through the mystical power contained within biblical texts.

[iii]Cf. Zohar — The author draws heavily on Zoharic theology to explain how human prayer creates cosmic unifications comparable to Temple sacrifices. The language of 'masculine and feminine powers' and the integration of prayer with divine name unifications is characteristic of Zoharic mysticism. | Cf. Talmud — The author uses these Talmudic references to establish the spiritual authority of the righteous, particularly showing how Rabbi Yohanan believed he could rescue even Elisha ben Abuya (Aher), suggesting the power of the righteous extends even to saving those who have fallen spiritually. | Cf. Sefer HaAkedah (by Rabbi Isaac Arama) — The author employs Arama's analogy of music to explain how prayer functions: just as a lower musician can harmonize with higher music, human prayer creates resonance with divine realities. This musical metaphor illustrates the kabbalistic principle of correspondence between lower and upper worlds. | Cf. Biblical sacrificial system — The author transforms physical Temple practices into a mystical framework where prayer replaces sacrifice. The biblical semicha (where the offerer places hands on the animal's head to transfer identity) becomes a metaphor for how one's soul becomes mystically connected to the words of prayer, creating cosmic unifications that affect multiple spiritual worlds.

עליו המה יקדמו פניו ויעתר
אל אלוה בהם וירצהו וסגולתם
העקרי הוא להחליש כח ארבע
מיני יצר הרע שבארנו[i] וכחות
המשתרגים מהם כי רבו ואם יהיה
לטוטפות בין עיניך מ״ש בפרקים
הקודמים בדרוש זה ואז תבין
בפסוקים אלו תבין ותדע כי זה
יופי כחן. עוד יועילו יצילו
ג״כ ממחשבות בלתי טהורות
המתהוות מבהלת המקטרגים
דעתו ומחשבתו של אדם ובפרט
בעת התפלה והעבודה. וכל סדר
מהם באו בתוכו ששים פסוקים
כמספר אותיות של ברכת כהנים
הממתקים ששים גבורים שהם
מדת הגבורה עם כלליותיה
דאינון עיינין דמתלהטן ומנהון
מארי דיבבה ומרי דיללה
וכו׳.[ii] שמהן מתפשטין כח שיתין
פולסי דנורא ולהיות שבלילה
ואפילו מחצות ואילך מלכות
היא אש יוקדת מצד הגבורה ע״כ
בעתותי לילה היו שומרי המקדש
הלויים שהם מצד הדין בסוד הנה
מטתו שלשלמה ששים גבורים
דאינון מסטרא דגבורה סביב
לה[iii] אמנם ביום היתה עבודת
הכהנים שהם מסטרא דחסד.
ויש שני מינין דינין הפנימיים
מתמתקים והחיצונים מתבערים
ויכוין המכוין להמתיק הקדושים
ולבער החצונים. על כן נגד
הדינים המתראים בשש שעות
ראשונות מהיום ובפרט בשעת
זעמו של הקב״ה יכוין לבסמם
ולהכשירם בכח רוחניות ששים פסוקים אלו וכמו כן בחינת

find favor.

Their essential power is to weaken the four types of evil inclination that we have explained and the forces that branch from them, which are many. If you keep in mind what we wrote in previous chapters of this discourse, then you will understand these verses and recognize their beautiful power. They will also protect and save you from impure thoughts that arise from the confusion caused by accusers disrupting a person's knowledge and thoughts, especially during prayer and divine service.

Each order contains sixty verses, corresponding to the number of letters in the Priestly Blessing, which sweeten the "sixty mighty ones" that represent the attribute of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) with all its aspects. These are "the eyes that blaze, and from them come the masters of wailing and the masters of howling, etc." From them extends the power of sixty lashes of fire.

Since at night—even from midnight onward—Malkhut (Kingdom) is a burning fire from the side of Gevurah, the Levites, who come from the side of judgment, were the guardians of the Temple during the night watches. This is the secret meaning of "Behold, the bed of Solomon, sixty mighty men surround it," for they are from the side of Gevurah. During the day, however, the service belonged to the priests, who are from the side of Chesed (Loving-kindness).

There are two types of judgments: the inner ones are sweetened, and the outer ones are burned away. One who focuses intention should aim to sweeten the holy judgments and burn away the external ones.[1] Therefore, against the judgments that appear in the first six hours of the day, particularly during the time of the Holy One's wrath, one should intend to sweeten and prepare them through the spiritual power of these sixty verses. Likewise, regarding the [1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'המתקת הדינים' (sweetening of judgments), where harsh divine forces are not eliminated but transformed into constructive spiritual energy, while negative forces are eliminated entirely.

[i] The author refers to a previous explanation of four types of evil inclination, indicating this passage is building on concepts established earlier in Ma'avar Yabok.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase from Zoharic literature describes manifestations of the attribute of Gevurah (Judgment) as 'blazing eyes' and 'masters of wailing and howling'—personifications of strict divine judgment.

[iii] The author reinterprets Song of Songs 3:7 in kabbalistic terms, where Solomon's bed surrounded by sixty mighty men represents the divine attribute of Malkhut protected by forces of Gevurah (Judgment).

הדינים השולטים בשש שעות
אחרונות בעתותי ערב כרמז
בין הערבים המתפשטים לשש
קצוות מצד מעלה ומטה ישים
אל לבו בהגיגו בהם למתק כחם
קדם סבא חסידא[i] והם עשרה
פסוקים לכל שעה משעות היום
ויכוין לבערם ממקומם
ובזה חסד אל יעורה עלינו כל
היום בכח ההבל העולה משברון
הלב ורוח נכאה תיבש גרם.
ה״ה כח קליפת החמור העולה
בגרם המעלות[ii] ומשור מועד
ליגח ולישוך ולרבוץ ולבעוט
וליגוף ומדינא חצופא דכלבא
המתהוה מתוכם. ועתה שבעונות
אין יחוד במעשה הקרבן היחוד
עולה מהבחינה המסולקת מן
העולם התחתון שהוא כח הדבור
עם המחשבה העליונה. על
כן עסק פסוקי תורה ועבודה
גורם תקון זה. פוק חזי כמה
תקיף חילייהו דמלי דאורייתא
קדישא. הנה כל פרשה וכל
גמרא ועסק שאדם עוסק בענייני
מצוה אחת יש לאותיות ההם
מציאות רוחני המתדבק בענפי
הספירה שהמצוה ההיא רומזת
אליה ובהגות אדם בהם יתנועעו
אלו האותיות ויפעלו התעוררות

aspect of judgments that rule in the last six hours, in the evening times—as hinted at by "between the evenings"—which extend to the six directions from above and below, one should set one's heart when meditating on them to sweeten their power before the Ancient Pious One. These are ten verses for each hour of the day, and one should intend to remove them from below their place. Through this, divine kindness will be aroused upon us all day through the power of the breath rising from the broken heart,[1] and "a stricken spirit dries the bone." This refers to the power of the donkey's shell (negative force) that rises in the stairs and is an ox appointed to gore, bite, crouch, kick, and injure, and the judgment of the dog's impudence that forms from them.

Now that due to our sins there is no unification through the sacrificial service,[B] the unification ascends from the aspect that is removed from the lower world, which is the power of speech with the higher thought.[2] Therefore, engagement with Torah verses and divine service causes this rectification.[C] Go and see how powerful are the words of the holy Torah![D] For every portion, every Talmudic discussion, and every engagement with the matters of a single commandment—these letters have a spiritual reality that attaches to the branches of the sefirah (divine emanation) to which that commandment alludes. When a person meditates on them, these letters move and create [B] Or: "Now that because of our transgressions there is no longer unification through sacrificial offerings" — This alternate provides a slightly different rendering of 'עונות' as 'transgressions' rather than 'sins' and 'במעשה הקרבן' as 'sacrificial offerings' rather than 'sacrificial service.' This might be preferable if a more formal theological register is desired.

[C] Or: "this tikkun" — Keeping the technical kabbalistic term 'tikkun' untranslated might be preferable in some contexts, especially for readers familiar with kabbalistic terminology, though 'rectification' is more accessible to general readers.

[D] Or: "Go out and behold how mighty is the force of the words of the holy Torah!" — This alternate preserves more of the Aramaic flavor of the original expression 'פוק חזי' (a common Zoharic phrase) and gives a more literal rendering of 'תקיף חילייהו' as 'mighty is the force' rather than simply 'powerful are.'

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that sincere prayer from a 'broken heart' (לב נשבר) has special spiritual power to ascend to higher realms and effect change in divine forces.

[2] The text presents a mystical cosmology where human speech (דבור) combined with focused intention (מחשבה) creates the same spiritual effects once achieved through Temple sacrifices.

[i] The phrase 'Ancient Pious One' is a kabbalistic reference to a high divine configuration, likely referring to Atik Yomin (Ancient of Days) or a similar divine aspect.

[ii] The 'shell/husk of the donkey' refers to a particular negative spiritual force in kabbalistic literature, associated with materiality and stubbornness.

למעלה ויבטשו אורות תחתונים
המתעלמים בצורות האותיות
והנקודות ואורות היורדים
מלמעלה בסוד אותיות ונקודות
הרוחניות ויצא חתן לקראת
כלה.[i] וכ״ש אם יהיה בהם
ג״כ נשמת הטעמים נגד מקום
מוצאם. כי הארץ תענה את
השמים והשמים יענו את הארץ
ויפעלו התעוררות למעלה
והוא המציאות שע״י קול ודבור
שהם ת״ת ומלכות ומחשבה
ורעותא דלבא שהם י״ה על ו״ה
ועקימת שפתים משוה לקולות
ההם מעשה ומציאות האותיות
יעלו ויתמצו בכל המקומות
דרך עליתם מבחינה אל בחינה
בדרך השתלשלות ממדרגה אל
מדרגה עד שבמציאות אלו
שהם בעולם התחתון רוכבים
הנשמות המתלבשות בעולם
התחתון אחר פרידתם מהגוף
כדפירשו בתקונים ובמציאותם
שבג״ע מתלבשות שמה הרואות
ובמציאותם שבג״ע עליון
מתלבשות שם הנשמות ובמציאות
עליון מתייחדות הספירות.
ומעשה המצוה גורמים ענין
זה ממש. ברם התורה עדיף
ממעשה כי התורה היא ת״ת
שבו תרי״ג ענפים שס״ה משמאל
רמ״ח מימין[ii] והמצות תלויות
בשם בן ד׳ כענבים באשכול וכן
ממש בתורה שבעל פה שהיא
מלכות בה תרי״ג מצות מפורשות
והעוסק בהם יומם ולילה גורם

an awakening above. They strike the lower lights that are concealed in the forms of the letters and vowel points, and the lights descending from above in the mystery of spiritual letters and vowel points, and "the bridegroom comes forth to meet the bride."[1] All the more so if they also contain the soul of the cantillation marks corresponding to their source.

For "the earth answers the heavens, and the heavens answer the earth," creating an awakening above.[2] This is the reality that through voice and speech, which correspond to Tiferet and Malkhut, and through thought and the heart's desire, which correspond to Yod-Heh influencing Vav-Heh,[3] and the shaping of the lips that equates these sounds to action—the existence of the letters ascends and is extracted in all places through their ascent from one aspect to another, descending through the chain from one level to another. In these realities that exist in the lower world ride the souls that clothe themselves in the lower world after their separation from the body, as explained in the Tikkunim. In their existence in the Garden of Eden, the seeing ones clothe themselves there, and in their existence in the upper Garden of Eden, the souls clothe themselves there, and in the highest existence, the sefirot unite. The performance of commandments literally causes this very matter.

However, Torah study is superior to action, because Torah is Tiferet, which contains 613 branches—365 on the left and 248 on the right—and the commandments depend on the four-letter Name like grapes on a cluster. The same is true of the Oral Torah, which is Malkhut, wherein the 613 commandments are explained. One who engages with them day and night undoubtedly causes the [1] This phrase uses marriage imagery to describe the unification of masculine and feminine divine aspects (Tiferet and Malkhut, or God and Shekhinah) achieved through proper religious service.

[2] This translates the kabbalistic concept of 'התעוררות למעלה' (awakening above), where human religious activities stimulate corresponding responses in the divine realms.
[3] This refers to the kabbalistic understanding of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) divided into two pairs: Yod-Heh representing the higher divine aspects (Wisdom and Understanding) and Vav-Heh representing the lower aspects (Beauty and Kingdom).

[i] The metaphor of 'bridegroom coming forth to meet the bride' describes the mystical union of masculine and feminine divine forces (Tiferet and Malkhut) that occurs through proper Torah study and prayer.
[ii] The author presents Torah as corresponding to Tiferet, with 613 branches divided into 365 negative commandments (left side, associated with restriction) and 248 positive commandments (right side, associated with expansion).

בלי ספק יחוד תורה שבכתב
115 ותורה שבעל פה והתורה מגינה
לעולם כדאמרי׳ בגמ׳ סוטה
פ״ג ועדיף דבור בפסוקי תורה
ממעשה המצות כי המקריב עולה
במעשה לא הקריב חטאת כלל
120 ואם הקריב שניהם לא מפני
זה הקריב שלמים אבל עסק
התורה כתיב בה וזאת התורה
פי׳ תורה שבכתב ושבעל פה וכן
אמרו בשבת פרק י״ח גדול ת״ת
125 יותר מהקרבת תמידין ובהיות
האדם עוסק באיזה חלק ממנה
שירצה הוא עושה שם למעלה
ומאיר בכולה וזהו זאת התורה
לעולה ולמנחה ולחטאת וגו׳.
130 וזהו דכולהו תנויי דרב יהודה
בנזיקין הוו וכולהו תנויי דההיא
צורבא מרבנן בחגיגה הוה
וכמוהם רבים. הנה כי ת״ת כנגד
כלם וכן התפלה אמרי׳ בגמ׳
135 ברכות פ״ק גדולה תפלה יותר
ממעשים טובים שהרי משה שאין
לנו גדול ממנו במעשה ולא נענה
אלא בתפלה. [i] unification of the Written Torah and the Oral Torah, and the Torah protects the world, as they said in 115R Tractate Sotah, chapter 3.

Speech engaged with Torah verses is superior to performing commandments, because one who offers a burnt offering in action has not offered a sin offering at all, and if one offers both, this does not 120R mean one has offered a peace offering. But regarding Torah study it is written, "This is the Torah," meaning both the Written and Oral Torah. And they said in Tractate Shabbat, chapter 18, "Torah study is greater than offering the daily sacrifices." 125R
When a person engages with any part of it that they wish, they create a name above and illuminate the entirety. This is the meaning of "This is the Torah for the burnt offering, for the meal offering, for the sin offering, etc." This explains why all of Rav Yehu- 130R dah's teachings were in [tractate] Nezikin, and all the teachings of that Torah scholar were in [tractate] Chagigah, and there are many like them. Thus, Torah study counterbalances them all. Similarly regarding prayer, they said in Tractate Berakhot, chap- 135R ter 1, "Prayer is greater than good deeds, for even Moses—than whom we have none greater in deeds—was answered only through prayer."

פרק י׳ Chapter 10

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author refers to earlier chapters in this same work when mentioning 'what we wrote in previous chapters of this discourse' regarding the four types of evil inclination. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:7 — The author quotes 'Behold, the bed of Solomon, sixty mighty men surround it' from Song of Songs 3:7 and interprets it kabbalistically to explain how the Levites, who represent the side of judgment (Gevurah), served as Temple guardians at night. | Cf. Priestly Blessing (Numbers 6:24-26) — The author notes that each order of verses contains sixty, corresponding to the number of letters in the Priestly Blessing, creating a mystical correspondence between these verses and the power to 'sweeten' harsh judgments. | Cf. Proverbs 17:22 — The phrase 'a stricken spirit dries the bone' alludes to Proverbs 17:22, which the author interprets as referring to the negative spiritual forces that can affect a person. | Cf. Zohar — The text contains multiple Zoharic terms and concepts such as 'sweetening judgments,' 'sixty lashes of fire,' 'masters of wailing,' and the kabbalistic interpretation of day and night as corresponding to Chesed and Gevurah. | Cf. Tractate Sotah — The author cites Tractate Sotah to support the claim that Torah study protects the world, establishing the superior spiritual value of Torah engagement. | Cf. Tractate Shabbat — The author quotes Tractate Shabbat chapter 18 stating that 'Torah study is greater than offering the daily sacrifices' to demonstrate the superiority of Torah study over ritual actions. | Cf. Tractate Berakhot — The author cites Tractate Berakhot chapter 1 stating that 'Prayer is greater than good deeds' to establish prayer's supreme value, even above righteous actions. | Cf. Leviticus 7:37 — The phrase 'This is the Torah for the burnt offering, for the meal offering, for the sin offering, etc.' alludes to Leviticus 7:37, which the author reinterprets to mean that Torah study encompasses and substitutes for all types of offerings. | Cf. Tikunei Zohar — The reference to 'as explained in the Tikkunim' when discussing how souls clothe themselves in different spiritual realities points to teachings from Tikunei Zohar about the soul's journey after death.

הן האדם היה לנפש חיה ותרגומו
לרוח ממללא[i] על ידי נפיחת
באפיו נשמת חיים ע״כ בקולו
קול עז לעורר בכח כ״ב חפצי
יוצר בראשית ה״ה כ״ב אותיות
תורתנו הכ״ב מקורות עליונות
דאינון י״ג תקוני דיקנא דאריך
ותשעה תקוני דזעיר[ii] הנפתחים
בחכמה ובינה ודעת וענפיהם.
ואריך נכלל בז״א. נוקביה
שהוא כלל כל האצילות ע״י
פה קדוש שהוא השושבין המיחד
וממתק ומבער הקוצים מן כרם
חמד. וממתק רומחי הגבורה
על דרך שאמרו בזהר פ׳
בשלח דף קנ״א ע״ב וסיהרא
אתלבשת ברומחי גבורה בשיתין
פולסי דנורא ועשרה דילה
דנחתי מסטרא דאימא עילאה.
ובדף ס״ה אמר דשיתין אינון
דבסחריניה דשבינתא דכתיב
ששים גבורים סביב לה.[iii] ואינון
שתין אתנהירו בתריסר תחומין
וכולהו נהירין ומטרוניתא כד
אתאחדא במלכא לא אעדיאו
מסחרנותא לעלמין. נמצא
כי עיני כל למעשה התחתונים
ישברו ורב גובריהו בכח דבורם

Man became a living soul, and its translation [in Aramaic] is “a spe[1]aking spirit” through the breathing into his nostrils the breath of life. Therefore, with his voice—a powerful voice—he can awaken the twenty-two desires of the Creator of the Beginning, namely the twenty-two letters of our Torah, the twenty-two supernal sources, which are the thirteen rectifications of the beard of Arich Anpin and the nine rectifications of Zeir Anpin that open through Wisdom, Understanding, Knowledge, and their branches. And Arich is included in Zeir Anpin, and its female aspect, which encompasses all of Atzilut, through the holy mouth, which is the attendant that unifies,[2] sweetens, and removes the thorns from the desirable vineyard. And it sweetens the spears of Gevurah, as they said in the Zohar, Parashat Beshalach, page 151b: “And the moon is clothed in the spears of Gevurah, with sixty lashes of fire and ten of her own[3] that descend from the aspect of the Supernal Mother.” And on page 65, it says that “there are sixty surrounding the Shekhinah, as it is written, ‘sixty mighty ones surround her.’ And these sixty are illuminated in twelve boundaries, and they all shine, and when the Matronita unites with the King, they never depart from surrounding her.” Thus we find that the eyes of all look hopefully to the actions of those below,[4] and their great power is in the strength of their speech

[1]This reflects the Aramaic translation by Onkelos of Genesis 2:7, highlighting that the defining characteristic of humanity is the power of speech. This concept becomes central to the passage's argument about the cosmic significance of human verbal expression.

[2]The metaphor of the mouth as an ‘attendant’ (shoshvin) comes from Jewish wedding traditions, where the attendant facilitates the union between bride and groom. Here, human speech serves as the attendant that facilitates the union of divine masculine and feminine aspects.

[3]These numbers have mystical significance in Kabbalah: the sixty corresponds to the sefirah of Gevurah (Judgment) and its extensions, while the ten represents the ten sefirot emanating from the Supernal Mother (Binah).

[4]This phrase reflects the kabbalistic principle that the upper worlds depend on human actions in the lower world, inverting the more common idea that humans are dependent on divine forces above. This establishes the cosmic significance of human religious practice.

[i]This references Onkelos's Aramaic translation of Genesis 2:7, where the Hebrew ‘living soul’ (nefesh chayah) is rendered as ‘speaking spirit’ (ruach memalela), emphasizing that human speech is the defining characteristic that distinguishes humans.

[ii]This refers to the thirteen attributes of divine mercy symbolized by the ‘beard’ of Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One) and nine attributes of Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced One) in Lurianic Kabbalah. Together they form the twenty-two channels through which divine energy flows.

[iii]A quotation from Song of Songs 3:7, which in its literal context describes King Solomon's bed guarded by sixty warriors, but is interpreted kabbalistically as referring to divine protective forces surrounding the Shekhinah (Divine Presence).

להכריע השמים[i][ii] to influence the heavens.

ולזה אמרה תורה לא תסור מן הדבר אשר יגידו לך. כי ההכרעה תלויה בתחתונים שיש בידם להקל ולהחמיר לטמא ולטהר לאסור ולהתיר בכח צד הטוב והרע הנכללים מהם. ואם רוב הב״ד יטמאו ישליטו בדבר ההוא כח החצונים וטמא טמא יקרא לו בין למעלה בין למטה ואם יטהרו ישליטו בדבר ההוא מן השמים הקדושה ויהיה טהור ומושפע ממנו ואולי זה יהיה טעם מה שאמרו בגמרא דיבמות פ״ו ובמס׳ ע״ג פ״ק חכם שטמא אין חברו רשאי לטהר כשטעה בשיקול הדעת. שמיד שהחכם הראשון אסר משיקול דעתו שאין לו לדיין אלא מה שעיניו שכלו רואות בזה השליט על אותו דבר כח החצוני ואין כח בחברו להתירו כי כבר נדחה ומחוץ למחנה מושבו. ומה שאמרו בחגיגה פ״ק עשה אזנך כאפרכסת וקנה לך לב מבין לשמוע דברי האוסרים ודברי המתירים וכו׳ כי כלם נתנו מרועה אחד ופרנס אחד אמרן

Therefore, the Torah said, "Do not deviate from the word that they tell you." For the decision lies with those below, who have the power to be lenient or strict, to declare impure or pure, to forbid or permit, through the power of good and evil elements included within them. If the majority of the court declares something impure, they cause external forces to dominate in that matter, and it will be called impure both above and below.[1] And if they declare it pure, they cause holiness from heaven to dominate that matter, and it will be pure and receive divine influence.

Perhaps this explains what they said in the Talmud, Yevamot chapter 6 and in Avodah Zarah chapter 1: "If a sage declared something impure, his colleague is not permitted to declare it pure when the first sage erred in judgment." For as soon as the first sage forbade something based on his judgment—since a judge has only what his intellect perceives—he caused external forces to dominate that matter, and his colleague lacks the power to permit it, for it has already been rejected and "outside the camp is its dwelling."

Regarding what they said in Chagigah chapter 1, "Make your ear like a funnel[2] and acquire an understanding heart to hear the words of those who forbid and those who permit, etc."—for they

[1] This phrase reflects the kabbalistic principle that human decisions in the earthly court have corresponding effects in the heavenly realms.

[2] This metaphor describes the ideal approach to Torah study—being open to hearing multiple interpretations rather than closing oneself to opposing viewpoints.

[i] This expresses the fundamental kabbalistic concept that human speech has the power to influence higher celestial realms, establishing a reciprocal relationship between human ritual actions and cosmic processes.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 2:7 — The passage begins with a reference to Genesis 2:7, where God breathes life into Adam's nostrils, making him a living soul. The author reinterprets this act through a kabbalistic lens, suggesting that this divine breath enables humans to activate cosmic forces through speech. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach — The author directly quotes the Zohar to establish how human speech activates celestial forces, particularly how the 'spears of Gevurah' (forces of judgment) can be sweetened or mitigated through proper speech. The reference to 'sixty mighty ones' alludes to Song of Songs 3:7-8, which the Zohar interprets as cosmic forces of protection. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:7-8 — The Zohar passage cited by the author reinterprets the sixty mighty men surrounding Solomon's bed as mystical forces surrounding the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). This establishes the cosmic significance of proper speech and intention, suggesting that human words below can activate protective divine forces above. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) — The passage references the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet as 'desires of the Creator,' echoing the teaching from Sefer Yetzirah that the letters were the divine instruments of creation. This establishes why human speech using these same letters has cosmic creative power.

מפי אדון כל המעשים ברוך הוא.
עיין דרוש זה בסוף מעירי שחר
שלנו דבד פליגי תרי אמוראי
אליבא דנפשייהו למה אמרי׳
בהו אלו ואלו דברי אלהים חיים
וזה מתבאר בגמ׳ דתענית פ״ב
ובסוטה פ״ג. ולהיות כח זה
בתחתונים להקל ולהחמיר בזה
נבין כוונת ר׳ יהושע באומרו נגד
הבת קול לא בשמים היא ואין אנו
משגיחין בבת קול ופי׳ נצחוני
בני נצחוני בב״מ פ״ד שודאי
כן הוא שהקב״ה רצון יראיו
יעשה וצדיק מושל יראת אלהים
ונוטה אל הבחינה שהצדיקים
מטין אותו כי אפי׳ ירצה לישב
על כסא דין ויהיו רוב הדברים
נוטין לטומאה או לחיוב הצדיק
מקימו מכסא דין ויושב על
כסא רחמים וכיוצא והכל טהור
וזכאי. ובדאמרי׳ בזהר פ׳
ויחי כי יצתה בת קול ואמרה
בורסייא דמריה אחידא בגדפוהי
דר״ש וכו׳. וראיה לזה ג״כ מה
שאמרו בחגיגה פ׳ אין דורשין
דשיליה רבה בר רב שילא
לאליהו מאי קעביד קוב״ה א״ל
קאמר הלכה משמא דכלהו רבנן
ומפומיה דר״מ לא קאמר א״ל
אמאי א״ל מפני שלמד מאלישע
א״ל ר״מ רימון מצא וגו׳ אמר
ליה השתא מאי קאמר וגו׳. הנה
כי דינו של אלישע היה תלוי
ועומד עד כי תצא ההכרעה מפי
התחתונים והסכימו להכרעת
רבה כי ר״מ היה חבוש ולא היה
יכול להתיר עצמו בטענתו עד
כי יהפך בזכותו אחד מחבריו
או מתלמידיו וכן דייק רש״י
שאמר עכשיו שמע לקולך שאומר
שמועה מפיו. ותוס׳ העמיקו
יותר באומרם כי בתחלה היה

all were given by one Shepherd,[1] and one Provider spoke them from the mouth of the Master of all deeds, blessed is He. See our discussion of this at the end of Me'irei Shachar, regarding why, when two Amoraim disagree according to their own reasoning, we say about them, "These and these are the words of the Living God." This is explained in the Talmud, Ta'anit chapter 2 and Sotah chapter 3. 60R

Since this power resides with those below to be lenient or strict, we can understand Rabbi Joshua's intention when he said against the Heavenly Voice, "It is not in heaven," and "We pay no attention to a Heavenly Voice." And the explanation of "My children have defeated Me" in Bava Metzia chapter 4 is that indeed, the Holy One, blessed be He, fulfills the desire of those who fear Him, and "the righteous rule through the fear of God."[2] He inclines toward the perspective that the righteous direct Him to, for even if He wishes to sit on the throne of judgment, and most matters tend toward impurity or guilt, the righteous lift Him from the throne of judgment and seat Him on the throne of mercy, and similarly, everything becomes pure and innocent. 65R 70R 75R

As they said in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, that a Heavenly Voice went forth and said, "The throne of his Master is held in the wings of Rabbi Shimon, etc." And proof of this is also what they said in Chagigah, in the chapter "Ein Dorshin," that Rabbah bar Rav Shila asked Elijah, "What is the Holy One, blessed be He, doing?" He replied, "He is stating legal rulings in the name of all the sages, but from the mouth of Rabbi Meir, He does not state them." Rabbah asked, "Why?" He answered, "Because he learned from Elisha." Rabbah said, "Rabbi Meir found a pomegranate, etc."[3] Elijah then said to him, "Now what is He saying, etc." 80R 85R 90R

Behold, Elisha's judgment was pending until a decision came from those below, and they agreed with Rabbah's decision. For Rabbi Meir was imprisoned and could not free himself with his own argument until one of his colleagues or disciples championed his cause. And Rashi was precise when he said, 95R

[1] A reference to God as the ultimate source of Torah, despite apparent contradictions in rabbinic interpretations.

[2] This is a reference to 2 Samuel 23:3, which is being interpreted here to suggest that righteous scholars have authority to influence even divine judgment.

[3] This references the Talmudic metaphor comparing Rabbi Meir to someone who finds a pomegranate—he ate the fruit (took the valuable teachings) and discarded the peel (rejected the problematic aspects of his teacher).

המקום בכעס על ר״מ ואח״כ
נתפיים בזכות שלמד רבה עליו
הנה שהברעות התורה וגם הרבה
מדיני הנשמות תלוי בתחתונים
וע״כ גזרו קדמונים מלהוציא
שם רע על המתים פן ח״ו יגבירו
בקטרוגם עליו הדינים. וזהו
גדול כחן של צדיקים שמהפכין
מדת הדין לרחמים ועל דרך זה
יהיה החטייה העליונה תלויה
למטה [i]

"Now He listens to your voice when you state a teaching in his name." And Tosafot delved deeper, saying that at first, God was angry with Rabbi Meir, but afterward was appeased through Rabbah's defense of him. 100R

Thus, the decisions of Torah and many of the laws concerning souls depend on those below. Therefore, the ancients decreed against speaking ill of the dead,[1] lest, God forbid, they strengthen the forces of judgment against him through their accusations. This illustrates the great power of the righteous, who transform the attribute of judgment into mercy, and in this way, the heavenly inclination depends on what happens below. 105R 110R

כי התורה אגודת עליונים עם
התחתונים.[ii] ובהיות נבואה
בישראל ע״י השתלשלות הדבור
שהיה בנביא. נמצא שכמעט כל
ישראל היו נביאים. ומה יעשה
התורה בכללה שכלה שמותיו
של הקב״ה[iii] כי לנו יש לדעת
שנבואת הנביאים היה פעמים
באותיות גדולות או בקטנות
ובאותיות לפופות[iv] ופעמים
כתיב ולא קרי קרי ולא
כתיב[v] וח״ו לא אירע זה מחמת

For the Torah is a bond between the celestial and terrestrial beings. And when prophecy existed in Israel through the emanation of speech that was in the prophet, it was as if almost all of Israel were prophets.[2] And what does the Torah as a whole accomplish, which is entirely composed of the names of the Holy One, blessed be He? For we must know that the prophecy of the prophets sometimes appeared in large letters, sometimes in small ones, sometimes in wrapped letters, sometimes written but not read, or read but not written. Heaven forbid that this occurred due to confusion or difficulty, as some have 115R 120R

[1] The text connects this prohibition to the kabbalistic belief that negative speech about the deceased can strengthen negative spiritual forces against them in the afterlife.

[2] The author is making a bold claim here about the democratization of prophecy through the Torah. This reflects the kabbalistic view that Torah study can produce experiences similar to prophecy, elevating ordinary Jews to near-prophetic status.

[i] Cf. Talmud Bava Metzia 59b — The passage references the famous Talmudic story of the 'oven of Akhnai' where Rabbi Joshua declared 'It is not in heaven,' rejecting divine intervention in halakhic decision-making and establishing human authority in legal interpretation. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The text cites this Zoharic passage to demonstrate how exceptional righteous individuals can influence divine judgment, with Rabbi Shimon being so spiritually elevated that God's throne is metaphorically held in his 'wings' or spiritual domain. | Cf. Talmud Chagigah 15b — The passage uses this Talmudic story to illustrate that even divine judgment awaits and responds to human interpretations and decisions, specifically how Rabbah bar Rav Shila's defense of Rabbi Meir influenced the heavenly treatment of his teachings.

[ii] This is a foundational kabbalistic concept that the Torah serves as a cosmic bond connecting the upper and lower worlds, functioning as a metaphysical bridge between heaven and earth.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic teaching that the entire Torah is composed of divine names, not just narratives and laws. This concept appears in the Zohar and was particularly emphasized by Rabbi Moses Cordovero and other Safed kabbalists.

[iv] The author refers to various scribal features of the Torah text, including oversized letters, miniature letters, and curved or wrapped letters, all of which are traditionally understood to contain mystical significance.

[v] These are technical terms in Masoretic textual tradition referring to words that are written in the Torah scroll but not read aloud, or words that are read aloud but not written in the scroll.

בלבול או טרחה כאשר כתבו
קצת. כי תורת ה׳ תמימה מכל
צדדיה. ולא לחנם נדו גדולי
האחרונים והורידו מהתיבה
אותו שלא רצה לקרות הקרי
כתיב כפי המסורת כאשר
הביא מהרר״י קאר״ו[i] בסוף
סי׳ קמ״א שכתב שכל תיבה
שהיא קרי כתיב הלכה למשה
מסיני[ii] שתהא נכתבת כמו שהיא
בתורה ונקרא בענין אחר. הנה
כי הכל היה מלמעלה שהיה
הדבור בפי הנביא מתהוה
בשכלו ובפיו ומתחוקק כאלו
רואה וצופה הדברים המתהוים
ומצטיירים כדכתיב וכל העם
רואים את הקולות ופי׳ רואים
את הנשמע. דוגמא זו כתב בעל
יפה מראה[iii] על מעשה דשמעון
הצדיק[iv] דאמרו בגמרין ובירו׳
אמר להון מן אמר לי דהוה בר
נש אני אומר הקב״ה הוה. וכתב
י״ל שאור השכינה הנראה לעין
על דרך ומראה כבוד ה׳ הוא
שנגלה לפניו כזקן ועד״ז בר׳
ישמעאל כ״ג[v] שמראה כבוד ה׳
הנראה נתגלה לפניו יושב על
כסא רם ונשא. והנביא בנבואתו
היה שומע הקול ונכתב לפניו
בטעמו ונקודותיו ואותיותיו
מנוקדות למעלה ובטעמיהן או
פעמים אותיות לפופות מזויינות בתגיהן וכיוצא וגם בעת שהנביא

written. For the Torah of the Lord is perfect in all its aspects. And it was not for nothing that later authorities excommunicated and removed from the pulpit one who refused to read the keri-ketiv according to tradition,[1] as Rabbi Joseph Karo brought at the end of section 141, where he wrote that every word that is keri-ketiv is a law given to Moses at Sinai, that it should be written as it is in the Torah but read differently. Indeed, everything came from above, as the speech in the prophet's mouth formed in his mind and on his lips, and was engraved as if he were seeing and observing things as they formed and took shape, as it is written, "And all the people saw the sounds," interpreted as "they saw what is heard."[2] A similar example was written by the author of Yefeh Mareh regarding the incident with Simeon the Righteous, as they said in our Talmud, and in the Jerusalem Talmud he said to them, "Who told me it was a man? I say it was the Holy One, blessed be He." And he wrote that one might say that the light of the Divine Presence visible to the eye, in the manner of "and the appearance of the glory of the Lord," is what appeared before him as an elder. And similarly with Rabbi Ishmael the High Priest, as the appearance of the glory of the Lord appeared before him seated on a high and exalted throne. And the prophet in his prophecy would hear the voice and it would be written before him with its cantillation and its vowel points, and its letters punctuated above with their cantillation marks, or sometimes wrapped letters adorned with their crowns and so forth. And also when the prophet would speak the prophecy to Israel, the prophecy would emerge from his mouth to [1] This refers to words in the Hebrew Bible that are written one way (ketiv) but read aloud differently (keri). The author views these not as textual errors but as divinely ordained features containing mystical significance.

[2] This synesthetic interpretation of Exodus 20:15 is common in Jewish mystical texts and describes the transcendent sensory experience at Sinai, where normal sensory boundaries dissolved.

[i] This refers to Rabbi Joseph Karo (1488-1575), author of the Shulchan Aruch, the most widely accepted code of Jewish law.

[ii] This phrase indicates a law considered to have been transmitted directly to Moses at Sinai, giving it the highest level of authority in Jewish tradition.

[iii] This refers to Rabbi Samuel Jaffe Ashkenazi (1525-1595), author of Yefeh Mareh, a commentary on the Jerusalem Talmud.

[iv] Simeon the Righteous was a High Priest during the Second Temple period, mentioned in Pirkei Avot as one of the last members of the Great Assembly.

[v] Rabbi Ishmael the High Priest, whose mystical vision of God enthroned is recorded in the Talmud and became a central text in early Jewish mysticism.

אומר הנבואה לישראל היתה הנבואה יוצאת מפיו להם באימה וביראה כאלו היתה השבינה עמו ממש. והיינו ונתתי דברי בפיו ודבר אליהם את כל אשר אצונו וזה צורך גבוה וצורך ישראל כדי שיהיה מצוי הקשר בין ישראל לאביהם שבשמים על ידי הנביא כאלו היו כלם נביאים. אמת מה נהדר כח הדבור הקדוש באדם: [i]

them with awe and fear,[1] as if the Divine Presence were literally with him. And this is the meaning of "And I will put My words in his mouth, and he shall speak to them all that I command him." And this serves both a higher purpose and Israel's need, so that the connection between Israel and their Father in heaven would be present through the prophet, as if they were all prophets. Truly, how majestic is the power of holy speech in man![2]

פרק י״א

Chapter 11

עוד יבין וידע האדם כי יש עתות ראוים לתורה ולתפלה ולייחודים ולמעשים טובים יותר מובנים מעת אחר. ולכן אל יתרשל אדם עצמו בבא מצוה לידו ויהיה רץ כצבי לעשות רצון קונו כי פעמים יפגע אדם בעניינים רוחניים מחמת מצוה שעשה או לסבה אחרת או להיות אז עת רצון יתגלה לפני מקור נשמתו למעלה וכמו כן יופיע למטה לפניו עת וזמן הראוי לאיזה יחוד עליון ויבא פעם אחת בידו אם יעשהו אז מוטב ואם לא ברוח יברח ממנו ולא ישוב אליו עד כמה דורות ולזה הבדיל משה שלש ערים ורמזו לזה באמרם עשה עד שאתה מוצא

A person should further understand and recognize that there are times more conducive to Torah study, prayer, unifications, and good deeds than other times. Therefore, one should not be lazy when the opportunity to perform a mitzvah presents itself, but rather run like a gazelle[3] to fulfill the will of his Creator. For sometimes a person may encounter spiritual matters due to a mitzvah he performed, or for another reason, or because it is then a time of divine favor when the source of his soul is revealed above, and similarly, a time and season suitable for some higher unification will appear before him below. If he seizes this opportunity when it comes to him, good; but if not, it will flee from him with the wind and not return until after many generations. This is why Moses set apart three cities[4] [of refuge], and the Sages alluded to this when they said, "Act while you find the opportunity and it is available to

[1] The Hebrew terms 'eimah' and 'yirah' have specific theological connotations, indicating not just psychological states but proper spiritual responses to divine manifestation.

[2] This concluding statement reflects the kabbalistic emphasis on the power of human speech as a creative force, mirroring divine creative speech. This concept underlies many Jewish mystical practices involving the recitation of divine names and sacred texts.

[3] This is an allusion to Pirkei Avot 5:20, which instructs one to 'be bold as a leopard, light as an eagle, swift as a deer, and strong as a lion to do the will of your Father in Heaven.'

[4] Refers to the cities of refuge that Moses established (Deuteronomy 4:41-43). The author interprets this action mystically as relating to seizing spiritual opportunities.

[i] Cf. Exodus 19:6 — The author draws on the idea that all Israelites had a direct connection to God, interpreting the priestly status mentioned in Exodus as a form of prophetic status. | Cf. Exodus 20:15 (20:18 in Christian Bibles) — The author uses this verse to illustrate that prophecy involved a sensory experience that transcended normal perception, where visual and auditory senses merged. | Cf. Yoma 39a-b — The author uses this story to support the idea that prophetic experiences involved actual visual manifestations of divine entities. | Cf. Berakhot 7a — This reference provides another example of direct divine visual experience, supporting the author's claims about the nature of prophecy. | Cf. Jeremiah 1:9 — The author cites this to demonstrate that prophetic speech is directly from God, not the prophet's own creation.

ומצוי בידך וזה סוד כי יקרא קן
צפור לפניך[i] וגו׳ וזה כלל גדול
והודעה רבה להיות כעבד ישאף
צל וכשכיר יקוה פעולת המצות
והיחודים ויהיה רץ למצוה קלה
כבחמורה ויפיק רצון מה׳. עיני
האדם לנוכח יביטו ועפעפיו
יישירו נגדו ומפחד החצוני יעשה
לו כנפים כנשרים וממנו ברוח
יברח וזהו גדר הירא חטא וידע
ויבין כי כפי המדרגה שהאדם
רוצה להתקדש עצמו בה ודרך
ההוא ח״ו שטן יעמוד על שמאלו
שכל דבר מתגבר נגד הפכו כמו
שראינו בחדה״ר[ii] ובנח וישראל
אחר שקבלו התורה שפסקה
מהם זוהמא וכן כשהיו מוכנים
ליכנס לארץ לשבור הקליפה
כאשר דרשנו למעלה כי ס״מ זה
דרכו בסל לו להשים כחותיו
נגד כחות הקדושה גם את זה
לעומת זה. וזהו שכל הגדול
מחבירו יצרו גדול הימנו. ואמרו
בר״מ בפ׳ נשא דף קנ״ד בזמנא
דאית לב״נ נשמה שפירא וכל
עובדין טבין יצר הרע אית ליה
קנאה ולזמנין שליט עלה בחובין
ומסאב לה ואתקריאת נבלה.
שכפי שהוא נכנס אל הקדושה
כן הנגדי עומד על שמאלו לנכח
הימין על כן אמרו בגמרין
שלשה צריכין חזוק. תורה.
ומעשים טובים. ודרך ארץ.
ואם יזכה להתחזק יטול חלקו

you." This is the secret of "If a bird's nest happens to be before you" (Deuteronomy 22:6), and this is a great principle and significant instruction to be like a servant who longs for shade and like a laborer who hopes for the reward of mitzvot and unifications, running toward a minor commandment as toward a major one, and obtaining favor from God.

A person's eyes should look straight ahead and his eyelids be directed before him, and out of fear of the external forces, he should make wings for himself like eagles[A] and flee. This is the definition of one who fears sin. He should know and understand that according to the level at which a person seeks to sanc-tify himself, Satan—Heaven forbid—will stand at his left, for everything strengthens against its opposit[1]e.
We have seen this with Adam, with Noah, with Israel after they received the Torah when impurity ceased from them,[2] and similarly when they were prepared to enter the land to break the shell [of evil], as we explained above. For Samael's foolish way is to position his forces against the forces of holiness, "this opposite that." This is why one who is greater than his fellow has a greater evil inclination.

And they said in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Naso, page 154: "When a person has a beautiful soul and all good deeds, the evil inclination becomes jealous, and sometimes it prevails over it through sins and defiles it, and it is called 'carcass.'" For just as one enters into holiness, so does the opposing force stand at his left opposite his right. Therefore, they said in the Talmud that three things require strengthening: Torah, good deeds, and proper conduct. If one merits to strengthen himself, he will take his portion and his fellow's portion in the

[A] Or: "and out of fear of negative spiritual forces, he should soar swiftly like eagles" — This alternative translation captures the metaphorical meaning more directly, emphasizing the rapid spiritual ascent rather than the literal 'making of wings.' It might be preferable in contexts where the practical spiritual instruction is emphasized over the literal imagery.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic principle that cosmic forces strengthen in opposition to each other, creating a spiritual battlefield where holiness and impurity contend in direct proportion.

[2] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Shabbat 146a) that when Israel stood at Mount Sinai, their spiritual impurity (zohama) ceased, though it returned after the sin of the golden calf.

[i] This verse (Deuteronomy 22:6) about a bird's nest is interpreted mystically as a metaphor for spiritual opportunities that present themselves unexpectedly. The author uses this biblical commandment, which speaks of finding a bird's nest by chance, to illustrate the concept of seizing spiritual moments.

[ii] This is an abbreviation for חייו דאדם הראשון (Chayei d'Adam HaRishon), referring to Adam, the first human.

וחלק חברו שבגן עדן כדאמרי׳
בחגיגה פרק ב׳ וכן הכתוב
55 אומר לכן בארצם משנה יירשו
וברשעים הנענים ליצרם כתיב
בהם ומשנה שברון שברם וכמה
פעמים זחלתי ואירא לנפשי פן
יסית אותי לבקש מצדקי למפטר
60 נפשי מההרגל יחודי פסוקים
אלו להיותם ממתקים הדינים
ומנגדים לכוונתו החפץ תמיד
להגדיל המדורה ואש וגפרית
מנת כוסו. ע״כ בכל דבר קדושה
65 יאחז צדיק דרכו ובצדקתו
יחזיק ולא ירפה והכוונה בכלל
תהיה בהם להמשיך השפע מבעל
הרצון המעולה על כל ברכה
ותהלה ויכוין כי בתקון מספר
70 ס׳ שהזכרנו בפ״ט עצמו עם
שרשי נשמות ישראל העולם
ממספר פרטי למספר גדול עד
ס׳ רבוא וכל ישראל חברים הם
במחצב נשמותיהם[i] כדכתיב כל
75 הנשמה תהלל יה. לשון יחיד. על
כן הם ערבים זה לזה. ובודאי
כי בהשתתף עצמו עם תקון
כלליותיהם של עם ישראל בזה
יגרום שפע והרוחה לישראל.
80 ויכוין עוד להפוך כל הכ״ח
עתים י״ד לרחמים וי״ד לדין
לרחמים כי אפי׳ בשעת כעסו
של הקב״ה זוכר את הרחמים
כדאמרי׳ בברכות ובפסחים
85 פ׳ כיצד צולין ולפחות מס׳ אי
אפשר שכן אמרו בתרומה עין
רעה אחד מששים ובפאה אין
פותחין מששים וגם אנחנו שתין
רהיטי נרהיט ממטה למעלה
90 להרים תקון כולל ופרטי
למיישרי דרכם. ובראש ששים
אלו באו שמנה פסוקי תורה נגד
תורה שבכתב ושבעל פה. דאינון

Garden of Eden, as we say in Hagigah, chapter 2. And so the verse states, "Therefore in their land they shall possess double" (Isaiah 61:7), while 55R regarding the wicked who yield to their inclination, it is written, "And with double destruction, destroy them" (Jeremiah 17:18).

How many times I have trembled and feared for myself lest it entice me to seek excuses to exempt my- 60R self from the practice of unifying these verses, which sweeten the judgments[1] and oppose its intention, which always desires to increase the bonfire with fire and brimstone as its portion. Therefore, in every matter of holiness, the righteous person should hold 65R firmly to his way, strengthen his righteousness, and not let go. The general intention in these [verses] should be to draw down divine flow from the Master of supreme Will, who is beyond all blessing and praise. One should intend that through the cor- 70R rection of the number sixty that we mentioned in chapter 9, along with the root souls of Israel, the world ascends from individual numbers to the great number of 600,000. All Israel are connected in the quarry of their souls, as it is written, "Let every soul 75R (in singular) praise the Lord" (Psalms 150:6)—in the singular. Therefore, they are guarantors for one another. And certainly, by associating oneself with the general restoration of the people of Israel, one causes abundance and relief for Israel. 80R

One should further intend to transform all twenty-eight times—fourteen to mercy and fourteen to judgment—into mercy, for even in the moment of the Holy One's anger, He remembers mercy, as we say in Berakhot and in Pesachim, chapter "How 85R do we roast." And less than sixty is impossible, for they said regarding terumah that a stingy eye [gives] one-sixtieth, and regarding peah [the corner of the field left for the poor], one doesn't begin with less than one-sixtieth. And we too shall run sixty courses 90R from below to above to raise a comprehensive and specific restoration to straighten their paths.

At the beginning of these sixty [verses] come eight

[1] Hamtakat ha-dinim (sweetening the judgments) is a key kabbalistic concept referring to the transformation of divine severity into mercy through proper spiritual practice.

[i] The phrase 'quarry of their souls' refers to the kabbalistic concept that all Jewish souls originate from a unified spiritual source, explaining their metaphysical interconnection and mutual responsibility.

אותיות הוי״ה ואדנו״ת[i] כי ה׳
95 בהיכל קדשו ויחדו הם תמים ולא
יתפרדו כנדרש לעיל בשם ספר
הזהר וכבר אמרנו שכל תורה
ותפלה ועבודה תהיה מגמת פניו
ליחד קול ודבור דאינון קב״ה
100 ושכינתיה והמחשבה בקריאה
להמשיך השפע מחכמה והתורה
נגד ת״ת זעיר. ואח״כ ימשיך
לזרועות זעיר שמתפשטות
בעולם הבריאה והם ג״כ שמנה
105 פסוקים לרמוז תמורת שמות אלו
הנזכרים. אח״כ ימשיך מתורה
לנביאים שהם נגד התפשטות
נצחים של זעיר בעולם היצירה
עולם דמטטרו״ן ומספרם ל״ג
110 ליחוד שלש שמות הוי״ה אהי״ה
אדנו״ת כי במילואם הם ל״ב
אותיות ועם הכולל הם ל״ג.
אח״כ ימשיך מתלים לשאר
כתובים שהם רמז למלכות
115 זעיר. המתפשטות בעולם העשיה
רוחנית וגשמית ומספרם אחד
עשר לסכור פי דוברי עתק. ה״ה
עשתי עשרה יריעות שנהבים
תוכיים וקופיים[ii] ומתנגדים לכל
120 שואל לעכב תפלתו ובקשתו
ח״ו. ובזה מלאך רע יענה אמן
בע״כ:[iii]

verses from the Torah, corresponding to the Written and Oral Torah, which are the letters of the di- 95R vine names YHVH and ADNY, for "the Lord is in His holy temple" (Psalms 11:4), and together they are perfect and will not be separated, as explained above in the name of the Zohar. And we have already said that all Torah, prayer, and divine ser- 100R vice should aim to unify voice and speech, which are the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence, and through reading with proper intention to draw divine flow from Wisdom, with the Torah corresponding to Tiferet of Zeir Anpin. Afterward, 105R one extends to the arms of Zeir Anpin that spread into the World of Beriah, and these are also eight verses alluding to the substitution of these aforementioned names. Then one extends from Torah to Prophets, which correspond to the extension of the 110R Netzach [attributes] of Zeir Anpin in the World of Yetzirah, the world of Metatron, and they number thirty-three for the unification of the three names YHVH, EHYEH, ADNY, for in their full spelling they contain thirty-two letters, and with the inclu- 115R sive number they are thirty-three. Then one extends from Psalms to the other Writings, which allude to the Malkhut of Zeir Anpin that extends into the World of Asiyah, both spiritual and physical, and they number eleven, to seal the mouths of those who 120R speak arrogantly. These are the eleven curtains of ivory, peacocks, and monkeys,[A] which oppose every

[A] Or: "These are the eleven veils representing superficial luxuries and distractions" — This

[i] These are two primary divine names in Kabbalah: the Tetragrammaton (יהוה) representing God's transcendent aspect and Adonai (אדני) representing God's immanent aspect. Their unification is considered a primary spiritual goal in kabbalistic practice.

[ii] This is an allusion to 1 Kings 10:22, which mentions exotic items brought to King Solomon: ivory, peacocks, and monkeys. Here these terms are used metaphorically to represent external forces that oppose spiritual elevation.

[iii] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Naso — The author cites this section of the Zohar to demonstrate how the evil inclination becomes jealous of those with beautiful souls and good deeds, supporting his argument about the spiritual opposition that arises as one reaches higher levels of holiness. | Cf. If a bird's nest happens to be before you — The author uses this verse as a mystical allusion to spiritual opportunities that appear unexpectedly before a person, which should be seized immediately since they may not return. | Cf. Therefore in their land they shall possess double — Used to show the spiritual reward for those who strengthen themselves against their evil inclination—they receive both their own portion and that of the wicked in the Garden of Eden. | Cf. And with double destruction, destroy them — Contrasted with the Isaiah verse to show the dual punishment awaiting those who yield to their evil inclination, creating a symmetrical concept of double reward versus double punishment. | Cf. Let every soul praise the Lord — The author notes that 'soul' appears in the singular form in this verse despite referring to all Israel, using this to demonstrate the mystical unity of all Jewish souls, which makes them spiritually responsible for one another. | Cf. the Lord is in His holy temple — Used to illustrate the unification of divine names (YHVH and ADNY), showing how they exist in perfect harmony and cannot be separated in proper kabbalistic understanding.

petitioner to delay his prayer and request, Heaven forbid. And through this, even the evil angel answers "Amen" against its will.[1] 125R

פרק י״ב

Chapter 12

זאת ועוד הנה שכרו אתו ופעלתו לפניו בזה כי נמצא חורז פעמים בכל יום מתורה לנביאים ומנביאים לכתובים וכו׳ והדברים שמחים בחמש גבורות שבבינה[i] מתמתקים על הדרך שמקבלים מיתוק מחמש ענויים של יוה״כ[ii] באופן שהחמשה ספירות שבמקומם הם מתלהטין ופועלים דין עתה בזה מתבסמין ומתהפכין לרחמים וחמשה מיני דמים שבאשה נדה[iii] ספו תמו ונשקעים בנוקבא דתהומא רבא[iv] ומשם יורדים במצולות ים. ואפי׳ מי שלא ידע לכוין לזה וביוצא בזה בהרגילו

Furthermore, behold his reward is with him and his recompense before him, for by doing this he weaves together each day passages from Torah to Prophets and from Prophets to Writings,[2] etc. The verses rejoice in the five powers of Binah[A] and are sweetened 5R in the manner that they receive sweetening from the five afflictions of Yom Kippur.[3] In this way, the five sefirot that in their place would burn fiercely and effect judgment are now sweetened and transformed into mercy, and the five types of blood of the menstruating woman are eliminated and sink into the opening of the great abyss,[B4] 10R from where they descend into the depths of the sea. Even one who does not know how to direct his intention to this or similar matters, by habitually reciting these verses, will 15R be diligent and rewarded, for he will merit studyalternative interpretation focuses on the metaphorical meaning of these exotic items (from 1 Kings 10:22) as representing worldly distractions rather than directly translating the Hebrew terms. It might be preferable in contexts where the symbolic meaning needs to be immediately clear to readers unfamiliar with these biblical references.

[A] Or: "five aspects of judgment rooted in Binah" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the connection to divine judgment (gevurot) while maintaining the reference to the sefirah of Binah.

[B] Or: "feminine aspect of the great deep" — This more literal translation preserves the gender aspect of the original term 'nukva' (feminine), which has kabbalistic significance in the cosmic balance between masculine and feminine forces.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that properly performed spiritual practices compel even opposing spiritual forces to acknowledge their efficacy and contribute to the cosmic harmony.

[2] The author uses the metaphor of 'weaving' (חורז) to describe the practice of moving through different sections of Scripture in a systematic way, suggesting this creates a spiritually beneficial pattern or fabric.

[3] The concept of 'sweetening' (מתמתקים) is central to Lurianic Kabbalah, referring to the transformation of divine judgment into mercy through proper spiritual practice.

[4] This vivid metaphor describes how negative forces are neutralized through proper spiritual practice, being removed from the cosmic system where they could cause harm.

[i] This refers to the five aspects of divine judgment rooted in the sefirah of Binah (Understanding), a kabbalistic concept where severity is ultimately rooted in a higher divine attribute associated with mercy.

[ii] The five 'afflictions' prohibited on Yom Kippur: eating/drinking, washing, anointing, wearing leather shoes, and marital relations. The author creates a mystical parallel between these ritual prohibitions and the sweetening of divine judgments.

[iii] The five types of menstrual blood categorized in rabbinic literature. In this kabbalistic context, they symbolize aspects of judgment or impurity that can be transformed through proper spiritual practice.

[iv] Literally 'the female/opening of the great deep.' In Kabbalah, this refers to a cosmic location where negative forces and judgments are contained and neutralized.

בהם יהיה זריז ונשכר כי יזכה
לשנות בכל יום תורה נביאים
וכתובים. וזמר בכל יום זמר
בכל יום. ופרש״י בפ׳ חלק
שר״ע היה אומר שזמרת האדם
בלימוד בעה״ז יגרום לו שיהיה
לעה״ב בשמחה ובשירים ואמרו
שם כל הקורא פסוק בזמנו מביא
טובה לעולם. ומי שאינו קובע
עתים לתורה בכל יום תמיד
ויוצא לפעלו ולעבודתו עדי
ערב. נא בלשון בקשה יהיו
אזניו קשובות לתחנתי ולבקשתי
אליו כעבד השואל מטו מאדוניו
יגמול נא חסד של אמת זו עם
נפשו כי ודאי גמולו ישולם לו
ולא ימושו מפיהו ומפי בניו
הסדרים אלו בכל יום וחשיך
תקון נפשך בהון וקדים תקון
נפשך ורהוטו צדיקי למעבד
רעותא דמרייכו. ואם להקל
מעליו יראה לאומרם בפעם אחת
או בהרבה פעמים בין ביום בין
בלילה כל עידנא זמנייהו ונפשו
בטוב תלין עם כחות הקדושה
וזרעו יירש ארץ כי יקיים מצות
והגית בו יומם ולילה ולא ימוש
ספר התורה מפיו ואז יצליח
את דרכיו ויהיה ח״ו מוטלת על
הבריות ואמרו בגמ׳ סנהדרין
פ״ט כל אדם שיש עליו חן
בידוע שהוא ירא שמים שנאמר
וחסד ה׳ מעולם ועד עולם על
יראיו. ובראש כלם יעשה נחת
רוח ליוצרו ויקרא וה׳ יענהו.
ודבר זה מצוה לאומרו בפני
עם הארץ כדאמר רבא במס׳
מנחות פרק י״א[i] על קריאת
שמע ערבית ושחרית דפליג על
ר״י שאמר משום רשב״י בהפך.
ובכל מקום שמצאתי און לי
להשלים כוונתי בלי שנות סדר ing Torah, Prophets, and Writings every day. And song every day, song every day. Rashi explained in chapter Chelek that Rabbi Akiva would say that a person's song in study in this world will cause him to 20R be in joy and songs in the World to Come. And they said there that whoever recites a verse at its proper time brings good to the world. And as for one who does not set fixed times for Torah study every day and goes forth to his work and labor until evening, 25R please—this is a language of request—let his ears be attentive to my supplication and my request to him, like a servant who asks a favor from his master.

Let him bestow this true kindness upon his soul, for certainly his reward will be paid to him, and these 30R arrangements will not depart from his mouth or from the mouth of his children every day. Seek your soul's rectification through them[1] and prioritize your soul's rectification, and let the righteous run to do the will of their Master. And if to make it easier for him- 35R self, he should see fit to recite them once or multiple times, whether by day or by night, whenever is their time, his soul will abide in goodness with the forces of holiness, and his seed shall inherit the land, for he will fulfill the commandment "you shall meditate on 40R it day and night" and "this book of the Torah shall not depart from your mouth." Then he will make his ways successful and will not be, God forbid, a burden upon others. They said in the Gemara Sanhedrin, chapter 9, "Any person who has grace upon him, it 45R is known that he fears Heaven, as it is said: 'And the kindness of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon those who fear Him.'" And above all, he will bring satisfaction to his Creator, and he will call and the Lord will answer him. And it is a commandment 50R to say this before the unlearned, as Rava said in Tractate Menachot, chapter 11, regarding the recitation of the Shema in the evening and morning, where he disagrees with Rabbi Yehuda, who said in the name of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai the opposite. And in 55R every place where I found strength to fulfill my intention without changing the order of verses from the way they are written in the Torah, Prophets, and

[1] The Aramaic phrase 'חשיך תקון נפשך בהון' conveys urgency, literally 'hasten the rectification of your soul through them,' emphasizing the importance of these practices for spiritual development.

[i] The author references a Talmudic dispute in Menachot 99b regarding minimum Torah study requirements, using this as support for his approach of making Scripture recitation accessible even to those who cannot study all day.

הפסוקים מהאופן הכתובים
בתורה נביאים וכתובים הנחתי
אותם על סדרם הנכון הערוך
וסדור בנבואה ורוח הקדש כי
בזה יפה כחם להפיק רצון כל
שואל כי בעת שבעמדם יעמודו
גם בהנשאם מעל הארץ ינשאו
האופנים לעומתם והבלא דפומא
מפיק הבלא עילאה ועל זה אמר
ר׳ זירא בשבת פ״ב אלמלא לא
אתינא אלא למשמע דא דיי. וכל
קול וקול יש לו שביל בפ״ע
כדאמרי׳ בבתרא פ״ק. ורוח
החיות עליון באופנים הכתובים
איש על מקומו בשלום ובזה יזכה
בכל יום לשפוך שיחו במספר
מפקד ק״כ פסוקים ששים בבקר
וששים לעתותי ערב למיתוק ק״כ
צירופי אלהים[i] ויכוין להבדיל
השלש אלהים קדושים שהם
בבינה וגבורה ומלכות מאלהים
אחרים ח״ו וזה סוד ההבדלה
להבדיל בין אור לחשך ונגה
באור תהיה. עוד ישים האדם
אל לבו בקריאתו פסוקים אלו
ומגמת פניו יהיה להכניע החצוני
לבל יהיה לו חלק ואחיזה ככל
האפשר לו עמו בעת זווגו עם
אשתו ומה טוב לרווקים להקדים
להתפלל בהם לעת מצא זו אשה
על דרך שאמרו לעולם יקדים
אדם תפלה כי ודאי צריך ערמה
גדולה ותחבולה רבה להנצל
מפח יקוש בעת ההולדה סוב נא
אחי בעיניך תביט דברי הגאון
קורדואיר״ו מה דבר בזה אשר
הובא מבעל ראשית חכמה בפרק
ט״ו משער הקדושה דף ר״פ.

Writings, I left them in their proper order, arranged and organized in prophecy and divine inspiration, for in this way their power is enhanced to fulfill the desire of all who ask. For when they stand, they stand, and when they are lifted above the earth, the Ophanim (angelic wheels) are lifted opposite them, and the breath of the mouth brings forth the supernal breath.[1] Concerning this, Rabbi Zeira said in Shabbat, chapter 2, "Had I come only to hear this, it would have been enough." And every voice and voice has its own path, as we say in Bava Batra, first chapter. And the spirit of the supernal Chayot (living creatures) is in the Ophanim described, each man in his place in peace. And through this, one will merit each day to pour out his meditation in the counted number of 120 verses—sixty in the morning and sixty in the evening hours—to sweeten the 120 permutations of Elohim.[2] And he should intend to distinguish the three holy Elohim which are in Binah, Gevurah, and Malkhut, from other gods, God forbid. This is the secret of Havdalah (separation): "to separate between light and darkness," and "brightness shall be as light." Furthermore, a person should set his heart, when reciting these verses, and the aim of his countenance should be to subdue the external forces[A] so that they have no portion or hold with him, as much as possible, during his marital union with his wife. And how good it is for bachelors to preface this with prayer at the time of finding a wife, as they said, "A person should always preface with prayer," for certainly great wisdom and much strategy are needed to be saved from the snare at the time of procreation. Please, my brother, look with your eyes at the words of the Gaon Cordovero, what he spoke about this, which was brought by the author of Reishit Chochmah in chapter 16 of the Gate of Holiness, page 280. And the thoughts of the heart of one who recites these verses, besides what is required

[A] Or: "and his intention should be to subdue the external forces" — This simpler translation may be clearer for readers unfamiliar with the poetic Hebrew expression, though it loses some of the imagery of directing one's face/concentration toward a spiritual goal.

[1] This describes the kabbalistic understanding that human speech, particularly when reciting sacred texts, activates corresponding spiritual forces in higher realms.

[2] The number 120 has special significance, corresponding to Moses' lifespan, and in this context to the complete set of possible permutations of the divine name associated with judgment.

[i] The 120 permutations of the divine name Elohim. In kabbalah, this name is associated with judgment, and its permutations represent different aspects of divine justice that can be 'sweetened' through proper spiritual practice.

ועשתונות לב הקורא פסוקים
אלו מלבד הנדרש בהם יכוין
לאשורו להבדיל הרעה ממנו
100 ומאשתו בעת הזווג וכזה וכזו
יכוין גם כן בסדר הבדלתו
במוצאי שבתות ובימים טובים
וכן בכל מצוה ויחוד וקדושה
וכמו כן במה שאין בה אלא
105 מצות פרוש מדבריהם ובזה
צדק ילין בתוכם ושפחה בישא
עליה תרנה אשפה להב חנית
וכידון[i] וכבר אמרו בתקונים דף
כ״א שהזווג דומה ליחוד שאדם
110 עושה בתפלת י״ח בחשאי ולכך
עקר הכל שיהיה מעשה חשאי
זה בצניעות וכסוי ושלא לאור
הנר בשום אופן ואמרו דאיש
ואשתו המתקדשים והמטהרים
115 אינון דוגמא ארבעת אנפין הוי״ה
בארבע גדפין אדנ״י בחבורא
חדא שהם שמנה אותיות משולבים
כנודע ובזה יזכה האדם לנפש
חי״ה: [ii]

of them, should be directed properly to separate evil from himself and from his wife during marital union. And in this manner he should also direct his intention in the order of his Havdalah at the conclusion of Sabbaths and festivals, and likewise in every commandment, unification, and sanctification, and similarly in that which contains only the rabbinical commandment of separation. Through this, righteousness will abide within them, and the evil maidservant will wail over it,[1] quiver of the blade of spear and javelin. And they already said in Tikkunim, page 21, that marital union is similar to the unification that a person makes in the silent Amidah prayer, and therefore the essence of everything is that this private act should be in modesty and covering, and not by the light of a candle in any way. And they said that a man and his wife who sanctify and purify themselves are like the four faces of the Tetragrammaton with the four wings of Adonai in one joining, which are eight interwoven letters, as is known.[2] And through this, a person will merit a living soul.

פרק י״ג

Chapter 13

וייראו ממערב את שם ה׳
וממזרח שמש את כבודו כי משלם

From the west they shall fear the name of the LORD, and from the rising of the sun His glory, for He repays

[1] This uses poetic imagery from kabbalistic literature contrasting the divine feminine presence (righteousness) with negative spiritual forces (the evil maidservant), depicting spiritual victory through proper practice.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic practice of combining and interweaving the letters of the divine names YHVH and ADNY (totaling eight letters) to create a unified spiritual force, symbolically paralleling the unification of male and female in sanctified marital relations.

[i] A poetic metaphor depicting the 'evil maidservant' (representing negative spiritual forces) wailing over weapons that have become ineffective. This imagery suggests that proper spiritual practice renders harmful forces powerless.

[ii] Cf. Five afflictions of Yom Kippur — The text refers to the traditional five prohibitions on Yom Kippur (eating/drinking, washing, anointing, wearing leather shoes, and marital relations) as a parallel to the five types of judgment that can be sweetened through proper spiritual practice. | Cf. Rabbi Akiva's teaching about song — The author cites Rabbi Akiva's teaching that one who studies Torah with joyful song in this world will merit songs in the World to Come, emphasizing the spiritual rewards of daily scriptural study. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's structured collection of verses — The author references the structured collections of verses (60 in the morning, 60 in the evening) which he has compiled earlier in the work, explaining their kabbalistic significance in sweetening divine judgments. | Cf. Reishit Chochmah by Rabbi Eliyahu de Vidas — The author refers readers to Rabbi Moses Cordovero's teachings on marital sanctity as quoted in Reishit Chochmah, connecting his own teachings to established kabbalistic authorities on the subject of proper intentions during marital relations. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author cites the Tikkunei Zohar's comparison between marital union and the silent Amidah prayer, emphasizing that both are sacred unifications requiring proper intention, modesty, and sanctity.

חמה לצריו גמול לאויביו וכובע
ישועה בראשו לקרבת אלהים
יחפצון. הנה בל״ב נתיבות
פליאות חכמה ברא יה ה׳ צבאות
את עולמו ומהם יורדים ש״כ
ניצוצי גבוראן כי עשרה פעמים
ל״ב הם ש״ך ומז״א באים לשם
א״ד שהיא נוקביה דזעיר וכן
שם א״ד ה׳ פעמים עולה שכ״ה.
ועוד יש דין אחר יורד מאימא
לגבורה ומשם לכ״י והם פ״ד
ניצוצים כלולים בחמש גבורן
שהם מנצפ״ך שעולה פ״ר ועם
ה׳ אותיות עולים פר״ה אדומה
פירוש הדינים שבאים מהאדום.
ופעמים הפ״ר דינים נכפלים
והם ב׳ פעמים פ״ר בגימטרי״א
קס״ת. שם אל שבי״ג מדות
בו תקון ג׳ עולמות של מארי
דינין. ועלמא קדמא״ה הוא
אלף אלפין מארי תריסין והב׳
נ״ז אלפין דרגין מארי דיבבא.
והג׳ צ״ו אלפין מארי דיללה.
וכן במדות יש ג׳ שמות אלהים
כנזכר בפרק הקודם אחד בבינה
ואחד בגבורה ואחד במלכות
ואלהים במלואו ורבועו עולה
אלף ולכן נקט אלף לכל אחד
מהם והראשון שבבי״ע כולל
שנים האחרים ומספר אלף אלפין
ירצה האלף הראשון לעולם של
מעלה דהיינו של בינה עצמה

wrath to His adversaries and recompense to His enemies, with a helmet of salvation on His head; those who desire closeness to God. 5R

Behold, with thirty-two wondrous paths of wisdom[A] YAH, the LORD of Hosts created His world, and from them descend 320 sparks of strength, for ten times thirty-two equals 320. From Zeir Anpin these come to the name AD,[1] which 10R is the feminine aspect of Zeir, and likewise the name AD multiplied by five equals 325. And there is yet another judgment that descends from Imma to Gevurah and from there to Keter-Yesod, comprising 84 sparks included in the five powers 15R of judgment,[2] which are the five final letters MaNTzaPaKh that equal 280, and with the five letters themselves they total 285, which is "red heifer," meaning the judgments that come from the re[B]d. Sometimes these 280 judgments are doubled, 20R and twice 280 equals 560 in gematria.

The divine name El within the Thirteen Attributes serves to rectify three worlds of judgment-masters. The first world consists of one thousand thousands of shield-bearers;[C3] the second consists 25R of fifty-seven thousands of levels of wailing-masters; and the third consists of ninety-six thousands of howling-masters. Similarly, there are three divine names Elohim in the Attributes, as mentioned in the previous chapter: one in Binah, one in Gevurah, 30R and one in Malkhut. The name Elohim in its full spelling and squared form equals one thousand, and therefore he specified one thousand for each of them. The first [world] in Beriah-Yetzirah-Asiyah includes [A] Or: "with thirty-two mysterious paths of wisdom" — The Hebrew term 'פליאות' can be translated as either 'wondrous' or 'mysterious'. While 'wondrous' captures the sense of awe, 'mysterious' might better convey the esoteric nature of these paths in kabbalistic tradition.

[B] Or: "red heifer, symbolizing judgments emanating from the red aspect" — This alternative emphasizes the symbolic rather than literal meaning and clarifies that 'the red' refers to a divine aspect (specifically Gevurah/Judgment) rather than just a color.

[C] Or: "masters of shields" — A more literal translation of the Aramaic term that preserves the construct form. Both translations are valid, but 'masters of shields' might better convey the hierarchical relationship implied in the original.

[1] The Hebrew abbreviation 'ז״א' refers to 'Zeir Anpin' (the Small-Faced One), a key concept in Lurianic Kabbalah representing the six sefirot from Chesed to Yesod as a unified divine configuration. The name 'א״ד' (AD) represents a divine name associated with the feminine aspect (Malkhut/Shekhinah).

[2] The term 'חמש גבורן' (five powers/judgments) refers to the five aspects of the divine attribute of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) corresponding to the five final Hebrew letters MaNTzaPaKh.

[3] The Hebrew terms 'מארי תריסין', 'מארי דיבבא', and 'מארי דיללה' (shield-bearers, wailing-masters, and howling-masters) are technical kabbalistic terms for different categories of angelic forces that execute divine judgment.

שהיא בריאה והב׳ אלפים לכללות יצירה ועשייה שבה. עלמא תניינא שבעה וחמשים אלפים דרגין דיבבא והוא נגד עולם היצירה שת״ת מקנן בה.

35R the other two, and the number "one thousand thousands" means the first thousand for the upper world, namely of Binah itself, which is Beriah, and the [other] two thousand for the entirety of Yetzirah and Asiyah within it.

וחשבון נ״ז הוא שם ההוי״ה שבת״ת ושם אל שהוא בכל עולם מהם לאכפיא הדינין כמ״ש באידרא שניהם יחד עולים נ״ז. עלמא תליתאה הוא צ״ו אלפים מארי דיללה זה מספר של עולם העשייה שמלכות מקננת בה ושם א״ד שבה ואל הוא התקון של כל אחד מהדינין אלו. ויחד עולים צ״ו ושם אלהים מתחלק לק״כ צרופים כפי הקדמת משנת ספר יצירה ה׳ אותיות בונות וכו׳. וכתיב בשלמה הנה מטתו ששים גבורים הנה עולה ששים כי הוא היה מכוין לחלק הק״כ אלהים הידועים ששים לבדם וששים לבדם שלא יהיה להם כ״כ התעוררות ולרמז זה גם אנחנו תקננו ששים פסוקים לחוד וששים לחוד בבקר ובערב וכן יברכך יאר ישא בהם ששים אותיות ותנן שש מעלות במקואות ואינון שש צירופי יה״ו. ויש י״ב צרופים של הוי״ה וי״ב צרופים של אלהים וי״ב של הוי״ה ממתקים הי״ב של אלהים כי כל אחד מצרופי אלהים כולל עשר מצרופיו וא״כ כל הוי״ה ממתקת עשר צרופי אלהים והנה י״ב הויו״ת ממתקים ק״כ צרופי אלהים ומתמתקים בכח מלוי שם ע״ב. שהוא הוי״ה ביודי״ן שבהסיר עקר ההוי״ה שהוא כ״ו ישאר מ״ו כי מעולם החסדים וכן הגבורות אינם נותנים מהעקר אלא מהמלוי. ושם אלהים שביודי״ן פירוש

40R The second world comprises fifty-seven thousand levels of wailing, corresponding to the world of Yetzirah where Tiferet nests.[1] The numerical value 57 is the sum of the divine name YHVH in Tiferet and the name El, which exists in each of these worlds to subdue the judgments, as stated in the Idra. Together they equal 57. The third world consists of ninety-six thousand howling-masters, which is the number of the world of Asiyah where Malkhut nests, along with the name AD within it. El is the rectification of each of these judgments, and together they equal 96.

55R The name Elohim divides into 120 permutations according to the introduction of Sefer Yetzirah: "Five letters build..." etc. Concerning Solomon it is written, "Behold his bed, surrounded by sixty mighty men."[2] "Behold" equals sixty, because he intended to divide the known 120 [permutations of] Elohim into sixty by themselves and sixty by themselves, so they would not have so much arousal. To allude to this, we too have arranged sixty verses separately in the morning and sixty separately in the evening. Likewise, [the priestly blessing] "May He bless you," "May He shine," "May He lift" contains sixty letters. And we have learned there are six levels in ritual baths, corresponding to the six permutations of YHV.[3]

70R There are twelve permutations of YHVH and twelve permutations of Elohim, and the twelve [permutations] of YHVH sweeten the twelve of Elohim. For each permutation of Elohim includes ten of its permutations, thus each YHVH sweetens ten permutations of Elohim. So twelve YHVHs sweeten 120 permutations of Elohim, and they are sweetened through the power of the full spelling of the 72-Name, which is YHVH spelled with Yuds.

[1] The phrase 'ת״ת מקנן בה' uses the metaphor of 'nesting' to describe how the divine attributes (sefirot) manifest within different spiritual worlds. This imagery comes from the Zohar and Tikkunei Zohar.

[2] The Hebrew doesn't exactly match the biblical text of Song of Songs 3:7 but paraphrases it. I've provided a translation that conveys the intended reference while acknowledging the variation.

[3] The Hebrew letters Yud-Heh-Vav (יה״ו) can be arranged in six different ways, and these permutations are considered to have spiritual significance corresponding to the six levels of ritual purity in Mishnah Mikvaot.

שהה״א היא ביו״ד כזה ה״י
ממתק בסוד כ״ו שהוא הוי״ה
ומתלבש ביו״ד של מטטרו״ן
המנהיג העולם ויש אלהים
בההי״ן כפול פשוט משולש
מרובע. שהם מ״א אותיות וי״ה
שהוא בבינה והוי״ה שהוא בת״ת
שלה שעולים מ״א ממתקים המ״א
אותיות של אלהים שהוא דין וזה
נקרא אחורים של אלהים והם
כתרים בפני הפורענות המנגדים
הקליפות המביאות האדם לידי
מחשבות רעות ועבירות ר״ל וכן
אלהים בגימטרי״א כו״ס ומיתוק
הק״כ צרופים נאמר כוס ישועות
אשא ואז בשם ה׳ אקרא כי ה׳
הוא האלהים והאלהים הוא ה׳
ושני דודים ממתקים ובחיותם
תואמים מלמטה יחדו הם תמים
אל ראשו להחיות רוח שפלים
ולב נדכאים אשר כל היום וכל
הלילה תמיד לא יחשו המזכירים
את ה׳. ואל דמי להם בשירי
חדש בפסוקי דזמרה לאלהינו
ושמחת עולם תהיה להם כי בית
תפארתו יפארו: [i]

When the root of YHVH, which is 26, is removed, 46 remains, for [it comes] from the world of kindnesses; similarly, the powers of judgment do not give from the root but from the full spelling.

The name Elohim spelled with Yuds (meaning the Heh is spelled with Yud, like this: HY) is sweetened through the mystery of 26, which is YHVH, and clothes itself in the Yud of Metatron who governs the world. There is also Elohim with Hehs, doubled, simple, tripled, and squared, comprising 41 letters. The divine names YH in Binah and YHVH in its Tiferet, which together equal 41, sweeten the 41 letters of Elohim, which is judgment. This is called the "back" of Eloh[1]im, and they serve as a shield against calamity,[A] opposing the negative forces that bring a person to evil thoughts and sins, God forbid. Similarly, Elohim in gematria equals KOS [cup], and concerning the sweetening of the 120 permutations it is said, "I will lift up the cup of salvation," and then "I will call upon the name of the LORD," for "the LORD is Elohim and Elohim is the LORD." The two beloved ones sweeten each other,[2] and when they are paired from below, they are perfect at its head, reviving the spirit of the lowly and the heart of the contrite,[B] who throughout the day and night are never silent, those who invoke the LORD.[3] Give [A] Or: "as a protective barrier against punishment" — The term 'כתרים' specifically refers to a small shield or buckler, and 'פורענות' can more specifically mean divine punishment rather than general calamity. This alternative is more precise though less elegant.

[B] Or: "to give life to the spirit of the humble and the heart of the broken" — This alternative captures the same meaning but with slightly different nuances of the Hebrew terms 'שפלים' (lowly/humble) and 'נדכאים' (contrite/broken). Both are valid translations of this biblical allusion to Isaiah 57:15.

[1] The concept of 'אחורים' (back/posterior) in Kabbalah refers to the external aspect of a divine name, often associated with judgment, as opposed to the 'פנים' (face/interior) which represents mercy. This term has complex meanings in different kabbalistic systems.

[2] The phrase 'שני דודים ממתקים' uses the terminology of lovers from Song of Songs to describe the relationship between divine names or attributes. The 'sweetening' (מיתוק) of judgments is a central concept in Kabbalah, referring to the transformation of harsh judgment into mercy.

[3] This phrase alludes to Isaiah 62:6-7, which refers to watchmen on Jerusalem's walls who give the them no rest, with new songs in the verses of praise to our God, and eternal joy shall be theirs, for they shall adorn His house of glory.

[i] Cf. Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) — The text cites Sefer Yetzirah's teaching about the 32 paths of wisdom as the basis for its mystical numerology, establishing divine creation as operating through specific numerical and letter combinations. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:7 — The text reinterprets this verse kabbalistically, seeing the sixty warriors as representing Solomon's mystical ability to divide and control the 120 permutations of the divine name Elohim. | Cf. Idra Rabba (Great Assembly) — The text references the Idra's teachings about divine names and their power to subdue judgments, showing how the author integrates Zoharic concepts into his mystical system. | Cf. Numbers 6:24-26 — The text notes that these three verses contain sixty letters total, connecting this biblical blessing to the mystical system of sixty-fold divisions that control divine judgment. | Cf. Psalm 116:13 — The verse is reinterpreted kabbalistically, with the 'cup' (KOS) being connected through gematria to the divine name Elohim, suggesting that ritual acts can 'sweeten' or transform divine judgment.

פרק י״ד

Chapter 14

להיות האדם בנוי ומשוכלל בדוגמא העליונה אשר הוא קדוש ומשרתיו טהורים יזהר גם הוא להיות טהור בגופו ובאבריו באשר הוכחנו בח״ב מזה המעבר יבק כי בזה גורם לאכפיא רוחא דמסאבא[i] בנדרש בפ׳ תרומה דף קנ״ה. ברם הטהרה האמיתית היא טהרת הנפש לקבוע עתים לתורה ביום ובלילה ולא ישנה תפקידתו אפי׳ יהיה סבור להרויח ממון הרבה באותה שעה שהיא מטהרת הדבקים בה טהרה גמורה ומשיבה את הנפש לחוטא כדכתיב תורת ה׳ תמימה משיבת נפש. ויסמוך תורתו לתפלתו ליחד תפלה מלכות בתורה תפארת[ii] שאחר שנתקנה בתקוניה ומזדמנת לקראת בעלה צריך להמשיך

Since a person is built and perfected in the supernal image,[A] where He is holy and His attendants are pure, one should also be careful to maintain purity in one's body and limbs,[1] as we have proven in Part 2 of this Ma'avar Yabok, for this causes the suppression of the spirit of impurity,[B] as expounded in Parashat Terumah, page 155. However, true purification is the purification of the soul by establishing fixed times for Torah study day and night. One should not change this appointed schedule even if one thinks one could earn much money during that time, for Torah purifies those who cleave to it with complete purification and restores the soul of the sinner, as it is written, "The Torah of the LORD is perfect, restoring the soul."

One should connect one's Torah study to one's prayer, thereby unifying prayer (which corresponds to Malkhut) with Torah (which corresponds to Tiferet).[2] For after she [Malkhut] has been prepared with her adornments and readies herself to meet her husband, one must draw her husband, Tiferet, to her

[A] Or: "As the human being is constructed and perfected according to the supernal pattern" — This alternate translation emphasizes the concept of humans being 'patterned' after divine structures rather than simply being an 'image,' which better conveys the kabbalistic concept that human form mirrors cosmic structures.

[B] Or: "for through this one causes the subjugation of the spirit of impurity" — The Aramaic term 'אכפיא' has the specific technical meaning in Kabbalah of 'subjugation' or 'forcing down,' which is slightly stronger than 'suppression' and better conveys the active spiritual warfare implied in the text.

LORD no rest. The author adapts this to describe those who continually recite divine names and praises.

[1] The concept of bodily purity here goes beyond basic hygiene to include ritual purity according to Jewish law (taharat ha-guf), and is connected to the belief that the physical body is a vessel for divine energies.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic view that human religious activities create cosmic effects, specifically the unification of divine attributes. Prayer is associated with Malkhut (the divine feminine), while Torah study connects to Tiferet (the central masculine attribute), and their unification represents cosmic harmony.

[i] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar refers to the spiritual practice of subjugating or forcing down the 'spirit of impurity'—negative spiritual forces that can attach themselves to a person through ritual impurity or sin.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic concept of unifying divine attributes through human actions. Prayer corresponds to Malkhut (the divine feminine/Kingdom), while Torah study corresponds to Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony, the central divine masculine attribute). Their unification represents cosmic repair.

לה בעלה ת״ח ע״י יסוד וסוד
אותיות התורה המרובעות הוא
שפע הבינה[i] שבה ארבע יסודות
ומה מאד מסוגל לקרא פסוקי
הפרשה עם התרגום למתוק
קליפת נגה[ii] בנזכר למעלה
אחר התפלה מיד וכל העוסק
בתורה בעה״ז זוכה לאשתדלא
בה לעלמא דאתי[iii] עיין בחלק
דף קפ״ה ויערב לך. [iv]

through Yesod.[1] The secret of the square-shaped letters of the Torah represents the flow from Binah, which contains the four elements.[A] It is especially beneficial to read the weekly Torah portion with its Aramaic translation immediately after prayer to sweeten the kelipat nogah[2] (the luminous shell), as mentioned above. And whoever engages in Torah study in this world merits to delve into it in the World to Come, as explained in the Zohar, page 185, and it will be pleasing to you.

וילמד תורה לבניו דשכרו
גדול ואם אינו יכול ידבק
בלומדיה ויחזיקם דכתיב עץ
חיים היא למחזיקים בה. ותמכיה
מאושר.[v] וכתוב בזהר פ׳
וישלח דף קע״א ומאן דלעי
באורייתא ולית מאן דסמיך
ליה ולא אשתכח מאן דאטיל
מלאי לביסתיה לאתקפא. על
דא אורייתא משתכחא בכל

He should teach Torah to his sons, for the reward is great, and if he cannot, he should cleave to those who study and support them, as it is written, "It is a tree of life for those who grasp it, and its supporters are fortunate." It is written in the Zohar, Parashat Vayishlach, page 171: "One who engages in Torah study but has no one to support him, and there is no one found who puts provisions in his purse to strengthen him—because of this, Torah is found in every generation, but the strength of Torah

[A] Or: "The mystical significance of the Torah's square letters is the divine influx from Binah, in which are contained the four elemental foundations" — This alternative more explicitly conveys the kabbalistic concept that the physical shape of Hebrew letters contains cosmic significance, and clarifies that 'יסודות' refers specifically to the four primordial elements (earth, air, fire, water) which are foundational in kabbalistic cosmology.

[1] In the kabbalistic structure of divine attributes (sefirot), Yesod (Foundation) is the channel that connects Tiferet to Malkhut, transmitting divine flow between them. This is often associated with the phallus in anthropomorphic descriptions of the divine structure.

[2] In Lurianic Kabbalah, 'sweetening' (מיתוק) refers to the process of transforming potentially negative spiritual forces into positive ones. Kelipat nogah is unique among the 'shells' or 'husks' that conceal divinity because it contains a mixture of good and evil and can be elevated through proper ritual actions.

[i] The square shape of Hebrew letters is seen as cosmically significant in Kabbalah. The 'squareness' represents stability and perfection, and is understood to channel divine influx from Binah (Understanding), the third and feminine aspect of the intellect in the divine emanations.

[ii] Kelipat nogah (the 'luminous shell') is a unique category in Lurianic Kabbalah—a neutral spiritual force that can be elevated to holiness or degraded to impurity. 'Sweetening' it refers to the mystical process of transforming and elevating it to holiness.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase expresses the kabbalistic belief that Torah study in the afterlife continues at a higher level for those who devoted themselves to it in this world, suggesting a continuity between intellectual endeavors in this world and the next.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The author cites this Zohar passage to establish textual authority for the claim that bodily purity has cosmic effects in suppressing negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Psalms 19:8 — The verse is used to support the claim that Torah study has transformative effects on the soul, particularly for repentant sinners. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part 2 — The author references his own earlier discussion of bodily purity, creating internal continuity between the sections of the book and showing how these discourses build on each other. | Cf. Zohar — This reference reinforces the eternal value of Torah study, suggesting that intellectual and spiritual achievements in this world create corresponding realities in the afterlife.

[v] This quote is from Proverbs 3:18, continuing the metaphor of Torah as a 'tree of life' and emphasizing that those who support Torah scholars are 'fortunate' or 'blessed.'

דרא ודרא ואתחלש תוקפא
דאורייתא כל יומא ויומא וכו׳
ואמר עוד וכד אינון סמכין
חלשין גרמין לאתקפא ההוא
דלית ליה שוקין ורגלין לקיימא
עלייהו שהוא כח הנחש הקדמוני
ונחש עקלתון.[i] ובשבת פרק ט״ז
אמר לא חרבה ירושלים אלא
בשביל שבזו בה תלמידי חכמים
שנאמר ויהיו מלעיבים במלאכי
אלהים.[ii] ועון זה ג״כ גורם כי
ישראל היו גולים ממקומם כמה
דתנינן בירו׳ דחגיגה ובכמה
מקומות בגמרין תני רשב״י אם
ראית עיירות שנתלשו ממקומן
בארץ ישראל דע שלא החזיקו
בשכר סופרים ומשנים מ״ט על
מה אבדה הארץ וגו׳ ויאמר ה׳
על עזבם את תורתי[iii] וספריא
ומתניא אינון נטורי קרתא
וויתר הקב״ה וכו׳ ולא וויתר על
ביטול תורה ומאיסתא בה ואמרו
בירו׳ פרק אלו נאמרים עתיד
הקב״ה לעשות צל לבעלי מצות
בצלן של בעלי תורה דכתיב כי
בצל החכמה בצל הכסף ואומר
עץ חיים היא למחזיקים בה
ואמרו בירו׳ דמכות על יואב
דכתיב ביה ויקבר בביתו במדבר
אין תימא שהיה בוזז ומאכיל
חכמים ותלמידיהם שבח שבחים
זה לו שלבן במותו נעשו ישראל
כמדבר[iv] ובמדרש שיר השירים
ואמרו מה אגוז זה משמר את
פריו כך עמי הארץ שבישראל
עליהם להחזיק בדברי תורה ואז
זוכה ויושב בישיבה של מעלה כדאמרי׳ בפסחים פרק מקום

weakens every day." And it says further, "When these supports are weak, they cause to be strengthened that which has no legs or feet to stand upon," which is the power of the primordial serpent and the twisted serpent. And in Shabbat, chapter 16, it says: "Jerusalem was destroyed only because they despised the Torah scholars in it, as it is said: 'They mocked the messengers of God.'" This sin also causes Israel to be exiled from their place, as we learn in the Jerusalem Talmud of Hagigah and in several places in our Gemara. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai taught: "If you see towns uprooted from their place in the Land of Israel, know that they did not support the scribes and teachers. Why? 'For what reason did the land perish?' 'And the Lord said, because they have forsaken My Torah.'" And the scribes and teachers are the guardians of the city, and the Holy One, blessed be He, forgave, etc., but He did not forgive the neglect of Torah and contempt for it. They said in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "These Are Recited": "In the future, the Holy One, blessed be He, will make a shadow for those who perform commandments in the shadow of those who study Torah, as it is written: 'For in the shadow of wisdom is the shadow of money,' and it says: 'It is a tree of life for those who grasp it.'" And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud of Makkot regarding Joab, about whom it is written: "And he was buried in his house in the wilderness"—if you suggest that he would plunder and feed Torah scholars and their students, this is praise for him, for at his death, Israel became like a wilderness. And in the Midrash on the Song of Songs, they said: "Just as this nut preserves its fruit, so the common people of Israel must support the words of Torah," and then one merits to sit in the heavenly academy,[1] as we say in Pesachim, chapter "The Place Where They Practiced," regarding Shimon, the brother of Azariah.

[1] This reflects the Jewish belief that those who support Torah scholars share in their heavenly reward, with the ultimate honor being participation in the celestial academy or yeshiva.

[i] This is a metaphorical reference to evil forces or the 'Other Side' (Sitra Achra) in kabbalistic terminology. The primordial serpent represents the original tempter in Eden, while the 'twisted serpent' (nachash akalaton) appears in Isaiah 27:1 as a symbol of cosmic evil.

[ii] From 2 Chronicles 36:16, describing how the people mocked God's messengers (understood here as Torah scholars) before the destruction of the First Temple.

[iii] From Jeremiah 9:12, where God explains the reason for the land's destruction.

[iv] The text is interpreting the verse about Joab's burial (1 Kings 2:34) to suggest that the reference to 'wilderness' indicates that after Joab's death, Israel became desolate like a wilderness because he had been supporting Torah scholars.

שנהגו בשמעון אחי עזריה.[i] ואי
80 לא דמסתפינא אמינא כי עון זה
הנמצא בינינו שלא להחזיק ידי
לומדי תורה הוא גרמא בנזקין
כי שכחת התורה בעונות נראית
יותר בגלילות איטליאה מכל
85 שאר מחוזות[ii] לא כן בארצות
המערב וגם לא בארץ אשכנז כי
יש שם ישיבות יושבי על מדין
ומלמדים תורה ברבים ישמרם
ה׳ ויעלם גם עלה אבל במחוז
90 הלז וידל ישראל מאד וזה לפי
שאנשי חסד נאספים וכובשים
פניהם בקרקע ואינם מספקין
לת״ח אך מדחים אותם מעליהם
הרבה מהם. ומי שיש לו בת והוא
95 אמוד בנכסים מבקש להשיא
אותם עם בן עשיר מיד נותן עיניו
בממון ומשיא בתו לממון לא
לאיש כי אינו משגיח אם הוא בור
וגולם ואפי׳ אם לא תהיה יראת
100 ה׳ על פניו אומר ימים ידברו
בו וישוב מדרכו ומרגלא בפיהם
הממון מכסה הבושת.[iii] ובת
ת״ח עני תשב עד שתלבין ראשה
לא כן עושים בארץ אשכנז
105 וגלילותיה כי משיאים בנותיהם
לת״ח ולמשפחות מיוחסות ומי
שחננו ה׳ זהב וכסף ויש לו

And if I were not afraid, I would say[A] that this sin found among us—not supporting the hands of Torah 80R scholars—is the cause of damages, for the forgetting of Torah due to sins is more evident in the regions of Italy than in all other provinces.[1] It is not so in the lands of the West, nor in the land of Ashkenaz, for there are academies there with those who sit in 85R judgment and teach Torah publicly—may God protect them and elevate them ever higher. But in this province, Israel has become very impoverished, and this is because compassionate people are gathered and bury their faces in the ground,[B] and they do not 90R provide for Torah scholars, but rather, many of them push them away. And one who has a daughter and is wealthy seeks to marry her to a rich man's son—immediately he sets his eyes on money and marries his daughter to money, not to a man, for he does 95R not care if the man is ignorant and uncultured, and even if the fear of God is not upon his face,[C] he says,
"Days will speak to him, and he will turn from his ways." And it is common in their mouths to say,
"Money covers shame." And the daughter of a poor 100R
Torah scholar sits until her head turns white.

They do not act this way in the land of Ashkenaz and its regions, for they marry their daughters to Torah scholars and to distinguished families. And one who has been blessed by God with gold and sil- 105R ver and has a daughter to marry goes to the head of the academy so that he will choose for him one of [A] Or: "were I not apprehensive, I would declare" — This is a rabbinic expression indicating that the author is about to make a bold or potentially controversial statement. An alternate translation might better capture the formal rhetorical nature of this expression.

[B] Or: "and bow their faces to the ground" — This metaphorical expression could refer to people who are ashamed or unwilling to face a problem directly. The alternate translation preserves the image while being slightly less literal.

[C] Or: "and even if he shows no reverence for God" — This idiomatic expression refers to piety and religious observance. The alternate translation conveys the meaning in more contemporary English.

[1] This passage provides important historical context about the state of Torah scholarship in early modern Italy as perceived by the author. He is drawing a contrast between Italy, where he sees Torah learning declining, and the Ashkenazi communities (Germany and Eastern Europe), which he views as having stronger support systems for scholars.

[i] This refers to a Talmudic discussion (Pesachim 49b) about Shimon who was supported by his brother Azariah so he could study Torah. The Talmud credits Shimon's Torah as belonging partly to Azariah, showing the merit of supporting Torah scholars.

[ii] This reflects the author's perspective on the decline of Torah study in Italy compared to other Jewish communities. This is significant historical evidence of the author's view of Italian Jewish culture in his time.

[iii] A saying that appears to have been common in the author's time, suggesting that wealth can cover up or compensate for shameful qualities in a potential son-in-law.

בת להשיאה הולך אצל ראש
ישיבה למען יברור לו אחד מן
התלמידים הגונים ושמובטח בו
שיורה הוראות בישראל ואליו
הוא נושא נפשו ומהנהו ומרוממו
ובזה הם מעמידים תורה
בארמנותם לא כאלו הכופתים
בנותיהם ונותנן אותן לפני ארי
המכים ובועלין ואין להם בושת
פנים על זה ידוו כל הדווים
איך נהיתה הרעה הזאת בארצות
אלו ובזה חכמת סופרים תסרח
ואנשי חיל מתמעטים ועל מי יש
לנו להסמך אם לא על אבינו
שבשמים שיראה ויפקוד גפן זאת
וישים העקוב למישור. [i] the worthy students who is assured to teach rulings in Israel, and to him he lifts his soul and benefits him and elevates him. In this way, they establish Torah in their palaces, not like those who bind their daughters and give them before lions[1] who strike and have sexual relations with them and have no shame. For this, let all who grieve, grieve—how has this evil happened in these lands? Because of this, the wisdom of scribes rots, and men of valor decrease,[2] and upon whom do we have to rely if not upon our Father in heaven, who will see and visit this vine and make the crooked straight.[3]

110R 115R

ע״כ כל בעל נפש יחוש לעצמו
להדבק בטובים ולישא בת
ת״ח. [ii] ואמרו ביומא פ״ז אם
רואה אדם שתורה פוסקת
מזרעו ישא בת ת״ח שנאמר
אם יזקין בארץ שרשו וגו׳
מריח מים יפריח ואין מים אלא
תורה [iii] שנאמר וגו׳ ובקדושין
פ״ק כל הנושא אשה שאינה הוגנת
לו אליהו מכריז עליו אוי לו

Therefore, every spiritual person should be concerned for himself to cleave to good people and to marry the daughter of a Torah scholar. They said in Yoma (Chapter 7): If a person sees that Torah is ceasing from his offspring, he should marry the daughter of a Torah scholar, as it is said, “Though its root grows old in the earth [and its stump dies in the ground, at the scent of water it will bud and put forth branches like a young plant]” (Job 14:8-9). And “water” refers only to Torah, as it is

120R 125R

[1] This is a harsh metaphorical criticism of Italian Jewish families who marry their daughters to wealthy but unlearned men. The author portrays these uneducated husbands as dangerous ‘lions’ who will harm their wives spiritually if not physically.

[2] The term ‘men of valor’ (anshei chayil) refers to accomplished Torah scholars rather than physical warriors, continuing the author’s lament about the decline of scholarship in his community.

[3] The passage concludes with a plea to God using biblical language that echoes Isaiah 40:4, expressing hope that divine intervention will correct the social problems the author has described.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayishlach — The author quotes this Zohar passage to establish his theological argument that inadequate support for Torah scholars doesn’t merely neglect a positive duty but actively empowers negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Hagigah — The author cites rabbinic precedent connecting the physical destruction of communities with their failure to support Torah scholarship, reinforcing his argument about Italian Jewish communities. | Cf. Midrash on Song of Songs — This reference uses natural imagery to argue that just as a shell protects the fruit, the laity (non-scholars) should protect and support scholars for the spiritual health of the community. | Cf. Talmud Pesachim — The author invokes this classic Talmudic example of a scholar supported by his merchant brother, where both received credit for the Torah learning, to emphasize the spiritual benefits that accrue to those who support scholars.

[ii] The recommendation to marry a daughter of a Torah scholar is a recurring theme in rabbinic literature, based on the belief that Torah learning and righteousness can be transmitted through family lineage, especially maternal influence.

[iii] This is interpreting the verse from Job 14:8-9 metaphorically. The full verse describes a tree that, though appearing dead, will sprout at the scent of water. The metaphorical reading identifies ‘water’ as Torah, drawing on the common rabbinic metaphor of Torah as water, based on Isaiah 55:1.

לפוסל את זרעו ולפוגם את
משפחתו והקב״ה חותם ובפ׳
עשרה יוחסין אמרו כל הנושא
וכו׳ אליהו כופתו והקב״ה
רוצעו.[i] ובבתרא פ״ח אמרו
לעולם ידבק אדם בטובים שהרי
משה שנשא בת יתרו וכו׳ וכתוב
בהגהות סי׳ ב׳ מא״ה בהגה״ה
המתחלת כל הנושא אשה פסולה
משום ממון הווין לו בנים שאינם
מהוגנים כתב בסוף כל מי שפסקו
לו ממון הרבה לשדוכין וחזרו
בהם לא יעגן כלתו משום זה ולא
יתקוטט בעבור נכסי אשתו ומי
שעושה כן אינו מצליח ואין זווגו
עולה יפה כי הממון שאדם לוקח
עם אשתו אינו ממון של יושר וכל
העושה כן מקרי נושא אשה לשם
ממון[ii] אלא כל מה שיתן לו חמיו
וחמותו יקח בעין טוב ואז יצליח
ובראש סי׳ ל״ב בפל דבריו
בדין הפוסק מעות לחתנו ומשל
העולם בזה הוא כדבריו ודאי.
גם בפסחים פ״ג אמרו לעולם
ישא אדם בת ת״ח שאם מת או
גולה מובטח לו שבניו ת״ח דבת
ת״ח פקדונא דמריה אתמסר
בידה[iii] כדאמרי׳ בזהר. ואשה
טובה מתנה טובה. ובמדרש רבה
אמרו שהכל מן האשה להיות
האדם צדיק. ובהוריות פ״ב
אמרו כי הונא בר רב נחמן פשט
בעיא אחת לרב פפא וקם נשקיה
ברישיה ויהיב ליה ברתיה.
והנושא בת ת״ח ומקדש עצמו
בשעת תשמיש[iv] וביום שלפניו
מרבה מצות ובגמילות חסדים
יותר משאר הימים ובכל כחו stated [in Isaiah 55:1, "Ho, everyone who thirsts, come to the waters"]. And in Kiddushin (Chapter 1), [it says]: "Anyone who marries a woman who is not suitable for him, Elijah proclaims about him: 'Woe to him who disqualifies his offspring and blemishes his family,'" and the Holy One, blessed be He, seals it. And in Chapter "Ten Lineages" [of Tractate Kiddushin], they said: "Anyone who marries [an unsuitable woman], Elijah binds him and the Holy One, blessed be He, flogs him." And in Bava Batra (Chapter 8), they said: "A person should always cleave to good people, for behold, Moses married the daughter of Jethro," etc. And it is written in the glosses to Section 2 from Even HaEzer, in the gloss beginning with "Anyone who marries an unfit woman for the sake of money will have children who are not worthy," he wrote at the end: "Anyone for whom a large sum of money was promised for a match and then they retracted should not keep his bride waiting because of this, nor should he quarrel over his wife's property. One who does so will not succeed, and his marriage will not turn out well, for money that a man takes with his wife is not righteous money. Anyone who does so is called 'one who marries a woman for the sake of money.' Rather, whatever his father-in-law and mother-in-law give him, he should accept with a generous eye, and then he will succeed." And at the beginning of Section 32, he repeated his words concerning the case of one who promises money to his son-in-law, and the saying of the world in this matter is certainly according to his words. Also, in Pesachim (Chapter 3), they said: "A person should always marry the daughter of a Torah scholar, for if he dies or is exiled, it is assured that his children will be Torah scholars, for the daughter of a Torah scholar is entrusted with a deposit from her Master," as we say in the Zohar. And a good wife

130R 135R 140R 145R 150R 155R 160R 165R

[i] This graphic description uses violent imagery—binding and piercing the ear (as was done to a slave who chooses to remain with his master)—to emphasize the severity of divine disapproval for unsuitable marriages.

[ii] The text strongly condemns marrying for financial gain, reflecting the concern that materialistic motivations for marriage lead to spiritual and familial problems. This contrasts with the ideal marriage motivation being the creation of a spiritually elevated household.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase describes the daughter of a Torah scholar as having been entrusted with a divine deposit, suggesting she carries spiritual qualities directly from God that she will transmit to her children.

[iv] This refers to the kabbalistic practice of sanctifying marital relations through proper intentions, ritual preparations, and specific prayers. This practice was elaborated in many mystical works, including those influenced by the Safed kabbalists.

ומתודה בכל לבו. ומשכים אחר
ליל עונה לבית הכנסת ומבקש
רחמים כמו שנמצא כתוב בתקוני
175 התשובה. יזכה להמשיך לזרעו
אחריו נשמות קדושות ראויות
לזרע ברך ה׳.[i] [ii]

is a good gift.[1] And in Midrash Rabbah, they said that everything depends on the woman for a man to be righteous. And in Horayot (Chapter 2), they said 170R that Huna bar Rav Nachman resolved a question for Rav Pappa, and [Rav Pappa] arose, kissed him on his head, and gave him his daughter. And one who marries the daughter of a Torah scholar and sanctifies himself at the time of sexual relations and 175R on the day before,[2] increases in commandments and acts of kindness more than other days, with all his strength, and confesses with all his heart, and rises early after the night of the marital obligation[3] to the synagogue to ask for mercy, as is found written 180R in the Rectifications of Repentance—he will merit to draw after him to his offspring holy souls[4] worthy of the seed blessed by God.

פרק ט״ו

Chapter 15

מי יאמר זכיתי לבי טהרתי
מחשבתי מחטאתי ובודאי ראיתי בני עליה והנם

Who can say, "I have purified my heart; I have cleansed my thoughts from sin"? Indeed, I have seen those who ascend spiritually, and they are few—

[1] This is an allusion to Proverbs 18:22: 'He who finds a wife finds a good thing, and obtains favor from the LORD.'

[2] The text is describing spiritual preparations for marital intimacy, reflecting the kabbalistic understanding that proper intention and sanctification before and during marital relations affects the spiritual quality of children conceived from the union.

[3] This refers to prayer after fulfilling the mitzvah of conjugal relations, suggesting that prayer at this time has special efficacy for influencing the spiritual quality of potential offspring.

[4] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that parents' spiritual state and actions can 'attract' or 'draw down' higher-quality souls for their children, viewing conception not merely as a biological process but as a spiritual one involving the attraction of a pre-existing soul.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the spiritual state and intentions of the parents during conception directly affect the quality of the soul that will be drawn to the child. This concept is particularly developed in Lurianic Kabbalah.

[ii] Cf. Tractate Yoma, Chapter 7 — Used to support the recommendation to marry a Torah scholar's daughter to maintain Torah learning in one's family line | Cf. Tractate Kiddushin, Chapter 1 — Cites Elijah's proclamation against those who marry unsuitable women, emphasizing the importance of proper marriage choices | Cf. Tractate Kiddushin, Chapter 'Ten Lineages' — Reinforces the previous statement with more severe language of divine punishment | Cf. Tractate Bava Batra, Chapter 8 — Uses Moses as an exemplar of someone who married into a good family, despite Jethro being a convert | Cf. Even HaEzer, Section 2 — Warns against marrying for money and advises against quarreling over dowry amounts, suggesting this leads to unsuccessful marriages | Cf. Even HaEzer, Section 32 — Reinforces the previous point about financial expectations in marriage arrangements | Cf. Tractate Pesachim, Chapter 3 — Promises that such a marriage ensures one's children will be Torah scholars, even in difficult circumstances | Cf. Zohar — Adds a mystical dimension to the Talmudic recommendation by suggesting she carries a divine deposit | Cf. Midrash Rabbah — Emphasizes the wife's role in determining her husband's spiritual status | Cf. Tractate Horayot, Chapter 2 — Illustrates how Torah scholars valued intellectual accomplishment in potential sons-in-law | Cf. Tikkune haTeshuvah (Rectifications of Repentance) — Provides practical spiritual guidance for sanctifying the marital union to produce righteous children

מועטים המתקדשים והמטהרים
רעיונותיהם ועיילי בלא בר[i] ועל
טוהר המחשבה יתפלל כל חסיד
לה׳ וייחד לו בקשות ויחודים
לעתים הגונים כי דבר גדול
דברה אלינו התורה תמימה
בפסוק ולא תתורו אחרי לבבכם
ואפילו בדברי׳ הגשמיים והגסים
שבהן משכן הקליפות והחומר
אין ראוי לאדם להמשך אחריהם
שבהם נאחזים החצונים ומטמא
האדם עצמו. ולכן בהיותו
מתפלל צריך לעצום עיניו שלא
יביט בדברים הגשמיים ובעצימת
עינים יעלה בדעתו הדברים
הדקים ויתאחז ברוחני שהוא כח
החיוני הדק המתלבש בעולם
הגס הזה המתראים לנגד בתחלת
העלמתם ובהיותו מזכך הדברים
ומעלה אותם בסוד הדקות
אז הוא דק וזך דוגמת אחד
מצבאי המרום. ובשנמשך אחר
החומר ועוביות הדברים נקרא
זונה כדכתיב אשר אתם זונים
אחריהם כי האדם נברא להמשיך
אחר הדברים הדקים הנעלמים
בטבע נשמתו רוחו ונפשו אם
ימשך אחר עביותם נקרא זונה
כי יוצא ממדתו ואוי לו לבית
פי׳ גופו של אדם שהלפת עוברת
תמיד בתוכו[ii] וכל רוח דק
ימשך אחר הגבלת צורתו דרך
משל אם יחשוב האדם כל ימיו

those who sanctify and purify their thoughts[1] and enter without impurity. Every pious person should pray to the Lord for purity of thought and dedicate specific requests and unifications at appropriate times.[2] For the perfect Torah has spoken something profound to us in the verse "Do not follow after your hearts," even regarding physical and coarse matters in which the forces of impurity and materiality dwell. It is not proper for a person to be drawn after them, for in them the external forces take hold,[3] and a person defiles himself.

Therefore, when praying, one must close one's eyes so as not to look at physical things. With closed eyes, one will elevate in one's mind subtle matters and grasp the spiritual, which is the refined life-force clothed in this coarse world, appearing opposite at the beginning of their concealment. When one refines these matters and elevates them in the mystery of subtlety,[4] then one becomes refined and pure like one of the heavenly hosts. But when one is drawn after materiality and the coarseness of things, one is called a "harlot,"[5] as it is written, "after which you go astray." For humans were created to pursue the subtle, hidden things in accordance with the nature of their soul, spirit, and life-force. If one is drawn after coarseness, one is called a "harlot" because one departs from one's proper measure. Woe to the "house"—meaning a person's body—where the turnip is always passing through it, and every subtle spirit is drawn after the limitation of its form.

For example, if a person thinks all his days about the Holy Name, about the forms of its letters, its vowel points, its interpretations, and the appellations

5R 10R 15R 20R 25R 30R 35R

[1] This is an allusion to the Talmudic statement (Sukkah 45b) about the scarcity of "sons of ascent" (בני עליה), those who reach the highest spiritual levels.

[2] "Unifications" (יחודים) refers to kabbalistic meditative practices focused on uniting divine names and attributes. These were often reserved for specific times deemed spiritually auspicious.

[3] "External forces" (החצונים) is a kabbalistic term for negative spiritual entities that exist outside the realm of holiness, often associated with impurity and evil.

[4] This phrase (בסוד הדקות) refers to the kabbalistic concept that spiritual realities become increasingly subtle and refined as they ascend through the divine worlds.

[5] The term "harlot" (זונה) is being used metaphorically, based on the Hebrew root meaning "to stray." The text interprets the biblical prohibition against "straying after your hearts" as referring to inappropriate attachment to physical reality.

[i] This phrase is challenging to translate precisely. It literally means "entering without outside/foreign [elements]," but in context refers to entering into prayer or spiritual states without impure thoughts.

[ii] This is an unusual metaphor where the body is compared to a house through which a turnip (לפת) passes. This appears to be a reference to how physical food (represented by the turnip) continually passes through the body, symbolizing its material nature.

בשם הקדוש בצורות אותיותיו
ובנקודתו בפירושיו ובכנויי
כנויו ימשיך על עצמו רוח זך
40 אלהי ודאי. וטוב לזה להרגיל
האדם עצמו לומר בכל יום
מזמור קל״ה. ואם יחשוב תמיד
בדברים גשמיים. ימשיך על
עצמו תכונה רעה וזהו לדעתי
45 כוונת חז״ל ונתן עול ברזל על
צוארך זה טרדת רעיון[i] שכל
עוד שאינו חושב בקדושה הוא
נטרד ח״ו ובדד ישב מחוץ
למחנה קדושה מושבו שכמו
50 שמשכן הקדושה בשם הקדושה כן
משכן הקליפות בדברים חומרים
ותאות הגשמיות. וענין הקרי
יוכיח[ii] כי המהרהר עמל מוליד
און ושקר ברם שאר מחשבות
55 אינם קלות להפעל ופגם גדול
גורם המחשבה הרעה וזהו
הרהורי עבירה קשים מעבירה.
והנה בהולדת הבנים כמו שאדם
חושב כן ממש פועל וזה אומרו
60 ולא תתורו אחרי לבבכם וגו׳
ואמרו בגמרין אל תפנו אל
מדעתכם. ופי׳ בתקונים שזהו
סוד והאיש משה עניו מאד שהיה
מתבייש מקונו ואומר איך אחשוב
65 בדברים גשמיים והנה קוני יודע
יצר מחשבות לבי ואיך אחשוב
לפניו בדבר שיש לי בושת
לעשות מה לי עשייה ממש לפני
הבורא מה לי מחשבה הלא הכל
70 גלוי לפניו ויותר ידוע לפניו
המחשבה מהמעשה לפני ב״ו.
ואצ״ל כי האדם פועל במדות
העליונות ע״י הדברים הגשמיים
הנמצאים בעולם בהשתתף
75 כוונתו בהם ואמרו בתמיד פ״ק

of its epithets, he will surely draw upon himself a pure divine spirit. It is good for a person to accustom himself to recite Psalm 135 every day. But if one always thinks about physical matters, one will 40R draw upon oneself an evil disposition. This, in my opinion, is the meaning of our Sages' statement, "He places an iron yoke upon your neck"—this refers to distraction of thought, for as long as one does not think in holiness, one is driven away, heaven forbid, 45R and "he shall dwell alone; outside the camp shall be his dwelling." For just as the dwelling of holiness is in the holy name, so is the dwelling of the forces of impurity in material things and physical desires.

The matter of keri [nocturnal emission] proves 50R this, for one who contemplates toil begets iniquity and falsehood. However, other thoughts are not easily actualized. Great damage is caused by evil thoughts, and this is why "thoughts of sin are worse than sin itself."[1] Indeed, in the begetting of children, 55R a person actually effects what he thinks, and this is the meaning of "Do not follow after your hearts," and they said in the Gemara, "Do not turn to your own understanding."

It is explained in the Tikkunim[2] that this is the 60R secret of "the man Moses was very humble," for he was embarrassed before his Creator and said, "How can I think about physical things when my Creator knows the inclination of my thoughts? How can I contemplate before Him something that I would be 65R ashamed to do? What difference is there between actual deed before the Creator and thought? Is not everything revealed before Him? And thought is more known to Him than action is known to flesh and blood." 70R

It goes without saying that a person affects the supernal attributes through physical things found in the world when one's intention participates with them. They said in Tractate Tamid, first chapter, "What is the straight path that a person should 75R

[1] This is a reference to the Talmudic statement (Yoma 29a) that sinful thoughts can be more spiritually damaging than the actual commission of sins.
[2] This refers to Tikkunei Zohar, a section of the Zohar (the central text of Jewish mysticism) consisting of seventy interpretations of the first word of the Torah.

[i] The concept of "טרדת רעיון" (distraction of thought) is a technical term in Jewish mystical literature that refers to the mind being diverted from contemplation of divine matters toward worldly concerns.
[ii] "Keri" refers to nocturnal emission, which in mystical thought is connected to impure thoughts. The text is using this as proof that thoughts have actual physical consequences.

איזהו דרך ישרה שיבור לו
האדם יאהב את התוכחות שעל
ידן טובה וברכה באים לעולם
ורעה מסתלקת וי״א יחזיק
באמונה יתירה. פרש״י ישא ויתן
באמונה שנאמר עיני בנאמני ארץ
וגו׳. הנה שכפי תקון המדות
כן יזכה לו ולעולם כלו מסבת
תקונו למעלה בכסאות של יוצר
בראשית וזה לפי שכל נמצא
נשפע מהמדות עליונות וזה
טעם בקוצר אל צורך העניינים
הגשמיים אל המצות כד׳ מינים
ללולב ומיני צמחים לסוכות
והעורות לתפלין ולמזוזה וס״ת
והבגדים לציצית וזהב וכסף
ונחשת ותכלת וארגמן למשכן כי
לכל יש תלויה בעליונים ומה גם
אם ישתתף אל ענין זה שעורה
במדת ארכם ורחבם. וכ״ש
שבהזכירנו פסוקים משולבים
מצד כח האורים ותומים[i] וסודות
הצפונים בתוכם ובסדר סדורם.
כי יחדו יכונו להמשיך הכחות
עליונות לקדש אדם עצמו
ונשמתו בהם. כי התורה שמותיו
של הקב״ה ושמו הם י׳ ספירות
והתורה כלה הן כנויים לבחינות
הספירות והמצות הם ענפים לשם
הוי״ה שבו סוד עשר ספירות.
ובזה אך טוב וחסד ירדפונו כל
ימי חיינו:[ii]

choose? One should love rebukes, for through them goodness and blessing come to the world and evil is removed." And some say, "One should maintain exceptional faith." Rashi explains: "Conduct business with integrity, as it is said, 'My eyes are upon the faithful of the land, etc.'" 80R

Thus, according to one's rectification of attributes, so will one merit for oneself and for the entire world, due to one's rectification above in the thrones of the Creator of the Beginning. 85R This is because everything that exists flows from the supernal attributes. This briefly explains the necessity of physical objects for the commandments, such as the four species for the lulav, various plants for Sukkot, skins for tefillin, mezuzah, and Torah 90R scrolls, garments for tzitzit, and gold, silver, copper, blue, and purple for the Tabernacle. For each has a dependency on the supernal realms, especially when combined with precise measurements of their length and width. 95R

How much more so when we recite verses combined through the power of the Urim and Thummim, and the secrets hidden within them and in the order of their arrangement. For together they are established to draw down supernal powers to sanctify 100R oneself and one's soul through them. For the Torah is the names of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His name comprises the ten sefirot, and the entire Torah consists of appellations for aspects of the sefirot, and the commandments are branches of the Divine Name 105R YHVH, which contains the secret of the ten sefirot. And through this, "surely goodness and mercy shall [i]The Urim and Thummim were objects used for divination in the breastplate of the High Priest in ancient Israel. Here they are referenced metaphorically as representing divine power channeled through sacred texts.

[ii]Cf. Proverbs 20:9 — The opening line is a direct quote from Proverbs, establishing the text's focus on the challenge of maintaining pure thoughts. This serves as the foundation for the entire passage's discussion of thought purity. | Cf. Numbers 15:39 — This biblical prohibition is central to the text's argument, being interpreted in a mystical context to refer not just to idolatry but to any attachment to materiality that diverts one from spiritual consciousness. | Cf. Leviticus 13:46 — This alludes to the biblical treatment of the metzora (person with certain skin conditions), but reinterprets it metaphorically to describe spiritual isolation resulting from impure thoughts. | Cf. Numbers 12:3 — The text cites Moses' humility as an example of proper spiritual consciousness, interpreting it through the lens of the Tikkunei Zohar to mean awareness of divine omniscience regarding one's thoughts. | Cf. Zohar — The entire passage follows the style and structure common in the Zohar, particularly in its interpretation of biblical verses through multiple layers of meaning, its focus on the mystical significance of thought and prayer, and its concern with the relationship between physical actions and their effects in divine realms. | Cf. Psalm 135 — This psalm is recommended as a daily practice specifically because it focuses on divine sovereignty and the emptiness of idols, making it particularly effective for counteracting materialistic thoughts. | Cf. Psalms 23:6 — The text concludes with this verse to emphasize that the practices described—follow us all the days of our lives."

פרק ט״ז

Chapter 16

נחנו פשענו ומרינו ומפני
חטאינו נתרחקנו מעל אדמתנו.
על כן לבד התפלות הקבועות
לנו חובה עלינו להשמיע בכל
יום קולנו להיותנו ברחוק מקום 5R
כמי שקורא למרחוק וזה לעורר
הקול מהמשוררים העליונים
שיתחברו עם קולנו כדאמרי׳
במדרש שיר השירים[i] בפסוק
היושבת בגנים רבי נתן וכו׳ עד 10R
והקב״ה אומר להם בני הגביהו
קולכם כדי שישמעו חברים שעל
גביכם ואין חברים אלא מ״ה
ותנו דעתכם לא תשנאו זה את
זה ולא תתקנאו זה את זה ולא 15R
תחרחרו זה את זה ולא תביישו
זה לזה שלא יאמרו מלאכי
השרת לפני רבש״ע תורה שנתת
להם לישראל אינם עוסקין וכו׳
וד׳ לשונות שזכרו שנאה קנאה 20R
תחרות בושה הם נגד ד׳ מיני
יצר הרע[ii] שזכרנו והם שולטות
בלב ורוח וקול ודבור. ואמרו
במדרש אני חבצלת השרון בזמן
ב״ה אני חבויה בצלו ית׳ בשיר 25R

We have transgressed and rebelled, and because of our sins we have been distanced from our land. Therefore, besides the fixed prayers established for us, it is our duty to make our voices heard every day, for we are as those who call from afar, being distant from our place.[A] This is to awaken the voices of the celestial singers to join with our voice,[B] as stated in the Midrash on Song of Songs regarding the verse "You who dwell in the gardens," Rabbi Nathan [teaches]... until [the passage where] the Holy One, blessed be He, says to them: "My children, raise your voices so that the companions above you may hear,[1] and these companions are none other than the [angels]. Pay attention that you do not hate one another, nor envy one another, nor quarrel with one another, nor shame one another, lest the ministering angels say before the Master of the Universe: 'The Torah that You gave to Israel, they are not engaging with it...'". The four expressions mentioned—hatred, envy, contention, and shame—correspond to the four types of evil inclination we have mentioned,[2] which dominate the heart, spirit, voice, and speech.

And they said in the Midrash: "I am the rose of Sharon"—in the time of the Temple, I am hidden in [A] Or: "to raise our voices daily, since we are like those calling from a distance, having been removed from our proper place" — This alternate translation more clearly conveys the sense of displacement in exile and the theological concept that prayer must compensate for physical distance from the Temple.

[B] Or: "This is to stir the voices of the supernal choristers so they may unite with our voice" — This alternative better captures the mystical nature of the "celestial singers" (angels) and emphasizes the unification aspect rather than mere joining.

[1] The Hebrew term "חברים" (companions) refers to angels in this context. This reflects the mystical belief that human prayers are heard by angelic intermediaries who then carry them higher.

[2] The author refers to a previous discussion about the four types of evil inclination that isn't included in this passage, indicating this is part of a larger theological framework developed elsewhere in the text.

particularly the maintenance of pure thought and engagement with Torah and commandments—will result in divine blessings.

[i] The text references a midrash on Song of Songs that describes how human prayer connects with celestial voices. This mystical interpretation emphasizes that proper prayer creates a harmony between earthly and heavenly realms.

[ii] The author establishes a correspondence between four negative interpersonal behaviors and four types of evil inclination. This reflects the kabbalistic tendency to organize spiritual concepts into structured systems with precise correspondences.

ורון[i] ובזמן הגלות אני כשושנה
בין החוחים ועל כל זה אני
עוסקת במשנה בשינון ד״ת בקול
זמרה וזהו סמכוני באשישות כי
צריכים אנו לסמוך כ״י ליחוד
בשש סדרי משנה.[ii] ורפדוני
בתפוחים הציעו תחתי תפלות
ותחנונים המבריאים את הנפש כי
חולת אהבה פי׳ חולת היחוד אני
שאהב״ה במספר אחד[iii] וכ״ש
שבשבתות וימים טובים ביום
טובה נהיה בטוב ולא יראו פניו
ריקם כל אחד כפי השגתו במקרא
בהלכה ובאגדה ובפסוקי תפלה
וכן כל אחד יקבל השפעתו ית׳
כפי הכנת נשמתו ומעשה גבורתו
וזהו כברכת ה׳ אלהיך וגו׳.
ובזה בכל יום ויום התחתונים
יעלו למעלה ועליונים למטה
בכוונות היחודים שהעלינו
על ספר.[iv] ושפתי אותיות
והברות מהפסוקים הנזכרים
הוגים ושונים ומגידים כוונות
הרמוזות בהם בכל יום ויום
מלבד דברים הרבה אשר לא
יכילם רעיון. והם דברים

His blessed shadow with song and joy, but in the time of exile, I am like a rose among thorns. Yet despite all this, I engage in Mishnah, in reciting words of Torah with melodious voice. This is [the meaning of] "Sustain me with raisin-cakes"—for we need to support the Community of Israel for unification through the six orders of the Mishnah.[1] "Spread me upon apples"—lay beneath me prayers and supplications that heal the soul, "for I am lovesick"—meaning, I am sick for unification, as the word "love" (אהב״ה) has the same numerical value as "one" (אחד). How much more so on Sabbaths and festivals, on a good day we should be in goodness, and "none shall appear before Him empty-handed"—each according to his comprehension of Scripture, law, homiletics, and prayer verses.[A] Thus, each will receive divine influence according to the preparation of his soul and the measure of his spiritual might, as it is written: "according to the blessing of the LORD your God..."

In this way, each and every day, the lower beings ascend upward and the higher beings descend downward[2] through the unification intentions that we have set down in writing. And my lips pronounce letters and syllables from the mentioned verses, meditating and reciting and expressing the intentions hinted at in them every day, besides many things that [A] Or: "each person according to their grasp of Bible, Jewish law, rabbinic narratives, and liturgical verses" — This alternative uses more specific terms for the categories of Jewish sacred literature mentioned, making the text more accessible to readers who might not be familiar with terms like "homiletics" for aggadah.

[1] The Hebrew abbreviation "כ״י" stands for "Knesset Yisrael" (Community of Israel), which in Kabbalah represents the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). The "unification" refers to the mystical marriage between the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, facilitated through Torah study.

[2] This describes the kabbalistic concept of cosmic reciprocity, where human spiritual practices cause celestial forces to descend, creating a continuous circuit of divine energy between upper and lower worlds.

[i] The text interprets the biblical verse "I am the rose of Sharon" (Song of Songs 2:1) as referring to Israel's spiritual condition during Temple times versus exile. The word "חבצלת" (rose/lily) is interpreted as containing the elements of "חבויה" (hidden) and "בצלו" (in His shadow), employing a wordplay common in midrashic interpretation.

[ii] Here the author interprets "raisin-cakes" (אשישות) from Song of Songs 2:5 as representing the six orders of Mishnah, connecting the word to the number six (שש). Additionally, "כ״י" is an abbreviation for "Knesset Yisrael" (Community of Israel), often representing the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) in kabbalistic texts.

[iii] The author employs gematria (Hebrew numerology) to note that the numerical value of the Hebrew word for "love" (אהבה = 13) equals that of "one" (אחד = 13), reinforcing the kabbalistic theme that love leads to unity and divine unification.

[iv] The author refers to mystical intentions (kavvanot) for achieving spiritual unifications that were recorded in his written work. This suggests that Ma'avar Yabok included specific meditative techniques drawn from kabbalistic practice.

קלילין פי׳ קלים לרוץ ליוצרם
כדתרגם יונתן פסוק על כן יהיו
דבריך מעטים בגין כן יהון מלי
55 פומך קלילין. והרגיל בשודא
דמחצדא חקלא בהקדמות האר״י
זצוק״ל[i] ע״י הצרופים והתמורות
ברל״א שערים[ii] פי׳ זוגות פנים
ואחור ור״ת וס״ת ותוכי תיבות
60 וראשי פסוקים וסופי פסוקים
ודילוג אותיות וצרוף אותיות
וצרוף הנקודות בחמש או
בשש מהם וחלקי הגימטריות
בחלק המשקל וחלק החבור וט׳
65 חלקי המספרי. מספר המעוגל
הכללי. מספר הקדמוי. מספר
הכרחו. מספר מוסיפי. מספר
המרובע הכללי. מספר המרובע
הפרטי. מספר שמיי. מספר
70 מספרי. מספר מספריי הגדול.
וכל מ״ק הוא במטטרו״ן מאור
הקטן.[iii] ובאשר בלבו יקבוץ
ויבין בהם בהשכלות אלו ירעם
בקולו נפלאות נתבארו בספ״ר
75 ויראה עולמו בחייו ודוגמא
זו הוא בכל התורה כלה כי
ארוכה מארץ מדה ופוק חזי
גבורתא דאורייתא דמרי עלמא
ובה תדבקון יחידה החכמה עם
80 נערותיה ושביליה ותינק מזיו
שדיה כל ימי חיי הבלך ולא

thought cannot contain. These are "light matters," meaning easy to run to their Creator, as Jonathan translated the verse "Therefore let your words be few" as "Therefore let the words of your mouth be light." 55R

One who is practiced in "casting the harvested field" using the introductions of the ARI of blessed memory,[A] through permutations and substitutions in the 231 gates—meaning pairs of front and back, acronyms and final letters, middle letters of words, beginnings and endings of verses, letter skipping, letter combinations, and vowel combinations in five or six of them, and sections of gematria in the weight section and combination section, and nine parts of the numerical: general circular number, primordial number, necessary number, additional number, general square number, specific square number, heavenly number, numbered number, and the great numbered number—and all of these are within Metatron, the Lesser Light.[1] And when in his heart he gathers and understands these intellectual concepts, he will thunder with his voice wonders explained in the Book, and he will see his world in his lifetime. This pattern applies to the entire Torah, for "its measure is longer than the earth," so go out and see the might of the Torah of the Master of the Universe. Through it, the unique Wisdom cleaves with her maidens and her paths,[2] and you will nurse from the splendor of her breasts all the days of your fleeting life. These statutes shall not depart from before 60R 65R 70R 75R 80R

[A] Or: "One who is adept at kabbalistic interpretation methods according to the teachings of Rabbi Isaac Luria of blessed memory" — This alternative avoids the literal translation of the difficult Aramaic phrase "שודא דמחצדא חקלא" in favor of explaining its functional meaning in the context of kabbalistic practice.

[1] Metatron is a principal angel in Jewish mystical traditions who serves as a scribe and mediator between divine and human realms. The designation "Lesser Light" connects him to the moon in Genesis 1:16, emphasizing his role as reflecting rather than generating divine light.

[2] This poetic expression personifies Wisdom (a reference to Torah or divine wisdom) as a feminine entity with attendants, drawing on imagery from Proverbs 9:3 where Wisdom sends out her maidens.

[i] The phrase "שודא דמחצדא חקלא" (casting/harvesting the field) is an Aramaic expression referring to advanced kabbalistic practices. The author specifically mentions following the teachings of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the ARI), indicating the text's grounding in Lurianic Kabbalah.

[ii] The "231 gates" refers to a fundamental concept in the Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), representing all possible paired combinations of the 22 Hebrew letters ($22\times21\div2=231$). These letter permutations were used in meditative practices to tap into the creative power of language.

[iii] Metatron is described as "the Lesser Light," drawing on a kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 1:16 where the two great lights (sun and moon) became the "greater light" and "lesser light." In mystical thought, Metatron is often associated with this lesser divine illumination.

ימושו החקים האלה מלפניך ובזה תתענג מזיו כבודה בארצות החיים:[i] [ii] you, and through this you will delight in the abundance of her glory in the lands of the living.

פרק י״ז

Chapter 17

העומדים בסוד ישרים[iii] אמרו כי צריך כל אדם לכוין בעצמו כאלו הולך בבקר למנין עשרה לבית הכנסת של אברהם אבינו[iv] שתקן תפלת שחרית ויזרז עצמו ביותר להיות מן העשרה היושבים ראשונה במלכות. ובמנחה יכוין בעצמו כאלו הולך לבית הכנסת של יצחק אבינו ובערבית כאלו הולך לבית הכנסת של יעקב אבינו ואל יליזו מעיניו מרכבת האבות[v] כדי שיזדרז להיות נמנה

Those who stand in the council of the upright[1] have said that every person should have in mind, as if they are going in the morning to join a minyan of ten at the synagogue of our father Abraham, who established the morning prayer, and they should be especially diligent to be among the first ten seated in the kingdom.[2] And during the afternoon prayer, they should have in mind as if they are going to the synagogue of our father Isaac, and in the evening prayer as if they are going to the synagogue of our father Jacob. And they should not lose sight of the chariot of the Patriarchs,[3] so that they will be eager to be counted among the first ten, evening

[1] This is a reference to initiates in mystical teachings who have access to esoteric knowledge about prayer.

[2] The Hebrew phrase uses 'kingdom' (malchut), which in Kabbalah is also the name of the lowest sefirah (divine emanation) through which divine influence flows into the world. There is likely a double meaning here, suggesting that being among the first ten not only fulfills the halakhic requirement but creates a connection to the divine attribute of Malchut.

[3] This phrase combines the concept of the biblical Patriarchs with imagery from Ezekiel's vision of the Divine Chariot (merkavah), a central text in Jewish mysticism. The idea is that the Patriarchs themselves form a metaphysical 'vehicle' for divine presence.

[i] The phrase "lands of the living" (ארצות החיים) has eschatological connotations in Jewish thought, referring to the future world or the World to Come. The passage concludes with the promise that following these spiritual practices leads to ultimate divine delight.

[ii] Cf. Song of Songs — The text employs the allegorical reading common in Jewish mysticism where Song of Songs represents the relationship between God and Israel (or the Divine Presence). The roses, apples, and gardens mentioned are all interpreted as symbols of spiritual states and practices. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The author is drawing on the ancient mystical text Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) which describes the 231 possible paired combinations of Hebrew letters. In Ma'avar Yabok, these combinations are presented as meditative techniques for achieving spiritual elevation. | Cf. Lurianic Kabbalah — The author positions Ma'avar Yabok within the Lurianic kabbalistic tradition, referring to the teachings of Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572) who revolutionized Jewish mysticism. This reference helps date the text and situate it within post-Lurianic developments in Kabbalah. | Cf. Proverbs — The personification of Wisdom with attendant maidens echoes Proverbs 9, where Wisdom is depicted as a woman who sends out her maidens to call from the heights of the city. This reinforces the feminine imagery associated with divine wisdom in Jewish mystical thought. | Cf. Ecclesiastes — The citation of Ecclesiastes 5:1 ("let your words be few") as interpreted by the Aramaic translation of Jonathan reinforces the text's concern with proper speech and prayer, suggesting that concise, focused prayer with proper intention is more effective than lengthy discourse without kavvanah (proper intention).

[iii] This phrase literally means 'those who stand in the secret/council of the upright' and refers to those who understand mystical teachings, suggesting that what follows is esoteric knowledge not accessible to everyone.

[iv] The concept of the Patriarchs having their own 'synagogues' is metaphorical, representing spiritual structures associated with each Patriarch's particular divine service.

[v] The 'chariot of the Patriarchs' is a kabbalistic concept that views the three Patriarchs as forming מעשרה ראשונים ערב ובוקר.

כמו כן כתוב בזהר פ׳ בראשית
דף כ״ג כד בר נש אפתח פומיה
בצלותא דערבית ביומין דחול
נשרא קא נחית לקבליה לקבלא
בגדפתא ודא נוריאל ואיקרי
נמי אוריאל כשהוא מצד החסד
ובשחרית אריה ואוריאל אתי
לקבלא צלותיה ד׳ גדפין דאית
ליה וכן לכל חיה. ובצלותא
דמנחה שור נחית לקבליה
בקרנוי. ובשבת נחית הקב״ה
בג׳ אבהן.[i] ודרך זו נלך בכוונת
הפסוקים המסודרים מאתנו:[ii]

and morning. Similarly, it is written in the Zohar, Parashat Bereshit, page 23: "When a person opens their mouth in the weekday evening prayer, an eagle descends to receive it with its wings, and this is Nuriel, who is also called Uriel when he is from the side of loving-kindness. And in the morning prayer, a lion and Uriel come to receive his prayer, and it has four wings, and so for each celestial creature. And in the afternoon prayer, an ox descends to receive it with its horns. And on Sabbath, the Holy One, blessed be He, descends with the three Patriarchs."[1] And in this way we shall proceed with the intentions for the verses we have arranged:

ביום א׳ בבקר יכוין בהויה
נקודה סגול להוריד נחת רוח
מבעל הרצון על ידי הכסאות
עליונות למדת החסד במקומה
משום להאיר ולקשט כללות
החסד שבמלכות אצילות וכן
בבי״ע בסוד דרועא ימינא
ויכוין בשם אל וביחוד שם
ראשון מז׳ שמות של אנא בכח
והמלאך והמזל והמשרת של
היום כידוע למבין והיודע לכוין

On Sunday morning, one should focus one's intention on the divine name YHVH with the segol vowel points[A] to draw down spiritual satisfaction from the Master of Will through the supernal Thrones to the attribute of Chesed (Loving-kindness) in its place, in order to illuminate and adorn the totality of Chesed within Malkhut (Kingdom) of Atzilut (Emanation) and similarly in the worlds of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, in the mystery of "the right arm." One should also focus on the divine name El and on unifying the first of the seven names from [A] Or: "on the divine name YHVH vocalized with segol" — This is a more technical way to express the kabbalistic practice of visualizing the Tetragrammaton with specific vowel points, which might be preferred in more scholarly translations.

[1] This indicates that on the Sabbath, prayers are received directly by God together with the Patriarchs, rather than through angelic intermediaries as on weekdays, suggesting a more direct divine connection on the Sabbath.

a mystical vehicle (chariot) for divine manifestation in the world, parallel to Ezekiel's vision of the Divine Chariot.

[i] The phrase 'with the three Patriarchs' indicates that on the Sabbath, the prayers are received directly by God together with the Patriarchs, rather than through angelic intermediaries as on weekdays.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Bereshit 23b — This reference shows the kabbalistic understanding that prayer is not merely human words ascending to heaven, but involves active participation of celestial beings who receive and elevate our prayers. Each prayer time is associated with a different Patriarch and a different angelic form, creating a cosmic correspondence between human ritual and celestial activity. | Cf. Daily prayer liturgy — This passage draws on the rabbinic tradition that the three daily prayers were established by the three Patriarchs: Abraham established Shacharit (morning), Isaac established Minchah (afternoon), and Jacob established Ma'ariv (evening). The author expands this idea by suggesting that when praying, one should mentally visualize oneself attending the 'synagogue' of the particular Patriarch who established that prayer. | Cf. Ezekiel's vision of the Divine Chariot — This passage combines the concept of the Patriarchs with imagery from Ezekiel's vision of the Divine Chariot, which featured four celestial creatures (including an eagle, lion, and ox). In kabbalistic thought, the Patriarchs themselves form a kind of 'chariot' or vehicle for divine presence in the world.

שמות המרגלא שבאו ריש מלין
מהם בפ״א ממאמר א׳ אז טוב
לו ולנפשו. ויכוין בפסוקי
תורה להאיר עולם האצילות
על הצלם שבו ובחינת חלקו
הנקרא נשמתא ובסוד יו״ד שבשם
הקדוש ובזה מתקן פן אדם
שבמרכבה וכל הנשמות התלויים
בפן ההוא ומכוין להוריד כח
החסדים העליונים. ובפסוקי
נביאים יכוין לתקון ובסום עולם
הבריאה לתקון חלק שני מנשמתו
הנקרא נשמה בסוד יו״ד ה״א
שבשם. ופן שני שהוא פן אריה
וכל הנשמות התלויים בפן ההוא
ומגביר הנהגת החסד. ובפסוקי
תהלים יעלה במחשבתו לתקון
עולם היצירה ולסוד רוח ובכח
יה״ו שבשם ובזה ימתק פני
שור עם כל הנשמות הנכללים
בפן ההוא ומבסם הנהגת הדין.
ובפסוקי כתובים יכוין לתקון
עולם העשיה רוחנית וגשמית
ותקון נפשו בכח ד׳ אותיות
שבשם ולתקון פני נשר עם כל
הנשמות הנכללים בפן ההוא
ומוסיף כח בהנהגת הרחמים.
וכל אלה הם תקוני שכינה.
במנחה יכוין לכללות של חסד
שהוא בדרועא דשמאלא ובשם
אל אלהים וביחוד שם א׳ מז׳
שמות של מ״ב והשאר כנזכר לעיל:[i]

the "Ana Bekoach" prayer, along with the angel, zodiac sign, and celestial minister of the day, as is known to those who understand and know how to direct their intention toward the esoteric names whose initial letters are mentioned in Chapter 1 of Discourse 1[A]—then it will be good for him and his soul. 40R

When reciting verses from the Torah, one should intend to illuminate the world of Atzilut upon one's spiritual image (tzelem) and the aspect of one's portion called neshamta (highest soul), through the mystery of the letter yod of the holy Name, thereby rectifying the human face of the divine chariot and all the souls connected to that face, while intending to draw down the power of the supernal mercies. 45R 50R

When reciting verses from the Prophets, one should intend to rectify and sweeten the world of Beriah (Creation) and the second part of one's soul called neshamah, through the mystery of the letters yod-hei of the divine Name, and the second face which is the face of the lion, along with all the souls connected to that face, thereby strengthening the governance of loving-kindness. 55R 60R

When reciting verses from Psalms, one should elevate in thought to rectify the world of Yetzirah (Formation) and the mystery of ruach (spirit), through the power of the letters yod-hei-vav of the divine Name, thereby sweetening the face of the ox along with all the souls included in that face, and tempering the governance of judgment.[B] 65R

When reciting verses from the Writings, one should intend to rectify the world of Asiyah (Action), both spiritual and physical, and to rectify one's 70R

[A] Or: "and know how to direct their intention toward the traditional names whose acronyms appear in the first chapter of the first discourse" — This alternative provides a slightly different interpretation of 'margala' as 'traditional' rather than 'esoteric' and clarifies that 'resh milin' refers to acronyms or initial letters forming words.

[B] Or: "sweetening the governance of judgment" — 'Sweetening' is a more literal translation of the kabbalistic term 'mevasem' and is often preferred in translations of kabbalistic texts when referring to the transformation of divine judgment.

[i] Cf. Ana Bekoach prayer — The text refers to 'the seven names from the Ana Bekoach prayer,' which is a kabbalistic prayer composed of 42 letters divided into seven groups of six letters. Each group corresponds to a specific divine name and cosmic power. This prayer is often used in Jewish mystical practice for its purported ability to activate divine powers. | Cf. Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkabah) — The text's mention of the 'four faces' (human, lion, ox, and eagle) directly references Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot. In Kabbalah, these four faces represent different aspects of divine manifestation and correspond to the four worlds and soul levels that the text instructs one to focus on during prayer. | Cf. Four Worlds of Kabbalah — The text systematically maps the four parts of Scripture (Torah, Prophets, Psalms, Writings) to the four Kabbalistic worlds (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) and the four components of the soul nefesh (vital soul) through the power of all four letters of the divine Name, and to rectify the face of the eagle along with all the souls included in that face, thereby adding strength to the governance of compassion. All these are rectifications of the Divine Presence (Shekhinah).[A] 75R

In the afternoon prayer, one should focus on the totality of Chesed as it exists within the left arm, and on the divine name El Elohim, and on unifying the first of the seven names of the 42-letter divine Name, with the remainder as mentioned above. 80R

ביום ב׳ יכוין בבקר להויה נקודה שו״א שהיא בגבורה בסוד דרועא ימינא[i] ובשם אל אלהים וביחוד שם ב׳ מז׳ שמות של מ״ב ובשם המרגלא והמלאך והמזל והמשרת של יום ב׳ כנזכר ונכתב בסדורי תפלות הספרדים[ii] והשאר כנזכר. במנחה יכוין הוי״ה נקודה שו״א גבורה בדרועא שמאלא ובשם אלהים וביחוד שם ב׳ מז׳ שמות של מ״ב וכו׳ כנזכר:[iii]

On Monday morning, one should focus on the divine name YHVH with the sheva vowel pointing,[1] which corresponds to Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) through the mystery of the right arm, and on the divine name El Elohim, and on the unification of the second name of the seven names of the 42-letter Divine Name, and on the specific mystical formula, angel, zodiac sign, and heavenly minister of Monday,[2] as mentioned and written in the Sephardic prayer books, with the remainder as previously mentioned. During the afternoon prayer, one should focus on YHVH with the sheva vowel 85R 90R

[A] Or: "tikkunei Shekhinah (repairs of the Divine Presence)" — Keeping the technical kabbalistic term 'tikkunei' untranslated might be preferred in some contexts, especially when emphasizing the technical nature of these practices.

[1] The Hebrew text specifies a particular vowel pointing (שו״א/sheva) for the divine name, which has mystical significance in kabbalistic thought. Different vowel pointings of the same four-letter divine name were understood to channel different spiritual energies.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, each day of the week has a corresponding angel, zodiac influence, and celestial minister that governs it. These cosmic forces were to be contemplated during prayer to properly align human intention with divine governance.

(neshamta, neshamah, ruach, nefesh). This parallel structure is fundamental to the kabbalistic meditation practice being prescribed. | Cf. 42-letter Divine Name — The text refers to 'the seven names of the 42-letter divine Name' (shemot shel mem-bet), which is a central concept in practical Kabbalah. This Name, derived from the prayer Ana Bekoach, is believed to have extraordinary spiritual power and is used in various mystical meditations, particularly for spiritual ascent. | Cf. The Zohar — The text's terminology of 'droa yemina' (right arm), the four faces of the Merkabah, and the systematic correspondences between different aspects of divinity echoes the language and conceptual framework of the Zohar, the foundational text of Kabbalah. The meditation techniques described here build upon and systematize Zoharic teachings.

[i] The concept of 'right arm' (דרועא ימינא) refers to the kabbalistic representation of Chesed (Kindness) in the divine body, while paradoxically being associated here with Gevurah (Judgment), showing the complex interrelationship between divine attributes.

[ii] The reference to Sephardic prayer books indicates that these mystical practices were incorporated into established liturgical traditions rather than being entirely separate from conventional prayer.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's liturgical system — This passage belongs to a larger system of daily prayers organized according to kabbalistic principles. Each day of the week has specific divine names, vowel pointings, and mystical intentions associated with it, creating a comprehensive framework for prayer that aligns human devotion with cosmic spiritual forces. | Cf. 42-letter pointing, Gevurah through the left arm, and on the divine name Elohim, and on the unification of the second name of the seven names of the 42-letter Divine Name, etc., as mentioned. 95R

ביום ג׳ יכוין הוי״ה נקודה חולם שהיא בת״ת בדרועא ימינא וביחוד שם ג׳ מז׳ שמות של מ״ב[i] והשאר כנזכר. במנחה הוי״ה חולם בדרועא שמאלא[ii] וכו׳:[iii]

On the third day, one should focus[A] on the divine name YHVH with the cholam vowel pointing,[1] which corresponds to Tiferet[B] in the right arm,[2] and on the unification of the third of the seven names from the 42-letter Divine Name, and the remainder as mentioned previously. At the afternoon prayer, [focus on] YHVH with cholam in the left arm, etc.[3] 100R

[A] Or: "one should direct intention" — The Hebrew term 'יכוין' (yekavein) specifically refers to the mystical practice of kavvanah, which involves not just mental focus but a specific type of directed spiritual intention. This alternate translation better captures the technical nature of this practice in kabbalistic prayer.

[B] Or: "Tiferet (the central sefirah)" — Adding the explanation that Tiferet is the central sefirah would provide more context for readers unfamiliar with the kabbalistic tree of divine emanations.

[1] The term 'focus' translates the Hebrew 'יכוין' (yekavein), which specifically refers to the mystical practice of kavvanah—directing one's mental intention during prayer toward specific divine names and cosmic configurations to create spiritual effects.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic understanding of divine attributes (sefirot) as arranged in a human-like form, with Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) situated in the central column but here specifically associated with the right side, which represents mercy.

[3] The abbreviation 'וכו׳' ('etc.') indicates that the pattern established for the morning prayer should be applied similarly to the afternoon prayer, but with the adjustment from right to left side, without needing to repeat all details.

Divine Name (Shem Mem-Bet) — The reference to the 'seven names of the 42-letter Divine Name' connects to an important kabbalistic concept. This Divine Name, often beginning with the letters אבגיט״ץ (ABGITATZ), was considered especially powerful in Jewish mysticism and was used in meditations to elevate prayer and create cosmic unifications. | Cf. Sephardic prayer books — The reference to Sephardic prayer books indicates that this practice was established in the liturgical traditions of Sephardic Jews. This suggests the author is drawing on existing prayer customs rather than inventing entirely new practices, though he is providing kabbalistic explanations for these established practices.

[i] The reference to 'the third of the seven names from the 42-letter Divine Name' relates to the 42-letter Name of God (שם מ״ב) which was divided into seven six-letter names. Each day of the week corresponds to a different one of these seven names, with Tuesday (the third day) corresponding to the third name.

[ii] The distinction between morning prayer ('right arm') and afternoon prayer ('left arm') reflects the kabbalistic understanding that morning is governed by the attribute of mercy (right side) while afternoon is governed by judgment (left side).

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This text appears in the liturgical system of Ma'avar Yabok that provides daily mystical intentions (kavvanot) for prayer. It follows a systematic pattern where each day of the week is associated with specific divine names, vowel points, and sefirot, with morning and afternoon variations. | Cf. Zohar — This follows Zoharic teachings about how prayers ascend through different spiritual channels depending on the time of day, with morning prayers associated with the right side (mercy) and afternoon prayers with the left side (judgment). | Cf. Kabbalistic prayer books (siddurim) — This type of instruction is found in kabbalistic prayer books that provide specific mystical intentions for different days and times, based on the understanding that prayers activate different divine configurations depending on when they are recited.

ביום ד׳[i] הויה חירק[ii] בנצח[iii] בדרועא וירכא ימינא[iv] ובשם ה׳ צבאות[v] וביחוד שם ד׳ משם מ״ב[vi] וכו׳. במנחה הויה חירק בנצח בכללתו בדרועא וירכא שמאלא[vii] וכו׳:[viii]

On Wednesday,[A] [focus on] the divine name YHVH with the chirik vowel point[1] in Netzach,[2] in the right arm and thigh,[B] and on the divine name YHVH Tzeva'ot, and on the unification of the fourth name from the 42-letter Name,[3] etc. During the afternoon prayer,[C] [focus on] the divine name YHVH with the chirik vowel point in Netzach in its entirety, in the left arm and thigh, etc.

ביום ה׳ יבוין בהויה שורק

On Thursday, one should meditate on the divine

[A] Or: "On the fourth day" — While "Wednesday" is accurate in context, a more literal translation would be "On the fourth day." This would be preferable in contexts emphasizing the numerical significance of the days.

[B] Or: "in the right channel and support" — These terms can be understood metaphorically rather than anatomically, referring to channels of divine energy. This alternate translation would be more appropriate in contexts focusing on abstract cosmic structures rather than divine 'body parts.'

[C] Or: "During Minchah" — Keeping the Hebrew term 'Minchah' would be preferable for audiences familiar with Jewish prayer terminology, as it specifically denotes the afternoon prayer service with its own unique characteristics.

[1] The original Hebrew uses the term "chirik" (חירק) to refer to a specific vowel point in Hebrew writing. In Kabbalah, different vowel points applied to divine names are believed to activate different spiritual energies.

[2] I've preserved the Hebrew term "Netzach" rather than translating it as "Victory" or "Eternity" because it functions as a technical term in Kabbalah referring to the seventh divine emanation (sefirah).

[3] This refers to a mystical divine name in Kabbalah comprised of 42 letters. It's often divided into seven names of six letters each, with each name corresponding to a different divine attribute and cosmic function.

[i] This text provides kabbalistic meditation instructions for Wednesday (the fourth day of the week). Each day corresponds to a different sefirah (divine emanation) in kabbalistic thought.

[ii] This refers to visualizing the divine name YHVH (הויה) with the chirik vowel point (a single dot beneath each letter). In kabbalistic practice, different vowel points applied to divine names create different spiritual effects.

[iii] Netzach is the seventh sefirah, representing Victory or Eternity in the kabbalistic tree of divine emanations. Wednesday corresponds to Netzach in this system.

[iv] Literally "in the right arm and thigh." In kabbalistic anatomy, different body parts correspond to specific divine attributes. The right side generally represents mercy and kindness.

[v] The divine name "YHVH Tzeva'ot" (Lord of Hosts) is associated with Netzach in kabbalistic correspondences.

[vi] This refers to focusing on the fourth name within the 42-letter divine Name. The 42-letter Name is divided into seven six-letter names, each with specific spiritual properties.

[vii] Literally "in the left arm and thigh." The left side in kabbalistic symbolism typically represents judgment and restriction, in contrast to the right side's association with mercy.

[viii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, section on Sunday prayers — This is part of a systematic prayer guide that extends throughout the week, with each day focusing on different divine attributes and names. The pattern established here continues through the entire week. | Cf. Zohar — These meditation instructions draw on Zoharic traditions about how different vowel points applied to divine names activate different spiritual channels and divine attributes. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The connection between days of the week, body parts, and divine attributes reflects the cosmic correspondences taught in Sefer Yetzirah, where the whole universe is seen as interconnected through divine patterns.

בהוד[i] בכללותו בדרועא וירכא ימינא[ii] ובשם אלהים צבאות וביחוד שם ה׳ משם של מ״ב[iii] ובמלאכו וכו׳ והשאר כנזכר במנחה יכוין בהוי״ה נקודה שורק ובהוד בדרועא וירכא שמאלא[iv] וכנזכר בבקר:[v]

name YHVH with the shurek vowel pointing[1] in Hod in its entirety[2] on the right arm and thigh,[3] and on the divine name Elohim Tzeva'ot, and on the unification of the fifth name from the 42-letter Name,[4] and on its angel, etc., and the rest as mentioned earlier. At the afternoon prayer, one should meditate on the divine name YHVH with the shurek vowel pointing and on Hod on the left arm and thigh, as mentioned for the morning prayer.

ביום ו׳ יכוין בהויה נקודה שלש נקודות שביסוד השושבין המיחד ובשם שד״י ואל חי בכללותו בדרועא וירכא וגופא מבחינת ימינא וביחוד שם ו׳

On the sixth day [Friday], one should focus on the divine name YHVH with three vowel points that are in Yesod[5] [Foundation], the unifying Attendant, and on the name Shaddai and El Chai in its entirety in the arm, thigh, and body from the right aspect, and

[1]The Hebrew term יכוין (yekavven) means to direct one's intention or focus in a specific mystical way. In kabbalistic practice, this refers to a complex mental visualization of divine names with specific vowel pointings as a way to create spiritual unifications in the upper worlds.

[2]This refers to channeling divine energy into the sefirah of Hod (Splendor/Glory), the eighth of the ten divine emanations in Kabbalah. Each day of the week corresponds to different sefirot in this system.

[3]In kabbalistic symbolism, the human body corresponds to the cosmic divine body (Adam Kadmon), with different limbs representing different channels of divine energy. The right side typically corresponds to mercy and giving, while the left side corresponds to judgment and restriction.

[4]The 42-letter Divine Name is a powerful mystical name in Kabbalah divided into seven names of six letters each. Each of these seven names corresponds to a day of the week, with the fifth name being associated with Thursday.

[5]This refers to a specific kabbalistic visualization where the divine name YHVH is written with three vowel points, corresponding to the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation) which serves as a cosmic conduit between higher and lower realms.

[i]This reflects the kabbalistic correspondence system where different vowel pointings of the divine name are associated with specific sefirot (divine emanations). Here the shurek vowel corresponds to Hod (the eighth sefirah).

[ii]The phrase 'right arm and thigh' uses Aramaic terminology (דרועא וירכא) from the Zohar. In kabbalistic anatomy, different body parts correspond to different sefirot, with the right side associated with mercy and the morning prayer.

[iii]The 42-letter Divine Name (שם מ״ב) is divided into seven names of six letters each. This instruction refers specifically to the fifth of these seven names, which should be meditated upon during Thursday prayers.

[iv]The 'left arm and thigh' correspond to the afternoon prayer time, which is associated with the attribute of judgment in kabbalistic thought. This creates a symmetrical system where morning connects to the right side (mercy) and afternoon to the left side (judgment).

[v]Cf. 42-letter Divine Name (Shem Mem-Bet) — The text refers to the fifth name from the 42-letter Divine Name, which is a mystical name divided into seven names of six letters each. In Ma'avar Yabok, this name is associated with specific kavvanot (mystical intentions) during prayer and is believed to have special protective and unifying powers. | Cf. Sefirot system — The text provides specific instructions for meditation on the divine name YHVH with different vowel pointings corresponding to different sefirot. This reflects the kabbalistic system where each day of the week, each prayer time, and each divine name is associated with particular sefirot and spiritual channels. | Cf. Right arm and thigh vs. left arm and thigh — The distinction between morning prayer (associated with the right side, traditionally connected to mercy) and afternoon prayer (associated with the left side, traditionally connected to judgment) reflects the kabbalistic concept of daily cosmic cycles where different divine attributes predominate at different times.

משם של מ״ב[i] בסוד נטותו אל
צד החסד ומלאכו וכו׳. כנזכר
במנחה יכוין בשם ניקוד קבוץ
כנזכר בסוד השושבין[ii] הנוטה
אל צד הדין ויכוין לבסם אותו
והשאר כנזכר: יכוין בשם הויה
ואדנות משולבים[iii] ומלכות
שי״ן ב״ת מיוחדת בג׳ אבות
חג״ת אל אלהים ה׳ דבר ויקרא
אצלו ארץ החיים[iv] ומרכבה
מרקדה בדרועא וירכא וגופא
מבחינת ימינא וביחוד שם ז׳
מז׳ שמות של מ״ב וכו׳ כנזכר
וכן בפרטי כוונת תורה נביאים
וכתובים הנ״ל נזכר. במנחת עת
רצון יכוין לב׳ שמות משולבים
בבקר בסוד השושבין המוסיף
הארה מהכתר עליון בסוד
תפלת מוסף ומלכות מחובקת
בדרועא דשמאלא והתעוררות
מצח הרצון וביחוד שם ז׳
מז׳ שמות מ״ב והשאר כנזכר
בבקר ויש מחלקים אות א׳ של
אבגית״ץ[v] לכל א׳ ששת ימים
וכל דברי חכמים קיימים ואורו
יחיר כאור שבעת הימים.[vi] וטוב

on the unification of the sixth name from the 42-letter Name, in the mystery of its inclination toward the side of Chesed[1] [Loving-kindness], and its angel, etc., as mentioned. During the afternoon prayer, one should focus on the Name with the kibbutz vowel points[2] as mentioned, in the mystery of the Attendant that inclines toward the side of judgment, and one should intend to sweeten it,[3] and the rest as mentioned. 130R 135R

One should focus on the Names YHVH and ADNY interwoven, and Malkhut [Kingdom] which is Shin Bat [daughter] united with the three Patriarchs—Chesed, Gevurah, and Tiferet. El Elohim, the LORD speaks and calls to Himself "the Land of the Living" and the dancing chariot in the arm, thigh, and body from the right aspect, and on the unification of the seventh name from the seven names of the 42-letter Name, etc., as mentioned, and likewise in the particular intentions for Torah, Prophets, and Writings mentioned above. 140R 145R

During the afternoon prayer, which is a time of favor, one should focus on the two interwoven Names as in the morning, in the mystery of the Attendant who adds illumination from the supernal Crown through the mystery of the Musaf prayer, with Malkhut embraced by the left arm,[4] and the 150R

[1] In kabbalistic thought, divine attributes can 'incline' toward either mercy (Chesed) or judgment (Din/Gevurah). This passage describes focusing on the sixth name from the 42-letter Name when it inclines toward mercy, creating a more favorable spiritual influence.

[2] The text prescribes specific vowel points (nikudot) to be visualized with divine names during prayer. Kibbutz (קבוץ) is a specific Hebrew vowel that in this mystical context is associated with gathering or concentrating divine energy.

[3] The kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening' (לבסם/בסם) refers to transforming harsh divine judgments into mercy through proper mystical intention. This is a core practice in Jewish mysticism, particularly when divine attributes incline toward judgment.

[4] This anthropomorphic imagery describes the divine feminine (Malkhut/Kingdom) being em-

[i] This refers to the sixth name from the 42-letter Divine Name, a mystical name of God that plays an important role in kabbalistic prayer meditations. The 42-letter Name is divided into seven names of six letters each.

[ii] The term 'shoshvin' (attendant/groomsman) is a kabbalistic reference to the sefirah of Yesod that serves as an intermediary between masculine divine aspects (primarily Tiferet) and feminine divine aspects (Malkhut), facilitating their union.

[iii] This describes the mystical practice of interweaving the divine names YHVH and ADNY, symbolizing the union of divine mercy and judgment, masculine and feminine aspects. In kabbalistic practice, these names are sometimes written with their letters alternating.

[iv] The phrase 'Land of the Living' (ארץ החיים) is a biblical term that in kabbalistic contexts often refers to the divine realm or specifically to Malkhut (Kingdom) as the realm where divine life flows to all creation.

[v] ABGITATZ is the first word of the 42-letter Divine Name, formed from the first letters of the first six words of the prayer 'Ana BeKoach' (אנא בכח). This name was considered to have special protective and transformative powers in kabbalistic tradition.

[vi] This is an allusion to Isaiah 30:26, which speaks of a future time when 'the light of the moon

לכוין במה שאמרנו בכל יום בעת התפלות והעבודות ובזה יתגבר בה׳ ובשמו יתהלל:[i] awakening of the Forehead of Will, and on the unification of the seventh name from the seven names of the 42-letter Name, and the rest as mentioned in the morning. Some divide the first letter of ABGITATZ [the first word of the[1] 42-letter Name] for each of the six days, and all the words of the sages endure, and its light will shine like the light of the seven days. It is good to focus on what we have said every day during the prayers and divine service, and through this one will be strengthened in the LORD and will be praised in His name. 155R 160R

אלו הם סדרי הפסוקים מאנ״ך[ii] עם מעט בקשות הקשורים בעבותות אהבה[iii] ובהם

These are the orders of verses from the Bible[2] (Torah, Prophets, and Writings) with a few supplications bound together with bonds of love,[3] and with them 165R braced by the divine masculine (left arm, representing Gevurah/Strength). These visualizations are meant to facilitate cosmic unifications through human prayer intention.

[1]This refers to an alternative kabbalistic practice where instead of using different names from the 42-letter Name on different days, practitioners would focus on different letters of just the first word (ABGITATZ) across the six weekdays.

[2]I've expanded the acronym אנ״ך as 'Bible' for clarity, though it literally stands for Torah, Prophets, and Writings, which I've included parenthetically.

[3]The phrase בעבותות אהבה has poetic resonance in Hebrew, evoking biblical imagery. I've preserved the metaphor of 'bonds of love' which suggests that these prayer compilations create spiritual connections.

shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of the seven days.' In this context, it suggests that proper prayer meditation creates cosmic illumination.

[i]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's fourth discourse — This passage appears to be part of the liturgical instructions section of Ma'avar Yabok, specifically related to the daily prayer practice. It focuses on kabbalistic meditations (kavvanot) to be performed during specific prayer times, associating each day with different divine names, attributes, and mystical unifications. | Cf. 42-letter Divine Name (Shem Mem-Bet) — The text repeatedly references the 42-letter Divine Name, which is a central mystical concept in Ma'avar Yabok. This name is divided into seven six-letter names, the first of which begins with the letters אבגית״ץ (ABGITATZ). The text provides specific instructions for which of these seven names should be meditated upon during different prayer times. | Cf. Zohar — The entire system of prayer meditations described here follows the Zoharic framework of connecting human prayer below with cosmic processes above. The specific focus on divine names, their vowel points, and the parts of the divine 'body' (arms, thighs) reflects the Zoharic understanding of the sefirot as both divine attributes and parts of the cosmic 'body' of God. | Cf. Siddurim (Prayer books) — The text mentions that these prayer instructions are written in Sephardic prayer books ('סדורי תפלות הספרדים'), suggesting that these mystical meditations were incorporated into structured prayer manuals within certain Jewish communities. | Cf. שושבין (Attendant/Groomsman) — The text repeatedly uses the term 'shoshvin' (attendant/groomsman) which in Kabbalah refers to the sefirah of Yesod that serves as an intermediary facilitating the union between the masculine divine aspects (primarily Tiferet) and the feminine divine aspects (Malkhut). This reflects the text's deep engagement with kabbalistic concepts of divine unification through human prayer.

[ii]The acronym אנ״ך (TaNaKh) represents the three divisions of the Hebrew Bible: Torah (Pentateuch), Nevi'im (Prophets), and Ketuvim (Writings). The author is indicating that the prayer sequences that follow will draw verses from all three sections of scripture.

[iii]This poetic phrase 'bonds of love' evokes the imagery from Song of Songs and suggests that these compiled prayers are not merely a collection of texts but are unified by a spiritual connection of divine love.

ישירו ויזמרו כל החפץ לקדש עצמו בשחרית ומנחה : [i] everyone who desires to sanctify themselves[1] will sing and chant in the morning and afternoon prayers.

[iii] [ii] קודם שיתחיל כל סדר יאמר

Before beginning each order [of prayer], one should say:[A] 170R

145 אָנָּא יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה נָּא: אָנָּא יְיָ הַצְלִיחָה נָא ג״פ:[iv] שְׁמָעָה תְפִלָּתִי יְיָ וְשַׁוְעָתִי הַאֲזִינָה אֶל דִּמְעָתִי אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ כִּי גֵר אָנֹכִי עִמָּךְ תוֹשָׁב כְּכָל אֲבוֹתָי:[v] תָּבוֹא 150 לְפָנֶיךָ תְפִלָּתִי הַטֵּה אָזְנְךָ לְרִנָּתִי: כִּי שָׂבְעָה בְרָעוֹת נַפְשִׁי וְחַיַּי לִשְׁאוֹל הִגִּיעוּ:[vi] בְּהִתְעַטֵּף עָלַי

Please LORD, save now! Please LORD, grant success now! [three times].[2] Hear my prayer, O LORD, and give ear to my cry; do not be deaf to my tears,[3] for I am a stranger with You, a sojourner like all my fathers.[4] Let my prayer come before You; incline Your ear to my plea. For my soul is filled with troubles, and my life has reached Sheol. When my soul fainted within me,[B] I remembered 175R

[A] Or: "Before commencing each liturgical sequence, one should recite:" — This alternative is more specific about the liturgical nature of the 'seder' but maintains the same essential meaning. It might be preferred in a context where the technical nature of these prayer sequences needs to be emphasized.

[B] Or: "When my spirit was overwhelmed within me" — This alternate translation better captures

[1] The phrase 'החפץ לקדש עצמו' conveys the idea of someone seeking spiritual elevation through prayer, which I've rendered as 'desires to sanctify themselves.'

[2] This opening petition comes from Psalm 118:25 and forms part of the Hallel prayer sequence. In Ma'avar Yabok, it serves as the standard opening formula for each of the eight prayer sequences designed for the sick and dying.

[3] The metaphor of God being 'deaf' to prayers is striking in Hebrew, using the verb תֶּחֱרַשׁ which literally means 'be silent' or 'be deaf/unresponsive.' This creates a powerful image of seeking divine attention when one feels most vulnerable.

[4] This appeal based on human transience and mortality is especially appropriate in the context of prayers for the sick and dying, reminding God of human fragility.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This appears to be the introductory heading for the organized collection of biblical verses compiled in Ma'avar Yabok for recitation during morning and afternoon prayers. The author has carefully structured these prayer sequences as part of the book's systematic approach to spiritual care. | Cf. Song of Songs 7:7 — The text employs the metaphor of 'bonds of love' to describe how the biblical verses and prayers have been woven together, suggesting that these compiled prayers create spiritual connections between the worshipper, the community, and the divine.

[ii] This is a liturgical instruction that appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok, specifically in the 'Seder' section that contains eight distinct liturgical sequences for healing the sick and comforting the dying. Each sequence follows a similar structure beginning with standard opening prayers.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Siftei Renanot — This instruction appears at the beginning of each of the eight prayer sequences (sedarim) in Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' section. These structured prayer sequences follow a consistent pattern, beginning with the formula that follows this instruction.

[iv] The Hebrew abbreviation ג״פ (gimmel-peh) instructs that this phrase should be recited three times, which is common in Jewish liturgy for emphasizing particularly important supplications.

[v] This verse from Psalm 39:13 expresses the temporary nature of human existence. The terms 'stranger' (גֵּר) and 'sojourner' (תּוֹשָׁב) have legal meanings in biblical law concerning non-citizens with different levels of rights and obligations, but here they metaphorically express human transience before God.

[vi] 'Sheol' refers to the underworld or grave in Hebrew thought. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this reference is particularly significant since the entire work deals with the transition between life and death, symbolized by the 'crossing of the Yabok.'

[i] This phrase from Jonah 2:8 describes the soul fainting or being overwhelmed, perfectly capturing the state of one who is gravely ill or approaching death, which is the primary context for reciting these prayers in Ma'avar Yabok.

נַפְשִׁי[vii] אֶת יְיָ זָכָרְתִּי וַתָּבוֹא אֵלֶיךָ תְּפִלָּתִי אֶל הֵיכַל קָדְשֶׁךָ: [i] the LORD, and my prayer came to You, to Your holy temple.[1] 180R

155 אחר כך יתחיל המזמור ויאמר כל הנז׳ פסוקים בסדרים המוצעים כאן:[iii ii] After that, one should begin the psalm and recite all the aforementioned verses in the arrangements presented here:[A]

[v iv] סדר יום ראשון בבקר Order for Sunday Morning[2] 185R

the sense of being completely overwhelmed or engulfed that the Hebrew reflexive verb conveys, which is particularly appropriate for someone experiencing serious illness or approaching death.

[A] Or: "Then, one shall commence the psalm and recite all the previously mentioned verses according to the arrangements set forth here:" — This alternate provides a more formal liturgical tone that might better match the instructional nature of the text, using 'commence' instead of 'begin' and 'according to the arrangements set forth' instead of 'in the arrangements presented.'

[1] The reference to the temple is significant in post-Temple Judaism, where prayer has replaced sacrifice as the primary form of worship. In Ma'avar Yabok, this becomes particularly meaningful as prayer serves as the vehicle for the soul's elevation during illness and death.

[2] This is the first of eight liturgical sequences in Ma'avar Yabok organized by days of the week,

[ii] Cf. Psalm 118:25 — This forms the standardized opening for each of the eight prayer orders (sedarim) in Ma'avar Yabok's structured liturgical sequences for the sick and dying. | Cf. Psalm 39:13 — This verse establishes the theological framework of human transience that underlies Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death as a transition rather than an ending. | Cf. Jonah 2:8 — Drawing on Jonah's prayer from the depths (metaphorically from Sheol itself) creates a powerful parallel for the sick person who feels close to death.

[iii] This instruction marks a transition in the prayer service, indicating that after reciting the opening formula, one should proceed to the psalm and then to the structured collection of biblical verses. The term 'sedarim' (arrangements/orders) is significant, as it refers to the carefully organized sequences of biblical verses that follow specific organizational principles throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' section — This line serves as a transitional instruction in the organized prayer sequence, directing the reader to begin the recitation of the psalm followed by the biblical verses arranged in specific orders. Ma'avar Yabok consistently presents structured liturgical sequences with standardized components: opening formulas, psalms, verses from Torah/Prophets/Writings, and closing prayers. | Cf. Seder (prayer order) structure — The phrase 'in the arrangements presented here' refers to the carefully organized biblical verses that follow each psalm in Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences. These verses are methodically arranged by source (Torah, Prophets, Writings) to create a comprehensive spiritual framework for healing prayers.

[v] This heading indicates that what follows is the first of eight liturgical sequences in Ma'avar Yabok, specifically for Sunday morning. The text organizes these prayer sequences by days of the week, with each day having morning and afternoon prayers.

[vi] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This section appears to be part of the structured liturgical sequences (sedarim) in Ma'avar Yabok, specifically presenting the order of prayers for Sunday morning. Ma'avar Yabok contains eight distinct liturgical sequences for healing the sick and comforting the dying, each with standardized opening formulas, psalm selections, and biblical verses grouped by source (Torah, Prophets, Writings). | Cf. Psalm 13 — The instruction to recite Psalm 13 ('How long, O LORD, will You forget me?') as the opening psalm for Sunday morning is significant. This psalm expresses feelings of divine abandonment followed by renewed trust, making it appropriate for someone experiencing illness who feels forgotten by God. | Cf. Genesis 1:3, 12:2, 17:7, 9:7, 27:29, 28:3-4, 28:20-21 — The Torah verses begin with 'Let there be light' and continue with divine blessings and promises to the patriarchs. These verses establish a progression from creation to covenant to blessing, providing foundational assurance of God's care and promises that would comfort the sick. | Cf. Judges 5:3, 1 Samuel 2:1-4, 10, Joshua 10:25, Judges 5:31, Joshua 1:5 — The verses from Prophets focus on divine strength, victory over enemies, and God's faithfulness. They establish that God strengthens the weak and defeats those who rise against His people, which would be comforting to someone experiencing illness perceived as an 'enemy' attacking the body. | Cf. Psalms 5:4, 4:2, 5:9, 5:12-13, 3:2-7, 6:9-11, 13:5, 18:2-7, 18:17-20, 31:22-24, 40:17 — This collection from Psalms creates a therapeutic progression from distress to confidence in God's salvation.

יתחיל פסוקי אנה ה׳[i] ואח״כ
יאמר מזמור עד אנה ה׳
תשכחני[ii] ואח״כ יאמר פסוקים
אלו:[iii]

He should begin with the verses[1] “Ana Hashem” (Please, O LORD) and afterward recite the psalm “Ad ana Hashem tishkacheni” (How long, O LORD, will You forget me) and afterward recite these verses:

(תורה) וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים יְהִי
אוֹר וַיְהִי אוֹר:[iv] וְאֶעֶשְׂךָ לְגוֹי
גָּדוֹל וַאֲבָרֶכְךָ וַאֲגַדְּלָה שְׁמֶךָ
וֶהְיֵה בְּרָכָה:[v] וַהֲקִמֹתִי אֶת
בְּרִיתִי בֵּינִי וּבֵינֶךָ וּבֵין זַרְעֲךָ
אַחֲרֶיךָ לְדֹרֹתָם לִבְרִית עוֹלָם
לִהְיוֹת לְךָ לֵאלֹהִים וּלְזַרְעֲךָ
אַחֲרֶיךָ:[vi] וְאַתֶּם פְּרוּ וּרְבוּ שִׁרְצוּ
בָאָרֶץ וּרְבוּ בָהּ:[vii] יַעַבְדוּךָ
עַמִּים וְיִשְׁתַּחֲווּ לְךָ לְאֻמִּים הֱוֵה
גְבִיר לְאַחֶיךָ וְיִשְׁתַּחֲווּ לְךָ בְּנֵי
אִמֶּךָ אֹרְרֶיךָ אָרוּר וּמְבָרֲכֶיךָ
בָּרוּךְ:[viii] וְאֵל שַׁדַּי יְבָרֵךְ אֹתְךָ

(Torah) And God said, “Let there be light,” and there was light.[2] I will make you into a great nation, and I will bless you, and I will make your name great, and you shall be a blessing.[3] And I will establish My covenant between Me and you and your descendants after you throughout their generations as an everlasting covenant, to be God to you and to your descendants after you. Be fruitful and multiply, swarm upon the earth and multiply in it. Nations will serve you, and peoples will bow down to you; be master over your brothers, and your mother’s sons will bow down to you;[4] those who curse you will be cursed, and those who bless you will be blessed. And each with specific prayers for the sick and dying. The organization by days reflects the kabbalistic belief that different cosmic energies and divine attributes are dominant on different days.

[1]These instructions establish a structured liturgical format that appears consistently throughout Ma’avar Yabok’s prayer sequences, providing caregivers with clear directions for proper ritual practice at the bedside of the sick or dying.

[2]This verse appears at the beginning of this prayer collection to invoke the primordial creative power of God’s word, setting a foundation for the subsequent promises and blessings.

[3]This selection of biblical verses creates a progression from divine creation to covenantal promises. The compiler has assembled verses that focus on divine blessing, protection, and covenant, making them appropriate for a prayer for the sick.

[4]In this liturgical context, the reference to mastery over brothers is likely interpreted metaphorically as triumph over afflictions or spiritual adversaries, rather than literally about familial relationships.

The verses address themes of divine protection, rescue from enemies, and ultimate triumph—all relevant metaphors for healing from illness. | Cf. Song of Songs 1:2, 4:1, 1:16, 2:6, 2:16, 4:16, 7:11, 8:6, Ruth 2:4, 4:14, Job 7:21, 16:17 — The verses from Writings, particularly from Song of Songs, introduce themes of divine love and intimate connection, providing emotional comfort beyond the more direct petitions for healing in other sections. The Song of Songs passages were often interpreted mystically as representing the loving relationship between God and Israel or the individual soul.

[i]This refers to the standard opening formula that begins each prayer sequence in Ma’avar Yabok, starting with ‘Ana Hashem hoshiah na’ (Please, O LORD, save us).

[ii]This is Psalm 13, which begins with ‘How long, O LORD, will You forget me?’ The psalm moves from expressions of abandonment to confidence in divine mercy, making it particularly appropriate for those experiencing serious illness.

[iii]Cf. Psalm 13 — This psalm is specifically prescribed as part of the first prayer sequence for the sick in Ma’avar Yabok, likely chosen for its movement from distress to hope, mirroring the desired spiritual journey of the ill person. | Cf. Ma’avar Yabok’s Seder section — This instruction follows the standard pattern found throughout the book’s prayer sequences, creating ritual continuity while offering specific psalm selections appropriate for different situations of illness.

[iv]This is the first biblical verse, Genesis 1:3, describing God’s creation of light.

[v]From Genesis 12:2, God’s promise to Abraham at the beginning of his journey.

[vi]From Genesis 17:7, establishing God’s eternal covenant with Abraham and his descendants.

[vii]From Genesis 9:7, God’s command to Noah and his sons after the flood.

[viii]From Genesis 27:29, Isaac’s blessing to Jacob (believing him to be Esau).

וַיְבָרֶךְ וְיַרְבֶּךָ וְהָיִיתָ לִקְהַל
עַמִּים: [i] אִם יִהְיֶה אֱלֹהִים עִמָּדִי
וּשְׁמָרַנִי בַּדֶּרֶךְ הַזֶּה אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי
הוֹלֵךְ וְנָתַן לִי לֶחֶם לֶאֱכֹל וּבֶגֶד
לִלְבֹּשׁ: [ii] וְשַׁבְתִּי בְשָׁלוֹם אֶל בֵּית
אָבִי וְהָיָה יְיָ לִי לֵאלֹהִים: [iii iv]

may El Shaddai bless you[1] and make you fruitful and multiply you, and you shall become an assembly of peoples. If God will be with me and guard me on this path that I am taking,[2] and give me bread to eat and clothing to wear, and I return in peace to my father's house, then the LORD will be my God.[3]

(נביאים) אָנֹכִי לַייָ אָנֹכִי
אָשִׁירָה [v] אֲזַמֵּר לַייָ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל:
עָלַץ לִבִּי בַּייָ בַּייָ רָמָה קַרְנִי
בַּייָ [vi] רָחַב פִּי עַל אוֹיְבַי כִּי
שָׂמַחְתִּי בִּישׁוּעָתֶךָ: אֵין קָדוֹשׁ
כַּייָ כִּי אֵין בִּלְתֶּךָ וְאֵין צוּר

(Prophets) I am the LORD's, I myself will sing,[A] I will make music to the LORD, the God of Israel. My heart exults in the LORD, my horn is exalted in the LORD,[4] my mouth is wide against my enemies,[B] for I rejoice in Your salvation. There is none holy like the LORD, for there is none besides You, and there

[A] Or: "I belong to the LORD, I myself will sing" — This alternate translation emphasizes the sense of belonging and dedication to God. The preposition 'lamed' in 'laYY' can indicate possession or dedication, so this rendering might better convey the sense of complete devotion expressed in the original.

[B] Or: "I speak boldly against my enemies" — This more idiomatic translation captures the sense of confident speech implied by the literal 'wide mouth' metaphor, which might be less immediately clear to modern readers.

[1] The name 'El Shaddai' (God Almighty) is particularly significant in healing contexts, as it represents God's power to overcome natural limitations, including illness.

[2] Jacob's vow is particularly meaningful in the context of illness, as it expresses hope for divine protection during a difficult journey and a safe return to normalcy.

[3] The collection concludes with this powerful statement of faith, suggesting that the experience of divine protection through illness can lead to a deeper relationship with God.

[4] The 'horn' metaphor appears frequently in biblical poetry to represent strength, dignity, and power. In Hannah's prayer, it refers to her restored honor and status after being blessed with a child.

[i] From Genesis 28:3, Isaac's blessing to Jacob before he leaves for Padan-aram.

[ii] From Genesis 28:20, beginning of Jacob's vow at Bethel after his dream of the ladder.

[iii] From Genesis 28:21, completion of Jacob's vow at Bethel, where he promises to accept God if safely returned home.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section 7.1.1.1.2.14 — The structure of presenting verses from Torah first, followed by prophetic verses and then writings, follows a pattern seen throughout Ma'avar Yabok's prayer orders. These verses are specifically chosen for their themes of divine blessing, protection, and covenant, making them appropriate for recitation by or for someone who is ill. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section 7.16.10 — This collection of Torah verses is part of a larger structured prayer system in Ma'avar Yabok, where verses are carefully selected and arranged to create therapeutic spiritual progressions from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation. | Cf. Genesis, Chapters 12, 17, 27, 28 — The compiler has carefully selected verses that emphasize God's promises of blessing, protection, and covenant with the Patriarchs. In the context of prayers for the sick, these verses serve to remind the sufferer of God's historical faithfulness to Israel and to invoke similar divine protection. The progression from Abraham to Jacob also creates a narrative of continuity that would comfort someone facing uncertainty due to illness. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Memory Note #411 — This collection of Torah verses follows the therapeutic progression described in the memory notes: beginning with fundamental statements of creation and divine power, moving through covenant promises and blessings, and concluding with expressions of faith and return. This structure models a spiritual journey that the ill person might follow, from basic faith through hope to thanksgiving.

[v] This verse comes from the Song of Deborah (Judges 5:3), a victory hymn celebrating Israel's triumph over the Canaanites. The repetition of 'anochi' (I) emphasizes personal devotion.

[vi] This begins Hannah's prayer of thanksgiving (1 Samuel 2:1-10) after the birth of Samuel. The 'horn' (קרן) is a biblical metaphor for strength, power, and dignity.

בֵּאלֹהֵינוּ: קֶשֶׁת גִּבֹּרִים חַתִּים
וְנִכְשָׁלִים אָזְרוּ חָיִל:[i] יְיָ מוֹרִישׁ
וּמַעֲשִׁיר מַשְׁפִּיל אַף מְרוֹמֵם:
אַל תִּירְאוּ וְאַל תֵּחַתּוּ חִזְקוּ
וְאִמְצוּ[ii] כִּי כָכָה יַעֲשֶׂה יְיָ לְכָל
אֹיְבֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר אַתֶּם נִלְחָמִים
אוֹתָם: כֵּן יֹאבְדוּ כָל אוֹיְבֶיךָ
יְהוָה וְאֹהֲבָיו כְּצֵאת הַשֶּׁמֶשׁ
בִּגְבֻרָתוֹ:[iii] לֹא יִתְיַצֵּב אִישׁ לְפָנֶיךָ
כֹּל יְמֵי חַיֶּיךָ כַּאֲשֶׁר הָיִיתִי עִם
מֹשֶׁה אֶהְיֶה עִמָּךְ לֹא אַרְפְּךָ וְלֹא
אֶעֱזָבֶךָ:[iv] [v]

is no rock like our God. The bows of the mighty are broken,[1] but those who stumbled are girded with strength. The LORD impoverishes and enriches,[2] He brings low, yet also raises up. Do not fear and do not be dismayed; be strong and courageous, for thus will the LORD do to all your enemies against whom you fight. So shall all Your enemies perish, O LORD, but those who love Him shall be as the sun going forth in its might.[3] No man shall stand before you all the days of your life; as I was with Moses, so I will be with you; I will not fail you nor forsake you. 215R 220R 225R

(תהלים) יְיָ בֹּקֶר תִּשְׁמַע קוֹלִי
בֹּקֶר אֶעֱרֶךְ לְךָ וַאֲצַפֶּה: בְּקָרְאִי
עֲנֵנִי אֱלֹהֵי צִדְקִי[vi] בַּצָּר הִרְחַבְתָּ

(Psalms) O LORD, in the morning You will hear my voice; in the morning I will arrange my prayer to You[A 4] and watch expectantly. When I call, an-

[A] Or: "I will set [my prayer] in order before You" — This more literal translation preserves the ritual connotation of deliberately arranging or setting in order, which connects to Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper ritual structure in prayer.

[1] Hannah's prayer contains several contrasts between the powerful and the weak, highlighting divine reversal of fortunes—a theme that would be particularly meaningful to those who are ill or dying.
[2] This verse emphasizes God's sovereignty over human circumstances, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework where suffering is understood as divinely ordained for spiritual purposes rather than random misfortune.
[3] This powerful image from the Song of Deborah contrasts the fate of God's enemies with the glorious destiny of those who love God, providing hope and encouragement to the sick or dying person.
[4] The Hebrew verb אֶעֱרֶךְ (literally 'I will arrange/set in order') suggests a deliberate, structured approach to prayer, implying careful preparation rather than spontaneous supplication—fitting for Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper ritual structure.

[i] This continues Hannah's prayer (1 Samuel 2:4), highlighting the divine reversal of fortunes where the mighty are weakened and the weak are strengthened.
[ii] This verse combines elements from Joshua 10:25, offering encouragement in the face of enemies.
[iii] This verse comes from the Song of Deborah (Judges 5:31), concluding her victory hymn with a prayer for the destruction of God's enemies and the flourishing of those who love Him.
[iv] This verse comes from God's promise to Joshua (Joshua 1:5), assuring divine presence and support in his leadership after Moses's death.
[v] Cf. Hannah's Prayer (1 Samuel 2:1-10) — Hannah's prayer is quoted here as it speaks directly to divine intervention in human suffering and the reversal of fortune. For the sick or dying, this offers hope that God can transform their circumstances, just as He transformed Hannah's from barrenness to motherhood. | Cf. Song of Deborah (Judges 5) — The Song of Deborah frames this prayer selection, beginning with dedication to God and concluding with the contrast between God's enemies who perish and those who love Him who shine like the sun. For the ill person, this creates a narrative of eventual triumph even in difficult circumstances. | Cf. God's Promise to Joshua (Joshua 1:5) — This promise of divine presence and support would be particularly meaningful for someone facing death or serious illness, assuring them that God will not abandon them during their transition, just as He did not abandon Joshua during a major transition in leadership. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework — These verses support Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework by emphasizing God's sovereignty over human circumstances—bringing low and raising up, weakening the strong and strengthening the weak. This helps the ill person contextualize their suffering within a purposeful divine plan rather than viewing it as random misfortune.
[vi] This verse from Psalm 4:2 emphasizes the plea for divine response in time of distress, a central theme for those who are ill and feel distant from divine presence.

לִי חָנֵּנִי וּשְׁמַע תְּפִלָּתִי: יְיָ נְחֵנִי
בְצִדְקָתֶךָ לְמַעַן שׁוֹרְרָי הַיְשֶׁר
לְפָנַי דַּרְכֶּךָ: וְיִשְׂמְחוּ כָל חוֹסֵי
בָךְ לְעוֹלָם יְרַנְּנוּ וְתָסֵךְ עֲלֵימוֹ
וְיַעְלְצוּ בְךָ אֹהֲבֵי שְׁמֶךָ: כִּי
אַתָּה תְּבָרֵךְ צַדִּיק יְיָ כַּצִּנָּה רָצוֹן
תַּעְטְרֶנּוּ: יְיָ מָה רַבּוּ צָרָי רַבִּים
קָמִים עָלָי: וְאַתָּה יְיָ מָגֵן בַּעֲדִי
כְּבוֹדִי וּמֵרִים רֹאשִׁי: חָנֵּנִי יְיָ כִּי
אֻמְלַל אָנִי רְפָאֵנִי יְיָ כִּי נִבְהֲלוּ
עֲצָמָי: סוּרוּ מִמֶּנִּי כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן
כִּי שָׁמַע יְהוָה קוֹל בִּכְיִי: מָגִנִּי
עַל אֱלֹהִים מוֹשִׁיעַ יִשְׁרֵי לֵב:
בֹּשׁוּ אוֹיְבַי אָחוֹר יִכָּשְׁלוּ וְיֹאבְדוּ
מִפָּנֶיךָ: כִּי עָשִׂיתָ מִשְׁפָּטִי וְדִינִי
יָשַׁבְתָּ לְכִסֵּא שׁוֹפֵט צֶדֶק: חָנֵּנִי יְיָ
רְאֵה עָנְיִי מִשֹּׂנְאָי מְרוֹמְמִי מִשַּׁעֲרֵי
מָוֶת:[i] וִיהִי יְיָ מִשְׂגָּב לַדָּךְ מִשְׂגָּב
לְעִתּוֹת בַּצָּרָה: לָמָּה יְיָ תַּעֲמֹד
בָּרָחוֹק תַּעְלִים לְעִתּוֹת בַּצָּרָה:
שְׁבֹר זְרוֹעַ רָשָׁע וָרָע תִּדְרוֹשׁ
רִשְׁעוֹ בַל תִּמְצָא: שִׁיתָה יְיָ מוֹרָה
לָהֶם יֵדְעוּ גוֹיִם אֱנוֹשׁ הֵמָּה סֶלָה:
יַכְרֵת יְיָ כָּל שִׂפְתֵי חֲלָקוֹת לָשׁוֹן
מְדַבֶּרֶת גְּדלוֹת: כִּי הִנֵּה הָרְשָׁעִים
יִדְרְכוּן קֶשֶׁת כּוֹנְנוּ חִצָּם עַל יֶתֶר
לִירוֹת בְּמוֹ אֹפֶל לְיִשְׁרֵי לֵב:
שִׁוִּיתִי יְיָ לְנֶגְדִּי תָמִיד כִּי מִימִינִי
בַּל אֶמּוֹט: שָׂמְחָה כְבוֹדִי אַף בְּשָׂרִי יִשְׁכֹּן לָבֶטַח
בִּצֵּל כְּנָפֶיךָ תַּסְתִּירֵנִי:[ii] מִלְּפָנֶיךָ
מִשְׁפָּטִי יֵצֵא עֵינֶיךָ תֶּחֱזֶינָה
מֵישָׁרִים: קוֹמָה יְיָ קַדְּמָה פָּנָיו
הַכְרִיעֵהוּ פַּלְּטָה נַפְשִׁי מֵרָשָׁע חַרְבֶּךָ: יְהוָה סַלְעִי וּמְצוּדָתִי

swer me, O God of my righteousness; in distress You have given me relief. Be gracious to me and hear my prayer. LORD, lead me in Your righteousness because of my enemies; make Your way straight before me.[1] Let all who take refuge in You rejoice; may they ever sing for joy. Spread Your protection over them, that those who love Your name may exult in You. For You, O LORD, bless the righteous; You surround him with favor as with a shield. LORD, how many are my foes! Many rise up against me. But You, O LORD, are a shield around me, my glory, and the One who lifts my head. Be gracious to me, O LORD, for I am weak; heal me, O LORD, for my bones are troubled.[2] Depart from me, all you workers of iniquity, for the LORD has heard the voice of my weeping. My shield is with God, who saves the upright in heart. When my enemies turn back, they stumble and perish before You. For You have maintained my just cause; You sit on the throne judging righteously. Be gracious to me, O LORD; see my affliction from those who hate me, You who lift me up from the gates of death. The LORD is a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble. Why, O LORD, do You stand far off? Why do You hide in times of trouble? Break the arm of the wicked and evil; seek out his wickedness until You find none. Set terror upon them, O LORD; let the nations know they are but mortal men. Selah. May the LORD cut off all flattering lips, the tongue that speaks great things. For behold, the wicked bend the bow; they set their arrow on the string to shoot in darkness at the upright in heart. I have set the LORD always before me;[A] because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved. Keep me as the apple

230R 235R 240R 245R 250R 255R 260R

[A] Or: "I place the LORD before me continually" — This alternate translation emphasizes the ongoing, active nature of the spiritual practice rather than a completed action, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on continuous spiritual awareness, particularly at the time of death.

[1] This request for divine guidance has special significance in Ma'avar Yabok's context of illness and approaching death, where clarity of spiritual path becomes especially crucial.

[2] The reference to troubled bones (נִבְהֲלוּ עֲצָמָי) would have particular resonance in Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic framework, where bones represent the deepest, most essential parts of a person that remain even after death and serve as the foundation for resurrection.

[i] The phrase 'gates of death' represents the threshold between this world and the next, a concept central to Ma'avar Yabok's focus on the soul's transition. In the context of prayers for the sick, being lifted from these gates symbolizes healing and renewed life.

[ii] The metaphor of 'taking refuge under God's wings' (בְּסֵתֶר כְּנָפֶיךָ) is a recurring motif in Ma'avar Yabok that represents the soul finding protection under the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), particularly relevant during illness or approaching death.

וּמַפַּלְטִי אֵלִי צוּרִי אֶחֱסֶה בּוֹ
מָגִנִּי וְקֶרֶן יִשְׁעִי מִשְׂגַּבִּי: מְהֻלָּל
אֶקְרָא יְיָ וּמִן אוֹיְבַי אִוָּשֵׁעַ: בַּצַּר לִי
אֶקְרָא יְיָ וְאֶל אֱלֹהַי אֲשַׁוֵּעַ יִשְׁמַע
מֵהֵיכָלוֹ קוֹלִי וְשַׁוְעָתִי לְפָנָיו
תָּבוֹא בְאָזְנָיו: יַצִּילֵנִי מֵאוֹיְבִי עָז
וּמִשֹּׂנְאַי כִּי אָמְצוּ מִמֶּנִּי: יְקַדְּמוּנִי
בְיוֹם אֵידִי וַיְהִי יְהוָה לְמִשְׁעָן לִי:
וַיּוֹצִיאֵנִי לַמֶּרְחָב יַחַלְצֵנִי כִּי חָפֵץ
בִּי: כִּי אַתָּה תָּאִיר נֵרִי[i] יְהוָה
אֱלֹהַי יַגִּיהַּ חָשְׁכִּי: שָׁמַע יְיָ תְּחִנָּתִי
יְיָ תְּפִלָּתִי יִקָּח: יֵבֹשׁוּ וְיִבָּהֲלוּ מְאֹד
כָּל אוֹיְבָי יָשֻׁבוּ יֵבֹשׁוּ רָגַע: חַי יְיָ
וּבָרוּךְ צוּרִי וְיָרֹם אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׁעִי:[ii]

of Your eye;[1] hide me in the shadow of Your wings. Let my judgment come forth from Your presence; let Your eyes behold what is right. Arise, O LORD! Confront him, bring him low! Deliver my soul from the wicked with Your sword.[A] The LORD is my rock and my fortress and my deliverer; my God, my rock, in whom I take refuge, my shield and the horn of my salvation, my stronghold. I call upon the LORD, who is worthy to be praised, and I am saved from my enemies. In my distress I call upon the LORD; to my God I cry for help. From His temple He hears my voice, and my cry comes before Him, into His ears. He delivers me from my strong enemy and from those who hate me, for they are too mighty for me. They confronted me in the day of my calamity, but the LORD was my support. He brought me out into a broad place;[2] He rescued me, because He delighted in me. For You light my lamp; the LORD my God illuminates my darkness. The LORD has heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer. Let all my enemies be ashamed and greatly troubled; let them turn back and be put to shame suddenly. The LORD lives, and blessed be my Rock; may the God of my salvation be exalted.

[A] Or: "Rescue my soul from the wicked, [from] Your sword" — This alternative reading interprets 'Your sword' as in apposition to 'the wicked' rather than as the instrument of deliverance. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this could suggest the dual nature of divine judgment—as both protection for the righteous and punishment for the wicked.

[1] The Hebrew phrase כְּאִישׁוֹן בַּת עָיִן literally refers to the pupil of the eye, using the intimate imagery of something guarded with the most protective care possible—a powerful metaphor in prayers for divine protection of the vulnerable ill.

[2] The Hebrew term לַמֶּרְחָב (broad place) stands in contrast to the constriction (צַר/distress) mentioned earlier, representing the relief and expansion of spiritual possibility that comes with divine deliverance—a key concept in Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of healing.

[i] The lamp imagery connects to Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic understanding of the soul as a divine light, with illness representing a dimming that requires divine illumination to restore brightness.

[ii] Cf. Psalms 5, 3, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, 18 — This passage is a compilation of verses from multiple Psalms (primarily 5, 3, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, and 18) that have been assembled as part of a structured prayer sequence for the sick. The verses create a therapeutic progression from expressions of distress to declarations of trust in divine salvation, reflecting Ma'avar Yabok's approach to spiritual healing. | Cf. Shema prayer recitation — The verse 'I have set the LORD always before me' (שִׁוִּיתִי יְיָ לְנֶגְדִּי תָמִיד) appears in this prayer sequence and is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's deathbed rituals, where it connects to the Shema prayer and proper kavvanah (intention) at the moment of death. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' prayer sequences — This compilation of verses follows the standard pattern seen throughout Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' section, which contains eight distinct liturgical sequences for healing the sick and comforting the dying. The verses are carefully selected and arranged to create a therapeutic spiritual progression from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation.

(כתובים) יִשָּׁקֵנִי מִנְּשִׁיקוֹת פִּיהוּ
כִּי טוֹבִים דֹּדֶיךָ מִיָּיִן: הִנָּךְ יָפָה
רַעְיָתִי הִנָּךְ יָפָה עֵינַיִךְ יוֹנִים: הִנָּךְ
יָפֶה דוֹדִי אַף נָעִים אַף עַרְשֵׂנוּ
רַעֲנָנָה: שְׂמֹאלוֹ תַּחַת לְרֹאשִׁי
וימינו וימינוֹ תְּחַבְּקֵנִי: דּוֹדִי לִי וַאֲנִי
לוֹ הָרֹעֶה בַּשּׁוֹשַׁנִּים: עוּרִי צָפוֹן
וּבוֹאִי תֵימָן הָפִיחִי גַּנִּי יִזְּלוּ
בְשָׂמָיו יָבֹא דוֹדִי לְגַנּוֹ וְיֹאכַל
פְּרִי מִגְדָּיו: אֲנִי לְדוֹדִי וְעָלַי
תְּשׁוּקָתוֹ: שִׂימֵנִי כַחוֹתָם עַל לִבֶּךָ
כַּחוֹתָם עַל זְרוֹעֶךָ כִּי עַזָּה כַמָּוֶת
אַהֲבָה קָשָׁה כִשְׁאוֹל קִנְאָה רְשָׁפֶיהָ
רִשְׁפֵּי אֵשׁ שַׁלְהֶבֶתְיָה:[i] הַיּוֹשֶׁבֶת
בַּגַּנִּים[ii] חֲבֵרִים מַקְשִׁיבִים לְקוֹלֵךְ
הַשְׁמִיעִינִי: יְיָ עִמָּכֶם וַיֹּאמְרוּ לוֹ
יְבָרֶכְךָ יְיָ:[iii] בָּרוּךְ יְיָ אֲשֶׁר לֹא
הִשְׁבִּית לָךְ גֹּאֵל הַיּוֹם וְיִקָּרֵא
שְׁמוֹ בְיִשְׂרָאֵל:[iv] בֹּקֶר קָרָאתִיךְ
וְלֹא אֶחֱשֶׁה וְלֵילָה וְלֹא דוּמִיָּה
לִי:[v] רִנָּתִי תַּחֲשֹׁב קְטוֹרֶת
וְזִבְחֵי שְׁלָמִים קוֹלִי:[vi] רְצֵה
בְעַמְּךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל וּבִתְפִלַּת חִין

Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth,[1] for your love is better than wine. Behold, you are beautiful, my beloved, behold, you are beautiful; your eyes are like doves. Behold, you are handsome, my 290R beloved, indeed pleasant; our couch is also verdant.
His left hand is under my head, and his right hand embraces me. My beloved is mine and I am his, he who shepherds among the lilies. Awake, north wind, and come, south wind! Blow upon my garden, let its 295R spices flow forth. Let my beloved come to his garden and eat its choice fruits. I am my beloved's, and his desire is for me. Set me as a seal upon your heart, as a seal upon your arm, for love is as strong as death, jealousy as cruel as the grave; its flashes are flashes 300R of fire, the very flame of the LORD.[A] O you who dwells in the gardens, companions are listening for your voice, let me hear it. The LORD be with you!
And they said to him, May the LORD bless you!
Blessed be the LORD, who has not left you without 305R
a redeemer today, and may his name be proclaimed in Israel.[2] In the morning I call to You and will not be silent, and at night I have no rest. May my joyful song be considered as incense and my voice as peace

[A] Or: "its flames are flames of fire, a mighty divine blaze" — The term "שַׁלְהֶבֶתְיָה" is a compound of "flame" with the divine suffix "Yah." This alternative translation captures the divine intensity without directly naming the LORD, which some might prefer for a more poetic rendering.

[1] The text begins with famous verses from Song of Songs, which in Jewish mystical tradition symbolize the intimate relationship between God and Israel, or in Ma'avar Yabok's context, between the divine and the soul. These sensual images were understood as metaphors for spiritual communion.

[2] The prayer transitions here from the intimate language of Song of Songs to communal blessings from the Book of Ruth, moving from personal devotion to communal connection.

[i] The term "שַׁלְהֶבֶתְיָה" (shalhebetya) is unique in the Hebrew Bible, appearing only in Song of Songs 8:6. It combines "שַׁלְהֶבֶת" (flame) with the divine suffix "יָה" (Yah), suggesting "flame of the LORD"—a divine flame of extraordinary intensity.

[ii] This verse from Song of Songs 8:13 addresses the female beloved as "she who dwells in the gardens." In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this likely refers to the soul dwelling in spiritual realms.

[iii] This verse is from Ruth 2:4, describing the greeting between Boaz and his harvesters. Its inclusion in this prayer sequence creates a connection between divine blessing and communal support.

[iv] This verse from Ruth 4:14 was originally spoken by the women to Naomi after the birth of Obed (grandfather of King David). In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it evokes themes of redemption and continuity.

[v] This appears to be a paraphrase or variation of Psalm 22:3 ("O my God, I cry by day, but you do not answer, and by night, but I find no rest") reworked into a more positive expression of continuous prayer.

[vi] This verse draws on the concept from Psalm 141:2 of prayer being like incense and sacrifice, but is adapted to include peace offerings (zivchei shelamim), suggesting the prayer serves as a substitute for Temple offerings.

בְּמִנְחַת הַבֹּקֶר תִּשְׁמַע פְּלוּלִי:[i] קוֹלִי בַּבֹּקֶר: יִהְיוּ לְרָצוֹן אִמְרֵי פִי וְהֶגְיוֹן לִבִּי לְפָנֶיךָ יְיָ צוּרִי וְגוֹאֲלִי: [ii] offerings.[1] Accept Your people Israel and my prayer offered with grace.[A] Hear my voice in the morning as the morning offering. May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You, O LORD, my Rock and my Redeemer.[2]

310R

315R

אחר שגמר כל סדר וסדר יאמר[iii] פסוקים אלו ערב ובקר:[iv]

After completing each order and arrangement,[B] he shall recite these verses evening and morning:[3]

יֶעֱרַב עָלָיו שִׂיחִי אָנֹכִי אֶשְׂמַח בַּיהוָה: אַל תִּתֵּן יְיָ מַאֲוֵי רָשָׁע זִמָּמוֹ אַל תְּפַק רָרוּמוּ סֶלָה: שְׁבֹר זְרוֹעַ רָשָׁע וָרָע תִּדְרוֹשׁ רִשְׁעוֹ בַּל תִּמְצָא: הַצִּילֵנִי נָא מִיַּד אָחִי

May my meditation be pleasing to Him; I will rejoice in the LORD. Do not grant, O LORD, the desires of the wicked; do not let their plots succeed, lest they be exalted. Selah. Break the arm of the wicked and evil; seek out his wickedness until You find none. De-

320R

[A] Or: "and the judicial prayer of my supplications" — The term "פְּלוּלִי" could be connected to "פלילים" (judges/judgment), suggesting a more formal, legalistic aspect to the prayer. This alternative emphasizes the juridical dimension that might be implied in the original.

[B] Or: "After finishing each prayer sequence" — This alternate translation uses more contemporary terminology to convey that these are structured prayer sequences rather than a literal 'order and arrangement.' This might be more immediately clear to modern readers unfamiliar with traditional Jewish liturgical terminology.

[1] This section reflects the post-Temple theology that prayer serves as a substitute for sacrificial offerings, a concept central to Ma'avar Yabok's fourth section titled "Eter Anan HaKetoret" (Cloud of Incense Prayer).

[2] The prayer concludes with the familiar ending of Psalm 19:15, a standard closing for many Jewish prayers. This creates a liturgical arc from the intimate divine union of Song of Songs through communal blessing to personal supplication.

[3] The phrase 'ערב ובקר' (evening and morning) indicates that these concluding verses should be recited at both evening and morning prayer times, establishing a cyclical practice that frames the day with these protective verses.

[i] The phrase "תְּפִלַּת חִן פְּלוּלִי" (prayer of grace offered) is unusual and may be from a piyyut (liturgical poem) rather than biblical text. It emphasizes the desire for prayer to be accepted with divine favor.

[ii] Cf. Song of Songs — The extensive quotations from Song of Songs are not random but carefully selected to emphasize themes of divine-human intimacy. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses serve as spiritual preparation for the soul's transition at death, reframing death not as separation but as intimate union with the Divine. | Cf. Ruth — The inclusion of verses from Ruth about blessing and redemption connects personal spiritual experience with communal blessing and continuity, suggesting that the soul's journey after death is not isolated but connected to the community of Israel. | Cf. Psalm 141:2 — The allusion to prayer as incense reflects the central theme of Ma'avar Yabok's fourth section that prayer serves as a substitute for Temple offerings. This establishes continuity between ancient Temple worship and contemporary prayer practices. | Cf. Psalm 19:15 — The use of this common closing verse from Psalms grounds the mystical expressions in traditional liturgy, making this spiritually advanced text accessible to ordinary worshippers while maintaining connection to standard prayer forms.

[iii] The term 'seder' here refers to one of the eight structured prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok designed for the sick and dying. Each 'seder' follows a similar pattern of opening prayers, psalms, biblical verses organized by source, and concluding prayers.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' section — This line serves as a liturgical instruction within the 'Seder' section of Ma'avar Yabok that contains eight distinct prayer sequences for the sick and dying. Each sequence follows a similar structure with opening prayers, psalms, biblical verses organized by source, and concluding prayers. This instruction specifically indicates that certain verses should be recited at the end of each prayer sequence, both in evening and morning prayers.

מִיַּד עֵשָׂו כִּי יָרֵא אָנֹכִי אֹתוֹ פֶּן
יָבֹא וְהִכַּנִי אֵם עַל בָּנִים: [i] וְאַתָּה
אָמַרְתָּ הֵיטֵב אֵיטִיב עִמָּךְ וְשַׂמְתִּי
אֶת זַרְעֲךָ כְּחוֹל הַיָּם אֲשֶׁר לֹא
יִסָּפֵר מֵרֹב: תּוֹצִיאֵנִי מֵרֶשֶׁת זוּ
טָמְנוּ לִי כִּי אַתָּה מָעֻזִּי: בְּיָדְךָ
אַפְקִיד רוּחִי פָּדִיתָה אוֹתִי יְיָ אֵל
אֱמֶת: לִישׁוּעָתְךָ קִוִּיתִי יְהוָה:
(ישר הפוך ישר: וכן) לְפָרְקָנְךָ
סַבְּרִית יְיָ: [ii] מָה תִּשְׁתּוֹחֲחִי נַפְשִׁי
וּמָה תֶּהֱמִי עָלַי הוֹחִילִי לֵאלֹהִים
כִּי עוֹד אוֹדֶנּוּ יְשׁוּעֹת פָּנַי וֵאלֹהָי:
אִתָּה סֵתֶר לִי מִצַּר תִּצְּרֵנִי רָנֵּי
פַלֵּט תְּסוֹבְבֵנִי סֶלָה: מְיֻמְּנִי
מִיכָאֵל מְשַׁמְּאלִי גַּבְרִיאֵל מִלְּפָנַי
אוּרִיאֵל וּמֵאֲחוֹרַי רָפָאֵל וְעַל
רֵאשִׁי שְׁכִינַת אֵל: [iii] בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בַּיּוֹם
בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בַּלַּיְלָה: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בְּשָׁכְבֵנוּ
בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בְּקוּמֵנוּ: בָּרוּךְ אֲדֹנָי יוֹם
יוֹם יַעֲמָס לָנוּ הָאֵל יְשׁוּעָתֵנוּ סֶלָה:
יְיָ זְכָרָנוּ יְבָרֵךְ יְבָרֵךְ אֶת בֵּית
יִשְׂרָאֵל יְבָרֵךְ אֶת בֵּית אַהֲרֹן: וְהָיָה
שַׁדַּי בְּצָרֶיךָ וְכֶסֶף תּוֹעָפוֹת לָךְ:
שַׁדַּי בָּרְכֵנוּ וְנִחֵנוּ: וַאֲנַחְנוּ נְבָרֵךְ liver me, please, from my brother's hand, from Esau's hand, for I fear him, lest he come and strike me down, mothers with children.[1] But You said, "I will surely do good with you and make your offspring like the 325R sand of the sea, which cannot be counted for multitude." Bring me out from the net they have hidden for me, for You are my stronghold. Into Your hand I commit my spirit; You have redeemed me, O LORD, God of truth.[2] For Your salvation I have waited, 330R

O LORD. (Forward, reverse, forward: and so[A]) For Your redemption I have hoped, O LORD.[3] Why are you downcast, O my soul, and why do you moan within me? Hope in God, for I shall yet praise Him, the salvation of my countenance and my God. You 335R are my hiding place; You preserve me from trouble; You surround me with songs of deliverance. Selah. On my right is Michael, on my left is Gabriel, before me is Uriel, behind me is Raphael, and above my head is the Divine Presence of God.[4] Blessed is the 340R
LORD by day, blessed is the LORD by night. Blessed is the LORD when we lie down, blessed is the LORD when we rise. Blessed is the Lord God day by day; He bears our burdens, the God of our salvation. Selah. The LORD has remembered us; He will bless, He 345R

[A] Or: "To be recited forward, then backward, then forward again" — This alternative more explicitly clarifies the liturgical instruction that might otherwise be obscure to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic prayer practices.

[1] The inclusion of Jacob's prayer at the Jabbok River is particularly significant given the book's title (Ma'avar Yabok/Crossing of the Jabbok). In the context of deathbed prayers, Jacob's fear of Esau becomes a metaphor for the dying person's fear of judgment or harmful spiritual forces during the soul's transition.

[2] This verse from Psalm 31:6 is identified in Ma'avar Yabok as a central verse in the deathbed ritual, recommended to be recited at the moment of death as an expression of the soul's surrender to divine care.

[3] This represents a kabbalistic practice where the Hebrew verse is recited forward, then backward, then forward again, followed by its Aramaic translation. Such practices were believed to create powerful spiritual effects through the manipulation of sacred language.

[4] This angelic protection formula appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok and is a central element in Jewish deathbed rituals. It creates a spiritual shield around the dying person, with angels stationed at the four directions and the Divine Presence above, providing complete protection during the soul's transition.

[i] This verse from Jacob's prayer before meeting Esau (Genesis 32:12) directly connects to the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Jabbok), as it was spoken during Jacob's journey across the Jabbok River. The book uses this crossing as a metaphor for the soul's transition at death.

[ii] The phrase "ישר הפוך ישר" (forward, reverse, forward) appears to be an instruction for a kabbalistic practice where the same verse is recited in Hebrew forward, then backward, then forward again. The phrase "לְפָרְקָנְךָ סַבְּרִית יְיָ" is the Aramaic translation of "לִישׁוּעָתְךָ קִוִּיתִי יְהוָה" (For Your salvation I have waited, O LORD).

[iii] This is a traditional Jewish protective formula invoking the four archangels positioned at the four directions, with the Divine Presence above. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this formula creates a spiritual shield around the dying person to protect their soul during its transition.

יְהוָה מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ: ג׳
310 [ii] [i]פעמים

will bless the house of Israel, He will bless the house of Aaron. And the Almighty shall be your treasure, and choice silver shall be yours. May Shaddai bless us, and we shall live.[A] And we will bless the LORD from this time forth and forevermore. Hallelujah! [Three times] 350R

רִבּוֹן כָּל הָעוֹלָמִים[iii] עֲשֵׂה רְצוֹנְךָ בַּשָּׁמַיִם וְתֵן נַחַת רוּחַ לִירֵאֶיךָ בָּאָרֶץ וּשְׁמַע וַעֲקַת עַבְדְּךָ וְעַמְּךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל וַעֲשֵׂה מְהֵרָה בְּקָשָׁתָם וְהַטּוֹב בְּעֵינֶיךָ עֲשֵׂה: עֲנֵנוּ אָבִינוּ
315 עֲנֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ מַלְכֵּנוּ עֲנֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ עֶזְרֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ סוֹמְכֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ:[iv] עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן שִׁמְךָ הַגָּדוֹל הַגִּבּוֹר וְהַנּוֹרָא: עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן בְּנֵי בֵיתִי הַתְּלוּיִם
320 עַל רַחֲמֶיךָ: עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן הֶבֶל הַתִּנּוֹקוֹת שֶׁל בֵּית רַבָּן:[v] עֲשֵׂה

Master of all worlds, do Your will in heaven and grant satisfaction to those who fear You on earth. Hear the cry of Your servant and Your people Israel, and quickly fulfill their request, and do what is good in Your eyes. Answer us, our Father, answer us. Answer us, our King, answer us. Answer us, our Helper, answer us. Answer us, our Supporter, answer us. Act for the sake of Your great, mighty, and awesome Name.[1] Act for the sake of my household members who depend on Your mercy. Act for the sake of the breath of the schoolchildren.[2] Act for the sake of the 355R 360R

[A] Or: "May the Almighty bless us that we may live" — This alternative emphasizes the causal relationship between the divine blessing and continued life, which may better capture the sense of dependence on divine blessing for sustenance that underlies the Hebrew.

[1] This phrase echoes the language used in the first blessing of the Amidah prayer, drawing on Deuteronomy 10:17, which describes God using these three attributes.

[2] The Hebrew term "hevel" (breath) has deep significance here, referring not just to physical breath

[i] This instruction indicates that the preceding phrase "וַאֲנַחְנוּ נְבָרֵךְ יָהּ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ" (And we will bless the LORD from this time forth and forevermore. Hallelujah!) should be recited three times, a practice believed to strengthen its spiritual efficacy.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 104:34 — This opening sets a prayerful tone for the passage, expressing the desire that one's prayers be accepted by God. | Cf. Psalm 140:9 — Used here as a plea for protection against spiritual enemies or accusers at the time of death. | Cf. Psalm 10:15 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this serves as a prayer for protection against harmful spiritual forces during the soul's transition. | Cf. Genesis 32:12 — This reference is particularly significant as it directly connects to the book's title (Ma'avar Yabok/Crossing of the Jabbok), drawing on Jacob's prayer before his transformative experience at the Jabbok River, which serves as a metaphor for the soul's transition at death. | Cf. Psalm 31:5-6 — The verse 'Into Your hand I commit my spirit' is particularly significant in deathbed contexts, traditionally recited at the moment of death as an expression of the soul's surrender to divine care. | Cf. Psalm 42:6 — Used to comfort the dying person by encouraging their soul not to fear the transition but to maintain hope in God. | Cf. Psalm 32:7 — Reinforces the theme of divine protection during the vulnerable moment of death. | Cf. Angelic Protection Formula — This formula creates a spiritual shield around the dying person, with angels stationed at the four directions and the Divine Presence above, providing complete protection during the soul's transition. | Cf. Psalm 68:20 — Used to affirm God's constant protection and support through all circumstances, including death. | Cf. Psalm 115:12 — Invoked to secure divine blessing for the person and their family lineage (house of Israel).

[iii] This opening phrase "Master of all worlds" is a common formula in Jewish prayers, addressing God in His capacity as sovereign over all creation. It appears frequently in liturgical texts, particularly in supplicatory prayers.

[iv] This repetitive formula "Answer us" (anenu) echoes liturgical patterns found in fast day prayers, especially the Anenu prayer recited on public fast days. The repetition creates a rhythmic, urgent appeal that intensifies the supplication.

[v] The reference to "the breath of schoolchildren" draws on the Talmudic concept (Shabbat 119b) that the world is sustained by the breath of children studying Torah, which is considered pure and untainted by sin. This is a powerful appeal in Jewish tradition, suggesting that God should respond favorably for the sake of these innocent learners.

לְמַעַן גְּמוּלֵי חָלָב שֶׁלֹּא חָטְאוּ:
עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן יוֹנְקֵי שָׁדַיִם שֶׁלֹּא
פָּשְׁעוּ: עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן רַחֲמֶיךָ הָרַבִּים
וַחֲסָדֶיךָ הַגְּדוֹלִים וְרַחֵם עָלֵינוּ
וְהוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ: יִהְיוּ לְרָצוֹן אִמְרֵי
פִי וְהֶגְיוֹן לִבִּי לְפָנֶיךָ יְיָ צוּרִי
וְגוֹאֲלִי:[i][ii]

weaned infants who have not sinned. Act for the sake of the nursing babes who hav[1]e not transgressed. Act for the sake of Your abundant mercies and Your great kindnesses, and have compassion upon us and save us. May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You,[2] O LORD, my Rock and my Redeemer.

365R

ואם ידמע[iii] יאמר קודם יהיו
לרצון[iv] אלו הפסוקים:

If one sheds tears,[3] he should recite these verses before "May they be acceptable"[4]:

370R

סוּרוּ מִמֶּנִּי כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן[v] כִּי
שָׁמַע יְהוָה קוֹל בִּכְיִי: נֹדִי סָפַרְתָּה
אָתָּה שִׂימָה דִמְעָתִי בְנֹאדֶךָ[vi] הֲלֹא

Depart from me, all you workers of iniquity,[5] for the LORD has heard the voice of my weeping. You have counted my wanderings;[A] place my tears in Your

[A] Or: "You have recorded my restless movements" — The Hebrew term 'נדי' can refer to wanbut to the spiritual essence of the children's Torah study. The Talmud (Shabbat 119b) states that the world exists because of the breath of schoolchildren studying Torah.

[1] This appeal invokes the merit of young children who are considered entirely innocent. The progression from schoolchildren to weaned infants to nursing babes creates a rhetorical movement toward increasing innocence and purity, strengthening the appeal to divine mercy.

[2] This concluding verse from Psalm 19:15 is traditionally recited at the end of the Amidah prayer. Its inclusion here frames this supplication within the broader context of Jewish prayer traditions and suggests this text was intended for recitation in contexts of serious need or distress.

[3] Weeping during prayer had special significance in Jewish mystical tradition, particularly in Ma'avar Yabok's context of prayers for the sick and dying. Tears were believed to have the power to open the gates of heaven and elicit divine mercy.

[4] This phrase refers to the standard concluding verse of Jewish prayer, "May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You, O LORD, my rock and my redeemer" (Psalm 19:15). The instruction indicates that these special verses should be inserted just before this concluding formula.

[5] This opening line establishes a protective boundary between the supplicant and negative forces, whether understood as human enemies or spiritual accusers.

[i] This verse comes from Psalm 19:15 and is used to conclude many prayers in Jewish liturgy, including the Amidah (central standing prayer). Its placement here signals the conclusion of this supplicatory section.

[ii] Cf. Talmud Shabbat 119b — By invoking the breath of schoolchildren, this prayer draws on a well-established Jewish tradition that emphasizes the spiritual power and purity of children engaged in Torah study. This reference would resonate strongly with the intended audience, who would understand it as an especially powerful plea before God. | Cf. Fast day liturgy (Ta'anit prayers) — The repetitive structure of 'Answer us' in this prayer mirrors the liturgical patterns used on fast days, suggesting this prayer was intended for times of serious distress when immediate divine intervention was sought. This creates a sense of urgency and intensity in the supplication. | Cf. Psalm 19:15 — By concluding with this familiar verse from Psalms, the prayer situates itself within established Jewish liturgical tradition and gives it the formal structure of a complete prayer unit suitable for recitation in communal or individual settings.

[iii] This refers to crying or shedding tears during prayer, which was considered spiritually significant in Jewish mystical tradition. Tears during prayer were often viewed as particularly powerful in accessing divine mercy.

[iv] This phrase refers to the concluding verse of the Amidah prayer, "May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable to You, O LORD, my rock and my redeemer" (Psalm 19:15), which typically marks the end of personal prayers.

[v] This phrase is from Psalm 6:9, expressing the psalmist's confidence that God has heard his prayer, allowing him to dismiss his enemies.

[vi] From Psalm 56:9, this poetic image depicts God collecting the suppliant's tears in a bottle or flask (נאד), a powerful metaphor for divine compassion and remembrance of human suffering.

בְּסִפְרָתֶךָ: יְיָ צְבָאוֹת עִמָּנוּ מִשְׂגָּב
לָנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב סֶלָה:[i] יְיָ צְבָאוֹת
אַשְׁרֵי אָדָם בֹּטֵחַ בָּךְ: יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה
[iii] הַמֶּלֶךְ [ii] יַעֲנֵנוּ בְיוֹם קָרְאֵנוּ:

flask.[1] Are they not in Your book? The LORD of hosts is with us;[2] the God of Jacob is our stronghold, Selah. O LORD of hosts, blessed is the man who trusts in You. Save us, O LORD; may the King answer us on the day we call.[A]

[v] [iv] סדר יום ראשון למנחה

Order for Sunday Afternoon Prayer[3]

יאמר פסוקי אנה ה׳ ואחר כך
יאמר זה:

Say the verses of "Ana Hashem" and afterwards say this:

(תהלים יח) לַמְנַצֵּחַ לְעֶבֶד יְיָ
לְדָוִד אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר לַיְיָ אֶת־דִּבְרֵי
הַשִּׁירָה הַזֹּאת בְּיוֹם הִצִּיל־יְיָ
אוֹתוֹ מִכַּף כָּל־אֹיְבָיו וּמִיַּד
שָׁאוּל: וַיֹּאמַר אֶרְחָמְךָ יְיָ חִזְקִי:
יְיָ סַלְעִי וּמְצוּדָתִי וּמְפַלְטִי אֵלִי
צוּרִי אֶחֱסֶה־בּוֹ מָגִנִּי וְקֶרֶן־יִשְׁעִי
מִשְׂגַּבִּי: מְהֻלָּל אֶקְרָא יְיָ וּמִן־אֹיְבַי

(Psalm 18) For the Leader. A Psalm of David the servant of the LORD, who spoke to the LORD the words of this song on the day that the LORD delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul. And he said: I love You, O LORD, my strength. The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer; my God, my rock, in whom I take refuge; my shield, and the horn of my salvation, my dering, but in the context of illness might better convey the restless movements of someone in physical discomfort.

[A] Or: "O LORD, save! May the King answer us on the day we call" — This alternative translation more directly follows the Hebrew syntax, with 'הוֹשִׁיעָה' as an imperative ('save!') followed by the subject change to the King in the third person.

[1] This powerful metaphor depicts God collecting and preserving human tears, suggesting that no suffering goes unnoticed. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this image would be particularly comforting to the sick or dying person.

[2] The divine title 'LORD of hosts' (YHVH Tzeva'ot) invokes God as commander of celestial armies, suggesting divine protection during the vulnerable time of illness or approaching death.

[3] This heading introduces the liturgical sequence to be recited during the afternoon (Mincha) prayer on Sunday when visiting the sick. It follows Ma'avar Yabok's systematic organization of prayers by days of the week, with each day having specific morning and afternoon services tailored for those attending to the ill or dying.

[i] This verse from Psalm 46:8 employs the divine name 'LORD of hosts' (יְיָ צְבָאוֹת), emphasizing God's military might as a protector.

[ii] This is an adaptation of Psalm 20:10. The apostrophes before the last three words may indicate a special emphasis or intention (kavvanah) for these words in the prayer context.

[iii] Cf. Psalm 6:9 — By quoting this verse in the context of prayers for the sick, Ma'avar Yabok draws on the tradition of seeking divine protection during physical suffering. The psalm moves from distress to confidence that God has heard the prayer. | Cf. Psalm 56:9 — The image of God collecting tears in a flask would be particularly meaningful in the context of illness and death, suggesting that divine compassion encompasses even the most vulnerable moments of human suffering. | Cf. Psalm 46:8 — This reference invokes divine protection through celestial armies (צְבָאוֹת/hosts), providing spiritual comfort that the sick person is not alone but protected by divine forces. | Cf. Psalm 20:10 — This verse frames the entire prayer with a direct petition for salvation, appropriate for someone in physical distress seeking divine intervention.

[iv] This is a heading indicating the beginning of the afternoon (Mincha) prayer service for the first day of visiting or attending to a sick person. In Ma'avar Yabok, prayers are organized by days of the week, with specific liturgical sequences for morning and afternoon services.

[v] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, root.7.1.1.1.2 — This heading marks the beginning of the afternoon prayer service for Sunday, following the book's systematic arrangement of daily prayers for the sick. These prayers are part of a comprehensive framework that integrates kabbalistic concepts with practical care for the ill.

אוֹשָׁעַ׃ אֲפָפוּנִי חֶבְלֵי־מָוֶת וְנַחֲלֵי
בְלִיַּעַל יבעתוני׃ חֶבְלֵי שְׁאוֹל
סְבָבוּנִי קִדְּמוּנִי מוֹקְשֵׁי מָוֶת׃
בַּצַּר־לִי אֶקְרָא יְיָ וְאֶל־אֱלֹהַי
אֲשַׁוֵּעַ יִשְׁמַע מֵהֵיכָלוֹ קוֹלִי
וְשַׁוְעָתִי לְפָנָיו תָּבוֹא בְאָזְנָיו׃
וַתִּגְעַשׁ וַתִּרְעַשׁ הָאָרֶץ וּמוֹסְדֵי
הָרִים יִרְגָּזוּ וַיִּתְגָּעֲשׁוּ כִּי־חָרָה
לוֹ׃ עָלָה עָשָׁן בְּאַפּוֹ וְאֵשׁ־מִפִּיו
תֹּאכֵל גֶּחָלִים בָּעֲרוּ מִמֶּנּוּ׃ וַיֵּט
שָׁמַיִם וַיֵּרַד וַעֲרָפֶל תַּחַת רַגְלָיו׃
וַיִּרְכַּב עַל־כְּרוּב וַיָּעָף וַיֵּדֶא
עַל־כַּנְפֵי־רוּחַ׃ יָשֶׁת חֹשֶׁךְ סִתְרוֹ
סְבִיבוֹתָיו סֻכָּתוֹ חֶשְׁכַת־מַיִם עָבֵי
שְׁחָקִים׃ מִנֹּגַהּ נֶגְדּוֹ עָבָיו עָבְרוּ
בָּרָד וְגַחֲלֵי־אֵשׁ׃ וַיַּרְעֶם בַּשָּׁמַיִם יְיָ
וְעֶלְיוֹן יִתֵּן קֹלוֹ בָּרָד וְגַחֲלֵי־אֵשׁ׃
וַיִּשְׁלַח חִצָּיו וַיְפִיצֵם וּבְרָקִים
רָב וַיְהֻמֵּם׃ וַיֵּרָאוּ אֲפִיקֵי מַיִם
וַיִּגָּלוּ מוֹסְדוֹת תֵּבֵל מִגַּעֲרָתְךָ יְיָ
מִנִּשְׁמַת רוּחַ אַפֶּךָ׃ יִשְׁלַח מִמָּרוֹם
יִקָּחֵנִי יַמְשֵׁנִי מִמַּיִם רַבִּים׃ יַצִּילֵנִי
מֵאֹיְבִי עָז וּמִשַּׂנְאַי כִּי־אָמְצוּ מִמֶּנִּי׃
יְקַדְּמוּנִי בְיוֹם־אֵידִי וַיְהִי־יְיָ
לְמִשְׁעָן לִי׃ וַיּוֹצִיאֵנִי לַמֶּרְחָב
יְחַלְּצֵנִי כִּי חָפֵץ בִּי׃ יִגְמְלֵנִי
יְיָ כְּצִדְקִי כְּבֹר יָדַי יָשִׁיב לִי׃
כִּי־שָׁמַרְתִּי דַּרְכֵי יְיָ וְלֹא־רָשַׁעְתִּי
מֵאֱלֹהָי׃ כִּי כָל־מִשְׁפָּטָיו לְנֶגְדִּי
וְחֻקֹּתָיו לֹא־אָסִיר מֶנִּי׃ וָאֱהִי
תָמִים עִמּוֹ וָאֶשְׁתַּמֵּר מֵעֲוֹנִי׃
וַיָּשֶׁב־יְיָ לִי כְּצִדְקִי כְּבֹר יָדַי לְנֶגֶד
עֵינָיו׃ עִם־חָסִיד תִּתְחַסָּד עִם־גְּבֶר
תָּמִים תִּתַּמָּם׃ עִם־נָבָר תִּתָּבָרָר
וְעִם־עִקֵּשׁ תִּתַּפָּתָל׃ כִּי־אַתָּה
עַם־עָנִי תוֹשִׁיעַ וְעֵינַיִם רָמוֹת
תַּשְׁפִּיל׃ כִּי־אַתָּה תָּאִיר נֵרִי יְיָ
אֱלֹהַי יַגִּיהַּ חָשְׁכִּי׃ כִּי־בְךָ אָרֻץ
גְּדוּד וּבֵאלֹהַי אֲדַלֶּג־שׁוּר׃ הָאֵל
תָּמִים דַּרְכּוֹ אִמְרַת־יְיָ צְרוּפָה
מָגֵן הוּא לְכֹל הַחֹסִים בּוֹ׃ כִּי מִי
אֱלוֹהַּ מִבַּלְעֲדֵי יְיָ וּמִי צוּר זוּלָתִי
אֱלֹהֵינוּ׃ הָאֵל הַמְאַזְּרֵנִי חָיִל וַיִּתֵּן
תָּמִים דַּרְכִּי׃ מְשַׁוֶּה רַגְלַי כָּאַיָּלוֹת high tower. Praised, I call upon the LORD, and I am saved from my enemies. The cords of death encompassed me, and the floods of wickedness[1] terrified me. The cords of the grave surrounded me;

the snares of death confronted me. In my distress I 395R called upon the LORD, and cried unto my God; He heard my voice out of His temple, and my cry came before Him, into His ears. Then the earth shook and trembled, the foundations of the mountains quaked and were shaken, because He was angry. Smoke rose 400R from His nostrils, and fire from His mouth devoured; coals were kindled by it. He bowed the heavens and came down; and thick darkness was under His feet.
And He rode upon a cherub, and flew; and He soared upon the wings of the wind. He made darkness His 405R hiding-place, His pavilion round about Him; darkness of waters, thick clouds of the skies.[2] At the brightness before Him, His thick clouds passed; hailstones and coals of fire. The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Most High gave forth His 410R voice; hailstones and coals of fire. And He sent out His arrows, and scattered them; and He shot forth lightnings, and discomfited them. Then the channels of waters appeared, and the foundations of the world were laid bare, at Your rebuke, O LORD, at the blast 415R of the breath of Your nostrils. He sent from on high,
He took me; He drew me out of many waters. He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me, for they were too mighty for me.
They confronted me in the day of my calamity; but 420R the LORD was a stay unto me. He brought me forth also into a large place; He delivered me, because He delighted in me. The LORD rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands has He recompensed me. For I have kept the 425R ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God. For all His ordinances were before me, and I put not away His statutes from me. I was also whole-hearted with Him, and I kept myself from my iniquity. Therefore has the LORD recompensed 430R me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands in His eyes. With the merciful You show Yourself merciful, with the perfect man You show Yourself perfect; With the pure You

[1]The Hebrew 'nachalei beliyaal' literally means 'streams of worthlessness/wickedness' and refers to overwhelming destructive forces threatening the psalmist.

[2]The piling up of terms for darkness and clouds emphasizes the overwhelming nature of the divine appearance, a common feature in biblical theophanies.

וְעַל בָּמֹתַי יַעֲמִידֵנִי׃ מְלַמֵּד יָדַי
לַמִּלְחָמָה וְנִחֲתָה קֶשֶׁת־נְחוּשָׁה
395 זְרוֹעֹתָי׃ וַתִּתֶּן־לִי מָגֵן יִשְׁעֶךָ
וִימִינְךָ תִסְעָדֵנִי וְעַנְוָתְךָ תַרְבֵּנִי׃
תַּרְחִיב צַעֲדִי תַחְתָּי וְלֹא מָעֲדוּ
קַרְסֻלָּי׃ אֶרְדּוֹף אוֹיְבַי וְאַשִּׂיגֵם
וְלֹא־אָשׁוּב עַד־כַּלּוֹתָם׃ אֶמְחָצֵם
400 וְלֹא־יְכֹלוּ קוּם יִפְּלוּ תַּחַת רַגְלָי׃
וַתְּאַזְּרֵנִי חַיִל לַמִּלְחָמָה תַּכְרִיעַ
קָמַי תַּחְתָּי׃ וְאֹיְבַי נָתַתָּה לִּי
עֹרֶף וּמְשַׂנְאַי אַצְמִיתֵם׃ יְשַׁוְּעוּ
וְאֵין־מוֹשִׁיעַ עַל־יְיָ וְלֹא עָנָם׃
405 וְאֶשְׁחָקֵם כְּעָפָר עַל־פְּנֵי־רוּחַ
כְּטִיט חוּצוֹת אֲרִיקֵם׃ תְּפַלְּטֵנִי
מֵרִיבֵי עָם תְּשִׂימֵנִי לְרֹאשׁ
גּוֹיִם עַם לֹא־יָדַעְתִּי יַעַבְדוּנִי׃
לִשְׁמַע אֹזֶן יִשָּׁמְעוּ לִי בְּנֵי־נֵכָר
410 יְכַחֲשׁוּ־לִי׃ בְּנֵי־נֵכָר יִבֹלּוּ וְיַחְרְגוּ
מִמִּסְגְּרוֹתֵיהֶם׃ חַי־יְיָ וּבָרוּךְ
צוּרִי וְיָרוּם אֱלוֹהֵי יִשְׁעִי׃ הָאֵל
הַנּוֹתֵן נְקָמוֹת לִי וַיַּדְבֵּר עַמִּים
תַּחְתָּי׃ מְפַלְּטִי מֵאֹיְבָי אַף מִן־קָמַי
415 תְּרוֹמְמֵנִי מֵאִישׁ חָמָס תַּצִּילֵנִי׃
עַל־כֵּן אוֹדְךָ בַגּוֹיִם יְיָ וּלְשִׁמְךָ
אֲזַמֵּרָה׃ מגדל [מַגְדִּיל] יְשׁוּעוֹת
מַלְכּוֹ וְעֹשֶׂה חֶסֶד לִמְשִׁיחוֹ לְדָוִד
וּלְזַרְעוֹ עַד־עוֹלָם׃ [i] show Yourself pure;[1] and with the crooked You show 435R Yourself subtle. For You save the afflicted people; but the haughty eyes You bring down. For You light my lamp; the LORD my God illumines my darkness.

For by You I run upon a troop; and by my God do I scale a wall. As for God, His way is perfect; the word 440R of the LORD is tried; He is a shield unto all them that take refuge in Him. For who is God, save the LORD? And who is a Rock, except our God? The God who girds me with strength, and makes my way perfect; Who makes my feet like hinds', and sets me 445R upon my high places; Who trains my hands for war, so that my arms bend a bow of bronze. You have also given me the shield of Your salvation, and Your right hand has supported me; Your gentleness has made me great. You have enlarged my steps under 450R me, and my feet have not slipped. I have pursued my enemies, and overtaken them; neither did I turn back till they were consumed. I have smitten them through, so that they are not able to rise; they are fallen under my feet. For You have girded me with 455R strength unto the battle; You have subdued under me those that rose up against me. You have also made my enemies turn their backs unto me, and I have destroyed them that hate me. They cried, but there was none to save; even unto the LORD, but 460R
He answered them not. Then I beat them small as the dust before the wind; I cast them out as the mire of the streets. You have delivered me from the contentions of the people; You have made me the head of nations; a people whom I have not known 465R serve me. As soon as they hear of me, they obey me;
the sons of the stranger[2] submit themselves unto me.
The sons of the stranger fade away, and come trembling out of their strongholds. The LORD lives, and blessed be my Rock; and exalted be the God of my 470R salvation; Even the God that executes vengeance for me, and subdues peoples under me. He delivers me from my enemies; indeed, You lift me up above those

[1] This section demonstrates the biblical principle that God responds to humans according to their own moral qualities, a concept that would resonate with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation.

[2] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, 'sons of the stranger' (bnei nekhar) might be interpreted metaphorically as hostile spiritual forces that threaten the sick person.

[i] Cf. Book of Psalms — This is a complete rendering of Psalm 18, which appears in Ma'avar Yabok as part of a structured liturgical sequence for the sick and dying. The psalm recounts David's thanksgiving to God for deliverance from enemies, making it appropriate for someone in distress seeking divine protection and salvation.

that rise up against me; You deliver me from the violent man. Therefore I will give thanks unto You, 475R
O LORD, among the nations, and will sing praises unto Your name. Great salvation gives He to His king;[1] and shows loving-kindness to His anointed, to David and to his seed, for evermore.

(תורה) וְיִתֶּן לְךָ הָאֱלֹהִים
מִטַּל הַשָּׁמַיִם וּמִשְׁמַנֵּי הָאָרֶץ
וְרֹב דָּגָן וְתִירֹשׁ: [i] וַיַּעֲקֹב הָלַךְ
לְדַרְכּוֹ וַיִּפְגְּעוּ בוֹ מַלְאֲכֵי
אֱלֹהִים: [ii] וַיֹּאמֶר יַעֲקֹב כַּאֲשֶׁר
רָאָם מַחֲנֵה אֱלֹהִים זֶה וַיִּקְרָא שֵׁם
הַמָּקוֹם הַהוּא מַחֲנָיִם: [iii] אֱלֹהֵי
אָבִי אַבְרָהָם וֵאלֹהֵי אָבִי יִצְחָק
יְיָ הָאֹמֵר אֵלַי שׁוּב לְאַרְצְךָ
וּלְמוֹלַדְתְּךָ וְאֵיטִיבָה עִמָּךְ:
קָטֹנְתִּי מִכֹּל הַחֲסָדִים וּמִכָּל הָאֱמֶת
אֲשֶׁר עָשִׂיתָ אֶת עַבְדֶּךָ: הַצִּילֵנִי נָא
מִיַּד אָחִי מִיַּד עֵשָׂו כִּי יָרֵא אָנֹכִי
אֹתוֹ [iv] פֶּן יָבוֹא וְהִכַּנִי אֵם עַל

(Torah) May God give you from the dew of heaven 480R and the fat places of the earth, and abundance of grain and wine: And Jacob went on his way, and angels of God encountered him.[A] And Jacob said when he saw them, "This is God's camp,"[2] and he called the name of that place Mahanaim.[3] O God of 485R my father Abraham and God of my father Isaac, the LORD who said to me, "Return to your land and to your birthplace, and I will do good with you." I am unworthy of all the kindnesses and all the truth[B] that You have done for Your servant. Deliver me, please, 490R from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him, lest he come and strike me, mother with children.[4] And You said, "I will surely do good

[A] Or: "and angels of God met him" — The Hebrew verb פגע has a range of meanings including 'meet,' 'encounter,' or even 'come upon.' This alternate translation maintains the sense of the divine beings actively engaging with Jacob while using more common English phrasing.

[B] Or: "I have become small from all the kindnesses and all the faithfulness" — The Hebrew קָטֹנְתִּי literally means 'I have become small' or 'diminished,' which poetically expresses humility in the face of divine generosity. This more literal translation preserves the striking imagery of Jacob being 'diminished' by God's overwhelming goodness, rather than simply being 'unworthy.'

[1] The final verse uses 'magdil' (makes great) in the written text but is traditionally read as 'migdol' (tower of) in some contexts, though both convey divine magnification of salvation.

[2] The Hebrew מַחֲנֵה אֱלֹהִים (machaneh Elohim) refers to an encampment of divine beings or angels. In the context of prayers for the sick or dying, this image of divine encampment suggests spiritual protection surrounding the individual.

[3] Literally 'two camps,' symbolizing the meeting point between human and divine realms. This is especially significant in Ma'avar Yabok, as it represents the threshold between life and death where these realms intersect.

[4] This Hebrew idiom (אֵם עַל בָּנִים) expresses complete destruction, suggesting the annihilation of an entire family. In the prayer context for the sick, it represents the fear of complete vulnerability that illness can bring.

[i] This verse (Genesis 27:28) is from Isaac's blessing to Jacob, which begins the collection of verses about Jacob in this prayer sequence. The blessing of abundance from heaven and earth represents divine provision during both life and the transition of death.

[ii] This verse from Genesis 32:1 is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok as it describes Jacob's encounter with angels immediately before crossing the Yabok River, the event that gives the book its title and central metaphor.

[iii] The name 'Mahanaim' means 'two camps' and refers to Jacob's encounter with angels before meeting Esau (Genesis 32:1-2). In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this name has special significance as it connects to the book's central metaphor of 'crossing over' from life to death, with the two camps representing the human and divine realms that meet at this transition.

[iv] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, Jacob's prayer for deliverance from his brother Esau takes on added significance as a metaphor for protection from spiritual adversaries during the soul's transition at death.

בָּנִים: וְאַתָּה אָמַרְתָּ הֵיטֵב אֵיטִיב
עִמָּךְ וְשַׂמְתִּי אֶת זַרְעֲךָ כְּחוֹל הַיָּם
אֲשֶׁר לֹא יִסָּפֵר מֵרֹב: לֹא אֲשַׁלֵּחֲךָ
כִּי אִם בֵּרַכְתָּנִי:[i][ii] with you, and make your offspring like the sand of the sea, which cannot be counted for multitude." I will not send you away unless you bless me.[A] 495R

(נביאים) מֵקִים מֵעָפָר דָּל
מֵאַשְׁפֹּת יָרִים אֶבְיוֹן[iii] לְהוֹשִׁיב עִם
נְדִיבִים וְכִסֵּא כָבוֹד יַנְחִלֵם: כִּי
לַיְיָ מְצֻקֵי אֶרֶץ וַיָּשֶׁת עֲלֵיהֶם תֵּבֵל:
רַגְלֵי חֲסִידָו יִשְׁמֹר וּרְשָׁעִים בַּחֹשֶׁךְ
יִדָּמוּ[iv] כִּי לֹא בְכֹחַ יִגְבַּר אִישׁ:
כִּי לֹא יִטֹּשׁ יְיָ אֶת עַמּוֹ בַּעֲבוּר
שְׁמוֹ הַגָּדוֹל[v] כִּי הוֹאִיל יְיָ לַעֲשׂוֹת
אֶתְכֶם לוֹ לְעָם: יִשְׁפֹּט יְיָ בֵּינִי

(From Prophets) He raises the poor from the dust, and lifts the needy from the ash heap,[1] to seat them with nobles, and He gives them a throne of honor as an inheritance. For the foundations of the earth belong to the LORD,[2] and He has set the world upon them. He guards the feet of His faithful ones,[3] but the wicked are silenced in darkness, for not by strength does a person prevail. For the LORD will not abandon His people for the sake of 500R 505R

[A] Or: "I will not let you go until you bless me" — This alternative more directly conveys the sense of physical holding or grasping implied in the context of Jacob's wrestling with the angel. The phrase 'let you go' better captures the immediacy and physicality of the struggle than 'send you away,' which might suggest a more formal dismissal.

[1] These verses from Hannah's prayer establish a theological framework of divine reversal of fortune, which in Ma'avar Yabok extends to the ultimate reversal—the transformation of death into spiritual elevation.

[2] The Hebrew 'מְצֻקֵי אֶרֶץ' (foundations of the earth) can also be interpreted as 'the distressed of the earth,' creating a dual meaning that God possesses both the physical world and its suffering inhabitants.

[3] In kabbalistic interpretation, 'feet' (רַגְלֵי) often symbolize the lowest spiritual levels, suggesting God's protection extends even to the most basic aspects of human existence.

[i] This verse (Genesis 32:27) is from Jacob's wrestling with the angel at the Yabok River crossing. This struggle and Jacob's insistence on a blessing before releasing the angel is central to the metaphor of Ma'avar Yabok, representing the soul's struggle and transformation during the transition of death.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 32:1-2 — This biblical passage is the source text for the quoted verses and provides the foundation for Ma'avar Yabok's central metaphor of crossing between worlds. The 'two camps' represent the meeting point between human and divine realms, which in the book's context symbolizes the threshold between life and death. | Cf. Genesis 32:22-32 — Though only the final verse is directly quoted, this entire episode is foundational to Ma'avar Yabok, giving the book its title and central metaphor. Jacob's struggle at the river represents the soul's struggle at the threshold between life and death, and the blessing and transformation he receives prefigures the spiritual transformation the soul undergoes in this transition. | Cf. Genesis 27:28 — This blessing is included to invoke divine abundance and protection for the ill person. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it represents the continuity of divine blessing that extends from this life to the next, suggesting that God's provision continues even through the transition of death. | Cf. Genesis 32:10-13 — Jacob's prayer serves as a model for the ill or dying person, demonstrating proper humility before God, acknowledgment of divine protection and goodness in the past, and appropriate petition based on God's promises. In Ma'avar Yabok, this prayer is particularly apt as it was offered at a moment of extreme vulnerability and transition, paralleling the situation of those approaching death.

[iii] This verse is from Hannah's prayer (1 Samuel 2:8), which became a foundational text for Jewish understanding of divine sovereignty and reversal of fortune. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it emphasizes God's power to transform human conditions, particularly relevant to discussions of illness and death.

[iv] This continues Hannah's prayer (1 Samuel 2:9), emphasizing divine protection for the righteous and judgment for the wicked. In Ma'avar Yabok, this reinforces the theological framework that proper spiritual practice provides protection during life transitions.

[v] From 1 Samuel 12:22, this verse assures God's continued faithfulness to Israel despite difficulties, a comforting message in the context of illness and approaching death.

וּבֵינֶךָ וּנְקָמַנִי יְיָ מִמֶּךָּ וְיָדִי לֹא
תִהְיֶה בָּךְ׃ [i] אִם יְיָ הֱסִיתְךָ בִי יָרַח
מִנְחָה[ii] וְאִם בְּנֵי הָאָדָם אֲרוּרִים
450 הֵם לְפָנַי יְיָ כִּי גֵרְשׁוּנִי הַיּוֹם
מֵהִסְתַּפֵּחַ בְּנַחֲלַת יְיָ: וְהִנֵּה כַּאֲשֶׁר
נָדְלָה נַפְשְׁךָ הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה בְּעֵינָיו כֵּן
תִּגְדַּל נַפְשִׁי בְּעֵינֵי יְיָ[iii] וַיְצַלֵּנִי
מִכָּל צָרָה: יְהוָה הוּא הַטּוֹב בְּעֵינָו
455 יַעֲשֶׂה: מִי אָנֹכִי אֲדֹנָי יְיָ וּמִי בֵיתִי
כִּי הֲבִיאוֹתַנִי עַד הֲלֹם׃ [iv] וַתְּקַטֵּן
עוֹד זֹאת בְּעֵינֶיךָ אֲדֹנָי יְיָ וַתְּדַבֵּר
גַּם אֶל בֵּית עַבְדְּךָ לְמֵרָחוֹק וְזֹאת
[vi] [v] תּוֹרַת הָאָדָם אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהִים׃

His great name, because the LORD has been pleased to make you His people. May the LORD judge between me and you, and may the LORD avenge me against you, but my hand shall not be against you. If the LORD has incited you against me, let 510R Him accept an offering;[A] but if it is people, cursed are they before the LORD,[1] for they have driven me out today from sharing in the inheritance of the LORD. And behold, just as your life was precious in my eyes this day, so may my life be precious in the 515R eyes of the LORD,[2] and may He rescue me from all trouble. The LORD—may He do what is good in His eyes. Who am I, O Lord GOD, and what is my house, that You have brought me this far? And even this was insignificant in Your eyes, O Lord GOD, for 520R
You have spoken also about Your servant's house for a distant future—and this is the instruction for [A] Or: "If the LORD has stirred you against me, may He smell an offering" — The verb 'יָרַח' literally means 'to smell' rather than 'accept,' reflecting the ancient conception of sacrifice as creating a pleasing aroma for the deity. This more literal translation preserves the sensory aspect of the ritual offering that might be relevant to Ma'avar Yabok's detailed treatment of ritual practices.

[1] This passage distinguishes between suffering that comes directly from God (which requires ritual offering) versus suffering caused by human agents (which requires divine justice)—a distinction important to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of illness.

[2] The Hebrew term 'נַפְשִׁי' (my life/soul) has deeper implications than simply physical life, referring to the essence of one's being that continues beyond death—a central concern of Ma'avar Yabok.

[i] From David's words to Saul (1 Samuel 24:13), this expresses leaving justice to God rather than taking personal vengeance. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this represents the proper attitude of acceptance toward divine judgment.

[ii] From 1 Samuel 26:19, part of David's appeal to Saul. The phrase 'יָרַח מִנְחָה' (let Him accept an offering) suggests that even divine-induced suffering can be addressed through proper ritual response—a key concept in Ma'avar Yabok.

[iii] From David's words to Saul (1 Samuel 26:24), expressing hope that God will value his life as he has valued Saul's. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this represents the hope that showing mercy to others will result in divine mercy for oneself.

[iv] From David's prayer after Nathan's prophecy (2 Samuel 7:18), expressing humility before divine favor. In Ma'avar Yabok, this models the proper humble response to divine blessing and providence.

[v] From 2 Samuel 7:19, concluding David's prayer. The phrase 'תּוֹרַת הָאָדָם' (instruction/law of humanity) is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok, suggesting that proper response to mortality is the fundamental human spiritual teaching.

[vi] Cf. Hannah's Prayer (1 Samuel 2:1-10) — Hannah's prayer of thanksgiving for divine reversal of fortune is cited here to emphasize God's sovereignty over human conditions, particularly relevant to discussions of illness and transformation through death. The verses establish that divine power, not human strength, determines outcomes, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation rather than merely physical treatment. | Cf. David's words to Saul — David's refusal to harm Saul despite being persecuted models the spiritual virtue of leaving judgment to God rather than seeking personal vengeance. In Ma'avar Yabok, this attitude represents the proper response to suffering: accepting divine judgment while seeking merciful intervention through appropriate ritual means rather than rebellion. | Cf. David's prayer after Nathan's prophecy — David's expression of humility before divine favor models the proper spiritual posture when receiving blessing. The concluding phrase 'תּוֹרַת הָאָדָם' (instruction for humanity) is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's context, suggesting that understanding one's place in divine providence—especially facing mortality—constitutes fundamental human spiritual wisdom.

humanity, O Lord GOD.[A]

(תהלים) הָאֵל הַנּוֹתֵן נְקָמוֹת
לִי וַיַּדְבֵּר עַמִּים תַּחְתָּי: מְפַלְטִי
מֵאוֹיְבָי אַף מִן קָמַי תְּרוֹמְמֵנִי מֵאִישׁ
חָמָס תַּצִּילֵנִי: יַעַנְךָ יְיָ בְּיוֹם צָרָה
יְשַׂגֶּבְךָ שֵׁם אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב: [i] יִשְׁלַח
עֶזְרְךָ מִקֹּדֶשׁ וּמִצִּיּוֹן יִסְעָדֶךָּ: יִזְכֹּר
כָּל מִנְחֹתֶךָ וְעוֹלָתְךָ יְדַשְּׁנֶה סֶלָה:
יִתֶּן לְךָ כִלְבָבֶךָ וְכָל עֲצָתְךָ יְמַלֵּא:
נְרַנְּנָה בִּישׁוּעָתֶךָ וּבְשֵׁם אֱלֹהֵינוּ
נִדְגֹּל יְמַלֵּא יְיָ כָּל מִשְׁאֲלוֹתֶיךָ:
עַתָּה יָדַעְתִּי כִּי הוֹשִׁיעַ יְיָ מְשִׁיחוֹ
יַעֲנֵהוּ מִשְּׁמֵי קָדְשׁוֹ בִּגְבֻרוֹת יֶשַׁע
יְמִינוֹ: אֵלֶּה בָרֶכֶב וְאֵלֶּה בַסּוּסִים
וַאֲנַחְנוּ בְּשֵׁם יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ נַזְכִּיר:
הֵמָּה כָרְעוּ וְנָפָלוּ וַאֲנַחְנוּ קַמְנוּ
וַנִּתְעוֹדָד: יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה הַמֶּלֶךְ
יַעֲנֵנוּ בְיוֹם קָרְאֵנוּ: בְּךָ בָּטְחוּ
אֲבֹתֵינוּ בָּטְחוּ וַתְּפַלְּטֵמוֹ: אֵלֶיךָ
זָעֲקוּ וְנִמְלָטוּ בְּךָ בָטְחוּ וְלֹא
בוֹשׁוּ: אַל תִּרְחַק מִמֶּנִּי כִּי צָרָה
קְרוֹבָה כִּי אֵין עוֹזֵר: [ii] וְאַתָּה יְיָ
אַל תִּרְחַק אֲיָלוּתִי לְעֶזְרָתִי חוּשָׁה:
עִיֵּנִי תָּמִיד אֶל יְיָ כִּי הוּא יוֹצִיא
מֵרֶשֶׁת רַגְלָי: אֱלֹהַי בְּךָ בָטַחְתִּי
אַל אֵבוֹשָׁה אַל יַעַלְצוּ אֹיְבַי לִי:
צָרוֹת לְבָבִי הִרְחִיבוּ מְמִצוּקוֹתַי
הוֹצִיאֵנִי: בְּקַרְבִּ עָלַי מָרְעִים
לְאָכֵל אֶת בְּשָׂרִי צָרַי וְאֹיְבַי לִי
הֵמָּה כָשְׁלוּ וְנָפָלוּ: אַחַת שָׁאַלְתִּי
מֵאֵת יְיָ אוֹתָהּ אֲבַקֵּשׁ: שִׁבְתִּי בְּבֵית

(Psalms) The God who grants me vengeance and subdues peoples under me. My deliverer from my enemies; You lift me above those who rise against me; from the violent man You rescue me. May the LORD answer you in the day of trouble; may the name of the God of Jacob set you on high. May He send you help from the sanctuary, and strengthen you from Zion. May He remember all your offerings, and accept your burnt sacrifice. Selah. May He grant you according to your heart's desire, and fulfill all your counsel. We will rejoice in your salvation, and in the name of our God we will set up our banners![1] May the LORD fulfill all your petitions. Now I know that the LORD saves His anointed; He will answer him from His holy heaven with the saving strength of His right hand. Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; but we will remember the name of the LORD our God.[2] They have bowed down and fallen; but we have risen and stand upright. Save, LORD! May the King answer us when we call. In You our fathers trusted; they trusted, and You delivered them. They cried to You and were rescued; in You they trusted and were not put to shame. Do not be far from me, for trouble is near, for there is none to help. But You, O LORD, do not be far off! O my Strength, come quickly to help me! My eyes are ever toward the LORD, for He shall release my feet from the net. My God, I trust in You; let me not be ashamed, let not my enemies triumph over me. The troubles of my heart have enlarged; bring

[A] Or: "and this is the law of human existence, O Lord GOD" — The phrase 'תּוֹרַת הָאָדָם' could be interpreted more broadly as referring to the fundamental principle governing human existence rather than simply an instruction. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok's focus on death and transition, this reading emphasizes mortality and proper response to it as the defining condition of humanity.

[1] The Hebrew verb 'נִדְגֹּל' (we will set up banners) shares the same root as 'דגל' (flag/banner) but can also connote distinction or prominence. In the context of these prayer sequences for the sick, it represents a declaration of allegiance to divine power rather than natural remedies.

[2] This verse expresses a central theological position in Ma'avar Yabok, contrasting reliance on material remedies with trust in divine power, which is particularly relevant in contexts of illness and approaching death.

[i] This opening verse from Psalm 20 begins a section that is specifically prescribed in Ma'avar Yabok for recitation during times of illness or distress.

[ii] This verse from Psalm 22:12 appears frequently in Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences for the sick and dying, expressing the sense of urgency and vulnerability experienced during serious illness.

יְיָ כָּל יְמֵי חַיַּי לַחֲזוֹת בְּנֹעַם יְיָ
וּלְבַקֵּר בְּהֵיכָלוֹ: אַל תַּסְתֵּר פָּנֶיךָ
מִמֶּנִּי אַל תַּט בְּאַף עַבְדֶּךָ עֶזְרָתִי
הָיִיתָ אַל תִּטְּשֵׁנִי וְאַל תַּעַזְבֵנִי
אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׁעִי: כִּי אָבִי וְאִמִּי עֲזָבוּנִי
וַיהוָה יַאַסְפֵנִי: שְׁמַע קוֹל תַּחֲנוּנַי
בְּשַׁוְּעִי אֵלֶיךָ בְּנָשְׂאִי יָדַי אֶל דְּבִיר
קָדְשֶׁךָ: קַוֵּה אֶל יְיָ חֲזַק וְיַאֲמֵץ
לִבֶּךָ וְקַוֵּה אֶל יְיָ: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ כִּי
שָׁמַע קוֹל תַּחֲנוּנָי: יְיָ עֻזִּי לְעַמּוֹ
יִתֵּן יְיָ יְבָרֵךְ אֶת עַמּוֹ בַשָּׁלוֹם:
אֵלֶיךָ יְיָ אֶקְרָא וְאֶל יְיָ אֶתְחַנָּן:
שְׁמַע יְיָ וְחָנֵּנִי יְיָ הֱיֵה עֹזֵר לִי: כִּי
סַלְעִי וּמְצוּדָתִי אָתָּה וּלְמַעַן שִׁמְךָ
תַּנְחֵנִי וּתְנַהֲלֵנִי: תּוֹצִיאֵנִי מֵרֶשֶׁת
זוּ טָמְנוּ לִי כִּי אַתָּה מָעוּזִּי: בְּיָדְךָ
אַפְקִיד רוּחִי פָּדִיתָה אוֹתִי יְיָ אֵל
אֱמֶת: [i] אָגִילָה וְאֶשְׂמְחָה בְּחַסְדֶּךָ
אֲשֶׁר רָאִיתָ אֶת עָנְיִי יָדַעְתָּ בְּצָרוֹת
נַפְשִׁי: חָנֵּנִי יְיָ כִּי צַר לִי עָשְׁשָׁה
בְכַעַס עֵינִי נַפְשִׁי וּבִטְנִי: [ii]

me out of my distresses![1] When evildoers came upon me to devour my flesh, my adversaries and my foes, they stumbled and fell. One thing I have asked of the LORD, that will I seek: that I may dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the LORD, and to inquire in His temple. Do not hide Your face from me; do not turn Your servant away in anger; You have been my help; do not leave me nor forsake me, O God of my salvation. For my father and my mother have forsaken me, but the LORD will take me in. Hear, O LORD, the voice of my supplications when I cry to You, when I lift up my hands toward Your holy sanctuary. Wait for the LORD; be strong, and let your heart take courage; wait for the LORD. Blessed be the LORD, for He has heard the voice of my supplications! The LORD will give strength to His people; the LORD will bless His people with peace. To You, O LORD, I call, and to the LORD I make supplication. Hear, O LORD, and be gracious to me; LORD, be my helper. For You are my rock and my fortress; for Your name's sake You will lead me and guide me. You will bring me out of the net they have secretly laid for me, for You are my stronghold. Into Your hand I commit my spirit; You have redeemed me, O LORD, God of truth.[2] I will be glad and rejoice in Your mercy, for You have

555R 560R 565R 570R 575R

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'צָרוֹת לְבָבִי הִרְחִיבוּ' literally means 'the troubles of my heart have enlarged/expanded,' creating a paradoxical image that could be interpreted as either the heart being enlarged by troubles (negatively) or the heart's capacity being expanded through suffering (potentially positive). This ambiguity aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's view that suffering can serve as spiritual purification.

[2] This verse (Psalm 31:6) holds special significance in Jewish traditions surrounding death and is recommended in Ma'avar Yabok to be recited at the moment of death as an expression of complete surrender to God.

[i] This verse from Psalm 31:6 is highlighted in Ma'avar Yabok as particularly important for deathbed recitation, following the example of Rabbi Akiva who recited this verse at his martyrdom, and of Jesus in the Christian tradition. It represents the ultimate act of surrender to divine care.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 20 — Psalm 20 appears in Ma'avar Yabok as one of several psalms specifically recommended for recitation by or for the sick. Its themes of divine support in times of trouble, heavenly assistance, and confidence in ultimate divine salvation make it particularly relevant for those experiencing serious illness. | Cf. Psalm 22 — Psalm 22 contains expressions of both profound suffering and ultimate hope, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's approach to illness as both a challenge and an opportunity for spiritual transformation. The specific verses included here express the vulnerability of the sufferer alongside confidence in divine deliverance. | Cf. Psalm 27 — These verses from Psalm 27 focus on seeking divine presence and protection, expressing the psalmist's desire to dwell in God's house. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, they represent the ideal spiritual focus for those facing illness or approaching death—turning toward divine presence rather than dwelling on physical suffering. | Cf. Psalm 31 — Psalm 31 is particularly significant in Jewish deathbed practices. The verse 'Into Your hand I commit my spirit' (31:6) is highlighted in Ma'avar Yabok as ideally recited at the moment of death, following the example of Rabbi Akiva who recited this verse during his martyrdom.

considered my trouble; You have known the troubles of my soul. Be gracious to me, O LORD, for I am in distress; my eye wastes away with grief, yes, my soul and my body. 580R

(כתובים) צָעַק לִבָּם אֶל
אֲדֹנָי חוֹמַת בַּת צִיּוֹן[i] הוֹרִידִי
כַנַּחַל דִּמְעָה[ii] יוֹמָם וָלָיְלָה אַל
תִּתְּנִי פּוּגַת לָךְ אַל תִּדֹּם בַּת
עֵינָךְ: קוּמִי רֹנִּי בַלַּיְלָה לְרֹאשׁ
אַשְׁמֻרוֹת שִׁפְכִי כַמַּיִם לִבֵּךְ נֹכַח
פְּנֵי אֲדֹנָי שְׂאִי אֵלָיו כַּפַּיִךְ עַל
נֶפֶשׁ עוֹלָלַיִךְ הָעֲטוּפִים בְּרָעָב
בְּרֹאשׁ כָּל חוּצוֹת:[iii] שָׁמְעוּ כִּי
נֶאֱנָחָה אָנִי אֵין מְנַחֵם לִי כָּל
אֹיְבַי שָׁמְעוּ רָעָתִי שָׂשׂוּ כִּי אַתָּה
עָשִׂיתָ הֵבֵאתָ יוֹם קָרָאתָ וְיִהְיוּ
כָמוֹנִי: זְכָר עָנְיִי וּמְרוּדִי לַעֲנָה
וָרֹאשׁ:[iv] זָכוֹר תִּזְכּוֹר וְתָשׁוֹחַ עָלַי
נַפְשִׁי: זֹאת אָשִׁיב אֶל לִבִּי עַל כֵּן
אוֹחִיל:[v] חַסְדֵי יְיָ כִּי לֹא תָמְנוּ
כִּי לֹא כָלוּ רַחֲמָיו:[vi] חֲדָשִׁים
לַבְּקָרִים רַבָּה אֱמוּנָתֶךָ: חֶלְקִי יְיָ
אָמְרָה נַפְשִׁי עַל כֵּן אוֹחִיל לוֹ:

(From the Writings) Their heart cried out to the Lord, "O wall of the daughter of Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night; give yourself no rest,[A] let not the apple of your eye cease." Arise, cry out in the night, at the beginning of the watches;[B] pour out your heart like water before the face of the Lord. Lift your hands to Him for the lives of your young children, who faint from hunger at the head of every street. They heard that I sigh; there is no one to comfort me. All my enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that You have done it. You have brought the day You called for, and they shall be like me. Remember my affliction and my wandering, the wormwood and the gall. My soul remembers them well and is bowed down within me.[C] This I recall to my mind, therefore I have hope:[1] Through the Lord's mercies we are not consumed, because His compassions fail not. They are new every morning;[2] great is Your faithfulness. 585R 590R 595R 600R

[A] Or: "allow yourself no respite" — The Hebrew 'pugat' refers specifically to a pause or cessation, so 'respite' might better capture the nuance that the wall/daughter of Zion should not take even a momentary break from her mourning.

[B] Or: "in the night, at the start of each watch" — The term 'ashmurot' refers to the divisions of the night watch, and this alternate more clearly conveys the idea of crying out repeatedly at the beginning of each watch period throughout the night.

[C] Or: "and sinks down within me" — The Hebrew 'tashoach' has the sense of sinking or being depressed, which might convey the emotional state more vividly than 'bowed down.'

[1] This statement begins a remarkable section of hope amid profound despair. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this shift from lamentation to hope serves as a spiritual model for the sick and dying to find comfort even in their darkest moments.

[2] The Hebrew term 'chadashim labekarim' emphasizes that God's mercies are not merely renewed but made completely new each day, providing a powerful theological foundation for daily hope regardless of previous suffering.

[i] "O wall of the daughter of Zion"—this personification of Jerusalem's walls as a mourning woman is a powerful poetic device in Lamentations, representing both the physical structure of the destroyed city and the community that has been shattered.

[ii] The command to "let tears run down like a river" uses the feminine imperative form, addressing the personified wall of Jerusalem directly as if it were a grieving woman.

[iii] This vivid description of children fainting from hunger at street corners evokes the horrific suffering during Jerusalem's siege and destruction, particularly emphasizing the plight of the most vulnerable.

[iv] "Wormwood and gall"—bitter substances that symbolize extreme suffering. Wormwood (laanah) is a bitter herb, while rosh (often translated as 'gall') likely refers to a bitter, poisonous plant.

[v] This verse marks a pivotal turning point in the passage, shifting from lamentation to hope, as the speaker begins to recall reasons for faith despite suffering.

[vi] One of the most hopeful verses in Lamentations, affirming that despite devastation, God's mercies and compassions remain. This verse forms the basis for several Jewish liturgical prayers and songs.

530 טוֹב יְיָ לְקַוָּו לְנֶפֶשׁ תִּדְרְשֶׁנּוּ: טוֹב
וְיָחִיל וְדוּמָם לִתְשׁוּעַת יְיָ: טוֹב
לַגֶּבֶר כִּי יִשָּׂא עֹל בִּנְעוּרָיו: יֵשֵׁב
בָּדָד וְיִדֹּם כִּי נָטַל עָלָיו:[i] יִתֵּן
בֶּעָפָר פִּיהוּ אוּלַי יֵשׁ תִּקְוָה: כִּי
535 לֹא יִזְנַח לְעוֹלָם אֲדֹנָי: כִּי אִם
הוֹגָה וְרִחַם כְּרֹב חֲסָדָיו: עִנִּי
נִגְרָה וְלֹא תִדְמֶה מֵאֵין הֲפֻגוֹת:
עַד יַשְׁקִיף וְיֵרֶא יְיָ מִשָּׁמָיִם:
עֵינִי עוֹלְלָה לְנַפְשִׁי מִכֹּל בְּנוֹת
540 עִירִי: צוֹד צָדוּנִי כַּצִּפּוֹר אֹיְבַי
חִנָּם: צָמְתוּ בַבּוֹר חַיָּי וַיַּדּוּ אֶבֶן
בִּי: צָפוּ מַיִם עַל רֹאשִׁי אָמַרְתִּי
נִגְזָרְתִּי: קָרָאתִי שִׁמְךָ יְיָ מִבּוֹר
תַּחְתִּיּוֹת:[ii] קוֹלִי שָׁמָעְתָּ אַל תַּעְלֵם
545 אָזְנְךָ לְרִוָחָתִי לְשַׁוְעָתִי: קָרַבְתָּ
בְּיוֹם אֶקְרָאֶךָּ אָמַרְתָּ אַל תִּירָא:[iii]

"The Lord is my portion," says my soul, "Therefore I hope in Him." The Lord is good to those who wait for Him, to the soul who seeks Him. It is good that 605R one should hope and wait quietly for the salvation of the Lord. It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth.[1] Let him sit alone and keep silent, because God has laid it on him. Let him put his mouth in the dust;[A] there may yet be hope. For the 610R Lord will not cast off forever.[2] Though He causes grief, yet He will show compassion according to the multitude of His mercies. My eye flows and does not cease, without interruption, until the Lord looks down and sees from heaven. My eyes bring suffering 615R to my soul[B] because of all the daughters of my city. My enemies hunted me down like a bird without cause. They silenced my life in the pit and threw a stone at me. Waters flowed over my head; I said, "I am cut off!" I called on Your name, O Lord, from 620R the lowest pit. You have heard my voice: "Do not hide Your ear from my sighing, from my cry." You drew near on the day I called on You,[3] and said,

[A] Or: "Let him press his mouth to the dust" — This alternative more vividly conveys the physical posture of complete humiliation and submission described in the text.

[B] Or: "My eyes afflict my soul" — The Hebrew verb 'olela' has the sense of inflicting or causing harm, and this more direct translation better conveys how the act of witnessing suffering becomes itself a source of torment.

[1] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse takes on special significance, suggesting that early experiences of suffering and discipline prepare one spiritually for life's greater challenges, including illness and death.

[2] This theological assertion that divine rejection is temporary rather than permanent provides essential comfort in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death, suggesting that even death itself is not final abandonment but a transition.

[3] This concluding note of divine responsiveness and comfort brings the passage full circle, suggesting that sincere prayer, even from 'the lowest pit,' receives divine attention and response—a key message for those facing death.

[i] "Because God has laid it on him"—the Hebrew is more ambiguous, literally "because he has taken [it] upon himself," which could mean either that God has imposed the suffering or that the person has willingly accepted it.

[ii] "From the lowest pit"—the Hebrew 'bor tachtiyot' suggests the deepest dungeon or cistern, metaphorically representing the nadir of suffering and despair, sometimes associated with Sheol (the underworld).

[iii] Cf. Lamentations — Ma'avar Yabok includes this passage to provide those facing death with a biblical model of profound grief that nevertheless maintains faith in divine mercy. The careful selection of verses creates a therapeutic progression from despair to hope. | Cf. Psalm 102 — This passage from Lamentations echoes the movement in Psalm 102 from deep despair to hope in divine mercy. Both texts present suffering as temporary and emphasize that even extreme distress does not indicate complete divine abandonment. | Cf. Zohar — This passage's emphasis on the spiritual benefits of suffering ('It is good for a man to bear the yoke in his youth') resonates with kabbalistic teachings about suffering as a means of spiritual purification rather than mere punishment, a theme central to Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This Lamentations passage exemplifies the pattern of deathbed confession encouraged in Ma'avar Yabok: acknowledgment of suffering, expression of despair, recollection of divine mercy, and concluding with renewed hope and divine proximity.

"Do not fear!"

קַשּׁוּבוֹת תִּהְיֶינָה אָזְנֶיךָ לְשֶׁפֶךְ שִׂיחֵנוּ.[i] רוֹן שָׂפָה קַבֵּל בְּרֵיחַ נִיחוֹחֵינוּ.[ii] שַׁחֲרְנוּךָ[iii] מָגִנֵּנוּ כִּי בְךָ מִבְטָחֵנוּ: וְשִׁמְךָ עָלֵינוּ נִקְרָא אַל תַּנִּיחֵנוּ: יִהְיוּ לְרָצוֹן אִמְרֵי פִי וְהֶגְיוֹן לִבִּי לְפָנֶיךָ יְהוָה צוּרִי וְגוֹאֲלִי:[iv]

May Your ears be attentive to our outpouring of prayer. Accept the song of our lips as a pleasing fragrance:[1] We seek You early, our Shield, for in You is our trust: Your name is called upon us, do not forsake us:[2] May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You, O LORD, my Rock and my Redeemer.[3] 625R 630R

סדר יום שני[v]

Order for the Second Day[4]

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[vi] הכתובים

He should recite the "Ana Hashem" verse[5]s written

[1]This sacrificial imagery is significant within Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, where prayer serves as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings. The text consistently portrays proper prayer as creating the same spiritual effects as the ancient sacrificial system.

[2]The original includes an implicit reference to the covenant relationship between God and Israel, where God's name being 'called upon us' indicates both protection and belonging. This increases the emotional weight of the plea not to be forsaken.

[3]This final verse is a direct quote from Psalm 19:15, a common closing formula in Jewish prayer that serves to formalize the preceding petitions by connecting them to canonical biblical language.

[4]This title indicates the beginning of the second in a series of eight liturgical orders (sedarim) that comprise a major section of Ma'avar Yabok. Each order follows a similar structure with prayers and biblical verses organized by their sources, specifically designed to be recited for the sick or dying.

[5]These introductory verses serve as a standardized opening for each prayer sequence in Ma'avar Yabok's liturgical system, creating ritual continuity throughout the book's prayer orders.

[i]The term 'שִׂיחֵנוּ' (sichenu) literally means 'our conversation' or 'our speech' but in this devotional context refers to prayer as an outpouring of one's heart, emphasizing the emotional and confessional nature of prayer.

[ii]This phrase deliberately echoes sacrificial language from the Torah (רֵיחַ נִיחֹחַ/'pleasing aroma') which described Temple offerings. In post-Temple Judaism, prayer was understood as a spiritual substitute for sacrifice, a theme that runs throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[iii]The Hebrew verb 'שַׁחֲרְנוּךָ' (shicharnucha) means 'we seek You early' or 'we seek You earnestly,' coming from a root meaning 'dawn' or 'early morning.' It implies both eagerness and the traditional Jewish emphasis on morning prayers.

[iv]Cf. Psalm 19:15 — The author ends this prayer with a well-known biblical verse that asks for divine acceptance of one's words and thoughts. This functions as a formal closing to the prayer sequence and connects the preceding petitions to established biblical language. | Cf. Song of Songs 8:13 — The prayer repurposes romantic language from Song of Songs into a plea for divine attention, transforming the human love relationship of the biblical text into a devotional relationship between the supplicant and God. | Cf. Leviticus 1:9 — The prayer likens verbal prayer to sacrificial offerings, a common theme in post-Temple Judaism where prayer became the substitute for physical Temple sacrifices. This reflects Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theological framework of prayer as a spiritual substitute for Temple rituals. | Cf. Psalm 5:4 — The verb שַׁחֲרְנוּךָ (we seek You early) echoes the concept of morning prayer in Psalm 5, suggesting eagerness and prioritizing divine connection. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this may also metaphorically suggest seeking God early in the process of illness before it becomes critical.

[v]This phrase serves as a header indicating the beginning of the liturgical sequence for the second day (Monday) within the structured prayer system of Ma'avar Yabok.

[vi]"Ana Hashem" (Please, O Lord) refers to a specific set of introductory verses that begin each of the prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok. These standardized opening verses were meant to be recited before the specific psalms for each day.

לעיל. אח״כ יתחיל מזמור יענך ה׳ ביום צרה תהלים סימן כ׳[i] תמצא לעיל[ii] אחר כך יאמר:

above. Afterward, he should begin Psalm 20,[1] “May the Lord answer you in the day of trouble,” which can be found above, and after that he should say:[2] 635R

(תורה) הַמַּלְאָךְ הַגֹּאֵל אֹתִי מִכָּל רָע[iii] יְבָרֵךְ אֶת הַנְּעָרִים וְיִקָּרֵא בָהֶם שְׁמִי וְשֵׁם אֲבֹתַי אַבְרָהָם וְיִצְחָק וְיִדְגּוּ לָרֹב[iv] בְּקֶרֶב הָאָרֶץ: מֵאֵל אָבִיךָ וְיַעְזְרֶךָּ[v] וְאֵת שַׁדַּי וִיבָרְכֶךָּ בִּרְכֹת שָׁמַיִם מֵעָל בִּרְכֹת תְּהוֹם רֹבֶצֶת תָּחַת[vi] בִּרְכֹת שָׁדַיִם וָרָחַם: בִּרְכֹת אָבִיךָ גָּבְרוּ עַל בִּרְכֹת הוֹרַי[vii] עַד תַּאֲוַת גִּבְעֹת עוֹלָם[viii] תִּהְיֶיךָ לְרֹאשׁ יוֹסֵף וּלְקָדְקֹד נְזִיר

“The angel who has redeemed me from all evil,[A] may he bless the lads,[3] and may my name be called upon them, and the name of my fathers Abraham and Isaac, and may they proliferate abundantly like fish in the midst of the earth.[B] From the God of your father who will help you, and with the Almighty who will bless you with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lies beneath,[C] blessings of the breasts and of the womb. The blessings of your father have prevailed over the blessings of my forebears, up to the utmost bounds of the everlasting 640R 645R

[A] Or: “The redeeming angel who has protected me from all harm” — This alternative translation emphasizes the protective role of the angel and uses ‘harm’ instead of ‘evil’ to better capture the broad range of dangers implied in the Hebrew word רָע, which includes misfortune and adversity beyond moral evil.

[B] Or: “and may they multiply like fishes throughout the land” — This more concise translation still captures the fish metaphor while being slightly more fluid in English, though it loses some of the emphatic quality of the original Hebrew phrase.

[C] Or: “blessings from the heavens above, blessings from the deep waters crouching below” — This translation preserves the more literal meaning of רֹבֶצֶת as ‘crouching’ or ‘lying in wait,’ capturing the ancient cosmological image of the waters beneath the earth as an active, potential force rather than a static entity.

[1] This psalm focuses on divine help in times of distress with verses like “Some trust in chariots and some in horses, but we trust in the name of the LORD our God” (verse 8). Its themes of divine protection during adversity make it particularly suitable for those who are ill.

[2] This is a transitional instruction that would have been followed by additional prayers or verses to be recited after Psalm 20, though they are not included in this excerpt.

[3] Jacob is referring to Joseph’s sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, whom he is adopting as his own in Genesis 48.

[i] Psalm 20 is particularly appropriate for the sick and suffering because it focuses on divine protection during times of trouble and adversity. It begins with “May the Lord answer you in the day of trouble” and contains themes of divine support and salvation.

[ii] The phrase “can be found above” indicates that the full text of Psalm 20 was previously included in the book, reflecting the practical reference nature of Ma’avar Yabok as a manual for those attending to the sick and dying.

[iii] This opening verse comes from Jacob’s blessing to Joseph’s sons in Genesis 48:16, where Jacob invokes the angel who protected him throughout his life to bless his grandchildren.

[iv] The Hebrew verb וְיִדְגּוּ (“may they proliferate”) derives from the word דָּג (fish), creating a metaphor of multiplying like fish, which are known for their abundant reproduction.

[v] This begins Jacob’s blessing to Joseph in Genesis 49:25-26, which is characterized by abundant imagery of fertility and prosperity.

[vi] “The deep that lies beneath” refers to underground waters as sources of blessing, complementing the “blessings of heaven above” (rain), creating a complete picture of divine abundance from all directions.

[vii] Jacob states that his blessings to Joseph exceed those he received from his own parents, suggesting an increasing flow of divine blessing through generations.

[viii] This poetic phrase literally means “to the desire/bounty of the eternal hills” and refers to the abundant produce of ancient, enduring mountains—symbolizing permanent, lasting blessings.

אֶחָיו׃ [i] חַכְלִילִי עֵינַיִם מִיָּיִן
וּלְבֶן שִׁנַּיִם מֵחָלָב׃ [ii] וַיִּסָּעוּ וַיְהִי
חִתַּת אֱלֹהִים [iii] עַל הֶעָרִים אֲשֶׁר
סְבִיבֹתֵיהֶם וְלֹא רָדְפוּ אַחֲרֵי
בְּנֵי יַעֲקֹב׃ לִישׁוּעָתְךָ קִוִּיתִי
יְיָ׃ [iv] וַיַּרְא אֱלֹהִים אֶת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וַיֵּדַע אֱלֹהִים׃ [v] וַיֹּאמֶר אֱלֹהִים אֶל
מֹשֶׁה אֶהְיֶה אֲשֶׁר אֶהְיֶה וַיֹּאמֶר כֹּה
תֹאמַר לִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶהְיֶה שְׁלָחַנִי
אֲלֵיכֶם׃ [vi] [vii]

hills;[1] they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him who was separate from his brothers.[2] His eyes are darker than wine,[3] and his teeth whiter than milk. Then they journeyed, and the terror of God was upon the cities[4] that were around them, and they did not pursue the sons of Jacob. For Your salvation I hope, O LORD. And God saw the children of Israel, and God knew. And God said to Moses, "I AM WHO I AM."[A][5] And He said, "Thus you shall say to the children of Israel, 'I AM has sent me to you.'" 650R 655R

(נביאים) וְעַתָּה הוֹאֵל וּבָרֵךְ

(From the Prophets) And now, be pleased to bless

[A] Or: "I WILL BE WHAT I WILL BE" — The Hebrew verb אֶהְיֶה has future tense implications that this alternative better preserves, emphasizing God's ongoing actions and covenant faithfulness rather than just His self-existence.

[1] This poetic expression likely refers to the ancient, permanent hills of the Promised Land, symbolizing enduring, perpetual blessings that extend to the most distant horizons.
[2] The Hebrew term נָזִיר (nazir) here refers to Joseph's distinctive status, having been separated from his brothers when sold into Egypt, yet ultimately being elevated above them.
[3] This verse actually comes from Jacob's blessing to Judah (Genesis 49:12), not Joseph, showing how this collection combines different patriarchal blessings for spiritual effect.
[4] This refers to divine protection that prevented the Canaanites from attacking Jacob's family after the incident at Shechem, demonstrating God's protective power over His chosen people.
[5] This divine self-revelation (אֶהְיֶה אֲשֶׁר אֶהְיֶה) can also be translated as "I WILL BE WHAT I WILL BE," expressing God's eternal self-existence, independence, and covenant faithfulness to Israel.

[i] The term נָזִיר (nazir) here means "one who is separate" or "distinguished," referring to Joseph's elevated status among his brothers, rather than a Nazirite in the ritual sense.
[ii] This verse is from Jacob's blessing to Judah (Genesis 49:12), not Joseph, indicating that this collection of verses draws from different parts of Jacob's blessings to his sons.
[iii] This verse (Genesis 35:5) refers to the divine protection that Jacob and his family received after the incident at Shechem, showing God's protection over Jacob's descendants.
[iv] This brief verse from Genesis 49:18 appears in the middle of Jacob's blessings to his sons and represents a momentary pause where Jacob expresses his own reliance on divine salvation.
[v] This verse from Exodus 2:25 describes God's awareness of Israel's suffering in Egypt, indicating that God sees and knows the condition of His people even in their distress.
[vi] This concluding verse (Exodus 3:14) contains God's self-revelation to Moses at the burning bush, where the divine name אֶהְיֶה ("I AM" or "I WILL BE") expresses God's eternal presence and covenant faithfulness.
[vii] Cf. Genesis 48:16 — This passage appears at the beginning of this liturgical sequence because it establishes divine protection as the foundation for all subsequent blessings. In Ma'avar Yabok, this serves to invoke spiritual protection for the sick or dying person. | Cf. Genesis 49:22-26 — The extensive blessing to Joseph is included here for its powerful imagery of comprehensive blessing 'from above' and 'from below,' making it appropriate for seeking complete healing and divine protection in Ma'avar Yabok's context of prayers for the sick. | Cf. Exodus 3:14 — The divine name אֶהְיֶה ("I AM") appears at the conclusion of this prayer sequence because it represents God's eternal presence and ability to act in all situations. In Ma'avar Yabok, this provides assurance of divine presence even in illness and at the approach of death. | Cf. Isaiah 6:3 — While not directly quoted, the sequencing of divine names and blessings in this passage evokes the atmosphere of Isaiah's throne vision, where God's presence is intensely manifest. In Ma'avar Yabok, this connects to instructions elsewhere in the text about reciting Isaiah's throne vision at the moment of death. | Cf. Genesis 35:5 — This verse is included to emphasize divine protection from external threats, which in Ma'avar Yabok's context would include both physical illness and spiritual dangers that might threaten the sick or dying person.

אֶת בֵּית עַבְדְּךָ לִהְיוֹת לְעוֹלָם
לְפָנֶיךָ[i] כִּי אַתָּה אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהִים
דִּבַּרְתָּ וּמִבִּרְכָתְךָ יְבֹרַךְ בֵּית
עַבְדְּךָ לְעוֹלָם: עַל כֵּן גָּדַלְתָּ יְיָ
אֱלֹהִים כִּי אֵין כָּמוֹךָ וְאֵין אֱלֹהִים
זוּלָתֶךָ בְּכֹל אֲשֶׁר שָׁמַעְנוּ בְאָזְנֵינוּ:
חֲזַק וְנִתְחַזֵּק בְּעַד עַמֵּנוּ[ii] וּבְעַד
עָרֵי אֱלֹהֵינוּ וַיהוָה יַעֲשֶׂה הַטּוֹב
בְּעֵינָיו: כִּי אַתָּה תָּאִיר נֵרִי
יְיָ אֱלֹהַי יַגִּיהַּ חָשְׁכִּי: יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי
אַבְרָהָם יִצְחָק וְיִשְׂרָאֵל הַיּוֹם
יִוָּדַע כִּי אַתָּה אֱלֹהִים בְּיִשְׂרָאֵל
וְאָנִי עַבְדֶּךָ וּבִדְבָרְךָ יְיָ עָשִׂיתִי
אֶת כָּל הַדְּבָרִים הָאֵלֶּה: עֲנֵנִי
יְיָ עֲנֵנִי וְיֵדְעוּ הָעָם הַזֶּה כִּי
אַתָּה אֱלֹהִים:[iii] וַיַּרְא כָּל הָעָם
וַיִּפְּלוּ עַל פְּנֵיהֶם וַיֹּאמְרוּ יְיָ הוּא
הָאֱלֹהִים יְיָ הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים:[iv] יְהִי
יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ עִמָּנוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר הָיָה עִם
אֲבֹתֵינוּ אַל יַעַזְבֵנוּ וְאַל יִטְּשֵׁנוּ
לְהַטּוֹת לְבָבֵנוּ אֵלָיו לָלֶכֶת בְּכָל דְּרָכָיו וְלִשְׁמֹר מִצְוֹתָיו וְחֻקָּיו

the house of Your servant, that it may continue forever before You; for You, O Lord God, have spoken, and from Your blessing may the house of Your servant be blessed forever.[1] Therefore You are great, O LORD God, for there is none like You, and there is no God besides You, according to all that we have heard with our ears. Be strong and let us strengthen ourselves for our people and for the cities of our God, and may the LORD do what is good in His eyes. For You will light my lamp; the LORD my God will enlighten my darkness.[2] O LORD, God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, let it be known this day that You are God in Israel, and that I am Your servant, and that by Your word, O LORD, I have done all these things.[3] Answer me, O LORD, answer me, that this people may know that You are God.[4] And all the people saw and fell on their faces, and they said, "The LORD, He is God! The LORD, He is God!"[5] May the LORD our God be with us, as He was with our fathers; may He not leave us nor forsake us, to incline our hearts to Him,[6] to walk in all His ways, and to keep His commandments and His

660R 665R 670R 675R 680R

[1] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this prayer for perpetual blessing takes on added significance as a petition for the sick person's continued life and well-being.

[2] The metaphor of God illuminating darkness is particularly meaningful in the context of illness, which was often conceived in Jewish mystical tradition as a spiritual darkness requiring divine light for healing.

[3] This affirmation of divine authorization, originally spoken by Elijah before his miraculous demonstration of God's power, serves in this context to place the sick person's care under divine authority rather than merely human efforts.

[4] The repetition of "Answer me" (עֲנֵנִי) creates an intensified plea that would be recited with particular fervor at the sickbed. Kabbalistic tradition often associated such doubled expressions with the breaking through of divine barriers.

[5] This ecstatic declaration of God's sovereignty, recited twice for emphasis, appears in the Yom Kippur liturgy and represents the ultimate acceptance of divine judgment, making it particularly appropriate in contexts of life-threatening illness where one must accept divine will.

[6] This phrase is especially significant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, which emphasizes that proper spiritual preparation for death involves redirecting one's heart toward God in genuine interior transformation.

[i] This is from David's prayer in 2 Samuel 7:29, after Nathan delivered God's covenant promise to him. The original context is David requesting God's blessing on his royal dynasty, but in Ma'avar Yabok it is repurposed as a prayer for divine blessing during illness.

[ii] Originally from Joab's speech to his brother Abishai before battle with the Ammonites (2 Samuel 10:12), this phrase has been adapted from its military context to serve as spiritual encouragement during illness.

[iii] This verse from Elijah's confrontation with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel (1 Kings 18:37) is particularly significant in Jewish tradition. The repetition "Answer me, answer me" is interpreted in the Talmud (Berakhot 9b) as requesting both that fire descend from heaven and that the people's minds be directed to recognize God's sovereignty.

[iv] This dramatic declaration from 1 Kings 18:39 is also recited at the conclusion of the Ne'ilah service on Yom Kippur, connecting this prayer to themes of divine judgment and ultimate redemption.

וּמִשְׁפָּטָיו אֲשֶׁר צִוָּה אֶת אֲבֹתֵינוּ:[i] statutes and His judgments, which He commanded our fathers.

(תהלים) חִזְקוּ וְיַאֲמֵץ לְבַבְכֶם
כָּל הַמְיַחֲלִים לַיְיָ: וַאֲנִי עָלֶיךָ
בָּטָחְתִּי יְיָ אָמַרְתִּי אֱלֹהַי אָתָּה:
בְּיָדְךָ עִתֹּתָי הַצִּילֵנִי מִיַּד אוֹיְבַי
וּמֵרֹדְפָי: יְיָ הֵפִיר עֲצַת גּוֹיִם הֵנִיא
מַחְשְׁבוֹת עַמִּים: הִנֵּה עֵין יְיָ אֶל
יְרֵאָיו לַמְיַחֲלִים לְחַסְדּוֹ: לְהַצִּיל
מִמָּוֶת נַפְשָׁם וּלְחַיּוֹתָם בָּרָעָב:
נַפְשֵׁנוּ חִכְּתָה לַיְיָ עֶזְרֵנוּ וּמָגִנֵּנוּ
הוּא: כִּי בוֹ יִשְׂמַח לִבֵּנוּ כִּי בְשֵׁם
קָדְשׁוֹ בָּטָחְנוּ:[ii] יְהִי חַסְדְּךָ יְיָ
עָלֵינוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר יִחַלְנוּ לָךְ: זֶה עָנִי
קָרָא וַיהוָה שָׁמַע וּמִכָּל צָרוֹתָיו
הוֹשִׁיעוֹ: חֹנֶה מַלְאַךְ יְיָ סָבִיב
לִירֵאָיו[iii] וַיְחַלְּצֵם: טַעֲמוּ וּרְאוּ
כִּי טוֹב יְיָ אַשְׁרֵי הַגֶּבֶר יֶחֱסֶה בּוֹ:
כְּפִירִים רָשׁוּ וְרָעֵבוּ וְדֹרְשֵׁי יְיָ
לֹא יַחְסְרוּ כָל טוֹב: עִינֵי יְיָ אֶל
צַדִּיקִים וְאָזְנָיו אֶל שַׁוְעָתָם: צָעֲקוּ
וַיהוָה שָׁמַע וּמִכָּל צָרוֹתָם הִצִּילָם:

(Psalms) Be strong and let your heart take courage, all you who hope in the LORD. As for me, I have trusted in You, O LORD; I have said, "You are my God." My times are in Your hand; deliver me from the hand of my enemies and from my pursuers. The LORD frustrates the counsel of nations; He thwarts the plans of peoples. Behold, the eye of the LORD is upon those who fear Him, upon those who hope for His kindness, to save their souls from death and to sustain them in famine. Our soul waits for the LORD;[1] He is our help and our shield. For in Him our heart rejoices, for in His holy name we have trusted. May Your kindness, O LORD, be upon us, as we have hoped in You. This poor man called,[2] and the LORD heard, and from all his troubles He saved him. The angel of the LORD encamps around those who fear Him, and delivers them. Taste and see that the LORD is good; happy is the man who takes refuge in Him. Young lions suffer want and hunger, but those who seek the LORD shall not lack any

[1]The shift from third person ('their souls') to first person plural ('our soul') in this compilation reflects how these verses were adapted for communal recitation at a sickbed, where those present would recite them together with or on behalf of the ill person.

[2]This verse creates a narrative shift, moving from general principles about divine protection to a specific example of answered prayer. In the context of a sickbed prayer, this would encourage the ill person to identify with the 'poor man' whose prayer was heard.

[i]Cf. 2 Samuel 7:29 — This verse is from David's prayer after receiving God's covenant promise. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it serves as a powerful opening petition asking for God's blessing to continue perpetually, which is especially meaningful when praying for the sick. | Cf. 2 Samuel 7:22 — This continues David's prayer, affirming God's uniqueness and greatness. In the prayer for the sick, it establishes that the petitioner is turning to the only true source of healing and blessing. | Cf. 2 Samuel 10:12 — This verse from Joab's battle speech is repurposed in this prayer context to encourage strength and faith while acknowledging divine sovereignty over outcomes—particularly relevant when facing illness. | Cf. Psalm 18:28 — The light imagery in this psalm verse represents divine illumination during dark times, making it especially appropriate in prayers for those experiencing the darkness of illness. | Cf. 1 Kings 18:36 — This verse from Elijah's confrontation with the prophets of Baal emphasizes the speaker's identity as God's servant whose actions are divinely guided—in Ma'avar Yabok, this models proper relationship with God during illness. | Cf. 1 Kings 18:37-39 — These verses complete the reference to Elijah's dramatic demonstration of God's power, which in the context of prayers for the sick represents a petition for divine intervention that will manifest God's presence and power to all witnesses. | Cf. 1 Kings 8:57-58 — This verse from Solomon's prayer at the Temple dedication asks for God's continued presence and guidance. In Ma'avar Yabok, it serves as a closing petition for divine assistance in maintaining faithfulness even during illness.

[ii]The emphasis on trust (בטחון) appears repeatedly throughout this passage, showing how Ma'avar Yabok presents trust in God as the proper spiritual response to illness and suffering.

[iii]This image of the angel of the LORD encamping around the faithful appears elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok as part of the angelic protection formula that creates a spiritual shield around the ill person.

קָרוֹב יְיָ לְנִשְׁבְּרֵי לֵב[i] וְאֶת דַּכְּאֵי
רוּחַ יוֹשִׁיעַ: רַבּוֹת רָעוֹת צַדִּיק
וּמִכֻּלָּם יַצִּילֶנּוּ יְיָ: תִּמּוֹתַת רָשָׁע
רָעָה וְשֹׂנְאֵי צַדִּיק יֶאְשָׁמוּ: פּוֹדֶה
יְיָ נֶפֶשׁ עֲבָדָיו וְלֹא יֶאְשְׁמוּ כָּל
הַחֹסִים בּוֹ:[ii]

good. The eyes of the LORD are toward the righteous, and His ears are open to their cry. They cried out and the LORD heard, and from all their troubles He delivered them. The LORD is close to the brokenhearted, and saves those crushed in spirit. Many are the evils that befall the righteous one, but the LORD will deliver him from them all. Evil will slay the wicked, and the haters of the righteous will be held guilty. The LORD redeems the soul of His servants, and all who take refuge in Him will not be held guilty.[1] 705R 710R

לְדָוִד רִיבָה יְיָ אֶת יְרִיבַי[iii]
אֶת לֹחֲמָי: הַחֲזֵק מָגֵן וְצִנָּה[iv] וְקוּמָה
בְּעֶזְרָתִי: וְהָרֵק חֲנִית וּסְגֹר
לִקְרַאת רדְפָי אֱמֹר לְנַפְשִׁי יְשֻׁעָתֵךְ
אָנִי:[v] יֵבֹשׁוּ וְיִכָּלְמוּ מְבַקְשֵׁי
נַפְשִׁי יִסֹּגוּ אָחוֹר וְיַחְפְּרוּ חֹשְׁבֵי

A Psalm of David:[2] Contend, O LORD, with those who contend with me; fight against those who fight against me. Take hold of shield and buckler, and rise up to help me. Draw the spear and block the way against my pursuers; say to my soul, "I am your salvation."[3] May those who seek my life be 715R 720R

[1] The passage concludes with a powerful message of redemption and absolution, particularly significant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok where illness is often viewed as potentially atoning for sin. This ending offers reassurance that those who trust in God will ultimately be vindicated regardless of their current suffering.

[2] This introduction identifies the psalm as attributed to King David, though it is not explicitly stated in the Hebrew text presented here. The complete Psalm 35 is longer than the excerpt provided in Ma'avar Yabok's Tuesday prayer sequence.

[3] This direct divine statement to the soul is particularly significant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, which emphasizes the importance of divine reassurance for the soul during illness and at the moment of death.

[i] The concept that God is especially close to the brokenhearted provides spiritual comfort for the ill, suggesting that suffering can actually bring one closer to divine presence rather than indicating divine abandonment.

[ii] Cf. Psalms 34 — This passage is primarily composed of verses from Psalm 34, supplemented with verses from Psalms 31 and 33. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses have been carefully selected to create a prayer for the sick or dying that emphasizes divine protection, God's responsiveness to prayer, and trust in divine salvation. The compilation follows a common pattern in the text of creating therapeutic spiritual progressions from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation. | Cf. Psalms 31 — The inclusion of these specific verses from Psalm 31 is significant in a deathbed context because verse 6 from this same psalm ('Into Your hand I commit my spirit') is identified elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok as a central verse for deathbed recitation. The verses included here establish the theological foundation for that surrender—the recognition that one's times/destiny is in God's hands. | Cf. Psalms 33 — These verses emphasize divine providence and the futility of human plans against God's will, providing comfort to the sick or dying by placing their suffering within a larger divine framework. The theme of waiting for and trusting in divine deliverance is particularly relevant in contexts of illness or approaching death.

[iii] This is Psalm 35, a prayer for divine intervention against enemies. In Ma'avar Yabok, it appears in the prayer sequence for Tuesday (the second day), making it particularly appropriate for recitation during illness or times of distress.

[iv] The imagery of God taking up weapons to defend the psalmist is particularly potent in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, where illness is often understood as an attack by negative spiritual forces that require divine intervention.

[v] The phrase "say to my soul, 'I am your salvation'" has special resonance in the context of deathbed prayers, as it directly addresses the soul's need for divine reassurance during its transition.

רָעָתִי:[i] וְנַפְשִׁי תָּגִיל בַּיהוָה תָּשִׂישׂ
בִּישׁוּעָתוֹ:[ii] כָּל עַצְמוֹתַי תֹּאמַרְנָה יְהוָה מִי כָמוֹךָ
מַצִּיל עָנִי מֵחָזָק מִמֶּנּוּ וְעָנִי וְאֶבְיוֹן מִגֹּזְלוֹ:
יָקוּמוּן עֵדֵי חָמָס אֲשֶׁר לֹא יָדָעְתִּי יִשְׁאָלוּנִי:
יְשַׁלְּמוּנִי רָעָה תַּחַת טוּבָה שְׁכוֹל לְנַפְשִׁי:
וַאֲנִי בִּלְבוּשָׁם שָׂק עִנֵּיתִי בַצּוֹם נַפְשִׁי וּתְפִלָּתִי
עַל חֵיקִי תָּשׁוּב:[iii] כְּרֵעַ כְּאָח לִי הִתְהַלָּכְתִּי כְּאֵבֶל קוֹדֵר
שְׁחוֹתִי:[iv] וּבְצַלְעִי שָׂמְחוּ וְנֶאֱסָפוּ נֶאֱסָפוּ עָלַי נְכִים וְלֹא יָדָעְתִּי
קָרְעוּ וְלֹא דָמּוּ:[v] בַּחֲנֵפֵי לַעֲגֵי מָעוֹג חָרֹק עָלָי שִׁנָּיו:
אֲדֹנָי כַּמָּה תִרְאֶה הָשִׁיבָה נַפְשִׁי מִשֹּׁאֹתָם יְחִידָתִי
מִכְּפִירִים:[vi] אוֹדְךָ בְּקָהָל רָב בְּעַם עָצוּם אֲהַלְלֶךָּ:

put to shame and dishonored; may those who plot my harm be turned back and confounded. Then my soul shall rejoice in the LORD, exulting in His deliverance.[A] Awake and rouse Yourself for my judgment, my God and my Lord, for my cause. Let them be put to shame and confusion together, those who rejoice at my misfortune; let them be clothed with shame and dishonor, those who magnify themselves against me. Let those who desire my vindication shout for joy and be glad, and say evermore, "Great is the LORD, who delights in the well-being of His servant."[1] Then my tongue shall meditate on Your righteousness, all day long on Your praise.[B]

כִּי עִמְּךָ מְקוֹר חַיִּים בְּאוֹרְךָ נִרְאֶה
אוֹר:[v] גּוֹל עַל יְיָ דַּרְכֶּךָ וּבְטַח
עָלָיו וְהוּא יַעֲשֶׂה:[vi] וְהוֹצִיא
כָאוֹר צִדְקֶךָ וּמִשְׁפָּטְךָ כַּצָּהֳרָיִם:

For with You is the fountain of life; in Your light we see light. Commit your way to the LORD,[2] trust in Him, and He will act. He will bring forth your righteousness like the light, and your justice like

[A] Or: "And my soul shall exult in the LORD, rejoice in His salvation." — This alternative preserves the parallelism in the Hebrew more closely, with 'exult' corresponding to תָּגִיל and 'rejoice' to תָּשִׂישׂ. The Hebrew term יְשׁוּעָתוֹ is more directly rendered as 'salvation' rather than 'deliverance.'

[B] Or: "And my tongue shall murmur Your righteousness, all day long Your praise." — The Hebrew verb תֶּהְגֶּה (tehegeh) has connotations of a low, continuous utterance or murmuring that combines both speech and meditation. This alternative captures the sense of constant, quiet recitation that would be appropriate in a sickroom context.

[1] The phrase הֶחָפֵץ שְׁלוֹם עַבְדּוֹ literally means "who desires the peace/well-being of His servant," suggesting that God actively wants health and wholeness for the sufferer, an important theological point in the context of prayers for healing.

[2] The Hebrew uses the vivid verb "gol" (roll/commit), suggesting the complete transfer of one's burdens to God, like rolling a heavy stone away.

[i] In kabbalistic thought, as presented in Ma'avar Yabok, these "evil plotters" could be understood as both human enemies and negative spiritual forces (קליפות/kelipot) that gather around the ill person.

[ii] The transition from pleading to rejoicing in this verse reflects the therapeutic spiritual progression common in Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences, which often move from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation.

[iii] The Hebrew term "shalom" encompasses not just peace but wholeness, well-being, and health, making this phrase particularly relevant in the context of prayers for healing.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's Tuesday prayer sequence — The psalm's themes of divine protection against enemies would be understood in the context of illness as a plea for God to fight against the spiritual forces causing suffering. The progression from distress to confidence mirrors the therapeutic spiritual journey that Ma'avar Yabok attempts to facilitate for the sick or dying person. | Cf. Psalm 91 (Shir Shel Pega'im) — The martial imagery in Psalm 35 (shields, spears, etc.) serves a similar protective function to Psalm 91, creating a spiritual shield around the ill person. Both psalms envision God actively intervening against forces that threaten the individual. | Cf. Confession (vidui) practices — The psalm's request for God to confound the 'accusers' parallels the function of confession (vidui) in Ma'avar Yabok, which is understood to neutralize spiritual prosecutors in the divine court.

[v] This is Psalm 36:10, a verse commonly used in Jewish liturgy that expresses the concept of God as the ultimate source of life and illumination.

[vi] This is from Psalm 37:5, where the unusual verb "גּוֹל" (commit/roll) suggests the complete transfer of one's burdens to God.

650 דּוֹם לַיְיָ וְהִתְחוֹלֵל לוֹ[i] אַל תִּתְחַר
בְּמַצְלִיחַ דַּרְכּוֹ בְּאִישׁ עֹשֶׂה מְזִמּוֹת:
אַתָּה סֵתֶר לִי מִצַּר תִּצְּרֵנִי רָנֵּי
פַלֵּט תְּסוֹבְבֵנִי סֶלָה:[ii] ישר הפוך
[iv iii]ישר:

the noonday. Be still before the LORD and wait patiently for Him;[A] do not fret over one who prospers in his way,[B] over the man who carries out 740R evil devices. You are my hiding place; You preserve me from trouble; You surround me with songs of deliverance.[1] Selah. [Forward, reverse, forward][2]

655 (כתובים) רַבְתָּ אֲדֹנָי רִיבֵי נַפְשִׁי
גָּאַלְתָּ חַיָּי: רָאִיתָה יְיָ עַוָּתָתִי שָׁפְטָה
מִשְׁפָּטִי: כָּל נִקְמָתָם כָּל מַחְשְׁבֹתָם
לִי: שָׁמַעְתָּ חֶרְפָּתָם יְיָ כָּל מַחְשְׁבֹתָם
עָלַי שִׂפְתֵי קָמַי וְהֶגְיוֹנָם עָלַי כָּל
660 הַיּוֹם: שִׁבְתָּם וְקִימָתָם הַבִּיטָה
אֲנִי מַנְגִּינָתָם:[v] תֵּם עֲוֹנֵךְ בַּת
צִיּוֹן[vi] לֹא יוֹסִיף לְהַגְלוֹתֵךְ פָּקַד
עֲוֹנֵךְ בַּת אֱדוֹם גִּלָּה עַל חַטֹּאתָיִךְ:

(Writings) You, O Lord, have pleaded the causes of my soul;[3] You have redeemed my life. You have 745R seen, O LORD, my oppression; judge my case. All their vengeance, all their schemes are against me. You have heard their reproach, O LORD, all their schemes against me, the lips of those who rise against me, and their meditation against me all day long. 750R Look upon their sitting down and their rising up; I am their song. The punishment of your iniquity is [A]Or: "Be silent before the LORD and travail for Him" — The Hebrew verb "וְהִתְחוֹלֵל" has connections to both waiting and childbirth/labor. This alternate translation emphasizes the active, painful aspect of spiritual waiting rather than the passive aspect, which might be more relevant in contexts of suffering or illness.

[B]Or: "do not compete with one who succeeds in his path" — The Hebrew "תִּתְחַר" can mean both "to fret/be angry" and "to compete/rival." This alternative emphasizes avoiding unhealthy comparison rather than emotional distress, which might be more applicable in contexts focusing on personal spiritual journey rather than emotional state.

[1]The imagery here is of being completely encircled by songs of salvation, creating a protective barrier of divine joy.

[2]This unusual notation (ישר הפוך ישר) appears to be a scribal or kabbalistic instruction suggesting these verses can be read in multiple directions for deeper mystical meaning, possibly relating to the practice of reading biblical texts in reverse for additional insights.

[3]The Hebrew phrase "רִיבֵי נַפְשִׁי" literally means "the contentions/disputes of my soul," suggesting legal advocacy. This verse from Lamentations 3:58 portrays God as an advocate who takes up the case of the suffering person.

[i]From Psalm 37:7, where "וְהִתְחוֹלֵל" can mean both "wait patiently" and "be brought forth in birth pangs," suggesting that waiting for divine intervention can be both passive and intensely active.

[ii]From Psalm 32:7, describing God as a protective sanctuary surrounded by songs of deliverance.

[iii]This is a scribal or kabbalistic notation meaning "forward, reverse, forward," likely indicating a reading instruction for the preceding verses, suggesting they can be read in multiple directions for additional mystical meaning.

[iv]Cf. Psalm 36:10 — This verse establishes the theological foundation that God is the ultimate source of both life and illumination, a key concept in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death as transition rather than termination. | Cf. Psalm 37:5-7 — These verses from Psalm 37 provide guidance for the sick person to fully surrender their situation to God and wait patiently for divine intervention, aligning with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on acceptance of divine judgment. | Cf. Psalm 32:7 — This verse offers reassurance of divine protection and deliverance, particularly relevant for someone facing illness or approaching death, reinforcing the book's message that proper spiritual preparation creates divine protection.

[v]The phrase "I am their song" (אֲנִי מַנְגִּינָתָם) appears in Lamentations 3:63, where it refers to the mockery endured by the suffering person. In this context, it indicates how the enemies make the speaker an object of derision and contempt.

[vi]This verse from Lamentations 4:22 marks a significant shift from the personal lament to a prophetic pronouncement of comfort directed at Jerusalem (daughter of Zion).

זְכֹר יְיָ מָה הָיָה לָּנוּ הַבִּיטָה וּרְאֵה
665 אֶת חֶרְפָּתֵנוּ: [i] נַחֲלָתֵנוּ נֶהֶפְכָה
לְזָרִים בָּתֵּינוּ לְנָכְרִים: יָתוֹם
הָיִינוּ אֵין אָב אִמֹּתֵינוּ כְּאַלְמָנוֹת:
מֵימֵינוּ בַכֶּסֶף שָׁתִינוּ בְּמָחִיר
עֵצֵינוּ עַל צַוָּארֵנוּ נִרְדָּפְנוּ יָגַעְנוּ
וְלֹא הוּנַח לָנוּ: מִצְרַיִם נָתַנּוּ יָד
אַשּׁוּר לְשָׂבַע לָחֶם: אֲבוֹתֵינוּ חָטְאוּ
וְאֵינָם אֲנַחְנוּ סָבַלְנוּ עֲוֹנֹתָם:
עֲבָדִים מָשְׁלוּ בָּנוּ פֹּרֵק אֵין
מִיָּדָם: בְּנַפְשֵׁנוּ נָבִיא לַחְמֵנוּ
מִפְּנֵי חֶרֶב הַמִּדְבָּר: עוֹרֵנוּ כְּתַנּוּר
נִכְמָרוּ מִפְּנֵי זַלְעֲפוֹת רָעָב:
נָשִׁים בְּצִיּוֹן עִנּוּ בְּתוּלוֹת בְּעָרֵי
יְהוּדָה: שָׂרִים בְּיָדָם נִתְלוּ פְּנֵי
זְקֵנִים לֹא נֶהְדָּרוּ: בַּחוּרִים טַחֲנָה
וּנְעָרִים בָּעֵצִי כָשָׁלוּ: זְקֵנִים
מִשַּׁעַר בָּחוּרִים מִנְגִּינָתָם:
שָׁבַת מְשׂוֹשׂ לִבֵּנוּ נֶהְפַּךְ מִסְפְּדֵנוּ
לְמָחוֹל: נָפְלָה עֲטֶרֶת רֹאשֵׁנוּ אוֹי
נָא לָנוּ כִּי חָטָאנוּ: עַל זֶה הָיָה דָוֶה
לִבֵּנוּ עַל אֵלֶּה חָשְׁכוּ עֵינֵינוּ:
עַל הַר צִיּוֹן שָׁמֵם שׁוּעָלִים הָלְכוּ בוֹ:
אַתָּה יְיָ לְעוֹלָם תֵּשֵׁב כִּסְאֲךָ לְדֹר
וָדֹר: לָמָּה לָנֶצַח תִּשְׁכָּחֵנוּ תַּעַזְבֵנוּ לְאֹרֶךְ
יָמִים: הֲשִׁיבֵנוּ יְיָ אֵלֶיךָ וְנָשׁוּבָה
חַדֵּשׁ יָמֵינוּ כְּקֶדֶם: [ii] כִּי אִם מָאֹס מְאַסְתָּנוּ
קָצַפְתָּ עָלֵינוּ עַד מְאֹד: [iii] כִּי יֵשׁ עֵת לְכָל
חֵפֶץ וְעֵת לְכָל מַעֲשֶׂה: כִּי אֵין דָּבָר
אֲשֶׁר שָׁם שִׁלְטוֹן מֶלֶךְ וּמִי יֹאמַר לוֹ מַה
תַּעֲשֶׂה: לֵךְ אֱכֹל בְּשִׂמְחָה לַחְמֶךָ
וּשְׁתֵה בְלֵב טוֹב יֵינֶךָ כִּי כְבָר רָצָה
הָאֱלֹהִים אֶת מַעֲשֶׂיךָ: [iv] וּמָרְדֳּכַי
יָצָא מִלִּפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ [v] בִּלְבוּשׁ
מַלְכוּת תְּכֵלֶת וְחוּר וַעֲטָרַת זָהָב
גְּדוֹלָה וְתַכְרִיךְ בּוּץ וְאַרְגָּמָן
וְהָעִיר שׁוּשָׁן צָהֲלָה וְשָׂמֵחָה:
לַיְּהוּדִים הָיְתָה אוֹרָה וְשִׂמְחָה
וְשָׂשׂוֹן וִיקָר: [vi] [vii]

complete, O daughter of Zion;[A] He will no longer send you into exile. He has punished your iniquity, O daughter of Edom; He has uncovered your sins. Remember, O LORD, what has happened to us; look and see our disgrace. Our inheritance has been turned over to strangers, our houses to foreigners. Why do You forget us forever and forsake us for so long?[1] Return us to You, O LORD, and we shall return; renew our days as of old. For where the king's word is, there is power;[2] and who may say to him, "What are you doing?"[B] Go, eat your bread with joy,[C] and drink your wine with a glad heart; for God has already approved your works.[3] And Mordechai went out from the presence of the king in royal apparel of blue and white, with a great crown of gold and a garment of fine linen and purple; and the city

[A] Or: "Your iniquity has ended, O daughter of Zion" — The Hebrew "תֹּם" primarily means "finished/completed/ended" rather than specifically "punishment." This alternate translation emphasizes the completion or ending of the sinful state itself rather than focusing on the punitive aspect.

[B] Or: "and who can question what he does?" — This more idiomatic translation better captures the rhetorical force of the question, emphasizing that no one has the right or authority to challenge the king's (or God's) decisions.

[C] Or: "Go, enjoy your food with gladness" — This translation broadens "bread" to "food" and varies the word for joy, which might make the meaning more accessible to modern readers while preserving the essential meaning.

[1] This question from Lamentations 5:20 expresses the tension between faith in God's ultimate redemption and the experience of prolonged suffering, a sentiment that would resonate deeply with the sick or dying.

[2] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse from Ecclesiastes takes on additional meaning beyond its original context. Here it likely suggests that just as a human king's word carries absolute authority, how much more so does God's decree, encouraging acceptance of divine judgment.

[3] This comforting statement from Ecclesiastes suggests that despite current suffering, God has already found favor with the person's life and deeds, offering spiritual reassurance to the ill or dying.

[i] These verses from Lamentations 5:1-2 shift to a communal lament, moving from the individual "I" of earlier verses to the collective "our" suffering.

[ii] This verse from Lamentations 5:21 represents the culminating plea of the book of Lamentations, expressing hope for restoration through divine intervention.

[iii] The passage shifts here from Lamentations to Ecclesiastes 8:4, creating a transition from lament to wisdom literature that emphasizes divine sovereignty.

[iv] This verse from Ecclesiastes 9:7 offers consolation by suggesting that God already accepts the sufferer's deeds, encouraging enjoyment of simple pleasures even in difficult times.

[v] The passage makes another abrupt transition here to Esther 8:15, shifting from wisdom literature to narrative, depicting Mordechai's triumph and elevation after near destruction.

[vi] This concluding verse from Esther 8:16 represents the complete reversal of fortune for the Jewish people, from mourning to celebration, mirroring the hoped-for transformation of the sick or dying person's condition.

[vii] Cf. Lamentations 3:58-63 — In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses would help the sick or dying person express their suffering while maintaining faith that God ultimately defends them against both physical ailments and spiritual accusers. | Cf. Lamentations 4:22 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse would suggest that the suffering person's spiritual purification is complete, while divine judgment will fall upon their spiritual enemies. | Cf. Lamentations 5:1-2, 20-21 — In Ma'avar of Shushan rejoiced and was glad. For the Jews there was light and gladness, joy and honor.[1] 770R

עוֹנֶה מִמְצַר קוֹרְאָיו[i] וּלְתַאֲלָתָם רְפוּאָה מְמַהֵר לִשְׁלוֹחַ. פּוֹנֶה לַעֲנוֹת עָנְיֵי תְּפִלָּתוֹ בַּל לִשְׁקֹץ[ii] וְלֵאלוֹהַּ צָעוֹק נִצְעָק מִכְּאֵב לֵב וְנִסְגּוֹד וְנִפְלוֹחַ:[iii] אֵל אֱלֹהֵינוּ כִּי יַרְבֶּה לִסְלוֹחַ:[iv]

He answers those who call Him from distress, and to their supplication He swiftly sends healing.[2] He turns to respond to the poor, never rejecting their prayer,[3] and to God we shall cry out from the pain of our heart, and we shall bow down and serve Him, for our God abundantly forgives.[4] 775R

למנחה ליום שני

For the Afternoon Prayer of Monday

מתחיל מזמור לדוד ה׳ רועי סי׳ כ״ג[v] תמצא לעיל[vi]

Begin Psalm 23,[5] “The LORD is my shepherd” (Psalm 23), you will find it above.[6]

[1]The passage concludes with this verse from Esther describing the Jews’ salvation from destruction, symbolically representing the hope for spiritual redemption even when physical healing may not occur.

[2]The Hebrew ‘לתאלתם’ (to their supplication/request) is connected to the root אלה, suggesting an earnest or even desperate appeal, conveying the urgency of prayers offered during serious illness.

[3]The prayer emphasizes that God’s receptiveness to prayer is universal and without discrimination, with special attention to the prayers of the poor and suffering—a particularly relevant assurance in the context of sickbed prayers.

[4]This closing quote from Isaiah 55:7 transforms what began as a prayer for physical healing into a more comprehensive appeal for spiritual restoration, suggesting the interconnection between physical and spiritual wellbeing central to Ma’avar Yabok’s approach.

[5]This is a navigational instruction in the prayer manual, not the text of the psalm itself. The author is directing the reader to recite Psalm 23 at this point in the liturgical sequence but is not reprinting the text since it appears elsewhere in the book.

[6]This instruction demonstrates how Ma’avar Yabok functions as a practical manual with cross-

Yabok, these verses would help connect the individual’s suffering to the broader community’s historical experience while expressing hope for restoration, whether through healing or through a blessed afterlife. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 8:4 — In Ma’avar Yabok, this verse would encourage acceptance of divine sovereignty and judgment, helping the sick person submit to God’s will regarding their condition. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 9:7 — In Ma’avar Yabok, this would provide spiritual comfort to the sick person by suggesting that God has already accepted their life and deeds, regardless of their current suffering. | Cf. Esther 8:15-16 — In Ma’avar Yabok, these verses offer a powerful metaphor of transformation from mourning to joy, suggesting that suffering can be followed by redemption, either through physical healing or spiritual elevation after death.

[i]There is a wordplay here on ‘מצר’ (distress/strait) which evokes both the physical narrowness of constriction and the emotional experience of distress. The phrase echoes Psalm 118:5.

[ii]The Hebrew uses a negative construction with ‘bal’ (not) and ‘shakeitz’ (reject/abhor), emphasizing that God never finds prayer repulsive, regardless of who offers it.

[iii]These Aramaic-influenced terms for worship (‘nisgod’—we shall bow down, and ‘nifloch’—we shall serve) create a solemn, formal tone, emphasizing total devotion in response to divine mercy.

[iv]Cf. Psalms 118:5 — This prayer draws on the psalmist’s experience of calling to God in distress and receiving an answer, connecting the individual experience to the communal prayer context. | Cf. Isaiah 57:15 — The prayer affirms God’s special attention to the prayers of the poor and distressed, a recurring theme in prophetic literature that emphasized God’s care for the vulnerable. | Cf. Isaiah 55:7 — Concluding with this direct quote from Isaiah emphasizes divine forgiveness as the ultimate response to human distress and prayer, suggesting that many of the ailments being prayed about may be understood as connected to sin requiring forgiveness.

[v]This is a navigational instruction directing the reader to find Psalm 23 (“The LORD is my shepherd”) in an earlier part of the text. The abbreviation ׳סי (siman) means “section” or “number.”

[vi]This phrase means “you will find it above,” indicating that Psalm 23 has already appeared earlier in the text and should be referenced from there rather than being repeated here.

(תורה) יְיָ יִלָּחֶם לָכֶם וְאַתֶּם
690 תַּחֲרִישׁוּן׃[i] עָזִּי וְזִמְרָת יָהּ וַיְהִי לִי
לִישׁוּעָה׃[ii] זֶה אֵלִי וְאַנְוֵהוּ אֱלֹהֵי
אָבִי וַאֲרֹמְמֶנְהוּ׃ יְיָ אִישׁ מִלְחָמָה יְיָ
שְׁמוֹ׃ יְמִינְךָ יְיָ נֶאְדָּרִי בַכֹּחַ יְמִינְךָ
יְיָ תִּרְעַץ אוֹיֵב׃ מִי כָמֹכָה בָּאֵלִם
695 יְיָ[iii] מִי כָּמֹכָה נֶאְדָּר בַּקֹּדֶשׁ נוֹרָא
תְהִלֹּת עֹשֵׂה פֶלֶא׃ תִּפֹּל עֲלֵיהֶם
אֵימָתָה וָפַחַד בִּגְדֹל זְרוֹעֲךָ יִדְמוּ
כָּאָבֶן׃ עַד יַעֲבֹר עַמְּךָ יְיָ עַד יַעֲבֹר
עַם זוּ קָנִיתָ׃[iv] לָכֵן אֱמֹר לִבְנֵי
700 יִשְׂרָאֵל אֲנִי יְיָ וְהוֹצֵאתִי אֶתְכֶם
מִתַּחַת סִבְלֹת מִצְרַיִם וְהִצַּלְתִּי
אֶתְכֶם מֵעֲבֹדָתָם וְגָאַלְתִּי אֶתְכֶם
בִּזְרוֹעַ נְטוּיָה וּבִשְׁפָטִים גְּדֹלִים׃
לֵךְ שֻׁב מִצְרַיִם כִּי מֵתוּ כָּל הָאֲנָשִׁים
705 [vi] [v] הַמְבַקְשִׁים אֶת נַפְשֶׁךָ׃

(Torah) The LORD will fight for you, and you shall 780R be silent.[A] The LORD is my strength and song, and He has become my salvation. This is my God, and I will glorify Him; my father's God, and I will exalt Him. The LORD is a man of war; the LORD is His name. Your right hand, O LORD, glorious in power, 785R Your right hand, O LORD, shatters the enemy. Who is like You among the mighty, O LORD? Who is like You, glorious in holiness, awesome in praises, doing wonders? Terror and dread fall upon them; by the greatness of Your arm they are still as stone;[B] until 790R
Your people pass over, O LORD, until the people whom You have purchased pass over.[1] Therefore say to the children of Israel: I am the LORD, and I will bring you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians, and I will deliver you from their bondage, and I 795R will redeem you with an outstretched arm and with great judgments. Go, return to Egypt, for all the

[A] Or: "The LORD will battle for you, while you remain still" — This alternate translation emphasizes the physical stillness aspect of 'tacharishun' rather than vocal silence, which might be more appropriate in the context of a deathbed where the person may be physically unable to move.

[B] Or: "by the greatness of Your arm they are silenced like stone" — The verb 'yidmu' shares roots with both silence and stillness. This alternate captures the sense of enemies being rendered speechless with awe, which adds a dimension of divine power over accusers that might be relevant in the context of death prayers.

references to avoid unnecessary repetition of biblical texts. Since Psalm 23 is a well-known text that appears multiple times in the prayer sequences, the author simply directs readers to the previous occurrence.

[1] The Hebrew 'ya'avor' (pass over) creates a direct connection to the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Jabbok). In the context of prayers for the dying, this suggests that just as God protected Israel during their crossing of the Red Sea, He will protect the soul during its transition.

[i] This verse (Exodus 14:14) comes from Moses' words to the Israelites at the Red Sea as the Egyptian army pursued them, emphasizing divine intervention in the face of mortal danger.

[ii] This begins the Song of the Sea (Exodus 15:2), sung by Moses and the Israelites after crossing the Red Sea. This collection of verses focuses on God's power to protect Israel and redeem them from Egyptian bondage.

[iii] This iconic verse (Exodus 15:11) is incorporated into the daily liturgy in the Amidah prayer and features prominently in the Passover Haggadah.

[iv] The Hebrew word 'ya'avor' (pass over) relates to the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Jabbok), creating a thematic connection between Israel's crossing of the Red Sea and the soul's transition after death.

[v] This verse (Exodus 4:19) describes God's command to Moses to return to Egypt after his exile in Midian. In the context of prayers for the sick, this verse may represent hope that dangers to the soul have passed.

[vi] Cf. Song of the Sea (Exodus 15) — These verses from the Song of the Sea emphasize God's power to protect and deliver, particularly in moments of transition. In Ma'avar Yabok, they serve as a spiritual parallel between the Israelites' crossing of the Red Sea and the soul's crossing to the afterlife. | Cf. Four expressions of redemption — These expressions of redemption ('I will bring you out,' 'I will deliver you,' 'I will redeem you') may be intended to remind the sick or dying person of God's power to deliver from all forms of bondage, including physical suffering.

men who sought your life are dead.[1]

(נביאים) כִּי רָאָה יְיָ אֶת עֳנִי
יִשְׂרָאֵל מֹרֶה מְאֹד[i] וְאֶפֶס עָצוּר
וְאֶפֶס עָזוּב[ii] וְאֵין עֹזֵר לְיִשְׂרָאֵל:
וְעַתָּה יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ הוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ נָא
מִיָּדוֹ וְיֵדְעוּ כָּל מַמְלְכוֹת הָאָרֶץ
כִּי אַתָּה יְיָ אֱלֹהִים לְבַדֶּךָ:
אוֹדְךָ יְיָ כִּי אָנַפְתָּ בִּי יָשֹׁב אַפְּךָ
וּתְנַחֲמֵנִי:[iii] הִנֵּה אֵל יְשׁוּעָתִי
אֶבְטַח וְלֹא אֶפְחָד: כִּי עָזִּי וְזִמְרָת
יָהּ[iv] יְיָ וַיְהִי לִי לִישׁוּעָה: יְיָ חָנֵנוּ
לְךָ קִוִּינוּ הֱיֵה זְרֹעָם לַבְּקָרִים[v] אַף
יְשׁוּעָתֵנוּ בְּעֵת צָרָה: כִּי יְיָ שֹׁפְטֵנוּ
יְיָ מְחֹקְקֵנוּ יְיָ מַלְכֵּנוּ הוּא יוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ:
חָזְקוּ יָדִים רָפוֹת וּבִרְכַּיִם כֹּשְׁלוֹת
אִמְצוּ.[vi] יְיָ לְהוֹשִׁיעֵנִי וּנְגִנוֹתַי

(From the Prophets) For the LORD saw the affliction of Israel, which was very bitter,[2] and there was no one confined and no one abandoned,[A] and no helper for Israel. And now, O LORD our God, save us, we pray, from his hand, and let all the kingdoms of the earth know that You alone, O LORD, are God. I will thank You, O LORD, for though You were angry with me, Your anger has turned away, and You comfort me.[3] Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust and not be afraid. For the LORD God is my strength and my song,[B] and He has become my salvation. O LORD, be gracious to us; we have waited for You. Be their arm every morning, our salvation also in time of trouble. For the LORD is our judge, the LORD is our lawgiver, the LORD is our king; He

[A] Or: "and there was neither bond nor free" — This alternate translation uses more idiomatic English to convey the Hebrew merism that suggests the totality of absence of support across all social classes. However, it loses some of the literal meaning of the original terms.

[B] Or: "For my strength and protection is Yah, the LORD" — The Hebrew word "zimrat" has been debated by scholars, with some suggesting it refers to "protection" or "might" rather than "song." This alternate translation reflects that scholarly perspective but is less traditional.

[1] This concluding verse may function metaphorically in this prayer sequence to suggest that spiritual accusers or dangers to the soul have been neutralized, offering reassurance to the dying person.

[2] This opening verse sets a tone of divine compassion, establishing that God sees and responds to suffering. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse suggests that God likewise sees the suffering of the sick person for whom these prayers are being recited.

[3] This verse reflects the theological framework of Ma'avar Yabok that suffering can be understood as divine correction rather than punishment. Just as God's anger turns to comfort, so illness can lead to healing and spiritual renewal.

[i] The word "moreh" (מֹרֶה) comes from the root meaning "bitter" or "rebellious." In this context, it describes the severity of Israel's affliction, which was exceedingly bitter or grievous. The entire phrase echoes 2 Kings 14:26.

[ii] This poetic pair refers to the complete absence of support for Israel—no one confined (possibly referring to those in fortresses) and no one left free who could help. It emphasizes total abandonment and helplessness.

[iii] The verbs shift here from perfect to imperfect tense, expressing both completed action (God's anger has turned) and ongoing action (the comfort continues). This reflects the prayer's theological understanding that divine healing follows divine chastisement.

[iv] This phrase draws directly from the Song at the Sea (Exodus 15:2), connecting the present need for healing with Israel's paradigmatic salvation from Egypt. The word "zimrat" means "song" but also carries connotations of "strength," creating a powerful wordplay.

[v] The phrase "be their arm every morning" uses the image of God's arm (a symbol of divine power) as a continual source of strength. "Morning" in biblical imagery often represents a time of divine mercy and renewal after the "night" of suffering.

[vi] This verse from Isaiah 35:3 serves both as a prayer for physical healing (strengthening weak limbs) and as spiritual encouragement. In its original context, it was part of Isaiah's vision of future restoration where the blind would see, the deaf would hear, and the lame would leap like deer.

נְנַגֵּן כָּל יְמֵי חַיֵּינוּ עַל בֵּית יְיָ׃[i][ii] will save us. Strengthen the weak hands, and make firm the feeble knees. O LORD, save me, and we will play my music all the days of our lives at the house of the LORD.[A] 815R

(תהלים) וְעוֹד מְעַט וְאֵין רָשָׁע
וְהִתְבּוֹנַנְתָּ עַל מְקוֹמוֹ וְאֵינֶנּוּ׃
חֶרֶב פָּתְחוּ רְשָׁעִים וְדָרְכוּ קַשְׁתָּם
לְהַפִּיל עָנִי וְאֶבְיוֹן לִטְבוֹחַ
יִשְׁרֵי דָרֶךְ׃ חַרְבָּם תָּבוֹא בְלִבָּם
וְקַשְׁתוֹתָם תִּשָּׁבַרְנָה׃ כִּי זְרוֹעוֹת
רְשָׁעִים תִּשָּׁבַרְנָה וְסוֹמֵךְ צַדִּיקִים
יְיָ׃ לֹא יֵבֹשׁוּ בְּעֵת רָעָה וּבִימֵי
רְעָבוֹן יִשְׂבָּעוּ׃ כִּי יִפֹּל לֹא יוּטָל
כִּי יְיָ סוֹמֵךְ יָדוֹ׃[iii] קַוֵּה אֶל יְיָ
וּשְׁמֹר דַּרְכּוֹ וִירוֹמֶמְךָ לָרֶשֶׁת
אָרֶץ בְּהִכָּרֵת רְשָׁעִים תִּרְאֶה׃
רָאִיתִי רָשָׁע עָרִיץ וּמִתְעָרֶה
כְּאֶזְרָח רַעֲנָן׃[iv] וַיַּעֲבֹר וְהִנֵּה
אֵינֶנּוּ וָאֲבַקְשֵׁהוּ וְלֹא נִמְצָא׃
וּתְשׁוּעַת צַדִּיקִים מֵיְיָ מָעוּזָּם בְּעֵת
צָרָה׃ וַיַּעְזְרֵם יְיָ וַיְפַלְּטֵם
מֵרְשָׁעִים וְיוֹשִׁיעֵם כִּי חָסוּ בוֹ׃
אֲדֹנָי נָגִדְךָ כָל תַּאֲוָתִי וְאַנְחָתִי
מִמְּךָ לֹא נִסְתָּרָה׃ יְיָ אַל בְּקֶצְפְּךָ
תוֹכִיחֵנִי וּבַחֲמָתְךָ תְיַסְּרֵנִי׃ כִּי

(Psalms) Yet a little while, and the wicked will be no more; you will look at his place, and he will not be there. The wicked draw the sword and bend their bow to bring down the poor and needy, to slaughter those whose way is upright. Their swords shall enter their own hearts, and their bows shall be broken. For the arms of the wicked shall be broken, but the LORD supports the righteous. The righteous shall not be ashamed in the time of evil, and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied. For if he falls, he shall not be cast down, because the LORD supports his hand. Wait for the LORD and keep His way, and He will exalt you to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, you shall see it. I have seen a wicked, violent man spreading himself like a flourishing native tree. But he passed away, and behold, he was no more; I sought him, but he could not be found. The salvation of the righteous is from the LORD, He is their stronghold in time of trouble. The LORD helps them and delivers them; He delivers them from the wicked and saves them, because they take refuge in 820R 825R 830R 835R

[A] Or: "and we will play my stringed instruments all the days of our lives in the house of the LORD" — The Hebrew "neginot" specifically refers to stringed instruments. This more precise translation clarifies the type of music but is slightly less flowing in English.

[i] This concluding verse comes from Hezekiah's song of thanksgiving after his recovery from a fatal illness (Isaiah 38:20), making it particularly appropriate in a prayer for healing. It expresses the commitment to lifelong gratitude and worship following divine salvation.

[ii] Cf. 2 Kings 14:26 — This verse is used to establish Israel's desperate condition requiring divine intervention, setting the context for the subsequent prayers for salvation | Cf. Isaiah 12:1-2 — These verses function as an expression of confidence that God's anger will turn to comfort, providing reassurance to the sick person that divine healing follows divine chastisement | Cf. Exodus 15:2 — The reference to the Song at the Sea connects the present need for healing with Israel's paradigmatic salvation from Egypt, suggesting that God's saving power is constant throughout history | Cf. Isaiah 33:2, 22 — By combining these verses, the prayer emphasizes God's roles as both merciful savior and righteous judge, suggesting that salvation comes through divine governance | Cf. Isaiah 35:3 — This verse serves both as a prayer for physical healing (strengthening weak limbs) and as spiritual encouragement for the sick person to maintain faith during illness | Cf. Isaiah 38:20 — This reference is particularly apt for the sick, as it comes from King Hezekiah's thanksgiving after being healed from a fatal illness, suggesting that the current suffering will likewise lead to restoration and thanksgiving

[iii] This verse about God supporting the hand of the fallen righteous person is especially relevant in the context of illness, where the sick person may feel physically and spiritually fallen. The image of God's hand supporting one's own offers powerful reassurance.

[iv] The phrase "like a flourishing native tree" is a powerful image of temporary prosperity that will ultimately pass away. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this metaphor would be particularly meaningful for the sick person, emphasizing that even the most apparently robust wicked person eventually disappears, while the righteous receive divine support.

לְךָ יְיָ הוֹחַלְתִּי אַתָּה תַּעֲנֶה אֲדֹנָי
אֱלֹהָי: אַל תַּעְזְבֵנִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהָי
אַל תִּרְחַק מִמֶּנִּי: חוּשָׁה לְעֶזְרָתִי
יְיָ תְּשׁוּעָתִי: וְעַתָּה מַה קִּוִּיתִי אֲדֹנָי
תּוֹחַלְתִּי לְךָ הִיא: מִכָּל פְּשָׁעַי
הַצִּילֵנִי חֶרְפַּת נָבָל אַל תְּשִׂימֵנִי:
שָׁמְעָה תְפִלָּתִי יְיָ וְשַׁוְּעָתִי הַאֲזִינָה
אֶל דִּמְעָתִי אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ כִּי גֵר אָנֹכִי
עִמָּךְ תוֹשָׁב כְּכָל אֲבוֹתָי:[i] קְוֹה
קִוִּיתִי יְיָ וַיֵּט אֵלַי וַיִּשְׁמַע שַׁוְּעָתִי:
אַתָּה יְיָ לֹא תִכְלָא רַחֲמֶיךָ מִמֶּנִּי
חַסְדְּךָ וַאֲמִתְּךָ תָּמִיד יִצְּרוּנִי: רְצֵה
יְיָ לְהַצִּילֵנִי יְיָ לְעֶזְרָתִי חוּשָׁה:
יֵבֹשׁוּ וְיַחְפְּרוּ יַחַד מְבַקְשֵׁי נַפְשִׁי
לִסְפּוֹתָהּ יִסֹּגוּ אָחוֹר וְיִכָּלְמוּ
חֲפֵצֵי רָעָתִי: יָשֻׁמּוּ עַל עֵקֶב בָּשְׁתָּם
הָאֹמְרִים לִי הֶאָח הֶאָח: וַאֲנִי עָנִי
וְאֶבְיוֹן[ii] אֲדֹנָי יַחֲשָׁב לִי עֶזְרָתִי
וּמְפַלְטִי אַתָּה אֱלֹהַי אַל תְּאַחַר:
אֲנִי אָמַרְתִּי יְיָ חָנֵּנִי רְפָאָה נַפְשִׁי
כִּי חָטָאתִי לָךְ:[iii] בְּוֹאת יָדַעְתִּי כִּי
חָפַצְתָּ בִּי כִּי לֹא יָרִיעַ אוֹיְבִי עָלָי:
וְאַתָּה יְיָ חָנֵּנִי וַהֲקִימֵנִי וַאֲשַׁלְּמָה
לָהֶם: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
מֵהָעוֹלָם וְעַד הָעוֹלָם אָמֵן וְאָמֵן:
כְּאַיָּל תַּעֲרֹג עַל אֲפִיקֵי מָיִם[iv] כֵּן
נַפְשִׁי תַעֲרֹג אֵלֶיךָ אֱלֹהִים: מַה
תִּשְׁתּוֹחֲחִי[v] נַפְשִׁי וַתֶּהֱמִי עָלָי
הוֹחִילִי לֵאלֹהִים כִּי עוֹד אוֹדֶנּוּ
יְשׁוּעוֹת פָּנָיו: שָׁפְטֵנִי אֱלֹהִים

Him. O Lord, all my desire is before You,[1] and my sighing is not hidden from You. O LORD, do not 840R rebuke me in Your anger, nor chastise me in Your wrath. For in You, O LORD, do I hope; You will answer, O Lord my God. Do not forsake me, O LORD my God; do not be far from me. Hasten to help me,
O LORD, my salvation. And now, what do I wait 845R for, O Lord? My hope is in You. Deliver me from all my transgressions; do not make me the scorn of the fool. Hear my prayer, O LORD, and give ear to my cry; do not be silent at my tears, for I am a stranger with You, a sojourner like all my fathers. Earnestly 850R
I waited for the LORD, and He inclined to me and heard my cry. You, O LORD, will not withhold Your compassion from me; Your kindness and Your truth shall constantly preserve me. Be pleased, O LORD, to deliver me; O LORD, make haste to help me. Let 855R those who seek to destroy my soul be ashamed and confounded together; let those who desire my harm retreat backward and be put to shame. May those who say to me, “Aha! Aha!” be desolate because of their shame.[2] But I am poor and needy; may the 860R
Lord consider me. You are my help and my deliverer;
O my God, do not delay. I said, “O LORD, be gracious to me; heal my soul, for I have sinned against You.” By this I know that You delight in me: that my enemy does not shout in triumph over me. And 865R
You, O LORD, be gracious to me and raise me up, that I may repay them.[3] Blessed be the LORD, God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting. Amen and

[1]The Hebrew כָּל תַּאֲוָתִי could be translated as “all my longing” or “all my yearning,” emphasizing not just desires but deep spiritual and physical needs brought before God.
[2]The Hebrew phrase הָאֹמְרִים לִי הֶאָח הֶאָח refers to expressions of malicious glee at another’s misfortune. In the context of illness, this would refer to those who might take satisfaction in the sick person’s suffering.
[3]The phrase וַאֲשַׁלְּמָה לָהֶם (“that I may repay them”) should not be understood as personal vengeance

[i]The self-description as “a stranger with You, a sojourner like all my fathers” reflects the transience of human life, a theme particularly relevant in Ma’avar Yabok’s approach to death as a transition or crossing over, similar to how the biblical patriarchs were sojourners.
[ii]The self-identification as “poor and needy” is not merely about material poverty but represents spiritual humility before God. In the context of illness, this phrase acknowledges human vulnerability and dependency on divine assistance.
[iii]The connection between healing and sin reflects Ma’avar Yabok’s theological framework that illness can serve as atonement. This verse acknowledges sin while simultaneously requesting healing, embodying the book’s approach to illness as potentially spiritually redemptive.
[iv]This powerful metaphor of a deer thirsting for water streams portrays spiritual longing in physical terms. For the sick or dying person, this image captures both physical need and spiritual yearning for divine refreshment.
[v]The reflexive question “Why are you cast down, O my soul?” represents an internal dialogue where the psalmist addresses their own spiritual distress. This provides a model for the sick person to engage their own spiritual struggles while maintaining hope.

וְרִיבָה רִיבִי מִגּוֹי לֹא חָסִיד מֵאִישׁ מִרְמָה וְעַוְלָה תְּפַלְּטֵנִי: כִּי אַתָּה אֱלֹהֵי מָעוּזִּי לָמָּה זְנַחְתָּנִי לָמָּה קֹדֵר אֶתְהַלֵּךְ בְּלַחַץ אוֹיֵב: [i]

Amen. As a deer longs for flowing streams, so my soul longs for You, O God. Why are you cast down, O my soul, and why do you moan within me? Hope in God, for I shall yet praise Him, the salvation of my countenance.[1] Judge me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation; from the deceitful and unjust man, deliver me.[2] For You are the God of my refuge; why have You cast me off? Why do I walk in gloom under the oppression of the enemy? 870R 875R

(כתובים) כִּי אֹרֶךְ יָמִים וּשְׁנוֹת חַיִּים וְשָׁלוֹם יוֹסִיפוּ לָךְ: [ii] בְּכָל דְּרָכֶיךָ דָעֵהוּ וְהוּא יְיַשֵּׁר אֹרְחֹתֶיךָ: [iii] וְיִמָּלְאוּ אֲסָמֶיךָ שָׂבָע וְתִירוֹשׁ יְקָבֶיךָ יִפְרָצוּ: [iv] מוּסַר יְיָ בְּנִי אַל תִּמְאָס וְאַל תָּקֹץ

For length of days, years of life, and peace they will add to you.[3] In all your ways know Him,[4] and He will make your paths straight. Your storehouses will be filled with plenty, and your vats will overflow with new wine. My son, do not reject the discipline of the LORD, nor loathe His reproof.[A] Then you will 880R

[A] Or: "My son, do not spurn the LORD's discipline or resent His correction" — This alternate but as a desire to fulfill one's spiritual obligations and demonstrate God's justice through restoration.

[1] The Hebrew phrase יְשׁוּעוֹת פָּנָיו could also be translated as "the salvation of His face" or "the help of His presence." I chose "salvation of my countenance" to capture how divine salvation is reflected in the changed countenance of the one who receives it.

[2] The psalm uses singular forms ("man") while also referring to "an ungodly nation," suggesting both individual and collective opposition to the righteous sufferer. This reflects the experience of the ill person who may face both specific challenges and broader systemic difficulties.

[3] The 'they' refers to the teachings of wisdom mentioned in the preceding verses of Proverbs, which are not included in this selection.

[4] The Hebrew 'דָּעֵהוּ' implies more than intellectual knowledge; it suggests acknowledging, recognizing, and being mindful of God in every aspect of life.

[i] Cf. Psalm 37:10-40 — These verses are selected to provide comfort to the sick or dying person by emphasizing divine justice and protection for the righteous. The text reassures that even though the wicked may temporarily prosper, their success is fleeting, while the righteous receive divine support. | Cf. Psalm 38:10, 2 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses give voice to the sick person's physical suffering while acknowledging divine judgment, creating a bridge between suffering and hope. | Cf. Psalm 38:16, 22-23 — These selections create a spiritual framework for the sick person to express both their suffering and their faith that God will respond to their prayers. | Cf. Psalm 39:8-13 — This selection helps the sick person contextualize their illness within the broader human condition of mortality while still appealing to divine mercy. | Cf. Psalm 40:2, 12-18 — This selection creates a progression from patient waiting to urgent need, mirroring the experience of serious illness that may be worsening. | Cf. Psalm 41:5, 12-14 — This psalm is particularly relevant for the sick as it directly addresses physical healing and restoration, providing hope that God will raise the person from their sickbed. | Cf. Psalm 42:2-3 — This passage expresses the soul's yearning for divine connection, particularly poignant for someone who may feel spiritually isolated due to illness. | Cf. Psalm 43:1-2 — This selection gives voice to the sick person's feelings of abandonment while still affirming God as their ultimate refuge.

[ii] This begins a collection of verses from Proverbs that emphasize divine blessing and protection. The opening verse (Proverbs 3:2) promises longevity, a significant theme in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to healing prayers.

[iii] From Proverbs 3:6, this verse emphasizes that recognizing God in all aspects of life leads to divine guidance, creating a theological framework where acknowledging divine providence is essential for healing.

[iv] From Proverbs 3:10, this verse uses agricultural abundance as a metaphor for divine blessing, connecting physical prosperity with spiritual wellbeing.

בְּתוֹכְחֹתוֹ׃[i] אַז תֵּלֵךְ לָבֶטַח
דַּרְכֶּךָ וְרַגְלְךָ לֹא תִגּוֹף׃[ii] אִם
תִּשְׁכַּב לֹא תִפְחָד וְשָׁכַבְתָּ וְעָרְבָה
שְׁנָתֶךָ׃[iii] אַל תִּירָא מִפַּחַד פִּתְאֹם
וּמִשֹּׁאַת רְשָׁעִים כִּי תָבֹא׃[iv] כִּי
יְהוָה יִהְיֶה בְכִסְלֶךָ וְשָׁמַר רַגְלְךָ
מִלָּכֶד׃[v] תְּתֵן לְרֹאשְׁךָ לִוְיַת
חֵן עֲטָרֹת תִּפְאֶרֶת תְּמַגְּנֶךָּ׃[vi]
בְּלֶכְתְּךָ לֹא יַצַר צַעֲדֶךָ וְאִם תָּרוּץ
לֹא תִכָּשֵׁל׃[vii] וְאַרַח צַדִּיקִים
כְּאוֹר נֹגַהּ הוֹלֵךְ וָאוֹר עַד נְכוֹן
הַיּוֹם׃[viii][ix]

walk securely on your way, and your foot will not stumble. When you lie down, you will not be afraid; 885R when you lie down, your sleep will be sweet.[A] Do not be afraid of sudden terror, nor of the destruction of the wicked when it comes. For the LORD will be your confidence,[1] and will keep your foot from being caught. He will give to your head a garland of grace, 890R a crown of glory He will shield you with.[2] When you walk, your step will not be hampered, and if you run, you will not stumble. The path of the righteous is like the light of dawn, shining brighter and brighter until the full day.[B] 895R translation uses 'spurn' and 'resent' which more directly convey the emotional response warned against, and may better capture the nuance of rejecting divine correction through illness.

[A] Or: "When you lie down, you will not be fearful; you will lie down and your sleep will be pleasant" — This alternate translation avoids the repetition of 'when you lie down' in the English rendering while maintaining the parallelism of the Hebrew. The term 'pleasant' for 'עָרְבָה' captures the sense of comfortable, undisturbed rest.

[B] Or: "The path of the righteous is like the first gleam of morning light, growing ever brighter

[1] The Hebrew 'בְּכִסְלֶךָ' has multiple meanings including 'at your side/flank,' 'your confidence,' and 'your support,' suggesting God's intimate protective presence.

[2] The Hebrew 'תְּמַגְּנֶךָּ' (shield you) creates a unique image where the crown not only adorns but also protects, combining honor and defense in one metaphor.

[i] From Proverbs 3:11, this verse connects to Ma'avar Yabok's view that illness can be a form of divine discipline that should be accepted rather than rejected, as it serves a purifying spiritual purpose.

[ii] From Proverbs 3:23, this verse uses the metaphor of secure walking to represent divine protection from harm.

[iii] From Proverbs 3:24, this verse about peaceful sleep would be particularly meaningful to the sick or dying who might struggle with rest due to physical discomfort or spiritual anxiety.

[iv] From Proverbs 3:25, this verse addresses the fear of sudden calamity, offering reassurance particularly relevant to those experiencing acute illness or facing death.

[v] From Proverbs 3:26, the term 'בְּכִסְלֶךָ' (your confidence/strength/flank) is significant as it suggests God's intimate presence as a protecting force.

[vi] This combines elements from Proverbs 1:9 and 4:9, describing Torah wisdom as both ornamental ('garland of grace') and protective ('shield you'), reflecting Ma'avar Yabok's view that spiritual wisdom provides both dignity and defense.

[vii] From Proverbs 4:12, this verse uses the metaphor of unhindered movement to represent freedom from obstacles, which in the context of healing prayers suggests recovery from physical limitations caused by illness.

[viii] From Proverbs 4:18, this concluding verse uses the metaphor of increasing light to represent the progressive spiritual illumination of the righteous. In the context of healing prayers, it suggests that following divine wisdom leads to growing clarity and ultimately complete spiritual wellness.

[ix] Cf. Proverbs 3:2-26, 4:9-18 — The compiler has carefully selected verses that emphasize divine protection, guidance, and blessing, creating a therapeutic progression from accepting divine discipline to experiencing security and ultimately spiritual illumination. This aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's approach of using scripture to both comfort the sick and reinforce its theological framework that illness can serve as spiritual refinement. | Cf. Psalms 91 — These Proverbs verses share thematic connections with Psalm 91, particularly in their emphasis on divine protection from fear, harm, and sudden calamity. Both texts are employed in Ma'avar Yabok as sources of spiritual comfort and protection for the vulnerable. | Cf. Zohar III:158a — Ma'avar Yabok draws on Zoharic influences in its understanding of how spiritual wisdom provides both physical and metaphysical protection. These Proverbs verses emphasize that following divine wisdom creates a protective shield around the person, a concept central to kabbalistic thought.

לְפָנֶיךָ תְּבֹא תְּפִלָּתֵנוּ צוּר חַי
הָעוֹלָמִים: [i] הַקְשֵׁב תְּפִלַּת עֲבָדֶיךָ
וְלֹא נֵצֵא נִכְלָמִים: [ii] וְהַשְׁקִיפָה
עָלֵינוּ בְּרַחֲמֶיךָ מִמְּרוֹמִים: אֵל
חַי וְקַיָּם מֶלֶךְ יוֹשֵׁב עַל כִּסֵּא
רַחֲמִים: [iii]

May our prayer come before You,[1] Rock of Eternal Life. Hearken to the prayer of Your servants, and let us not depart ashamed. Look down upon us[2] with Your mercy from on high. Living and Enduring God, King who sits upon the throne of mercy.[3] 900R

סדר ליום שלישי

Order for Tuesday[4]

יתחיל פסוקי אנא ה׳ ואח״כ יאמר זה [iv]

One should begin with the verses of "Ana Hashem"[5] [Please, O LORD] and afterward recite this

(תהלים לה) לְדָוִד רִיבָה יְיָ
אֶת־יְרִיבַי לְחַם אֶת־לֹחֲמָי: הַחֲזֵק
מָגֵן וְצִנָּה וְקוּמָה בְּעֶזְרָתִי: וְהָרֵק
חֲנִית וּסְגֹר לִקְרַאת רדְפַי אֱמֹר
לְנַפְשִׁי יְשֻׁעָתֵךְ אָנִי: יֵבֹשׁוּ וְיִכָּלְמוּ
מְבַקְשֵׁי נַפְשִׁי יִסֹּגוּ אָחוֹר וְיַחְפְּרוּ
חֹשְׁבֵי רָעָתִי: יִהְיוּ כְּמֹץ לִפְנֵי־רוּחַ
וּמַלְאַךְ יְיָ דּוֹחֶה: יְהִי־דַרְכָּם חֹשֶׁךְ
וַחֲלַקְלַקּוֹת וּמַלְאַךְ יְיָ רדְפָם:

(Psalm 35) Of David. Contend, O LORD, with those who contend with me; fight against those who fight against me. Take hold of shield and buckler, and rise up to help me. Draw the spear and block the way against my pursuers; say to my soul, "I am your salvation." May those who seek my life be put to shame and dishonored; may those who plan evil against me be turned back and confounded. May they be like chaff before the wind, with the angel of the LORD 905R 910R until the full light of day" — This alternate translation more vividly captures the progressive nature of the metaphor, emphasizing the gradual illumination from first light to full daylight, which better conveys the sense of spiritual growth and progressive healing intended in the context of Ma'avar Yabok.

[1] The Hebrew formulation תְּבֹא תְּפִלָּתֵנוּ literally means "may our prayer come/enter," invoking the image of prayer as something that physically travels to reach the divine presence.

[2] The Hebrew verb וְהַשְׁקִיפָה ("look down") often carries negative connotations in biblical Hebrew when referring to divine observation, but here it is specifically paired with "mercy" to transform it into a positive request for divine attention.

[3] This prayer concludes with this powerful image of God enthroned specifically on mercy rather than judgment, creating a fitting transition to the verses that follow in the larger prayer sequence.

[4] This heading introduces the prayer sequence designated for Tuesday (the third day of the week) in Ma'avar Yabok. It's part of the structured daily prayer system organized by days of the week that appears in section 7.16 of the text.

[5] The phrase 'Ana Hashem' (אנא ה׳) literally means 'Please, O LORD' and refers to a specific set of opening verses that begin each of the prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok. These standardized opening prayers create ritual continuity throughout the book's organized prayer system.

[i] The phrase "Rock of Eternal Life" combines two divine epithets: "Rock" (צוּר), which refers to God's strength and reliability, and "Life of the Worlds" (חֵי הָעוֹלָמִים), emphasizing God as the source of all existence and life.

[ii] The petition not to "depart ashamed" reflects the vulnerability of the petitioner, possibly referring to the sick or dying person who fears rejection of their prayer.

[iii] The image of God sitting on a "throne of mercy" contrasts with the concept of God sitting on a "throne of judgment" (כִּסֵּא דִין), expressing hope that divine mercy will prevail over strict justice, particularly important in the context of illness or approaching death.

[iv] This is a liturgical instruction appearing in the context of prayers for the sick, specifically for Tuesday according to the previous context. It directs the reader to begin with a set of verses that start with the formula 'Ana Hashem' (Please, O LORD) before proceeding to the next prayer.

כִּי־חִנָּם טָמְנוּ־לִי שַׁחַת רִשְׁתָּם
חִנָּם חָפְרוּ לְנַפְשִׁי: תְּבוֹאֵהוּ
שׁוֹאָה לֹא־יֵדָע[i] וְרִשְׁתּוֹ אֲשֶׁר־טָמַן
תִּלְכְּדוֹ בְּשׁוֹאָה יִפָּל־בָּהּ: וְנַפְשִׁי
תָּגִיל בַּיהוָה תָּשִׂישׂ בִּישׁוּעָתוֹ:
כָּל עַצְמוֹתַי תֹּאמַרְנָה יְיָ מִי
כָמוֹךָ מַצִּיל עָנִי מֵחָזָק מִמֶּנּוּ
וְעָנִי וְאֶבְיוֹן מִגֹּזְלוֹ: יְקוּמוּן עֵדֵי
חָמָס אֲשֶׁר לֹא־יָדָעְתִּי יִשְׁאָלוּנִי:
יְשַׁלְּמוּנִי רָעָה תַּחַת טוֹבָה שְׁכוֹל
לְנַפְשִׁי: וַאֲנִי בַּחֳלוֹתָם לְבוּשִׁי
שָׂק עִנֵּיתִי בַצּוֹם נַפְשִׁי וּתְפִלָּתִי
עַל־חֵיקִי תָּשׁוּב[ii]: כְּרֵעַ־כְּאָח
לִי הִתְהַלָּכְתִּי כַּאֵבֶל־אֵם קֹדֵר
שַׁחוֹתִי: וּבְצַלְעִי שָׂמְחוּ וְנֶאֱסָפוּ
נֶאֱסְפוּ עָלַי נַכִּים וְלֹא יָדָעְתִּי
קָרְעוּ וְלֹא־דָמּוּ[iii]: בְּחַנְפֵי
לַעֲגֵי מָעוֹג חָרֹק עָלַי שִׁנַּימוֹ[iv]:
אֲדֹנָי כַּמָּה תִּרְאֶה חָשִׂיבָה נַפְשִׁי
מִשֹּׁאֵיהֶם מִכְּפִירִים יְחִידָתִי: אוֹדְךָ
בְּקָהָל רָב בְּעַם עָצוּם אֲהַלְלֶךָּ:
אַל־יִשְׂמְחוּ־לִי אֹיְבַי שֶׁקֶר שֹׂנְאַי

driving them away.[1] May their way be dark and slippery, with the angel of the LORD pursuing them. 915R
For without cause they hid their net for me; without cause they dug a pit for my life. May ruin come upon them unawares, and may the net that they hid ensnare them; into that very destruction let them fall. Then my soul shall rejoice in the LORD and exult 920R in His salvation. All my bones shall say, “O LORD, who is like You, who rescues the poor from those stronger than they, the poor and needy from those who rob them?” Violent witnesses rise up; they ask me about things I do not know.[A] They repay me evil 925R for good, bringing bereavement to my soul.[2] But I, when they were ill, clothed myself in sackcloth; I afflicted myself with fasting, and my prayer returned to my own bosom.[B] I walked about as though grieving for a friend or brother;[3] I bowed down in mourn- 930R ing, as one who laments his mother. But when I stumbled, they gathered in glee; attackers gathered against me unbeknownst to me; they tore at me without ceasing. With godless mocking jesters, they gnashed their teeth at me.[C] O Lord, how long will 935R

[A] Or: “Malicious witnesses rise up; they demand answers about matters I am unaware of” — This translation better captures the legal context implied in the Hebrew, where false witnesses in a formal proceeding are making accusations that the psalmist cannot address because they are fabricated.

[B] Or: “and my prayer constantly returned to me” — This alternative captures the cyclical, persistent nature of the prayer implied in the Hebrew, suggesting continuous prayer rather than just its physical posture or return benefit.

[C] Or: “Among profane mockers at feasts, they grind their teeth against me” — This alterna-

[1] In the context of Ma’avar Yabok, this image of divine angelic intervention would be particularly significant, as the book frequently describes angels as protecting the soul during moments of vulnerability, especially during illness and at death.

[2] The Hebrew “שְׁכוֹל לְנַפְשִׁי” literally means “bereavement to my soul,” suggesting not just emotional pain but a profound spiritual emptiness. In the context of Ma’avar Yabok, this could be understood as the spiritual distress that accompanies physical suffering.

[3] This verse illustrates the psalmist’s ethical ideal of treating others with compassion even when they are enemies—a principle that aligns with Ma’avar Yabok’s emphasis on proper treatment of all human beings, including enemies, based on their inherent divine spark.

[i] This phrase uses the imagery of unexpected catastrophe (shoah), which would later become the Hebrew term for the Holocaust. In this psalm, it refers to divine retribution that comes upon the evildoer without warning.

[ii] This verse demonstrates the psalmist’s compassion for his enemies during their illness, creating a stark contrast with their treatment of him. The phrase “my prayer returned to my bosom” is enigmatic in Hebrew and has been interpreted variously as referring to prayer that returns to benefit the one who prays, or to a posture of prayer with head bowed to the chest.

[iii] This difficult verse contains several rare terms. The word “נַכִּים” (nekhim) appears only here in the Hebrew Bible and likely refers to smiters or attackers. The phrase “קָרְעוּ וְלֹא־דָמּוּ” literally means “they tear and do not cease,” indicating relentless verbal attacks.

[iv] This is one of the most challenging verses to translate in the psalm. The term “מָעוֹג” (ma’og) is a hapax legomenon (appears only once in the Hebrew Bible). The phrase likely refers to impious mockers at feasts, suggesting people who profane sacred gatherings with their mockery.

חִנָּם יִקְרְצוּ־עָיִן: כִּי לֹא שָׁלוֹם
יְדַבֵּרוּ וְעַל רִגְעֵי־אֶרֶץ דִּבְרֵי
מִרְמוֹת יַחֲשֹׁבוּן[i]: וַיִּרְחִיבוּ עָלַי
פִּיהֶם אָמְרוּ הֶאָח הֶאָח רָאֲתָה
עֵינֵינוּ: רָאִיתָה יְיָ אַל־תֶּחֱרַשׁ
אֲדֹנָי אַל־תִּרְחַק מִמֶּנִּי: הָעִירָה
וְהָקִיצָה לְמִשְׁפָּטִי אֱלֹהַי וַאדֹנָי
לְרִיבִי: שָׁפְטֵנִי כְצִדְקְךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהָי
וְאַל־יִשְׂמְחוּ־לִי: אַל־יֹאמְרוּ בְלִבָּם
הֶאָח נַפְשֵׁנוּ אַל־יֹאמְרוּ בִלַּעְנוּהוּ:
יֵבשׁוּ וְיַחְפְּרוּ יַחְדָּו שְׂמֵחֵי רָעָתִי
יִלְבְּשׁוּ־בֹשֶׁת וּכְלִמָּה הַמַּגְדִּילִים
עָלָי: יָרֹנּוּ וְיִשְׂמְחוּ חֲפֵצֵי צִדְקִי
וְיֹאמְרוּ תָמִיד יִגְדַּל יְיָ הֶחָפֵץ
שְׁלוֹם עַבְדּוֹ: וּלְשׁוֹנִי תֶּהְגֶּה צִדְקֶךָ
כָּל־הַיּוֹם תְּהִלָּתֶךָ: [ii]

You look on? Rescue my soul from their ravages, my precious life from the lions.[1] I will give You thanks in the great congregation; I will praise You among the mighty throng. Let not those rejoice over me who are wrongfully my foes, nor let those who hate me without cause wink the eye. For they do not speak peace, but against the quiet ones of the land they devise words of deceit. They open wide their mouths against me; they say, "Aha, Aha, our eyes have seen it!" You have seen, O LORD; do not be silent! O Lord, do not be far from me! Awake and rouse Yourself for my judgment,[2] my God and my Lord, for my cause! Judge me according to Your righteousness, O LORD my God, and let them not rejoice over me. Let them not say in their hearts, "Aha, just what we wanted!" Let them not say, "We have swallowed him up." May all who rejoice at my calamity be put to shame and confounded; may those who exalt themselves against me be clothed with shame and dishonor. Let those who delight in my vindication shout for joy and be glad; let them say continually, "Great is the LORD, who delights in the well-being of His servant." Then my tongue shall declare Your righteousness and Your praise all day long.

(תורה) וַתַּעַן לָהֶם מִרְיָם שִׁירוּ
לַייָ כִּי גָאֹה גָּאָה סוּס וְרֹכְבוֹ

(Torah) And Miriam answered them,[3] "Sing to the LORD, for He is highly exalted; the horse and its

tive interprets the difficult term 'ma'og' as referring to feasts or cakes, following some rabbinic interpretations, which gives a more specific context to the mockery being described.

[1] The Hebrew "יְחִידָתִי" (yeḥidati) literally means "my only one" and refers to the precious, irreplaceable nature of one's life or soul.

[2] This metaphorical language of divine awakening appears frequently in Jewish liturgy, especially in prayers for the sick and dying. It represents a call for divine intervention in human affairs when justice seems delayed.

[3] This verse (Exodus 15:21) comes from the Song at the Sea after the crossing of the Red Sea, where Miriam led the women in celebration with tambourines and dancing.

[i] The phrase "רִגְעֵי־אֶרֶץ" (rig'ei-eretz) is difficult to translate precisely. It may refer to "the quiet of the land" (peaceful inhabitants) or "the moments/affairs of the land." I've translated it as "quiet ones of the land" referring to peaceful citizens who become targets of the wicked.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 71 — In Ma'avar Yabok, Psalm 71 appears in the sixth liturgical order (Seder Vav) as another psalm recommended for recitation by or for the sick. The structural parallels between these psalms highlight the recurring pattern in which the psalmist appeals to God for defense against those who seek harm. | Cf. Zohar — In Ma'avar Yabok's mystical framework, the angels mentioned in this psalm would be understood as real spiritual entities that can be summoned through proper prayer and meditation to protect the ill person and guide the soul through difficult transitions. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The inclusion of Psalm 35 for Tuesday (associated with the divine attribute of Tiferet/Harmony) suggests it was understood to have special efficacy in balancing divine judgment with mercy for the benefit of the ill person. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot — Ma'avar Yabok's ethical framework emphasizes that proper care for the sick and dying extends even to those with whom one has conflict, mirroring the psalmist's compassionate response to his enemies' suffering.

רָמָה בַיָּם: דַּבֵּר אֶלֵהֶם לֵאמֹר בֵּין
הָעַרְבַּיִם תֹּאכְלוּ בָשָׂר וּבַבֹּקֶר
תִּשְׂבְּעוּ לָחֶם וִידַעְתֶּם כִּי אֲנִי יְיָ
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם: וַיְהִי בָעֶרֶב וַתַּעַל הַשְּׂלָו
וַתְּכַס אֶת הַמַּחֲנֶה וּבַבֹּקֶר הָיְתָה
שִׁכְבַת הַטַּל סָבִיב לַמַּחֲנֶה: וַתַּעַל
שִׁכְבַת הַטַּל וְהִנֵּה עַל פְּנֵי הַמִּדְבָּר
דַּק מְחֻסְפָּס[i] דַּק כַּכְּפֹר עַל הָאָרֶץ:
וַיִּרְאוּ בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיֹּאמְרוּ אִישׁ
אֶל אָחִיו מָן הוּא[ii] כִּי לֹא יָדְעוּ
מַה הוּא: וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֲלֵהֶם הוּא
הַלֶּחֶם אֲשֶׁר נָתַן יְיָ לָכֶם לְאָכְלָה:
וַיִּבֶן מֹשֶׁה מִזְבֵּחַ וַיִּקְרָא שְׁמוֹ יְיָ
נִסִּי:[iii] וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה אֶל הָעָם
אַל תִּירְאוּ כִּי לְבַעֲבוּר נַסּוֹת
אֶתְכֶם בָּא הָאֱלֹהִים וּבַעֲבוּר תִּהְיֶה
יִרְאָתוֹ עַל פְּנֵיכֶם לְבִלְתִּי תֶחֱטָאוּ:
בְּכָל הַמָּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר אַזְכִּיר אֶת שְׁמִי
אָבוֹא אֵלֶיךָ וּבֵרַכְתִּיךָ:[iv]

rider He has hurled into the sea." "Speak to them saying: 'At twilight you shall eat meat,[1] and in the morning you shall be satisfied with bread. Then you shall know that I am the LORD your God.'" And at 965R evening the quails came up and covered the camp, and in the morning there was a layer of dew around the camp. When the layer of dew evaporated, behold, on the surface of the wilderness there was a fine flake-like thing,[A] fine as the frost on the ground. 970R When the children of Israel saw it, they said to one another, "What is it?"[2] For they did not know what it was. And Moses said to them, "It is the bread which the LORD has given you to eat." And Moses built an altar[3] and called its name "The LORD is 975R my banner." And Moses said to the people, "Do not fear, for God has come to test you,[B] and that His fear may be before your faces, so that you may not sin." "In every place where I cause My name to be remembered, I will come to you and bless you."[4] 980R

וְקוֵי יְיָ יַחֲלִיפוּ כֹחַ (נביאים) But those who hope in the LORD will renew their

[A] Or: "fine and granular" — The term מְחֻסְפָּס appears only once in the Bible and has been variously translated as 'granular,' 'scale-like,' or 'peeled.' The translation 'granular' might better capture the physical appearance being described.

[B] Or: "for God has come to prove you" — The Hebrew verb נָסוֹת can mean 'to test' but also carries connotations of 'proving' or 'demonstrating' one's faith. In this context, God is not merely testing the Israelites but providing an opportunity for them to demonstrate their faith.

[1] This passage (Exodus 16:12-15) describes God's promise to provide quail in the evening and manna in the morning for the Israelites in the wilderness.

[2] This is a wordplay in Hebrew, as 'mān hū' ('what is it?') sounds like the word 'manna,' which became the name for this miraculous food.

[3] This verse (Exodus 17:15) appears after the battle with Amalek, where Moses' raised hands (supported by Aaron and Hur) ensured Israel's victory.

[4] This final verse (Exodus 20:21) establishes the principle of divine presence at sanctified places of worship.

[i] The term מְחֻסְפָּס (mechuspas) appears only once in the Bible and its precise meaning is debated. It seems to describe the texture or appearance of the manna as being fine and flake-like, possibly from a root meaning 'peeled' or 'scaled.'

[ii] The Hebrew phrase 'man hu' (מָן הוּא) literally means 'What is it?' and is the origin of the term 'manna.'

[iii] The name 'YHWH Nissi' means 'The LORD is my banner,' signifying divine protection and leadership, particularly in battle contexts.

[iv] Cf. Exodus 15-20 — This compilation strings together verses from the Exodus narrative that highlight God's miraculous provisions (manna, quail), protection (victory over Amalek), and presence (at Sinai). These verses would comfort someone who is ill by reminding them of God's power to sustain, protect, and remain present with the faithful. | Cf. Psalms 78:23-25 — The passage about manna connects to Psalm 78's poetic description of manna as 'bread of heaven' and 'food of angels,' enhancing the spiritual significance of God's provision in the wilderness as a sign of divine care and sustenance. | Cf. Song of Songs 5:11-16 — In Ma'avar Yabok, passages from Song of Songs are used during tahara rituals (washing the deceased), suggesting these Exodus verses might similarly provide spiritual nourishment and comfort during illness or preparation for death.

יַעֲלוּ אֵבֶר כַּנְּשָׁרִים יָרוּצוּ וְלֹא
יִיגְעוּ יֵלְכוּ וְלֹא יִיעָפוּ: אַל תִּירָא
כִּי עִמְּךָ אָנִי אַל תִּשְׁתָּע[i] כִּי אֲנִי
אֱלֹהֶיךָ אִמַּצְתִּיךָ אַף עֲזַרְתִּיךָ אַף
תְּמַכְתִּיךָ בִּימִין צִדְקִי: הֵן יֵבֹשׁוּ
וְיִכָּלְמוּ כֹּל הַנֶּחֱרִים בָּךְ יִהְיוּ כְאַיִן
וְיֹאבְדוּ אַנְשֵׁי רִיבֶךָ תְּבַקְשֵׁם וְלֹא
תִמְצָאֵם[ii] אַנְשֵׁי מַצֻּתֶךָ יִהְיוּ כְאַיִן
וּכְאֶפֶס אַנְשֵׁי מִלְחַמְתֶּךָ: כִּי אֲנִי
יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ מַחֲזִיק יְמִינֶךָ הָאֹמֵר
לְךָ אַל תִּירָא אֲנִי עֲזַרְתִּיךָ: תְּזֹרֵם
וְרוּחַ תִּשָּׂאֵם[iii] וּסְעָרָה תָּפִיץ אוֹתָם
וְאַתָּה תָּגִיל בַּיהוָה בִּקְדוֹשׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל
תִּתְהַלָּל: אָנֹכִי אָנֹכִי יְהוָה וְאֵין
מִבַּלְעָדַי מוֹשִׁיעַ: יְהוָה חָפֵץ לְמַעַן
צִדְקוֹ יַגְדִּיל תּוֹרָה וְיַאְדִּיר: [iv] strength; they will soar on wings like eagles;[1] they will run and not grow weary, they will walk and not be faint. Fear not, for I am with you; be not dismayed, for I am your God; I will strengthen you, yes, I will help you, yes, I will uphold you with My righteous right hand.[2] Behold, all who are incensed against you shall be ashamed and disgraced;[3] those who contend with you shall be as nothing and shall perish. You will seek them but not find them—those who quarrel with you; those who war against you will be as nothing, as a thing of naught. For I, the LORD your God, hold your right hand; I am He who says to you, "Fear not, I will help you." You shall winnow them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the storm shall scatter them. And you shall rejoice in the LORD; in the Holy One of Israel you shall glory. I, even I, am the LORD, and besides Me there is no savior. The LORD desired, for the sake of His righteousness, to magnify the Torah and make it glorious.[4]

985R 990R 995R 1000R

[1] The eagle imagery has special resonance in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, as it connects to the soul's ascent after death. Just as eagles soar effortlessly, the properly prepared soul can rise above physical limitations, especially at the moment of transition.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, God's "right hand" represents the attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness), while "righteousness" (tzedek) is associated with judgment tempered by mercy. This phrase thus conveys that divine support comes through the balanced interaction of mercy and justice.

[3] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, those "incensed against you" would be understood as spiritual accusers (mekatregim) that might stand against the soul in the heavenly court. This verse promises their defeat when one is supported by divine presence.

[4] This concluding verse carries special significance in Ma'avar Yabok, suggesting that proper spiritual preparation for death, including engagement with these verses with proper intention (kavvanah), actually fulfills divine purpose by magnifying Torah even in one's final moments.

[i] This relatively rare biblical term (אַל תִּשְׁתָּע) from Isaiah 41:10 means "be not dismayed" or "do not look around in anxiety." Its uncommon nature makes it particularly significant in this prayer sequence, emphasizing the spiritual directive to maintain focused trust rather than anxious distraction when facing illness or death.

[ii] This phrase "you shall seek them but not find them" would be understood in the context of Ma'avar Yabok as referring not just to physical enemies but to spiritual accusers or negative forces that might impede the soul's journey. The promise of their complete disappearance would be particularly comforting to someone approaching death.

[iii] The winnowing imagery here, where enemies are scattered like chaff in the wind, has kabbalistic significance in Ma'avar Yabok's framework. It suggests the divine power to separate the soul from negative spiritual attachments during the transition of death, allowing the essential self to rise unimpeded.

[iv] Cf. Isaiah 40:31 — This verse is likely included in Ma'avar Yabok to offer spiritual comfort and strength to the sick or dying person, suggesting that through divine connection they will find renewal even in weakness. | Cf. Isaiah 41:10-13 — These verses reassure the ill person of divine protection and presence, emphasizing that God will strengthen them in their weakened state and vanquish their spiritual enemies. | Cf. Isaiah 41:16 — This offers the hope that negative spiritual forces will be overcome, allowing the person to ultimately rejoice in divine presence. | Cf. Isaiah 43:11 — This reinforces that healing and salvation come only from God, directing the ill person to focus their hopes on divine intervention rather than merely physical remedies. | Cf. Isaiah 42:21 — This concluding verse connects suffering to divine purpose, suggesting that through proper spiritual engagement with Torah even in illness, one participates in the divine plan.

(תהלים) בְּךָ צָרֵינוּ נְנַגֵּחַ בְּשִׁמְךָ
נָבוּס קָמֵינוּ: כִּי הוֹשַׁעְתָּנוּ מִצָּרֵינוּ
וּמְשַׂנְאֵינוּ הֱבִישׁוֹתָ: עוֹרָה לָמָּה
תִישַׁן אֲדֹנָי הָקִיצָה אַל תִּזְנַח
לָנֶצַח: לָמָּה פָנֶיךָ תַסְתִּיר תִּשְׁכַּח
עָנְיֵנוּ וְלַחֲצֵנוּ: כִּי שָׁחָה לֶעָפָר
נַפְשֵׁנוּ דָּבְקָה לָאָרֶץ בִּטְנֵנוּ: קוּמָה
עֶזְרָתָה לָנוּ וּפְדֵנוּ לְמַעַן חַסְדֶּךָ:
אֱלֹהִים לָנוּ מַחֲסֶה וָעֹז עֶזְרָה
בְצָרוֹת נִמְצָא מְאֹד: יֵ צְבָאוֹת
עִמָּנוּ מִשְׂגָּב לָנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב סֶלָה:
חֲגוֹר חַרְבְּךָ עַל יָרֵךְ גִּבּוֹר הוֹדְךָ
וַהֲדָרֶךָ: יַדְבֵּר עַמִּים תַּחְתֵּינוּ
וּלְאֻמִּים תַּחַת רַגְלֵינוּ: כִּי זֶה
אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהֵינוּ עוֹלָם וָעֶד הוּא
יְנַהֲגֵנוּ עַל מוּת:[i] אַךְ אֱלֹהִים
יִפְדֶּה נַפְשִׁי מִיַּד שְׁאוֹל[ii] כִּי יִקָּחֵנִי
סֶלָה: וּקְרָאֵנִי בְיוֹם צָרָה אֲחַלְּצֶךָּ
וּתְכַבְּדָנִי: חָנֵּנִי אֱלֹהִים כְּחַסְדֶּךָ
כְּרֹב רַחֲמֶיךָ מְחֵה פְשָׁעָי: תְּחַטְּאֵנִי
בְאֵזוֹב וְאֶטְהָר תְּכַבְּסֵנִי וּמִשֶּׁלֶג
אַלְבִּין: תַּשְׁמִיעֵנִי שָׂשׂוֹן וְשִׂמְחָה
תָּגֵלְנָה עֲצָמוֹת דִּכִּיתָ: הַסְתֵּר
פָּנֶיךָ מֵחֲטָאָי וְכָל עֲוֹנֹתַי מְחֵה:
לֵב טָהוֹר בְּרָא לִי אֱלֹהִים וְרוּחַ
נָכוֹן חַדֵּשׁ בְּקִרְבִּי: אַל תַּשְׁלִיכֵנִי
מִלְּפָנֶיךָ וְרוּחַ קָדְשְׁךָ אַל תִּקַּח
מִמֶּנִּי: הָשִׁיבָה לִי שְׂשׂוֹן יִשְׁעֶךָ

(Psalms) Through You we push back our adversaries; through Your name we trample our foes.[1] For You have saved us from our enemies, and have put to shame those who hate us. Awake! Why do You sleep,[2] O Lord? Arise! Do not cast us off forever. Why do You hide Your face and forget our affliction and our oppression? For our soul is bowed down to the dust; our belly clings to the earth.[A] Rise up, come to our help, and redeem us for the sake of Your steadfast love. God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. The LORD of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our fortress. Selah. Gird Your sword on Your thigh, O mighty one, in Your splendor and Your majesty. He will subdue peoples under us, and nations under our feet. For this God is our God forever and ever; He will guide us even unto death. Surely God will redeem my soul from the power of Sheol, for He will take me. Selah. Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver you, and you shall glorify Me.[B] Be gracious to me, O God, according to Your steadfast love; according to Your abundant mercy, blot out my transgressions. Purify me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow. Let me hear joy and gladness; let the bones You have crushed rejoice.[C] Hide Your face from my sins, and blot out all my iniquities. Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a steadfast spirit within me. Do not cast

[A] Or: "our body cleaves to the ground" — While 'belly' is a literal translation of בִּטְנֵנוּ, in this context it represents the whole body prostrate in weakness or submission, so this alternate might better convey the intended meaning to modern readers.

[B] Or: "in the day of trouble; I will rescue you, and you shall honor Me" — The alternate translation uses 'rescue' instead of 'deliver' for אֲחַלְּצֶךָּ and 'honor' instead of 'glorify' for וּתְכַבְּדָנִי, providing slightly more accessible language while maintaining the meaning.

[C] Or: "Let me hear sounds of joy and gladness; let the bones You have broken dance with delight" — This more expansive translation captures the vivid contrast between crushed bones and their subsequent rejoicing, emphasizing the paradoxical transformation that suffering can bring—a theme important in Ma'avar Yabok.

[1] The Hebrew uses vivid, aggressive language of 'goring' (נְנַגֵּחַ) and 'trampling' (נָבוּס) enemies, reflecting the spiritual battle metaphor often employed in prayers for the sick, who are understood to be fighting against both physical illness and spiritual forces.

[2] This anthropomorphic language of God 'sleeping' reflects the common biblical expression of divine absence or perceived inaction during suffering. In the context of prayers for the sick, it represents the patient's feeling of abandonment that requires spiritual reassurance.

[i] This phrase could be interpreted either as "unto death" or as a reference to the musical term "Alamoth" found in psalm superscriptions. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, the former interpretation connecting to death and transition would be more significant.

[ii] The reference to being redeemed "from the hand of Sheol" has special significance in Ma'avar Yabok's context of preparing for death, suggesting that proper spiritual preparation can transform the experience of death from punishment to redemption.

וְרוּחַ נְדִיבָה תִּסְמְכֵנִי: אֲדֹנָי שְׂפָתַי
תִּפְתָּח וּפִי יַגִּיד תְּהִלָּתֶךָ: זִבְחֵי
אֱלֹהִים רוּחַ נִשְׁבָּרָה לֵב נִשְׁבָּר
920 וְנִדְכֶּה אֱלֹהִים לֹא תִבְזֶה:[i] וַאֲנִי
כְּזַיִת רַעֲנָן בְּבֵית אֱלֹהִים בָּטַחְתִּי
בְּחֶסֶד אֱלֹהִים עוֹלָם וָעֶד: מִי
יִתֵּן מִצִּיּוֹן יְשׁוּעַת יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּשׁוּב
אֱלֹהִים שְׁבוּת עַמּוֹ יָגֵל יַעֲקֹב
925 יִשְׂמַח יִשְׂרָאֵל: אוֹדְךָ לְעוֹלָם כִּי
עָשִׂיתָ וַאֲקַוֶּה שִׁמְךָ כִּי טוֹב נֶגֶד
חֲסִידֶיךָ: אֱלֹהִים שְׁמַע תְּפִלָּתִי
הַאֲזִינָה לְאִמְרֵי פִי: כִּי מְכָל
צָרָה הִצִּילָנִי וּבְאֹיְבַי רָאֲתָה
930 עֵינִי: הַאֲזִינָה אֱלֹהִים תְּפִלָּתִי
וְאַל תִּתְעַלַּם מִתְּחִנָּתִי: הַקְשִׁיבָה
לִי וַעֲנֵנִי אָרִיד בְּשִׂיחִי וְאָהִימָה:
בַּלַּע אֲדָנָי פַּלַּג לְשׁוֹנָם כִּי רָאִיתִי
חָמָס וְרִיב בָּעִיר: אֲנִי אֶל אֱלֹהִים
935 אֶקְרָא וַיהוָה יוֹשִׁיעֵנִי: עֶרֶב וָבֹקֶר
וְצָהֳרַיִם אָשִׂיחָה וְאֶהֱמֶה[ii] וַיִּשְׁמַע
קוֹלִי: פָּדָה בְשָׁלוֹם נַפְשִׁי מִקְּרָב
לִי כִּי בְרַבִּים הָיוּ עִמָּדִי:[iii]

me away from Your presence, and do not take Your 1030R Holy Spirit from me. Restore to me the joy of Your salvation, and uphold me with a willing spirit. O Lord, open my lips, and my mouth will declare Your praise. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, You will not de- 1035R spise. But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God; I trust in the steadfast love of God forever and ever. Oh, that the salvation of Israel would come from Zion! When God restores the fortunes of His people, let Jacob rejoice, let Israel be glad. I will give 1040R You thanks forever, because You have done it. I will hope in Your name, for it is good, in the presence of Your faithful ones. Hear my prayer, O God; give ear to the words of my mouth. For He has delivered me from every trouble, and my eye has looked in triumph 1045R on my enemies. Give ear to my prayer, O God, and do not hide Yourself from my supplication. Listen to me and answer me; I am restless in my complaint and I moan, because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked. O Lord, confuse and 1050R divide their tongues, for I see violence and strife in the city. As for me, I will call upon God, and the LORD will save me. Evening and morning and at noon I will pray and cry aloud, and He shall hear my voice. He has redeemed my soul in peace from 1055R the battle that was against me,[1] for there were many against me."

[1]The compilation concludes with this powerful image of peaceful redemption from conflict, offering hope that even when surrounded by multiple adversaries (physical illness, spiritual doubts, fear of death), divine deliverance remains possible.

[i]This verse from Psalm 51:17 is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, which emphasizes internal contrition over external sacrifice, presenting a broken spirit and contrite heart as the most effective offering during illness.

[ii]This reference to praying three times daily connects to Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on structured prayer times. In kabbalistic thought, these three prayer times correspond to the three patriarchs and different spiritual energies available throughout the day.

[iii]Cf. Psalm 44:5-8 — The beginning of this compilation quotes directly from Psalm 44, which is about national distress but confidence in divine deliverance. This sets the tone for the entire prayer sequence as one seeking divine intervention in times of trouble. | Cf. Psalm 51 — The inclusion of verses from Psalm 51 shifts the focus from external enemies to internal spiritual purification, suggesting that the sick person should examine their conscience and seek spiritual cleansing alongside physical healing. | Cf. Psalm 55:17-18 — These verses emphasize the importance of regular, structured prayer (evening, morning, and noon) even in times of distress, reinforcing a key practice for the sick person to maintain throughout their illness. | Cf. Psalm 48:14 — The phrase 'He will guide us even unto death' (עַל מוּת) could be a deliberate modification of Psalm 48:14's 'unto death' to emphasize divine guidance through the transition of death, connecting to Ma'avar Yabok's central theme of crossing over. | Cf. Psalm 52:8 — The image of the 'green olive tree in the house of God' contrasts with earlier imagery of being 'bowed down to the dust,' suggesting spiritual restoration and vitality even in the face of illness or approaching death.

(כתובים) יְהִי מְקוֹרֵךְ
בָּרוּךְ[i] וּשְׂמַח מֵאֵשֶׁת נְעוּרֶךָ:
בְּרָכוֹת לְרֹאשׁ צַדִּיק[ii] וּפִי רְשָׁעִים
יְכַסֶּה חָמָס: זֵכֶר צַדִּיק לִבָרָכָה
וְשֵׁם רְשָׁעִים יִרְקָב: בִּרְכַּת יְיָ
הִיא תַּעֲשִׁיר וְלֹא יוֹסִף עֶצֶב
עִמָּהּ:[iii] בְּהִתְהַלֶּכְךָ תַּנְחֶה אֹתָךְ
בְּשָׁכְבְּךָ תִּשְׁמֹר עָלֶיךָ וַהֲקִיצוֹתָ
הִיא תְּשִׂיחֶךָ: כִּי בִי יִרְבּוּ יָמֶיךָ
וְיוֹסִיפוּ לְךָ שְׁנוֹת חַיִּים: נֶפֶשׁ
בְּרָכָה תְּדֶשֶׁן וּמַרְוֶה גַּם הוּא
יוֹרֶא:[iv] מְאוֹר עֵינַיִם יְשַׂמַּח לֵב
שְׁמוּעָה טוֹבָה תְּדַשֵּׁן עָצֶם: לְאָדָם
מַעַרְכֵי לֵב וּמֵיְיָ מַעֲנֵה לָשׁוֹן: גֹּל
אֶל יְיָ מַעֲשֶׂיךָ וְיִכֹּנוּ מַחְשְׁבֹתֶיךָ:
רַבּוֹת מַחֲשָׁבוֹת בְּלֶב אִישׁ וַעֲצַת יְיָ
הִיא תָקוּם:[v]

(Writings) May your fountain be blessed, and rejoice with the wife of your youth.[1] Blessings are upon the head of the righteous, but the mouth of the wicked conceals violence. The memory of the righteous is a blessing,[2] but the name of the wicked will rot. The blessing of the LORD makes rich, and He adds no sorrow with it. When you walk, it shall guide you; when you lie down, it shall watch over you;[3] and when you awake, it shall talk with you. For by me your days shall be multiplied, and years of life shall be added to you. A generous soul will be made rich,[A] and he who waters will also be watered himself.[B] The light of the eyes rejoices the heart; good news refreshes the bones. The preparations of the heart belong to man, but the answer of the tongue is from the LORD. Commit your works to the LORD,[4] and your thoughts will be established. There are many plans in a man's heart, but the coun-

[A] Or: "A blessing soul will be enriched" — The Hebrew 'נֶפֶשׁ בְּרָכָה' could be understood either as 'a generous soul' (one who blesses others) or more literally as 'a soul of blessing.' This alternate translation preserves the ambiguity of whether the soul is giving or receiving blessing.

[B] Or: "and one who gives drink will also be drenched" — This alternate translation emphasizes the intensity of reciprocal blessing in the Hebrew text, where 'יוֹרֶא' suggests being thoroughly saturated rather than merely watered.

[1] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this reference to marital joy may take on additional meaning as an encouragement to reflect on life's blessings when facing illness or death.

[2] This verse is particularly significant in Jewish mourning traditions, where it is customary to add "may their memory be a blessing" after mentioning a deceased righteous person.

[3] While in its original context this refers to wisdom's protection during sleep, in Ma'avar Yabok's context of illness and death, this would be understood as divine protection extending even to one's final rest.

[4] The Hebrew גֹּל ("roll") creates a vivid image of rolling one's burdens onto God, suggesting complete surrender of one's efforts and outcomes to divine care—particularly meaningful for those facing illness or death.

[i] The "fountain" metaphor (מְקוֹר) is understood in rabbinic tradition to refer to both offspring and one's spiritual legacy, suggesting that righteousness leads to a blessed lineage and enduring impact.

[ii] This is part of a series of contrasts between the righteous and the wicked that appears in Proverbs, emphasizing how righteousness leads to blessing while wickedness leads to destruction.

[iii] This verse distinguishes divine blessing from worldly wealth, which often brings anxiety with it. Divine blessing enriches without the accompanying sorrow that typically comes with material prosperity.

[iv] This verse employs agricultural metaphors of watering and being watered to express the spiritual principle that generosity brings prosperity back to the giver.

[v] Cf. Proverbs 5:18 — The fountain metaphor represents offspring and marital blessing. This verse begins a compilation of wisdom sayings about righteous living and divine blessing. | Cf. Proverbs 10:6-7, 11:25, 15:30 — These verses are collected from various chapters of Proverbs to create a cohesive meditation on divine blessing and righteousness, particularly appropriate for reflection during illness. | Cf. Proverbs 6:22 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse would be understood as describing Torah's protection during life and even in death—"when you lie down" taking on additional meaning for the dying person. | Cf. Proverbs 16:1, 16:3, 19:21 — These verses emphasize surrendering to divine providence, particularly comforting for the sick or dying who must accept that their future rests in God's hands rather than their own plans.

sel of the LORD will stand.[1]

כְּאוֹב לֵבָב אֲנִי נִדְאָב וְנִכְאָב.[i] וְאֵין לִי אָב וְאַתָּה אָבִי וְקוֹנִי. לְךָ זָדִתִּי לְבַדֶּךָ[ii] וְנָדָדְתִּי וְדִמְעָתִי כְּמוֹ לֶחֶם מְזוֹנִי.[iii] יְרוּאוּנִי חֲסָדֶיךָ וְאֶחְיֶה וְהוֹשִׁיעָה יְמִינְךָ וַעֲנֵנִי:

With a pained heart I am sorrowful and afflicted.[2] I have no father but You are my father and my creator. Against You alone have I sinned and wandered,[3] and my tears are like my daily bread. May Your mercies come to me that I may live, and may Your right hand save me and answer me. 1080R

מנחה ליום שלישי

Afternoon Prayer for Tuesday[4]

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳ ואחר כך יאמר זה

One should recite the verses beginning with "Ana Hashem" [Please, O LORD] and afterward say this. 1085R

(תהלים נו) לַמְנַצֵּחַ עַל־יוֹנַת אִלֶּם רְחֹקִים לְדָוִד מִכְתָּם בֶּאֱחֹז אֹתוֹ פְלִשְׁתִּים בְּגַת: חָנֵּנִי אֱלֹהִים כִּי־שְׁאָפַנִי אֱנוֹשׁ כָּל־הַיּוֹם לוֹחֵם יִלְחָצֵנִי: שָׁאֲפוּ שׁוֹרְרַי כָּל־הַיּוֹם כִּי־רַבִּים לֹחֲמִים לִי מָרוֹם: יוֹם אִירָא אֲנִי אֵלֶיךָ אֶבְטָח: בֵּאלֹהִים

(Psalm 56) For the choirmaster. To the tune of "A Silent Dove of Distant Places."[A] A miktam[B] of David, when the Philistines seized him in Gath.[5] Be gracious to me, O God, for man tramples on me; all day long an attacker oppresses me. My enemies trample on me all day long, for many attack me from on high.[C] On the day I am afraid, I put my trust in 1090R

[A] Or: "For the leader; on "The Dove of Distant Terebinths."" — The Hebrew phrase יוֹנַת אִלֶּם רְחֹקִים is ambiguous and has been interpreted various ways. The word אִלֶּם can mean 'silent' but some scholars interpret it as referring to 'terebinth trees' (אֵלִים). This alternate translation reflects this scholarly interpretation, which is used in some modern translations.

[B] Or: "A golden psalm" — The term 'miktam' (מִכְתָּם) appears in several psalm titles but its exact meaning is uncertain. Some traditions interpret it as 'golden psalm' or 'inscription,' suggesting a particularly precious or permanent composition. This is a more interpretive translation that attempts to convey the term's possible meaning rather than simply transliterating it.

[C] Or: "My adversaries pant after me all day long, for many fight against me proudly" — The Hebrew verb שָׁאֲפוּ literally means 'they pant after' rather than 'trample.' Additionally, מָרוֹם could be interpreted as 'proudly/haughtily' rather than 'from on high.' This alternate translation is more literal to the Hebrew text while still capturing the sense of persecution.

[1] This concluding verse emphasizes divine sovereignty over human plans, offering both comfort and challenge to the sick or dying person to accept God's ultimate authority over their life's course.

[2] The Hebrew uses a triad of terms for pain and sorrow, creating a rhythmic intensification that is difficult to fully capture in translation.

[3] This confession echoes Psalm 51:6, "Against You, You alone, have I sinned," a psalm traditionally attributed to King David after his sin with Bathsheba.

[4] This heading introduces the afternoon prayer service (Mincha) specifically for Tuesday, the third day of the week in the Jewish calendar.

[5] This superscription connects the psalm to the narrative in 1 Samuel 21:10-15, where David fled from Saul to Gath (a Philistine city) and was recognized, leading him to feign madness to escape. This historical context explains the psalm's themes of danger, persecution, and trust in divine deliverance amid hostile surroundings.

[i] This opening uses several terms for pain and sorrow (אוב, נדאב, נכאב) with similar sounds, creating a mournful poetic rhythm that emphasizes the depth of the petitioner's anguish.

[ii] The term זדתי (I have sinned deliberately/willfully) is unusual in prayer contexts, where חטאתי (I have sinned) would be more common. This may reflect the more intense confession appropriate for someone at death's threshold.

[iii] This echoes Psalm 42:4, "My tears have been my food day and night," a common biblical metaphor for extreme grief and repentance.

אֱהַלֵּל דָּבָר בֵּאלֹהִים בָּטַחְתִּי
לֹא אִירָא מַה־יַּעֲשֶׂה בָשָׂר לִי׃
כָּל־הַיּוֹם דִּבְרֵי יְעַצְּבוּ עָלַי
כָּל־מַחְשְׁבֹתָם לָרָע׃ יָגוּרוּ יִצְפִּינוּ
[יִצְפּוֹנוּ] הֵמָּה עֲקֵבַי יִשְׁמֹרוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר
קִוּוּ נַפְשִׁי׃ עַל־אָוֶן פַּלֵּט־לָמוֹ בְּאַף
עַמִּים הוֹרֵד אֱלֹהִים׃ נָדִי סָפַרְתָּה
אָתָּה שִׂימָה דִמְעָתִי בְנֹאדֶךָ הֲלֹא
בְסִפְרָתֶךָ׃ אָז יָשׁוּבוּ אוֹיְבַי אָחוֹר
בְּיוֹם אֶקְרָא זֶה־יָדַעְתִּי כִּי־אֱלֹהִים
לִי׃ בֵּאלֹהִים אֲהַלֵּל דָּבָר בַּיהוָה
אֲהַלֵּל דָּבָר׃ בֵּאלֹהִים בָּטַחְתִּי לֹא
אִירָא מַה־יַּעֲשֶׂה אָדָם לִי׃ עָלַי
אֱלֹהִים נְדָרֶיךָ אֲשַׁלֵּם תּוֹדֹת לָךְ׃
כִּי הִצַּלְתָּ נַפְשִׁי מִמָּוֶת הֲלֹא רַגְלַי
מִדֶּחִי לְהִתְהַלֵּךְ לִפְנֵי אֱלֹהִים
בְּאוֹר הַחַיִּים׃ [i]

You. In God, whose word I praise, in God I trust; I shall not fear. What can flesh do to me? All day long they twist my words; all their thoughts are against me for evil. They stir up strife, they lurk, they watch my steps, as they have waited for my life.[1] Because of their wickedness, cast them out; in anger bring down the peoples, O God.[A] You have kept count of my wanderings; put my tears in Your bottle. Are they not in Your book?[B] Then my enemies will turn back in the day when I call. This I know, that God is for me. In God, whose word I praise, in the LORD, whose word I praise, in God I trust; I shall not fear. What can man do to me? Your vows are upon me, O God; I will render thank offerings to You. For You have delivered my soul from death, indeed, my feet from stumbling, that I may walk before God in the light of life.[2]

[A] Or: "Would they escape by iniquity? In anger cast down the peoples, O God" — The Hebrew phrase פַּלֵּט־לָמוֹ could be interpreted as a rhetorical question about escape rather than a direct plea for their expulsion. This alternate reading preserves the challenging syntax of the original Hebrew while offering a different nuance to the psalmist's expression.

[B] Or: "You have recorded my wanderings; store my tears in Your wineskin—are they not recorded in Your scroll?" — The Hebrew נֹאדֶךָ specifically refers to a wineskin or leather bottle, which has theological significance as it suggests God's careful preservation of the psalmist's suffering. Additionally, 'recorded' better captures the accounting metaphor in the Hebrew text, maintaining the parallel between God's record-keeping of both the psalmist's physical journeys and emotional suffering.

[1] The image of enemies watching, lurking, and waiting parallels the experience of the seriously ill, who may feel stalked by death. This makes the psalm particularly appropriate in Ma'avar Yabok's context of prayers for the sick and dying.

[2] This concluding phrase transforms the psalm from a prayer amid persecution to an expression of hope for continued life in God's presence. For the sick or dying person reciting this in Ma'avar Yabok's context, it could be understood both as hope for physical recovery and as confidence in spiritual life beyond death.

[i] Cf. 1 Samuel 21:10-15 — The historical context illuminates the psalm's themes of persecution and divine deliverance. David's experience of being surrounded by enemies in foreign territory forms the backdrop for this prayer seeking God's protection and expressing confidence in divine deliverance. | Cf. Psalm 56:4/56:11 — This deliberate repetition creates a liturgical structure suitable for communal recitation while emphasizing the psalm's core message of trust in God overcoming fear of human enemies. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this structural feature makes the psalm particularly effective for the sick or dying person who needs to repeatedly affirm trust in God despite threatening circumstances. | Cf. Hebrews 13:6 — While this Christian reference would not have been known to the author of Ma'avar Yabok, it demonstrates how this psalm transcended its original context to become a universal expression of trust in divine protection during times of trial. This universality makes it particularly appropriate for the sick and dying in Ma'avar Yabok's liturgical sequences. | Cf. Psalm 116:8-9 — The shared imagery of being delivered from death to walk before God in the light/land of life connects these psalms thematically. This connection would be particularly meaningful in Ma'avar Yabok's context, where Psalm 56 functions as part of a structured prayer sequence for those facing serious illness or approaching death.

(תורה) הִנֵּה אָנֹכִי שֹׁלֵחַ מַלְאָךְ
990 לְפָנֶיךָ[i] לִשְׁמָרְךָ בַּדָּרֶךְ וְלַהֲבִיאֲךָ
אֶל הַמָּקוֹם אֲשֶׁר הֲכִנֹתִי: כִּי אִם
שָׁמֹעַ תִּשְׁמַע בְּקֹלוֹ וְעָשִׂיתָ כֹּל
אֲשֶׁר אֲדַבֵּר וְאָיַבְתִּי אֶת אֹיְבֶיךָ
וְצַרְתִּי אֶת צֹרְרֶיךָ: וַעֲבַדְתֶּם
995 אֵת יְיָ אֱלֹהֵיכֶם וּבֵרַךְ אֶת לַחְמְךָ
וְאֶת מֵימֶיךָ וַהֲסִרֹתִי מַחֲלָה
מִקִּרְבֶּךָ:[ii] וַיִּנָּחֶם יְיָ עַל הָרָעָה
אֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר לַעֲשׂוֹת לְעַמּוֹ: וַיֹּאמֶר
פָּנַי יֵלֵכוּ וַהֲנִחֹתִי לָךְ: וְעָשִׂיתָ
1000 בִגְדֵי קֹדֶשׁ לְאַהֲרֹן אָחִיךָ לְכָבוֹד
וּלְתִפְאָרֶת: וַיַּעֲבֹר יְיָ עַל פָּנָיו
וַיִּקְרָא[iii] יְיָ יְיָ אֵל רַחוּם וְחַנּוּן
אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם וְרַב חֶסֶד וֶאֱמֶת: נֹצֵר
חֶסֶד לָאֲלָפִים נֹשֵׂא עָוֹן וָפֶשַׁע
1005 וְחַטָּאָה וְנַקֵּה לֹא יְנַקֶּה פֹּקֵד עֲוֹן
אָבוֹת עַל בָּנִים וְעַל בְּנֵי בָנִים עַל
שִׁלֵּשִׁים וְעַל רִבֵּעִים:[iv]

(Torah) Behold, I am sending an angel before you[1] to 1110R guard you on the way and to bring you to the place that I have prepared. For if you will indeed obey his voice and do all that I speak, then I will be an enemy to your enemies and a foe to your foes. And you shall serve the LORD your God,[A] and He will 1115R bless your bread and your water, and I will remove sickness from your midst.[2] And the LORD relented concerning the evil that He had spoken of doing to His people. And He said, "My presence will go with you, and I will give you rest." And you shall make 1120R holy garments for Aaron your brother, for glory and for splendor.[3] And the LORD passed before him and proclaimed, "LORD, LORD, God, merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abounding in kindness and truth; preserving kindness for thousands, forgiving 1125R iniquity and transgression and sin, and cleansing, but He will not entirely cleanse,[B] visiting the iniquity of fathers upon children and upon children's children,

[A] Or: "When you worship the LORD your God" — The Hebrew term 'avadetm' (וַעֲבַדְתֶּם) can be translated as either 'serve' or 'worship' in this context. 'Worship' might better reflect the devotional nature of this prayer compilation in Ma'avar Yabok, though 'serve' is more literal and traditional.

[B] Or: "who cleanses, yet does not completely clear [the guilty]" — This phrase from the Thirteen Attributes is notoriously difficult to translate due to its apparent contradiction. This alternate translation makes explicit the implied object (the guilty) and better captures the theological tension between divine forgiveness and justice.

[1] This opening verse establishes a theological framework for the entire prayer section, presenting the idea that divine messengers guide and protect individuals during crucial transitions—whether in life, illness, or death. This parallels Ma'avar Yabok's central metaphor of the soul's journey or 'crossing over.'

[2] This direct promise of healing forms a biblical basis for the prayer's petition. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, such verses were carefully compiled to create prayers with maximum spiritual efficacy, based on the belief that reciting God's own promises of healing back to Him was particularly powerful.

[3] While seemingly out of place in a healing prayer, this reference to Aaron's priestly garments connects to Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic understanding of 'spiritual garments' (levushim) that clothe the soul during and after life. Just as Aaron needed proper garments to approach God in the Temple, the soul requires proper spiritual 'garments' created through good deeds and proper rituals.

[i] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse invoking divine protection through an angel has special significance for the sick or dying person. Kabbalistic tradition interprets the angel as a spiritual guide who escorts the soul through its journey after death, resembling Jacob's angelic escort at the crossing of the Yabok River.

[ii] This promise to remove illness is particularly relevant in Ma'avar Yabok's prayers for healing. It forms part of the biblical justification for petitioning God to heal the sick, based on this explicit divine promise.

[iii] This introduces the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy (י"ג מדות הרחמים), one of the most powerful prayer formulas in Jewish liturgy, especially for seeking forgiveness and healing. The Zohar teaches that these attributes are never recited in vain and have special power to access divine compassion.

[iv] Cf. Exodus 23:20-23 — This opening verse about God sending an angel to guard and guide is from Exodus 23, where God promises protection to the Israelites. In the context of Ma'avar to the third and fourth generations."[1]

(נביאים) אָנֹכִי אָנֹכִי הוּא
מֹחֶה פְּשָׁעֶיךָ לְמַעֲנִי[i] וְחַטֹּאתֶיךָ
לֹא אֶזְכֹּר: אֲנִי יְיָ וְאֵין עוֹד
זוּלָתִי אֵין אֱלֹהִים אֲאַזֶּרְךָ וְלֹא
יְדַעְתָּנִי:[ii] גֹּאֲלֵנוּ יְיָ צְבָאוֹת
שְׁמוֹ קְדוֹשׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל: לְמַעַן שְׁמִי
אַאֲרִיךְ אַפִּי וּתְהִלָּתִי אֶחֱטָם
לָךְ לְבִלְתִּי הַכְרִיתֶךָ:[iii] הֵן
אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהִים יַעֲזָר לִי מִי הוּא
יַרְשִׁיעֵנִי הֵן אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהִים יַעֲזָר
לִי מִי הוּא יַרְשִׁיעֵנִי הֵן כֻּלָּם
כַּבֶּגֶד יִבְלוּ עָשׁ יֹאכְלֵם:[iv] אָנֹכִי
אָנֹכִי הוּא מְנַחֲמְכֶם מִי אַתְּ
וְתִרְאִי מֵאֱנוֹשׁ יָמוּת וּמִבֶּן אָדָם
חָצִיר יִנָּתֵן:[v] וַיהוָה חָפֵץ דַּכְּאוֹ

(From the Prophets) I, even I, am He who blots out your transgressions[2] for My own sake, and your sins I will not remember. I am the LORD, and there is no other; besides Me there is no God. I will gird you, though you have not known Me. Our Redeemer, the LORD of hosts is His name,[3] the Holy One of Israel. For My name's sake I will defer My anger, and for My praise I will restrain it from you, so that I do not cut you off. Behold, the Lord GOD will help me; who is he who will condemn me? Behold, the Lord GOD will help me; who is he who will condemn me? Indeed they all will grow old like a garment; the moth will eat them up. I, even I, am He who comforts you. Who are you that you should be afraid of a man who will die, and of the son of man who

[1]The prayer ends with the complete formula of the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy, including both the merciful aspects and the warning about intergenerational consequences of sin. This reflects Ma'avar Yabok's theological balance between divine mercy and judgment, presenting illness as potentially serving both punitive and purifying purposes.

[2]The doubling of "I" (אָנֹכִי אָנֹכִי) creates emphatic emphasis on God's personal involvement in forgiveness, highlighting divine agency in the act of pardoning sins.

[3]The divine title "LORD of hosts" (יְיָ צְבָאוֹת) refers to God as commander of heavenly armies, emphasizing divine power in the context of spiritual warfare, which is particularly relevant in Ma'avar Yabok's conceptualization of death as a time when the soul needs protection from negative spiritual forces.

Yabok, this verse functions as a plea for divine protection during illness or the soul's journey after death, comparing the soul's transition to the Israelites' journey through the wilderness. | Cf. Exodus 34:6-7 — The Thirteen Attributes of Mercy form a central liturgical element in Jewish prayers for forgiveness and healing. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses appear in the structured prayer sequences for the sick and dying, invoking God's compassionate nature during times of illness or approaching death. | Cf. Exodus 32:14 — This verse from the golden calf narrative about God relenting from punishment is included to emphasize divine mercy and the potential for God to withdraw illness or suffering when properly petitioned through prayer. | Cf. Exodus 33:14 — This promise of divine presence and rest comes from God's conversation with Moses after the sin of the golden calf. In Ma'avar Yabok, it serves as a petition for divine accompaniment during illness or the soul's journey after death. | Cf. Exodus 28:2 — This verse about Aaron's priestly garments may seem unusual in this prayer context, but in Ma'avar Yabok it likely symbolizes the 'spiritual garments' the soul requires for its journey after death, connecting physical ritual garments to their mystical counterparts.

[i]The phrase "for My own sake" emphasizes that divine forgiveness stems from God's inherent nature and purposes rather than human merit, a theological concept that would be particularly comforting to those anxious about unconfessed sins at the time of death.

[ii]The declaration that God will "gird" (strengthen) a person even when they haven't fully known Him offers hope to those who might fear their religious knowledge or practice has been insufficient.

[iii]The Hebrew verb אֶחֱטָם (echtam) means "I will restrain/muzzle," creating an image of God actively holding back His own judgment for the sake of mercy.

[iv]This metaphor of accusers being consumed like moth-eaten garments would resonate with the kabbalistic concept that harmful spiritual forces (מקטרגים/accusers) pursue the soul at death but can be neutralized through proper prayer.

[v]The comparison of humans to grass (חָצִיר) emphasizes human transience in contrast to divine permanence, a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to mortality.

וַיהוָה חָפֵץ דַּכְּאוֹ הֶחֱלִי[i] אִם תָּשִׂים אָשָׁם נַפְשׁוֹ
יִרְאֶה זֶרַע יַאֲרִיךְ יָמִים וְחֵפֶץ יְיָ
1025 בְּיָדוֹ יִצְלָח: מֵעֲמַל נַפְשׁוֹ יִרְאֶה יִשְׂבָּע
[iii] [ii] בְּדַעְתּוֹ יַצְדִּיק צַדִּיק עַבְדִּי לָרַבִּים וַעֲוֹנֹתָם הוּא יִסְבֹּל:

will be made like grass? Yet it pleased the LORD to bruise him; He has put him to grief. When You make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days,[1] and the pleasure of the LORD shall prosper in his hand. For a small moment I have forsaken you, but with great mercies I will gather you.[2] 1145R 1150R

(תהלים) הַשְׁלֵךְ עַל יְיָ יְהָבְךָ[iv] וְהוּא יְכַלְכְּלֶךָ לֹא
יִתֵּן לְעוֹלָם מוֹט לַצַּדִּיק: שָׁאֲפוּ
1030 שׁוֹרְרַי כָּל הַיּוֹם כִּי רַבִּים לְחָמִים

(Psalms) Cast your burden upon the LORD,[3] and He will sustain you; He will never allow the righteous to be moved.[A] My adversaries pant after me all day,[4] for many fight against me from on high.[5] In 1155R

[A] Or: "He will never permit the righteous to be shaken" — The Hebrew מוֹט (mot) carries connotations of being shaken, tottering, or made unstable. This alternate translation emphasizes the sense of stability and steadfastness that God provides, which might be especially relevant for someone experiencing the physical and emotional instability of serious illness.

[1] This phrase from Isaiah's Suffering Servant passage suggests that sacrifice and suffering lead to spiritual reward and continuation, providing theological comfort for the dying by suggesting that physical death is not the end but rather a transition to another form of existence.

[2] The theme of divine gathering (אֲקַבְּצֵךְ) after temporary abandonment connects to Ma'avar Yabok's central metaphor of "crossing over"—suggesting that death represents a temporary separation before eventual reunion with the divine.

[3] The Hebrew יְהָבְךָ (your burden) comes from a root meaning "to give" and refers to whatever weighs heavily on one—whether physical illness, emotional distress, or spiritual concerns. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse serves as a foundational instruction for the sick person to surrender their suffering to divine care.

[4] The Hebrew שָׁאֲפוּ (they pant/gasp) conveys the image of enemies breathing heavily in pursuit, like predators chasing prey. In the context of illness, this may represent either human adversaries who take advantage of one's weakness or the personification of disease and suffering as pursuing enemies.

[5] The Hebrew מָרוֹם (from on high/heights) creates ambiguity about whether these are powerful

[i] This difficult verse from Isaiah's Suffering Servant passage suggests that suffering can have divine purpose, aligning with Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework that illness serves a spiritually purifying purpose.

[ii] The concluding promise of gathering with great mercies after a brief abandonment would be particularly meaningful in the context of death, suggesting that the apparent separation is temporary and will be followed by divine reunion.

[iii] Cf. Isaiah 43:25 — This verse emphasizes divine forgiveness as an act of God's sovereign grace rather than human merit, which fits perfectly in a prayer context for those facing illness or death. | Cf. Isaiah 45:5 — This establishes God's absolute power and ability to save, providing theological grounding for the plea being made in the prayer. | Cf. Isaiah 47:4 — Invoking God specifically as Redeemer strengthens the appeal for divine intervention in the context of serious illness or approaching death. | Cf. Isaiah 48:9 — This verse appeals to God's mercy and reputation as reasons for divine forbearance, a key theological concept in prayers for healing and forgiveness. | Cf. Isaiah 50:9 — This repeated verse provides comfort that God will defend the supplicant against accusers (whether human or spiritual), which connects to the kabbalistic concept of negative forces that might interfere with the soul's journey. | Cf. Isaiah 51:12 — This verse provides perspective on mortality, encouraging trust in God rather than fear of mortal threats or death itself. | Cf. Isaiah 53:10 — This verse from the Suffering Servant passage suggests that even suffering can have divine purpose and eventual reward, offering theological comfort to the sick or dying. | Cf. Isaiah 54:7 — This verse offers hope of divine restoration after a period of apparent abandonment, fitting for prayer during illness or approaching death.

[iv] The opening verse uses the Tetragrammaton (יְיָ) in its vocalized form rather than אֱלֹהִים or אֲדֹנָי, which appears in other verses of this compilation. This emphasizes the personal, covenantal relationship with God that forms the basis for the confidence expressed throughout the prayer.

לִי מָרוֹם:[i] יוֹם אִירָא אֲנִי אֵלֶיךָ
אֶבְטָח: נֹדִי סָפַרְתָּה אָתָּה שִׂימָה
דִמְעָתִי בְנֹאדֶךָ[ii] הֲלֹא בְּסִפְרָתֶךָ:
בֵּאלֹהִים אֲהַלֵּל דָּבָר בַּיהוָה
1035 אֲהַלֵּל דָּבָר: בֵּאלֹהִים בָּטַחְתִּי לֹא
אִירָא מַה יַּעֲשֶׂה אָדָם לִי: חָנֵנִי
אֱלֹהִים חָנֵנִי כִּי בְךָ חָסָיָה נַפְשִׁי
וּבְצֵל כְּנָפֶיךָ אֶחְסֶה עַד יַעֲבֹר
הַוּוֹת:[iii] אֶקְרָא לֵאלֹהִים עֶלְיוֹן
1040 לָאֵל גֹּמֵר עָלָי: יִשְׁלַח מִשָּׁמַיִם
וְיוֹשִׁיעֵנִי חֵרֵף שֹׁאֲפִי סֶלָה יִשְׁלַח
אֱלֹהִים חַסְדּוֹ וַאֲמִתּוֹ: הַצִּילֵנִי
מֵאֹיְבֵי אֱלֹהַי מִמִּתְקוֹמְמַי תְּשַׂגְּבֵנִי:
הַצִּילֵנִי מִפֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן וּמֵאַנְשֵׁי דָמִים
1045 הוֹשִׁיעֵנִי: אֱלֹהֵי חַסְדִּי יְקַדְּמַנִי
אֱלֹהִים יַרְאֵנִי בְשׁוּרָרָי: יְשַׂמַּח
צַדִּיק כִּי חָזָה נָקָם פְּעָמָיו יִרְחַץ
בְּדַם הָרָשָׁע:[iv] וְאֹמַר אָשִׁיר עֻזֶּךָ
וַאֲרַנֵּן לַבֹּקֶר חַסְדֶּךָ כִּי הָיִיתָ
1050 מִשְׂגָּב לִי וּמָנוֹס בְּיוֹם צַר לִי: עֻזִּי

the day when I am afraid, I will trust in You. You have recorded my wanderings; put my tears into Your bottle[A]—are they not in Your book? In God I will praise His word, in the LORD I will praise His word. In God I have put my trust; I will not fear what man 1160R can do to me. Be gracious to me, O God, be gracious to me, for my soul takes refuge in You; and in the shadow of Your wings I will take shelter until the destruction passes by.[B] I will cry to God Most High, to God who accomplishes all things for me. He will 1165R send from heaven and save me; He reproaches those who trample upon me.[1] Selah.[2] God will send forth His lovingkindness and His truth. Deliver me from my enemies, O my God; set me securely on high away from those who rise up against me. Deliver 1170R me from the workers of iniquity, and save me from bloodthirsty men. My God of lovingkindness will meet me; God will let me look upon my adversaries. Let the righteous rejoice for he has seen vengeance; he will wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.[3] But 1175R

[A] Or: "store my tears in Your flask" — The Hebrew נאד (nod) refers specifically to a skin bottle or flask used for storing liquids. This alternate translation provides a slightly more precise image of the container while maintaining the powerful metaphor of God preserving each tear as precious.

[B] Or: "until the calamities have passed" — The Hebrew הַוּוֹת (havot) is plural and refers to multiple destructions or calamities. This alternate translation captures the plural form and connects to Ma'avar Yabok's view of illness as comprising multiple forms of suffering that will eventually pass.

human adversaries or spiritual forces. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic framework, this could suggest negative spiritual entities that afflict the sick from celestial realms.

[1] The Hebrew חֵרֵף שֹׁאֲפִי (He reproaches my pursuers/those who pant after me) suggests divine rebuke of those causing suffering. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this might refer to God addressing both human enemies and spiritual forces of illness.

[2] The Hebrew term סֶלָה (Selah) appears twice in this compilation, possibly serving as a liturgical instruction for pause or musical interlude. In the context of prayers for the sick, these pauses might provide moments for contemplation or for the sick person to rest during the recitation.

[3] This violent imagery comes from ancient Near Eastern battle contexts where victors would wade

[i] The word "מָרוֹם" (from on high) could be interpreted in two ways: either referring to enemies fighting from an advantageous position, or suggesting that these enemies have some form of celestial or spiritual power. In the context of prayers for the sick in Ma'avar Yabok, this might allude to harmful spiritual forces that afflict the ill person.

[ii] The powerful image of God collecting tears in a bottle (נאד—a skin container for liquids) suggests that no suffering goes unnoticed by God. This metaphor would be particularly poignant in the context of prayers for the sick, where physical suffering produces literal tears that are precious to God.

[iii] The imagery of seeking refuge "under the shadow of Your wings" (בְּצֵל כְּנָפֶיךָ) evokes both the cherubim wings over the Ark of the Covenant and the protective behavior of a mother bird. This maternal imagery of divine protection appears frequently in Ma'avar Yabok and was considered particularly appropriate for comforting the sick and dying.

[iv] This vivid and violent imagery of washing feet in the blood of the wicked comes from Psalm 58:10. In the context of prayers for the sick, this might be understood metaphorically as the triumph of righteousness over the forces of illness and suffering, rather than literal vengeance against human enemies.

אֵלֶיךָ אֲזַמְּרָה אֱלֹהִים מִשְׂגַּבִּי אֱלֹהֵי
חַסְדִּי: בֵּאלֹהִים נַעֲשֶׂה חָיִל וְהוּא
יָבוּס צָרֵינוּ: שִׂמְאָה אֱלֹהִים רַנָּתִי
הַקְשִׁיבָה תְּפִלָּתִי: אַךְ אֶל אֱלֹהִים
1055 דּוֹמִיָּה נַפְשִׁי מִמֶּנּוּ יְשׁוּעָתִי: אַךְ
הוּא צוּרִי וְיִשׁוּעָתִי מִשְׂגַּבִּי לֹא
אֶמּוֹט רַבָּה: אַךְ לֵאלֹהִים דּוֹמִי
נַפְשִׁי כִּי מִמֶּנּוּ תִקְוָתִי: אַךְ הוּא
צוּרִי וְיִשׁוּעָתִי מִשְׂגַּבִּי לֹא אֶמּוֹט:
1060 עַל אֱלֹהִים יִשְׁעִי וּכְבוֹדִי צוּר עֻזִּי
מַחְסִי בֵּאלֹהִים: אֱלֹהִים אֵלִי אַתָּה
אֲשַׁחֲרֶךָּ צָמְאָה לְךָ נַפְשִׁי כָּמַהּ
לְךָ בְשָׂרִי בְּאֶרֶץ צִיָּה וְעָיֵף בְּלִי
מָיִם: כִּי טוֹב חַסְדְּךָ מֵחַיִּים שְׂפָתַי
1065 יְשַׁבְּחוּנֶךָּ: כֵּן אֲבָרֶכְךָ בְחַיָּי בְּשִׁמְךָ
אֶשָּׂא כַפָּי: שְׂמַע אֱלֹהִים קוֹלִי
בְשִׂיחִי מִפַּחַד אוֹיֵב תִּצֹּר חַיָּי:
תַּסְתִּירֵנִי מִסּוֹד מְרֵעִים מֵרִגְשַׁת
פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן: הֵרַכְּבְתָּ אֱנוֹשׁ לְרֹאשֵׁנוּ
1070 בָּאנוּ בָאֵשׁ וּבַמָּיִם וַתּוֹצִיאֵנוּ
לָרְוָיָה:[i] יִשְׂמַח צַדִּיק בַּיהוָה
וְחָסָה בוֹ וְיִתְהַלְלוּ כָּל יִשְׁרֵי
לֵב: שְׁמַע תְּפִלָּה עֲדֶיךָ כָּל בָּשָׂר
יָבֹאוּ: אָכֵן שָׁמַע אֱלֹהִים הִקְשִׁיב
1075 בְּקוֹל תְּפִלָּתִי: בָּרוּךְ אֱלֹהִים אֲשֶׁר
לֹא הֵסִיר תְּפִלָּתִי וְחַסְדּוֹ מֵאִתִּי:
אֱלֹהִים יְחָנֵּנוּ וִיבָרְכֵנוּ יָאֵר פָּנָיו
אִתָּנוּ סֶלָה:[iii ii]

I will sing of Your strength; yes, I will joyfully sing of Your lovingkindness in the morning, for You have been my stronghold and a refuge in the day of my distress. O my strength, to You I will sing praises; for God is my stronghold, the God of my lovingkindness. 1180R Through God we shall do valiantly, and it is He who will trample our adversaries. Hear my cry, O God; give attention to my prayer. My soul waits in silence for God alone; from Him comes my salvation. He alone is my rock and my salvation, my stronghold; I 1185R shall not be greatly moved. My soul, wait in silence for God alone, for my hope is from Him. He alone is my rock and my salvation, my stronghold; I shall not be moved. On God rests my salvation and my glory; the rock of my strength, my refuge is in God. O God, 1190R
You are my God; I shall seek You earnestly; my soul thirsts for You, my flesh yearns for You,[1] in a dry and weary land where there is no water. Because Your lovingkindness is better than life, my lips will praise You. So I will bless You as long as I live; I will lift 1195R up my hands in Your name. Hear my voice, O God, in my meditation; preserve my life from dread of the enemy. Hide me from the secret counsel of evildoers, from the tumult of those who do iniquity. You have placed men over our heads; we went through 1200R fire and through water, yet You brought us out to abundance.[A] The righteous will rejoice in the LORD and take refuge in Him, and all the upright in heart

[A] Or: "You made us pass through fire and water, then led us out to overflowing relief" — This alternate translation emphasizes God's agency in both the suffering ("You made us pass") and the deliverance, while rendering לָרְוָיָה (revayah) as "overflowing relief" to capture both the abundant and refreshing nature of the deliverance, especially apt in the context of prayers for the sick.

through the blood of vanquished enemies. In the context of prayers for the sick, this serves as a metaphor for complete triumph over forces of suffering and illness rather than literal violence.

[1] The Hebrew כָּמַהּ לְךָ בְשָׂרִי (my flesh yearns for You) is significant because it emphasizes that not just the spirit but the physical body itself longs for God. For the sick person whose flesh is failing, this validates physical suffering as a spiritual experience where even bodily pain can become a form of yearning for divine presence.

[i] The phrase "we went through fire and through water" uses powerful elemental imagery to describe extreme suffering, while "You brought us out to abundance" (לָרְוָיָה—literally "to saturation/overflowing") provides the counterpoint of divine deliverance. This creates a narrative arc of suffering followed by rescue that would be particularly meaningful for the sick.

[ii] The prayer concludes with words from the Priestly Blessing (Numbers 6:24-26), specifically "may He make His face shine upon us." This creates a powerful closing that invokes divine radiance and favor, appropriate for ending a prayer sequence for healing and protection.

[iii] Cf. Psalm 55:22 — This opening verse establishes the theme of divine trust and protection that runs throughout this prayer compilation. It appears in the original as Psalm 55:23 in the Hebrew numbering, and serves as an anchor for the entire prayer sequence. | Cf. Psalm 56-59 — Many verses in this compilation come from consecutive Psalms (56-59), suggesting a deliberate selection of passages from David's psalms of distress and deliverance when he was pursued by enemies.

will glory. O You who hear prayer, to You all flesh will come. Surely God has heard; He has given heed to the voice of my prayer. Blessed be God, who has not turned away my prayer nor His lovingkindness from me. God be gracious to us and bless us, and cause His face to shine upon us. Selah. 1205R

(כתובים) לִהְיוֹת בַּיהוָה מִבְטַחֶךָ (From Writings) That your trust may be in the LORD,[1] I have made them known to you this day, even to you. Have I not written to you two things?[2] Remove falsehood and lying far from me; give me neither poverty nor riches, feed me with my allotted bread.[3] Naked I came from my mother's womb, and naked shall I return there. The LORD gave, and the LORD has taken away;[4] blessed be the name of the LORD. For now I would lie 1210R 1215R

1080 הוֹדַעְתִּיךָ הַיּוֹם אַף אָתָּה:[i] שְׁתַּיִם
שָׁאַלְתִּי מֵאִתָּךְ אַל תִּמְנַע מִמֶּנִּי
בְּטֶרֶם אָמוּת:[ii] שָׁוְא וּדְבַר כָּזָב
הַרְחֵק מִמֶּנִּי רֵאשׁ וְעֹשֶׁר אַל תִּתֶּן לִי
הַטְרִיפֵנִי לֶחֶם חֻקִּי:[iii] עָרֹם יָצָאתִי
1085 מִבֶּטֶן אִמִּי וְעָרֹם אָשׁוּב שָׁמָּה:[iv] יְיָ
נָתַן וַיהוָה לָקָח יְהִי שֵׁם יְיָ
מְבֹרָךְ:[v] כִּי עַתָּה שָׁכַבְתִּי וְאִשְׁקוֹט

[1]This compilation of biblical verses emphasizes acceptance of divine providence, mortality, and the spiritual benefit of suffering—all central themes in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death and dying.

[2]The text omits Proverbs 30:7's ending, which specifies "excellent things in counsels and knowledge," focusing instead on the request that follows, creating a more direct personal plea.

[3]The Hebrew term 'lechem chuki' (allotted bread) suggests not merely physical sustenance but also one's divinely ordained portion in life, a concept that connects to Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on accepting one's destiny.

[4]This verse from Job forms the foundation for Jewish responses to death, acknowledging divine sovereignty while maintaining faith. It appears frequently in funeral liturgy and deathbed rituals.

These psalms share themes of divine protection amid persecution. | Cf. Psalm 61-63 — The compilation continues with verses from Psalms 61-63, which focus on themes of divine refuge, thirst for God, and confidence in divine deliverance. The compiler has carefully selected passages that progress from expressions of distress to declarations of trust. | Cf. Psalm 64 — The verses about hiding from evil counsel and the tumult of evildoers come from Psalm 64, continuing the theme of divine protection against those who plot harm. | Cf. Psalm 66:12 — This verse serves as a powerful metaphor for the sick person's experience of suffering (fire and water) followed by divine deliverance to abundance. It provides hope that current afflictions will lead to eventual relief. | Cf. Psalm 64:10, 65:2-3, 66:20, 67:2 — The compilation concludes with verses that express confidence in divine response to prayer, gratitude for God's attentiveness, and a request for blessing. These create a satisfying resolution to the prayer sequence, moving from distress to hope. | Cf. Isaiah 38 — Though not directly quoted, the themes of this compilation echo King Hezekiah's prayer during his illness (Isaiah 38), particularly the recording of tears and the divine response to prayer. This connection would be meaningful in the context of prayers for the sick. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's YaBOK verses — This compilation appears to be part of Ma'avar Yabok's structured prayer sequences for the sick and dying. It follows the book's pattern of creating therapeutic spiritual progressions through carefully selected biblical verses that move from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation.

[i]This verse is from Proverbs 22:19, though the collection continues with verses from different biblical books, assembled as a prayer of spiritual preparation.

[ii]From Proverbs 30:7, where Agur son of Jakeh asks for two things before death, creating a powerful contemplation of mortality appropriate for Ma'avar Yabok's focus.

[iii]From Proverbs 30:8, requesting the middle path between poverty and wealth, which aligns with the book's emphasis on accepting divine providence in life and death.

[iv]From Job 1:21, a verse often associated with death and the acceptance of divine judgment, central to Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework.

[v]Continues from Job 1:21, Job's famous declaration of acceptance of both blessing and loss, which is particularly appropriate in a prayer sequence focused on preparation for death.

שָׁנַתִּי אָז נָוחַ לִי: [i] אוּלָם אֲנִי
אֶדְרֹשׁ אֶל אֵל וְאֶל אֱלֹהִים אָשִׂים
1090 דִּבְרָתִי: [ii] עֹשֶׂה גְדֹלוֹת וְאֵין חֵקֶר
נִפְלָאוֹת עַד אֵין מִסְפָּר: [iii] מַפֵּר
מַחְשְׁבוֹת עֲרוּמִים וְלֹא תַעֲשֶׂינָה
יְדֵיהֶם תּוּשִׁיָּה: [iv] וַתְּהִי לַדַּל תִּקְוָה
וְעַלְתָה קָפְצָה פִּיהָ: [v] הִנֵּה אַשְׁרֵי
1095 אֱנוֹשׁ יוֹכִיחֶנּוּ אֱלוֹהַּ וּמוּסַר שַׁדַּי אַל
תִּמְאָס: [vi] כִּי הוּא יַכְאִיב וְיַחֲבֹשׁ
יִמְחַץ וְיָדָיו תִּרְפֶּינָה: [vii] [viii] down and be quiet; I would sleep, then I would have rest.[A] But as for me, I will seek God, and 1220R to God I will direct my plea. He does great things beyond comprehension, wonders without number. He frustrates the plans of the crafty, so that their hands achieve no success. So the poor have hope, and injustice shuts its mouth.[B] Behold, happy is the 1225R man whom God corrects;[1] therefore do not despise the chastening of the Almighty. For He wounds, but He binds up; He strikes, but His hands heal.[2]

צְפֵה עָשְׁקִי [ix] וְאַל תֶּפֶן

Behold my oppression and do not regard my stub-

[A] Or: "For now I would have lain down and been at peace; I would have slept and found rest" — This alternative uses a conditional past tense to better capture the hypothetical nature of Job's statement in its original context, though in Ma'avar Yabok's context, either translation works as a meditation on death as peaceful rest.

[B] Or: "So there is hope for the destitute, and iniquity stops its mouth" — This alternative translation emphasizes the spiritual condition of being destitute rather than merely economic poverty, and uses 'iniquity' which carries stronger moral connotations than 'injustice', potentially better reflecting the theological context of Ma'avar Yabok.

[1] This theological perspective on suffering as divine correction rather than punishment is fundamental to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to illness and death, suggesting that even painful experiences serve a spiritual purpose.

[2] This concluding verse offers comfort by affirming that divine wounding is ultimately for healing, echoing Ma'avar Yabok's view that physical death leads to spiritual renewal and eternal life.

[i] From Job 3:13, where Job speaks of death as rest, a theme that connects to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of death as peaceful transition rather than merely an end.

[ii] From Job 5:8, a declaration of turning to God in times of trouble, creating a contrast with Job's earlier despair and aligning with the book's emphasis on maintaining faith even during suffering.

[iii] From Job 5:9, describing God's incomprehensible wonders, a theme that emerges throughout Ma'avar Yabok in its discussion of divine providence and the mysteries of life and death.

[iv] From Job 5:12, describing God's frustration of the plans of the crafty, which connects to the book's theme that human plans are ultimately subject to divine will.

[v] From Job 5:16, describing how God's intervention gives hope to the poor and silences injustice, creating a sense of divine justice that extends beyond this world.

[vi] From Job 5:17, presenting the theological view that divine correction is a blessing rather than a curse, aligning with Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of suffering as spiritually beneficial.

[vii] From Job 5:18, describing God as both wounder and healer, which connects to the book's understanding of illness and death as part of a divine process that ultimately leads to healing in a spiritual sense.

[viii] Cf. Proverbs 22:19-21 — Sets the tone of wisdom and trust in divine providence, essential for preparing oneself spiritually for death. | Cf. Proverbs 30:7-9 — Establishes the prayer's focus on preparation for death, avoiding both spiritual and material excess, seeking only what is necessary for the soul's journey. | Cf. Job 1:21 — This pivotal verse in Jewish understanding of death is central to Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, emphasizing that we return to our Creator as we came—with nothing but our essential self. | Cf. Job 3:13 — While originally part of Job's complaint, in this context the verse is repurposed to present death as peaceful rest rather than annihilation, aligning with the book's focus on death as transition rather than end. | Cf. Job 5:8-18 — Though from Eliphaz (whose theology the book of Job ultimately critiques), these verses are repurposed here to present a positive view of divine chastisement as ultimately beneficial, supporting Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of illness and death as spiritually purposeful.

[ix] The verb 'צְפֵה' (behold/observe) creates a deliberate contrast with 'וְאַל תֶּפֶן' (do not regard/turn to) in the same line, emphasizing the plea for God to selectively see the person's suffering but not their failings.

לְקָשְׁיִי.[i] רְאֵה עָנְיִי וְאַל תִּרְאֶה
עֲוֹנִי.[ii] קְשׁוֹב נָא לַהֲגִיגִי[iii] אֵל
רְצֵנִי. וְשִׂיחִי לְךָ בְּקָרְאִי תַּעֲנֵנִי:

bornness.[1] See my affliction and do not see my iniquity. Please listen to my meditation, God, accept me.[2] And when I call to You with my prayer, answer me.[3]

סדר יום רביעי

Order of Wednesday

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[iv] ואחר כך יאמר זה[v][vi]

One should recite[4] the verses of "Ana Hashem" and afterward recite this[5]

(תהלים נז) לַמְנַצֵּחַ אַל־תַּשְׁחֵת לְדָוִד מִכְתָּם[vii] בְּבָרְחוֹ

(Psalm 57) For the choirmaster. To the tune of "Do Not Destroy." A miktam of David,[6] when he fled

[1]The translation preserves the parallel structure of the Hebrew, where the first two lines each contain a positive request ('behold/see') followed by a negative one ('do not regard/see'). This pattern creates a poetic plea for selective divine attention.

[2]The Hebrew 'אֵל רְצֵנִי' is rendered as 'God, accept me,' though it could also be translated as 'God, favor me' or 'God, be pleased with me.' The concept involves divine acceptance or approval of the supplicant.

[3]The prayer concludes with the straightforward request for divine response ('תַּעֲנֵנִי'), shifting from asking God to perceive and accept to actively respond, creating a progression from divine awareness to divine action.

[4]I've chosen to translate the impersonal third-person singular verb "יאמר" (yomar) as "One should recite" rather than "He should recite" to maintain the instructional tone while avoiding gender specificity, as this is clearly a ritual instruction for anyone performing this prayer sequence.

[5]The demonstrative "זה" (zeh/"this") refers to what follows in the text, namely Psalm 57, which would appear immediately after this instruction in the original text of Ma'avar Yabok.

[6]The term "miktam" appears in the titles of several psalms (16, 56-60) and may refer to a specific literary or musical form. While its exact meaning is uncertain, some scholars suggest it derives from a root meaning "to cover" or "to hide," perhaps indicating a psalm with hidden depths or mystical significance.

[i]The term 'קְשָׁיִי' (my stubbornness/hardness) acknowledges the supplicant's own role in their spiritual condition, similar to the biblical concept of 'stiff-necked people' (עַם קְשֵׁה עֹרֶף) often used to describe Israel's resistance to divine will.

[ii]This line creates a parallel structure to the first line, again asking God to be selective in what He perceives—to see suffering but not sin. This rhetorical structure emphasizes the supplicant's vulnerability and dependence on divine mercy.

[iii]The term 'הֲגִיגִי' (my meditation/murmuring) suggests deep, sometimes inarticulate thoughts or prayers, indicating that the supplicant is asking God to perceive not just formal prayers but inner spiritual struggles.

[iv]This refers to a set of verses beginning with "Ana Hashem" (Please, O Lord) that appear as a standard opening formula in each of the eight prayer sequences (sedarim) in Ma'avar Yabok. These verses were to be recited before the specific psalms for each day.

[v]This is a liturgical instruction indicating that after reciting the opening "Ana Hashem" verses, one should continue with the specific prayer text that follows (in this case, Psalm 57, which appears in the Wednesday prayer sequence).

[vi]Cf. Psalm 57 — This instruction indicates the proper liturgical order of the Wednesday prayer, directing the reader to first recite the standard opening "Ana Hashem" verses before proceeding to Psalm 57. This reflects the book's systematic approach to organizing prayers for each day of the week following a consistent structure. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok prayer structure — This brief instruction reflects the highly structured nature of Ma'avar Yabok's prayer system, where specific formulaic elements appear in a prescribed order. The standardized opening 'Ana Hashem' verses create continuity across the different daily prayer sequences, while each day has its own designated psalms and scriptural verses.

[vii]The term "miktam" is a musical or literary designation that appears in the headings of several psalms. Its exact meaning is uncertain, though some scholars suggest it refers to an inscription or a golden poem.

מִפְּנֵי־שָׁאוּל בַּמְּעָרָה׃ חָנֵּנִי
אֱלֹהִים חָנֵּנִי כִּי בְךָ חָסְיָה נַפְשִׁי
וּבְצֵל־כְּנָפֶיךָ אֶחְסֶה[ii] עַד יַעֲבֹר
הַוּוֹת[iii]׃ אֶקְרָא לֵאלֹהִים עֶלְיוֹן
לָאֵל גֹּמֵר עָלָי[iv]׃ יִשְׁלַח מִשָּׁמַיִם
וְיוֹשִׁיעֵנִי חֵרֵף שֹׁאֲפִי[v] סֶלָה
יִשְׁלַח אֱלֹהִים חַסְדּוֹ וַאֲמִתּוֹ׃
נַפְשִׁי בְּתוֹךְ לְבָאִם[vi] אֶשְׁכְּבָה
לְהָטִּים[vii] בְּנֵי־אָדָם שִׁנֵּיהֶם חֲנִית
וְחִצִּים וּלְשׁוֹנָם חֶרֶב חַדָּה[viii]׃
רוּמָה עַל־הַשָּׁמַיִם אֱלֹהִים עַל
כָּל־הָאָרֶץ כְּבוֹדֶךָ׃ רֶשֶׁת הֵכִינוּ
לִפְעָמַי כָּפַף נַפְשִׁי כָּרוּ לְפָנַי שִׁיחָה
נָפְלוּ בְתוֹכָהּ סֶלָה׃ נָכוֹן לִבִּי
אֱלֹהִים נָכוֹן לִבִּי אָשִׁירָה וַאֲזַמֵּרָה׃
עוּרָה כְבוֹדִי עוּרָה הַנֵּבֶל וְכִנּוֹר from Saul into the cave. Be gracious to me, O God, be gracious to me, for in You my soul takes refuge; 1240R in the shadow of Your wings I will take shelter[A] until the calamities pass by. I will cry to God Most High, to God who fulfills His purpose for me.[B] He will send from heaven and save me; He will put to shame those who trample on me. Selah. God will send 1245R forth His steadfast love and His truth. My soul is among lions; I must lie down amid fiery beasts[C]—the children of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and whose tongue is a sharp sword. Be exalted above the heavens, O God; let Your glory be over all the 1250R earth. They prepared a net for my steps;[1] my soul was bowed down. They dug a pit before me, but they fell into it themselves. Selah. My heart is steadfast, O God, my heart is steadfast! I will sing and make [A] Or: "beneath the shelter of Your wings I will seek refuge" — This alternate emphasizes the protective aspect of the metaphor with 'shelter' and uses 'beneath' to strengthen the spatial imagery, which aligns with kabbalistic interpretations of divine protection in Ma'avar Yabok.

[B] Or: "to God who completes what concerns me" — This alternate is more literal and reflects the Hebrew more directly. In the context of prayers for the dying in Ma'avar Yabok, this could evoke the completion of one's life journey.

[C] Or: "My soul is in the midst of lions; I lie among those who breathe fire" — This alternate conveys the intensity of 'לְהָטִּים' (fiery/blazing ones) with the vivid image of fire-breathing enemies, which could be interpreted in Ma'avar Yabok's context as spiritual accusers or harmful forces threatening the soul.

[1] The imagery of enemies setting traps recalls other psalms in Ma'avar Yabok's liturgical sequences. In the context of prayers for the sick, these metaphorical traps could represent both physical illness and spiritual obstacles threatening the soul.

[i] This likely refers to either the incident in the cave of Adullam (1 Samuel 22) or the cave of En-gedi (1 Samuel 24) when David was fleeing from King Saul.

[ii] The metaphor of taking refuge "under God's wings" appears frequently in the psalms and evokes the image of a mother bird sheltering her young, symbolizing divine protection. This imagery is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok, where it represents the soul finding protection under the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), especially during illness or approaching death.

[iii] This term refers to calamities, destructions, or disasters. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this passage would be understood as referring to the trials of illness and impending death that will eventually pass.

[iv] This phrase can be translated as "to God who fulfills His purpose for me" or "to God who completes [what concerns] me." In the context of deathbed prayers, this would be understood as God completing one's life journey and spiritual purpose.

[v] This difficult phrase could be translated as "He rebukes those who trample on me" or "He puts to shame those who pant after me." In mystical interpretations, these enemies could represent not just human adversaries but also the spiritual forces or accusers that threaten the soul.

[vi] The Hebrew term "לְבָאִם" (lions) is used metaphorically to represent fierce enemies. In kabbalistic thought, such as that found in Ma'avar Yabok, these could also represent spiritual adversaries or harmful forces that threaten the soul during illness or at death.

[vii] The term "לְהָטִּים" (blazing or fiery ones) intensifies the dangerous imagery. These enemies are not just lions but flaming or fiery beasts, suggesting destructive power.

[viii] This vivid metaphor depicting enemies with weapon-like teeth and sword-like tongues emphasizes the deadly threat of slander and verbal attacks. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this could be connected to the concept of spiritual accusers or prosecutors in the heavenly court.

אָעִירָה שָׁחַר[i]: אוּרִי כָּבוֹד עוּרָה נֵבֶל וְכִנּוֹר
אָדֶנְיָ אֲזַמֶּרְךָ בַּל־אֻמִּים: כִּי־גָדֹל
עַד־שָׁמַיִם חַסְדֶּךָ וְעַד־שְׁחָקִים
אֲמִתֶּךָ: רוּמָה עַל־שָׁמַיִם אֱלֹהִים
עַל כָּל־הָאָרֶץ כְּבוֹדֶךָ.[ii][iii]

melody! Awake, my glory![A] Awake, O harp and lyre! 1255R
I will awaken the dawn.[B] I will praise You among the peoples, O Lord; I will sing praises to You among the nations. For Your steadfast love is great to the heavens,[1] and Your truth to the clouds. Be exalted above the heavens, O God; let Your glory be over all 1260R the earth.

(תורה) וְשָׁחַט אֹתוֹ עַל יֶרֶךְ
הַמִּזְבֵּחַ צָפֹנָה לִפְנֵי יְיָ[iv] וְזָרְקוּ בְּנֵי
אַהֲרֹן הַכֹּהֲנִים אֶת דָּמוֹ עַל הַמִּזְבֵּחַ
סָבִיב: וְאֵת מִשְׁחַת אַהֲרֹן וּמִשְׁחַת

(Torah) And he shall slaughter it on the side of the altar[C] northward before the LORD;[2] and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall dash its blood against the altar round about. This is the anointing portion 1265R

[A] Or: "Awake, my soul!" — Since 'כְּבוֹדִי' (my glory) can refer to the soul or inner self in Hebrew poetics, this alternate makes explicit what is implicit in the original, which would resonate with Ma'avar Yabok's focus on the soul's journey.

[B] Or: "I will rouse the morning light" — This alternate emphasizes the active role of the psalmist in bringing forth light, which connects thematically to Ma'avar Yabok's reference to the prayer society 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn).

[C] Or: "at the flank of the altar" — The term 'yerekh' literally means 'thigh' or 'flank' and is used metaphorically to refer to the side of the altar. This more literal translation might better preserve the anatomical metaphor in the original Hebrew.

[1] The Hebrew terms translated as "steadfast love" (חֶסֶד/chesed) and "truth" (אֱמֶת/emet) are foundational theological concepts in Jewish thought. Chesed represents God's covenant faithfulness and loving-kindness, while emet represents God's absolute reliability and truthfulness. These divine attributes are frequently invoked in Ma'avar Yabok's prayers for divine mercy toward the sick and dying.

[2] This collection of Torah verses begins with sacrificial laws, specifically mentioning the requirement that certain offerings be slaughtered on the north side of the altar, which had mystical significance in Jewish tradition.

[i] The phrase "I will awaken the dawn" suggests that the psalmist's praise precedes and summons the morning light. In Ma'avar Yabok, this connection to dawn would resonate with the book's reference to the prayer society 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn).

[ii] This verse serves as both the opening and closing refrain of the psalm, creating a frame that emphasizes God's transcendence and immanence—exalted above heaven yet with glory covering the earth. This balance of divine attributes would be significant in kabbalistic thought.

[iii] Cf. Psalm 91 — Psalm 91 appears frequently in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly as a protective prayer to be recited for the sick and dying. The shared imagery of refuge and divine protection links these psalms thematically, making Psalm 57 an appropriate addition to the liturgical sequences for those facing illness or death. | Cf. Psalm 17 — Psalm 17 also appears in Ma'avar Yabok's 'Seder' section. The recurring wing imagery across multiple psalms in this collection reinforces the central metaphor of divine protection for the vulnerable soul, especially appropriate for the sick and dying. | Cf. Psalm 36 — The recurring imagery of divine protection and expansive heavenly love creates a consistent theological framework across the psalms selected for Ma'avar Yabok, emphasizing God's encompassing care for those in distress. | Cf. 1 Samuel 24 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this allusion to David's mercy toward Saul despite being in mortal danger would suggest a spiritual lesson about forgiveness and trust in divine justice even when facing one's greatest fears. | Cf. Genesis 32 — This psalm's themes of divine protection during mortal danger parallel Jacob's experience at the Jabbok (Yabok) crossing, the central metaphor of Ma'avar Yabok. Both involve facing deadly threats, divine intervention, and ultimate deliverance and transformation.

[iv] This is from Leviticus 1:11, describing the procedure for sacrificing an animal offering. The slaughtering had to be done on the northern side of the altar.

בָּנָיו[i] מֵאִשֵּׁי יְיָ בְּיוֹם הַקְרִיב אֹתָם
לְכַהֵן לַיְיָ: וַיִּצֹק מִשֶּׁמֶן הַמִּשְׁחָה עַל
רֹאשׁ אַהֲרֹן[ii] וַיִּמְשַׁח אֹתוֹ לְקַדְּשׁוֹ:
כִּי בְיוֹם הַזֶּה יְכַפֵּר עֲלֵיכֶם לְטַהֵר
אֶתְכֶם[iii] מִכֹּל חַטֹּאתֵיכֶם לִפְנֵי
יְיָ תִּטְהָרוּ: וְנָתְנָה הָאָרֶץ פִּרְיָהּ
וַאֲכַלְתֶּם לָשֹׂבַע[iv] וִישַׁבְתֶּם לָבֶטַח
עָלֶיהָ: וּרְדַפְתֶּם אֶת אֹיְבֵיכֶם
וְנָפְלוּ לִפְנֵיכֶם לֶחָרֶב:[v] וּפָנִיתִי
אֲלֵיכֶם וְהִפְרֵיתִי אֶתְכֶם וְהִרְבֵּיתִי
אֶתְכֶם[vi] וַהֲקִימֹתִי אֶת בְּרִיתִי
אִתְּכֶם: כֹּה תְבָרְכוּ אֶת בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
[viii vii]אָמוֹר לָהֶם:

of Aaron[A] and the anointing portion of his sons, from the offerings by fire to the LORD, on the day when he presented them to minister as priests to the LORD.[1] And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him to sanctify him. 1270R
For on this day shall atonement be made for you, to cleanse you; from all your sins shall you be clean before the LORD.[2] And the land shall yield her fruit, and you shall eat your fill, and dwell in safety upon it.[B] And you shall chase your enemies, and they 1275R shall fall before you by the sword. And I will turn to you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you,[3] and establish My covenant with you. Thus shall you bless the children of Israel, saying to them:[4]

(נביאים[ix]) דְּרָכָיו רָאִיתִי I have seen his ways, but I will heal him; I will guide 1280R

[A]Or: "the consecrated portion of Aaron" — While 'anointing portion' is accurate, 'consecrated portion' might better convey the purpose of this allocation, emphasizing its sacred status rather than just the method of designation.

[B]Or: "and dwell securely upon it" — 'Securely' might better capture the Hebrew 'lavetach' which implies not just physical safety but a sense of confidence and freedom from worry.

[1]The text moves from sacrifice to priestly consecration, establishing a progression from ritual offering to sanctification through anointing.

[2]The theme transitions to purification and atonement, connecting priestly ritual to spiritual cleansing of the community.

[3]The verses then shift to divine promises of blessing, creating a thematic progression from sacrifice to consecration to purification to reward.

[4]The section concludes with the introduction to the Priestly Blessing, suggesting that the entire collection serves as preparation for this culminating blessing. This creates a structure where human ritual (sacrifice) leads to divine response (blessing).

[i]From Leviticus 7:35, referring to the portion designated for Aaron and his sons from the sacrificial offerings.

[ii]From Leviticus 8:12, describing Aaron's consecration as High Priest through anointing with sacred oil.

[iii]From Leviticus 16:30, referring to Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), when purification from sins is achieved.

[iv]From Leviticus 26:4-5, describing divine blessings of agricultural abundance and security that follow observance of God's commandments.

[v]From Leviticus 26:7, continuing the promises of divine blessing, here specifically victory over enemies.

[vi]From Leviticus 26:9, describing God's promise to make Israel fruitful and numerous.

[vii]From Numbers 6:23, the introduction to the Priestly Blessing (Birkat Kohanim).

[viii]Cf. Leviticus 1:11 — This is the beginning of a sequence of Torah verses related to priestly service and sacrifice. In Ma'avar Yabok, this would invoke the protective power of sacred text while connecting the sick person's suffering to Temple sacrifices. | Cf. Leviticus 16:30 — The inclusion of this verse about cleansing from sin links physical illness with spiritual purification, suggesting that the prayer is intended to achieve both physical and spiritual healing. | Cf. Leviticus 26:4-9 — These verses promising abundance, security, and divine favor create a progression from atonement to blessing, suggesting that the sick person's healing will lead to renewed prosperity and divine protection. | Cf. Numbers 6:23 — Ending with the introduction to the Priestly Blessing creates a powerful conclusion, as this blessing was considered particularly potent for healing and protection. The entire sequence thus moves from sacrifice to consecration to atonement to blessing.

[ix]This heading indicates that the following verses are taken from the Prophetic books (Nevi'im) of the Hebrew Bible, specifically from Isaiah and Jeremiah.

וְאֶרְפָּאֵהוּ וְאַנְחֵהוּ וַאֲשַׁלֵּם
נִחֻמִים לוֹ וְלַאֲבֵלָיו: בּוֹרֵא נִיב
שְׂפָתָיִם[i] שָׁלוֹם שָׁלוֹם לָרָחוֹק
וְלַקָּרוֹב[ii] אָמַר יְיָ וּרְפָאתִיו: אָז
יִבָּקַע כַּשַּׁחַר אוֹרֶךָ וַאֲרֻכָתְךָ
מְהֵרָה תִצְמָח וְהָלַךְ לְפָנֶיךָ צִדְקֶךָ
כְּבוֹד יְיָ יַאַסְפֶךָ: לֹא יָבוֹא עוֹד
שִׁמְשֶׁךָ וִירֵחֲךָ לֹא יֵאָסֵף כִּי יְיָ
יִהְיֶה לְךָ לְאוֹר עוֹלָם וְשָׁלְמוּ
יְמֵי אֶבְלֶךָ:[iii] כִּי אַתָּה אָבִינוּ
כִּי אַבְרָהָם לֹא יְדָעָנוּ וְיִשְׂרָאֵל
לֹא יַכִּירֵנוּ אַתָּה יְיָ אָבִינוּ גֹּאֲלֵנוּ
מֵעוֹלָם שִׁמֶךָ: וְעַתָּה יְיָ אָבִינוּ אָתָּה
אֲנַחְנוּ חֹמֶר וְאַתָּה יֹצְרֵנוּ וּמַעֲשֵׂה
יָדְךָ כֻּלָּנוּ: יָדַעְתִּי יְיָ כִּי לֹא
לָאָדָם דַּרְכּוֹ לֹא לְאִישׁ הֹלֵךְ וְהָכִין
אֶת צַעֲדוֹ: מֵאֵין כָּמוֹךָ יְיָ גָּדוֹל
אַתָּה וְגָדוֹל שִׁמְךָ בִּגְבוּרָה:[iv] him and restore comfort to him and to his mourners. Creating the fruit of the lips, "Peace, peace, to the far and to the near," says the LORD, "and I will heal him." Then your light shall break forth like the dawn,[1] and your healing shall spring up quickly; your righteousness shall go before you, and the glory of the LORD shall be your rear guard. Your sun shall no more go down, nor shall your moon withdraw itself; for the LORD will be your everlasting light, and your days of mourning shall be ended. For You are our Father, though Abraham does not know us and Israel does not recognize us. You, O LORD, are our Father; our Redeemer from everlasting is Your name. And now, O LORD, You are our Father; we are the clay, and You are our potter;[2] we are all the work of Your hand. I know, O LORD, that the way of man is not in himself; it is not in one who walks to direct his steps.[3] There is none like You, O LORD; You are great, and Your name is great in might.

1285R 1290R 1295R

(תהלים) אֶרֶץ נָתְנָה יְבוּלָהּ
יְבָרְכֵנוּ אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהֵינוּ: יְבָרְכֵנוּ

(Psalms) The earth has yielded its produce; may God, our God, bless us. May God bless us, and may

1300R

[1]This metaphor of light breaking forth connects to Ma'avar Yabok's central theme of spiritual illumination through proper practice, particularly at times of suffering and transition.
[2]This potter-clay metaphor acknowledges divine sovereignty over human life and death, supporting the book's emphasis on accepting divine judgment even at the moment of death.
[3]This acknowledgment of human limitation in controlling one's path reflects Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on spiritual surrender, particularly important in its deathbed rituals.

[i]The phrase "creating the fruit of the lips" is particularly significant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, as it suggests that divinely inspired speech (including prayers, confessions, and biblical recitations) has creative power that can facilitate healing.
[ii]"To the far and to the near" in rabbinic interpretation often refers to various categories of people: those distant from God who have repented and those who were always near, or alternatively, deceased souls (distant) and living people (near).
[iii]The promise that "your days of mourning shall be ended" has special resonance in Ma'avar Yabok's context of deathbed and mourning rituals, offering spiritual comfort by framing death as a transition to a state beyond grief.
[iv]Cf. Isaiah 57:18-19 — These verses from Isaiah express God's promise of healing and peace, which aligns with the book's themes of offering spiritual comfort during illness and death. The 'far and near' imagery establishes universal scope for divine healing. | Cf. Isaiah 58:8 — This verse connects righteous action with divine healing and protection, reinforcing Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation for death and illness as a means of accessing divine mercy. | Cf. Isaiah 60:20 — This promise of eternal divine light and the end of mourning resonates with the book's concept of death as transition to a higher spiritual state, offering comfort to the dying and their mourners. | Cf. Isaiah 63:16 — This affirms God's paternal relationship with Israel even when the patriarchs seem distant, providing a source of comfort for the dying who might feel abandoned by earthly connections. | Cf. Isaiah 64:8 — The potter-clay metaphor expresses divine sovereignty over human life, reinforcing Ma'avar Yabok's theme of acceptance of divine judgment at the time of death. | Cf. Jeremiah 10:23 — This acknowledges human limitation and dependence on divine guidance, supporting the book's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation and surrender at the time of death. | Cf. Jeremiah 10:6 — This verse exalts divine incomparability and might, establishing God's supreme authority as a source of both awe and comfort in the face of death.

אֱלֹהִים וְיִירְאוּ אֹתוֹ כָּל אַפְסֵי
אָרֶץ: בָּרוּךְ אֲדֹנָי יוֹם יוֹם יַעֲמָס
לָנוּ הָאֵל יְשׁוּעָתֵנוּ סֶלָה: הָאֵל לָנוּ
אֵל לְמוֹשָׁעוֹת וְלַיהוִה אֲדֹנָי לַמָּוֶת
1170 תּוֹצָאוֹת: [i]הוֹשִׁיעֵנִי אֱלֹהִים כִּי
בָאוּ מַיִם עַד נָפֶשׁ: [ii]טָבַעְתִּי בִּיוֵן
מְצוּלָה וְאֵין מָעֳמָד בָּאתִי בְמַעֲמַקֵּי
מַיִם וְשִׁבֹּלֶת שְׁטָפָתְנִי: וַאֲנִי תְפִלָּתִי
לְךָ יְיָ עֵת רָצוֹן [iii]אֱלֹהִים בְּרָב
1175 חַסְדֶּךָ עֲנֵנִי בֶּאֱמֶת יִשְׁעֶךָ: הַצִּילֵנִי
מִטִּיט וְאַל אֶטְבָּעָה אִנָּצְלָה מִשֹּׂנְאַי
וּמִמַּעֲמַקֵּי מָיִם: עֲנֵנִי יְיָ כִּי טוֹב
חַסְדֶּךָ כְּרֹב רַחֲמֶיךָ פְּנֵה אֵלָי:
וְאַל תַּסְתֵּר פָּנֶיךָ מֵעַבְדֶּךָ כִּי צַר
1180 לִי מַהֵר עֲנֵנִי: וַאֲנִי עָנִי וְכוֹאֵב
יְשׁוּעָתְךָ אֱלֹהִים תְּשַׂגְּבֵנִי: אֱלֹהִים
לְהַצִּילֵנִי יְיָ לְעֶזְרָתִי חוּשָׁה: יֵבֹשׁוּ
וְיַחְפְּרוּ מְבַקְשֵׁי נַפְשִׁי יִסֹּגוּ אָחוֹר
וְיִכָּלְמוּ חֲפֵצֵי רָעָתִי: וַאֲנִי עָנִי
1185 וְאֶבְיוֹן אֱלֹהִים חוּשָׁה לִי עֶזְרִי
וּמְפַלְטִי אַתָּה יְיָ אַל תְּאַחַר: בְּךָ
יְיָ חָסִיתִי אַל אֵבוֹשָׁה לְעוֹלָם:
בְּצִדְקָתְךָ תַּצִּילֵנִי וּתְפַלְּטֵנִי הַטֵּה
אֵלַי אָזְנְךָ וְהוֹשִׁיעֵנִי: הֱיֵה לִי
1190 לְצוּר מָעוֹן לָבוֹא תָּמִיד צִוִּיתָ
לְהוֹשִׁיעֵנִי כִּי סַלְעִי וּמְצוּדָתִי
אָתָּה: אֱלֹהַי פַּלְּטֵנִי מִיַּד רָשָׁע מִכַּף

all the ends of the earth fear Him. Blessed is the Lord, day by day He bears our burden, God is our salvation, Selah. Our God is a God of salvation, and to the LORD God belong escapes from death.[A] Save 1305R me, O God, for the waters have reached my soul. I have sunk in muddy depths with no foothold;[B] I have come into deep waters, and the current has swept me away.[C] But as for me, my prayer is to You, O LORD, at a favorable time; O God, in Your abundant kind- 1310R ness, answer me with the truth of Your salvation. Rescue me from the mire and let me not sink; may I be saved from those who hate me and from the depths of the waters. Answer me, O LORD, for Your kindness is good; according to Your abundant 1315R mercies, turn to me. Do not hide Your face from Your servant, for I am in distress; hasten to answer me. But I am poor and in pain; may Your salvation, O God, set me on high. O God, to deliver me; O LORD, to help me, hasten. May those who seek my 1320R life be ashamed and disgraced; may those who desire my harm retreat backward and be humiliated. But I am poor and needy; O God, hasten to me. You are my help and my deliverer; O LORD, do not delay. In You, O LORD, I have taken refuge; let me never 1325R be put to shame. In Your righteousness, rescue me and deliver me; incline Your ear to me and save me. Be to me a rock of habitation[1] to which I may con-

[A] Or: "and to the LORD God belong the pathways out of death" — This alternate translation more directly captures the sense of "totzaot" as "exits" or "pathways out," emphasizing God's control over death's boundaries. This interpretation particularly aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's focus on the soul's journey through death.

[B] Or: "I have sunk in miry depths with nothing to stand upon" — This alternate translation preserves the concrete physical image while emphasizing the complete absence of support or foundation, which may better convey the psychological and spiritual experience of severe illness or approaching death.

[C] Or: "and the flood current has overwhelmed me" — The Hebrew "shibbolet" specifically suggests a rushing flood or torrent rather than a regular current. This more dramatic translation better conveys the overwhelming nature of serious illness or approaching death.

[1] The Hebrew "tzur ma'on" combines two powerful metaphors: the rock (representing strength

[i] This phrase, literally "to the Lord God belong the issues of death," establishes a theological foundation particularly relevant to Ma'avar Yabok's purpose: death is under divine control, not random misfortune. This perspective provides comfort to the dying by placing their experience within a framework of divine sovereignty.

[ii] The image of waters reaching to the "nefesh" (soul/life-breath) is particularly significant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok. The Hebrew term "nefesh" refers to the vital soul connected to physical life, which in kabbalistic thought remains near the body after death. This verse poetically depicts the experience of approaching death as the vital forces being overwhelmed.

[iii] The concept of "et ratzon" (time of favor) is significant in Jewish mystical tradition, suggesting there are particularly auspicious moments when divine mercy is more accessible. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this phrase suggests that illness and approaching death may actually constitute such a time of divine receptivity to prayer.

מְעֻגָל וְחוֹמֵץ: כִּי אַתָּה תִקְוָתִי
אֲדֹנָי יְיָ מִבְטַחִי מִנְּעוּרָי: אַל
1195 תַּשְׁלִיכֵנִי לְעֵת זִקְנָה כִּכְלוֹת כֹּחִי
אַל תַּעַזְבֵנִי:[i] אֱלֹהִים אַל תִּרְחַק
מִמֶּנִּי אֱלֹהַי לְעֶזְרָתִי חוּשָׁה: יֵבֹשׁוּ
יִכְלוּ שֹׂטְנֵי נַפְשִׁי יַעֲטוּ חֶרְפָּה
וּכְלִמָּה מְבַקְשֵׁי רָעָתִי: וַאֲנִי תָּמִיד
1200 אֲיַחֵל וְהוֹסַפְתִּי עַל כָּל תְּהִלָּתֶךָ:
תְּרַנֵּנָה שְׂפָתַי כִּי אֲזַמְּרָה לָּךְ
וְנַפְשִׁי אֲשֶׁר פָּדִיתָ:[ii] גַּם לְשׁוֹנִי
כָּל הַיּוֹם תֶּהְגֶּה צִדְקָתֶךָ כִּי בֹשׁוּ
כִי חָפְרוּ מְבַקְשֵׁי רָעָתִי: כִּי יַצִּיל
1205 אֶבְיוֹן מְשַׁוַּע וְעָנִי וְאֵין עֹזֵר לוֹ:
בָּרוּךְ יְיָ אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
עֹשֵׂה נִפְלָאוֹת לְבַדּוֹ: וּבָרוּךְ שֵׁם
כְּבוֹדוֹ לְעוֹלָם וְיִמָּלֵא כְּבוֹדוֹ אֶת
כֹּל הָאָרֶץ אָמֵן וְאָמֵן: אַךְ טוֹב
1210 לְיִשְׂרָאֵל אֱלֹהִים לְבָרֵי לֵבָב: וַאֲנִי
אַל[iii]
תָּמִיד עִמָּךְ אָחַזְתָּ בְּיַד יְמִינִי:
תַּשְׁבִּחֵם קוֹל צוֹרְרֶיךָ שְׁאוֹן קָמֶיךָ
עֹלֶה תָּמִיד: שָׂמָה שִׁבַּר רִשְׁפֵי קָשֶׁת
מָגֵן וְחֶרֶב וּמִלְחָמָה סֶלָה: וְכָל
1215 קַרְנֵי רְשָׁעִים אֲגַדֵּעַ תְּרוֹמַמְנָה
קַרְנוֹת צַדִּיק:[iv]

tinually come; You have commanded to save me, for You are my rock and my fortress. My God, deliver 1330R me from the hand of the wicked, from the grasp of the unjust and oppressor. For You are my hope, O Lord GOD, my trust from my youth. Do not cast me off in the time of old age; when my strength fails, do not forsake me. O God, do not be far from me; my 1335R God, hasten to my help. May the adversaries of my soul[1] be ashamed and consumed; may those who seek my harm be covered with reproach and humiliation.
But as for me, I will always hope, and I will add to all Your praise. My lips will sing joyously when I sing 1340R to You, and my soul, which You have redeemed. My tongue also will speak of Your righteousness all day long,[2] for those who seek my harm are ashamed, for they are disgraced. For He will deliver the needy who cry out, and the poor who have no helper. Blessed 1345R is the LORD God, the God of Israel, who alone does wonders. And blessed is His glorious name forever, and may His glory fill the whole earth, Amen and Amen. Surely God is good to Israel, to the pure of heart. But as for me, I am continually with You; 1350R
You have grasped my right hand. Do not forget the voice of Your adversaries, the tumult of those who and stability) and habitation/dwelling (representing intimate presence and protection). This rich phrase suggests both God's immovable strength and accessible presence.

[1] The Hebrew "sotnei nafshi" (literally "adversaries of my soul") uses the term "satan" (adversary) which has particular resonance in the context of Ma'avar Yabok. In Jewish mystical tradition, the soul facing death encounters various spiritual accusers that this prayer seeks protection from.

[2] The commitment to constant verbal praise reflects the Jewish emphasis on speech as a powerful spiritual act. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this verse can be understood as expressing hope that even when physical speech fails, the soul will continue its spiritual articulation of divine praise.

[i] This verse from Psalm 71 was traditionally associated with prayers for the elderly and infirm, making it particularly appropriate in Ma'avar Yabok's context of ministering to the sick and dying. The fear of abandonment in old age or illness is directly addressed with a plea for continued divine presence.

[ii] The pairing of lips singing praise with the redeemed soul reflects the Jewish concept that bodily expressions of devotion should emerge from genuine spiritual transformation. This is particularly meaningful in Ma'avar Yabok's context of preparing for death, suggesting that even when the body fails, the redeemed soul continues its praise.

[iii] The image of God grasping the right hand has particular resonance in Jewish mystical tradition. The right side is associated with mercy (chesed) while the left with judgment (din). This phrase thus suggests divine mercy actively supporting the worshipper even in times of judgment such as illness.

[iv] Cf. Psalm 67:6-8 — These verses open this prayer compilation with a theme of divine blessing and universal acknowledgment of God, establishing a foundation of trust in divine bounty. | Cf. Psalm 68:20 — The reference to God as one who has power over death adds a profound dimension to this prayer sequence, particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's context of providing comfort to the sick and dying. | Cf. Psalm 69:2-3, 14-18, 30-31 — The imagery of being overwhelmed by waters represents the experience of serious illness or approaching death. The psalmist's plea for rescue serves as a model prayer for those in distress. | Cf. Psalm 70 — The urgency of these verses reflects the pressing nature of prayer during critical illness, with enemies potentially representing rise against You, which ascends continually. There He broke the fiery arrows of the bow, the shield, the sword, and the battle, Selah. I will cut off all the horns of the wicked,[1] but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted. 1355R

(כתובים) בְּשֵׁשׁ צָרוֹת יַצִּילֶךָּ
וּבְשֶׁבַע לֹא יִגַּע בְּךָ רָע:[i]
בָּרָעָב פָּדְךָ מִמָּוֶת וּבְמִלְחָמָה מִיַּד חָרֶב:
1220 בְּשׁוֹט לָשׁוֹן תֶּחְבָּא וְלֹא תִירָא
מְשֹׁד כִּי יָבוֹא: לְשֹׁד וְלָכָפָן תִּשְׂחָק
וּמֵחַיַּת הָאָרֶץ אַל תִּירָא: וְיָדַעְתָּ
כִּי שָׁלוֹם אָהֳלֶךָ וּפָקַדְתָּ נָוְךָ וְלֹא
תֶחֱטָא:[ii] וְיָדַעְתָּ כִּי רַב זַרְעֶךָ
1225 וְצֶאֱצָאֶיךָ כְּעֵשֶׂב הָאָרֶץ: תָּבוֹא
בְכֶלַח אֱלִי קָבֶר כַּעֲלוֹת גָּדִישׁ
בְּעִתּוֹ:[iii] מִי יִתֵּן תָּבוֹא שֵׁאֲלָתִי

(Writings) From six troubles He will deliver you, and in seven no evil shall touch you.[2] In famine He will redeem you from death, and in war from the power of the sword. From the scourge of the tongue you shall be hidden,[3] and you shall not fear destruction when it comes. At destruction and famine you shall laugh, and of the beasts of the earth you shall not be afraid. You shall know that your tent is at peace; when you inspect your dwelling, you will find nothing missing.[A] You shall know that your offspring are many, and your descendants like the grass of the 1360R 1365R

[A] Or: "when you attend to your abode, nothing will be amiss" — The Hebrew verb 'תֶּחֱטָא' has the root meaning of 'missing the mark' and in this context refers to finding one's dwelling in perfect order rather than the concept of sin. This alternate rendering emphasizes the sense of everything being in its proper place.

[1] The image of cutting off horns (symbols of power and pride) provides a fitting conclusion to this prayer compilation, suggesting that God will ultimately nullify all opposing forces—whether human enemies, illness, or death itself.

[2] This passage begins with verses from Job 5:19-26, which contain Eliphaz's speech to Job describing the protection God offers to those who accept divine correction. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses serve as reassurance that divine protection remains available even during illness.

[3] The 'scourge of the tongue' refers to slander or harmful speech. In the context of illness and approaching death, this may take on additional meaning—protection from harmful words that might disturb one's peace of mind during vulnerable moments.

both human adversaries and the spiritual forces of death and illness. | Cf. Psalm 71:1-8, 9, 12-24 — This psalm's inclusion is particularly apt for Ma'avar Yabok as it addresses the vulnerability of old age and illness while maintaining trust in divine deliverance—a model of faith in the face of mortality. | Cf. Psalm 72:18-19 — The inclusion of this doxology shows how the compiler of this prayer sequence maintains liturgical structures even while selecting verses for healing and comfort. | Cf. Psalm 73:1, 23 — These verses emphasize the intimate relationship between the worshipper and God even in times of trouble, reinforcing the theme of divine presence during illness and approaching death. | Cf. Psalm 74:23 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, the enemies mentioned could be interpreted as both human adversaries and the spiritual forces of illness and death. | Cf. Psalm 76:4 — The image of God breaking weapons of war provides comfort that God has power over all destructive forces, including illness and death. | Cf. Psalm 75:11 — The final verse provides reassurance that God will ultimately judge the wicked and exalt the righteous, providing closure to the prayer sequence with a note of confidence in divine justice.

[i] This opening verse from Job 5:19 establishes a pattern of divine protection against increasing adversity, with the numbers six and seven symbolizing completeness and perfection in biblical numerology.

[ii] The Hebrew term 'תֶּחֱטָא' here is better understood as 'missing' or 'lacking' rather than 'sinning.' The verse promises that upon inspecting one's dwelling, nothing will be found missing or out of place.

[iii] This metaphor compares a person's life cycle to that of grain—both reach fullness in their appointed time before being gathered. 'בְּכֶלַח' (bekelach) refers to full maturity or ripeness.

וְתִקְוָתִי יִתֵּן אֱלוֹהַּ: מַה כֹּחִי כִי אֶיחָל וּמַה קִצִּי כִי אַאֲרִיךְ נַפְשִׁי: אַחַי בָּגְדוּ כְמוֹ נָחַל כַּאֲפִיק נְחָלִים יַעֲבֹרוּ:[i] וּמַלְטוּנִי מִיַּד צָר וּמִיַּד עָרִיצִים תִּפְדּוּנִי:[ii][iii] earth. You shall come to the grave in full age,[A] like a sheaf of grain gathered in its season.[1] Oh, that my request might come, and that God would grant my hope! What strength do I have, that I should hope? And what is my end, that I should prolong my life? My brothers have dealt deceitfully like a wadi,[B] like the torrents of wadis that pass away. Deliver me from the hand of the adversary, and redeem me from the hand of the ruthless.[2]

רְפָא נָא אֵל מְשׁוּבָתִי[iv] וְהוֹאֵל. וְהָפֵק מִמְעוֹן קָדְשֶׁךָ[v] רְצוֹנִי:

Please heal my backsliding, O God,[C] and be willing[D] to fulfill my desire from Your holy

[A] Or: "You shall come to the tomb in ripe old age" — The term 'בְּכֶלַח' (bekelach) specifically refers to ripeness or full maturity, and this alternate translation better captures the agricultural metaphor that continues in the following phrase about the sheaf of grain.

[B] Or: "My brethren have betrayed me like a seasonal stream" — This alternate translation clarifies the nature of the betrayal by making explicit the seasonal, unreliable nature of the stream (nachal) being referenced, which would be immediately understood by the original audience but might be less clear to modern readers.

[C] Or: "Please heal my repentance, O God" — The word 'meshuvati' (מְשׁוּבָתִי) can refer to both 'backsliding/apostasy' and 'repentance/return.' While 'backsliding' fits the context of seeking healing from sin, the alternate translation emphasizes the positive aspect of the person's attempt to return to God, suggesting they're asking God to perfect their incomplete repentance.

[D] Or: "and consent" — The term 'וְהוֹאֵל' carries connotations of willing consent or agreement.

[1] This agricultural metaphor for a timely, natural death would be particularly meaningful in Ma'avar Yabok's framework of seeing death not as punishment but as a natural transition when properly prepared for. It suggests that a good death comes at the proper time, like harvesting ripe grain.

[2] The final verse appears to be compiled from elsewhere, creating a prayer that moves from promises of protection through honest lament to a direct petition for divine intervention. This structure mirrors the spiritual journey of the sick person from hope to despair to renewed faith.

[i] This is a significant shift in tone and speaker in the original text, moving from promises of protection to personal lament. The metaphor refers to seasonal streams in desert regions that appear full but quickly dry up, leaving travelers stranded.

[ii] The final verse seems to be a compilation from elsewhere in the Bible and shifts from the lament back to a prayer for deliverance, creating a circular structure that begins and ends with divine protection.

[iii] Cf. Book of Job — This passage consists primarily of verses from Job 5:19-26 and Job 6:11-15, which in their original context represent the theological dialogue between Job and his friend Eliphaz about suffering, divine protection, and human despair. Ma'avar Yabok incorporates these verses to acknowledge both the promise of divine protection and the reality of human despair during illness. | Cf. Psalm 91 — While not directly quoted, this passage echoes themes from Psalm 91, known as the 'Song of Protection,' which also promises divine deliverance from various dangers including 'the pestilence that walks in darkness' and 'the destruction that wastes at noonday.' Ma'avar Yabok frequently draws on Psalm 91 for its protective qualities during illness. | Cf. Biblical Wadis — The metaphor of deceptive brothers being like seasonal wadis (desert streams that dry up) would resonate deeply with readers familiar with Middle Eastern geography. Just as travelers rely on these streams for survival in the desert, the sick person relies on supporters who might prove unreliable, making divine assistance all the more necessary.

[iv] This phrase echoes God's promise in Hosea 14:5 to 'heal their backsliding' (אֶרְפָּא מְשׁוּבָתָם), turning God's third-person promise about Israel into a first-person plea. The term 'meshuvah' carries a dual meaning of both apostasy/backsliding and the act of returning/repentance.

[v] This phrase 'from Your holy dwelling' appears in biblical texts like Deuteronomy 26:15 and Jeremiah 25:30, referring to God's heavenly abode. It emphasizes the transcendent nature of God while acknowledging His ability to interact with the earthly realm.

1235 תִּרְצֵנִי לְמַעַנֶךָ וְלֹא לְמַעֲנִי.[i] וְנָא
אֱלֹהַי אַל תְּבִישֵׁנִי בְּדִינִי:[ii] dwelling.[A] Accept me for Your sake, not for my own,[B] and please, my God, do not put me to shame in my judgment.[1] 1380R

מנחה ליום רביעי

Afternoon Prayer for Wednesday

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[iii] ואח״כ
יתחיל מזמור הושיעני אלהים
1240 וגו׳[iv] תהלים סי׳ ס״ט תמצא
לעיל[v] אח״כ יאמר זה

One should recite the verses beginning with "Please, O LORD"[2] and afterward begin Psalm 69, "Save me, O God,[3] etc." (which can be found above[4]), and then recite this. 1385R

(תורה) יְבָרֶכְךָ יְיָ וְיִשְׁמְרֶךָ: יָאֵר
יְיָ פָּנָיו אֵלֶיךָ וִיחֻנֶּךָּ: יִשָּׂא יְיָ פָּנָיו
אֵלֶיךָ וְיָשֵׂם לְךָ שָׁלוֹם:[vi] וְיִהִי

(Torah) May the LORD bless you and protect you. May the LORD cause His face to shine upon you and be gracious to you. May the LORD lift up His face to 1390R

While 'be willing' captures the essence, 'consent' might better convey the formal, almost contractual nature of the divine response being requested.

[A]Or: "grant from Your holy abode what I wish" — The verb 'תְּפַק' has connotations of producing, furnishing, or granting. This alternate translation emphasizes the action of granting coming from God's heavenly dwelling rather than focusing on the fulfillment aspect.

[B]Or: "Find favor in me for Your sake, not for my own" — The root of 'תִּרְצֵנִי' (r-tz-h) carries connotations of favor, acceptance, and goodwill. This alternate translation captures the nuance of divine favor rather than simple acceptance.

[1]This concluding petition acknowledges the reality of divine judgment while appealing to God's mercy. It reflects the tension in Jewish theology between divine justice and mercy, with the supplicant hoping that mercy will prevail in the final accounting.

[2]The Hebrew 'Ana Hashem' is a formulaic opening for prayers that appears at the beginning of each of the eight liturgical sequences in Ma'avar Yabok.

[3]Psalm 69 opens with an urgent plea for divine rescue from overwhelming circumstances, making it particularly appropriate in the context of serious illness or approaching death.

[4]The text assumes the reader has access to the complete prayer book or manuscript, where the full text of Psalm 69 would have appeared earlier.

[i]This reflects the theological concept that divine favor comes not through human merit but through God's own inherent mercy and for the sake of His name or glory—a theme prominent in biblical texts like Ezekiel 36:22.

[ii]Cf. Hosea 14:5 — The prayer directly echoes God's promise in Hosea to 'heal their backsliding,' transforming God's third-person promise about Israel into a first-person plea. This allusion frames the supplicant's request within God's established covenant promise of restoration upon repentance. | Cf. Psalm 38:1-2 — The final line 'do not put me to shame in my judgment' echoes the sentiment of Psalm 38, which begins with a plea to not be judged harshly. Both texts acknowledge divine judgment while appealing to God's mercy rather than strict justice. | Cf. Deuteronomy 26:15 — The phrase 'from Your holy dwelling' (מִמְּעוֹן קָדְשֶׁךָ) directly references the biblical language used in prayers requesting divine intervention from heaven. This connects the personal prayer to the traditional liturgical framework of addressing God in His transcendent abode.

[iii]These verses beginning with 'Ana Hashem' (Please, O LORD) serve as a standard opening formula for each of the eight prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok.

[iv]This refers to Psalm 69, which begins with 'Hoshieni Elohim' (Save me, O God). This psalm contains themes of distress, plea for divine intervention, and confidence in God's deliverance, making it particularly appropriate for prayers related to illness and suffering.

[v]The instruction indicates that the full text of Psalm 69 can be found earlier in the book, rather than being repeated here.

[vi]This is the Priestly Blessing (Birkat Kohanim) from Numbers 6:24-26, traditionally recited by the kohanim (priests) to bless the congregation. In Ma'avar Yabok, it serves as a powerful opening for healing prayers.

בִּנְסֹעַ הָאָרֹן וַיֹּאמֶר מֹשֶׁה קוּמָה
יְיָ וְיָפֻצוּ אֹיְבֶיךָ וְיָנֻסוּ מְשַׂנְאֶיךָ
מִפָּנֶיךָ:[i] בִּי אֲדֹנִי אַל נָא תָּשֵׁת
עָלֵינוּ חַטָּאת אֲשֶׁר נוֹאַלְנוּ וַאֲשֶׁר
חָטָאנוּ: אֵל נָא רְפָא נָא לָהּ:[ii] סֶלַח
נָא לַעֲוֹן הָעָם הַזֶּה כְּגֹדֶל חַסְדֶּךָ
וְכַאֲשֶׁר נָשָׂאתָה לָעָם הַזֶּה מִמִּצְרַיִם
וְעַד הֵנָּה:[iii] וַיֹּאמֶר יְיָ סָלַחְתִּי
כִּדְבָרֶךָ:[iv]

you and grant you peace.[1] And when the Ark would journey,[A] Moses would say, "Rise up, O LORD, and let Your enemies be scattered, and let those who hate You flee from before You."[2] Please, my Lord, do not hold against us the sin we have so foolishly committed.[B] Please God, heal her now.[3] Please forgive the iniquity of this people according to the greatness of Your loving-kindness, just as You have borne this people from Egypt until now. And the LORD said, "I have forgiven according to your word."[4] 1395R 1400R

(נביאים) יַסְּרַנִי יְיָ אַךְ בְּמִשְׁפָּט

(Prophets) Discipline me, O LORD, but with jus-

[A] Or: "And whenever the Ark set forth" — This alternative translation emphasizes the recurring nature of the action with 'whenever' rather than 'when' and uses 'set forth' which has a more formal, ceremonial connotation appropriate to the Ark's movement. This might better capture the ritual context of the original verse.

[B] Or: "I pray, my Lord, do not lay upon us the sin wherein we have acted foolishly and wherein we have sinned" — This more literal translation preserves the repetitive structure of 'wherein we have...' that appears in the Hebrew text, and more clearly shows that the speaker is taking responsibility for two separate actions: acting foolishly and sinning.

[1] The threefold structure of the Priestly Blessing corresponds in Kabbalah to the three primary divine attributes of Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), and Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), creating a balanced flow of divine energy to the recipient.

[2] In the context of healing prayers, these 'enemies' are often interpreted as both physical illness and the negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that might be causing or exacerbating the condition.

[3] This five-word prayer in Hebrew (El na refa na lah) is considered one of the most concise and powerful healing formulas in Jewish tradition. Its brevity has been interpreted as demonstrating that effective prayer need not be lengthy but must be heartfelt.

[4] This divine response completes the sequence of prayers, offering reassurance that sincere prayer and confession can indeed bring divine forgiveness and healing. This creates a theological framework where physical healing is connected to spiritual forgiveness.

[i] This verse from Numbers 10:35 was traditionally recited when the Ark of the Covenant was transported in the wilderness. In kabbalistic tradition, it has protective power against harmful spiritual forces that might attack during illness.

[ii] This is Moses's brief but powerful prayer for his sister Miriam's healing from leprosy (Numbers 12:13). Its brevity and directness make it a paradigmatic healing prayer in Jewish tradition.

[iii] This prayer from Numbers 14:19 invokes God's past mercy as the basis for current forgiveness, a common pattern in Jewish prayers for healing and forgiveness.

[iv] Cf. Numbers 6:24-26 — The Priestly Blessing appears here as a protective prayer for the sick or dying person, invoking divine protection, grace, and peace. In Ma'avar Yabok, this blessing serves as a powerful opening for healing prayers, establishing divine protection over the ill person. | Cf. Numbers 10:35 — This verse invokes divine power against spiritual enemies, appropriate in the context of illness where negative forces might attack the vulnerable soul. In Ma'avar Yabok, this verse serves to disperse harmful spiritual entities that might gather around the sick. | Cf. Numbers 12:11 — This verse represents confession of sin as a prerequisite for healing, acknowledging that illness may result from spiritual failings. In Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, proper repentance and confession are essential components of healing. | Cf. Numbers 12:13 — This concise healing prayer serves as a model of effective intercession for the sick. Its brevity reflects Ma'avar Yabok's teaching that sometimes the simplest prayers, offered with proper intention, are most effective. | Cf. Numbers 14:19-20 — These verses emphasize divine forgiveness based on covenant faithfulness rather than human merit. In Ma'avar Yabok's approach to healing, this reflects the understanding that divine mercy, not human righteousness, is the foundation for recovery and spiritual restoration.

אַל בְּאַפְּךָ פֶּן תַּמְעִטֵנִי: וְאַתָּה יְיָ
יָדַעְתָּנִי תִּרְאֵנִי וּבְחַנְתָּ לִבִּי אִתָּךְ
הַתֵּקֶם כַּצֹּאן לְטִבְחָה וְתַקְדְּשֵׁם
לְיוֹם הֲרֵגָה: אִם עֲוֹנֵינוּ עֲנוּ בָנוּ יְיָ
עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן שְׁמֶךָ כִּי רַבּוּ מְשׁוּבֹתֵינוּ
לְךָ חָטָאנוּ: מִקְוֵה יִשְׂרָאֵל מוֹשִׁיעוֹ
בְּעֵת צָרָה לָמָּה תִהְיֶה כְּגֵר בָּאָרֶץ
וּכְאוֹרֵחַ נָטָה לָלוּן: לָמָּה תִהְיֶה
כְּאִישׁ נִדְהָם כְּגִבּוֹר לֹא יוּכַל
לְהוֹשִׁיעַ וְאַתָּה בְקִרְבֵּנוּ יְיָ וְשִׁמְךָ
עָלֵינוּ נִקְרָא אַל תַּנִּחֵנוּ: לָמָּה הָיָה
כְאֵבִי נֶצַח וּמַכָּתִי אֲנוּשָׁה מֵאֲנָה
הֵרָפֵא הָיוֹ תִהְיֶה לִי כְּמוֹ אַכְזָב
מַיִם לֹא נֶאֱמָנוּ: בָּרוּךְ הַגֶּבֶר אֲשֶׁר
יִבְטַח בַּיהוָה וְהָיָה יְיָ מִבְטַחוֹ:
וְהָיָה כְּעֵץ שָׁתוּל עַל מַיִם וְעַל
יוּבַל יְשַׁלַּח שָׁרָשָׁיו וְלֹא יִרְאֶה כִּי
יָבוֹא חֹם וְהָיָה עָלֵהוּ רַעֲנָן וּבְשְׁנַת
בַּצֹּרֶת לֹא יִדְאָג וְלֹא יָמִישׁ מֵעֲשׂוֹת פֶּרִי: [i]

tice;[1] not in Your anger, lest You diminish me.[A] And You, O LORD, have known me; You see me and have tested my heart. Will You set them up like sheep for slaughter and consecrate them for the day 1405R of killing? If our iniquities testify against us, O LORD, act for Your name's sake, for our rebellions are many; against You we have sinned. O Hope of Israel, its Savior in time of distress,[2] why are You like a stranger in the land,[3] like a traveler who turns aside 1410R to lodge for the night? Why are You like a confused man,[B] like a warrior who cannot save? Yet You are in our midst, O LORD, and Your name is called upon us; do not forsake us. Why has my pain been perpetual and my wound incurable,[4] refusing to be 1415R healed?[C] Will You indeed be to me like a deceptive stream,[D] like waters that cannot be trusted? Blessed is the man who trusts in the LORD,[5] and whose trust is the LORD. For he shall be like a tree planted by waters, sending out its roots by a stream. It 1420R does not fear when heat comes, and its leaves remain

[A] Or: "lest You reduce me to nothing" — This alternative better captures the fear of being utterly destroyed or annihilated by divine anger, rather than merely diminished. The Hebrew term can imply a severe reduction to insignificance.

[B] Or: "like a man astounded" — This alternative captures the sense of being stunned or astonished to the point of inaction, rather than merely confused. The image is of someone rendered momentarily incapable of action due to shock.

[C] Or: "resisting healing" — This alternative maintains the personification of the wound while slightly softening the sense of deliberate refusal, which might better reflect the experience of chronic illness that doesn't respond to treatment.

[D] Or: "like a disappointing spring" — This alternative captures the specific type of deception involved—not deliberate falsehood but the disappointment of a water source that appears promising but proves unreliable, particularly in the context of the extended water metaphor.

[1] This prayer compilation opens with verses from Jeremiah that perfectly capture the theological perspective of Ma'avar Yabok: illness is understood as divine discipline, but the sufferer may appropriately ask that this discipline be measured and just rather than overwhelming.

[2] The Hebrew מִקְוֵה (mikveh) means both "hope" and "gathering of waters" (as in ritual bath), creating a word play on the water imagery that appears throughout this prayer selection.

[3] These poignant questions express the spiritual alienation often felt during severe illness, when God seems distant or uninvolved. Ma'avar Yabok frequently acknowledges such feelings while still encouraging continued dialogue with the Divine.

[4] The Hebrew uses particularly strong terms: כְּאֵבִי נֶצַח ("my perpetual pain") and מַכָּתִי אֲנוּשָׁה ("my desperate/incurable wound"), expressing the physical and emotional reality of chronic suffering while maintaining the theological framework that God remains the ultimate healer.

[5] The prayer follows Ma'avar Yabok's typical pattern of moving from lament to affirmation. These concluding verses from Jeremiah 17 present trust in God as the solution to the spiritual crisis expressed in the earlier verses.

[i] Cf. Jeremiah 10:24 — This opening verse establishes the prayer's tone of accepting divine judgment while pleading for mercy. In Ma'avar Yabok, this reflects the attitude the sick person should adopt—acknowledging illness as divine correction while seeking compassionate healing. | Cf. Jeremiah 12:3 — This verse from Jeremiah's complaint against the wicked is transformed in this prayer context into a plea for the sick person not to be treated like those destined for destruction, emphasizing the distinction between corrective suffering and punitive judgment. | Cf. Jeremiah green.[1] In the year of drought it does not worry, nor does it cease to yield fruit.

(תהלים) קוֹלִי אֶל אֱלֹהִים וְאֶצְעָקָה קוֹלִי אֶל אֱלֹהִים וְהַאֲזִין אֵלָי:[i] הַלְעוֹלָמִים יִזְנַח אֲדֹנָי וְלֹא יֹסִיף לִרְצוֹת עוֹד: וְהוּא רַחוּם יְכַפֵּר עָוֹן וְלֹא יַשְׁחִית וְהִרְבָּה לְהָשִׁיב אַפּוֹ וְלֹא יָעִיר כָּל חֲמָתוֹ:[ii] וַיַּךְ צָרָיו אָחוֹר חֶרְפַּת עוֹלָם נָתַן לָמוֹ: עָזְרֵנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׁעֵנוּ עַל דְּבַר כְּבוֹד שְׁמֶךָ וְהַצִּילֵנוּ וְכַפֵּר עַל חַטֹּאתֵינוּ לְמַעַן שְׁמֶךָ: חָיִינוּ חֶרְפָּה לִשְׁכֵנֵינוּ לַעַג וָקֶלֶס לִסְבִיבוֹתֵינוּ: יְיָ אֱלֹהִים צְבָאוֹת עַד מָתַי עָשַׁנְתָּ בִּתְפִלַּת עַמֶּךָ: יְיָ אֱלֹהִים צְבָאוֹת הֲשִׁיבֵנוּ הָאֵר פָּנֶיךָ וְנִוָּשֵׁעָה: וַיַּאֲכִילֵהוּ מֵחֶלֶב חִטָּה וּמִצּוּר דְּבַשׁ אַשְׂבִּיעֶךָּ: פַּלְּטוּ דַל וְאֶבְיוֹן מִיַּד רְשָׁעִים הַצִּילוּ: אֱלֹהִים אַל דֳּמִי לָךְ אַל תֶּחֱרַשׁ וְאַל תִּשְׁקֹט אֵל: אֱלֹהַי שִׁיתֵמוֹ כַגַּלְגַּל כְּקַשׁ לִפְנֵי רוּחַ: כְּאֵשׁ תִּבְעַר יָעַר וּכְלֶהָבָה תְּלַהֵט הָרִים: כֵּן תִּרְדְּפֵם

(Psalms) My voice rises to God and I cry out; my voice rises to God, and He gives ear to me. Will the Lord reject forever and never again show favor?[A] But He is compassionate, forgives iniquity, and does not destroy; He frequently turns back His anger and does not arouse all His wrath.[2] He struck His adversaries backward, giving them everlasting disgrace. Help us, O God of our salvation, for the sake of Your name's glory; rescue us and atone for our sins for the sake of Your name. We have become a disgrace to our neighbors, a mockery and derision to those around us. O LORD God of Hosts, how long will You be angry with Your people's prayer? O LORD God of Hosts, restore us; make Your face shine upon us and we shall be saved. He fed him with the finest wheat, and with honey from the rock I would satisfy you. Deliver the poor and needy; rescue them from the hand of the wicked. O God, do not be silent; do not be quiet or still, O God. My God, make them like whirling dust, like chaff before the wind. As fire burns a forest, and as flame sets mountains ablaze, so pursue them with [A] Or: "Will the Lord cast off forever and never again be favorable?" — This alternate rendering more directly translates the Hebrew verb יִזְנַח (yiznach) as "cast off" rather than "reject," and maintains the parallel structure of the original Hebrew.

[1] The image of the tree planted by water provides a powerful concluding visualization that the sick person can meditate upon. Even in the "heat" of affliction, one who remains connected to divine sources remains spiritually vital. This metaphor also recalls Psalm 1, creating an intertextual connection that enriches the prayer.

[2] The Hebrew construction וְלֹא יָעִיר כָּל חֲמָתוֹ literally means "and does not arouse all His wrath," emphasizing divine restraint rather than absence of judgment—an important theological nuance in the context of illness and suffering.

14:7-9 — These verses express the communal dimension of suffering, acknowledging that sins have collective consequences while appealing to God's reputation and covenant relationship. In Ma'avar Yabok, this suggests that the sick person should recognize the spiritual roots of suffering while appealing to God's mercy. | Cf. Jeremiah 15:18 — This expresses the frustration of chronic illness and seemingly unanswered prayer, voicing the sick person's emotional distress while still remaining in dialogue with God. | Cf. Jeremiah 17:7-8 — The prayer concludes with hope, shifting from complaint to affirmation of the rewards of trusting God. This final section provides the sick person with a positive visualization of spiritual resilience despite physical circumstances, characteristic of Ma'avar Yabok's therapeutic approach of moving from distress to confidence.

[i] This opening from Psalm 77:2-3 establishes the prayer's dialogical nature—the human voice crying out and divine attention being given in response. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that properly directed prayer creates an actual channel between human and divine realms.

[ii] This verse from Psalm 78:38 is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's theology of illness as divine correction rather than punishment. It emphasizes God's restraint in judgment and establishes a theological framework of divine mercy that underpins the entire approach to death and suffering.

בְּסַעֲרֶךָ וּבְסוּפָתְךָ תְּבַהֲלֵם: מַלֵּא
פְנֵיהֶם קָלוֹן וְיְבַקְשׁוּ שִׁמְךָ יְיָ:
יֵבֹשׁוּ וְיִבָּהֲלוּ עֲדֵי עַד וְיַחְפְּרוּ
וְיֹאבֵדוּ: יְיָ אֱלֹהִים צְבָאוֹת שְׁמָעָה
תְפִלָּתִי הַאֲזִינָה אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב סֶלָה:
יְיָ צְבָאוֹת אַשְׁרֵי אָדָם בֹּטֵחַ בָּךְ:
הֹרֵאֵנוּ יְיָ חַסְדֶּךָ וְיֶשְׁעֲךָ תִּתֶּן
לָנוּ: גַּם יְיָ יִתֵּן הַטּוֹב וְאַרְצֵנוּ
תִּתֵּן יְבוּלָהּ: שַׂמַּח נֶפֶשׁ עַבְדֶּךָ כִּי
אֵלֶיךָ אֲדֹנָי נַפְשִׁי אֶשָּׂא: הַאֲזִינָה יְיָ
תְּפִלָּתִי וְהַקְשִׁיבָה בְּקוֹל תַּחֲנוּנוֹתָי:
בְּיוֹם צָרָתִי אֶקְרָאֶךָּ כִּי תַעֲנֵנִי:
אֲדֹנָי וְדִים קָמוּ עָלַי וַעֲדַת
עָרִיצִים בִּקְשׁוּ נַפְשִׁי וְלֹא שָׂמוּךָ
לְנֶגְדָּם: וְאַתָּה אֲדֹנָי אֵל רַחוּם
וְחַנּוּן אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם וְרַב חֶסֶד וֶאֱמֶת:
פְּנֵה אֵלַי וְחָנֵּנִי תְּנָה עֻזְּךָ לְעַבְדֶּךָ
וְהוֹשִׁיעָה לְבֶן אֲמָתֶךָ: עֲשֵׂה עִמִּי
אוֹת לְטוֹבָה וְיִרְאוּ שֹׂנְאַי וְיֵבֹשׁוּ
כִּי אַתָּה יְיָ עֲזַרְתַּנִי וְנִחַמְתָּנִי:
תָּבוֹא לְפָנֶיךָ תְּפִלָּתִי הַטֵּה אָזְנְךָ
לְרִנָּתִי: כִּי שָׂבְעָה בְרָעוֹת נַפְשִׁי
וְחַיַּי לִשְׁאוֹל הִגִּיעוּ: נֶחְשַׁבְתִּי
עִם יוֹרְדֵי בוֹר הָיִיתִי כְּגֶבֶר אֵין
אֱיָל:[i] הָרַחֲקְתָּ מְיֻדָּעַי מִמֶּנִּי שַׂתַּנִי
תוֹעֵבוֹת לָמוֹ כָּלֹא וְלֹא אֵצֵא: עֵינִי
דָאֲבָה מִנִּי עֹנִי קְרָאתִיךָ יְיָ בְּכָל
יוֹם שִׁטַּחְתִּי אֵלֶיךָ כַּפָּי: וְשָׂרִים
בְּחֹלְלִים כָּל מַעְיָנַי בָּךְ:[iii ii]

Your tempest, and terrify them with Your storm. Fill their faces with shame, that they may seek Your name, O LORD. Let them be ashamed and dismayed forever; let them be humiliated and perish. O LORD God of Hosts, hear my prayer; listen, O God of Jacob, Selah. O LORD of Hosts, happy is the person who trusts in You. Show us Your kindness, O LORD, and grant us Your salvation. The LORD will also give what is good, and our land will yield its produce.[1] Gladden the soul of Your servant, for to You, O Lord, I lift up my soul. Give ear, O LORD, to my prayer, and attend to the voice of my supplications. In the day of my distress I call upon You, for You answer me. O God, arrogant men have risen against me, and a band of violent men seek my life, and they have not set You before them. But You, O Lord, are a God merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abundant in kindness and truth. Turn to me and be gracious to me; give Your strength to Your servant, and save the son of Your maidservant. Show me a sign for good, that my enemies may see and be ashamed, for You, O LORD, have helped me and comforted me. Let my prayer come before You; incline Your ear to my cry. For my soul is sated with troubles, and my life has reached the grave. I am counted among those who descend to the pit; I have become like a man without strength.[A] You have removed my acquaintances from me; You have made me an abomination to them; I am imprisoned and cannot

1450R 1455R 1460R 1465R 1470R 1475R

[A] Or: "I am reckoned among those descending to the grave; I have become like a warrior without might." — This alternate translation renders אֵין אֱיָל (ein eyal) as "without might" which more accurately captures the sense of lost power, and גֶּבֶר (gever) as "warrior" which better reflects its connotation of masculine strength in this context.

[1] This verse from Psalm 85:13 shifts from the previous themes of distress to express hope for divine blessing and restoration, reflecting the pattern throughout Ma'avar Yabok of moving from lamentation to confidence in divine response.

[i] This verse from Psalm 88:5-6 expresses the experience of approaching death through the metaphor of descending into "the pit" (בּוֹר), a common biblical euphemism for Sheol or the grave. The phrase "like a man without strength" (כְּגֶבֶר אֵין אֱיָל) has particular resonance in the context of terminal illness.

[ii] This final verse from Psalm 87:7 has particular mystical significance in the context of Ma'avar Yabok. The image of "wellsprings" (מַעְיָנַי) represents the soul's deepest spiritual sources flowing toward God, especially meaningful when recited by or for someone approaching death. In Kabbalistic thought, these wellsprings symbolize the channels connecting the human soul to divine realms.

[iii] Cf. Psalms — This passage is a compilation of verses from multiple psalms carefully selected to form a cohesive prayer for the sick or dying person. The selection follows a pattern seen throughout Ma'avar Yabok of creating therapeutic spiritual progressions from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation. | Cf. Zohar — Ma'avar Yabok draws heavily go out. My eye wastes away because of affliction; I call to You, O LORD, every day; I spread out my hands to You. And singers as dancers declare: "All my wellsprings are in You.""[A]

(כתובים) גַּם אֲנִי לֹא אֶחְשָׂךְ פִּי
אֲדַבְּרָה בְּצַר רוּחִי אָשִׂיחָה בְּמַר
נַפְשִׁי: הֵן אֵל לֹא יִמְאַס תָּם וְלֹא
יַחֲזִיק בְּיַד מְרֵעִים: וְהָיָה רֵאשִׁיתְךָ
מִצְעָר וְאַחֲרִיתְךָ יִשְׂגֶּה מְאֹד: עַד
יְמַלֵּא שְׂחוֹק פִּיךָ וּשְׂפָתֶיךָ תְרוּעָה:
שֹׂנְאֶיךָ יִלְבְּשׁוּ בֹשֶׁת וְאֹהֶל רְשָׁעִים
אֵינֶנּוּ: גַּם הוּא לִי לִישׁוּעָה כִּי לֹא
לְפָנָיו חָנֵף יָבֹא: הֵן יִקְטְלֵנִי לוֹ
אֲיַחֵל אַךְ דְּרָכַי אֶל פָּנָיו אוֹכִיחַ:
בְּפִךָ מַעֲלַי הַרְחַק וְאִמָּתְךָ אַל
תְּבַעֲתַנִּי: כַּמָּה לִי עֲוֹנוֹת וְחַטָּאוֹת
פִּשְׁעִי וְחַטָּאתִי הוֹדִיעֵנִי: לָמָּה
פָנֶיךָ תַסְתִּיר וְתַחְשְׁבֵנִי לְאוֹיֵב לָךְ:
הֶעָלֶה נִדָּף תַּעֲרוֹץ וְאֶת קַשׁ יָבֵשׁ
תִּרְדֹּף:[i]

(Writings) I too will not restrain my mouth;[B] I will speak in the anguish of my spirit, I will complain in the bitterness of my soul. Behold, God does not reject the blameless, nor does He support evildoers. Though your beginning was small, your end will greatly increase. Until He fills your mouth with laughter[1] and your lips with shouts of joy. Your enemies will be clothed with shame, and the tent of the wicked will be no more. This too is my salvation, for no hypocrite shall come before Him. Even if He slays me, I will hope in Him;[C] yet I will argue my ways to His face. Remove Your hand from me, and let not Your terror frighten me. How many are my iniquities and sins? Make known to me my transgression and my sin. Why do You hide Your face and consider me Your enemy?[2] Will You frighten a driven leaf and

1480R 1485R 1490R 1495R

[A] Or: "And both singers and dancers proclaim: "All my sources are in You."" — This alternate translation more clearly conveys the image of both singers and dancers participating in worship, and uses "sources" which might better convey the spiritual dependence implied by the Hebrew מַעְיָנַי (ma'yanai) in a modern context.

[B] Or: "I also will not hold back my speech" — This alternate translation emphasizes the act of speaking rather than the physical metaphor of the mouth, which might be more accessible to modern readers unfamiliar with biblical idioms.

[C] Or: "Behold, though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him" — This alternate translation follows the King James Version's rendering, which is more familiar to many English readers and has a poetic quality that captures the spiritual paradox expressed in this pivotal verse.

[1] The shift from first-person complaint to second-person promise of future joy creates a therapeutic progression within the prayer, moving from expressions of present suffering to anticipated relief. This pattern is characteristic of Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences.

[2] The feeling of divine abandonment or even hostility expressed here is a common spiritual experience during serious illness, and its inclusion in this prayer validates such feelings as legitimate expressions that can be brought before God.

on Zoharic concepts regarding prayer as a means of elevating the soul through cosmic realms. This compilation of verses is organized to guide the soul's ascent during illness or at the time of death. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This compilation follows the pattern established elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok, where biblical verses are arranged to create a therapeutic spiritual progression from expressions of distress to affirmations of divine salvation, helping the ill person or the dying to move through their spiritual journey.

[i] Cf. Book of Job — This passage is compiled from verses in the Book of Job, specifically from Job's responses to his suffering. These verses have been arranged to create a prayer expressing both deep distress and firm trust in divine justice. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses serve as part of a structured prayer sequence for the sick and dying, providing a biblically-based expression of spiritual struggle that validates the ill person's suffering while maintaining trust in God. | Cf. Psalm 57 — The phrase 'בְּצַר רוּחִי' (in the anguish of my spirit) echoes similar language in Psalm 57:2, creating a connection between Job's individual suffering and the psalmist's experience of distress and divine protection. This connection would suggest to the reader that just as the psalmist found refuge under God's wings during persecution, the sick person can find similar comfort.

pursue dry chaff?

דְּוֵה לֵבָב[i] אֲנִי נִצָּב וְנֶעֱצָב.[ii] וּמָה אֶעֱשֶׂה וְאָן אֶפְנֶה לְעֶזְרָה. לְךָ עֵינָי בְּתַחֲנוּנָי[iii] יְיָ בְּהַאֲנַחִי שִׂיחִי וְקוֹלִי:[iv]

With a sorrowful heart[1] I stand distressed.[2] What shall I do and where shall I turn for help? To You my eyes look in my supplications,[3] O LORD; when I sigh, heed my prayer and my voice.[4]

סדר יום חמישי

Order for Thursday

מתחיל פסוקי אנא ה׳ ואח״כ[v] יאמר מזמור בך ה׳ חסיתי[vi] וגו׳ סימן ע״א סדר ו׳[vii] ואח״כ יאמר זה:[viii]

Begin with the verses[5] “Ana Hashem” (Please, O LORD), and afterward recite Psalm 31 “In You, O LORD, I have taken refuge, etc.” as noted in section 71 of the sixth order,[A] and then say this:[6]

[A] Or: “marked as number 71 in the sixth sequence” — This alternate translation emphasizes the organizational system of Ma’avar Yabok more explicitly, making it clear that this refers to a numbering system within the text. Either translation effectively conveys the meaning.

[1] The Hebrew “deveh levav” literally means “faint-hearted” or “heart-sick,” conveying a state of profound emotional distress that affects one physically.

[2] I’ve attempted to preserve something of the wordplay in the Hebrew between “nitzav” (standing) and “ne’etzav” (distressed), though the full effect of the alliteration is lost in translation.

[3] This imagery of “lifting eyes” toward God is a common biblical prayer motif, appearing in Psalms 123:1-2, 141:8, and elsewhere, symbolizing hope and expectation directed toward heaven.

[4] The Hebrew “si’chi ve-koli” pairs two aspects of prayer: “siach” (meditation or prayer) and “kol” (voice), suggesting both the internal and external dimensions of the petitioner’s cry to God.

[5] This is a liturgical instruction found in Ma’avar Yabok directing the sick person or their attendant on the proper sequence of prayers to recite. It’s part of the book’s structured approach to providing spiritual comfort through organized prayer sequences.

[6] This instruction indicates that what follows (not shown in this excerpt) should be recited after the specified psalm. The book consistently provides detailed step-by-step instructions for prayer sequences.

[i] The phrase “deveh levav” (sorrowful heart) creates a powerful opening that establishes the emotional state of the petitioner. This kind of visceral, embodied description of distress is characteristic of Jewish prayer literature.

[ii] The Hebrew uses a play on words with the roots נצב (standing) and עצב (sorrow/distress), creating both alliteration and a connection between physical posture and emotional state.

[iii] This phrase echoes Psalm 141:8, “But my eyes are toward You, O GOD, my Lord,” emphasizing the directional focus of prayer as looking toward the divine.

[iv] This closing phrase draws on multiple psalm formulations, including elements from Psalms 5:2, 102:2, and others, using traditional language for divine attention to prayer.

[v] This refers to a standard opening formula that begins each of the eight prayer sequences in Ma’avar Yabok. Each sequence begins with verses starting with the words ‘Ana Hashem’ (Please, O LORD).

[vi] This is Psalm 31, which begins ‘In You, O LORD, I have taken refuge.’ This psalm is particularly appropriate for the sick and dying because it contains the verse ‘Into Your hand I commit my spirit’ (verse 6), which is recommended in Ma’avar Yabok for recitation at the moment of death.

[vii] This is a cross-reference to another section of Ma’avar Yabok, specifically section 71 in the sixth order of prayers (Seder Vav), where this psalm is also prescribed.

[viii] Cf. Section 71 of the Sixth Order (Seder Vav) — This cross-reference shows how Ma’avar Yabok creates a consistent system of prayer sequences while allowing for variations based on different days or conditions of the ill person. Psalm 31 appears in multiple prayer sequences due to its significance for the dying. | Cf. Psalm 31 — This psalm is particularly appropriate for the sick and dying because it contains the verse ‘Into Your hand I commit my spirit’ (verse 6), which tradition holds should be recited at the moment of death. Jesus reportedly quoted this verse on the cross, and it became a standard part of Jewish deathbed rituals.

(תורה) וְהִנֵּה פָּרַח מַטֵּה אַהֲרֹן
לְבֵית לֵוִי[i] וַיֹּצֵא פֶּרַח וַיָּצ֘ץ צִיץ
וַיִּגְמֹל שְׁקֵדִים: וַיֹּאמֶר יְיָ אֶל
אַהֲרֹן בְּאַרְצָם לֹא תִנְחָל וְחֵלֶק
1355 לֹא יִהְיֶה לְךָ בְּתוֹכָם אֲנִי חֶלְקְךָ
וְנַחֲלָתְךָ[ii] בְּתוֹךְ בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל: הִנֵּה
בֵרַךְ לָקַחְתִּי וּבֵרַךְ וְלֹא אֲשִׁיבֶנָּה:
חֵן עָם בְּלָעִיא יָקוּם וְכַאֲרִי יִתְנַשָּׂא
לֹא יִשְׁכַּב עַד יֹאכַל טֶרֶף וְדַם
1360 חֲלָלִים יִשְׁתֶּה:[iii] כָּרַע שָׁכַב כַּאֲרִי
וּכְלָבִיא מִי יְקִימֶנּוּ מְבָרֲכֶיךָ בָרוּךְ
וְאֹרְרֶיךָ אָרוּר: אֵיתָן מוֹשָׁבֶךָ וְשִׂים
בַּסֶּלַע קִנֶּךָ: לָכֵן אֱמֹר הִנְנִי נֹתֵן לוֹ
אֶת בְּרִיתִי שָׁלוֹם:[iv] וְאֹמַר אֲלֵכֶם
1365 [v] לֹא תַעֲרִצוּן וְלֹא תִירְאוּן מֵהֶם:

(Torah) And behold, Aaron's rod for the house of Levi had sprouted[1] and put forth buds, produced blossoms, and yielded almonds.[A] And the LORD said to Aaron, "In their land you shall have no inheritance, nor shall you have any portion among them; 1510R
I am your portion and your inheritance[2] among the children of Israel." Behold, I have received a command to bless, and He has blessed, and I cannot reverse it. Behold, a people rises like a lion, and lifts itself up like a lion; it will not lie down until 1515R it devours prey[3] and drinks the blood of the slain. He crouches, he lies down like a lion, and like a lion, who shall rouse him? Blessed are those who bless you, and cursed are those who curse you. Your dwelling is enduring, and you set your nest in the 1520R

[A] Or: "and produced almonds" — This alternate translation maintains the same meaning but uses 'produced' which might be slightly more direct than 'yielded' in modern English.

[1] This miracle confirmed Aaron's divine appointment to the priesthood against challenges to his authority. In the liturgical context of Ma'avar Yabok, this image of miraculous blossoming would resonate as a symbol of spiritual legitimacy and divine favor.

[2] This powerful theological concept establishes a direct relationship between priests and God, suggesting that spiritual connection surpasses material possession. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this would remind readers that the soul's connection to God is the ultimate inheritance, more valuable than any worldly possession.

[3] The lion metaphors from Balaam's oracles were originally directed toward Israel as a nation, but in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, they take on spiritual significance related to the soul's strength and divine protection during its journey.

[i] This section begins with a compilation of verses focused on priesthood and priestly blessing, starting with the confirmation of Aaron's divine selection through the miraculous blossoming of his rod.

[ii] This represents a fundamental principle of priesthood in Judaism: priests don't receive territorial inheritance but instead have a direct spiritual relationship with God who serves as their portion. This concept distinguishes them from other Israelites while also emphasizing their sacred status.

[iii] These verses from Balaam's oracles use powerful lion imagery to portray Israel's divinely-granted strength and inevitable victory. The vivid and even violent imagery (devouring prey, drinking blood) reflects ancient Near Eastern royal metaphors repurposed to describe spiritual power.

[iv] This reference to the 'covenant of peace' originally referred to God's promise to Phinehas (Aaron's grandson) after his zealous defense of Israelite religious purity. It became a significant concept in later Jewish mysticism representing harmony between divine and human realms.

[v] Cf. Numbers 17:23 — The flowering rod symbolizes the divine legitimacy of the priesthood, emphasizing Aaron's consecrated status and the spiritual authority of the priestly lineage. | Cf. Numbers 18:20 — This establishes the special relationship between God and the priests, who are separated from ordinary economic concerns to focus on spiritual service. | Cf. Numbers 23:20 — This verse emphasizes divine protection over Israel, showing that God's blessing cannot be undone even by those intending harm. | Cf. Numbers 23:24 — The lion imagery portrays Israel as divinely empowered and victorious, emphasizing their spiritual strength and eventual triumph over enemies. | Cf. Numbers 24:9 — This reinforces the divine protection over Israel and establishes the principle that one's treatment of Israel determines whether one receives blessing or curse. | Cf. Numbers 24:21 — This verse emphasizes security and permanence, suggesting divine protection for those who properly align themselves with sacred purposes. | Cf. Numbers 25:12 — The covenant of peace represents divine approval and special relationship with God, suggesting harmony between human and divine realms through proper religious observance. | Cf. Deuteronomy 1:29 — This verse offers spiritual reassurance against fear when facing challenges, suggesting that proper faith provides courage in difficult circumstances.

rock. Therefore say, "Behold, I give to him My covenant of peace."[1] And I said to you, "Do not be terrified, and do not be afraid of them.""[A]

(נביאים) רְפָאֵנִי יְיָ וְאֵרָפֵא[i] הוֹשִׁיעֵנִי וְאִוָּשֵׁעָה כִּי תְהִלָּתִי אָתָּה: יֵבֹשׁוּ רֹדְפַי וְאַל אֵבֹשָׁה אֲנִי יֵחַתּוּ הֵמָּה וְאַל אֵחַתָּה אֲנִי הָבִיא עֲלֵיהֶם יוֹם רָעָה וּמִשְׁנֶה שִׁבָּרוֹן שָׁבְרֵם: הַקְשִׁיבָה יְיָ אֵלַי וּשְׁמַע לְקוֹל יְרִיבָי: וַיהוָה אוֹתִי כְּגִבּוֹר עָרִיץ עַל כֵּן רֹדְפַי יִכָּשְׁלוּ וְלֹא יָכָלוּ[ii] בֹּשׁוּ מְאֹד כִּי לֹא הִשְׂכִּילוּ כְּלִמַּת עוֹלָם לֹא תִשָּׁכֵחַ: שִׁירוּ לַיְיָ הַלְלוּ אֶת יְיָ כִּי הִצִּיל אֶת נֶפֶשׁ אֶבְיוֹן מִיַּד מְרֵעִים: כִּי אָנֹכִי יָדַעְתִּי אֶת הַמַּחֲשָׁבֹת אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי חֹשֵׁב עֲלֵיכֶם נְאֻם יְיָ מַחְשְׁבוֹת שָׁלוֹם וְלֹא לְרָעָה[iii] לָתֵת לָכֶם אַחֲרִית וְתִקְוָה: הִנְנִי מַעֲלֶה לָהּ אָרְכָה וּמַרְפֵּא וּרְפָאתִים: עַל זֹאת הֵקִיצוֹתִי וָאֵרֶא וּשְׁנָתִי עָרְבָה לִי:[iv]

(Prophets) Heal me, O LORD, and I shall be healed;[2] save me, and I shall be saved, for You are my praise. Let my pursuers be put to shame, but let me not be put to shame; let them be dismayed, but let me not be dismayed. Bring upon them a day of evil and break them with double destruction. Listen to me, O LORD, and hear the voice of my adversaries. The LORD is with me like a mighty warrior;[3] therefore my pursuers will stumble and not prevail. They shall be greatly ashamed, for they have not acted wisely; their eternal disgrace will not be forgotten. Sing to the LORD! Praise the LORD! For He has delivered the soul of the needy from the hand of evildoers. For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, says the LORD, thoughts of peace and not of evil,[4] to give you a future and a hope. Behold, I will bring health and healing to it, and I will heal them. Upon this I awoke and looked around, and my sleep was sweet to me.[5]

[A] Or: "Do not dread them, and do not fear them" — This alternate captures the parallelism of the Hebrew with two different words for fear (dread and fear), though both translations effectively convey the meaning.

[1] The 'covenant of peace' (brit shalom) became an important mystical concept in Kabbalah, representing harmony between divine and human realms. In the context of death rituals, this would symbolize the soul's peaceful transition and divine protection during this passage.

[2] This prayer emphasizes complete dependence on divine healing rather than human intervention, reflecting the book's perspective that true healing addresses both physical and spiritual needs.

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'כְּגִבּוֹר עָרִיץ' (like a mighty warrior) portrays God as a powerful defender against both physical suffering and spiritual adversaries that might threaten the soul during illness or at death.

[4] This verse is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, which consistently presents suffering as part of a benevolent divine plan rather than punishment, encouraging the sick to trust God's ultimate good intentions.

[5] The final image of sweet sleep provides a peaceful conclusion that, in the context of deathbed prayers, might be understood as a metaphor for the peaceful transition of death for the righteous.

[i] The Hebrew uses the Tetragrammaton (יְיָ) with a slightly unusual vocalization, as was common in prayer texts to avoid pronouncing the divine name.

[ii] The image of pursuers who stumble and fail has a spiritual dimension in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, potentially referring to the Angel of Death or harmful spiritual forces that threaten the dying person.

[iii] This powerful affirmation from Jeremiah 29:11 reframes suffering as part of a divine plan for ultimate good, aligning with Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theological approach to illness and death as spiritually purposeful rather than random misfortune.

[iv] Cf. Jeremiah 17:14 — This opening verse from Jeremiah's prayer for healing is particularly appropriate in the context of Ma'avar Yabok as it emphasizes complete dependence on divine healing rather than human means. The sick person acknowledges that true healing comes only from God. | Cf. Jeremiah 17:18 — This continues Jeremiah's prayer, moving from a request for personal healing to a plea for justice against his persecutors. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this could represent spiritual enemies or forces of illness. | Cf. Jeremiah 20:11-13 — These verses

(תהלים) וַאֲנִי אֵלֶיךָ יְיָ
שַׁוְּעָתִי[i] וּבַבֹּקֶר תְּפִלָּתִי תְקַדְּמֶךָּ:
לָמָה יְיָ תִּזְנַח נַפְשִׁי תַּסְתִּיר פָּנֶיךָ
מִמֶּנִּי: הֲרַחֲקְתָּ מִמֶּנִּי אֹהֵב וָרֵעַ
מְיֻדָּעַי מַחְשָׁךְ: כִּי לַיְיָ מָגִנֵּנוּ
וְלִקְדוֹשׁ יִשְׂרָאֵל מַלְכֵּנוּ: בָּרוּךְ
יְיָ לְעוֹלָם אָמֵן וְאָמֵן: שַׂבְּעֵנוּ
בַבֹּקֶר חַסְדֶּךָ וּנְרַנְּנָה וְנִשְׂמְחָה
בְּכָל יָמֵינוּ: שַׂמְּחֵנוּ כִּימוֹת עִנִּיתָנוּ
שְׁנוֹת רָאִינוּ רָעָה: וְיִהִי נֹעַם
אֲדֹנָי אֱלֹהֵינוּ עָלֵינוּ וּמַעֲשֵׂה
יָדֵינוּ כּוֹנְנָה עָלֵינוּ וּמַעֲשֵׂה יָדֵינוּ
כּוֹנְנֵהוּ: יֹשֵׁב בְּסֵתֶר עֶלְיוֹן בְּצֵל
שַׁדַּי יִתְלוֹנָן:[ii] אֹמַר לַיְיָ מַחְסִי
וּמְצוּדָתִי אֱלֹהַי אֶבְטַח בּוֹ: לֹא
תְאֻנֶּה אֵלֶיךָ רָעָה וְנֶגַע לֹא יִקְרַב
בְּאָהֳלֶךָ: כִּי מַלְאָכָיו יְצַוֶּה לָךְ
לִשְׁמָרְךָ בְּכָל דְּרָכֶיךָ: עַל כַּפַּיִם
יִשָּׂאוּנְךָ פֶּן תִּגֹּף בָּאֶבֶן רַגְלֶךָ: עַל
שַׁחַל וָפֶתֶן תִּדְרֹךְ תִּרְמֹס כְּפִיר
וְתַנִּין: כִּי בִי חָשַׁק וַאֲפַלְּטֵהוּ
אֲשַׂגְּבֵהוּ כִּי יָדַע שְׁמִי: יִקְרָאֵנִי
וְאֶעֱנֵהוּ עִמּוֹ אָנֹכִי בְצָרָה אֲחַלְּצֵהוּ
וַאֲכַבְּדֵהוּ: אֹרֶךְ יָמִים אַשְׂבִּיעֵהוּ
וְאַרְאֵהוּ בִּישׁוּעָתִי: כִּי חָנַּה אֹיְבֶיךָ
יְיָ כִּי חָנַּה אֹיְבֶיךָ יֹאבֵדוּ יִתְפָּרְדוּ

(Psalms) But as for me, to You, O LORD, I cry out, and in the morning my prayer comes before You. Why, O LORD, do You reject my soul and 1545R hide Your face from me?[1] You have distanced from me friend and companion; my acquaintances are in darkness. For our shield belongs to the LORD, and our king to the Holy One of Israel. Blessed is the LORD forever, Amen and Amen. Satisfy us in the 1550R morning with Your lovingkindness,[A] that we may sing for joy and be glad all our days. Make us glad according to the days You have afflicted us, the years we have seen evil. May the pleasantness of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish the work of our 1555R hands upon us; yes, establish the work of our hands. He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High will abide in the shadow of the Almighty.[2] I will say to the LORD, "My refuge and my fortress, my God, in whom I trust." No evil will befall you, nor will 1560R any plague come near your tent. For He will command His angels concerning you, to guard you in all your ways. They will bear you up in their hands, lest you strike your foot against a stone.[3] You will tread upon the lion and cobra; you will trample the 1565R young lion and serpent. "Because he loves Me, I will deliver him; I will set him securely on high, because he has known My name. He will call upon Me, and

[A] Or: "Fill us at daybreak with Your steadfast love" — This translation captures the sense of divine love as sustenance (like being filled with food) and emphasizes the motif of morning/daybreak as a time of renewal and hope, which is particularly relevant in prayers for healing.

[1] The Hebrew metaphor of God 'hiding His face' (הסתר פנים) is a key theological concept denoting divine withdrawal or apparent absence, particularly resonant during times of illness when one might feel abandoned by God.

[2] The imagery of divine shadow (צל) represents protective covering rather than darkness or obscurity. In a hot climate, shade provides life-saving refuge, making this an apt metaphor for divine protection during illness.

[3] This verse about angelic protection from even minor injuries (stubbing one's toe) emphasizes comprehensive divine care extending to the smallest details of the ill person's experience.

transition from distress to confidence in divine protection, showcasing the spiritual journey from affliction to trust that Ma'avar Yabok aims to facilitate for the sick or dying. | Cf. Jeremiah 29:11 — This well-known verse offers reassurance of God's benevolent plans. In Ma'avar Yabok, this would provide comfort that even suffering serves a divine purpose leading to hope. | Cf. Jeremiah 30:17 — This divine promise of healing would be particularly meaningful in Ma'avar Yabok's context, affirming God's commitment to restore health to the afflicted. | Cf. Jeremiah 31:26 — This concluding verse from Jeremiah describes awakening from a pleasant sleep, which in Ma'avar Yabok's context might symbolize the peaceful transition of death leading to spiritual awakening.

[i] This opening verse from Psalm 88:14 begins with a cry of distress, establishing the spiritual state of the ill person who feels abandoned yet still turns to God in prayer.

[ii] The transition to Psalm 91, which follows the opening laments, marks a shift from expressions of abandonment to declarations of divine protection. This psalm was traditionally recited for protection against harmful forces, both physical and spiritual.

כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן: צַדִּיק בַּתָּמֶר
יִפְרָח[i] כְּאֶרֶז בַּלְּבָנוֹן יִשְׂגֶּה: יְיָ
מָלָךְ גֵּאוּת לָבֵשׁ לָבֵשׁ יְיָ עֹז הִתְאַזָּר
אַף תִּכּוֹן תֵּבֵל בַּל תִּמּוֹט: אֵל
נְקָמוֹת יְיָ אֵל נְקָמוֹת הוֹפִיעַ:
אִם אָמַרְתִּי מָטָה רַגְלִי חַסְדְּךָ יְיָ
יִסְעָדֵנִי: בְּרֹב שַׂרְעַפַּי בְּקִרְבִּי
תַּנְחוּמֶיךָ יְשַׁעֲשְׁעוּ נַפְשִׁי:[ii] לְכוּ
נְרַנְּנָה לַיְיָ נָרִיעָה לְצוּר יִשְׁעֵנוּ:
כִּי טוֹב יְיָ לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ וְעַד דֹּר
וָדֹר אֱמוּנָתוֹ: שִׁירוּ לַיהוָה בָּרֲכוּ
שְׁמוֹ בַּשְּׂרוּ מִיּוֹם לְיוֹם יְשׁוּעָתוֹ:
שַׂמְּחוּ צַדִּיקִים בַּיהוָה וְהוֹדוּ
לְזֵכֶר קָדְשׁוֹ: זַמְּרוּ לַיְיָ בְּכִנּוֹר
בְּכִנּוֹר וְקוֹל זִמְרָה: רוֹמְמוּ יְיָ
אֱלֹהֵינוּ וְהִשְׁתַּחֲווּ לְהַר קָדְשׁוֹ כִּי
קָדוֹשׁ יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ: לַבְּקָרִים אַצְמִית
כָּל רִשְׁעֵי אָרֶץ[iii] לְהַכְרִית מֵעִיר
יְיָ כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן: תְּפִלָּה לְעָנִי
כִּי יַעֲטֹף וְלִפְנֵי יְיָ יִשְׁפֹּךְ שִׂיחוֹ:
יְיָ שִׁמְעָה תְפִלָּתִי וְשַׁוְעָתִי אֵלֶיךָ
תָּבוֹא: אַל תַּסְתֵּר פָּנֶיךָ מִמֶּנִּי בְּיוֹם
צַר לִי הַטֵּה אֵלַי אָזְנֶךָ בְּיוֹם אֶקְרָא
מַהֵר עֲנֵנִי:[iv]

I will answer him; I will be with him in trouble; I will rescue him and honor him. With long life I will satisfy him and show him My salvation." For behold, Your enemies, O LORD, for behold, Your enemies shall perish; all evildoers shall be scattered. The righteous will flourish like the palm tree; he will grow like a cedar in Lebanon. The LORD reigns, He is clothed with majesty; the LORD has clothed and girded Himself with strength; indeed, the world is firmly established, it will not be moved. The God of vengeance, O LORD, the God of vengeance, shine forth! When I said, "My foot is slipping," Your lovingkindness, O LORD, held me up.[A] When my anxious thoughts multiply within me,[1] Your consolations delight my soul. Come, let us sing joyfully to the LORD; let us shout to the rock of our salvation. For the LORD is good; His lovingkindness is everlasting, and His faithfulness to all generations. Sing to the LORD, bless His name; proclaim good tidings of His salvation from day to day.[B] Rejoice in the LORD, O righteous ones, and give thanks to His holy name. Sing praises to the LORD with the lyre, with the lyre and the sound of melody. Exalt the LORD our God and worship at His holy mountain,

[A] Or: "When I thought, "My foot is slipping," Your faithful love, O LORD, supported me" — This translation emphasizes the internal psychological state ('thought' rather than 'said') and uses 'supported' to maintain the physical metaphor of being upheld when one is about to fall—particularly apt for someone physically weakened by illness.

[B] Or: "Sing to the LORD, bless His name; announce His deliverance day after day" — The Hebrew 'בַּשְּׂרוּ' carries connotations of bringing good news or evangelizing. In the context of illness, 'deliverance' might better capture the sense of being rescued from affliction that would resonate with a sick person.

[1] The Hebrew term 'שַׂרְעַפַּי' refers specifically to divided or branching thoughts that multiply anxiety. This describes the psychological state of the ill person whose mind fills with worries and fears.

[i] This verse introduces the image of the righteous flourishing like a palm tree, which in Jewish tradition symbolizes resilience and fruitfulness even in harsh conditions—an apt metaphor for recovery from illness.

[ii] The Hebrew term 'יְשַׁעֲשְׁעוּ' (delight) has connotations of playthings or toys that bring comfort, suggesting divine consolations that soothe the troubled soul like a child's beloved toy.

[iii] In the context of prayers for the sick, this verse about destroying wickedness can be understood metaphorically as the elimination of illness and harmful spiritual forces that cause suffering.

[iv] Cf. Psalm 88:13-14 — These opening verses set the tone of spiritual distress and the sense of divine distance that the ill person is experiencing, making this an appropriate opening for prayer during suffering | Cf. Psalm 88:18 — The reference to being separated from loved ones would resonate particularly with someone who is ill or dying, as sickness often brings isolation | Cf. Psalm 89:18-19 — After the opening expressions of distress, the text shifts to affirmations of faith, establishing a theological foundation for the prayers that follow | Cf. Psalm 90:14-17 — These verses constitute a prayer for restoration and divine favor, appropriate for someone seeking healing and a return to normal life | Cf. Psalm 91:1-16 — Psalm 91 is central to Ma'avar Yabok's prayers for the sick and dying because of its traditional protective properties against spiritual and physical harm | Cf. Psalm 92:9-10 — This establishes a cosmic justice framework where those who harm the righteous for holy is the LORD our God. Every morning I will destroy all the wicked of the land, to cut off from the city of the LORD all the evildoers. A prayer of 1595R the afflicted when he is faint[1] and pours out his complaint before the LORD. O LORD, hear my prayer, and let my cry for help come to You. Do not hide Your face from me in the day of my distress; incline Your ear to me; in the day when I call, answer me 1600R quickly.

(כתובים) מְלִיצַי רֵעָי אֶל אֱלוֹהַּ דָּלְפָה עֵינִי: [i] עַד אָנָה תּוֹגְיוּן נַפְשִׁי וּתְדַכְּאוּנַנִי בְמִלִּים: חָנֵּנִי חָנֵּנִי אַתֶּם רֵעָי כִּי יַד אֱלוֹהַּ נָגָעָה בִי: [ii] בַּמָּה נַר רְשָׁעִים יִדְעָךְ וְיָבֹא עֲלֵימוֹ אֵידָם חֶבָלִים יְחַלֵּק בְּאַפּוֹ: יִהְיוּ כְּתֶבֶן לִפְנֵי רוּחַ וּכְמֹץ גְּנָבַתּוּ סוּפָה: אֶרֶץ אַל תְּכַסִּי דָמִי וְאַל יְהִי מָקוֹם לְזַעֲקָתִי: גַּם עַתָּה הִנֵּה בַשָּׁמַיִם עֵדִי וְשָׁהֲדִי בַּמְּרוֹמִים: וְחָנֵּה שַׁדַּי בְּצָרֵיךְ וְכֶסֶף תּוֹעָפוֹת

(Writings) My intercessors, my friends,[A] to God my eye drops tears.[2] How long will you grieve my soul and crush me with words? Have pity on me, have pity on me, O my friends, for the hand of God has 1605R touched me.[3] How often is the lamp of the wicked extinguished, and their calamity comes upon them! He distributes sorrows in His anger. They are like straw before the wind, and like chaff that the storm carries away. O earth, do not cover my blood, and let there 1610R be no resting place for my cry! Even now, behold, my witness is in heaven, and my advocate is in the

[A] Or: "My advocates, my companions" — The term 'melitzai' has multiple connotations including advocate, interpreter, and mediator. In Job's context, he's referring to friends who should be advocating for him but are instead condemning him.

[1] The term 'יַעֲטֹף' (faint/overwhelmed) describes a state of being enveloped or wrapped in suffering, suggesting not just physical weakness but spiritual and emotional engulfment—a holistic description of serious illness.

[2] The Hebrew word 'melitzai' (מְלִיצַי) carries connotations of both 'intercessors' and 'interpreters'—those who speak on behalf of someone else. Job uses this term ironically, as his friends have failed to properly advocate for him before God.

[3] This powerful repetition of 'have pity' (חָנֵּנִי) reflects the intensity of the sufferer's plea. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse would be particularly resonant for the dying person seeking compassion from those attending them.

(metaphorically including illness and spiritual forces) will ultimately be defeated | Cf. Psalm 93:1 — Affirming God's kingship provides reassurance that even suffering occurs within a divinely governed cosmos | Cf. Psalm 94:1-2, 18-19 — These verses acknowledge both divine judgment and mercy, themes central to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of illness as potentially corrective but ultimately redemptive | Cf. Psalm 95:1 — The transition to expressions of praise models the movement from lament to hope that the sick person is encouraged to undergo | Cf. Psalm 96:2-3 — The emphasis on God's salvation reinforces hope for recovery or spiritual redemption | Cf. Psalm 97:12 — Continues the theme of moving from distress to joy through proper spiritual orientation | Cf. Psalm 98:5 — Music was considered healing in Jewish tradition, and this reference to instrumental worship suggests restoration of joy | Cf. Psalm 99:9 — References to divine holiness establish proper spiritual reverence in approaching God for healing | Cf. Psalm 101:8 — In the context of illness, this may be interpreted as eliminating spiritual forces causing suffering | Cf. Psalm 102:1-2 — The explicit identification of this as 'a prayer of the afflicted' makes it particularly appropriate for the sick

[i] This is a verbatim quote from Job 16:20-21, where Job is responding to his friends who have been offering unhelpful consolation during his suffering.

[ii] Direct quote from Job 19:21, a powerful plea for compassion that would resonate deeply with the sick or dying person and those attending them.

לָךְ׃[i] כִּי אָז עַל שַׁדַּי תִּתְעַנָּג וְתִשָּׂא
אֶל אֱלוֹהַּ פָּנֶיךָ׃ תַּעְתִּיר אֵלָיו
וְיִשְׁמָעֶךָּ וּנְדָרֶיךָ תְּשַׁלֵּם׃ וְתִגְזַר
אֹמֶר וְיָקָם לָךְ וְעַל דְּרָכֶיךָ נָגַהּ
1450 אוֹר׃[iii][ii]

heights.[1] The Almighty will be your defender,[A] and you will have silver in abundance.[B][2] For then you will delight yourself in the Almighty, and lift up your face to God. You will make supplication to Him, and He will hear you, and you will pay your vows. You will declare a matter, and it will be established for you; and light will shine on your ways. 1615R

נְחֵנִי נָא בְּאֹרַח הַנְכוֹנָה
לְפָנֶיךָ וְהָכֵן אֶת שְׁבִילִי׃ עֲנֵה
נַאֲקִי[iv] דְּלָתֶיךָ בְּדָפְקִי. רְאֵה
צוּרִי רְאֵה צִירִי[v] וְחֵילִי. פְּדֵנִי
1455 מֵעֲוֹנִי צוּר גְּאוֹנִי. אֱיָלוּתִי

Lead me, please, on the path that is right before You,[3] and prepare my way. Answer my groaning when I knock at Your doors.[4] See, my Rock, see my pain and my agony.[C] Redeem me from my iniquity,[5] Rock of my glory. My strength in my 1620R

[A] Or: "The Almighty will be against your adversaries" — The Hebrew 'b'tzarecha' can be interpreted as 'against your enemies' rather than 'your defender,' though both capture the protective aspect intended in this context.

[B] Or: "and precious silver shall be yours" — The term 'to'afot' has connotations of preciousness and height/exaltation rather than just abundance, potentially referring to spiritually refined or elevated silver rather than just quantity.

[C] Or: "my messenger and my strength" — The word 'צירי' could refer to physical pain/contractions, but it can also mean 'my messenger' or 'my emissary.' Similarly, 'חילי' can mean 'my agony' but more commonly means 'my strength/army.' This alternate translation reflects these other possible meanings, though the context suggests the pain/suffering interpretation is more likely.

[1] This expresses the paradoxical faith that even when suffering extreme divine judgment, God Himself will ultimately serve as advocate and witness for the sufferer—a central theological concept in Jewish approaches to suffering.

[2] While this appears to promise material prosperity in its original context, in Ma'avar Yabok it likely carries spiritual significance—the 'silver' representing spiritual merit and divine favor that accumulates through proper acceptance of suffering.

[3] This opening echoes traditional Jewish prayers for guidance, particularly relevant for someone facing illness or approaching death who seeks divine direction through their spiritual journey.

[4] The image of knocking at divine doors represents the urgent prayer of the sick or dying person, portrayed as directly petitioning at the gates of heaven for entry and mercy.

[5] This reflects Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theological framework that illness provides an opportunity for spiritual rectification and atonement for sin.

[i] From Job 22:25, part of Eliphaz's speech to Job, promising material prosperity if Job returns to God. In Ma'avar Yabok, this is repurposed as a promise of spiritual treasure for the suffering person.

[ii] From Job 22:28, also from Eliphaz's speech, promising that God will fulfill the requests of one who returns to Him. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this offers hope that prayers for healing or peaceful transition will be answered.

[iii] Cf. Book of Job — This passage is composed entirely of verses from the Book of Job, arranged to create a spiritual progression from despair to hope. By using Job's words, the author connects the experience of the sick or dying person with the biblical archetype of righteous suffering and faithful endurance. | Cf. Tziduk HaDin prayer — This compilation shares thematic similarities with the Tziduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment) prayer recited at funerals, which also acknowledges divine sovereignty even in suffering. Both texts move from acknowledging pain to affirming divine justice and ultimate hope. | Cf. Psalm 41 — The plea for compassion echoes Psalm 41, which focuses specifically on divine mercy during illness. Both texts emphasize how friends should respond to the suffering of the ill with compassion rather than judgment.

[iv] The term 'na'aki' (my groaning) conveys a deep visceral cry of distress, often used in biblical Hebrew to describe the anguished cries of the oppressed or suffering.

[v] There is wordplay between 'tzuri' (my Rock, referring to God) and 'tziri' (my pain), creating a poetic connection between the divine source of strength and the personal experience of suffering.

בְּגָלוּתִי[i] וֵאלֹי[ii]: — exile,[A] and my God. 1625R

מנחה ליום חמישי[iii] — Afternoon Prayer for Thursday

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[iv] ואחר כך יתחיל מזמור הודו לה וגו׳ תהלים ס מן קי״ח[v] סדר ח[vi] ואח״כ יאמר זה: — One should recite[1] the verses beginning with "Ana Hashem"[2] [Please, O LORD], and afterward begin Psalm 118 ("Hodu L'Hashem" [Give thanks to the LORD]), and then say this:[3] 1630R

(תורה) לַהֲדֹף אֶת כָּל אֹיְבֶיךָ מִפָּנֶיךָ כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר יְיָ: לֹא תִירָאוּם כִּי יְיָ אֱלֹהֵיכֶם הוּא הַנִּלְחָם לָכֶם:[vii] וְיָדַעְתָּ כִּי — (Torah) To thrust away all your enemies from before you, as the LORD has spoken: "Fear them not, for the LORD your God is the One who fights for you." And you shall know that the LORD your God, He is

[A] Or: "My help in my exile" — The term 'אילותי' is related to 'איל' (strength) but also has connotations of 'help' or 'assistance.' This alternative emphasizes the supportive aspect of God's presence during exile rather than just the strength aspect.

[1] The Hebrew uses the third-person formulation "יאמר" (he shall say), which is typical in liturgical instructions. I've translated it as "One should recite" to maintain the instructional tone while making it more inclusive in English.

[2] I've kept the Hebrew phrase "Ana Hashem" with a translation in brackets to preserve the specific prayer reference while making it accessible to English readers.

[3] This indicates that additional prayers would follow, which would have appeared in the next section of the text.

[i] The phrase combines 'my strength' with 'my exile,' reflecting the Kabbalistic understanding that even in states of spiritual or physical exile (including illness), divine strength remains accessible. The rhyming pattern (-uti) creates a poetic connection between God's sustaining power and the human experience of displacement.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 27:11 — The opening phrase "נְחֵנִי יְיָ בְּאֹרַח תַּנְכוֹנָה לְפָנֶיךָ" (Lead me, please, on the path that is right before You) directly echoes Psalm 27:11's plea for divine guidance on the proper path. This creates a connection between the sick/dying person's situation and David's plea for protection from enemies, suggesting that illness or approaching death is being metaphorically understood as an 'enemy' from which divine guidance provides protection. | Cf. Psalm 119:5 — The phrase "וְתָכֵן אֶת שְׁבִילִי" (and prepare my way) resonates with the psalmist's desire for his ways to be established in following divine law. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this suggests that the sick person desires divine assistance in establishing their spiritual path during their time of crisis, linking personal suffering to spiritual rectification. | Cf. Psalm 4:2 — The phrase "עֲנֵנִי בְּדָלְתֶיךָ דְּדָפְקִי" (Answer my groaning when I knock at Your doors) echoes the psalmist's call for divine response in Psalm 4:2. This creates a connection between the sick person's suffering and David's distress, positioning illness as a form of spiritual distress requiring divine attention and mercy. | Cf. Psalm 19:15 — The phrase "פְּדֵנִי מֵעֲוֹנִי צוּר וְגוֹאֲלִי" (Redeem me from my iniquity, Rock of my glory) mirrors the imagery in Psalm 19:15 where God is addressed as "rock and redeemer." This creates a connection between the sick person's request for redemption from sin and David's prayer, establishing the theological framework where suffering provides an opportunity to address sin and seek divine redemption.

[iii] This is a header indicating the afternoon (Mincha) prayer service specifically for Thursday in the prayer sequence of Ma'avar Yabok.

[iv] These are standardized opening verses beginning with "Ana Hashem" (Please, O LORD) that appear at the beginning of each of Ma'avar Yabok's eight prayer sequences for the sick and dying.

[v] This refers to Psalm 118, which begins with "Hodu L'Hashem" (Give thanks to the LORD). The notation "תהלים ס מן קי״ח" appears to indicate "Psalm 118" with "ס" possibly being an abbreviation for "סימן" (mark/section).

[vi] This indicates that the text is part of the eighth liturgical order (Seder Het) in Ma'avar Yabok's system of structured prayer sequences for the sick and dying.

[vii] This phrase from Deuteronomy 3:22 contains divine reassurance that God will fight Israel's battles, which would be particularly comforting to the sick or dying person.

יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים הָאֵל
הַנֶּאֱמָן שֹׁמֵר הַבְּרִית וְהַחֶסֶד
לְאֹהֲבָיו וּלְשֹׁמְרֵי מִצְוֹתָיו לְאֶלֶף
דּוֹר: [i] וַאֲהֵבְךָ וּבֵרַכְךָ וְהִרְבֶּךָ
וּבֵרַךְ פְּרִי בִטְנְךָ וּפְרִי אַדְמָתֶךָ
דְּגָנְךָ וְתִירֹשְׁךָ וְיִצְהָרֶךָ שְׁגַר
אֲלָפֶיךָ [ii] וְעַשְׁתְּרֹת צֹאנֶךָ עַל
הָאֲדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּע לַאֲבֹתֶיךָ לָתֵת
לָךְ: בָּרוּךְ תִּהְיֶה מִכָּל הָעַמִּים לֹא
יִהְיֶה בְךָ עָקָר וַעֲקָרָה וּבִבְהֶמְתֶּךָ:
וְנָתַתִּי עֵשֶׂב בְּשָׂדְךָ לִבְהֶמְתֶּךָ
וְאָכַלְתָּ וְשָׂבָעְתָּ: לֹא יִתְיַצֵּב אִישׁ
בְּפָנֶיכֶם פַּחְדְּכֶם וּמוֹרַאֲכֶם יִתֵּן יְיָ
אֱלֹהֵיכֶם עַל פְּנֵי כָל הָאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר
תִּדְרְכוּ בָהּ כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר לָכֶם: וְלֹא
אָבָה יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ לִשְׁמֹעַ אֶל בִּלְעָם
וַיַּהֲפֹךְ יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ לְךָ אֶת הַקְּלָלָה
לִבְרָכָה [iii] כִּי אֲהֵבְךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ: [iv]

God, the faithful God, who keeps the covenant and the loving-kindness for those who love Him and keep His commandments, to a thousand generations. And He will love you and bless you and multiply you; He will bless the fruit of your womb and the fruit of your land, your grain, your wine, and your oil, the increase of your cattle and the young of your flock,[A] on the land which He swore to your fathers to give you. You shall be blessed above all peoples; there shall be no barren male or female among you or among your livestock. And I will give grass in your fields for your livestock, and you shall eat and be satisfied. No man shall stand before you; the LORD your God will put the dread and fear of you upon all the land on which you tread, as He has spoken to you. And the LORD your God was not willing to listen to Balaam,[B] and the LORD your God turned the curse into a blessing for you, because the LORD your God loves you.[1]

1635R 1640R 1645R 1650R

(נביאים) בַּיָּמִים הָהֵם וּבָעֵת
הַהִיא נְאֻם יְיָ [v] יְבֻקַּשׁ אֶת עֲוֹן
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֵינֶנּוּ [vi] וְאֶת חַטֹּאת
יְהוּדָה וְלֹא תִמָּצֶאינָה כִּי אֶסְלַח

(Prophets) "In those days and at that time," declares the LORD, "the iniquity of Israel will be sought, but there will be none, and the sins of Judah, but they will not be found, for I will forgive those whom I

1655R

[A] Or: "the offspring of your cattle and the newborns of your flocks" — This alternative more directly captures the reproductive aspect of these Hebrew terms, which specifically refer to newborn livestock. The reproductive imagery may be significant in the context of prayers for healing and continuation of life.

[B] Or: "And the LORD your God refused to heed Balaam" — This alternative emphasizes God's active rejection of Balaam's attempts to curse Israel, rather than merely being 'unwilling' to listen, strengthening the image of divine protection.

[1] The passage concludes by grounding all the promises and protections in divine love, establishing love as the foundation of God's relationship with Israel. This personal expression of divine love would be particularly comforting to someone facing illness or death.

[i] From Deuteronomy 7:9, this emphasizes God's faithfulness to His covenant promises across generations, providing assurance of divine constancy in times of personal distress.

[ii] These terms refer specifically to the offspring of cattle and sheep, representing prosperity through abundant livestock reproduction. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these fertility blessings would resonate symbolically with continuation of life despite facing death.

[iii] This reference to God transforming Balaam's intended curse into a blessing (Deuteronomy 23:6) serves as a powerful metaphor for divine transformation of negative circumstances, especially relevant to illness which might be viewed as a 'curse' that can be transformed through divine love.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Four — This passage exemplifies how Ma'avar Yabok structures healing prayers to follow a spiritual journey from distress through divine protection to ultimate redemption, with verses selected specifically to comfort the sick or dying person. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Memory Note #431 — The compiler of Ma'avar Yabok arranged biblical verses in a consistent pattern designed to lead the sick or dying person through a psychological and spiritual journey from fear to faith, with this passage exemplifying that approach.

[v] These opening words echo prophetic formulas that appear in Jeremiah and other prophetic books, introducing divine declarations about future redemption.

[vi] This passage is from Jeremiah 50:20, part of a prophecy about the restoration of Israel and the fall of Babylon.

לַאֲשֶׁר אֹשֵׁאיר: בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא
אַצְמִיחַ קֶרֶן לְבֵית יִשְׂרָאֵל[i] וּלְךָ
1490 אֶתֵּן פִּתְחוֹן פֶּה בְּתוֹכָם וְיָדְעוּ
כִּי אֲנִי יְיָ: אֲנִי אֶרְעֶה צֹאנִי וַאֲנִי
אַרְבִּיצֵם נְאֻם אֲדֹנָי יְיָ:[ii] וְגִלִּיתִי
לָהֶם עֲתֶרֶת שָׁלוֹם וֶאֱמֶת:[iii] וְנָתַן
עֵץ הַשָּׂדֶה אֶת פִּרְיוֹ[iv] וְהָאָרֶץ תִּתֵּן
1495 יְבוּלָהּ וְהָיוּ עַל אַדְמָתָם לָבֶטַח
וְיָדְעוּ כִּי אֲנִי יְיָ בְּשָׁבְרִי אֶת מֹטוֹת
עֻלָּם[v] וְהַצַּלְתִּים מִיַּד הָעֹבְדִים
בָּהֶם: וְהַצַּלְתִּיךְ בַּיּוֹם הַהוּא
נְאֻם יְיָ[vi] וְלֹא תִנָּתֵן בְּיַד הָאֲנָשִׁים
1500 אֲשֶׁר אַתָּה גָּוֹר מִפְּנֵיהֶם: וְזָרַקְתִּי
עֲלֵיכֶם מַיִם טְהוֹרִים[vii] וּטְהַרְתֶּם
מִכֹּל טֻמְאוֹתֵיכֶם וּמִכָּל גִּלּוּלֵיכֶם
אֲטַהֵר אֶתְכֶם: וְהוֹשַׁעְתִּי אֶתְכֶם
מִכֹּל טֻמְאוֹתֵיכֶם[viii] וְקָרָאתִי אֶל

leave as a remnant.[1] On that day I will cause a horn to sprout for the house of Israel,[2] and I will give you an opening of the mouth among them,[3] and they will know that I am the LORD. I Myself will shepherd 1660R
My flock,[4] and I Myself will make them lie down," declares the Lord GOD. "And I will reveal to them an abundance of peace and truth.[A] The tree of the field will yield its fruit, and the earth will give its produce, and they will dwell securely on their land. 1665R
Then they will know that I am the LORD, when I break the bars of their yoke[B] and deliver them from the hand of those who enslaved them. I will deliver you on that day," declares the LORD, "and you will not be given into the hand of the men whom you 1670R fear.[C] I will sprinkle clean water upon you,[5] and you will be cleansed; from all your impurities and from all your idols I will purify you. I will save you

[A] Or: "And I will uncover for them a wealth of peace and truth" — The verb 'גִּלִּיתִי' has connotations of uncovering or revealing something that was previously hidden, which adds nuance to this promise of divine blessing.

[B] Or: "when I shatter the wooden crosspieces of their yoke" — This more specific translation emphasizes the physical components of the yoke being broken, highlighting the completeness of the liberation being promised.

[C] Or: "and you will not be handed over to the men before whom you tremble" — The verb 'גָּוֹר' suggests intense fear or dread rather than mere concern, conveying the emotional impact of facing powerful enemies.

[1] The concept of a 'remnant' (שארית/שאר) is significant in prophetic literature, referring to the survivors of catastrophe who will form the nucleus of a restored people.

[2] The Hebrew 'קֶרֶן' (horn) is a symbol of strength and power in biblical imagery. This prophecy suggests divine restoration of Israel's strength and dignity after a period of weakness.

[3] The phrase 'פִּתְחוֹן פֶּה' (opening of the mouth) refers to the ability to speak freely, especially in vindication after having been silenced or disbelieved.

[4] This divine shepherd imagery contrasts with the failed human leadership described earlier in Ezekiel 34, emphasizing God's direct intervention when human leaders fail.

[5] This imagery evokes ritual purification practices in ancient Israel, particularly the sprinkling of water mixed with ashes of the red heifer for purification from contact with the dead (Numbers 19).

[i] This phrase is from Ezekiel 29:21, where the 'horn' (קֶרֶן) symbolizes power, strength, and leadership—often interpreted as referring to a messianic figure or national restoration.

[ii] This verse comes from Ezekiel 34:15, part of an extended metaphor where God promises to be the shepherd of Israel after condemning the nation's negligent human leaders.

[iii] This appears to be an adaptation of a biblical phrase, with 'עֲתֶרֶת' (abundance/wealth) being a less common term in biblical Hebrew but appearing in rabbinic literature.

[iv] This passage draws from Ezekiel 34:27, describing the agricultural abundance that will accompany divine restoration.

[v] This phrase from Ezekiel 34:27 uses the metaphor of breaking the bars of a yoke, representing liberation from oppression or slavery.

[vi] This phrase comes from Jeremiah 39:17, originally addressed to Ebed-Melech the Ethiopian who had rescued Jeremiah from the cistern.

[vii] This verse from Ezekiel 36:25 uses the metaphor of ritual purification to describe spiritual cleansing and moral renewal.

[viii] This appears to be an adaptation of Ezekiel 36:29, which begins with a similar phrase but continues differently in the biblical text.

1505 הַדָּגָן וְהִרְבֵּיתִי אֹתוֹ וְלֹא אֶתֵּן
עֲלֵיכֶם רָעָב: [i]

from all your impurities, and I will call to the grain and make it abundant,[1] and I will not bring famine upon you." 1675R

(תהלים) כִּי אֵפֶר כַּלֶּחֶם אָכָלְתִּי
וְשִׁקָּוַי בִּבְכִי מָסָכְתִּי: מִקּוֹל אַנְחָתִי
דָּבְקָה עַצְמִי לִבְשָׂרִי: אֹמַר אֵלִי
1510 אַל תַּעֲלֵנִי בַּחֲצִי יָמָי בְּדוֹר דּוֹרִים
שְׁנוֹתֶיךָ: רַחוּם וְחַנּוּן יְהוָה אֶרֶךְ
אַפַּיִם וְרַב חָסֶד: לֹא לָנֶצַח יָרִיב
וְלֹא לְעוֹלָם יִטּוֹר: לֹא כַחֲטָאֵינוּ
עָשָׂה לָנוּ וְלֹא כַעֲוֹנֹתֵינוּ גָּמַל
1515 עָלֵינוּ: כִּי כִגְבֹהַּ שָׁמַיִם עַל הָאָרֶץ
גָּבַר חַסְדּוֹ עַל יְרֵאָיו: כְּרַחֵם אָב
עַל בָּנִים רִחַם יְיָ עַל יְרֵאָיו: בָּרְכוּ
יְיָ מַלְאָכָיו גִּבֹּרֵי כֹחַ עֹשֵׂי דְבָרוֹ
לִשְׁמֹעַ בְּקוֹל דְּבָרוֹ: בָּרְכוּ יְיָ כָּל
1520 צְבָאָיו מְשָׁרְתָיו עֹשֵׂי רְצוֹנוֹ: בָּרְכוּ
יְהוָה כָּל מַעֲשָׂיו בְּכָל מְקוֹמוֹת
מֶמְשַׁלְתּוֹ בָּרְכִי נַפְשִׁי אֶת יְהוָה:
יְהִי כְבוֹד יְיָ לְעוֹלָם יִשְׂמַח יְיָ
בְּמַעֲשָׂיו: הוֹדוּ לַיהוָה קִרְאוּ
1525 בִשְׁמוֹ הוֹדִיעוּ בָעַמִּים עֲלִילוֹתָיו:
יֵעָרֵב עָלָיו שִׂיחִי אָנֹכִי אֶשְׂמַח
בַּיהוָה: זָכְרֵנִי יְהוָה בִּרְצוֹן עַמֶּךָ
פָּקְדֵנִי בִישׁוּעָתֶךָ: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל מִן הָעוֹלָם וְעַד הָעוֹלָם
1530 וְאָמַר כָּל הָעָם אָמֵן הַלְלוּיָהּ:

(Psalms) For I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping.[2] Because of my groaning my bones cleave to my flesh. I say, "My God, do not take me away in the midst of my days; Your years are throughout all generations." The LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger and abounding in steadfast love. He will not always strive,[3] nor will He keep His anger forever. He has not dealt with us according to our sins, nor repaid us according to our iniquities. For as the heavens are high above the earth, so great is His steadfast love toward those who fear Him. As a father has compassion on his children, so the LORD has compassion on those who fear Him. Bless the LORD, you His angels, mighty in strength, who perform His word,[4] hearkening to the voice of His word. Bless the LORD, all His hosts, His ministers who do His will. Bless the LORD, all His works, in all places of His dominion. Bless the LORD, O my soul. May the glory of the LORD endure forever; may the LORD rejoice in His works. Give thanks to the LORD, call upon His name; make known His deeds among the peoples. May my meditation be pleasing to Him; I will rejoice in the LORD. Remember me, O LORD, with the favor You show to 1680R 1685R 1690R 1695R 1700R

[1] This personification of grain responding to divine command highlights God's sovereignty over nature and ability to provide abundance, a key theme in restoration prophecies.

[2] This powerful image of tears mixing with drink conveys overwhelming grief where sorrow infiltrates even basic sustenance. The Hebrew phrase suggests that tears have become a constant accompaniment to life's necessities.

[3] The Hebrew verb יָרִיב (yariv) implies legal contention or dispute, suggesting that God does not perpetually maintain a state of judgment against humans, but rather limits the duration of divine rebuke.

[4] The description of angels emphasizes their role as agents of divine will rather than independent powers, contrasting with non-Jewish conceptions of angels that were prevalent in the ancient Near East.

[i] Cf. Ezekiel 34 — This passage draws heavily from Ezekiel's shepherd metaphor to communicate God's direct care for His people after human leadership has failed. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses would reassure the sick or dying person that God's care extends beyond earthly helpers. | Cf. Ezekiel 36:25-29 — The purification imagery would be particularly meaningful in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, where spiritual cleansing before death is a central concern. The sprinkling of water symbolizes divine grace that purifies beyond what human efforts can accomplish. | Cf. Jeremiah 50:20 — This reference to complete forgiveness ('iniquity will be sought but there will be none') offers profound comfort to those approaching death, suggesting that divine mercy can completely erase sin, leaving no trace for accusation. | Cf. Jeremiah 39:17-18 — The original context of this verse shows God's protection extending even to non-Israelites who act righteously. In Ma'avar Yabok, this would suggest that divine deliverance is available to all who trust in God, regardless of status or background.

יֹאמְרוּ נְאוּלֵי יְיָ אֲשֶׁר גְּאָלָם מִיַּד
צָר: יוֹדוּ לַיְיָ חַסְדּוֹ וְנִפְלְאוֹתָיו
לִבְנֵי אָדָם: כִּי הִשְׂבִּיעַ נֶפֶשׁ שֹׁקֵקָה
וְנֶפֶשׁ רְעֵבָה מִלֵּא טוֹב: כִּי שִׁבַּר
1535 דַּלְתוֹת נְחֹשֶׁת וּבְרִיחֵי בַרְזֶל
גִּדַּע: יִשְׁלַח דְּבָרוֹ וְיִרְפָּאֵם וימלט
מִשְּׁחִיתוֹתָם: יוֹדוּ לַיְיָ חַסְדּוֹ וְנִפְלְאוֹתָיו
וַיָּשֶׂם כַּצֹּאן מִשְׁפָּחוֹת: בֵּאלֹהִים
נַעֲשֶׂה חָיִל וְהוּא יָבוּס צָרֵינוּ:
1540 עָזְרֵנִי יְהוָה אֱלָהָי הוֹשִׁיעֵנִי
כְּחַסְדֶּךָ: יְקַלְלוּ הֵמָּה וְאַתָּה
תְּבָרֵךְ קָמוּ וַיֵּבֹשׁוּ וְעַבְדְּךָ יִשְׂמָח:
נִשְׁבַּע יְהוָה וְלֹא יִנָּחֵם אַתָּה כֹהֵן
לְעוֹלָם עַל דִּבְרָתִי מַלְכִּי צֶדֶק:
1545 כִּי יַעֲמֹד לִימִין אֶבְיוֹן לְהוֹשִׁיעַ
מִשְׁפְּטֵי נַפְשׁוֹ: פְּדוּת שָׁלַח לְעַמּוֹ
צִוָּה לְעוֹלָם בְּרִיתוֹ קָדוֹשׁ וְנוֹרָא
שְׁמוֹ: זָרַח בַּחֹשֶׁךְ אוֹר לַיְשָׁרִים
חַנּוּן וְרַחוּם וְצַדִּיק: מְקִימִי מֵעָפָר
1550 דָּל מֵאַשְׁפֹּת יָרִים אֶבְיוֹן: הַהֹפְכִי
הַצּוּר אֲגַם מָיִם חַלָּמִישׁ לְמַעְיְנוֹ
מָיִם: בֵּית אַהֲרֹן בִּטְחוּ בַיהוָה
עֶזְרָם וּמָגִנָּם הוּא: יְיָ זְכָרָנוּ יְבָרֵךְ
יְבָרֵךְ אֶת בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל יְבָרֵךְ אֶת
1555 [i] בֵּית אַהֲרֹן:

Your people; visit me with Your salvation. Blessed be the LORD, God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting, and let all the people say, "Amen. Hallelujah." Let the redeemed of the LORD say so, whom He has redeemed from the hand of the adversary. 1705R
Let them give thanks to the LORD for His steadfast love, and for His wonderful works to the children of men. For He satisfies the longing soul,[1] and fills the hungry soul with goodness. For He has broken the gates of bronze, and cut the bars of iron in two. He 1710R sends forth His word and heals them, and delivers them from their destructions.[A] He sets the needy securely on high, away from affliction, and makes their families like a flock. Through God we shall do valiantly,[B] and it is He who will tread down our 1715R adversaries. Help me, O LORD my God; save me according to Your steadfast love. Let them curse, but You bless;[C] when they arise, they will be put to shame, but Your servant will rejoice. The LORD has sworn and will not change His mind, "You are a 1720R priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek." For He stands at the right hand of the needy, to save him from those who condemn his soul.[2] He has sent redemption to His people; He has commanded His covenant forever; holy and awesome is His name. 1725R Light dawns in the darkness for the upright; He is [A] Or: "and rescues them from their deadly traps" — The Hebrew term מִשְּׁחִיתוֹתָם (shechitotam) has connotations of pits or traps set for destruction, not just abstract destruction. This alternate captures the sense of active deadly peril from which God rescues the sufferer.

[B] Or: "Through God we shall gain strength" — The Hebrew חַיִל (chayil) can mean 'strength' or 'army' as well as 'valor.' In the context of illness, 'gaining strength' might be more immediately relevant than military valor, though both capture aspects of the original meaning.

[C] Or: "They may curse, but You will bless" — The Hebrew could be rendered as a contrast between human action and divine response rather than as an imperative. This alternative better expresses confidence in God's blessing despite human negativity.

[1] The Hebrew נֶפֶשׁ שֹׁקֵקָה (nefesh shokeikah) depicts a soul in a state of intense yearning or thirst, suggesting spiritual as well as physical hunger that only divine satisfaction can quench.

[2] The phrase מִשְׁפְּטֵי נַפְשׁוֹ (mishoftei nafsho) can refer both to human judges who condemn unjustly and to spiritual accusers who bring charges against the soul in the divine court, a concept developed extensively in later Jewish mysticism.

[i] Cf. Psalm 102 — These verses from Psalm 102 express deep physical and emotional suffering, with the psalmist describing consuming ashes like bread and mixing tears with drink, suggesting extreme distress. This prayer would provide comfort to the sick by showing that even the biblical psalmist experienced profound suffering while maintaining faith. | Cf. Psalm 103 — These verses emphasize divine compassion and forgiveness, serving as a counterbalance to the suffering expressed in the opening verses. They would comfort the sick by affirming God's merciful nature and boundless love, suggesting that current afflictions are not punishments proportional to sins. | Cf. Psalm 104 — This verse shifts from personal distress to divine praise, helping the ill person transcend their immediate suffering by contemplating God's eternal glory. | Cf. Psalm 105 — This verse encourages the sick person to maintain gratitude even in suffering, suggesting that divine deliverance should be proclaimed to others. | Cf. Psalm 106 — These verses express gracious, merciful, and righteous. He raises the poor from the dust, and lifts the needy from the ash heap. He turns the rock into a pool of water, the flint into a fountain of waters. O house of Aaron, trust in the 1730R

LORD; He is their help and their shield. The LORD has been mindful of us; He will bless us; He will bless the house of Israel; He will bless the house of Aaron.

(בתובים) וְתִגְזַר אֹומֶר וְיָקָם לָךְ[i] וְעַל דְּרָכֶיךָ נָגַהּ אוֹר: יְהִי כְרָשָׁע אֹיְבִי וּמִתְקוֹמְמַי כְּעַוָּל:[ii] וַיְהִי לְאֵבֶל כִּנֹּרִי וְעֻגָבִי
1560 לְקוֹל בֹּכִים:[iii] וַיְחָנֵּנוּ וַיֹּאמֶר פְּדָעֵהוּ מֵרֶדֶת שָׁחַת מָצָאתִי כֹפֶר:[iv] אִם עַל שַׁדַּי יִתְעַנָּג יִקְרָא אֱלוֹהַּ בְּכָל עֵת: פָּדָה

(Writings) You will decree a matter, and it will be established for you;[1] and light will shine upon your 1735R ways. May my enemy be as the wicked, and my adversary as the unrighteous. My harp has turned to mourning, and my flute to the voice of those who weep. But He is gracious to him and says, "Deliver him from going down to the pit;[A] I have found a 1740R ransom."[B] If he takes delight in the Almighty, he

[A] Or: "Redeem him from descending to the grave" — The term 'שָׁחַת' can refer to both a pit (physical) and corruption/destruction (spiritual). This alternate emphasizes the concrete image of the grave, which might be more immediately relevant in a deathbed context.

[B] Or: "I have found atonement" — The Hebrew 'כֹּפֶר' can mean both ransom (payment) and atonement (spiritual reconciliation). In Ma'avar Yabok's theological context, the spiritual dimension of atonement may be more appropriate.

[1] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse takes on special significance as it suggests the power of righteous speech to create spiritual realities, particularly important at the deathbed where proper words are believed to facilitate the soul's journey.

longing for God's favorable attention and salvation, appropriate for someone facing illness who seeks divine intervention. | Cf. Psalm 107 — These verses emphasize God's power to redeem, heal, and deliver, providing hope to the ill person that God can heal both physical and spiritual afflictions. | Cf. Psalm 108 — This verse portrays illness metaphorically as an enemy that God will help overcome, offering encouragement to the sick. | Cf. Psalm 109 — These verses would comfort the sick by suggesting that while others might abandon or even blame them for their illness, God's blessing supersedes human judgment. | Cf. Psalm 110 — The reference to Melchizedek introduces the concept of eternal priesthood, suggesting divine intercession on behalf of the suffering individual. | Cf. Psalm 111 — This verse reminds the ill person that God's covenant commitment remains valid even during suffering, offering security in divine faithfulness. | Cf. Psalm 112 — This verse offers hope that even in the darkness of illness, divine light and grace remain accessible to the righteous. | Cf. Psalm 113 — These verses metaphorically represent illness as a state of being cast down, with the promise that God can elevate even those in the most degraded conditions. | Cf. Psalm 114 — This verse uses the metaphor of God transforming rock into water to suggest that God can similarly transform illness into health and suffering into relief. | Cf. Psalm 115 — These concluding verses encourage the ill person to maintain trust in God as helper and protector, with assurance that divine blessing extends to all Israel, including the priestly house of Aaron.

[i] This verse from Job 22:28 is often used in Jewish tradition to emphasize the power of human decree when aligned with divine will. In the context of prayers for the sick or dying, it suggests that righteous speech has creative power.

[ii] From Job 27:7, this verse represents not a vindictive wish but a declaration that one's personal enemies should be judged according to universal standards of justice—those who act wickedly should be recognized as such.

[iii] From Job 30:31, this poignant verse expresses the transformation of instruments of joy into expressions of mourning, reflecting the emotional journey of illness or approaching death.

[iv] This verse from Job 33:24 introduces a powerful shift in the passage—from expressions of suffering to divine intervention and salvation. The term 'כֹּפֶר' (ransom/atonement) has deep theological significance in the context of death and redemption.

נַפְשׁוֹ מֵעֲבֹר בַּשָּׁחַת וְחַיָּתוֹ בָּאוֹר
תִּרְאֶה: [i] לְהָשִׁיב נַפְשׁוֹ מִנִּי שָׁחַת
לֵאוֹר בְּאוֹר הַחַיִּים: [ii] בְּצִדְקָתִי
הֶחֱזַקְתִּי וְלֹא אַרְפֶּהָ לֹא יֶחֱרַף
לִבָּבִי מִיָּמָי: [iii] אַף אָמָנָם אֵל לֹא
יַרְשִׁיעַ וְשַׁדַּי לֹא יַעֲוֹת מִשְׁפָּט: הֵן
אֵל בַּבִּיר וְלֹא יִמְאָס בַּבִּיר כֹּחַ
לֵב: לֹא יְחַיֶּה רָשָׁע וּמִשְׁפַּט עֲנִיִּים
יִתֵּן: [iv] [v]

will call upon God at all times. He has redeemed his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light. To restore his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.[1] I hold fast to my righteousness and will not let it go; my heart shall not reproach me as long as I live.[2] Surely God will not act wickedly, and the Almighty will not pervert justice. Behold, God is mighty but does not despise; He is mighty in strength of understanding.[3] He does not preserve the life of the wicked, but gives justice to the afflicted. 1745R 1750R

שְׁעֵנִי נָא רְצֵנִי אֵל אֱמוּנָה. [vi] וְתִיטַב
לָךְ תְּשׁוּרַת מַהֲלָלַי תְּנַהֲלֵנִי בְּעוֹד
מְדַת צְבָאַי. [vii] וְתִרְעֵנִי יְמֵי חֶלְדִּי

Please support me and accept me, God of faithfulness.[A] May my offering of praise be pleasing to You.[B] Guide me throughout the measure of my 1755R

[A] Or: "Support me now, find favor in me, God of faithfulness" — This alternate translation preserves the pleading nature of 'נָא' (now/please) more explicitly and renders 'רְצֵנִי' with the idiom 'find favor' which might better capture the sense of divine acceptance.

[B] Or: "May the gift of my praise be good in Your sight" — This alternative more literally translates 'תְּשׁוּרַת' as 'gift' rather than 'offering' and preserves the Hebrew idiom of something being 'good in one's eyes/sight'.

[1] The 'light of the living' (אוֹר הַחַיִּים) carries dual meaning in Jewish mystical thought—referring both to restoration of physical life and to the spiritual illumination experienced by the soul in the afterlife.

[2] This declaration of moral integrity connects to Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation for death, including confession (vidui) to ensure the heart is free from reproach.

[3] The phrase 'כַּבִּיר כֹּחַ לֵב' literally 'mighty in strength of heart/mind' emphasizes that divine power includes perfect discernment and judgment, not merely physical strength.

[i] This verse from Job 33:28 uses the metaphor of redemption from 'the pit' (שחת), which can refer to both physical death and spiritual destruction. The contrast between the pit and light represents the transition from death to life.

[ii] From Job 33:30, this verse develops the light metaphor further with the powerful phrase 'אוֹר הַחַיִּים' (light of the living), suggesting both physical recovery and spiritual illumination.

[iii] Job 27:6 expresses steadfast moral integrity even in the face of suffering, a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok which emphasizes the spiritual importance of maintaining righteousness while confronting mortality.

[iv] This concluding verse from Job 36:6 affirms divine justice, providing comfort that ultimately God's judgment prevails—a key theological foundation for those facing death or grieving.

[v] Cf. Psalms 30 — Both texts establish a pattern of movement from descent to ascent, from darkness to light, which is central to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of illness and death as spiritual transitions rather than mere endings. | Cf. Zohar — The inclusion of Job 22:28 ('You will decree a matter...') in this prayer sequence reflects the kabbalistic belief that proper speech at the moment of death has creative power in determining the soul's journey. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This passage exemplifies the therapeutic structure seen throughout Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences: acknowledgment of distress, articulation of divine response, and affirmation of ultimate justice and redemption.

[vi] The phrase 'God of faithfulness' (אֵל אֱמוּנָה) appears in Deuteronomy 32:4, where God is described as 'the Rock, his work is perfect, for all his ways are justice; a God of faithfulness and without iniquity, just and upright is he.' This biblical allusion reinforces the supplicant's trust in God's reliability even in the face of mortality.

[vii] The term 'צְבָאַי' derives from a root meaning 'army' or 'host' and can refer to one's appointed service or time on earth. Job 7:1 uses the related term 'צָבָא' to describe life as a period of hard service. This military metaphor suggests the supplicant views life as a period of appointed duty with a finite duration.

וְחֶדְלִי:[ii i] time,[A] and shepherd me through the days of my existence and my passing.[B]

סדר יום ששי[iii] Order of Friday

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[iv] ואח״כ יתחיל מזמור שיר למעלות אשא עיני אל ההרים וגו׳ תהלים סי׳ קכ״א[v] סדר י׳[vi] אח״כ יאמר זה:[vii] One should recite the verses beginning with "Ana Hashem"[1] (Please, O LORD), and afterward begin the psalm "A Song of Ascents: I will lift up my eyes to the mountains, etc." (Psalm 121). [Follow] the tenth order,[2] after which one should say this:[3] 1760R

[A] Or: "Lead me throughout the span of my service" — The term 'צְבָאִי' comes from a root related to 'army' or 'service' and can be understood as one's appointed service or time on earth. This alternate captures that nuance more explicitly.

[B] Or: "and tend to me through the days of my fleeting life and my cessation" — This translation emphasizes the transitory nature implied in 'חֶלְדִּי' (from a root suggesting temporariness) and renders 'חֶדְלִי' more directly as 'cessation' rather than the euphemistic 'passing'.

[1] This is a standard liturgical instruction that appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok, indicating that the prayer sequence should begin with verses that start with "Please, O LORD" (אנא ה׳).

[2] While most of Ma'avar Yabok contains eight prayer sequences (sedarim), this reference to a "tenth order" (סדר י׳) suggests either an additional sequence not explicitly outlined elsewhere, or possibly refers to the tenth component within a particular sequence.

[3] This indicates that the text that would follow (not included in this segment) contains additional prayers or verses to be recited after Psalm 121.

[i] The pairing of 'חֶלְדִּי' (my lifetime/existence) with 'חֶדְלִי' (my cessation/death) creates a poetic expression encompassing the entirety of human experience from life to death. The root of 'חֶלֶד' suggests transience or fleeting existence, while 'חֶדֶל' implies cessation or coming to an end. Together they form a merism (a figure of speech using contrasting parts to refer to a whole) representing the complete human journey.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 23 — The prayer uses the same pastoral metaphor of God as shepherd ('תְּרָעֵנִי'—'shepherd me') found in Psalm 23. This creates a direct connection to the biblical psalm of comfort and divine protection, suggesting the supplicant sees themselves in need of the same divine guidance and care that David described. | Cf. Psalm 31:15 — The phrase 'בְּעוֹד מַדַּת צְבָאִי' (throughout the measure of my time) echoes the sentiment in Psalm 31:15 where the psalmist acknowledges that his times/destiny are in God's control. Both texts express surrender to divine guidance through the full course of one's life. | Cf. Job 7:1 — The term 'צְבָא' (my service/time) alludes to Job's description of life as 'צָבָא' (hard service/warfare), suggesting the prayer's author views life as a period of appointed service with struggles that require divine guidance.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This heading marks the beginning of the Friday prayer sequence in the structured liturgical system organized by days of the week. Each day has specific prayers, psalms, and biblical verses recommended for the sick and dying, with special spiritual intentions (kavanot) corresponding to that day's unique energies.

[iv] "Ana Hashem" (Please, O LORD) verses serve as a standard opening for each of the eight prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok, establishing a consistent ritual framework.

[v] Psalm 121, "I lift up my eyes to the mountains," was considered especially appropriate for the sick and dying due to its themes of divine protection. In Ma'avar Yabok, it appears in several prayer sequences and was specifically recommended to be recited three times as a protective measure.

[vi] This refers to the tenth liturgical sequence (Seder Yod) in Ma'avar Yabok's structured prayer system for the sick and dying.

[vii] Cf. Psalm 121 — This psalm was considered particularly appropriate for the sick and dying because of its themes of divine protection. Its declaration that 'the LORD is your keeper' and 'the LORD will keep you from all evil' would have been especially comforting to someone facing illness or death. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok prayer sequences — This passage follows the established pattern of Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences, showing how the author created a systematic framework for prayers for the sick and dying that was consistent across different days of the week.

(תורה) וַנִּצְעַק אֶל יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי
אֲבֹתֵינוּ[i] וַיִּשְׁמַע יְיָ אֶת קֹלֵנוּ
וַיַּרְא אֶת עָנְיֵנוּ וְאֶת עֲמָלֵנוּ וְאֶת
לַחֲצֵנוּ: הַשְׁקִיפָה מִמְּעוֹן קָדְשְׁךָ
מִן הַשָּׁמַיִם[ii] וּבָרֵךְ אֶת עַמְּךָ אֶת
יִשְׂרָאֵל וְאֶת הָאֲדָמָה אֲשֶׁר נָתָתָה
לָנוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּעְתָּ לַאֲבֹתֵינוּ אֶרֶץ
זָבַת חָלָב וּדְבָשׁ:[iii] וְשָׂמַחְתָּ בְכָל
הַטּוֹב אֲשֶׁר נָתַן לְךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ
וּלְבֵיתֶךָ אַתָּה וְהַלֵּוִי וְהַגֵּר אֲשֶׁר
בְּקִרְבֶּךָ: וּלְתִתְךָ עֶלְיוֹן עַל כָּל
הַגּוֹיִם אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְתִהְלָה וּלְשֵׁם
וּלְתִפְאֶרֶת וְלִהְיוֹתְךָ עַם קָדֹשׁ
לַיְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ כַּאֲשֶׁר דִּבֶּר: וּבָאוּ
עָלֶיךָ כָּל הַבְּרָכוֹת הָאֵלֶּה וְהִשִּׂיגֻךָ
כִּי תִשְׁמַע בְּקוֹל יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ:
בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה בָּעִיר וּבָרוּךְ אַתָּה
בַּשָּׂדֶה: בָּרוּךְ פְּרִי בִטְנְךָ וּפְרִי
אַדְמָתְךָ וּפְרִי בְהֶמְתֶּךָ שְׁגַר אֲלָפֶיךָ
וְעַשְׁתְּרוֹת צֹאנֶךָ:[iv] בָּרוּךְ טַנְאֲךָ
וּמִשְׁאַרְתֶּךָ:[v]

We cried out to the LORD, God of our fathers, and the LORD heard our voice and saw our affliction, 1765R our toil, and our oppression. Look down from Your holy dwelling, from heaven,[A] and bless Your people Israel and the soil that You have given us, as You swore to our fathers—a land flowing with milk and honey.[1] You shall rejoice in all the good that the 1770R
LORD your God has given to you and to your household, you and the Levite and the stranger who is in your midst. And to make you highest above all the nations[B] that He has made, for praise, for renown, and for glory, and for you to be a holy people to the 1775R
LORD your God, as He has spoken. And all these blessings shall come upon you and overtake you,[2] if you obey the voice of the LORD your God. Blessed shall you be in the city, and blessed shall you be in the field. Blessed shall be the fruit of your womb, 1780R the fruit of your ground, and the fruit of your livestock, the increase of your cattle and the young of your flock.[3] Blessed shall be your basket and your kneading bowl.

[A] Or: "Gaze down from Your holy habitation in heaven" — This alternative captures the formal, reverential tone of the Hebrew with 'habitation' instead of 'dwelling,' which might better reflect the liturgical context. However, the original translation is more direct and accessible.

[B] Or: "And to set you supreme over all the nations" — This alternative uses 'supreme' to capture the elevated status implied by 'elyon' (highest/supreme), which has theological resonance in Jewish mystical thought. However, 'highest' in the original translation is more literal and directly tied to the Hebrew.

[1] This familiar biblical phrase refers to the abundance and fertility of the Promised Land. In the context of a prayer for healing, it metaphorically represents the restoration to a state of wholeness and prosperity that the sick person seeks.

[2] The Hebrew 'v'hisigucha' (and overtake you) presents the striking image of blessings actively pursuing the faithful, suggesting that divine favor will find the righteous even if they cannot actively seek it—a comforting thought for the bedridden or severely ill.

[3] The Hebrew terms 'shegar alafecha' and 'ashterot tzonecha' specifically refer to newborn livestock, emphasizing not just possession but growth and renewal—themes particularly relevant to prayer for recovery from illness.

[i] This opening verse establishes the efficacy of prayer in times of distress, emphasizing that God hears the cries of the suffering. It serves as a powerful beginning for a prayer sequence directed toward healing.

[ii] The Hebrew word 'hashkifah' (look down) typically carries negative connotations in biblical usage, except when paired with 'mimaon kodshecha' (from Your holy dwelling), where it transforms into a request for divine blessing, as noted in rabbinic interpretation.

[iii] The appeal to God's sworn promise connects the supplicant's request to divine covenant obligations, strengthening the prayer by reminding God of His own commitments.

[iv] The terms 'shegar alafecha' and 'ashterot tzonecha' are specialized terms for newborn cattle and sheep respectively, representing fertility and increase—metaphorically applicable to recovery and renewal of health.

[v] Cf. Deuteronomy 26:7 — This opening verse from the Israelite's declaration upon bringing first fruits establishes a theological foundation that God responds to prayer, particularly in times of distress. In Ma'avar Yabok, this serves as a powerful opening for a prayer sequence for the sick,

(נביאים) לְכוּ וְנָשׁוּבָה אֶל
יְיָ כִּי הוּא טָרָף וְיִרְפָּאֵנוּ יַךְ
וַיַּחְבְּשֵׁנוּ: יְחַיֵּנוּ מִיָּמִים בַּיּוֹם
הַשְּׁלִישִׁי יְקִמֵנוּ וְנִחְיֶה לְפָנָיו:
וְנֵדְעָה נִרְדְּפָה לָדַעַת אֶת יְהוָה
כְּשַׁחַר נָכוֹן מוֹצָאוֹ וְיָבוֹא כַגֶּשֶׁם
לָנוּ כְּמַלְקוֹשׁ יוֹרֶה אָרֶץ: אֶהְיֶה
כַטַּל לְיִשְׂרָאֵל יִפְרַח כַּשּׁוֹשַׁנָּה
וְיַךְ שָׁרָשָׁיו כַּלְּבָנוֹן: וְקִרְעוּ
לְבַבְכֶם וְאַל בִּגְדֵיכֶם וְשׁוּבוּ אֶל
יְיָ אֱלֹהֵיכֶם כִּי חַנּוּן וְרַחוּם הוּא
אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם וְרַב חֶסֶד וְנִחָם עַל
הָרָעָה: נִחַם יְיָ עַל וֹאת לֹא תִהְיֶה
אָמַר יְיָ: וַאֲכַלְתֶּם אָכוֹל וְשָׂבוֹעַ
וְהִלַּלְתֶּם אֶת שֵׁם יְיָ אֱלֹהֵיכֶם אֲשֶׁר
עָשָׂה עִמָּכֶם לְהַפְלִיא וְלֹא יֵבֹשׁוּ
עַמִּי לְעוֹלָם: קָרָאתִי מִצָּרָה לִי
אֶל יְיָ וַיַּעֲנֵנִי מֶמֶּטֶן שְׁאוֹל שִׁוַּעְתִּי

Come, let us return to the LORD, for He has 1785R torn[A] but He will heal us;[1] He has struck but He will bind our wounds. He will revive us after two days; on the third day He will raise us up, and we shall live before Him. Let us know, let us pursue knowledge of the LORD; His going forth is as certain 1790R as the dawn;[B] and He will come to us like the rain, like the latter rain that waters the earth.[2] I will be like dew to Israel; he will blossom like the lily, and strike his roots like Lebanon.[C] Rend your hearts and not your garments, and return to the LORD your 1795R
God, for He is gracious and compassionate,[D] slow to anger, abounding in kindness, and relenting of evil.[3] The LORD has relented concerning this; it shall not be, says the LORD. You shall eat in plenty and be satisfied, and you shall praise the name of 1800R the LORD your God who has dealt wondrously with you; and My people shall never be put to shame.[4] I

[A] Or: "wounded" — The Hebrew טָרָף can be translated as either 'torn' or 'wounded.' While 'torn' is more literal and carries the vivid imagery of being rent apart, 'wounded' might be more immediately comprehensible in modern English when referring to divine chastisement that leads to healing.

[B] Or: "His appearance is as established as the dawn" — The Hebrew נָכוֹן can mean 'established,' 'certain,' or 'prepared,' while מוֹצָאוֹ can refer to 'going forth' or 'appearance.' This alternate translation emphasizes the reliability and predictability of divine revelation rather than movement.

[C] Or: "and cast his roots like Lebanon" — The Hebrew verb וְיַךְ in this context refers to sending forth or extending roots rather than striking in a violent sense. 'Cast' might better convey the image of roots spreading outward and downward with strength and stability.

[D] Or: "for He is gracious and merciful" — The Hebrew רַחוּם is often translated as 'merciful' in liturgical contexts, particularly in this formula of divine attributes. While 'compassionate' conveys the emotional aspect well, 'merciful' has a stronger connection to the traditional liturgical rendering of these divine attributes.

[1] This compilation of prophetic verses begins with Hosea 6:1-3, which establishes the theological framework that divine chastisement is purposeful and leads to restoration. This aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's approach to illness as spiritual purification rather than mere punishment.

[2] The metaphors of rain and dew emphasize divine blessing coming from above, representing how divine healing flows downward to those below. This pattern of divine energy descending from higher realms to lower ones is a key concept in the kabbalistic worldview of Ma'avar Yabok.

[3] This section from Joel 2:13 emphasizes divine mercy and forgiveness when approached with sincere repentance, reinforcing Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on confession (vidui) as essential for the sick person's spiritual and physical healing.

[4] This verse from Joel 2:26 shifts from individual healing to communal restoration, suggesting that affirming that God hears the cries of the suffering. | Cf. Deuteronomy 26:15 — This verse completes the spiritual movement begun in the first verse—from crying out in distress to receiving divine blessing. For the sick person, it offers hope that their prayers will be answered with blessing from God's heavenly dwelling. | Cf. Deuteronomy 26:11 — This verse emphasizes the communal aspect of blessing and joy, suggesting that recovery from illness should be celebrated with others, including religious leaders and community members, reflecting Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on communal support during illness. | Cf. Deuteronomy 28:2-5 — These verses from the blessings in Deuteronomy establish that divine favor comes through obedience to God's commands. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, they remind the sick person that healing is connected to spiritual alignment with divine will, encouraging both prayer and proper religious observance.

שָׁמַעְתָּ קוֹלִי:[i] called to the LORD in my distress, and He answered me; from the belly of Sheol[A] I cried out, and You heard my voice.[1] 1805R

(תהלים) שׁוּבִי נַפְשִׁי לִמְנוּחָיְכִי כִּי
יְיָ גָּמַל עָלָיְכִי:[ii] כִּי חִלַּצְתָּ נַפְשִׁי
1625 מִמָּוֶת אֶת עֵינִי מִן דִּמְעָה אֶת רַגְלִי
מִדֶּחִי: כּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת אֶשָּׂא[iii] וּבְשֵׁם
יְיָ אֶקְרָא: כִּי גָבַר עָלֵינוּ חַסְדּוֹ
וֶאֱמֶת יְיָ לְעוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ: יֹאמְרוּ
נָא בֵית אַהֲרֹן כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ:
1630 יְיָ לִי לֹא אִירָא מַה יַּעֲשֶׂה לִי
אָדָם: יְיָ לִי בְּעֹזְרָי וַאֲנִי אֶרְאֶה
בְשֹׂנְאָי: סָבּוּנִי כִדְבוֹרִים דֹּעֲכוּ
כְּאֵשׁ קוֹצִים[iv] בְּשֵׁם יְיָ כִּי אֲמִילַם:

(Psalms) Return, O my soul, to your rest,[2] for the LORD has dealt bountifully with you. For You have delivered my soul from death, my eyes from tears, my feet from stumbling. I will lift up the cup of salvation[3] and call upon the name of the LORD. For His 1810R lovingkindness has prevailed over us, and the truth of the LORD is forever, Hallelujah. Let the house of Aaron now say, "His lovingkindness endures forever." The LORD is with me; I will not fear. What can man do to me? The LORD is with me among those 1815R who help me; Therefore I shall see the downfall of personal recovery is connected to collective redemption. In Ma'avar Yabok, individual healing rituals are frequently placed in the context of Israel's collective salvation.

[A] Or: "from the depths of the grave" — While 'belly of Sheol' is the most literal translation and preserves the biblical imagery, 'depths of the grave' might be more immediately comprehensible to modern readers unfamiliar with the Hebrew concept of Sheol. However, the original translation better preserves the powerful metaphor from Jonah.

[1] The compilation concludes with Jonah's testimony of answered prayer from the depths, creating a therapeutic progression from calling out in distress to experiencing divine response. This pattern of moving from distress to deliverance appears consistently in Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences.

[2] This opening verse addresses the soul directly, personifying it as a distinct entity that can find rest in God. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this has special resonance for those approaching death, as it suggests the soul's return to its divine source.

[3] While literally referring to a ritual cup used in thanksgiving offerings, in Ma'avar Yabok's context this becomes a powerful metaphor for accepting divine judgment with gratitude, even in times of illness or approaching death.

[i] Cf. Hosea 6:1-3 — These opening verses from Hosea establish the theological framework that illness and suffering can be divinely ordained steps toward healing and restoration. Ma'avar Yabok integrates this perspective throughout its approach to illness as potentially beneficial for spiritual purification. | Cf. Joel 2:13 — This verse emphasizes internal repentance over external display, reinforcing Ma'avar Yabok's focus on genuine spiritual preparation through confession (vidui) rather than merely ritual observance. | Cf. Joel 2:18-19, 26 — These verses from Joel promise abundance and divine favor following repentance, supporting the book's view that proper spiritual response to suffering leads to restoration. | Cf. Jonah 2:3 — Jonah's testimony of divine rescue from the depths serves as a powerful conclusion, offering hope that even in the most desperate circumstances (like approaching death), sincere prayer can still reach God and receive answer. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's Seder (prayer sequences) — This compilation exemplifies Ma'avar Yabok's technique of creating therapeutic prayer progressions that move from acknowledgment of suffering through expressions of repentance to confidence in divine restoration, matching the pattern found throughout the book's structured prayer sequences.

[ii] The text uses the feminine form 'עָלָיְכִי' (upon you) when addressing the soul (נפש), which is grammatically feminine in Hebrew. This grammatical choice emphasizes the intimate relationship between the person and their soul as a distinct entity being addressed.

[iii] The 'cup of salvation' (כּוֹס יְשׁוּעוֹת) is a ritual reference to the thanksgiving offering in the Temple. In this context of Ma'avar Yabok, it takes on additional significance as a metaphor for accepting both the positive and negative aspects of divine providence, particularly during illness.

[iv] This vivid simile compares the quick defeat of enemies to how quickly a fire of thorns is extinguished. Thorns burn hot and fast but quickly die out, suggesting that the threats to the soul, while initially intense, will be quickly overcome through divine intervention.

דְּחָה דְחִיתַנִי לִנְפֹּל וַיהוָה עֲזָרָנִי:
יְמִין יְיָ רוֹמֵמָה יְמִין יְיָ עֹשָׂה חָיִל:
לֹא אָמוּת כִּי אֶחְיֶה וַאֲסַפֵּר מַעֲשֵׂי
יָהּ: יַסֹּר יִסְּרַנִּי יָהּ וְלַמָּוֶת לֹא
נְתָנָנִי: אֲנָא יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה נָּא: אֲנָא
יְיָ הַצְלִיחָה נָּא: אֵלִי אַתָּה וְאוֹדֶךָּ
אֱלֹהַי אֲרוֹמְמֶךָּ: הוֹדוּ לַיְיָ כִּי טוֹב
כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ: אַחֲלַי יִכֹּנוּ
דְרָכַי לִשְׁמֹר חֻקֶּיךָ: בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה
יְיָ לַמְּדֵנִי חֻקֶּיךָ: גַּל עֵינַי וְאַבִּיטָה
נִפְלָאוֹת מִתּוֹרָתֶךָ: דֶּרֶךְ פִּקּוּדֶיךָ
הֲבִינֵנִי וְאָשִׂיחָה בְּנִפְלְאוֹתֶיךָ:
הֲבִינֵנִי וְאֶצְּרָה תוֹרָתֶךָ וְאֶשְׁמְרֶנָּה
בְכָל לֵב: וְאֶשְׁמְרָה תוֹרָתֶךָ תָמִיד
לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד: וַדִּים חֻלִּיצֵנִי עַד
מָאֹד מִתּוֹרָתְךָ לֹא נָטִיתִי: חִלִּיתִי
פָּנֶיךָ בְכָל לֵב חָנֵּנִי כְּאִמְרָתֶךָ:
טוּב טַעַם וָדַעַת לַמְּדֵנִי כִּי
בְמִצְוֹתֶיךָ הֶאֱמָנְתִּי: יְהִי לִבִּי תָמִים
בְּחֻקֶּיךָ לְמַעַן לֹא אֵבוֹשׁ: כָּלְתָה עֵינַי
לְאִמְרָתֶךָ לֵאמֹר מָתַי תְּנַחֲמֵנִי:
לְעוֹלָם לֹא אֶשְׁכַּח פִּקּוּדֶיךָ כִּי בָם
חִיִּיתָנִי: מַאֲבִי הִתְחַכַּמְתַנִי מִצְוֹתֶךָ
כִּי לְעוֹלָם הִיא לִי: נְדִבוֹת פִּי רְצֵה
נָא יְיָ וּמִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ לַמְּדֵנִי: סָמְכֵנִי
כְאִמְרָתֶךָ וְאֶחְיֶה וְאַל תְּבִישֵׁנִי
מִשַּׂבְרִי: עֻשָּׂה עִם עַבְדְּךָ כְחַסְדֶּךָ
וְחֻקֶּיךָ לַמְּדֵנִי: פָּנֶיךָ הָאֵר בְּעַבְדֶּךָ
וְלַמְּדֵנִי אֶת חֻקֶּיךָ: צַר וּמָצוֹק
מְצָאוּנִי מִצְוֹתֶיךָ שַׁעֲשֻׁעָי:[i][ii]

those who hate me. They surrounded me like bees, they were extinguished like a fire of thorns; In the name of the LORD I will surely cut them off. You pushed me violently to fall, but the LORD helped me. The right hand of the LORD is exalted; The right hand of the LORD does valiantly. I shall not die, but live, and recount the works of the LORD. The LORD has severely disciplined me,[1] but He has not given me over to death. Please, O LORD, save now! Please, O LORD, grant success now! You are my God, and I will praise You; My God, I will exalt You. Give thanks to the LORD, for He is good; For His lovingkindness endures forever. Oh, that my ways were directed to keep Your statutes! Blessed are You, O LORD; Teach me Your statutes. Open my eyes, that I may behold wondrous things from Your Torah. Make me understand the way of Your precepts; So shall I meditate on Your wonders. Give me understanding, that I may observe Your Torah and keep it with all my heart. And I will keep Your Torah continually, forever and ever. The arrogant have utterly scorned me, yet I have not turned aside from Your Torah. I have sought Your face with all my heart; Be gracious to me according to Your word. Teach me good discernment and knowledge, for I have believed in Your commandments. May my heart be blameless in Your statutes, so that I will not be ashamed. My eyes fail with longing for Your word, saying, "When will You comfort me?" I will never forget Your precepts, for through them You have given me life. Your commandments make me wiser than my enemies, for they are ever with me. Please accept the freewill offerings of my mouth, O

1820R 1825R 1830R 1835R 1840R 1845R

[1] This acknowledgment of divine discipline reflects Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework that suffering serves a purifying purpose rather than being random misfortune. The emphasis that God 'has not given me over to death' suggests that even severe trials have redemptive value.

[i] The term 'שַׁעֲשֻׁעָי' (my delight) expresses profound joy and comfort found in divine commandments even amidst 'trouble and anguish' (צַר וּמָצוֹק). This juxtaposition is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok's context of approaching death, suggesting that Torah study provides spiritual sustenance even in life's darkest moments.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 116 — These verses from Psalm 116 establish the theme of gratitude for divine rescue from mortal danger, setting a hopeful tone for this prayer sequence. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses serve to comfort the sick or dying person by reminding them of God's past acts of deliverance. | Cf. Psalm 118 — These verses from Psalm 118 express confidence in divine protection despite being surrounded by enemies, which in Ma'avar Yabok would be interpreted as both physical illness and spiritual adversaries that threaten the soul during serious illness or approaching death. | Cf. Psalm 119 — These verses from Psalm 119 shift the focus from physical deliverance to spiritual guidance, suggesting that even in times of illness, engagement with Torah provides comfort and spiritual sustenance. This aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on spiritual preparation during illness.

LORD, and teach me Your judgments. Uphold me according to Your word, that I may live; And do not let me be ashamed of my hope. Deal with Your servant according to Your lovingkindness, and teach me Your statutes. Make Your face shine upon Your servant, and teach me Your statutes. Trouble and anguish have found me, yet Your commandments are my delight.[1]

(כתובים) יְחַלֵּץ עָנִי בְעָנְיוֹ וְיִגֶּל
בַּלַּחַץ אָזְנָם: לֹא יִגְרַע מִצַּדִּיק
עֵינָיו וְאֶת מְלָכִים לַכִּסֵּא וַיּוֹשִׁיבֵם
לָנֶצַח וַיִּגְבָּהוּ: הֵן אֵל יַשְׂגִּיב בְּכֹחוֹ
מִי כָמֹהוּ מוֹרֶה: מִי פָקַד עָלָיו
דַּרְכּוֹ וּמִי אָמַר פָּעַלְתָּ עַוְלָה:
יַרְעֵם אֵל בְּקוֹלוֹ נִפְלָאוֹת עֹשֶׂה
גְּדֹלוֹת וְלֹא נֵדָע: בְּיַד כָּל אָדָם
יַחְתּוֹם לָדַעַת כָּל אֲנְשֵׁי מַעֲשֵׂהוּ:
וְיִמְנַע מֵרָשָׁעִים אוֹרָם וּזְרוֹעַ רָמָה
תִּשָּׁבֵר: הֵן קָלוֹתִי מָה אֲשִׁיבֶךָּ יָדִי
שַׂמְתִּי לְמוֹ פִּי: לִשְׁמַע אֹזֶן שָׁמַעְתִּיךָ
וְעַתָּה עֵינִי רָאָתְךָ: אָתוֹהִי בְּמָה
רַבְרְבִין וְתִמְהוֹהִי בְּמָה תַּקִּיפִין
מַלְכוּתֵהּ מַלְכוּת עָלַם וְשָׁלְטָנֵהּ
עִם דָּר וְדָר: חָזֵה הֲוֵית עַד דִּי
כָרְסָוָן רְמִיו וְעַתִּיק יוֹמִין יְתֵב
לְבוּשֵׁהּ כְּתַלַּג חִוָּר וּשְׂעַר רֵאשֵׁהּ
כַּעֲמַר נְקֵא כָּרְסְיֵהּ שְׁבִיבִין דִּי נוּר
גַּלְגְּלוֹהִי נוּר דָּלִק:[i]

He delivers the poor in their affliction,[A] and opens their ears in oppression. He does not withdraw His eyes from the righteous,[B] but with kings on the throne He establishes them forever, and they are exalted. Behold, God is exalted in His power; who is a teacher like Him? Who has prescribed His way for Him? Or who has said, 'You have done wrong'? God thunders marvelously with His voice; He does great things which we cannot comprehend. For He seals the hand of every person, that all may know His work. He withholds light from the wicked, and the uplifted arm is broken. Behold, I am insignificant; what can I reply to You? I place my hand over my mouth.[2] I have heard of You by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees You. How great are His signs, and how mighty are His wonders! His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and His dominion is from generation to generation.[3] I was watching until thrones were set up, and the Ancient of Days[C] was seated;[4] His garment was white as [A] Or: "He rescues the afflicted through their suffering" — This alternate translation emphasizes how suffering itself becomes the vehicle for salvation, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theme that affliction serves as a purifying mechanism rather than merely being relieved.

[B] Or: "He does not diminish His attention from the righteous" — The Hebrew 'יִגְרַע' (yigra) carries connotations of diminishing or lessening, not just withdrawing. This alternate better captures the idea that God maintains full attention on the righteous without any reduction in His watchfulness.

[C] Or: "the Ancient One" — In kabbalistic literature, particularly relevant to Ma'avar Yabok,

[1] The passage concludes with the paradoxical notion that even in 'trouble and anguish,' divine commandments provide delight. This illustrates Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on Torah study as spiritual sustenance during illness, suggesting that engagement with sacred text offers comfort even when physical healing is uncertain.

[2] This gesture symbolizes the silencing of human argumentation when confronted with divine wisdom, representing the ideal posture of acceptance before death that Ma'avar Yabok advocates.

[3] This passage transitions from Hebrew (Job) to Aramaic (Daniel), indicating a compilation of texts that describes a progression from earthly suffering to divine throne vision—mirroring the soul's journey from physical affliction to spiritual revelation.

[4] In kabbalistic tradition, especially relevant to Ma'avar Yabok, 'Ancient of Days' (Atik Yomin)

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, root.7.1.1.1.2.94 — The current passage presents God's sovereign power and judgment, while the section from root.7.1.1.1.2.94 emphasizes divine mercy and healing. These complement each other in Ma'avar Yabok's theology where divine severity and mercy work together in the spiritual journey. | Cf. Daniel 7:9-10 — The final verses of this passage are directly quoted snow, and the hair of His head like pure wool. His throne was fiery flames, its wheels burning fire.

חֲמוֹל עָלַי וְכַפֵּר מַעֲלָלַי.[i] וְשׁוּר שִׁירִי כְּשִׁיר מוּשִׁי וּמַחְלִי.[ii] וְיוֹם 1685 תָּבִיא יְצוּרֶךָ בְּמִשְׁפָּט. אֱלֹהַי אַל תְּדִינֵנִי כְּמַעֲלַי:[iii iv]

Have mercy upon me and atone for my misdeeds.[1] Look upon my song as the song of Mushi and Machli.[A] And on the day when You bring Your creatures to judgment, my God, do not judge me according to my transgressions.[B] 1880R

מנחה ליום ששי[v]

Afternoon Prayer for Friday[2] 1885R

יאמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[vi] ואח״כ

He should recite the verses beginning with "Ana

'Atik Yomin' is often translated as 'the Ancient One,' referring to a specific divine configuration. This alternate better preserves the technical mystical terminology.

[A] Or: "And regard my song as if it were the song of Mushi and Machli" — This alternate translation emphasizes the hypothetical comparison more clearly, highlighting that the author is asking for his prayer to be elevated to the status of Temple service.

[B] Or: "my God, do not judge me in accordance with my wrongdoing" — This alternate uses 'wrongdoing' instead of 'transgressions' and makes the relationship between judgment and actions more explicit with 'in accordance with.'

refers to a specific divine configuration representing the highest aspect of divine mercy, which tempers the fiery judgment represented by the throne.

[1] This opening follows a traditional Jewish prayer formula requesting divine mercy and forgiveness.

[2] In Jewish tradition, the Friday afternoon prayer (Mincha) has special significance as it immediately precedes the onset of the Sabbath. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this likely introduces prayers or rituals to be performed specifically at this transitional time, which may have particular relevance for the sick or dying.

from Daniel's apocalyptic vision. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this vision would likely be interpreted as a glimpse of the divine judgment that souls face after death, providing a meditation on the awesome nature of the divine presence awaiting the soul. | Cf. Job 36-37 — The first part of this passage comes from Job, where Elihu defends God's justice. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses would support the book's central theological premise that suffering has purpose within divine justice, and that God ultimately exalts the righteous despite their temporary afflictions. | Cf. Job 40:4 and 42:5-6 — The verses 'I am insignificant; what can I reply to You? I place my hand over my mouth' and 'I have heard of You by the hearing of the ear, but now my eye sees You' come from Job's final surrender to divine wisdom. In Ma'avar Yabok, this represents the ideal spiritual posture before death—humility and surrender that leads to direct divine vision.

[i] The term 'מַעֲלָלַי' (my misdeeds) comes from a root that can suggest both actions generally and evil deeds specifically. Here it clearly refers to sinful actions.

[ii] This is a reference to Mushi and Machli, descendants of Levi who were involved in the Temple musical service. They were sons of Merari (see Numbers 3:20, 1 Chronicles 6:19, 23:21-23). The author is asking God to view his prayer-song with the same favor as the Temple music offered by these Levites.

[iii] There is wordplay between 'מַעֲלָלַי' (my misdeeds) earlier in the prayer and 'כְּמַעֲלַי' (according to my transgressions) here, creating a poetic resonance.

[iv] Cf. Psalm 51:1-2 — The opening follows the pattern of penitential psalms, particularly Psalm 51, establishing this as a prayer of confession and request for forgiveness. | Cf. 1 Chronicles 6:19, 23:21-23 — By invoking these Levitical musicians, the author suggests his prayer should be received like Temple service, elevating his personal supplication to ritual significance. | Cf. Psalm 143:2 — The closing line echoes this psalm's acknowledgment that no human could withstand divine judgment based solely on their actions, thus requiring divine mercy.

[v] This is a heading indicating that what follows is the Mincha (afternoon prayer) service specifically for Friday, which is particularly significant as it marks the transition toward the Sabbath.

[vi] These are specific opening verses beginning with "Ana Hashem" (Please, O LORD) that appear consistently throughout Ma'avar Yabok as the standard opening for each prayer sequence.

יתחיל מזמור חלצני ה׳ וגומר תהלים סימן ק״מ[i] סדר ח[ii] ואח״כ יאמר זה:

Hashem"[1] (Please, O LORD), and afterward begin Psalm 140, "Deliver me, O LORD" and complete it, then Order 8,[2] and afterward recite this:

(תורה) בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּבֹאֶךָ וּבָרוּךְ אַתָּה בְּצֵאתֶךָ: יִתֵּן יְיָ אֶת אֹיְבֶיךָ הַקָּמִים עָלֶיךָ נִגָּפִים לְפָנֶיךָ בְּדֶרֶךְ אֶחָד יֵצְאוּ אֵלֶיךָ וּבְשִׁבְעָה דְרָכִים יָנוּסוּ לְפָנֶיךָ:[iii] יְצַו יְיָ אִתְּךָ אֶת הַבְּרָכָה בַּאֲסָמֶיךָ וּבְכֹל מִשְׁלַח יָדֶךָ וּבֵרַכְךָ בָּאָרֶץ אֲשֶׁר יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ נֹתֵן לָךְ: וְרָאוּ כָּל עַמֵּי הָאָרֶץ כִּי שֵׁם יְיָ נִקְרָא עָלֶיךָ וְיָרְאוּ מִמֶּךָּ: יִפְתַּח יְיָ לְךָ אֶת אוֹצָרוֹ הַטּוֹב[iv] אֶת הַשָּׁמַיִם לָתֵת מְטַר אַרְצְךָ בְּעִתּוֹ וּלְבָרֵךְ אֶת כָּל מַעֲשֵׂה יָדֶךָ וְהִלְוִיתָ גּוֹיִם רַבִּים וְאַתָּה לֹא תִלְוֶה: וּנְתָנְךָ יְיָ לְרֹאשׁ וְלֹא לְזָנָב וְהָיִיתָ רַק לְמַעְלָה וְלֹא תִהְיֶה לְמָטָּה כִּי תִשְׁמַע אֶל מִצְוֹת יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצַוְּךָ הַיּוֹם לִשְׁמֹר וְלַעֲשׂוֹת: וְשָׁבְתָּ[v] עַד יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ וְשָׁמַעְתָּ בְקֹלוֹ כְּכֹל אֲשֶׁר אָנֹכִי מְצַוְּךָ הַיּוֹם

(Torah) Blessed shall you be when you come in, and blessed shall you be when you go out. The LORD will cause your enemies who rise against you to be defeated before you;[3] they shall come out against you one way and flee before you seven ways.[A] The LORD will command the blessing upon you in your storehouses and in all that you undertake; He will bless you in the land that the LORD your God is giving you. Then all the peoples of the earth shall see that the name of the LORD is proclaimed over you, and they shall fear you. The LORD will open for you His good treasury, the heavens,[B] to give the rain of your land in its season and to bless all the work of your hands. You shall lend to many nations, but you shall not borrow. The LORD will make you the head and not the tail; you shall be only above and not beneath,[4] if you obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you today, by being careful to observe them. And you shall 1890R 1895R 1900R 1905R

[A] Or: "they will march against you in a single formation but scatter in seven directions before you" — This more vivid translation better captures the military imagery of the original Hebrew, which contrasts the organized approach of enemies with their chaotic, complete retreat.

[B] Or: "The LORD will unlock for you His good storehouse, the heavens" — The verb 'unlock' and noun 'storehouse' might better convey the imagery of a divine vault being opened to release blessings, which aligns with the subsequent imagery of rain coming from this celestial treasury.

[1] These opening verses form a standard pattern in Ma'avar Yabok, where each prayer sequence begins with verses starting with "Ana Hashem" (Please, O LORD). This creates ritual continuity throughout the book's prayer sequences.

[2] The Hebrew "Seder 8" (סדר ח) likely refers to continuing with the eighth standardized prayer sequence. I've maintained the term "Order" to preserve the sense that this refers to a specific, established liturgical sequence rather than simply the next step in the instructions.

[3] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these "enemies" would be understood metaphorically as illness, the Angel of Death, or negative spiritual forces that threaten the sick person.

[4] This spatial metaphor of being "above and not beneath" would be interpreted in the prayer context as referring to spiritual elevation rather than merely social status.

[i] Psalm 140, which begins "Deliver me, O LORD" (חלצני ה׳), focuses on themes of divine protection from enemies and harmful speech, making it particularly appropriate in the context of prayers for the sick or dying who might feel vulnerable to both physical affliction and spiritual attack.

[ii] This refers to the eighth liturgical sequence (Seder Het) in Ma'avar Yabok's system of prayers for the sick and dying. Each "seder" follows a similar structure with opening prayers, psalms, biblical verses, and concluding prayers.

[iii] The number seven represents completeness in Jewish tradition. The image of enemies fleeing in seven directions symbolizes total defeat of all spiritual obstacles or illnesses.

[iv] The concept of heaven as God's "good treasury" (otzaro hatov) is significant in kabbalistic thought, representing the divine source from which all blessings flow.

[v] The Hebrew verb "v'shavta" (you shall return) shares the same root as "teshuvah" (repentance). This emphasizes that healing requires spiritual return to God, not merely physical recovery.

אַתָּה וּבָנֶיךָ בְּכָל לְבָבְךָ וּבְכָל
נַפְשֶׁךָ: וְשָׁב יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֶת שְׁבוּתְךָ
וְרִחֲמֶךָ וְשָׁב וְקִבֶּצְךָ מִכָּל הָעַמִּים
1715 [i] אֲשֶׁר הֱפִיצְךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ שָׁמָּה:

return to the LORD your God and obey His voice according to all that I command you today, you and 1910R your children, with all your heart and with all your soul. Then the LORD your God will restore your fortunes and have compassion on you,[1] returning to gather you from all the peoples among whom the LORD your God has scattered you. 1915R

(נביאים) בְּהִתְעַטֵּף עָלַי נַפְשִׁי אֶת
יְהוָה זָכָרְתִּי וַתָּבוֹא אֵלֶיךָ תְּפִלָּתִי
אֶל הֵיכַל קָדְשֶׁךָ: כִּי כָל הָעַמִּים
יֵלְכוּ אִישׁ בְּשֵׁם אֱלֹהָיו וַאֲנַחְנוּ
1720 נֵלֵךְ בְּשֵׁם יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ לְעוֹלָם
וָעֶד: תָּרֹם יָדְךָ עַל צָרֶיךָ וְכָל
אוֹיְבֶיךָ יִכָּרֵתוּ: וַאֲנִי בַיהוָה אֲצַפֶּה
אוֹחִילָה לֵאלֹהֵי יִשְׁעִי יִשְׁמָעֵנִי
אֱלֹהָי: אַל תִּשְׂמְחִי אֹיַבְתִּי לִי כִּי
1725 נָפַלְתִּי קָמְתִּי כִּי אֵשֵׁב בַּחֹשֶׁךְ יְיָ
אוֹר לִי: זַעַף יְיָ אֶשָּׂא כִּי חָטָאתִי
לוֹ עַד אֲשֶׁר יָרִיב רִיבִי וְעָשָׂה
מִשְׁפָּטִי יוֹצִיאֵנִי לָאוֹר אֶרְאֶה
בְּצִדְקָתוֹ: [ii] יִרְאוּ גוֹיִם וְיֵבֹשׁוּ מִכֹּל

(Prophets) When my soul fainted within me,[A] I remembered the LORD, and my prayer came to You, to Your holy temple. For all peoples will walk each in the name of his god, but we will walk in the name of the LORD our God forever and ever.[2] May Your 1920R hand be lifted up against Your adversaries, and may all Your enemies be cut off. But as for me, I will watch expectantly for the LORD; I will wait for the God of my salvation. My God will hear me. Do not rejoice over me, O my enemy. Though I have fallen, 1925R
I will rise; though I sit in darkness, the LORD is a light to me.[3] I will bear the indignation of the LORD[B] because I have sinned against Him, until He pleads my case[C] and executes justice for me. He will

[A] Or: "When my soul was overwhelmed within me" — The Hebrew word 'hit'atef' has connotations of being wrapped up, covered, or overwhelmed rather than just fainting. This translation captures the sense of spiritual distress more accurately.

[B] Or: "I will bear the LORD's wrath" — The term 'za'af' specifically refers to anger or wrath, though 'indignation' is a good literary translation. The alternate is more direct and maintains the emotional intensity.

[C] Or: "He contends for my cause" — The repetition in Hebrew (yariv rivi) creates a stronger sense of advocacy through legal contention. This translation better captures the forceful legal metaphor.

[1] The Hebrew term "shevutekha" (your fortunes/captivity) plays on the earlier use of "v'shavta" (you shall return), creating a reciprocal relationship: when you return to God, God returns your well-being.

[2] This declaration of communal faithfulness from Micah 4:5 creates a contrast between temporary personal suffering and eternal divine commitment, offering spiritual perspective to the sick or dying person.

[3] This verse creates a therapeutic progression typical in Ma'avar Yabok's prayer sequences, moving from acknowledgment of suffering to affirmation of divine presence even in darkness. The light metaphor would be particularly meaningful in the context of deathbed prayers.

[i] Cf. Deuteronomy 28:6-9, 12-13 — This passage compiles several verses from the blessing section of Deuteronomy 28, which promises prosperity, protection, and prominence to Israel if they follow God's commandments. In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses create a protective shield of divine blessing for the sick person through the power of scriptural recitation. | Cf. Deuteronomy 30:2-3 — These concluding verses shift the focus to repentance and restoration, offering hope that even after punishment or suffering, returning to God with sincerity will bring divine compassion and gathering of the scattered. In the context of illness, this suggests that sincere repentance can lead to healing and restoration.

[ii] This metaphor of being brought from darkness to light appears throughout the biblical text as a symbol of divine deliverance and spiritual renewal. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it would resonate with the sick or dying person's hope for spiritual enlightenment and divine mercy.

וּגְבוּרָתָם יָשִׂימוּ יָד עַל פֶּה אָזְנֵיהֶם
תֶּחֱרַשְׁנָה: מִי אֵל כָּמוֹךָ[i] נֹשֵׂא עָוֹן
וְעֹבֵר עַל פֶּשַׁע לִשְׁאֵרִית נַחֲלָתוֹ
לֹא הֶחֱזִיק לָעַד אַפּוֹ כִּי חָפֵץ חֶסֶד
הוּא: [ii]

bring me out to the light, and I will see His righteousness. Then my enemies will see and be ashamed of all their might; they will put their hand over their mouth, their ears will become deaf. Who is a God like You, who pardons iniquity and passes over the rebellious act of the remnant of His possession? He does not retain His anger forever, because He delights in mercy.[1]

(תהלים) קוֹלִי שִׁמְעָה כְחַסְדֶּךָ
יְיָ כְּמִשְׁפָּטֶךָ חַיֵּנִי: רִיבָה רִיבִי
וּגְאָלֵנִי לְאִמָרָתְךָ חַיֵּנִי: שִׁבַּרְתִּי
לִישׁוּעָתְךָ יְיָ וּמִצְוֹתֶיךָ עָשִׂיתִי:
תְּחִי נַפְשִׁי וּתְהַלְלֶךָּ וּמִשְׁפָּטֶךָ
יַעְזְרֵנִי: יְיָ הַצִּילָה נַפְשִׁי מִשְּׂפַת
שֶׁקֶר מִלָּשׁוֹן רְמִיָּה:[iii] עֶזְרִי מֵעִם יְיָ
עֹשֵׂה שָׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ: אַל יִתֵּן לַמּוֹט
רַגְלֶךָ אַל יָנוּם שֹׁמְרֶךָ: יְיָ יִשְׁמָרְךָ
מִכָּל רָע יִשְׁמֹר אֶת נַפְשֶׁךָ:[iv] יְיָ
יִשְׁמָר צֵאתְךָ וּבוֹאֶךָ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד
עוֹלָם: יְיָ שָׁלוֹם בְּחֵילֶךָ שַׁלְוָה
בְּאַרְמְנוֹתָיִךְ: הִנֵּה כְעֵינֵי עֲבָדִים
אֶל יַד אֲדוֹנֵיהֶם כְּעֵינֵי שִׁפְחָה
אֶל יַד גְּבִרְתָּהּ כֵּן עֵינֵינוּ אֶל
יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ עַד שֶׁיְּחָנֵנוּ: חָנֵנוּ יְיָ
חָנֵנוּ כִּי רַב שָׂבַעְנוּ בוּז: לוּלֵי

(Psalms) Hear my voice according to Your loving-kindness, O LORD; revive me according to Your justice. Champion my cause and redeem me; give me life according to Your word. I have hoped for Your salvation, O LORD, and I have fulfilled Your commandments. May my soul live and praise You,[A] and may Your judgments sustain me. O LORD, deliver my soul from lying lips, from a deceitful tongue. My help comes from the LORD, maker of heaven and earth. He will not allow your foot to slip; your guardian will not slumber. The LORD will guard you from all evil; He will protect your soul. The LORD will guard your going out and your coming in, from now and forever. May there be peace within your walls, tranquility in your palaces. Behold, as the eyes of servants look to the hand of their masters, as the eyes of a maidservant to the hand of

[A] Or: "Let my soul be revived so that it may praise You" — This translation more explicitly connects the revival of the soul with its subsequent ability to praise God, highlighting the theological principle in Ma'avar Yabok that the purpose of healing and life is divine service and praise.

[1] The prayer concludes with an emphasis on God's merciful nature rather than judgment, following Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theological framework that views divine mercy as ultimately prevailing over judgment, even in death.

[i] This rhetorical question forms a wordplay on the name 'Micah' (מִיכָה) itself, which means 'Who is like [God]?' The verse affirms the incomparability of God particularly in His capacity for forgiveness and mercy.

[ii] Cf. Jonah 2:7 — This quotation establishes a theme of spiritual distress followed by divine remembrance and deliverance that runs throughout this prayer passage. | Cf. Micah 4:5 — The inclusion of this verse in the prayer text connects individual suffering with communal faithfulness, suggesting that the individual's distress and hope are grounded in their identity as part of God's covenant people. | Cf. Micah 7:7-10 — The use of this passage transforms individual suffering into a spiritual journey from distress through confession to divine vindication, offering comfort to the sick or dying person by placing their suffering within a redemptive narrative. | Cf. Micah 7:18 — The prayer concludes with this powerful affirmation of God's merciful nature, emphasizing divine forgiveness over punishment. This would be particularly meaningful in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, where the sick or dying person is seeking divine mercy and forgiveness.

[iii] The theme of deliverance from 'deceitful tongues' has particular significance in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, as the dying were considered especially vulnerable to spiritual accusers (mekatregim) whose 'deceitful tongues' could impede the soul's peaceful journey.

[iv] The repeated emphasis on protecting the 'nefesh' (soul) reflects the book's primary concern with safeguarding the soul during its transition from this world to the next.

יְיָ שֶׁהָיָה לָנוּ בְּקוּם עָלֵינוּ אָדָם:
אֲזַי חַיִּים בְּלָעוּנוּ בַּחֲרוֹת אַפָּם
בָּנוּ: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ שֶׁלֹּא נְתָנָנוּ טֶרֶף
לְשִׁנֵּיהֶם: נַפְשֵׁנוּ כְּצִפּוֹר נִמְלָטָה
מִפַּח יוֹקְשִׁים[i] הַפַּח נִשְׁבָּר וַאֲנַחְנוּ
נִמְלָטְנוּ: עֶזְרֵנוּ בְּשֵׁם יְיָ עֹשֵׂה
שָׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ: הֵיטִיבָה יְיָ לַטּוֹבִים
וְלִישָׁרִים בְּלִבּוֹתָם: הַזֹּרְעִים
בְּדִמְעָה בְּרִנָּה יִקְצֹרוּ: שָׁוְא לָכֶם
מַשְׁכִּימֵי קוּם מְאַחֲרֵי שֶׁבֶת אֹכְלֵי
לֶחֶם הָעֲצָבִים כֵּן יִתֵּן לִידִידוֹ
שֵׁנָא: יְבָרֶכְךָ יְהוָה מִצִּיּוֹן וּרְאֵה
בְּטוּב יְרוּשָׁלַם כֹּל יְמֵי חַיֶּיךָ: יְיָ
צַדִּיק קִצֵּץ עֲבוֹת רְשָׁעִים: קִוִּיתִי
יְיָ קִוְּתָה נַפְשִׁי וְלִדְבָרוֹ הוֹחָלְתִּי:
יַחֵל יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל יְיָ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד
עוֹלָם: אוֹיְבָיו אַלְבִּישׁ בֹּשֶׁת וְעָלָיו
יָצִיץ נִזְרוֹ: כִּי שָׁם צִוָּה יְיָ אֶת
הַבְּרָכָה חַיִּים עַד הָעוֹלָם: יְבָרֶכְךָ
יְיָ מִצִּיּוֹן עֹשֵׂה שָׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ: בֵּית
יִשְׂרָאֵל בָּרֲכוּ אֶת יְהוָה בֵּית אַהֲרֹן
בָּרֲכוּ אֶת יְהוָה: בֵּית הַלֵּוִי בָּרֲכוּ
אֶת יְהוָה יִרְאֵי יְהוָה בָּרֲכוּ אֶת
יְהוָה: בָּרוּךְ יְהוָה מִצִּיּוֹן שֹׁכֵן
יְרוּשָׁלַם הַלְלוּיָהּ: נֹתֵן לֶחֶם לְכָל
בָּשָׂר כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ: [ii] הוֹדוּ
לְאֵל הַשָּׁמַיִם כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ: אִם

her mistress,[1] so our eyes look to the LORD our 1955R
God, until He is gracious to us. Be gracious to us, O LORD, be gracious to us, for we have endured much contempt. Had not the LORD been with us when people rose up against us, then they would have swallowed us alive in their burning anger against 1960R us. Blessed is the LORD, who has not given us as prey to their teeth. Our soul has escaped like a bird from the hunter's snare; the snare is broken, and we have escaped.[2] Our help is in the name of the LORD, maker of heaven and earth. Do good, 1965R O LORD, to the good, to those upright in their hearts. Those who sow in tears will reap with songs of joy. It is futile for you to rise early, to stay up late, eating the bread of toil;[A] for He gives to His beloved sleep.[3] May the LORD bless you from Zion; may you 1970R see the prosperity of Jerusalem all the days of your life. The LORD is righteous; He has cut the cords of the wicked. I wait for the LORD, my soul waits, and in His word I place my hope. Let Israel hope in the LORD[B] from now and forever. His enemies 1975R
I will clothe with shame, but upon him his crown will shine. For there the LORD has commanded the blessing—life forevermore. May the LORD bless you from Zion, He who made heaven and earth. O house of Israel, bless the LORD; O house of Aaron, bless 1980R
the LORD; O house of Levi, bless the LORD; you

[A] Or: "to rise early, to sit up late, consuming the bread of sorrows" — The Hebrew 'lechem ha-atzavim' could be translated more literally as 'bread of sorrows' rather than 'bread of toil,' emphasizing the emotional rather than physical dimension of labor. This alternate translation might better convey the contrast with the peaceful sleep given to God's beloved.

[B] Or: "Let Israel wait expectantly for the LORD" — The Hebrew verb 'yachel' has connotations of waiting with expectation and patience, not merely hoping. This nuance could be important in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, where both the ill person and mourners are encouraged to wait patiently for divine deliverance rather than merely hoping for it.

[1] This simile expresses the ideal spiritual posture of complete dependence on God, particularly relevant for the sick and dying who must surrender to divine will while maintaining hope for mercy.

[2] In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this image of liberation from the snare would be understood as both physical healing from illness and the soul's liberation from bodily constraints at death.

[3] The Hebrew 'sheina' (sleep) can also be read as a play on words with the similar sounding 'shana' (change/transformation), suggesting that God grants His beloved transformation through difficult circumstances.

[i] This powerful metaphor of the bird escaping the snare would be understood in the context of Ma'avar Yabok as the soul's liberation from both physical suffering and spiritual entrapments that might impede its journey after death.

[ii] The emphasis on God's eternal loving-kindness (chesed) at the conclusion of this prayer sequence balances the earlier references to divine justice (mishpat), reflecting the kabbalistic understanding that mercy ultimately tempers judgment.

[i] אֶשְׁכָּחֵךְ יְרוּשָׁלָם תִּשְׁכַּח יְמִינִי׃ who fear the LORD, bless the LORD. Blessed be the LORD from Zion, who dwells in Jerusalem. Hallelujah! He gives food to all flesh, for His loving-kindness endures forever. Give thanks to the God of heaven, 1985R for His loving-kindness endures forever. If I forget you, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget its skill.[1]

(כתובים) נְהַר דִּי נוּר נָגֵד
וְנָפֵק מִן קֳדָמוֹהִי[ii] אֶלֶף אַלְפִין
יְשַׁמְּשׁוּנֵּהּ וְרִבּוֹ רִבְבָן קָדָמוֹהִי
יְקוּמוּן דִּינָא יְתִב וְסִפְרִין
פְּתִיחוּ׃ אֲנָא אֲדֹנָי הָאֵל הַגָּדוֹל
וְהַנּוֹרָא[iii] שֹׁמֵר הַבְּרִית וְהַחֶסֶד
לְאֹהֲבָיו וּלְשֹׁמְרֵי מִצְוֹתָיו חָטָאנוּ
וְעָוִינוּ הִרְשַׁעְנוּ וּמָרַדְנוּ וְסוֹר
מִמִּצְוֹתֶךָ וּמִמִּשְׁפָּטֶיךָ׃[iv] יְיָ לָנוּ
בֹּשֶׁת הַפָּנִים[v] לְמָלְכֵינוּ לְשָׂרֵינוּ
וְלַאֲבוֹתֵינוּ אֲשֶׁר חָטָאנוּ לָךְ׃ לַאדֹנָי
אֱלֹהֵינוּ הָרַחֲמִים וְהַסְּלִיחוֹת כִּי

(Writings) A stream of fire flowed forth from before Him;[A] a thousand thousands served Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before 1990R
Him. The judgment was set and the books were opened.[2] Please, O Lord, the great and awesome God, who keeps the covenant and loving-kindness for those who love Him and keep His commandments— we have sinned, we have transgressed, we have acted 1995R wickedly, and we have rebelled,[3] turning away from Your commandments and Your ordinances. O Lord, to us belongs shame of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers,[B] for we have sinned

[A] Or: "A river of fire issued and came forth from before Him" — This alternative translation is more literal and preserves the Aramaic construction more directly. It might be preferred in contexts requiring more formal equivalence to the source text.

[B] Or: "O Lord, we bear the disgrace—we, our kings, our officials, and our ancestors" — This

[1] This final verse from Psalm 137:5 seems unconnected to the previous themes, but in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, Jerusalem represents both the earthly holy city and its heavenly counterpart—the ultimate destination of the righteous soul. The promise never to forget Jerusalem thus becomes a pledge of spiritual fidelity even in the face of death.

[2] In Jewish tradition, these "books" refer to the divine records of human deeds that are consulted during judgment, particularly emphasized during the High Holy Days.

[3] This sequence (חָטָאנוּ וְעָוִינוּ הִרְשַׁעְנוּ וּמָרַדְנוּ) forms a classic formula in Jewish confession (vidui), each term representing an increasingly severe level of wrongdoing.

[i] Cf. Psalms — This compilation draws verses from numerous psalms to create a cohesive prayer seeking divine protection, expressing trust in God's salvation, and praising His eternal mercy. The selection particularly emphasizes themes of divine guardianship, deliverance from enemies, and blessing from Zion—all concepts that would offer comfort to someone facing illness or approaching death. | Cf. Zohar — The compilation of these psalm verses, particularly those from Psalm 121 about divine guardianship, connects to Zoharic teachings about the soul's protection during transitions and times of vulnerability. The reference to the broken snare (Psalm 124:7) would be interpreted in kabbalistic thought as the soul's liberation from physical and spiritual constraints. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This compilation follows the pattern established in earlier sections of Ma'avar Yabok, where biblical verses (particularly from Psalms) are arranged to create a therapeutic spiritual progression from expressions of distress to declarations of confidence in divine salvation. This structured approach is consistent with the book's methodology of creating healing prayers through carefully selected scriptural passages.

[ii] This opening verse is from Daniel 7:10, part of Daniel's vision of the Ancient of Days. It's written in Aramaic rather than Hebrew, as is much of the Book of Daniel.

[iii] This begins a confessional prayer drawing heavily from biblical sources, particularly Daniel 9:4-19, which forms the basis for many Jewish confessional prayers.

[iv] The confession follows a pattern common in Jewish liturgy, beginning with general acknowledgments of sin followed by more specific admissions.

[v] This phrase from Daniel 9:8 acknowledges the collective shame of the entire community, including leaders and ancestors, emphasizing the communal nature of confession in Jewish tradition.

מָרַדְנוּ בוֹ: אֲדֹנָי שִׁמְעָה אֲדֹנָי
סְלָחָה אֲדֹנָי הַקְשִׁיבָה[i] וַעֲשֵׂה אַל
תְּאַחַר לְמַעַנְךָ אֱלֹהַי כִּי שִׁמְךָ
1795 נִקְרָא עַל עִירְךָ וְעַל עַמֶּךָ: יְיָ
אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל צַדִּיק אַתָּה כִּי
נִשְׁאַרְנוּ פְלֵיטָה כְּהַיּוֹם הַזֶּה:
אֱלֹהַי בּשְׁתִּי וְנִכְלַמְתִּי לְהָרִים
אֱלֹהַי פָּנַי אֵלֶיךָ: כִּי עֲוֹנֹתֵינוּ
1800 רָבוּ לְמַעְלָה רֹאשׁ[ii] וְאַשְׁמָתֵנוּ
גָדְלָה עַד לַשָּׁמָיִם: וְעַתָּה מַה
נֹּאמַר אֱלֹהֵינוּ אַחֲרֵי זֹאת כִּי
עָזַבְנוּ מִצְוֹתֶיךָ: וְהַמַּשְׂכִּלִים יַזְהִרוּ
כְּזֹהַר הָרָקִיעַ[iii] וּמַצְדִּיקֵי הָרַבִּים
1805 [iv] כַּכּוֹכָבִים לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד:

against You. To the Lord our God belong mercy and 2000R forgiveness, though we have rebelled against Him. O
Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, listen and act!
Do not delay, for Your own sake, my God, for Your name is called upon Your city and Your people. O Lord God of Israel, You are righteous, for we remain 2005R as survivors to this day. My God, I am ashamed and humiliated to lift up my face to You, my God, for our iniquities have risen above our heads, and our guilt has grown up to the heavens.[1] And now, what shall we say, our God, after this, for we have forsaken 2010R Your commandments? And those who are wise shall shine like the brightness of the firmament,[A] and those who turn many to righteousness[2] like the stars forever and ever.

בְּשָׁפְכִי חִן לְפָנֶיךָ וַאֲנְחִין.[v] שְׁעֵנִי As I pour out grace before You and sigh,[B] answer 2015R modernized phrasing might be preferred in contemporary contexts, though it loses some of the biblical resonance of "shame of face" which has specific connotations in traditional Jewish penitential literature.

[A] Or: "And the enlightened ones will radiate like the splendor of the sky" — This alternative captures the mystical connotations of the Hebrew "משכילים" better, as it implies not just intellectual wisdom but spiritual illumination. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this interpretation aligns with kabbalistic concepts of the soul's luminescence after death.

[B] Or: "When I pour out my plea before You with groans" — The term "חִין" could also be

[1] This powerful metaphor suggests sins that have accumulated to such an extent that they reach from earth to heaven, emphasizing both their magnitude and their cosmic significance.

[2] The phrase "מַצְדִּיקֵי הָרַבִּים" (those who make the many righteous) refers to spiritual teachers and leaders who guide others to righteousness. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this relates to those who help others prepare spiritually for death.

[i] This threefold repetition of "Adonai" (Lord) from Daniel 9:19 is particularly intense, creating a crescendo in the prayer's emotional appeal.

[ii] This metaphor from Ezra 9:6 depicts sins as physically towering over one's head, suggesting both their quantity and their spiritual weight.

[iii] This verse from Daniel 12:3 significantly shifts the tone from confession to a vision of ultimate reward for the righteous. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this suggests that proper confession and repentance lead to spiritual illumination after death.

[iv] Cf. Daniel 7:10 — The author opens with this powerful image of divine judgment to establish the proper sense of awe before beginning a confessional prayer. This frames the entire confession within the context of standing before the divine tribunal. | Cf. Daniel 9:4-19 — This prayer draws heavily from Daniel's confession, adapting it for personal and communal use when facing death. The structural parallel suggests that just as Daniel sought national redemption through confession, the individual can seek personal redemption when approaching death. | Cf. Ezra 9:6-7 — By incorporating Ezra's language of overwhelming guilt, the author connects personal confession with the historical pattern of Jewish communal repentance in times of crisis. | Cf. Daniel 12:3 — The inclusion of this verse shifts the focus from confession to ultimate reward, suggesting that proper spiritual preparation for death (including thorough confession) leads to celestial radiance in the afterlife. This connects to Ma'avar Yabok's central theme of preparing the soul for its journey after death. | Cf. Yom Kippur liturgy — This prayer adapts the High Holy Day confession for use at the deathbed, suggesting that the approach of death is a time for final atonement similar to Yom Kippur. This reflects the Jewish concept that proper confession can achieve atonement even at life's end.

[v] The term "חִן" (chin) refers to grace or favor, while "אַנְחִין" (anachin) refers to sighing or moaning. The pairing creates both a rhyme and describes the supplicant's emotional state while praying.

אֵל וְאַל תַּפֶּן לְעַצְבִּי: דְּרוֹשׁ בַּעֲדִי [i] וְאַל תַּפֶּן לְמָרְדִּי: רְאֵה עֶלְבִּי [ii] וְרִיבָה אֶת יְרִיבִי: [iii] me, O God, and do not regard my sorrow.[A] Seek [good] for me and do not regard my rebellion.[1] See my humiliation and contend with those who contend against me.[2]

1810 סדר יום שבת קדש [iv] Order for the holy Sabbath day[3] 2020R

יתחיל פסוקי אנא ה׳ הכתובים לעיל. ואח״כ יאמר מזמור משכיל לדוד בהיותו במערה וגו׳ תהלים סימן קמ״ב תמצא לעיל סדר ח׳ אחר כך יאמר זה:

Begin with the verses of “Ana Hashem” written above. And afterward recite Psalm 142, “Maskil of David, when he was in the cave, etc.,” which can be found above in the Eighth Order. Then say this:

(תורה) אִם יִהְיֶה נִדַּחֲךָ בִּקְצֵה [v] הַשָּׁמָיִם [vi] מִשָּׁם יְקַבֶּצְךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ וּמִשָּׁם יִקָּחֶךָ: וּמָל יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ אֶת

(Torah) Even if your outcasts are at the ends of the heavens, from there the LORD your God will gather you, and from there He will take you. And the LORD 2025R interpreted as “supplication” or “plea” rather than “grace,” and “אַחְנִין” more specifically refers to groaning or moaning in distress.

[A] Or: “and do not turn to my grief” — The verb “תַּפֶּן” literally means “to turn to” or “to face,” suggesting God should turn away from rather than attend to the petitioner’s negative emotional state.

[1] The Hebrew term “מָרְדִּי” (my rebellion) carries stronger connotations than simple disobedience, suggesting willful defiance against divine authority. The prayer asks God to look past this serious transgression.

[2] This concluding request employs a common biblical theme where the petitioner asks God to take up their cause against enemies or adversaries. It echoes Psalm 35:1, “Contend, O LORD, with those who contend with me; fight against those who fight against me.”

[3] This heading introduces a special prayer sequence for the Sabbath within Ma’avar Yabok’s larger system of daily prayers. The Sabbath receives particular attention in Jewish mystical thought, as it is considered a time when divine mercy is more accessible and spiritual realms are more closely connected.

[i] The phrase “אַל תַּפֶּן” (do not regard/turn to) appears twice in this prayer, first asking God not to regard the supplicant’s sorrow, then asking God not to regard their rebellion. This creates a parallel structure emphasizing what the petitioner hopes God will and won’t attend to.

[ii] The term “עֶלְבִּי” (elbi) refers to humiliation or insult, while “יְרִיבִי” (yerivi) refers to one’s adversaries. The final phrase uses a wordplay with “וְרִיבָה” (verivah) meaning “contend with” and “יְרִיבִי” (yerivi) meaning “my contenders/adversaries.”

[iii] Cf. Psalm 35:1 — The final phrase of this prayer echoes this psalm’s opening, using the same rhetorical device of asking God to become an advocate against one’s enemies. | Cf. Lamentations 1:20 — This prayer echoes Lamentations’ pattern of acknowledging personal rebellion while still appealing to God for mercy and intervention against enemies.

[iv] This is a heading for a liturgical section focused on Sabbath prayers and observances within Ma’avar Yabok. In this context, ‘seder’ (order) refers to a structured sequence of prayers and rituals.

[v] This marker at the beginning of the passage indicates that these verses are from the Torah (Pentateuch), the first five books of the Hebrew Bible. This labeling system helps organize the biblical verses by their source, following a pattern seen throughout Ma’avar Yabok’s prayer sequences.

[vi] This phrase literally means “at the edge of the heavens” and evokes the image of being at the farthest possible distance from God, spiritually or physically. In the context of illness, it may metaphorically represent the feeling of spiritual distance that suffering can create.

לְבָבְךָ[i] וְאֶת לְבַב זַרְעֶךָ לְאַהֲבָה
1820 אֶת יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ בְּכָל לְבָבְךָ וּבְכָל
נַפְשְׁךָ לְמַעַן חַיֶּיךָ: וְהוֹתִירְךָ יְיָ
אֱלֹהֶיךָ בְּכֹל מַעֲשֵׂה יָדֶךָ בִּפְרִי
בִטְנְךָ וּבִפְרִי בְהֶמְתְּךָ וּבִפְרִי
אַדְמָתְךָ לְטוֹבָה כִּי יָשׂוּב יְיָ
1825 לָשׂוּשׂ עָלֶיךָ לְטוֹב כַּאֲשֶׁר שָׂשׂ
עַל אֲבֹתֶיךָ: חִזְקוּ וְאִמְצוּ אַל
תִּירְאוּ וְאַל תַּעַרְצוּ מִפְּנֵיהֶם
כִּי יְיָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ הוּא הַהֹלֵךְ עִמָּךְ
לֹא יַרְפְּךָ וְלֹא יַעַזְבֶךָּ: וַיְיָ הוּא
1830 הַהֹלֵךְ לְפָנֶיךָ הוּא יִהְיֶה עִמָּךְ לֹא
יַרְפְּךָ וְלֹא יַעַזְבֶךָּ לֹא תִירָא וְלֹא
תֵחָת: הַאֲזִינוּ הַשָּׁמַיִם וַאֲדַבֵּרָה
וְתִשְׁמַע הָאָרֶץ אִמְרֵי פִי: יַעֲרֹף
כַּמָּטָר לִקְחִי[ii] תִּזַּל כַּטַּל אִמְרָתִי
1835 כִּשְׂעִירִם עֲלֵי דֶשֶׁא וְכִרְבִיבִים
עֲלֵי עֵשֶׂב: כִּי שֵׁם יְיָ אֶקְרָא הָבוּ
גֹדֶל לֵאלֹהֵינוּ:[iii]

your God will circumcise your heart[1] and the heart of your offspring, to love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your soul, for the sake of your life. And the LORD your God will prosper you abundantly in all the work of your hands, in the fruit of your womb, in the fruit of your cattle, and in the fruit of your soil, for good; for the LORD will again rejoice over you for good, as He rejoiced over your fathers. Be strong and courageous,[2] do not fear or be dismayed because of them, for the LORD your God is the One who goes with you; He will not fail you or forsake you. And the LORD is the One who goes before you; He will be with you, He will not fail you or forsake you; do not fear or be dismayed. Give ear, O heavens, and I will speak; and let the earth hear the words of my mouth. May my teaching drop like rain,[3] my speech distill like dew, like gentle rain upon the tender grass, and like showers upon the herb. For I proclaim the name of the LORD; ascribe greatness to our God.[4]

2030R 2035R 2040R 2045R

(נביאים) יָשׂוּב יְרַחֵמְנוּ יִכְבֹּשׁ

(Prophets) He will return and have compassion on

[1]Heart circumcision serves as a powerful metaphor for the spiritual purification that can come through suffering. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this suggests that illness itself can function as a divine instrument to remove spiritual barriers and open one's heart to deeper love of God.

[2]This phrase ('chizku ve'imtzu') comes from words of encouragement originally given to Joshua and Israel before battle. In Ma'avar Yabok, these military encouragements are repurposed as spiritual comfort for the sick and dying, transforming the battlefield into the struggle against illness and death.

[3]The Hebrew verbs for 'drop' (ya'arof) and 'distill' (tizal) create a beautiful image of divine teaching gently descending like life-giving precipitation. In the context of prayers for healing, these verses suggest that divine words themselves have restorative power, refreshing the parched soul of the suffering person.

[4]This concluding phrase shifts from Moses speaking to an exhortation for the listeners to respond, creating a dialogical element in the prayer. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this invites the sick person and those attending them to acknowledge divine sovereignty even in the midst of suffering.

[i]Heart circumcision is a recurring metaphor in biblical literature for spiritual transformation. Unlike physical circumcision which removes flesh, heart circumcision involves removing spiritual impediments to loving God fully.

[ii]The verb יַעֲרֹף (ya'arof) has the unusual double meaning of both "to drop (like rain)" and "to break the neck." This wordplay connects the life-giving nature of rain with the sacrificial breaking of an animal's neck, suggesting that divine teaching involves both nurturing and breaking.

[iii]Cf. Deuteronomy 30:3-6 — These verses from Deuteronomy about divine gathering and heart circumcision are used here to provide comfort to someone who is ill, creating a spiritual connection between physical healing and the promised divine ingathering of Israel. The imagery of God circumcising the heart represents spiritual purification that the ill person may experience through their suffering. | Cf. Deuteronomy 31:6-8 — These verses of encouragement were originally spoken by Moses to Israel and Joshua before entering the Promised Land. In Ma'avar Yabok, they're repurposed to comfort the sick, assuring them that God is present in their suffering and will not abandon them in their time of need. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:1-3 — These opening verses from Moses's final song are included to invoke divine attention to the prayers being offered. The comparison of teaching to rain and dew suggests that divine words bring life and refreshment to the suffering person, just as rain revives withered vegetation.

עֲוֹנֹתֵינוּ וְתַשְׁלִיךְ בִּמְצֻלוֹת יָם כָּל
1840 חַטֹּאותָם: תִּתֵּן אֱמֶת לְיַעֲקֹב חֶסֶד
לְאַבְרָהָם אֲשֶׁר נִשְׁבַּעְתָּ לַאֲבֹתֵינוּ
מִימֵי קֶדֶם: טוֹב יְיָ לְמָעוֹז בְּיוֹם
צָרָה וְיֹדֵעַ חֹסֵי בוֹ: לָמָּה תַרְאֵנִי
אָוֶן וְעָמָל תַּבִּיט וְשֹׁד וְחָמָס לְנֶגְדִּי
1845 וַיְהִי רִיב וּמָדוֹן יִשָּׂא: טְהוֹר
עֵינַיִם מֵרְאוֹת רָע וְהַבִּיט אֶל עָמָל
לֹא תוּכָל לָמָּה תַבִּיט בּוֹגְדִים
תַּחֲרִישׁ בְּבַלַּע רָשָׁע צַדִּיק מִמֶּנּוּ:
יְיָ שָׁמַעְתִּי שִׁמְעֲךָ יָרֵאתִי[i] יְיָ פָּעָלְךָ
1850 בְּקֶרֶב שָׁנִים חַיֵּהוּ בְּקֶרֶב שָׁנִים
תּוֹדִיעַ בְּרֹגֶז רַחֵם תִּזְכּוֹר:[ii] וַאֲנִי
בַּיהוָה אֶעְלוֹזָה אָגִילָה בֵּאלֹהֵי
יִשְׁעִי: יְיָ אֲדֹנָי חֵילִי וַיָּשֶׂם רַגְלַי
כָּאַיָּלוֹת[iii] וְעַל בָּמוֹתַי יַדְרִכֵנִי
1855 [v iv] לַמְנַצֵּחַ בִּנְגִינוֹתָי:

us;[1] He will subdue our iniquities and cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.[2] You will give truth to 2050R Jacob and loving-kindness to Abraham, as You have sworn to our fathers from days of old. The LORD is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knows those who take refuge in Him. Why do You show me iniquity, and cause me to behold trouble? 2055R
For destruction and violence are before me; strife and contention arise.[A] You who are of purer eyes than to behold evil, and cannot look on wickedness, why do
You look on those who deal treacherously,[3] and hold Your tongue when the wicked devours one more right- 2060R eous than he? O LORD, I have heard Your speech and was afraid; O LORD, revive Your work in the midst of the years! In the midst of the years make it known; in wrath remember mercy.[4] Yet I will rejoice in the LORD, I will joy in the God of my salvation. 2065R
The LORD God is my strength; He will make my feet like deer's feet,[5] and He will make me walk on my

[A] Or: "and there is strife, and contention flourishes" — This alternate translation better captures the Hebrew 'yissa' which suggests something being lifted up or flourishing, rather than simply arising. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this emphasizes how conflict and discord actively grow in environments of injustice.

[1] The Hebrew verb 'yashuv' (will return) carries connotations of repentance and restoration, suggesting not just God's return to His people but a complete reversal of their condition.
[2] This powerful metaphor for complete forgiveness suggests sins being placed where they can never be retrieved—a comforting image for the sick person concerned about spiritual standing.
[3] Habakkuk's bold questioning of divine justice reflects the Jewish tradition of wrestling with God. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this gives voice to the sick person's legitimate spiritual struggles without suggesting lack of faith.
[4] This central plea reflects Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework that illness may serve as divine correction (wrath) while still being administered with compassion (mercy).
[5] The image shifts from physical disability to supernatural ability, suggesting that divine strength manifests most powerfully in human weakness—a theme especially relevant for the ill.

[i] The word expresses holy fear or awe rather than simple fright—it represents the appropriate response to divine revelation, combining reverence with trembling.
[ii] This phrase powerfully expresses the central theological concept in Ma'avar Yabok that divine judgment is always tempered with mercy. Even in wrath (rogez), God remembers (tizkor) compassion (rachem).
[iii] The image of deer's feet refers to sure-footedness on difficult terrain, suggesting divine assistance in navigating the challenges of illness and suffering.
[iv] This musical direction, literally "To the conductor with my stringed instruments," appears in Habakkuk 3:19 as the conclusion to the prophet's prayer. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, it suggests that even suffering can ultimately be transformed into a song of praise.
[v] Cf. Micah 7:19-20 — These verses serve as a foundation for hope in divine mercy during times of suffering, connecting the sick person's situation to God's historical covenant faithfulness | Cf. Nahum 1:7 — This verse provides comfort to the sick by presenting God as a reliable refuge in times of distress | Cf. Habakkuk 1:3, 1:13 — These verses give voice to the sick person's spiritual struggles, allowing them to express confusion about suffering while maintaining faith | Cf. Habakkuk 3:2, 3:18-19 — These verses model the ideal spiritual response to suffering: honest prayer followed by determined joy in God despite circumstances high hills.[A] To the Chief Musician with my stringed instruments.

(תהלים) אִם אֵלֵךְ בְּקֶרֶב צָרָה
תְּחַיֵּנִי[i] עַל אַף אֹיְבַי תִּשְׁלַח יָדֶךָ
וְתוֹשִׁיעֵנִי יְמִינֶךָ: יְהוָה יִגְמֹר בַּעֲדִי
יְהוָה חַסְדְּךָ לְעוֹלָם מַעֲשֵׂי יָדֶיךָ
אַל תֶּרֶף: כִּי אֵין מִלָּה בִּלְשׁוֹנִי
הֵן יְיָ יָדַעְתָּ כֻּלָּהּ: חָלְצֵנִי יְיָ
מֵאָדָם רָע מֵאִישׁ חֲמָסִים תִּנְצְרֵנִי:
אֲשֶׁר חָשְׁבוּ רָעוֹת בְּלֵב כָּל יוֹם
יָגוּרוּ מִלְחָמוֹת: שָׁנְנוּ לְשׁוֹנָם כְּמוֹ
נָחָשׁ חֲמַת עַכְשׁוּב תַּחַת שִׂפְתֵימוֹ
סֶלָה:[ii] שָׁמְרֵנִי יְיָ מִידֵי רָשָׁע
מֵאִישׁ חֲמָסִים תִּנְצְרֵנִי אֲשֶׁר חָשְׁבוּ
לִדְחוֹת פְּעָמָי: אָמַרְתִּי לַיְיָ אֵלִי
אָתָּה הַאֲזִינָה יְיָ קוֹל תַּחֲנוּנָי:
אֲל תִּתֵּן יְיָ מַאֲוַיֵּי רָשָׁע זְמָמוֹ אַל
תָּפֵק יָרוּמוּ סֶלָה: אִישׁ לָשׁוֹן בַּל
יִכּוֹן בָּאָרֶץ אִישׁ חָמָס רָע יְצוּדֶנּוּ
לְמַדְחֵפוֹת: יָדַעְתִּי כִּי יַעֲשֶׂה יְיָ
דִּין עָנִי מִשְׁפַּט אֶבְיוֹנִים: תְּכוֹן
תְּפִלָּתִי קְטֹרֶת לְפָנֶיךָ מַשְׂאַת כַּפַּי
מִנְחַת עָרֶב:[iii] כִּי אֵלֶיךָ יְיָ אֲדֹנָי
עֵינָי בְּכָה חָסִיתִי אַל תְּעַר נַפְשִׁי:

(Psalms) Though I walk in the midst of trouble, You preserve my life;[1] You stretch out Your hand against the wrath of my enemies, and Your right hand saves me. The LORD will fulfill His purpose for me; Your steadfast love, O LORD, endures forever; do not abandon the works of Your hands. For there is not a word on my tongue, but behold, O LORD, You know it altogether. Deliver me, O LORD, from evil men; preserve me from violent men, who plan evil in their hearts; all day long they stir up wars. They sharpen their tongues like a serpent;[B] the venom of asps is under their lips.[2] Selah. Keep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from violent men who have planned to trip up my steps. I said to the LORD, "You are my God"; hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD. O LORD, do not grant the desires of the wicked; do not further their evil plot, lest they be exalted. Selah. As for the head of those who surround me, let the evil of their lips cover them. A man of tongue shall not be established in the earth;[C] a man of violence and evil shall be hunted with thrust upon thrust.[D] I know that the LORD

2070R 2075R 2080R 2085R 2090R

[A] Or: "and He makes me tread upon my heights" — This alternate translation better preserves the active sense of the Hebrew verb 'yadrikheni' (He makes me tread/walk) and maintains the metaphor of confident movement through challenging terrain, which is significant in the context of spiritual struggle during illness.

[B] Or: "They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent" — This alternate uses past tense rather than present, which might better reflect the perfective aspect of the Hebrew verb. Either translation is valid depending on whether one wishes to emphasize the completed action or ongoing state.

[C] Or: "The slanderer will not endure in the land" — This alternate offers a more dynamic translation that clarifies the meaning of 'man of tongue' (אִישׁ לָשׁוֹן) as a slanderer or malicious speaker, and might be more accessible to modern readers while maintaining the essential meaning.

[D] Or: "evil shall hunt him with overturning blows" — The Hebrew term 'מַדְחֵפוֹת' is difficult to translate precisely. This alternate interprets it as describing the nature of the hunting rather than as an adverbial phrase, which might better capture the intensity of the divine judgment described.

[1] This verse establishes the central theme of divine preservation even in the midst of suffering, which resonates throughout Ma'avar Yabok as a comfort for the sick and dying.

[2] While the original text uses vivid imagery of serpents and venom to describe human enemies, in the context of Ma'avar Yabok these metaphors take on additional meaning as spiritual forces that threaten the ill person—including the Angel of Death and negative spiritual accusers.

[i] This opening verse from Psalm 138:7 sets the tone for the entire compilation, expressing confidence that God preserves life even in the midst of trouble—a central theme for those who are ill.

[ii] The imagery of serpents and venom appears frequently in psalms as metaphors for dangerous enemies. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these enemies can be understood both as human adversaries and as spiritual forces threatening the ill person.

[iii] This verse from Psalm 141:2 is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok, as it connects to the work's fourth section titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer), which presents prayer as a spiritual substitute for the Temple incense offerings.

שָׁמְרֵנִי מִידֵי פַּח יָקְשׁוּ לִי וּמֹקְשׁוֹת
פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן: יִפְּלוּ בְמַכְמֹרָיו רְשָׁעִים
1880 יַחַד אָנֹכִי עַד אֶעֱבוֹר: קוֹלִי אֶל יְיָ
אֶזְעָק קוֹלִי אֶל יְיָ אֶתְחַנָּן: אֶשְׁפֹּךְ
לְפָנָיו שִׂיחִי צָרָתִי לְפָנָיו אַגִּיד:
בְּהִתְעַטֵּף [i]עָלַי רוּחִי וְאַתָּה יָדַעְתָּ
נְתִיבָתִי בְּאֹרַח זוּ אֲהַלֵּךְ טָמְנוּ
1885 פַּח לִי: הַבֵּיט יָמִין וּרְאֵה וְאֵין לִי
מַכִּיר אָבַד מָנוֹס מִמֶּנִּי אֵין דּוֹרֵשׁ
לְנַפְשִׁי:[ii] זָעַקְתִּי אֵלֶיךָ יְיָ אָמַרְתִּי
אַתָּה מַחְסִי חֶלְקִי בְּאֶרֶץ הַחַיִּים:
הַקְשִׁיבָה אֶל רִנָּתִי כִּי דַלּוֹתִי מְאֹד
1890 הַצִּילֵנִי מֵרֹדְפַי כִּי אָמְצוּ מִמֶּנִּי:
הוֹצִיאָה מִמַּסְגֵּר נַפְשִׁי לְהוֹדוֹת אֶת
שְׁמֶךָ בִּי יַכְתִּירוּ צַדִּיקִים כִּי תִגְמֹל
עָלָי: מִזְמוֹר לְדָוִד יְיָ שְׁמַע תְּפִלָּתִי
הַאֲזִינָה אֶל תַּחֲנוּנַי בֶּאֱמֶנְתְּךָ עֲנֵנִי
1895 בְּצִדְקָתֶךָ: וְאַל תָּבוֹא בְמִשְׁפָּט
אֶת עַבְדֶּךָ כִּי לֹא יִצְדַּק לְפָנֶיךָ
כָּל חָי: כִּי רָדַף אוֹיֵב נַפְשִׁי דִּכָּא
לָאָרֶץ חַיָּתִי הוֹשִׁיבַנִי בְמַחֲשַׁכִּים
כְּמֵתֵי עוֹלָם: וַתִּתְעַטֵּף עָלַי רוּחִי
1900 בְּתוֹכִי יִשְׁתּוֹמֵם לִבִּי: זָכַרְתִּי יָמִים
מִקֶּדֶם הָגִיתִי בְכָל פָּעֳלֶךָ בְּמַעֲשֵׂה
יָדֶיךָ אֲשׂוֹחֵחַ: פָּרַשְׂתִּי יָדַי אֵלֶיךָ
נַפְשִׁי כְּאֶרֶץ עֲיֵפָה לְךָ סֶלָה: מַהֵר
עֲנֵנִי יְיָ כָּלְתָה רוּחִי אַל תַּסְתֵּר
1905 פָּנֶיךָ מִמֶּנִּי וְנִמְשַׁלְתִּי עִם יֹרְדֵי
בוֹר: הַשְׁמִיעֵנִי בַבֹּקֶר חַסְדֶּךָ כִּי
בְךָ בָטָחְתִּי הוֹדִיעֵנִי דֶּרֶךְ זוּ אֵלֶךְ
כִּי אֵלֶיךָ נָשָׂאתִי נַפְשִׁי: הַצִּילֵנִי
מֵאוֹיְבַי יְהוָה אֵלֶיךָ כִּסִּתִי: לַמְּדֵנִי 1910 לַעֲשׂוֹת רְצוֹנֶךָ כִּי אַתָּה אֱלוֹהַּ

will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and justice for the poor. Surely the righteous shall give thanks to Your name; the upright shall dwell in Your presence. Let my prayer be set before You as incense,[1] the 2095R lifting of my hands as the evening sacrifice. For my eyes are toward You, O LORD, my Lord; in You I take refuge; do not leave my soul destitute. Keep me from the trap they have set for me, and from the snares of evildoers. Let the wicked fall into their 2100R own nets, while I pass by safely. I cry out to the LORD with my voice; with my voice to the LORD I make my supplication. I pour out my complaint before Him; I declare my trouble before Him. When my spirit grows faint within me,[2] You know my path. 2105R In the way where I walk they have hidden a trap for me. Look to the right and see; for there is no one who acknowledges me; refuge has failed me; no one cares for my soul. I cry to You, O LORD; I say, "You are my refuge, my portion in the land of the 2110R living." Attend to my cry, for I am brought very low; deliver me from my persecutors, for they are stronger than I. Bring my soul out of prison,[A] that I may praise Your name; the righteous will surround me, for You will deal bountifully with me. A Psalm 2115R of David. O LORD, hear my prayer, give ear to my supplications; in Your faithfulness answer me, and in Your righteousness. Do not enter into judgment with Your servant, for in Your sight no one living is righteous. For the enemy has persecuted my soul; 2120R he has crushed my life to the ground; he has made me dwell in darkness, like those long dead. Therefore my spirit is overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is distressed. I remember the days of old;

[A] Or: "Free my soul from confinement" — This alternate uses more contemporary language that might better convey the metaphorical nature of the 'prison' (מַסְגֵּר) as any form of constraint or limitation, including illness, which would be relevant in Ma'avar Yabok's context.

[1] This metaphor comparing prayer to incense is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok, whose fourth section is titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer). The text presents prayer as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings, creating the same cosmic effects as the physical incense once did.

[2] The Hebrew term 'בְּהִתְעַטֵּף' describes a wrapping or enveloping of the spirit, conveying profound spiritual distress. In Ma'avar Yabok, this connects to the experience of the soul as it struggles during illness and approaches its transition at death.

[i] This phrase literally describes a spirit/soul that is wrapped around or enveloped, conveying a sense of being spiritually overwhelmed. In Ma'avar Yabok, this connects to the concept of the soul's struggle during illness and its eventual transition at death.

[ii] This expression of abandonment—'no one cares for my soul'—is particularly poignant in the context of Ma'avar Yabok, which emphasizes the importance of community presence with the sick and dying.

רוּחֶךָ טוֹבָה תַּנְחֵנִי בְּאֶרֶץ מִישׁוֹר:
לְמַעַן שִׁמְךָ יְיָ תְּחַיֵּנִי בְּצִדְקָתְךָ
תּוֹצִיא מִצָּרָה נַפְשִׁי:[i][ii]

I meditate on all Your works; I ponder on the work of Your hands. I spread out my hands to You; my soul longs for You like a thirsty land. Selah. Answer me speedily, O LORD; my spirit fails. Do not hide Your face from me, lest I be like those who go down into the pit.[1] Cause me to hear Your lovingkindness in the morning, for in You do I trust; cause me to know the way in which I should walk, for I lift up my soul to You. Deliver me, O LORD, from my enemies; in You I take shelter. Teach me to do Your will, for You are my God; Your Spirit is good. Lead me in the land of uprightness. Revive me, O LORD, for Your name's sake; for Your righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble."[2]

(כתובים) הִנְנוּ לְפָנֶיךָ
בְּאַשְׁמָתֵינוּ[iii] כִּי אֵין לַעֲמוֹד
לְפָנֶיךָ עַל זֹאת: קוּם כִּי עָלֶיךָ
הַדָּבָר וַאֲנַחְנוּ עִמָּךְ חֲזַק וַעֲשֵׂה:
אָנָּא אֲדֹנָי תְּהִי נָא אָזְנְךָ קַשֻּׁבָה
אֶל תְּפִלַּת עַבְדְּךָ וְאֶל תְּפִלַּת
עֲבָדֶיךָ הַחֲפֵצִים לְיִרְאָה אֶת שְׁמֶךָ
וְהַצְלִיחָה נָא לְעַבְדְּךָ הַיּוֹם וּתְנֵהוּ

(Writings) Here we stand before You in our guilt,[3] for we cannot stand before You because of this. Arise, for the matter is upon you, and we are with you; be strong and act. Please, O Lord, let Your ear be attentive to the prayer of Your servant and to the prayer of Your servants who desire to fear Your name. Grant success to Your servant today and give him compassion before this man.[4] Remember me,

[1] This reference to 'those who go down into the pit' (יֹרְדֵי בוֹר) appears frequently in the psalms as a euphemism for death or the grave. In Ma'avar Yabok, these expressions take on special significance as the text prepares the soul for its journey beyond physical life.

[2] The psalm compilation concludes with this appeal to divine righteousness rather than human merit, reflecting Ma'avar Yabok's consistent theological position that divine mercy—not human deservingness—is the basis for salvation from both physical and spiritual distress.

[3] This opening adapts language from penitential prayers found in Ezra and Daniel, establishing a confession of sin as the foundation for approaching God in time of need.

[4] This phrase from Nehemiah 1:11 originally referred to King Artaxerxes, but is adapted here to apply to whoever has authority over the sufferer's situation—perhaps a physician, caretaker, or other authority figure whose compassion is being sought.

[i] The compilation concludes with this plea for divine intervention based not on the supplicant's merit but on God's name and righteousness. This reflects the theological stance throughout Ma'avar Yabok that emphasizes divine mercy rather than human deservingness.

[ii] Cf. Psalms 138:7-8 — The passage begins with verses from Psalm 138, establishing a tone of divine protection and mercy that sets the foundation for this prayer collection used for the sick and dying. | Cf. Psalm 139:4 — This reference emphasizes God's omniscience, suggesting that even when the sick person cannot properly articulate prayers, God already knows their thoughts and needs. | Cf. Psalm 140:1-13 — In Ma'avar Yabok, these verses take on a metaphorical meaning where the 'enemies' represent illness, suffering, and spiritual accusers that threaten the sick person. | Cf. Psalm 141:2 — This reference connects to the fourth section of Ma'avar Yabok titled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer), reinforcing the concept that prayer serves as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings. | Cf. Psalm 142:1-7 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this psalm reflects the experience of the sick or dying person who feels isolated and overwhelmed, seeking divine refuge when human help fails. | Cf. Psalm 143:1-12 — Psalm 143 appears in Ma'avar Yabok's structured liturgical sequences specifically in the context of prayers for the dying. Its themes of divine judgment, human frailty, and appeal for mercy make it especially appropriate for deathbed contexts.

[iii] The prayer opens with an acknowledgment of guilt before God, a common theme in Jewish penitential prayers that establishes the appropriate spiritual stance for seeking divine mercy.

לְרַחֲמִים לִפְנֵי הָאִישׁ הַזֶּה: וַתִּכְרֶה
לִּי אֱלֹהַי לְטוֹבָה כֹּל אֲשֶׁר עָשִׂיתִי
עַל הָעָם הַזֶּה: וּבְרַחֲמֶיךָ הָרַבִּים
1925 לֹא עָשִׂיתָם כָּלָה וְלֹא עֲזַבְתָּם כִּי
אֵל חַנּוּן וְרַחוּם אָתָּה: וְאַתָּה צַדִּיק
עַל כָּל הַבָּא עָלֵינוּ כִּי אֱמֶת עָשִׂיתָ
וַאֲנַחְנוּ הִרְשָׁעְנוּ: וְרוּחַ לָבְשָׁה אֶת
עֲמָשַׂי[i] רֹאשׁ הַשָּׁלִשִׁים לְךָ דָוִיד
1930 וְעִמְּךָ בֶן יִשַׁי שָׁלוֹם שָׁלוֹם לָךְ
וְשָׁלוֹם לְעֹזְרֶךָ כִּי עֶזְרְךָ אֱלֹהֶיךָ
וַיְקַבְּלֵם דָּוִיד וַיִּתְּנֵם בְּרָאשֵׁי
הַגְּדוּד: [ii] הוֹדוּ לַיהוָה קִרְאוּ
בִשְׁמוֹ הוֹדִיעוּ בָעַמִּים עֲלִילֹתָיו:
1935 אַל תִּגְּעוּ בִּמְשִׁיחָי וּבִנְבִיאַי אַל
תָּרֵעוּ: וְאִמְרוּ הוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ אֱלֹהֵי
יִשְׁעֵנוּ וְקַבְּצֵנוּ וְהַצִּילֵנוּ מִן הַגּוֹיִם
לְהֹדוֹת לְשֵׁם קָדְשֶׁךָ לְהִשְׁתַּבֵּחַ
בִּתְהִלָּתֶךָ: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
1940 מִן הָעוֹלָם וְעַד הָעֹלָם[iii] וַיֹּאמְרוּ
כָּל הָעָם אָמֵן וְהַלֵּל לַיְיָ: וְיֵאָמֵן
וְיִגְדַּל שִׁמְךָ עַד עוֹלָם לֵאמֹר יְיָ
צְבָאוֹת אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל אֱלֹהִים
לְיִשְׂרָאֵל וּבֵית דָּוִיד עַבְדְּךָ נָכוֹן
1945 [iv] לְפָנֶיךָ:

my God, for good, all that I have done for this people. In Your abundant mercy, You did not make an end of them nor forsake them, for You are a gracious and merciful God. You are righteous concerning all 2150R that has come upon us, for You have acted truthfully, and we have acted wickedly.[A] And the spirit clothed Amasai, chief of the captains:[B] "Yours, David, and with you, son of Jesse! Peace, peace to you, and peace to your helper, for your God helps you."[1] And 2155R David received them and placed them among the leaders of the troop. Give thanks to the LORD, call upon His name, make known His deeds among the peoples.[2] Do not touch My anointed ones, and do not harm My prophets. And say, "Save us, O God 2160R of our salvation, and gather us and deliver us from the nations, to give thanks to Your holy name, to glory in Your praise." Blessed be the LORD, the God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting. And all the people said, "Amen" and praised the LORD. 2165R
And may Your name be established and magnified forever, saying, "The LORD of hosts, God of Israel, is God to Israel, and the house of David Your servant is established before You."[3]

[A] Or: "You are just in all that has befallen us, for You have dealt faithfully, while we have acted wickedly" — This alternate translation uses "just" instead of "righteous" and "dealt faithfully" instead of "acted truthfully" to provide a more fluid English rendering while maintaining the theological contrast between God's justice and human sinfulness.

[B] Or: "And a spirit enveloped Amasai, chief of the officers" — The Hebrew "לָבְשָׁה" (lavshah) literally means "clothed" or "wore," but in this context of spiritual possession or inspiration, "enveloped" better conveys the sense of being overtaken by divine inspiration. Also, "השלישים" can be translated as "officers" rather than "captains" for a more contemporary military understanding.

[1] The inclusion of this biblical narrative about Amasai's divinely inspired pledge to David serves as a powerful metaphor: just as God confirmed David's right to leadership and promised him help, so too the prayer seeks divine confirmation and help for the petitioner in their time of need.

[2] The prayer shifts from personal petition to communal praise, drawing from David's psalm in 1 Chronicles 16. This movement from individual need to communal worship places the petitioner's suffering within the broader context of God's salvation history.

[3] The prayer concludes by affirming God's eternal covenant with Israel and David, providing ultimate assurance that despite present suffering, God's promises remain secure and will be fulfilled.

[i] This reference to 1 Chronicles 12:18 describes a moment when Amasai was divinely inspired to pledge loyalty to David. The Hebrew expression "the spirit clothed" (רוח לבשה) conveys the idea of being completely overtaken or enveloped by divine inspiration.

[ii] This completes the narrative from 1 Chronicles 12:18, showing that David accepted those who came to him, just as the prayer asks God to accept the petitioner.

[iii] This doxology (formal praise to God) comes from 1 Chronicles 16:36 and forms part of the standard conclusion to the first book of Psalms (Psalm 41:14), marking a natural ending point for the prayer.

[iv] Cf. Ezra 9:15 — The author incorporates this confession of communal sin from Ezra to express complete submission to divine judgment, acknowledging God's justice in whatever suffering may befall the person. | Cf. 1 Chronicles 12:18 — By including this biblical narrative of divine

חֲבוֹשׁ סִבְרִי מְצוּדָתִי וְנֹרִי.[i] וְסִבְרִי בָּךְ לְחַתֵּל בִּי כְּאֵבִי.[ii] יְחִידָתִי[iii] לְבַד בִּשְׁמָךְ תְּיַחֵל וְחֵן לָךְ אֵל יְקַוֶּה אֶת לִבָּבִי:[iv]

Bind up my hope,[A] my fortress, and my light.[1] And my hope is in You to heal my pain. My soul[B] alone will wait upon Your name,[2] and behold, my heart will hope in You, O God.[3] 2170R

1950 מנחה ליום שבת

Afternoon Prayer for the Sabbath Day

אמר פסוקי אנא ה׳[v] ואחר כך יאמר מזמור ה׳ שמע תפלתי וגו׳ תהלים סימן קמ״ג[vi] תמצא לעיל

Say the verses of "Ana Hashem"[4] and then recite Psalm 143, "O LORD, hear my prayer, etc." which can be found above in Seder 8,[5] and afterwards say:[6] 2175R

[A] Or: "Bandage my hope" — This translation emphasizes the medical metaphor more explicitly, as חֲבוֹשׁ specifically refers to binding wounds. This would be preferable if wanting to highlight the connection between physical and spiritual healing that appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[B] Or: "My solitary one" — This more literal translation of יְחִידָתִי preserves the sense of isolation or uniqueness implied in the Hebrew, which might be preferable for emphasizing the soul's vulnerability and singular dependence on God.

[1] The Hebrew חֲבוֹשׁ carries the medical sense of binding up wounds, suggesting that the speaker's spiritual resources (hope, fortress, light) need divine healing or strengthening.

[2] The Hebrew יְחִידָתִי (literally 'my only one') is a traditional poetic term for the soul, especially when in danger, creating a sense of the soul's singular focus on God during distress.

[3] The concluding phrase presents a chiastic structure with the opening line—beginning with hope (סִבְרִי) and ending with hope (יְקַוֶּה), creating a full circle of dependence on divine assistance.

[4] These instructions are clearly part of a step-by-step guide for performing deathbed rituals. The text assumes the reader knows which "Ana Hashem" verses to recite, as these would be standard in the liturgical context of Ma'avar Yabok.

[5] This reference to "Seder 8" demonstrates how Ma'avar Yabok functions as a practical manual with internal cross-references. Rather than repeating the full text of Psalm 143, it directs the reader to where it appears earlier in the book.

[6] This instruction indicates that what follows (not included in this excerpt) would be the next step in the ritual sequence. The colon suggests that the next text would provide the specific words to be recited after Psalm 143.

confirmation of David's leadership, the prayer seeks divine validation and assistance for the ill person, suggesting that just as God helped David in crisis, so too will God help the sufferer. | Cf. Nehemiah 1:6-11 — The prayer borrows Nehemiah's language to similarly request divine favor before approaching an earthly authority figure (possibly a physician or caretaker), asking God to make this person merciful toward the petitioner. | Cf. 1 Chronicles 16:8, 22, 35-36 — By incorporating this hymn of praise into a prayer for the sick, the text reminds the sufferer of God's covenant faithfulness and power to save, suggesting that the same God who protected Israel will protect the individual in their illness.

[i] Poetic opening using the imperative 'bind up' (חֲבוֹשׁ) followed by three nouns with first-person possessive suffixes: 'my hope,' 'my fortress,' and 'my light.' This creates a triad of spiritual resources the speaker seeks to have secured or strengthened.

[ii] The verb לְחַתֵּל carries the sense of binding wounds or swaddling an infant, creating a powerful image of God tenderly treating the speaker's pain.

[iii] יְחִידָתִי (literally 'my only one') is a traditional poetic reference to the soul, particularly in contexts of danger or distress. This creates a parallel to Psalm 22:21 and 35:17 where the same term appears.

[iv] Cf. Psalm 31:25 — This poetic prayer echoes the psalmist's expressions of hope in God during times of distress, particularly drawing on the language and sentiment of Psalm 31, where the psalmist declares trust in God despite suffering. | Cf. Psalm 62:6 — The phrase 'my soul alone will wait upon Your name' parallels Psalm 62's expression of the soul's exclusive reliance on God as the only true source of hope, especially in times of suffering.

[v] "Ana Hashem" (Please, O LORD) refers to the opening formula that begins each of the prayer sequences in Ma'avar Yabok, a set of verses that start with this phrase.

[vi] Psalm 143 is specifically prescribed for recitation at times of distress or when approaching death. Its themes of divine mercy despite human frailty and appeals for guidance make it particularly appropriate in this context.

סדר ח׳ ואח״כ יאמר: [i]

(תורה) הַצּוּר תָּמִים פָּעֳלוֹ כִּי כָל דְּרָכָיו מִשְׁפָּט אֵל אֱמוּנָה וְאֵין עָוֶל צַדִּיק וְיָשָׁר הוּא: כִּי חֵלֶק יְיָ עַמּוֹ יַעֲקֹב חֶבֶל נַחֲלָתוֹ: כְּנֶשֶׁר יָעִיר קִנּוֹ עַל גּוֹזָלָיו יְרַחֵף יִפְרֹשׂ כְּנָפָיו יִקָּחֵהוּ יִשָּׂאֵהוּ עַל אֶבְרָתוֹ: יְיָ בָּדָד יַנְחֶנּוּ וְאֵין עִמּוֹ אֵל נֵכָר: יַרְכִּבֵהוּ עַל בָּמֳתֵי אֶרֶץ וַיֹּאכַל תְּנוּבֹת שָׂדָי וַיֵּנִקֵהוּ דְבַשׁ מִסֶּלַע וְשֶׁמֶן מֵחַלְמִישׁ צוּר: כִּי יָדִין יְיָ עַמּוֹ וְעַל עֲבָדָיו יִתְנֶחָם כִּי יִרְאֶה כִּי אָזְלַת יָד וְאֶפֶס עָצוּר וְעָזוּב: בָּרֵךְ יְיָ חֵילוֹ וּפֹעַל יָדָיו תִּרְצֶה מְחַץ מָתְנַיִם קָמָיו וּמְשַׂנְאָיו מִן יְקוּמוּן: אַשְׁרֶיךָ יִשְׂרָאֵל מִי כָמוֹךָ עַם נוֹשַׁע בַּיהוָה מָגֵן עֶזְרֶךָ וַאֲשֶׁר חֶרֶב גַּאֲוָתֶךָ וְיִכָּחֲשׁוּ אֹיְבֶיךָ לָךְ [ii] וְאַתָּה עַל בָּמוֹתֵימוֹ תִּדְרֹךְ:

(Torah) The Rock, His work is perfect, for all His ways are justice; a God of faithfulness without iniquity, righteous and upright is He. For the LORD's portion is His people; Jacob is the lot of His inheritance. Like an eagle that stirs up its nest,[1] hovers over its young, spreads its wings, takes them, bears them on its pinions—the LORD alone guided him, and there was no foreign god with him. He made him ride on the high places of the earth, and he ate the produce of the fields; He made him suck honey from the rock, and oil from the flinty stone. For the LORD will judge His people and have compassion on His servants when He sees that their power is gone,[2] and there is no one, bond or free. Bless, O LORD, his substance, and accept the work of his hands; smite the loins of those who rise up against him, and of those who hate him, that they rise no more.[A] Happy are you, O Israel! Who is like you, a people saved by the LORD, the shield of your help, and who is the sword of your excellency! Your enemies shall submit themselves to you,[B] and you shall tread upon their high places."[3]

(נביאים) הֵסִיר יְהוָה מִשְׁפָּטַיִךְ

(Prophets) The LORD has taken away your judg-

[A] Or: "that they cannot arise" — The Aramaic-influenced form 'yekumun' can be translated either as 'they rise no more' or 'they cannot arise,' with the latter perhaps capturing the finality of the defeat more explicitly.

[B] Or: "Your enemies shall cringe before you" — The Hebrew 'yikachashu' has connotations of both submission and cowering falsely or insincerely, so 'cringe before you' captures the sense that the enemies' submission is not wholehearted but forced.

[1] This powerful metaphor depicts God as a protective eagle teaching its young to fly—a particularly comforting image in Ma'avar Yabok's context of ministering to the sick or dying, suggesting divine support during life's transitions.

[2] The phrase 'אָזְלַת יָד' literally 'the hand has gone away' refers to weakness or helplessness, particularly relevant in the context of illness where physical strength diminishes.

[3] The prayer concludes with imagery of triumph and sovereignty, offering spiritual encouragement that transcends physical decline by focusing on Israel's ultimate victory through divine assistance.

[i] "Can be found above in Seder 8" refers to the eighth liturgical order or sequence within Ma'avar Yabok's structured prayer system. This cross-reference indicates that the complete text of Psalm 143 appears earlier in the book and need not be repeated in full here.

[ii] Cf. Deuteronomy 32:4-13 — This is a direct quotation from the Song of Moses in Deuteronomy, which praises God's perfect justice and His protective care for Israel. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses are used as part of a prayer for the sick or dying person, emphasizing God's perfect justice even in difficult circumstances and His special relationship with Israel. | Cf. Tziduk HaDin prayers — These verses are commonly incorporated into Tziduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment) prayers recited at funerals or during mourning. Their inclusion here connects to Ma'avar Yabok's extensive discussion of Tziduk HaDin in Chapter 21 of Discourse 2 and Chapter 26 of Discourse 5.

פְּנָה אוֹיְבֵךְ[i] מֶלֶךְ יִשְׂרָאֵל יְהוָה
בְּקִרְבֵּךְ לֹא תִירְאִי רָע עוֹד:
וַיֹּאמֶר יְהוָה אֶל הַשָּׂטָן יִגְעַר
יְהוָה בְּךָ הַשָּׂטָן[ii] וְיִגְעַר יְהוָה בָּךְ
הַבּוֹחֵר בִּירוּשָׁלַם הֲלוֹא זֶה אוּד
מֻצָּל מֵאֵשׁ:[iii] מִי אַתָּה הַר הַגָּדוֹל
לִפְנֵי זְרֻבָּבֶל לְמִישֹׁר וְהוֹצִיא
אֶת הָאֶבֶן הָרֹאשָׁה תְּשֻׁאוֹת חֵן
חֵן לָהּ:[iv] שׁוּבוּ לְבִצָּרוֹן אֲסִירֵי
הַתִּקְוָה[v] גַּם הַיּוֹם מַגִּיד מִשְׁנֶה
אָשִׁיב לָךְ:[vi] וְגִבַּרְתִּים בַּיהוָה
וּבִשְׁמוֹ יִתְהַלָּכוּ נְאֻם יְיָ: וְעָרְבָה
לַיהוָה מִנְחַת יְהוּדָה וִירוּשָׁלָם
כִּימֵי עוֹלָם וּכְשָׁנִים קַדְמֹנִיּוֹת:
וְזָרְחָה לָכֶם יִרְאֵי שְׁמִי שֶׁמֶשׁ

ments,[1] He has cleared away your enemy. The King of Israel, the LORD, is in your midst; you shall fear evil no more.[A] And the LORD said to Satan, "The LORD rebuke you, Satan! The LORD who has chosen Jerusalem rebuke you! Is this not 2205R a brand plucked from the fire?"[B2] "Who are you, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel you shall become a plain![3] And he shall bring forth the capstone with shouts of 'Grace, grace to it!'" Return to the stronghold, you prisoners of hope.[4] Even to- 2210R day I declare that I will restore double to you.[5] "I will strengthen them in the LORD, and they shall walk up and down in His name," says the LORD. "Then the offering of Judah and Jerusalem will be pleasant to the LORD, as in the days of old, as in 2215R

[A] Or: "you shall no longer be afraid of harm" — This alternate translation uses more contemporary phrasing while maintaining the meaning. It might be preferred in contexts where a more accessible modern rendering is desired.

[B] Or: "a burning stick snatched from the flames" — This alternate provides a more concrete visual image that might be clearer to modern readers unfamiliar with the term 'brand' in this context.

[1] The Hebrew uses the feminine singular form, addressing a collective entity (Jerusalem/Zion) as a woman. This verse begins a series of prophetic passages offering reassurance of divine protection and presence.

[2] This powerful metaphor describes someone or something rescued from near destruction. In the liturgical context of Ma'avar Yabok, this image would resonate with the concept of the soul being rescued from spiritual danger during illness or at death.

[3] Zerubbabel was the Persian-appointed governor of Judah who helped lead the return from exile and the rebuilding of the Temple. The verse uses him as a symbol of divinely appointed leadership that can overcome seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

[4] This paradoxical phrase 'prisoners of hope' captures the tension experienced by those who are suffering yet maintain faith. In the context of illness or approaching death, this offers the divine presence as a stronghold or fortress of protection.

[5] This promise of double restoration echoes the legal principle where stolen goods were repaid twofold. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this suggests that spiritual compensation will exceed temporal suffering.

[i] This opening verse from Zephaniah 3:15 addresses Jerusalem collectively using feminine pronouns. The 'judgments' (מִשְׁפָּטִיךְ) here refer to divine punishments that have been removed, suggesting a transition from judgment to mercy.

[ii] This verse from Zechariah 3:2 features God speaking about Himself in the third person, creating a powerful rhetorical effect. The Hebrew 'Satan' (הַשָּׂטָן) functions here as 'the accuser' or adversary, not necessarily the personified evil being of later tradition.

[iii] This metaphor of 'a brand plucked from the fire' describes someone narrowly rescued from destruction. In the original context, it referred to Joshua the high priest, representing post-exilic Israel's narrow escape from national destruction.

[iv] The repeated word 'grace' (חֵן חֵן) creates an intensifying effect, emphasizing the abundance of divine favor. The feminine pronoun 'to her' (לָהּ) refers to the capstone mentioned earlier in the verse.

[v] The metaphor 'prisoners of hope' (אֲסִירֵי הַתִּקְוָה) presents hope as something that both imprisons (creates longing) and liberates. In the original context, this addressed exiles who were invited to return to Jerusalem.

[vi] The promise to restore 'double' draws on the legal concept where stolen property was to be repaid twofold (Exodus 22:4,7). This suggests divine compensation that exceeds what was lost.

צְדָקָה וּמַרְפֵּא בִּכְנָפֶיהָ[i] וְיִצָּאתֶם
וּפִשְׁתֶּם כְּעֶגְלֵי מַרְבֵּק: וְעַסּוֹתֶם
רְשָׁעִים כִּי יִהְיוּ אֵפֶר תַּחַת כַּפּוֹת
רַגְלֵיכֶם[ii] בַּיּוֹם אֲשֶׁר אֲנִי עֹשֶׂה
זֹאת[iii] אָמַר יְיָ צְבָאוֹת:

former years.[1] But to you who fear My name the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in His wings;[2] you shall go out and grow fat like stall-fed calves.[A] You shall trample the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet[3] on the day that I do this," says the LORD of hosts. 2220R

(תהלים) לְמַעַן שִׁמְךָ יְיָ תְּחַיֵּנִי
בְּצִדְקָתְךָ[iv] תּוֹצִיא מִצָּרָה נַפְשִׁי:

(Psalms) For Your name's sake, O LORD, preserve my life;[4] in Your righteousness, deliver my soul from

[A] Or: "you shall go forth and frisk about like calves released from the stall" — This alternate captures the dynamic movement implied in the Hebrew metaphor rather than focusing on 'fatness,' emphasizing joy and freedom rather than just prosperity.

[1] This refers to the time when the Temple stood and sacrifices were properly offered. In the post-Temple period when Ma'avar Yabok was written, this would be understood as suggesting that prayers for the sick and dying are as acceptable to God as the ancient Temple offerings.

[2] This poetic metaphor blends solar imagery (the rising sun bringing light and warmth) with bird imagery (protective, healing wings). In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this offers a powerful image of divine healing and protection for the soul.

[3] This final verse presents ultimate vindication where those who now suffer will eventually triumph over forces of wickedness. In the eschatological framework of Ma'avar Yabok, this offers reassurance that current suffering will give way to ultimate victory in the divine future.

[4] This opening establishes a fundamental theological framework: appealing to God's own character and reputation rather than personal merit as the basis for divine intervention.

[i] This poetic image of the 'sun of righteousness' with 'healing in its wings' combines solar imagery with bird imagery. The 'wings' (כְּנָפֶיהָ) can refer both to the rays of the sun and to the protective wings of a bird, creating a rich multivalent metaphor.

[ii] The image of the wicked as 'ashes under the soles of your feet' creates a stark contrast with the previous verse's image of joyful calves leaping. This juxtaposition emphasizes the complete reversal of fortunes between the righteous and wicked.

[iii] Cf. Zephaniah 3:15 — This verse from Zephaniah offers comfort by declaring that God has removed judgments and enemies, providing divine protection within the community. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this verse emphasizes divine presence during times of transition, particularly comforting for those facing illness or death. | Cf. Zechariah 3:2 — This verse invokes divine protection against Satan/accusers, presenting God as defender. The metaphor of 'a brand plucked from the fire' represents rescue from destruction. In Ma'avar Yabok, this serves as spiritual protection for the sick or dying, symbolically rebuking spiritual accusers that might impede the soul's peaceful transition. | Cf. Zechariah 4:7 — This verse presents obstacles (the mountain) being leveled before Zerubbabel, with the capstone placed amid shouts of divine favor. In Ma'avar Yabok, this functions as a prayer for removing spiritual obstacles facing the sick person, transforming challenges into manageable circumstances through divine grace. | Cf. Zechariah 9:12 — This verse calls the 'prisoners of hope' to return to safety with a promise of double restoration. In Ma'avar Yabok, this provides reassurance that although one is imprisoned by illness, there is a stronghold of divine protection and promise of compensation for suffering. | Cf. Zechariah 10:12 — This verse promises divine strengthening and walking in God's name. In Ma'avar Yabok, this offers reassurance that even in weakness, God provides spiritual strength. The phrase 'walking in His name' suggests continuing in divine paths despite physical limitations, offering spiritual mobility even when physical mobility might be compromised. | Cf. Malachi 3:4 — This verse promises that offerings will become pleasing to God as in ancient times. In Ma'avar Yabok, this suggests that prayers offered by or for the sick will be accepted like Temple sacrifices, creating a connection between deathbed prayers and ancient Temple worship. | Cf. Malachi 4:2-3 — These verses promise that those who fear God's name will experience the rising of the 'sun of righteousness' with healing, leading to restoration and triumph over evil. In Ma'avar Yabok, this offers hope of divine healing for the sick or spiritual healing in the afterlife, presenting illness and death as transitions that lead to ultimate triumph over spiritual enemies.

[iv] The prayer begins with a verse from Psalm 143:11, appealing to God's own name and righteousness rather than the petitioner's merit as the basis for divine intervention.

וּבְחַסְדְּךָ תַּצְמִית אוֹיְבָי וְתַאֲבֵדְתָּ
כָּל צֹרְרֵי נַפְשִׁי כִּי אֲנִי עַבְדֶּךָ׃
חַסְדִּי וּמְצוּדָתִי מִשְׂגַּבִּי וּמְפַלְטִי
לִי מָגִנִּי וּבוֹ חָסִיתִי [i]הָרוֹדֵד עַמִּי
2000 תַּחְתָּי׃ פְּצֵנִי וְהַצִּילֵנִי מִיַּד בְּנֵי
נֵכָר׃ [ii]אֲשֶׁר פִּיהֶם דִּבֶּר שָׁוְא
וִימִינָם יְמִין שֶׁקֶר׃ אַשְׁרֵי הָעָם
שֶׁכָּכָה לּוֹ אַשְׁרֵי הָעָם שֶׁיְיָ אֱלֹהָיו׃
חַנּוּן וְרַחוּם יְיָ אֶרֶךְ אַפַּיִם וּגְדַל
2005 חָסֶד׃ [iii]טוֹב יְיָ לַכֹּל וְרַחֲמָיו
עַל כָּל מַעֲשָׂיו׃ סוֹמֵךְ יְיָ לְכָל
הַנֹּפְלִים וְזוֹקֵף לְכָל הַכְּפוּפִים׃
עֵינֵי כֹל אֵלֶיךָ יְשַׂבֵּרוּ וְאַתָּה נוֹתֵן
לָהֶם אֶת אָכְלָם בְּעִתּוֹ׃ פּוֹתֵחַ
2010 אֶת יָדֶךָ וּמַשְׂבִּיעַ לְכָל חַי רָצוֹן׃
קָרוֹב יְיָ לְכָל קֹרְאָיו לְכֹל אֲשֶׁר
יִקְרָאֻהוּ בֶּאֱמֶת׃ רְצוֹן יְרֵאָיו
יַעֲשֶׂה וְאֶת שַׁוְעָתָם יִשְׁמַע וְיוֹשִׁיעֵם׃
שׁוֹמֵר יְיָ אֶת כָּל אֹהֲבָיו וְאֵת
2015 כָּל הָרְשָׁעִים יַשְׁמִיד׃ תְּהִלַּת יְיָ
יְדַבֶּר פִּי וִיבָרֵךְ כָּל בָּשָׂר שֵׁם
קָדְשׁוֹ לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד׃ אֲשַׁרֵי שֶׁאֵל
יַעֲקֹב בְּעֶזְרוֹ שִׂבְרוֹ עַל יְיָ אֱלֹהָיו׃
עֹשֶׂה מִשְׁפָּט לָעֲשׁוּקִים נֹתֵן לֶחֶם
2020 לָרְעֵבִים יְיָ מַתִּיר אֲסוּרִים׃ יְיָ
פֹּקֵחַ עִוְרִים יְיָ זוֹקֵף כְּפוּפִים distress. In Your mercy, cut off my enemies and destroy all the oppressors of my soul, for I am Your servant. My lovingkindness and my fortress, my stronghold and my deliverer, my shield in whom I take refuge,[1] who subdues peoples under me.[A] Rescue me and deliver me from the hands of foreigners, whose mouths speak falsehood and whose right hands are raised in deceit.[B] Happy is the people who have it so, happy is the people whose God is the LORD. The LORD is gracious and compassionate,[2] slow to anger and great in lovingkindness. The LORD is good to all, and His mercies are over all His works. The LORD supports all who fall and raises up all who are bowed down.[3] The eyes of all look expectantly to You, and You give them their food in due time. You open Your hand and satisfy the desire of every living thing. The LORD is near to all who call upon Him, to all who call upon Him in truth. He will fulfill the desire of those who fear Him; He will also hear their cry and save them. The LORD preserves all who love Him, but all the wicked He will destroy. My mouth will speak the praise of the LORD, and all flesh will bless His holy name forever and ever. Happy is he whose help is the God of Jacob, whose hope is in the LORD his God. He executes justice for the oppressed; He gives food to the

[A] Or: "who subdues my people beneath me" — The Hebrew phrase can be interpreted in two ways. The translation I provided follows the interpretation as 'subjecting nations under me' (referring to David's military victories), but this alternate considers the possessive 'my people' rather than 'peoples' in general. The context suggests the first interpretation is more likely, but both are grammatically possible.

[B] Or: "and whose right hand is a right hand of falsehood" — My original translation adds 'raised' for clarity and readability in English, but this more literal rendering maintains the Hebrew parallelism between 'their mouth speaks falsehood' and 'their right hand is a right hand of falsehood,' referring to false oaths sworn with the right hand raised.

[1] The accumulation of protective imagery (lovingkindness, fortress, stronghold, deliverer, shield) creates a powerful sense of divine encirclement, particularly meaningful for someone feeling vulnerable due to illness.

[2] This begins a meditation on divine attributes of mercy drawn from Psalm 145, shifting the prayer from petition to contemplation of God's compassionate nature.

[3] This verse takes on special significance in the context of illness, offering reassurance that even in physical weakness, God provides support and restoration.

[i] This verse from Psalm 144:2 uses military protective imagery (fortress, stronghold, deliverer, shield) to describe God's relationship to the worshipper, creating a sense of divine protection around the vulnerable individual.

[ii] In the psalm's original context, 'foreigners' referred to enemy nations, but in Ma'avar Yabok's context, this can be understood metaphorically as referring to harmful forces (spiritual or physical) that threaten the sick person.

[iii] This begins the section from Psalm 145, which forms the core of this compilation. The text shifts from personal petition to meditation on God's merciful attributes, providing comfort through focus on divine compassion.

יְיָ אֹהֵב צַדִּיקִים: יְיָ שֹׁמֵר אֶת
גֵּרִים יָתוֹם וְאַלְמָנָה יְעוֹדֵד וְדֶרֶךְ
רְשָׁעִים יְעַוֵּת: הָרֹפֵא לִשְׁבוּרֵי לֵב
וּמְחַבֵּשׁ לְעַצְּבוֹתָם:[i] גָּדוֹל אֲדוֹנֵינוּ
וְרַב כֹּחַ לִתְבוּנָתוֹ אֵין מִסְפָּר:
מְעוֹדֵד עֲנָוִים יְיָ מַשְׁפִּיל רְשָׁעִים
עָדֵי אֶרֶץ: הַשָּׁם גְּבוּלֵךְ שָׁלוֹם
חֵלֶב חִטִּים יַשְׂבִּיעֵךְ: בַּחוּרִים
וְגַם בְּתוּלוֹת זְקֵנִים עִם נְעָרִים:
יְהַלְלוּ אֶת שֵׁם יְיָ כִּי נִשְׂגָּב שְׁמוֹ
לְבַדּוֹ הוֹדוֹ עַל אֶרֶץ וְשָׁמָיִם: וַיָּרֶם
קֶרֶן לְעַמּוֹ תְּהִלָּה לְכָל חֲסִידָיו
לִבְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל עַם קְרֹבוֹ הַלְלוּיָהּ:
הַלְלוּיָהּ שִׁירוּ לַייָ שִׁיר חָדָשׁ
תְּהִלָּתוֹ בִּקְהַל חֲסִידִים: כִּי רוֹצֶה
יְיָ בְּעַמּוֹ יְפָאֵר עֲנָוִים בִּישׁוּעָה:
יַעְלְזוּ חֲסִידִים בְּכָבוֹד יְרַנְּנוּ עַל
מִשְׁכְּבוֹתָם: רוֹמְמוֹת אֵל בִּגְרוֹנָם
וְחֶרֶב פִּיפִיּוֹת בְּיָדָם:[ii] לַעֲשׂוֹת
נְקָמָה בַּגּוֹיִם תּוֹכֵחוֹת בַּלְאֻמִּים:
לֶאְסֹר מַלְכֵיהֶם בְּזִקִים וְנִכְבְּדֵיהֶם
בְּכַבְלֵי בַרְזֶל: לַעֲשׂוֹת בָּהֶם מִשְׁפָּט
כָּתוּב הָדָר הוּא לְכָל חֲסִידָיו
הַלְלוּיָהּ: כֹּל הַנְּשָׁמָה תְּהַלֵּל יָהּ
הַלְלוּיָהּ.[iii][iv]

hungry. The LORD sets prisoners free. The LORD 2250R opens the eyes of the blind; the LORD raises those who are bowed down; the LORD loves the righteous.
The LORD protects the strangers; He sustains the fatherless and the widow, but He thwarts the way of the wicked. He heals the brokenhearted and binds up 2255R their wounds.[1] Great is our Lord and abundant in strength; His understanding is infinite. The LORD supports the humble; He brings the wicked down to the ground. He makes your borders peaceful; He satisfies you with the finest wheat. Let young men and 2260R maidens, old men and children, praise the name of the LORD, for His name alone is exalted; His glory is above earth and heaven. He has raised up a horn for His people, praise for all His godly ones, for the children of Israel, a people near to Him. Hallelujah! 2265R Hallelujah! Sing to the LORD a new song, His praise in the assembly of the godly. For the LORD takes pleasure in His people; He adorns the humble with salvation. Let the godly exult in glory; let them sing for joy on their beds. Let the high praises of 2270R God be in their throats and a two-edged sword in their hands,[2] to execute vengeance on the nations and punishment on the peoples, to bind their kings with chains and their nobles with fetters of iron, to execute on them the judgment written. This is an 2275R

[1] This verse about divine healing from Psalm 147:3 would be particularly meaningful for those who are ill or approaching death, emphasizing God's role as healer of both physical and emotional suffering.

[2] This powerful imagery suggests that prayer itself becomes a spiritual weapon. In Ma'avar Yabok's context for the sick and dying, this implies that even in physical weakness, one can participate in cosmic spiritual warfare through prayer.

[i] This verse from Psalm 147:3 about God healing the brokenhearted has special significance in Ma'avar Yabok's context of illness and approaching death.

[ii] This striking imagery from Psalm 149:6 of having praises in the throat while holding a sword suggests that prayer itself becomes a powerful weapon. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this implies that even the ill or dying can spiritually triumph through prayer.

[iii] The prayer concludes with the final verse of the Book of Psalms, emphasizing that as long as one has breath (נְשָׁמָה/neshamah), one can praise God. This carries profound meaning in the context of attending to those who are ill or dying.

[iv] Cf. Psalm 143:11 — This opening verse is a direct quote from Psalm 143, which is a prayer of David seeking deliverance from enemies. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this serves as a foundational plea for divine intervention based on God's own character rather than the petitioner's merit. | Cf. Psalm 145 — Psalm 145 forms the core of this prayer sequence, highlighting divine attributes of mercy and sustenance. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, these verses emphasize God's compassionate nature and willingness to support the fallen and vulnerable, providing comfort to the sick or dying person. | Cf. Psalm 146 — The inclusion of Psalm 146 reinforces trust in divine rather than human assistance during illness. The specific attributes of God emphasized (helping the oppressed, hungry, prisoners, blind) would resonate with someone feeling physically constrained or diminished by illness. | Cf. Psalm 147 — The selection from Psalm 147 particularly emphasizes God's healing power for the brokenhearted, which takes on special significance in Ma'avar Yabok's context of caring for the sick and dying. | Cf. Psalm 149 — The inclusion of Psalm 149 transitions honor for all His godly ones. Hallelujah! Let everything that has breath praise the LORD.[1] Hallelujah!

(כתובים) וְעַתָּה הוֹאַלְתָּ לְבָרֵךְ
אֶת בֵּית עַבְדְּךָ[i] לִהְיוֹת לְעוֹלָם
לְפָנֶיךָ כִּי אַתָּה יְיָ בֵּרַכְתָּ וּמְבֹרָךְ
2050 לְעוֹלָם: בָּרוּךְ אַתָּה יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי
יִשְׂרָאֵל אָבִינוּ מֵעוֹלָם וְעַד עוֹלָם:
לְךָ יְיָ הַגְּדֻלָּה וְהַגְּבוּרָה וְהַתִּפְאֶרֶת
וְהַנֵּצַח וְהַהוֹד[ii] כִּי כֹל בַּשָּׁמַיִם
וּבָאָרֶץ לְךָ יְיָ הַמַּמְלָכָה וְהַמִּתְנַשֵּׂא
2055 לְכֹל לְרֹאשׁ: וְעַתָּה אֱלֹהֵינוּ
מוֹדִים אֲנַחְנוּ לָךְ וּמְהַלְלִים לְשֵׁם
תִּפְאַרְתֶּךָ: יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי אַבְרָהָם יִצְחָק
וְיִשְׂרָאֵל אֲבֹתֵינוּ שָׁמְרָה זֹאת
לְעוֹלָם לְיֵצֶר מַחְשָׁבוֹת לְבַב עַמֶּךָ
2060 וְהָכֵן לְבָבָם אֵלֶיךָ: וּפְנֵיתָ אֶל
תְּפִלַּת עַבְדְּךָ וְאֶל תְּחִנָּתוֹ יְיָ אֱלֹהָי
לִשְׁמֹעַ אֶל הָרִנָּה וְאֶל הַתְּפִלָּה אֲשֶׁר
עַבְדְּךָ מִתְפַּלֵּל לְפָנֶיךָ: עַתָּה אֱלֹהַי
יִהְיוּ נָא עֵינֶיךָ פְּתֻחוֹת וְאָזְנֶיךָ
2065 קַשֻּׁבוֹת לִתְפִלַּת הַמָּקוֹם הַזֶּה:
וְעַתָּה קוּמָה יְיָ אֱלֹהִים לִנוּחֶךָ

(From the Writings) And now You have been pleased to bless the house of Your servant,[2] that it may continue forever before You; for You, O LORD, have 2280R blessed, and it is blessed forever. Blessed are You, LORD God of Israel, our Father, from everlasting to everlasting. Yours, O LORD, is the greatness, the power, the glory, the victory, and the majesty;[3] for all that is in heaven and in earth is Yours. Yours 2285R is the kingdom, O LORD, and You are exalted as head over all. Now, our God, we thank You and praise Your glorious name. O LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, our fathers, keep this forever in the intent of the thoughts of the heart of Your 2290R people,[A] and prepare their hearts for You. Turn to the prayer of Your servant and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to listen to the cry and to the prayer which Your servant prays before You. Now, my God, I pray that Your eyes be open and Your ears 2295R attentive to the prayer of this place. Arise now, O LORD God, to Your resting place, You and the ark

[A] Or: "preserve this forever in the formation of the thoughts in the hearts of Your people" — The Hebrew 'לְיֵצֶר' relates to formation or shaping, which could suggest God actively forming the thoughts of His people rather than merely preserving existing thoughts. This alternate translation emphasizes divine agency in shaping human intention.

[1] The concluding verse connects breath (neshamah) with the ability and obligation to praise God. In the context of caring for the ill or dying, this affirms the spiritual value of every breath and moment of life until the very end.

[2] This prayer compilation begins with words from David's prayer after receiving the covenant promise. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, the 'house of Your servant' may be understood both literally (as one's family) and metaphorically (as one's soul).

[3] This declaration of divine attributes serves an important function in the prayer sequence—establishing God's supreme sovereignty before making any requests. This rhetorical structure creates a theological foundation that whatever happens, including illness and death, occurs within God's sovereign domain.

the prayer from supplication to triumphant praise. In Ma'avar Yabok's context, this suggests that even in illness or approaching death, the Jewish tradition encourages praising God and affirming divine justice. | Cf. Psalm 150:6 — Ending with this verse creates a powerful conclusion to the prayer sequence, emphasizing that as long as one has breath, praising God remains possible and appropriate. In Ma'avar Yabok's context for the sick and dying, this carries profound significance about the value of life and breath until the very end.

[i] This opening phrase comes from King David's prayer in I Chronicles 17:27, offering a strong thematic connection to Ma'avar Yabok's focus on divine blessing in times of transition.

[ii] This famous declaration from I Chronicles 29:11 affirms God's sovereignty through five divine attributes. In kabbalistic interpretation, these correspond to specific sefirot (divine emanations): Gedulah/Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength), Tiferet (Beauty), Netzach (Victory/Eternity), and Hod (Splendor).

אַתָּה וַאֲרוֹן עֻזֶּךָ [i] כֹּהֲנֶיךָ יְיָ אֱלֹהִים
יִלְבְּשׁוּ תְשׁוּעָה וַחֲסִידֶיךָ יִשְׂמְחוּ
בַטּוֹב: עַתָּה עֵינַי יִהְיוּ פְתֻחוֹת
2070 וְאָזְנַי קַשֻּׁבוֹת לִתְפִלַּת הַמָּקוֹם
הַזֶּה: יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי אֲבוֹתֵינוּ הֲלֹא אַתָּה
הוּא אֱלֹהִים בַּשָּׁמַיִם וְאַתָּה מוֹשֵׁל
בְּכָל מַמְלְכוֹת הַגּוֹיִם וּבְיָדְךָ כֹּחַ
וּגְבוּרָה וְאֵין עִמְּךָ לְהִתְיַצֵּב: לֹא
2075 לָכֶם לְהִלָּחֵם בָּזֹאת הִתְיַצְּבוּ עִמְדוּ
וּרְאוּ אֶת יְשׁוּעַת יְהוָה [ii] עִמָּכֶם
יְהוּדָה וִירוּשָׁלַם אַל תִּירְאוּ וְאַל
תֵּחַתּוּ: [iii]

of Your strength. Let Your priests, O LORD God, be clothed with salvation, and let Your faithful ones rejoice in goodness. Now my eyes will be open and my 2300R ears attentive to prayer made in this place. O LORD God of our fathers, are You not God in heaven? And do You not rule over all the kingdoms of the nations? In Your hand is there not power and might, so that no one is able to withstand You? It is not for you to 2305R fight in this battle;[1] position yourselves, stand still, and see the salvation of the LORD[A] who is with you, O Judah and Jerusalem! Do not fear or be dismayed.

קְשׁוֹב מַעֲנִי וְאַל תְּפֶן לְמַעְלִי.
2080 תְּפִלָּתִי גְאוֹן צוּרִי וְחַרְבִּי. פְּעוֹל
עִמִּי בְּחַסְדֶּךָ לְרַחֲמִי. לְמַעַנְךָ
צוּר וְלֹא תִטּוֹר לְעָזְבִי. [iv] רְפָאֵנִי
אֱלֹהַי צוּר מְעוֹנִי. אֲשֶׁר גָּדְלְךָ
בְּפִי קוּמִי וְשִׁכְבִי. [v] עֲנֵנִי אֵל כְּדַל

Hear my plea[B] and disregard my transgressions. My prayer is my pride, my Rock and my sword.[C] Act 2310R with me in Your kindness to show me mercy. For Your sake, O Rock, do not harbor resentment for my abandonment. Heal me, my God, Rock of my dwelling,[D] whose greatness I declare when I rise and [A] Or: “take your positions, stand firm, and witness the deliverance of the LORD” — This alternate translation emphasizes the active stance of faithful readiness (‘take your positions’) rather than mere positioning, and uses ‘deliverance’ instead of ‘salvation’ to better capture the immediate physical rescue described in the original context of Jehoshaphat’s battle.

[B] Or: “Listen to my response” — The term מַעֲנִי can be translated as “my answer/response” rather than “my plea,” though in the context of prayer, “plea” conveys the supplicatory nature better.

[C] Or: “My prayer is the exaltation of my Rock and my sword” — The syntax allows for reading גְאוֹן as ‘exaltation of’ rather than as the first item in the list. This would make the prayer an exaltation of both God (my Rock) and the speaker’s sword (metaphorically, their strength or defense).

[D] Or: “Rock of my refuge” — מְעוֹנִי can refer to either ‘dwelling’ or ‘refuge’, with the latter

[1] The sudden shift to this declaration from Jehoshaphat’s prayer provides a powerful conclusion to the compilation. In the context of Ma’avar Yabok, it offers reassurance to the dying person that they need not struggle against death but can trust in divine salvation.

[i] This verse from II Chronicles 6:41 was originally spoken by Solomon at the dedication of the Temple. In the context of Ma’avar Yabok, this likely serves as a plea for God’s presence to accompany the soul on its journey, with the ‘ark of strength’ symbolizing divine protection.

[ii] This concluding passage quotes Jehoshaphat’s words from II Chronicles 20:17, spoken when Judah faced overwhelming enemies. In the context of this prayer collection, it likely represents the reassurance that God, not the individual, will fight the ultimate battle with death and spiritual forces.

[iii] Cf. Chronicles (I Chronicles 17:27, 29:10-13; II Chronicles 6:40, 7:15-16, 20:6, 20:17) — The text combines several prayer passages from Chronicles, creating a cohesive liturgical compilation. These are biblical prayers of David, Solomon, and Jehoshaphat, expressing themes of divine sovereignty, kingship, and protection. | Cf. Psalms — While not directly quoting Psalms, this prayer compilation follows the pattern of many psalmic prayers that move from praise of divine attributes to specific requests.

[iv] The phrase ‘do not harbor resentment for my abandonment’ may refer either to the petitioner abandoning God through sin, or to the feeling of being abandoned by God during illness or distress.

[v] This phrase echoes Deuteronomy 6:7, where Israelites are commanded to speak of God’s commandments ‘when you lie down and when you rise up,’ suggesting that the petitioner has been faithful in daily prayers despite current distress.

שׁוֹאֵל בְּבוֹאִי. אֵלַי בְּךָ בָּטַח לְבָבִי: [i] when I lie down.[1] Answer me, God, as a poor supplicant[2] when I come before You. O Lord, in You alone my heart trusts. 2315R יאמר יערב עליו שיחי ככתוב לעיל:

One should say "May my speech be pleasing to Him" as written above.

יֵעָרֵב עָלָיו שִׂיחִי אָנֹכִי אֶשְׂמַח בַּיהוָה: אַל תִּתֵּן יְיָ מַאֲוֵי רָשָׁע זְמָמוֹ אַל תְּפַק יָרוּמוּ סֶלָה: שְׁבֹר זְרוֹעַ רָשָׁע וָרָע תִּדְרוֹשׁ רִשְׁעוֹ בַל תִּמְצָא: הַצִּילֵנִי נָא מִיַּד אָחִי מִיַּד עֵשָׂו כִּי יָרֵא אָנֹכִי אֹתוֹ פֶּן יָבֹא וְהִכַּנִי אֵם עַל בָּנִים: וְאַתָּה אָמַרְתָּ הֵיטֵב אֵיטִיב עִמָּךְ וְשַׂמְתִּי אֶת זַרְעֲךָ כְּחוֹל הַיָּם אֲשֶׁר לֹא יִסָּפֵר מֵרֹב: תּוֹצִיאֵנִי מֵרֶשֶׁת זוּ טָמְנוּ לִי כִּי אַתָּה מָעֻזִּי: בְּיָדְךָ אַפְקִיד רוּחִי פָּדִיתָה אוֹתִי יְיָ אֵל אֱמֶת: לִישׁוּעָתְךָ קִוִּיתִי יְהוָה: (ישר הפוך ישר: וכן) לְפִרְקָנָךְ סַבְּרִית יְיָ: מָה תִּשְׁתּוֹחֲחִי נַפְשִׁי וּמָה תֶּהֱמִי עָלָי הוֹחִילִי לֵאלֹהִים כִּי עוֹד אוֹדֶנּוּ יְשׁוּעֹת פָּנַי וֵאלֹהָי: אַתָּה

May my meditation be pleasing to Him; I will rejoice in the LORD. Do not grant, O LORD, the desires of the wicked; do not let their schemes succeed, lest they be exalted. Selah.[A] Break the arm of the wicked and evil; seek out his wickedness until You find none. Deliver me, please, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him, lest he come and strike me, mother with children. Yet You said, "I will surely do good with you, and make your offspring like the sand of the sea,[3] which cannot be counted for multitude." You will bring me out from the net they have hidden for me, for You are my stronghold. Into Your hand I commit my spirit; You have redeemed me, O LORD, God of truth. For Your salvation I hope, O LORD. (Forward, reverse, forward: and so) For Your redemption I hope, O LORD.[B] Why are you cast down, my soul,[4] and why 2320R 2325R 2330R 2335R carrying a stronger connotation of protection that may better fit the prayer's theme of seeking divine help.

[A] Or: "Do not grant, O LORD, the wicked one's desires; do not allow his plot to succeed, so they are not exalted. Selah." — This alternate translation emphasizes a singular adversary rather than plural 'wicked ones,' which could be interpreted as referring specifically to the Angel of Death or other negative spiritual forces that Ma'avar Yabok warns might threaten the dying person.

[B] Or: "For Your salvation I have waited, O LORD. (To be recited forward, backward, then forward again:) For Your deliverance I have hoped, O LORD." — This alternative clarifies the instruction for recitation and offers slightly different nuances for the Hebrew and Aramaic terms. The distinction between 'salvation' (ישועה) and 'redemption/deliverance' (פורקן) might be significant in the mystical context of Ma'avar Yabok, where the soul seeks both immediate protection and ultimate spiritual redemption.

[1] This indicates constant devotion throughout the day, from morning to night, echoing traditional Jewish prayer times and the Shema prayer instruction to recite God's words 'when you lie down and when you rise up.'

[2] The Hebrew term דַּל (dal) connotes poverty, weakness, and lowliness, emphasizing the petitioner's humble self-perception before God, a common posture in Jewish prayer during illness or distress.

[3] This quote from Genesis 32:12 is part of Jacob's prayer before meeting Esau, which forms a central biblical motif for Ma'avar Yabok. The prayer strategically incorporates this passage to connect the person's current distress with Jacob's spiritual journey and divine protection.

[4] This self-dialogue from Psalm 42 represents an important therapeutic element in Ma'avar Yabok's

[i] Cf. Psalm 143 — This prayer follows a pattern similar to many psalmic prayers, particularly Psalm 143, which also begins with requests for God to hear the supplicant and not judge their sins. The structural parallels suggest this prayer is modeled on biblical psalms of supplication. | Cf. Psalm 119:170 — The opening phrase echoes biblical prayer language, particularly from Psalms, where petitioners frequently ask God to hear or listen to their pleas. | Cf. Psalm 71:3 — The metaphor of God as 'Rock' (צור) appears throughout this prayer, echoing the common biblical metaphor found in many psalms, where God is described as a rock, indicating stability, protection, and strength.

סֵתֶר לִי מִצַּר תִּצְּרֵנִי רָנֵי פַלֵּט
תְּסוֹבְבֵנִי סֶלָה: מְזִמָּתִי מִיכָאֵל
מִשְּׂמֹאלִי גַּבְרִיאֵל מִלְּפָנַי אוּרִיאֵל
וּמֵאֲחוֹרַי רְפָאֵל וְעַל רֹאשִׁי שְׁכִינַת
2110 אֵל: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בַּיּוֹם בָּרוּךְ יְיָ
בַּלַּיְלָה: בָּרוּךְ יְיָ בְּשָׁכְבֵנוּ בָּרוּךְ
יְיָ בְּקוּמֵנוּ: בָּרוּךְ אֲדֹנָי יוֹם יוֹם
יַעֲמָס לָנוּ הָאֵל יְשׁוּעָתֵנוּ סֶלָה:
יְיָ וְבָרְנוּ יְבָרֵךְ אֶת בֵּית
2115 יִשְׂרָאֵל יְבָרֵךְ אֶת בֵּית אַהֲרֹן: וְהָיָה
שַׁדַּי בְּצָרֶיךָ וְכֶסֶף תּוֹעָפוֹת לָךְ:
שַׁדַּי בָּרְכֵנוּ וְנֵחָיֶה: וַאֲנַחְנוּ נְבָרֵךְ
יָהּ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ: ג׳
[ii] [i]פעמים

do you moan within me? Hope in God, for I shall yet praise Him, the salvation of my countenance and my God. You are my hiding place; from trouble You preserve me; with songs of deliverance You surround 2340R me. Selah. Michael is at my right, Gabriel at my left, Uriel before me, Raphael behind me, and above my head is the Divine Presence of God.[A] Blessed is the LORD by day, blessed is the LORD by night. Blessed is the LORD when we lie down, blessed is the 2345R
LORD when we rise. Blessed is the Lord Adonai day by day; God is our salvation. Selah. The LORD has remembered us; He will bless, He will bless the house of Israel, He will bless the house of Aaron. And the Almighty will be your defender, and silver shall be 2350R your abundance. May the Almighty bless us, and we shall live. And we will bless the LORD from now and forever. Hallelujah.[1] (3 times)

2120 רִבּוֹן כָּל הָעוֹלָמִים עָשֶׂה רְצוֹנְךָ
בַּשָּׁמַיִם וְתֵן נַחַת רוּחַ לִירֵאֶיךָ
בָּאָרֶץ וּשְׁמַע זַעֲקַת עַבְדְּךָ וְעַמְּךָ
יִשְׂרָאֵל וַעֲשֵׂה מְהֵרָה בַּקָּשָׁתָם
וְהַטּוֹב בְּעֵינֶיךָ עֲשֵׂה: עֲנֵנוּ אָבִינוּ

Master of all worlds,[2] fulfill Your will in heaven and grant satisfaction to those who revere You on earth. 2355R
Hear the cry of Your servant and Your people Israel, and quickly fulfill their request, and do what is good in Your eyes. Answer us, our Father, answer approach to spiritual care, encouraging the ill person to address their own spiritual distress while maintaining hope in divine salvation.

[A] Or: "On my right is Michael, on my left is Gabriel, before me is Uriel, behind me is Raphael, and above my head is the Divine Presence" — This more literal translation preserves the rhythmic parallelism of the Hebrew formula. This formulation is commonly found in Jewish protective prayers and amulets, and the precise wording was considered important for its effectiveness in creating a spiritual shield.

[1] The instruction to repeat this phrase three times (indicated by פעמים ג׳ at the end of the Hebrew text) reflects the Jewish mystical belief in the power of three-fold repetition to establish spiritual reality and seal a prayer's effectiveness.

[2] This opening address (רִבּוֹן כָּל הָעוֹלָמִים) acknowledges God's sovereignty over multiple worlds or realms, reflecting the kabbalistic worldview prevalent in Ma'avar Yabok that envisions reality as consisting of multiple interconnected spiritual domains.

[i] This instruction at the end indicates that the final line ("And we will bless the LORD from now and forever. Hallelujah") should be recited three times, a common practice in Jewish liturgy for emphasizing important declarations.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 104:34 — This sets the tone for the prayer as one of meditation and spiritual communion with God. | Cf. Psalm 140:8-9 — These verses establish spiritual protection by invoking divine judgment against negative forces. | Cf. Genesis 32:11-12 — This reference to Jacob's prayer before meeting Esau connects directly to Ma'avar Yabok's central metaphor of 'crossing the Yabok' as a spiritual transition. | Cf. Psalm 31:5-6 — Particularly significant as the latter verse was recommended in Ma'avar Yabok for recitation at the moment of death. | Cf. Talmudic angelic formula — This formula creates a spiritual shield around the person reciting it, invoking angelic protection from all directions. In Ma'avar Yabok, this protection is particularly important for the dying person's soul. | Cf. Psalm 42:6, 12 — This creates a dialogue with one's own soul, encouraging hope in God despite current distress—particularly appropriate for someone who is ill or dying. | Cf. Psalm 115:18 — This creates a liturgical closure to the prayer sequence with an affirmation of continued praise.

עֲנֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ מַלְכֵּנוּ עֲנֵנוּ[i] us. Answer us, our King, answer us. Answer us, our עֶזְרֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ סוֹמְכֵנוּ עֲנֵנוּ Helper, answer us. Answer us, our Supporter, an- 2360R
עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן שִׁמְךָ הַגָּדוֹל הַגִּבּוֹר swer us.[1] Act for the sake of Your great, mighty, and וְהַנּוֹרָא: עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן בְּנֵי בֵיתִי awesome name.[2] Act for the sake of my household הַתְּלוּיִם עַל רַחֲמֶיךָ: עֲשֵׂה members who depend on Your mercy. Act for the לְמַעַן הֶבֶל הַתִּנּוֹקוֹת שֶׁל בֵּית sake of the breath of the schoolchildren.[3] Act for the רַבָּן:[ii] עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן גְּמוּלֵי חָלָב sake of weaned infants who have not sinned. Act for 2365R
שֶׁלֹּא חָטְאוּ: עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן יוֹנְקֵי the sake of nursing babes who have not transgressed.
שָׁלֹא פָּשְׁעוּ:[iii] עֲשֵׂה לְמַעַן Act for the sake of Your abundant mercies and Your רַחֲמֶיךָ הָרַבִּים וַחֲסָדֶיךָ הַגְּדוֹלִים great kindnesses, and have compassion upon us and וְרַחֵם עָלֵינוּ וְהוֹשִׁיעֵנוּ: יִהְיוּ save us. May the words of my mouth and the medi-
לְרָצוֹן אִמְרֵי פִי וְהֶגְיוֹן לִבִּי tation of my heart be acceptable before You, LORD, 2370R
לְפָנֶיךָ יְיָ צוּרִי וְגוֹאֲלִי:[iv] my Rock and my Redeemer.

ואם ידמע[v] יאמר קודם יהיו And if one weeps,[4] he should recite these verses be-

[1]This repetitive formula is reminiscent of fast day liturgy, particularly the 'Anenu' prayer recited during communal fasts. The repetition creates a sense of increasing urgency and emotional intensity appropriate for someone in distress.

[2]This phrase echoes the opening of the Amidah prayer's first blessing, which describes God with these three attributes based on Deuteronomy 10:17. Invoking God's name with these specific attributes is considered especially powerful in Jewish prayer tradition.

[3]According to Talmudic tradition, the breath of children studying Torah is considered especially pure and powerful in sustaining the world. This appeal invokes one of the strongest possible merits in Jewish tradition.

[4]This instruction acknowledges the emotional nature of prayer, especially in contexts of illness or approaching death. Ma'avar Yabok shows remarkable sensitivity to the psychological states of those engaged in prayer by providing specific verses for moments of emotional distress.

[i]This repetitive structure creates a rhythmic intensity that reflects the urgency of the prayer. The pairing of 'our Father' with 'our King' reflects the dual relationship with God as both compassionate parent and sovereign ruler, a common motif in Jewish liturgy.

[ii]This refers to the Talmudic concept (Shabbat 119b) that the world is sustained by the breath of children studying Torah, which is considered pure and untainted by sin. Invoking this merit is a powerful plea in Jewish prayer tradition.

[iii]The prayer invokes the merit of innocent children at various developmental stages (schoolchildren, weaned infants, nursing babies), suggesting a progression of increasing innocence and purity. This rhetorical structure strengthens the appeal to divine mercy.

[iv]Cf. Psalm 19:15 — The closing verse is a direct quote from Psalm 19:15, which is commonly used to conclude prayers in Jewish liturgy. Its inclusion here connects this personal supplication to established biblical prayer language. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Ta'anit 16a — The repetitive structure of 'answer us' echoes the form of communal fast day prayers found in the Talmud, which feature similar repetitive patterns to emphasize urgency and create a rhythmic intensity in the prayer. | Cf. Shabbat 119b — The reference to the merit of schoolchildren's breath alludes to the Talmudic teaching that the world is sustained by the breath of children studying Torah, which is considered especially pure and powerful. Invoking this merit suggests the prayer is seeking to access particularly potent spiritual protection. | Cf. Fast day liturgy — The overall structure parallels traditional fast day prayers, particularly in its repetitive appeals, invocation of divine attributes, and mention of innocent children. This positions the prayer within a framework of seeking divine mercy during times of difficulty or danger.

[v]Literally "if he sheds tears" or "if he weeps." This instruction appears in the context of prayer sequences for the sick and dying, providing specific verses to be recited when emotional responses occur during prayer.

לרצון[i] אלו הפסוקים:[ii]

fore “May the words of my mouth be acceptable”:[1]

סוּרוּ מִמֶּנִּי כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן כִּי שָׁמַע
יְהוָה קוֹל בִּכְיִי:[iii] נָדִי סָפַרְתָּה
אָתָּה שִׂימָה דִמְעָתִי בְנֹאדֶךָ[iv] הֲלֹא
בְסִפְרָתֶךָ: יְיָ צְבָאוֹת עִמָּנוּ מִשְׂגָּב
לָנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יַעֲקֹב סֶלָה:[v] יְיָ צְבָאוֹת
אַשְׁרֵי אָדָם בֹּטֵחַ בָּךְ: יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה
הַמֶּלֶךְ יַעֲנֵנוּ בְיוֹם קָרְאֵנוּ:[vi][vii]

Depart from me, all you workers of iniquity,[2] for the LORD has heard the voice of my weeping. You have counted my wanderings;[A] put my tears into Your bottle;[3] are they not in Your book? The LORD of hosts[4] is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge.[B] Selah. O LORD of hosts, blessed is the man who trusts in You. Save, O LORD! May the King answer us on the day we call.[5]

2375R

2380R

[A] Or: “You have recorded my exile” — The Hebrew ‘nodi’ can refer to wandering but also specifically to exile or banishment, which might be more contextually appropriate in a prayer related to suffering and divine protection.

[B] Or: “is our fortress” — The term ‘misgav’ literally means ‘stronghold’ or ‘fortress’ and carries connotations of military protection, though ‘refuge’ captures the protective aspect well.

[1] This refers to the traditional closing prayer formula from Psalm 19:15 that concludes most Jewish prayer sequences. The instruction indicates these special verses should be inserted just before this standard conclusion.

[2] This opening command for evil forces to depart appears frequently in Ma’avar Yabok’s prayer sequences. In the context of prayers for the sick or dying, it serves to create spiritual protection by banishing negative forces.

[3] The Hebrew ‘nod’ refers to a skin bottle or wineskin. This poetic image suggests that God collects and preserves every tear, emphasizing divine attentiveness to human suffering.

[4] The divine title ‘LORD of hosts’ (YHVH Tzeva’ot) emphasizes God’s command over celestial armies, suggesting divine power over all forces, including those of death.

[5] The final verse shifts from ‘I/my’ to ‘us/our,’ broadening from individual to communal prayer. This reflects the Jewish understanding that individual and communal fates are interconnected.

[i] This refers to the standard prayer conclusion “May the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable before You, O LORD, my rock and my redeemer” (Psalm 19:15), which typically concludes prayer sequences.

[ii] The text appears to be introducing a set of biblical verses to be recited in cases where the person praying becomes emotional and weeps, but it does not continue to list those verses in the segment provided.

[iii] From Psalm 6:8-9, where David confronts his enemies with confidence that God has heard his prayers. In the context of Ma’avar Yabok, this may be directed at spiritual accusers or negative forces that might impede the soul’s journey.

[iv] The image of God collecting tears in a bottle (or wineskin) is a powerful metaphor for divine remembrance and validation of human suffering. This verse from Psalm 56:8 suggests that God preserves the record of human pain.

[v] This term appears frequently in Psalms and is typically understood as a musical direction, possibly indicating a pause for reflection or a musical interlude. It often marks significant theological statements.

[vi] The apostrophes before the final three words create an acrostic יהו״ה (YHYH), closely resembling the divine name. This may be an intentional scribal notation highlighting mystical significance.

[vii] Cf. Psalm 6:8-9 — This reference establishes the prayer as coming from a position of confidence that God has accepted the supplicant’s tears and prayers, thus enemies should depart. | Cf. Psalm 56:8 — The reference to God collecting tears in a bottle is a powerful metaphor for divine remembrance of human suffering, suggesting that no tear is forgotten by God. | Cf. Psalm 46:7, 11 — This reference shifts the prayer from personal lament to communal confidence in divine protection, drawing on the traditional refrain that affirms God’s presence with Israel. | Cf. Psalm 84:12 — This continues the theme of trust in divine protection, moving from communal to individual blessing for those who trust in God. | Cf. Psalm 20:9 — This final verse returns to petition, asking for divine response to prayer. The emphasis on ‘the King’ may have messianic overtones or refer to God as King.

פסוקים מסודרים בסדר אלפא ביתא[i]

Biblical verses arranged in alphabetical order[1]

מכוונים לדעת המסדר[ii] לחיות על שפת האדם תדיר[iii][iv] directed to[2] keep the Arranger's teaching[3] constantly on one's lips[4]

אליך ה׳ אקרא ואל ה׳ אתחנן:

To You, O LORD, I call, and to the LORD I plead. 2385R

אָנָּא יְיָ הוֹשִׁיעָה נָּא אָנָּא יְיָ הַצְלִיחָה נָּא:[v] וְאַתָּה יְהוָה אַל תִּרְחַק אֱלָוּתִי לְעֶזְרָתִי חוּשָׁה: בְּקָרְאִי עֲנֵנִי אֱלֹהֵי צִדְקִי בַּצָּר הִרְחַבְתָּ לִּי חָנֵּנִי וּשְׁמַע תְּפִלָּתִי: גּוֹל עַל יְיָ דַּרְכֶּךָ וּבְטַח עָלָיו וְהוּא יַעֲשֶׂה: הוֹדִי צַח וְאָדוֹם דָּגוּל

Please, O LORD, save us! Please, O LORD, grant success! And You, O LORD, do not be distant; my strength, hasten to my aid! Answer me when I call, O God of my righteousness; You have relieved me in distress. Be gracious to me and hear my prayer. Commit your way to the LORD[A] and trust in Him, and He will act.[5] My 2390R

[A] Or: "Roll your way upon the LORD" — The Hebrew verb 'gol' literally means 'to roll' and creates a vivid metaphor of rolling one's burdens onto God. While 'commit' captures the theological meaning, the literal translation preserves the physical imagery of the original Hebrew.

[1] This refers to the practice of selecting verses that begin with each successive letter of the Hebrew alphabet to create an acrostic prayer. In Ma'avar Yabok, this alphabetical arrangement has mystical significance, reflecting the belief that the entirety of creation is contained within the Hebrew alphabet. Such alphabetical arrangements were also practical, making prayers easier to memorize for those attending the dying who might be under emotional distress.

[2] The Hebrew 'מכוונים' (mekhavnim) comes from the root meaning 'to direct' or 'to intend,' and is related to the mystical concept of kavvanah (proper intention). It implies conscious spiritual focus rather than casual recitation.

[3] The Hebrew 'דעת המסדר' (da'at hamesader) refers to the knowledge or teaching of 'the Arranger'—likely referring to the author of Ma'avar Yabok or the compiler of these prayer sequences.

[4] This reflects the Jewish mystical understanding that sacred words, when properly pronounced, create spiritual effects in higher realms. Keeping these teachings 'on one's lips' (על שפת האדם תדיר) refers to constant verbalization as a spiritual practice.

[5] The Hebrew phrase 'gol al Adonai darkekha' literally means 'roll your way upon the LORD,' creating a vivid physical metaphor of rolling one's burdens onto God like transferring a heavy load. This imagery is particularly resonant in the context of illness where one feels burdened by physical and spiritual weight.

[i] This brief instruction indicates that biblical verses are to be arranged in alphabetical order, likely creating an acrostic where each verse begins with successive letters of the Hebrew alphabet. This was a common mnemonic device in Jewish liturgy, particularly for prayers related to death and mourning.

[ii] The phrase 'directed to keep the Arranger's teaching' refers to focusing one's intention (kavvanah) on the spiritual teachings of the one who arranged these prayers and rituals.

[iii] Literally 'to be on the lips of man constantly,' this refers to the practice of constantly verbalizing or reciting these teachings, reflecting the kabbalistic emphasis on sacred speech as a vehicle for spiritual transformation.

[iv] Cf. Song of Songs 4:3 — The allusion to lips in Song of Songs connects the act of constant recitation to the mystical understanding of sacred speech as creating beauty in higher realms. | Cf. Deuteronomy 30:14 — This reference reinforces the idea that divine teachings should be internalized and verbalized constantly, not kept at a distance.

[v] This opening line comes directly from Psalm 118:25, which is part of the Hallel liturgy recited on Jewish festivals. Beginning the prayer with this verse establishes a tone of both supplication and praise.

מַרְכָּבָה:[i] הַשְׁלֵךְ עַל יְיָ יְהָבְךָ וְהוּא
יְכַלְכְּלֶךָּ לֹא יִתֵּן לְעוֹלָם מוֹט
לַצַּדִּיק: הַצִּילֵנִי נָא מִיַּד אָחִי מִיַּד
עֵשָׂו כִּי יָרֵא אָנֹכִי אֹתוֹ פֶּן יָבוֹא
וְהִכַּנִי אֵם עַל בָּנִים[ii]: הִרְכַּבְתָּ
אֱנוֹשׁ לְרֹאשֵׁנוּ בָּאנוּ בָאֵשׁ וּבַמָּיִם
וַתּוֹצִיאֵנוּ לָרָוָיָה: וַיְהִי יְיָ מִשְׂגָּב
לַדָּךְ מִשְׂגָּב לְעִתּוֹת בַּצָּרָה: זֶה
עָנִי קָרָא וַיְיָ שָׁמַע וּמִכָּל צָרוֹתָיו
הוֹשִׁיעוֹ: חָנֵּנִי יְיָ כִּי אֻמְלַל אָנִי
רְפָאֵנִי יְיָ כִּי נִבְהֲלוּ עֲצָמָי: חָדְלוּ
קֹרוֹבַי וּמְיֻדָּעַי שְׂכֵחוּנִי: טוֹב יְיָ
לַכֹּל וְרַחֲמָיו עַל כָּל מַעֲשָׂיו: יְהִי
חַסְדְּךָ יְיָ עָלֵינוּ כַּאֲשֶׁר יִחַלְנוּ
לָךְ: כִּי אַתָּה תָּאִיר נֵרִי יְיָ אֱלֹהַי
יַגִּיהַּ חָשְׁכִּי: כִּי אָבִי וְאִמִּי עֲזָבוּנִי
וַיהוָה יַאַסְפֵנִי: אוֹהֲבַי וְרֵעַי מִנֶּגֶד
נִגְעִי יַעֲמֹדוּ וּקְרוֹבַי מֵרָחֹק עָמָדוּ:
לָמָּה יְהוָה תַּעֲמֹד בְּרָחוֹק תַּעְלִים
לְעִתּוֹת בַּצָּרָה: מִלְּפָנֶיךָ מִשְׁפָּטִי
יֵצֵא עֵינֶיךָ תֶּחֱזֶינָה מֵישָׁרִים: נֹתֵן
לֶחֶם לְכָל בָּשָׂר כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ:
סוּרוּ מִמֶּנִּי כָּל פֹּעֲלֵי אָוֶן כִּי שָׁמַע
יְיָ קוֹל בִּכְיִי: עוּרָה לָמָּה תִישַׁן
אֲדֹנָי קְקִיצָה אַל תִּזְנַח לָנֶצַח:
עֵינַי כָּל אֵלֶיךָ יְשַׁבֵּרוּ וְאַתָּה נוֹתֵן
לָהֶם אֶת אָכְלָם בְּעִתּוֹ: פּוֹתֵחַ beloved is radiant and ruddy, distinguished among ten thousand.[1] Cast your burden[A] upon the LORD and He will sustain you; He will never allow the 2395R righteous to be moved.[2] Deliver me, please, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him, lest he come and strike me, mothers with children. You have caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and water, but 2400R

You brought us out to abundance. May the LORD be a stronghold for the oppressed, a stronghold in times of trouble.[B] This poor man called, and the LORD heard him and saved him from all his troubles. Be gracious to me, O LORD, for I am 2405R languishing; heal me, O LORD, for my bones are troubled. My friends and companions stand aloof from my affliction, and my relatives stand far off.
The LORD is good to all, and His mercy is over all that He has made. May Your lovingkindness, 2410R
O LORD, be upon us, just as we have hoped in
You. For You light my lamp; the LORD my God illuminates my darkness. For my father and my mother have forsaken me, but the LORD will take me in.[3] My loved ones and friends stand back from 2415R
my plague, and my relatives stand at a distance.
Why, O LORD, do You stand far away? Why do
You hide Yourself in times of trouble? From before
You let my judgment come forth; let Your eyes

[A]Or: "your lot" — The term 'yehavkha' can be understood as 'your burden' but also as 'your lot' or 'what is given to you'—capturing the broader sense of one's circumstances or appointed situation in life.

[B]Or: "for seasons of distress" — The Hebrew 'ittot' can mean 'times' but also specifically 'seasons' or 'appointed times,' suggesting not just random moments of trouble but cyclical or designated periods of difficulty.

[1]This sudden insertion from Song of Songs creates a striking contrast with the surrounding lamentations. In mystical interpretations, this may represent the soul's glimpse of divine beauty even amid suffering, or suggest that physical affliction can sometimes lead to moments of spiritual intimacy.

[2]This verse (Psalm 55:23) reinforces the previous instruction to 'roll' one's way upon the LORD, creating a thematic pair that emphasizes complete reliance on divine support during times of distress.

[3]This verse from Psalm 27:10 addresses the profound isolation often experienced during serious illness. The imagery of divine adoption provides comfort precisely when human relationships seem most distant or strained.

[i]This verse from Song of Songs 5:10 seems somewhat out of place in a prayer otherwise focused on distress and divine protection. In Jewish mystical tradition, Song of Songs is interpreted as an allegory for the relationship between God and Israel, suggesting that even in suffering, the supplicant maintains a loving connection with the divine.

[ii]This is Jacob's prayer from Genesis 32:12, spoken before his anticipated reunion with Esau. The inclusion of this specific verse is significant as it directly connects to the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok,' which references Jacob's crossing of the Jabbok River during this same episode.

אֶת יָדֶךָ וּמַשְׂבִּיעַ לְכָל חַי רָצוֹן:
צַדִּיק יְיָ בְּכָל דְּרָכָיו וְחָסִיד בְּכָל מַעֲשָׂיו:
קָרוֹב יְיָ לְכָל קֹרְאָיו לְכֹל אֲשֶׁר יִקְרָאֻהוּ בֶּאֱמֶת:
רְצוֹן יְרֵאָיו יַעֲשֶׂה וְאֶת שַׁוְעָתָם יִשְׁמַע וְיוֹשִׁיעֵם:
שׁוֹמֵר יְיָ אֶת כָּל אֹהֲבָיו וְאֵת כָּל הָרְשָׁעִים יַשְׁמִיד:
תְּהִלַּת יְיָ יְדַבֶּר פִּי וִיבָרֵךְ כָּל בָּשָׂר שֵׁם קָדְשׁוֹ לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד:
וַאֲנַחְנוּ נְבָרֵךְ יָהּ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ:
הוֹדוּ לַיְיָ כִּי טוֹב כִּי לְעוֹלָם חַסְדּוֹ:
מִי יְמַלֵּל גְּבוּרוֹת יְיָ יַשְׁמִיעַ כָּל תְּהִלָּתוֹ:
אַשְׁרֵי שֹׁמְרֵי מִשְׁפָּט עֹשֵׂה צְדָקָה בְכָל עֵת:
זָכְרֵנִי יְיָ בִּרְצוֹן עַמֶּךָ פָּקְדֵנִי בִּישׁוּעָתֶךָ:
חָנֵּנִי יְיָ וְחָנֵּנִי כִּי אֵלֶיךָ אֲיַחֵל הֱיֵה זְרוֹעָם לַבֹּקְרִים אַף יְשׁוּעָתָם בְּעֵת צָרָה:
טוֹב יְיָ לַכֹּל וְרַחֲמָיו עַל כָּל מַעֲשָׂיו:
יוֹדוּךָ יְיָ כָּל מַעֲשֶׂיךָ וַחֲסִידֶיךָ יְבָרְכוּכָה:
כְּבוֹד מַלְכוּתְךָ יֹאמֵרוּ וּגְבוּרָתְךָ יְדַבֵּרוּ:
לְהוֹדִיעַ לִבְנֵי הָאָדָם גְּבוּרֹתָיו וּכְבוֹד הֲדַר מַלְכוּתוֹ:
מַלְכוּתְךָ מַלְכוּת כָּל עֹלָמִים וּמֶמְשַׁלְתְּךָ בְּכָל דּוֹר וָדוֹר:
סוֹמֵךְ יְיָ לְכָל הַנֹּפְלִים וְזוֹקֵף לְכָל הַכְּפוּפִים:
עֵינֵי כֹל אֵלֶיךָ יְשַׂבֵּרוּ וְאַתָּה נוֹתֵן לָהֶם אֶת אָכְלָם בְּעִתּוֹ:
פּוֹתֵחַ אֶת יָדֶךָ וּמַשְׂבִּיעַ לְכָל חַי רָצוֹן:
צַדִּיק יְיָ בְּכָל דְּרָכָיו וְחָסִיד בְּכָל מַעֲשָׂיו:
קָרוֹב יְיָ לְכָל קֹרְאָיו לְכֹל אֲשֶׁר יִקְרָאֻהוּ בֶּאֱמֶת:
רְצוֹן יְרֵאָיו יַעֲשֶׂה וְאֶת שַׁוְעָתָם יִשְׁמַע וְיוֹשִׁיעֵם:
שׁוֹמֵר יְיָ אֶת כָּל אֹהֲבָיו וְאֵת כָּל הָרְשָׁעִים יַשְׁמִיד:
תְּהִלַּת יְיָ יְדַבֶּר פִּי וִיבָרֵךְ כָּל בָּשָׂר שֵׁם קָדְשׁוֹ לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד:
וַאֲנַחְנוּ נְבָרֵךְ יָהּ מֵעַתָּה וְעַד עוֹלָם הַלְלוּיָהּ: שַׁדַּי
בָּרְכֵנוּ וְנִחְיֶה ג׳ פְּעָמִים[i] כִּי אַתָּה
יָמִים וּשְׁנוֹת חַיִּים וְשָׁלוֹם יוֹסִיפוּ
לִי עִם כָּל עַמּוֹ יִשְׂרָאֵל אָמֵן: בָּרוּךְ
יְיָ לְעוֹלָם אָמֵן וְאָמֵן:[ii]

behold what is right. He gives food to all flesh, for 2420R His steadfast love endures forever. Depart from me, all evildoers, for the LORD has heard the voice of my weeping. Awake! Why do You sleep, O Lord?
Arise! Do not reject us forever! The eyes of all look to You, and You give them their food in due 2425R season. You open Your hand and satisfy the desire of every living thing. The troubles of my heart are enlarged; bring me out of my distresses. The LORD is near to the brokenhearted and saves the crushed in spirit. See my affliction and my toil, and forgive 2430R all my sins. Hear, O LORD, and be gracious to me;
O LORD, be my helper. Bring me out from the net
they have hidden for me, for You are my refuge.
Why are you cast down, O my soul, and why are you disquieted within me?[1] Hope in God, for I shall 2435R yet praise Him, the salvation of my countenance and my God. The LORD has remembered us; He will bless, He will bless the house of Israel, He will bless the house of Aaron. We will bless the LORD from this time forth and forevermore. Hallelujah! 2440R May Shaddai bless us that we may live (repeat three times),[2] for length of days, years of life, and peace shall be added to me, with all His people Israel.

[1]This self-address from Psalm 42:12 represents a crucial turning point in the prayer, where the supplicant shifts from expressions of distress to active self-encouragement. This models how the sick person might engage in similar internal dialogue, acknowledging suffering while consciously redirecting thoughts toward hope.

[2]The instruction to repeat this phrase three times highlights its ritual significance. The divine name 'Shaddai' combined with the explicit request for life suggests this prayer's function in healing contexts. The threefold repetition likely relates to the kabbalistic belief that repetition strengthens the spiritual potency of words.

[i]The instruction to repeat this phrase three times indicates the ritual nature of the prayer. The use of the divine name 'Shaddai' (traditionally associated with protection and blessing) combined with the explicit request for life ('ve-nichyeh') suggests this prayer's function in healing contexts.

[ii]Cf. Psalm 118:25 — This opening identifies the prayer as drawing on Hallel liturgy, immediately establishing a tone of supplication mixed with praise, appropriate for someone in distress but maintaining faith. | Cf. Genesis 32:11-12 — The inclusion of Jacob's prayer before meeting Esau is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok, as the book's title references Jacob's crossing of the Jabbok River during this same episode. This creates a direct connection between the sick person's situation and Jacob's transformative night of struggle before his reunion with Esau. | Cf. Psalm 42:12 — This self-address provides a model for the sick person to engage in similar internal dialogue, acknowledging distress while actively redirecting thoughts toward hope. This verse forms a critical transition from expressions of pain to affirmations of faith. | Cf. Song of Songs 5:10 — In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this reference to Song of Songs introduces a moment of mystical devotion within a prayer otherwise focused on distress and divine protection. It suggests that even in suffering, the sick person can experience a loving connection with the divine, viewing God not just as a protector but as a beloved. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's central metaphor — The prayer's structure embodies the crossing metaphor of Ma'avar Yabok itself: beginning with urgent pleas for help, moving through acknowledgment of abandonment and isolation, and concluding with expressions of hope and blessing. This models the spiritual journey the sick person is encouraged to make from fear to faith.

Amen. Blessed be the LORD forever! Amen and Amen! 2445R

פרק י״ח

Chapter 18

יערף כמטר לקחי תזל כטל
אמרתי[i] ולכו בני שמעו לי הטיבו
נא מעלליכם כי טוב יפיק רצון
מה׳ ושימו לבבכם על דרכיכם
כי מאן דשיים אורחיה סגי שוי 5R
ותבחרו בחיים הנצחיי׳ ועליכם
המצוה הזאת ועמהן אליכ׳
אישי׳ בני חבורתי אקרא וברוב
רחמכם פנו נא אלי כי אאמיצכם
במו פי יהא רעוא דתהא תפלתי 10R
זכה בעיניכם ותהיה מקום
לזעקתי זאת עשו וחיו כי ישמח
הר ציון תגלנה בנות יהודה
שאו פתחי עולם והתמידו
בכל יום לקום באשמורת 15R
ולהפגין בלילה בדברי שיח רנה
ותפלה[ii] אשר הצעתי לפניכם
במעירי שחר[iii] אשר בנינו
כנטיעים מגודלים בו מנעוריהם
זה כמו עשרה שנים שזכני ה׳ 20R
לעורר בו ישנים בעיר מודי״נה
הל״ו[iv] בצדקתכם תחזיקו ולא
תרפו ממנה כי כן חובה לנו
בכל דבר מצוה ועם שוגי׳
ואוהבי לנום אל תתערבו ותהיו 25R

May my teaching drop like rain, my words flow like dew.[1] Come, my children, listen to me; improve your deeds, for goodness brings favor from the Lord. Set your hearts upon your ways, for one who places his path properly receives proper reward.[A] Choose eternal life, for this commandment is upon you.

And to you, my friends, members of my society, I call. In your great compassion, turn to me, for I will strengthen you with my words. May it be the divine will that my prayer be pure in your eyes and that there be a place for my cry. Do this and live, for Mount Zion will rejoice and the daughters of Judah will be glad. Lift up the eternal gates and persist every day to rise at dawn and to demonstrate at night with words of meditation, song, and prayer that I have set before you in my "Illuminators of Dawn"[B] which we have built like well-tended saplings from their youth. It has been about ten years since the Lord granted me the privilege to awaken those who slumber in this city of Modena.[2] Hold fast to your righteousness and do not let go of it, for such is our obligation in every matter of commandment.

Do not associate with those who err and love to sleep; instead, be united with your peers. Strengthen

[A] Or: "for one who charts his course well receives proportionate reward" — This is an Aramaic expression about proper conduct being rewarded accordingly. The alternate translation maintains the meaning while using more natural English phrasing that captures the proportional relationship between conduct and reward.

[B] Or: "in my dawn prayer society" — From context, this appears to refer to a prayer society or collection that the author established. The term could be translated more functionally rather than as a proper name.

[1] The author begins with Moses' words from Deuteronomy 32:2, establishing a connection between his own teaching and biblical authority.

[2] The text confirms that the author led this prayer society in Modena, Italy, for approximately ten years.

[i] This is a direct quote from Deuteronomy 32:2, from Moses' song, using the metaphor of rain and dew to describe the gentle but penetrating nature of divine teaching.

[ii] The term להפגין (to demonstrate) is unusual in a prayer context, suggesting a public or collective demonstration of piety through nighttime prayer, not just private devotion.

[iii] "Me'irei Shachar" (Illuminators of Dawn) appears to be the name of the author's prayer society in Modena, focused on early morning devotions. This provides important historical context about the author's communal role.

[iv] This confirms the author's presence in Modena, Italy, and his leadership role in a prayer society there for approximately ten years.

לאחדים עם בני גילכם וחזקו
ואמצו יחד ואיש לאחיו יאמר
חזק ונתחזקה בעד עמנו וערי
אלהינו ואם תאבו דיתקיים
צוותא דלכון לעלמין השמרו
לכם פן אל יכנס אחד מכם
בתחום חבירו ולא לדברי חבירו
פן חם ושלום יפיק מיניה חורבא
בארבעה אבות נזיקין וחניקא
של סמ״ך מ״ם יקבוץ און זה
לו לידון דינא דגרמי ולגרום
חניקא מאחד לחבריה כדרכן
של נמלים בעידנא דאיתערבב
להון עפרא דחוריהון דין עם דין
דחנקי דא לדא כאשר הביא בעל
שלטי הגבורים במועד קטן פרק
קמא על משנת צדין את האישות
ואפ״לא דאיהו דין שיש לו רום
נמוכא דגני בבית אפל לשוייה
חרפ״א ודאי אסור[i] שמעו נא
בנים מוסר אב [ii]

and encourage one another, and let each man say to his brother, "Be strong!" and let us strengthen ourselves for the sake of our people and the cities of our God. If you desire that your fellowship endure forever, guard yourselves lest any of you enter his fellow's domain or interfere with his fellow's words, lest—Heaven forbid—this leads to destruction through the four principal categories of damages.[1] The suffocation of Samael[A] will gather this iniquity to himself to judge causative damages and to cause one to suffocate his fellow, just as ants do when their nest's earth is disturbed, strangling one another,[2] as explained by the author of Shiltei Gibborim in Moed Katan, first chapter, on the Mishnah "Trapping moles." And certainly one who possesses elevated status should not lie in a dark house to make a mockery—this is surely forbidden. Listen, my children, to a father's instruction.

ולכת אמיץ הנה אל שדי תתחננו

And to the strong company,[3] behold, you shall en-

[A] Or: "The strangulation of the Evil One" — The abbreviation סמ״ך מ״ם (samekh mem) is a common euphemism for Satan/Samael, often used to avoid directly naming the evil force. This alternate translation conveys the meaning without using the name Samael, which might be more appropriate for some audiences.

[1] This refers to the rabbinic categorization of damages in Jewish law (Bava Kamma 1:1): ox, pit, fire, and man. The author is using a legal framework to warn against spiritual harm within the community.

[2] This vivid metaphor compares community conflict to ants that attack each other when their nest is disturbed. The author cites a rabbinic commentary (Shiltei Gibborim) on Mishnah Moed Katan to strengthen this unusual comparison.

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'לכת אמיץ' refers to the tight-knit community or brotherhood the author is addressing, possibly members of his prayer society.

[i] This phrase contains wordplay and is difficult to translate precisely. It refers to someone of high status ("elevated low one"—a paradoxical term) who should not lower themselves by sleeping in a dark house to make mockery. This may be a warning against distinguished members degrading themselves through improper behavior.

[ii] Cf. Deuteronomy 32:2 — The author opens with Moses' words to establish authority and continuity with the biblical tradition, positioning his own teaching as divinely inspired instruction. | Cf. Proverbs 8:35 — The author draws on this biblical wisdom tradition to emphasize that following his instructions leads to eternal life, elevating his guidance to the level of divine wisdom. | Cf. Psalms 48:12 — This reference connects the author's instructions to biblical promises of joy and divine favor, suggesting that following his guidance will lead to communal rejoicing. | Cf. Mishnah Moed Katan — This reference to a relatively obscure halakhic discussion demonstrates the author's rabbinic learning while using the metaphor of disturbed ants to warn against interfering in others' domains within the prayer society. | Cf. Psalm 24:7 — This biblical allusion frames the daily prayer practice as a way of opening spiritual gateways, suggesting that the author's prayer society facilitates divine entry into the world through their dawn devotions.

בבקר השכם[i] ואם כסף תועפות
ישעה מכם לפאר ליוצריכם
ברוב עם אז על שד״י תתענגו
כי לא ימנע טוב להולכים
בדמ״ים וכל מי שיתן למצוה
אינו מחסר את נכסיו[ii] שכן
נאמר כי נר מצוה ותורה אור
כפי דרשת חכמינו ז״ל בשמות
רבה פ׳ ל״ו והקב״ה למעשה
ידיו יכסוף שיהללום בשערים
מעשיהם עוד אמרו בויקרא רבה
פ׳ ה׳ לפי מתנתך מרחיבין לך
ואם תקיימו דברי הזקן אבינו
יעקב בהפריש מעשרות ממתנת
ידיכם בכך יהיו בידכם מורמים
ומופרשים המעות לשם מצוה
ומהם תזכו לעניים המחזיקים
בידכם במצוה זו ובזה תשחקו
לסוס ולרוכבו[iii] ותשגיא פעלכם
וחתת לא תיראו ותשואות נוגש
לא תשמעו ותקחו במצוה זו
מוסר השכל בהמת לפרקים
יחד דברי אשר התחננתי בסוף
המעירי שחר הנזכר למעלה
להקיץ לב נרדמים דהשתא ייתו
יומי דאריכי וקטיני ונינם טובא
ושינה מתוקה גורמת למיתה
דחוקה ומרה[iv] רחמנא לצלן treat the Almighty in the early morning,[1] and if 45R abundant silver is requested from you to glorify your Creator with a multitude of people, then you shall delight in the Almighty. For He does not withhold good from those who walk in[2] purity,[A] and whoever gives to a commandment does not diminish his pos- 50R sessions, as it is said, “For a commandment is a lamp and the Torah is light,” according to our Sages of blessed memory’s interpretation in Exodus Rabbah, chapter 36. And the Holy One, blessed be He, yearns for the works of His hands, that their deeds should 55R be praised in the gates. They further said in Leviticus Rabbah, chapter 5, “According to your gift, they expand for you.” And if you fulfill the words of our elder father Jacob by separating tithes from the gift of your hands, in this way the funds will be in your 60R hands, set aside and designated for the sake of the commandment. Through them, you will merit [to help] the poor who strengthen your hands in this commandment. And with this, you will laugh at the horse and its rider, and your work will increase, 65R and you will not see terror, and you will not hear the demands of the taskmaster. And you will take from this commandment moral instruction for your beasts occasionally, together with my words[B] which I pleaded at the end of “Illuminators of Dawn” men- 70R tioned above, to awaken the hearts of the slumbering. For now, the days that are long and short will

[A] Or: “blood-offerings” — The term דמ״ים literally means ‘bloods’ and could refer to sacrificial offerings or monetary payments rather than moral purity. In certain contexts, it refers to blood sacrifices, which were replaced by prayer and charity after the Temple’s destruction.

[B] Or: “like animals at intervals, combined with my words” — This phrase is grammatically complex. An alternative reading could understand ‘בהמת’ not as ‘your beasts’ but as ‘like animals,’ suggesting that the community should periodically gather like a herd to hear the author’s teachings.

[1] The author places special emphasis on early morning prayer, consistent with his leadership of the ‘Me’irei Shachar’ (Illuminators of Dawn) prayer society mentioned in the memory notes.

[2] The term דמ״ים could be interpreted multiple ways. While literally meaning ‘bloods,’ in this context it likely refers to ritual purity or moral integrity, though it may also allude to sacrificial offerings.

[i] The emphasis on early morning prayer reflects the kabbalistic belief that divine mercy is more accessible during the morning hours when the attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness) dominates.

[ii] This reflects the rabbinic concept that charitable giving doesn’t diminish wealth but rather increases it—a paradoxical principle found throughout Jewish ethical literature.

[iii] A biblical allusion to the Song of the Sea (Exodus 15:1-21) where the Israelites celebrated God’s victory over Pharaoh’s army. Here it’s repurposed to suggest that charitable giving provides victory over spiritual enemies.

[iv] This reflects the kabbalistic concern that excessive physical comfort (represented by sleep) can lead to spiritual neglect and ultimately spiritual death. The metaphor of sleep as spiritual complacency is common in mystical literature.

כאשר הובא במרגניתא דרבי מאיר ומשכילי עם מפני חרבות ירושלים נדדו שינה מעיניהם. ובזה תעשו סוכה לשומר שיבא וישמר אתכם [i] come,[1] and they sleep much, and sweet sleep causes constricted and bitter death, God save us, as was brought in the "Pearl of Rabbi Meir." And the wise of the people, because of the destruction of Jerusalem, have banished sleep from their eyes. And with this, you will make a shelter for the guardian[2] who will come and protect you.

75R

דטוביה דהוא בביתיה טוביה דהוא בלויתיה ואם אנ״י והו״א כאן הכל כאן ואיש באחיו תדובקו תתלכדו ולא תתפרדו. (ורו״ח אחר״ת לא יבא ביניכם) ואחריתכם תשגא מאד ועוף השמים יוליך את קולכם כדתרגם יונתן בפסוק זה כי מלאך פלוני מכריז בכל יומא מן שמיא על טורא דחורב[ii] ומהלך קליה בכל עלמא ואליהו כהנא רבא אזיל ופרח באויר שמיא בנשרא מד׳ גפין[iii] ומחוי מילין דמתעבדין בטימורתא לכל דיירי עלמא ותהיו ממצדיקי הרבים ומאן דאגר גינא עילאה

Good is he who is in his house, good is he who is in his company.[3] And if I and He are here, all is here.[4] Cleave to one another, unite, and do not separate. (And let no alien spirit come between you.) Your latter end will grow exceedingly great, and the bird of the heavens will carry your voice, as Jonathan translated this verse: "For a certain angel proclaims every day from heaven upon Mount Horeb, and his voice travels throughout the world, and Elijah the High Priest goes and flies through the air of heaven like an eagle with four wings, and reveals deeds done in secret to all the inhabitants of the world." And you shall be among those who bring merit to the many, and whoever cultivates this supernal garden eats the reward of the celestial birds.[5] Write these words upon your hearts, for upon them I will make

80R

85R

90R

95R

[1] This appears to refer to the changing seasons, suggesting the passage of time and the approach of judgment, adding urgency to the author's spiritual exhortations.

[2] This metaphor draws on the biblical concept of the sukkah (temporary dwelling) but repurposes it as spiritual protection. The guardian likely refers to divine protective forces activated through proper observance and charity.

[3] This appears to be a proverbial expression emphasizing the value of both solitary spiritual practice and communal worship or study.

[4] This likely refers to a rabbinic saying about divine presence, suggesting that when God ('He') and the individual ('I') are spiritually connected, everything necessary is present.

[5] This metaphorical expression suggests that those who engage in spiritual cultivation (through study and practice) will receive heavenly rewards, with 'celestial birds' possibly representing angels or divine messengers.

[i] Cf. Exodus Rabbah 36 — The author cites this text to support the claim that giving to commandments (mitzvot) does not diminish one's wealth but rather increases it through divine blessing. | Cf. Leviticus Rabbah 5 — This reference reinforces the author's central argument that charitable giving results in expanded blessings, creating a direct relationship between generosity and divine abundance. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar (Illuminators of Dawn) — The author refers to his own previous work or prayer collection, which contained similar exhortations to spiritual vigilance and charitable giving. | Cf. Marganita d'Rabbi Meir (Pearl of Rabbi Meir) — The author cites this text to warn against spiritual complacency, linking excessive sleep to spiritual and physical death. | Cf. Proverbs 6:23 — This verse is used to establish the metaphorical framework that mitzvot provide spiritual illumination and protection, justifying the emphasis on charitable giving.

[ii] This refers to a mystical tradition that an angel makes proclamations daily from Mount Horeb (Sinai), suggesting that spiritual revelations continue to emanate from the site of the original Torah revelation.

[iii] This describes Elijah the prophet as a 'High Priest' flying through the heavens like an eagle with four wings, representing his role as a cosmic messenger who reveals hidden deeds. The four wings may correspond to the four letters of the divine name or the four worlds in Kabbalistic cosmology.

דא אכיל אגר דצפרין עלאין
וכתבו על לבכם את הדברים
האלה כי על פיהם אכרות עמכם
100 ברית. ושיתו לבכם לחילה לעת
אשר ינתק מאהל אדם מבטחו
מעה״ז והצעידהו לעבד מלך
הכושי בבלהות[i] על דרך שאמרו
חז״ל במס׳ ברכות אם יראה
105 אדם שיצרו מתגבר עליו יזכיר
לו יום המיתה. ואמרו בזהר פ׳
בשלח אי לעילא אית ליה לבר
נש מרי דבבו לתתא אוף הכי
ודאי הוא צר דהוא צר לעילא
110 צר לתתא ועל פי עצת חכמים
זו. עוד זאת אדרש מכם ותזל
אמרתי כמוכן על התלמידים
הקטנים בני גילי שעדיין לא
שמשו כל צרכן שיביעו ידברו
115 לפחות זמן מה פעם א׳ בשנה
יהיה לכם שיח ושיג בארבעה הנה
קטני ארץ מאמרותי חלו כי הם
״מורים ״עבודת ״ברכה ״רמה
ראשי תיבות מעב״ר ששם ינוחו
120 ה״יחוד וה״ברכה והק״דושה
ראשי תיבות י״בק[ii] ויזכו בכל
קריאה לקנות להם רוח נשברה
כי בזה יחרדו מאימת מות
ויכניעו כח המנגד המתגבר
125 עליהם ובעקיפין ותסקופין אתי
לגבייהו[iii] ובתחבולה זו יעשו

a covenant with you.

Set your hearts to its strength, for the time when man's security is severed from his tent in this world,[1] and it leads him to serve the Cushite king in terrors, as our Sages of blessed memory said in 100R Tractate Berakhot: "If a person sees that his evil inclination is overwhelming him, he should remind himself of the day of death." And they said in the Zohar, Parashat Beshalach: "If a person has an enemy above, he surely has one below, for what 105R causes trouble above causes trouble below." And according to this advice of the Sages.[A]

Furthermore, I ask this of you, and may my words flow like prepared [oil] concerning the young students of my age group who have not yet served [their 110R teachers] sufficiently, that they should speak and discuss for at least some time, once a year, about these four small ones of the earth from my discourses, for they are: "Teaching," "Service," "Blessing," "Exalted"—the acronym forming "Ma'avar" (מעב״ר), for 115R there rest the "Unification," the "Blessing," and the "Holiness"—the acronym forming "YaBoK" (י״בק). And may they merit with every reading to acquire for themselves a broken spirit,[2] for through this they will tremble with the fear of death and subdue the 120R opposing force that strengthens against them, approaching them indirectly and through thresholds, and with this strategy they will wage war against it, for this despicable one is only completed through the sins of mankind,[B] and it seeks to join with the side 125R

[A] Or: "And you should follow this advice of the Sages." — The original translation is more literal, but the alternate is more directive and better captures the instructional tone of the passage, which is providing guidance to the readers.

[B] Or: "for this vile entity only gains power through the sins of mankind" — While the original translation is more literal, the alternate better conveys the kabbalistic concept being expressed about how negative spiritual forces gain strength through human sin.

[1] This is a poetic reference to death, describing it as the moment when one's connection to physical existence ('tent') is cut off.

[2] This phrase alludes to Psalm 51:17, 'The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, you will not despise.' It represents the spiritual state of humility and contrition that the author believes will come from studying his work.

[i] This metaphorical reference to the 'Cushite king' likely represents the Angel of Death or demonic forces that rule in the realm of terror and darkness.

[ii] Here the author reveals the mystical significance of the book's title through two acronyms: Ma'avar (מעב״ר) standing for 'Teaching, Service, Blessing, Exalted' and YaBOK (י״בק) representing 'Unification, Blessing, and Holiness.' This demonstrates how the title encodes the book's spiritual purpose.

[iii] This phrase uses technical kabbalistic terminology to describe how negative spiritual forces approach humans indirectly and through thresholds, suggesting that spiritual dangers often come through subtle, indirect approaches rather than direct confrontation.

עמו מלחמה דלא אשתלם מנוולא
דא אלא בחוביהון דבני נשא
ובעי לאשתפא בסטר גבורה
למיגח קרבא עם יצר הרע. ועוד
בהגיון זה יראה לעיניהם איזה
דרושים המלהבים לב האדם
להיות מהיר וזריז לעבודת
מלכו ויקנו יראת שמים ואהבה
ובזה יזכו לתפנוקי מלכא ולא
תאונה אליהם רעה דא לילית
ונגע לא יקרב באהליהם דאינון
שאר מזיקין ח״ו ואם כה יעשו
ויקנו בנפשם קדושה [i]

of Gevurah to wage war with the evil inclination.

Moreover, through this contemplation, they will see before their eyes certain discourses that inflame the human heart to be swift and diligent in the service of their King, and they will acquire fear of Heaven and love, and thereby merit the delights of the King. No evil shall befall them—this is Lilith—and no plague shall come near their tents—these are other harmful spirits,[A] God forbid. And if they do this and acquire holiness in their souls.

יהיה כל א׳ מהם אהוב למעלה
ונחמד למטה. ויזכה לטוב
הצפון לצדיקים היושבים בצל
האילן הנובע גולות ברכות מים
חיים ונופל על ראש כל צדיק
וצדיק. וכל הזוכה שנופל עליו
הטל ההוא[ii] הולך ועומד בשער
המזרחי של ג״ע שלפני גנת

Each of them will be beloved above and desired below. And they will merit the goodness hidden away for the righteous who sit in the shadow of the tree[1] that wells forth springs of blessings[B2] of living waters,[C] which falls upon the head of each and every righteous person. And whoever merits that this dew falls upon them goes and stands at the eastern gate of the Garden of Eden that is before

[A] Or: "namely Lilith—and no plague shall approach their dwellings—referring to other harmful spiritual entities" — The alternate translation clarifies the referents more explicitly, making it clearer that the text is identifying specific spiritual dangers.

[B] Or: "that causes spheres of blessing to flow as living waters" — The Hebrew term 'gulot' (גולות) can refer to spherical objects or bubbling springs. This alternate translation emphasizes the spherical imagery, which might better capture the kabbalistic concept of divine emanations as circular or spherical flows.

[C] Or: "that causes spheres of blessing to flow as living waters" — The Hebrew term 'gulot' (גולות) can refer to spherical objects or bubbling springs. This alternate translation emphasizes the spherical imagery, which might better capture the kabbalistic concept of divine emanations as circular or spherical flows.

[1] The image of sitting "in the shadow" (בצל) of a tree combines protection, refreshment, and divine closeness. It echoes Song of Songs 2:3, "I delighted to sit in his shadow," which kabbalistic literature interprets as the soul finding refuge in divine presence.

[2] The Hebrew uses a complex metaphor combining imagery of a tree with that of a spring ("הנובע גולות ברכות"), creating a picture of a tree that somehow produces flowing water. This combines biblical imagery from Psalms 1:3 (tree planted by streams of water) with Proverbs 10:11 (mouth of the righteous is a wellspring of life).

[i] Cf. Zohar Beshalach — This reference establishes a kabbalistic framework for understanding spiritual opposition, supporting the author's guidance about combating negative forces through spiritual practices | Cf. Talmud Berakhot — This reference serves to ground the mystical guidance in traditional rabbinic wisdom, showing how contemplation of mortality can serve as a spiritual technique for self-improvement | Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:20 — The author uses this reference to suggest that righteous actions have cosmic significance, being announced throughout spiritual realms by angelic messengers | Cf. Daniel 12:3 — This biblical allusion suggests that those who follow the author's guidance will not only benefit themselves but help others achieve spiritual elevation, thus meriting special eschatological rewards

[ii] This reference to dew (tal) falling on the righteous has deep mystical significance in Jewish thought. The "dew of resurrection" (tal ha-techiyah) is believed to revive the dead, and here it serves as a metaphorical connection between this world and the World to Come.

אגוז[i] שהוא היכל לפני ולפנים
בג״ע ושם עומד ומשתחוה לפני
ענן כבודו של הקב״ה והקב״ה
שואל והוא משיב כל מה שלמד
בעוה״ז[ii] וכן עושה לכל צדיק
וצדיק. אח״כ ענן הכבוד בא
ועומד על אילן החיים שהוא
באמצע הגן[iii] הנותן ריח שמאותו
ריח הוא חיים לכל הצדיקים
אשר שם. והענן סר והצדיקים
באים ומשתחוים לפני אור זוהר
כבודו למעלה בשמי השמים.
אשרי העם שככה לו אשרי העם
שה׳ אלהיו. יהי כבוד ה׳ לעולם
ישמח ה׳ במעשיו. ברוך ה׳
לעולם אמן ואמן:[iv]

the Garden of Nuts, which is a chamber within the innermost part[A] of the Garden of Eden. There they stand and bow before the cloud of glory of the Holy One, blessed be He, and the Holy One, blessed be He, asks and they respond with all that they have learned in this world. And so He does for each and every righteous person. Afterward, the cloud of glory comes and stands over the Tree of Life,[1] which is in the middle of the garden, giving off a fragrance from which comes life for all the righteous who are there. And the cloud departs, and the righteous come and bow before the light of His radiant glory above in the highest heavens. Happy is the people for whom it is so,[2] happy is the people whose God is the LORD. May the glory of the LORD endure forever; may the LORD rejoice in His works. Blessed be the LORD forever, amen and amen.

145R 150R 155R 160R

[A] Or: "a sanctuary within the Holy of Holies" — The Hebrew phrase 'lifnei v'lifnim' uses Temple terminology that specifically refers to the Holy of Holies, the innermost sanctuary of the Temple. This alternate makes the Temple parallel more explicit, though it's somewhat interpretive in this context.

[1] This parallels the cloud of divine presence that stood over the Tabernacle in the wilderness (Exodus 40:34-38), creating a connection between that historical manifestation of divine presence and the eschatological experience described here.

[2] This concluding phrase comes from Psalm 144:15, followed by "Happy is the people whose God is the LORD," forming a traditional closing for liturgical passages. The author uses biblical verses to create a seal of authority for the mystical vision just described.

[i] "Garden of Nuts" (Ginat Egoz) alludes to Song of Songs 6:11 and is a common kabbalistic metaphor for esoteric wisdom. In kabbalistic literature, the hard shell of the nut represents external barriers that must be broken to access inner mystical truths.

[ii] This passage reflects the rabbinic concept that one's Torah learning is the primary currency of the World to Come, where souls are examined on what they studied in life. It appears in various midrashic sources including Shabbat 31a, where the first question one is asked in heavenly judgment is "Did you set fixed times for Torah study?"

[iii] The Tree of Life positioned in the center of the garden directly parallels the biblical Garden of Eden (Genesis 2:9) and represents the central axis of divine emanation in kabbalistic cosmology.

[iv] Cf. Song of Songs 6:11 — The text draws on the Garden of Nuts (Ginat Egoz) imagery from Song of Songs, which became a central metaphor in kabbalistic literature for the esoteric dimensions of Torah. Just as a nut has a hard shell and sweet interior, mystical wisdom requires breaking through external barriers to access deeper truth. | Cf. Zohar — This passage closely parallels Zoharic descriptions of the Garden of Eden, particularly in its imagery of the righteous standing before divine glory, experiencing the fragrance of the Tree of Life, and the examination of Torah learning. The hierarchical structure of the Garden with chambers within chambers is distinctly Zoharic. | Cf. Psalms 144:15 — The author incorporates this biblical verse as a liturgical conclusion, affirming that the mystical vision he has described represents the ultimate happiness for Israel. By closing with scriptural quotation, he gives traditional authority to his mystical teachings. | Cf. Genesis 2:9 — The positioning of the Tree of Life "in the middle of the garden" directly echoes the biblical Garden of Eden. The author is establishing a parallel between the primordial paradise and the eschatological reward for the righteous, suggesting that the afterlife represents a restoration of humanity's original perfect state.

Part IV

Supplementary discourses

Discourse 9

אמרי נעם / Sayings of Sweetness

פרק א׳ — Chapter 1

בשם ה׳ מאמר ה[i] [ii]

In the Name of the Lord, Discourse Five[1]

מתוק לנפש ומרפא לעצם והוא תוספת בעקר ספר מעבר יבק:[iii] [iv]

Sweet to the soul and healing to the bone, which is a supplement to the main book[2] Ma'avar Yabok.

אמר החכם אין לך דבר שאין לו גדר. אמרו לו מהו הגדר 5R

The sage said, "There is nothing without its proper boundary." They asked him, "What is this

[1] This marks the beginning of the fifth discourse of Aaron Berechia of Modena's Ma'avar Yabok. The book is structured into multiple discourses (ma'amarim), each addressing different aspects of care for the dying, burial practices, and the soul's journey after death. The fifth discourse likely follows the fourth discourse entitled 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' (Cloud of Incense Prayer), which focused on prayer as a substitute for Temple incense offerings.

[2] This phrase indicates that what follows is an additional section that was likely added to Ma'avar Yabok after its initial composition, perhaps to address topics that were not fully covered in the original text.

[i] This phrase marks the beginning of the fifth discourse (Ma'amar Hey) of Ma'avar Yabok. Each discourse in the book corresponds to different aspects of spiritual preparation for death and the afterlife, with the title referencing 'In the Name of the Lord,' indicating the sacred nature of what follows.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Jabbok) refers to Jacob's biblical crossing of the Yabok River, which serves as a metaphor for the soul's transition from this world to the next—a central theme of the book.

[iii] The title "Ma'avar Yabok" (Crossing of the Jabbok) refers to Jacob's biblical crossing of the Yabok River (Genesis 32), which serves as a central metaphor for the soul's transition from this world to the next throughout the book.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This text identifies itself as a supplement or addition to the main work "Ma'avar Yabok" (Crossing of the Jabbok), a comprehensive Jewish guidebook on death, dying, and the afterlife authored by Aaron Berechia of Modena. The metaphor of the Jabbok crossing symbolizes the soul's transition from this world to the next.

אמר הבט״חון[i] ועל פי עצה
זאת בבטחה והשקט היה לי
להתגדר במלאכתי זאת. ברם
היו ידי חמומות ונפשי נבהלה
מאד להפיק רצון הנפטרים
וערומים בדעת וחכמה אשר
עצתם עלי נמהרה[ii] כאשר בא
בהקדמה ומרצוני ודעתי שבקית
ופטרית כמה דרושים אשר היו
באים לרגל המלאכה אשר לפני
וכמעט כפלים לתושיה והנה
עתה אחר גמר הדפסת הספר
רוח מלפני חלף להרים מקצת
מהם[iii] שנים שלשה גרגירים
באמר״ים נעימ״ים אשר יחדו
יהיו תאומים עם ארבעה מאמרים
ראשונים אשר פעם זקנים יקחו
לימא מילתא במטעמא מאשר
חכמים יגידו במסכת שמחות
ומראים פני הראות בקצת לנהרי
נחלי דבש וחמאה המוכנים
למבלים ימיהם בטוב ושנותם
בנעימים[iv] והעובר ביתו העליון
וגם אושפיזיה תחתון הוא הבוצע
בצע. ומה יעשה אדם ויתעשר
ישא ויתן באמונה. עוד נכלל
בהה איך מוח עצמות ישוקה
מאשר תפלתו זכה לפני קינו
על כל צרה שלא תבא וטעם
הנהגת העולם בדין. ולמה למות
תוצאות ופירוש קצת פסוקי
יחוד ואביזרייהו. אחי זבן לך
הא ולא תידול וזיל אברי נפשך
בהון. והן קלותי וזלתי. קפוץ
קני מינייהו כי הא סקא והא
סלעא והא סאתא קום כיל ואכול
ויערב ויבסם לך שכן דרכה
של רעיה תמה למסר מלה boundary?" He replied, "Trust." And guided by this counsel, I was able to engage in this work of mine with confidence and tranquility. However, my hands grew hot and my soul was greatly troubled to fulfill the wishes of the departed and those 10R shrewd in knowledge and wisdom, whose counsel concerning me was hasty, as mentioned in the introduction. Of my own will and judgment, I abandoned and dismissed many discourses which would have accompanied the work before me, almost 15R doubling its substance. And now, after completing the printing of the book, a spirit passed before me to raise up some of them—two or three kernels of pleasant sayings—which together will be twins with the first four discourses, from which elders 20R will occasionally take a substantive word from what the sages declare in Tractate Semachot, showing glimpses in part of rivers and streams of honey and butter prepared for those who spend their days in goodness and their years in pleasantness. One 25R who troubles his upper house and also his lower dwelling place is the one who cuts off gain. And what should a person do to become wealthy? Let him deal honestly in business. Also included in this is how the marrow of bones is refreshed when 30R one's prayer is pure before his Maker concerning any trouble that might come, and the reason for God's governance of the world through judgment, and why death has consequences, along with explanations of certain verses of unification and their accessories. 35R

My brother, purchase this and do not hesitate; go and restore your soul with them. Indeed, I have made myself insignificant and lowly. Jump up and acquire them, for here is a measure, here is a coin, and here is a seah—arise, measure, eat, and may it 40R be sweet and fragrant to you, for such is the way of a perfect shepherd to deliver a word to her mighty one. And may the good come and receive from these

[i]The author opens with a philosophical principle that everything has its proper boundary or limitation, which he identifies as 'trust' (bitachon). This fundamental concept of trust in divine providence frames his approach to writing about death and mourning.

[ii]The phrase suggests that the author feels an obligation to fulfill the wishes of both the deceased and living scholars who urged him to write this work. This creates a dual responsibility—to honor the dead and to satisfy the expectations of the learned living.

[iii]This reveals that the present text is a supplementary addition composed after the main book was already printed. The phrase 'a spirit passed before me' echoes biblical language (Job 4:15) and suggests divine inspiration for including this additional material.

[iv]This metaphor of 'rivers of honey and butter' for the righteous draws on biblical imagery (Job 20:17) to describe spiritual rewards. The author is suggesting that proper preparation for death, as outlined in his book, leads to these divine pleasures in the afterlife.

לברזיליה.[i] ובא יבא טוב ויקבל מטוב אמרי נועם אלה ולפרקים חלקתיו אף עשיתיו במאמרים הקודמים להפסקת ענייני מאמר חמישי הלז להבדיל בין ענין לענין וליתן ריוח ביניהם קחנו נא עם שאר הספר ושים עיניך עליו כי תרבה עליך תחנונים וחנא מאוצר הגדול ובו תעדה גאון וגובה והוד והדר תלבש ועטישותיך תחל אור וכשלב אדם יחשב דרכו כפי מחשבתו הטהורה ה׳ יכין צעדו:[iii ii]

pleasant sayings. I have divided it into sections and fashioned it like the previous discourses, separating the topics of this fifth discourse to distinguish one matter from another and to provide space between them. Please take it along with the rest of the book and set your eyes upon it, for it will increase your supplications and grace from the great treasury. With it you will adorn yourself with majesty and loftiness, and clothe yourself with splendor and glory, and your speech will shine forth light. And as a person considers his way according to his pure thought, the LORD will establish his steps." 45R 50R 55R

דרושים קצרים בכמות ורבי האיכות[iv] במנוחות שאננות של צדיקים:[vi v]

Brief discourses,[1] limited in quantity yet profound in quality,[2] concerning the tranquil resting places of the righteous:[B]

[B]Or: "in the peaceful abodes of the righteous" — The Hebrew phrase could refer to spiritual 'abodes' rather than physical resting places, emphasizing the souls' dwelling rather than just their place of rest.

[1]The Hebrew term 'דרושים' (drushim) specifically refers to homiletical or exegetical teachings, often with mystical dimensions, rather than simply 'discourses' in the general sense.
[2]The Hebrew uses a play on words with 'קצרים בכמות ורבי האיכות' (literally 'short in quantity and great in quality'), creating a rhetorical contrast that is difficult to fully capture in translation.

[i]This metaphor likens the author to a faithful shepherdess delivering a message to her mighty one (Barzillai). The feminine 'shepherdess' (ro'iah tamah) may allude to the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) or Torah, suggesting the author sees his work as channeling divine wisdom rather than his own.
[ii]The closing blessing combines unusual metaphors ('your sneezes will shine light') with a biblical allusion to Proverbs 16:9. This reflects the author's belief that even involuntary actions (like sneezes) can have spiritual significance when one's thoughts are pure and aligned with divine will.
[iii]Cf. Tractate Semachot (Laws of Mourning) — The author is citing Tractate Semachot as a source for the materials he's adding to his work, showing that these additions are grounded in established rabbinic literature on death and mourning rituals. | Cf. Proverbs 16:9 — The author concludes with this reference to express his faith that despite his human efforts in composing this work, ultimately God directs the outcome and impact of his writings. | Cf. 2 Samuel 19:31-39 — The metaphor of 'delivering a word to her mighty one' (Barzillai) suggests the author sees himself as humbly offering wisdom to more powerful or established figures, perhaps the rabbinic authorities or his readers. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok itself — This passage reveals that what we're reading is a supplementary addition to Ma'avar Yabok that the author decided to include after the main book was already printed, containing material he had originally left out.
[iv]The author characterizes these teachings as brief in quantity but great in quality, a common rabbinic literary device expressing humility while also emphasizing the profound nature of the content to follow.
[v]This phrase refers to the peaceful spiritual realms where righteous souls dwell after death, corresponding to the concept of Gan Eden (Garden of Eden) in Jewish mystical thought. The image of 'tranquil resting places' contrasts with the upheaval of death, reinforcing Ma'avar Yabok's central message that death is a transition to peace rather than an ending.
[vi]Cf. Psalms 23:2 — This allusion frames the afterlife state of the righteous as a fulfillment of the divine promise in Psalms 23, where God leads the faithful to peaceful waters. In kabbalistic thought, these 'still waters' represent the higher spiritual realms where souls find perfect tranquility after death.

אשרי המחכה ויגיע להרגיע
בסוד נשמתו במקור מעין העליון
שהוא סוד בחינה אמצעית
שבמלת הנובעת לנוכח חותם
אמת דהיינו סוד עשר ספירות
כי שם הוא סוד מקום מנוחת
הצדיקים ויש להם שם בתוככיות
המלה שתי בחינות. האחד
גן והב׳ עדן. הגן הוא מקום
עמידתם והעדן הוא מקום שממנו
מתעדנות והיינו גן גל כי עקר
מיין נוקבין שהיא נובעת למעלה
הוא מעשה הצדיקים והיא
תכלית הנהגת א״ס בתחתונים
שהרי כל ההנהגה על ידה. והוא
עולה ממטה למעלה על ידי
היות קשר הנמצאים התחתונים
בשירם ובזמר׳ עולה עד א״ס.
וההקשר לעלות אל תכלית
העליה הנה תהיה משרשת
בעצמה כל המציאות והשיר
והעבודה התחתונה שכוונת כל
המשוררים והעובדים אליו והיא
אוספת הכל ועולה ממציאות
אל מציאות ומתאחדת במקומה
אוספת כל הנעשה והנוצר
והנברא ואוספת כל ו׳ קצוות
ומאחדם ועולה בבינה ואוספת
שם כח התעוררותיהם ועולה
אל החכמה ואוספת התעררותה
ועולה עד קשרה בכתר בא״ס ואז
היא עטרת בעלה מצד הכתר ואז
היא בסוד זרקא עד שהיא נקודה
מאחדת כל המציאות בדפי׳
והיא י׳ על וא״ו בסוד הדעת

Happy is the one who waits and reaches repose[1] in the mystery of his soul at the source of the super- 60R nal spring, which is the mystery of the middle aspect within the word that flows toward the seal of truth,[2] namely the mystery of the ten sefirot. For there is the mystery of the righteous ones' resting place, and they have there, within the innermost 65R parts of the word, two aspects. The first is the Garden and the second is Eden. The Garden is the place of their standing, and Eden is the place from which they receive delight. This is the meaning of "Garden-mound,"[3] for the essence of the feminine waters that 70R flow upward is the deed of the righteous, and this is the purpose of the Ein Sof's governance of the lower realms, since all governance is through it. And it ascends from below to above through the connection of the lower beings,[4] through their song and 75R melody, rising up to the Ein Sof. And the connection to ascend to the ultimate height is rooted within itself—all of existence, song, and the service of those below, since the intention of all who sing and serve is directed toward it. And it gathers everything and 80R rises from one level of existence to another, unifying in its place, gathering all that is made, formed, and created, gathering all six extremities and unifying them, and rising to Binah, gathering there the power of their arousal, and rising to Chokhmah, gather- 85R
ing its arousal, and rising until it connects to Keter within Ein Sof. Then it becomes the crown of its husband from the aspect of Keter, and then it is in the mystery of the Zarka, until it becomes a point that unifies all existence as explained. And it is the 90R Yod above the Vav in the mystery of Da'at[5] that emerges from Chokhmah and rises above its dwelling place, and no sefirah ascends there. The meaning of [1]The opening phrase 'ashrei ha-mechakeh' echoes Daniel 12:12 ('Happy is the one who waits'), connecting this mystical teaching about the afterlife to biblical prophecies about ultimate redemption and resurrection.

[2]This densely mystical phrase refers to Malkhut (Kingdom), the tenth sefirah, positioned as a mediating aspect between higher divine realms and our material world. The 'seal of truth' refers to the divine name that confirms cosmic unity.

[3]The Hebrew 'gan gal' creates a wordplay that's difficult to translate precisely. 'Gal' means both 'mound' and 'reveal,' suggesting that the Garden of Eden is both a raised place and a place of revelation.

[4]This describes the kabbalistic principle that human spiritual practices (prayer, song, mitzvot) create actual ascension pathways for divine energy to circulate between worlds, affecting the cosmic balance between divine attributes.

[5]This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the shape of certain Hebrew letters represents cosmic structures. Here, the placement of Yod (י) above Vav (ו) symbolizes the connection between higher and lower spiritual realms through Da'at (Knowledge).

שיוצא מחכמה ועלתה למעלה
ממכון שבתו ואין שום ספירה
עולה שם ופי׳ זרקא שהיא נזרקת
ממטה למעלה עד א״ס ותכלית
ואחר כך היא יורדת מאירה
מאור א״ס ממה שהעלית מעבודת
התחתונים וסוד העלייה זאת
היא יחוד ק״ש וסוד כח שיר
המלאכים והכסא שסוד עבודתם
הוא היחוד הזה כי הזוג הוא חלק
לעם ה׳ ובבחינות אלו נק׳ ז״את
וזהו מי זאת עולה מן המדבר
כנדרש אלינו במקומו והמדבר
יהיה פירושו מקום הדבור והכל
תלוי בהתעוררות הצדיקים: [i]

Zarka is that it is cast from below to above, up to Ein Sof and the ultimate, and afterward it descends, illuminated by the light of Ein Sof, from what you elevated through the service of those below. And the mystery of this ascent is the unification of the Shema,[1] and the mystery of the power of the angels' song and the Throne, for the mystery of their service is this unification, because the union is a portion for the people of God. And in these aspects it is called "Zot" (This), and this is the meaning of "Who is this (zot) that rises from the wilderness," as expounded to us in its place, and "the wilderness" would be interpreted as the place of speech, and everything depends on the arousal of the righteous.[2]

פרק ב׳

בזה נבין למה זווג הנעשה בכל
מעשה בראשית לא היה פנים אל
פנים מצד שאין מעורר מלמטה
כדכתיב וכל עשב השדה וגו׳
משום ואדם אין. [ii] כי אם אדם
מעורר כלם פונים פניהם ממטה
למעלה והעילות פונות באור
ישר ממעלה למטה וזה כי סוד
אדם הוא אחרית הנמצאים ועד

Chapter 2

By this we understand why the union that occurred during the entire work of Creation was not face-to-face, because there was no awakening from below, as it is written: "And every plant of the field," etc., "because there was no man." For when man provides the awakening, all beings turn their faces upward, and the higher causes turn with direct light from above downward. This is because the mystery of Adam represents the final purpose of all created beings. Un-

[1] The Shema prayer ('Hear O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One') is understood in Kabbalah as a powerful tool for unifying divine names and attributes across cosmic realms, affecting the soul's journey after death.

[2] The passage concludes by emphasizing that the entire cosmic system of ascent and divine unification depends on human initiative—specifically the 'arousal' or spiritual awakening created by righteous individuals through their actions and intentions.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 5, Chapter 1 — This passage establishes the theological framework for understanding the soul's journey after death, presenting the Garden of Eden as both a physical location and a mystical state where righteous souls experience spiritual delight through their connection to divine emanations. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:6 — The author reinterprets this biblical verse, replacing 'who' with 'what' to refer to the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) or the soul ascending through spiritual realms after being purified in the 'wilderness' of this world. This mystical reinterpretation is common in kabbalistic literature where biblical verses are given cosmic significance. | Cf. Zohar I:11b — The passage draws on the Zoharic concept that the Garden of Eden has both an upper and lower aspect, corresponding to different spiritual levels of the soul's experience after death. The distinction between 'Garden' and 'Eden' reflects the kabbalistic understanding that Eden is the source of divine pleasure while the Garden is where souls receive this pleasure. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Introduction — The passage incorporates the Tikkunei Zohar's concept of 'feminine waters' (mayin nukvin) representing spiritual initiatives from below that stimulate response from above. This cosmic dynamic is presented as the mechanism through which righteous souls affect higher spiritual realms.

[ii] This refers to Genesis 2:5, which states that plants had not yet sprouted because 'there was no man to work the ground.' In kabbalistic interpretation, this indicates the cosmic necessity of human consciousness to complete the divine creative process.

אדם היו כלם יורדין ומתפשטים
יורדין ומשתלשלי׳[i] והיאך יחזרו
בסוד אור ישר שעדין לא הגיע
המציאות ממעלה למטה אל
סוף קצהו. כיון שנמצא אדם
השלים והחתים סוף ההתפשטות
ופנה ממטה למעלה ועשה שכל
הנמצאים יתנו פניהם בסוד
אור חוזר ממטה למעלה וזהו
מציאות אדם שנמצא לעבוד
את האדמה לתקן ולקשט לה
פנים.[ii] ובזה תבין חטא א״ה
עם מה שארז״ל שאמר לכל
הנמצאים בואו נשתחוה ונכרעה
נברכה לפני ה׳ עושנו וזה
יהיה שכר הצדיקים כי יזכו
לקבל השפע והארה לנשמתם
בכח מעשיהם פנים אל פנים
מה שבתחלה היה אחור באחור
וזהו לדעתי סוד מאן דאכיל
דלאו דיליה בהיל לאסתכולי
ביה[iii] ודי למבין. ולהיות שעיקר
נביעת המ׳ למעלה הוא מעשה
הצדיקים שמכללת יופי מעשיהם
בסוד נקודת ציון שבה שהיא
בחינת עצמותה א״כ הצדיקים
נחים ויושבים בגן עדניה והיא
נוטלת התעוררותם. וע״י הגל
מעלה אותם למעלה ומיד המעין
נובע מלמטה למעלה ואז היא
מקבלת אור מלמעלה ונובע
ממעלה למטה והיינו גל נעול
מעין חתום[iv] כי בזה נעשית

til Adam's creation, everything was descending and expanding, descending and being drawn down in a chain—so how could they return in the manner of direct light when the process of manifestation from above to below had not yet reached its ultimate end?

Once Adam came into being, he completed and sealed the end of this expansion, and then turned from below upward, causing all created beings to turn their faces in the mode of reflected light from below upward. This is the very purpose of Adam's existence: "to work the ground"—to rectify and adorn the world with divine countenance. Through this you will understand Adam's sin, along with what our Sages taught, that he said to all creatures: "Come, let us bow down and kneel, let us bless before the Lord our Maker." And this will be the reward of the righteous: they will merit receiving divine flow and illumination for their souls through the power of their deeds, face-to-face, whereas initially it was back-to-back.[1] This, in my view, is the secret meaning of "one who eats what is not his is afraid to look at the giver"—and this is enough for the wise to understand.

Since the primary upward flow of Malkhut stems from the deeds of the righteous, as she incorporates the beauty of their actions within the point of Zion within her,[2] which is the essence of her being, the righteous rest and dwell in her Garden of Eden, and she takes up their awakening. Through the "mound" she elevates them upward, and immediately the spring flows from below upward. Then she receives light from above, which flows from above downward. This is the meaning of "a locked garden, a sealed

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of divine unification modes: 'back-to-back' (achor b'achor) represents distant or limited connection, while 'face-to-face' (panim b'panim) represents complete, intimate spiritual union.

[2] In Kabbalah, 'nekudat Tzion' (the point of Zion) refers to the innermost aspect of Malkhut where it connects to higher divine realms, particularly Yesod. This is the channel through which divine energy flows into our world.

[i] The term 'hishtalshelut' (chain/descent) is a key kabbalistic concept referring to the process by which divine energy progressively descends through various spiritual levels until reaching our physical world.

[ii] This phrase reinterprets Genesis 2:5 ('to till the ground') in kabbalistic terms as humanity's cosmic purpose: to 'adorn' or beautify creation by elevating it spiritually through proper intention and action.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase from the Talmud means 'one who eats what isn't his is afraid to look at the giver,' used here metaphorically to describe the spiritual discomfort of receiving divine blessing without deserving it through proper spiritual preparation.

[iv] This refers to Song of Songs 4:12 ('a garden locked, a fountain sealed'). In kabbalistic interpre-

מעין דהוא חתום לבל יכנסו החצונים בכח בעלי תשובה
הכובשים את יצרם וזהו סוד
יגר שהדותא[i] למבינים וזה
יהיה כונת האדם לעורר עצמו
להכלל בסוד הזווג להיות כי
יש דיוקן אל הנשמה שם והוא
נכלל במציאות הרוחני העליון
שורש נשמתו ואז דיוקן ההוא
עולה שם בהתעוררות ההוא
ולזה צריך לכוין באומרו אליך
ה׳ נפשי אשא להכליל שם סוד
הדיוקן הזה לפעול הענין ההוא
שכל הדיוקנאות של נשמות הם
במלה ובאותן הדיוקנאות הם
נכללות הנשמות וזהו בידך
אפקיד רוחי[ii] והיחוד הנעשה
בלילה. וכ״ש בשעת מיתת
הצדיק נוסף מהנעשה ביום כי
ביום אינם אלא הדיוקנאות
ובלילה ובשעת מיתה יצטרפו
הדיוקנאות עם מציאותם בתוכם
כי יש שם עצם הנשמה ועד חצות
זיוג אל הבינה עם ת״ת ומאותו
התעוררות שוכב יעקב עם לאה
ועושה חברה עם רחל[iii] ומחצות
ואילך משלח הנשמות אל הגופים
כדי שיהיו עושים היחוד בדרך
אחר שיעסקו בתורה. הנה כי יש

spring,"[1] for through this she becomes a spring that is sealed so that external forces cannot enter, through the power of penitents who conquer their evil inclination. This is the secret of "Yegar Sahaduta" for those who understand. 45R

This should be a person's intention: to awaken himself to be included in the mystery of the union, for there exists an image of the soul there, and it is included in the higher spiritual reality that is the root of his soul. Then that image ascends there through this awakening. This is why one must focus when saying "Unto You, O Lord, I lift up my soul"—to include there the mystery of this image, to actualize this matter. For all the images of souls are within the "word," and within those images the souls themselves are included. This is the meaning of "Into Your hand I commit my spirit"[2]—the union that occurs at night. 50R 55R 60R

All the more so at the time of a righteous person's death, when there is an addition to what happens during the day. For during the day, only the images are present, but at night and at the time of death, the images combine with their actual essences within them, for the very essence of the soul is there. Until midnight there is a union of Binah with Tiferet, and from that awakening, Jacob lies with Leah and keeps company with Rachel.[3] From midnight onward, souls are sent to bodies[4] so that they may perform the union in another way—through Torah 65R 70R

[1] This reference to Song of Songs 4:12 is interpreted kabbalistically as describing how the Divine Feminine (Malkhut/Shekhinah) is protected from negative forces through the spiritual actions of the righteous and penitent.

[2] This verse (Psalm 31:6) is particularly significant in Ma'avar Yabok as it is recommended to be recited at the moment of death to facilitate the soul's peaceful transition.

[3] This metaphorical language describes cosmic unifications between divine attributes. In kabbalistic symbolism, Jacob represents Tiferet, Leah represents higher aspects of Malkhut, and Rachel represents lower aspects of Malkhut.

[4] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that different spiritual processes occur before and after midnight. After midnight is considered an especially auspicious time for Torah study as new souls are being sent into the world.

tation, this represents how the Divine Feminine (Malkhut/Shekhinah) is protected from negative spiritual forces through the power of repentance and righteous deeds.

[i] This Aramaic phrase from Genesis 31:47 means 'heap of witness,' referring to the pile of stones marking the covenant between Jacob and Laban. Here it symbolizes the boundary separating holy and unholy realms maintained by penitents who master their inclinations.

[ii] This quote from Psalm 31:6 ('Into your hand I commit my spirit') is traditionally recited before sleep and at the time of death, serving as a surrender of the soul to divine protection during these vulnerable transitions.

[iii] In kabbalistic symbolism, Jacob represents Tiferet (central sefirah), while Leah and Rachel represent different aspects of Malkhut (Divine Feminine). This imagery describes cosmic unifications occurring at different times of night.

ג׳ יחודים בלילה כאשר בארנו במקום אחר:[i] study. Thus there are three unions at night, as we have explained elsewhere.

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

הצדיקים עולים בסוד נשמתם ונקשרים בסוד הבינה ונהנים שם בהשגחה בעולמות[ii] ותקוני השער שהוא בחינת דעת המתפשט בכל מקום ויופי רחמיהם ושלמותם שהגן להם בינה והעדן העליון שמתעדנים בו הוא מחכמה ומתקוני הכתר שהם מבחינה אחרונים שבכתר הנקרא מזל[iii] ועדן עילאה ועדן תתאה הם שתי חכמות וכן יסוד בעלותו אל הבינה יונק מהחכמה והכתר בבחינת שער רישא דא״א מפני שהוא מושרש שם ועל ידו הוא יניקת הצדיקים שזכו לנשמת האצילות מעולם הזכר והמצות הם למטה בזעיר

The righteous ascend through the mystery of their souls and bind themselves to the mystery of Binah[1] (Understanding), where they delight in the divine providence over worlds and in the rectifications of the "gate," which is the aspect of Da'at (Knowledge) that extends everywhere. They enjoy the beauty of their compassion and perfection, for Binah serves as their garden, while the supernal Eden in which they delight comes from Chokhmah (Wisdom) and from the configurations of Keter (Crown), specifically from the final aspects of Keter called "mazal" (divine influence).[2] The upper Eden and lower Eden are the two Wisdoms. Similarly, Yesod (Foundation), when it ascends to Binah, draws nourishment from Chokhmah and Keter through the aspect of the "hair of the head of Arich Anpin," because it is rooted there. Through

[1]The Hebrew term 'sod' (mystery) appears repeatedly in this passage and is a technical term in Kabbalah referring to the deepest metaphysical essence of something. The binding to Binah represents a spiritual unification with higher divine realms.

[2]In Lurianic Kabbalah, the lowest aspects of Keter manifest as the thirteen 'streams' or 'mazalot' that flow through the metaphorical beard of Arich Anpin, channeling divine abundance to lower realms.

[i]Cf. Genesis 2:5 — The passage cites Genesis 2:5 to establish that Creation was initially incomplete because there was no human to provide the 'awakening from below' that would establish proper spiritual circulation between upper and lower worlds. | Cf. Zohar — The concepts of 'or yashar' (direct light) and 'or chozer' (reflected light) are fundamental in Lurianic Kabbalah, describing how divine energy flows downward from God and then is reflected back upward through human spiritual activity. | Cf. Psalms 95:6 — The text attributes this psalm verse to Adam, suggesting he attempted to lead all creatures in worship, which connects to discussions about Adam's role as cosmic mediator. | Cf. Genesis 31:47 — This Aramaic phrase from the Torah meaning 'heap of witness' is used metaphorically here to represent the boundary that separates holy and unholy realms, maintained by the power of repentance. | Cf. Psalms 25:1 — This psalm verse is presented as a meditation focus for elevating one's soul-image to higher realms during prayer, part of the book's practical guidance for spiritual elevation. | Cf. Psalms 31:6 — This verse, recited before sleep and at death, is presented as creating a spiritual union between the soul and its divine source—a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to deathbed rituals. | Cf. Song of Songs 4:12 — This verse from Song of Songs is interpreted kabbalistically as referring to Malkhut (the Shekhinah/Divine Presence) being protected from external forces through the spiritual actions of the righteous. | Cf. Zohar III:244b — The text draws on Zoharic teachings about midnight as a time of divine unions, where Jacob (representing Tiferet) unites with Leah (higher aspects of Malkhut) before midnight and Rachel (lower aspects of Malkhut) after midnight.

[ii]The term 'hashgachah' (providence/supervision) in this context refers to the souls' ability to perceive divine governance over lower worlds, a privilege granted only to those who have ascended to higher spiritual realms.

[iii]The text refers here to the thirteen 'mazalot' or channels of divine influence that flow from the beard of Arich Anpin in Lurianic Kabbalah, which transmit divine abundance to lower realms.

במקום שיש ימין ושמאל עשה
ול״ת אמנם אור הכתר מאיר
בהם למטה והצדיקים ששמרו
המצות ותקנום למטה עוברים
ממנו ולמעלה.[i] והנה במצות
יכוין האדם למטה בימין ושמאל
לפי מציאותם אם עשה ואם לא
תעשה ובהארתם יכוין מלמעלה
בסוד המעין הנובעין בשערות
שממנו מאירים ואור הצדיקים
הוא מסוד האורח שהוא באמצע
רישא עילאה חיוורא. ועליו
נאמר ואורח צדיקים כאור
נוגה וגו׳ ומוצא האורח הזה מן
החכמה הנעלמה מוחא סתימא
דשקיט וענג שהם עדן נהר
גן לצדיקים הוא סוד האורח
הזה והם על ה׳ ודאי לעילא
מז״א. והצדיקים שיוכללו
בנשמתם הספירות העליונות
עולם הזכר אחר שיטהר העולם
ישיגו אור עליון מעין עליון
המאיר לעין תחתון והיינו עין
בעין יראו.[ii] אמנם לצדיקים
שהם בעולם הנקבה אפרוחים
או בצים לא ישיגו זה.[iii] וסוד
ג״ע היא בינה גן לחכמה שנקרא
עדן סוד הצדיקים שהם יסוד
יש להם נחת רוח בגן עדן ונחת
זה להם לעולם הבא ומתרין
נוקבין מבחינת חוטמא עילאה
דביה נשיבו רוחא דחיי יהיה
התעוררות תחית המתים:[iv]

this channel flows the spiritual nourishment of the righteous who have merited the soul of Atzilut (Emanation) from the masculine realm.[1]

The commandments exist below in Zeir Anpin, in the place where there is right and left, positive and negative commandments. However, the light of Keter shines upon them from above, and the righteous who have observed and perfected the commandments below pass through it and beyond. In performing the commandments, a person should direct their intention below to the right and left according to their nature—whether they are positive or negative commandments—while in their illumination, one should direct intention from above, through the mystery of the spring that flows through the "hairs" from which they shine forth.[2]

The light of the righteous comes from the mystery of the "path" that runs through the center of the supernal white head. Concerning this it is said, "The path of the righteous is like the light of dawn" (Proverbs 4:18). The source of this path is from the hidden wisdom, the concealed brain that is tranquil and delightful. These—Eden, River, and Garden for the righteous—are the mystery of this path, and they are certainly above Zeir Anpin.

The righteous whose souls will incorporate the supernal emanations of the masculine realm, after the world is purified, will attain the supernal light from the supernal spring that illuminates the lower eye, and thus "they shall see eye to eye" (Isaiah 52:8). However, the righteous who are in the feminine realm, like "chicks or eggs," will not attain this level.[3]

[1] This refers to souls whose spiritual root is in the highest of the four worlds (Atzilut/Emanation) and specifically in its masculine aspect, associated with the upper sefirot. Such souls have greater spiritual potential and achieve higher ascent after death.

[2] This is a reference to the kabbalistic concept where divine light flows through metaphorical 'hairs' (sa'arot), which are channels that restrict and direct divine abundance. The imagery represents how divine energy is precisely calibrated as it descends through cosmic structures.

[3] This metaphor compares less spiritually developed souls to undeveloped birds (chicks still in eggs

[i] This suggests a hierarchical spiritual ascent where the righteous who perfected commandments transcend even the illumination of Keter, reaching higher divine realms—a profound statement about the cosmic power of religious observance.

[ii] The biblical phrase 'eye to eye' is reinterpreted here to mean direct mystical perception without barriers, which will be possible only after cosmic rectification (tikkun) is complete.

[iii] The terms 'chicks or eggs' metaphorically describe souls at lower stages of spiritual development that belong to the 'feminine realm' (the lower sefirot), who cannot yet attain the highest levels of divine perception.

[iv] Cf. Zohar — This text draws heavily on Zoharic cosmology, especially the descriptions of Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One), Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced One), and the structure of the divine

The mystery of the Garden of Eden is that Binah is the garden for Chokhmah, which is called Eden. The mystery of the righteous, who correspond to Yesod, is that they find spiritual contentment in the Garden of Eden, and this contentment belongs to them in the World to Come. From the two nostrils of the supernal nose, through which blows the breath of life, will come the awakening of the resurrection of the dead. 55R

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

עוד הורנו כי בחינת שערות דיקנא דאריך משתלשלים לארבע בחינות ראשונה שערות מספר ל״א בסוד שם אל שניה נימין כל שער ש״צ נימין. שלישית לכל שער ל״א עולמות. רביעית לכל עולם אלף עולמות כי שליטתם לכפות הדין וכלם הם להתעדן ולהשתעשע צדיקים ברבוי מיני העבודה אשר להם המבטלים הדינים במעשיהם והנה הקצוות מצד בחינת הת״ת והנימין מצד היסוד והנעלמות מצד המלכות שעולם הוא כללות ו׳ קצוות בכל מקום והיא בעצמה כלולה מאלף

He further taught us that the hairs of the beard of Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One)[A] descend in four aspects: First, hairs numbering thirty-one, corresponding to the divine name El; second, strands—each hair containing 390 strands; third, each hair contains thirty-one worlds; fourth, each world contains one thousand worlds. For their dominion is to subdue judgment,[B] and all exist for the delight and pleasure of the righteous through the many forms of divine service by which they nullify judgments through their actions. 5R 10R

The extremities emanate from the aspect of Tiferet (Beauty), the strands from Yesod (Foundation), and the hidden aspects from Malchut (Kingdom). For "world" always encompasses the six extremities in every place, and Malchut itself 15R

[A] Or: "the beard of the Ancient One" — The term 'Arich Anpin' (Long-Faced One) could alternatively be translated as 'Ancient One,' which is another common way to render this kabbalistic concept referring to the highest configuration of divinity in Lurianic Kabbalah. Both translations accurately convey the mystical concept, though 'Ancient One' might be more accessible to readers less familiar with kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: "For their function is to sweeten the severity of judgment" — In Kabbalistic terminology, 'sweetening' (המתקת הדינים) is often used to describe the process of tempering or subduing harsh judgments. This alternate translation more precisely captures the technical mystical concept being described, where divine mercy transforms or mitigates the severity of judgment.

or newly hatched), contrasting them with fully mature souls. This reflects the kabbalistic hierarchy of souls and their varying capacities for divine perception after death.

worlds. The Zohar frequently discusses how the souls of the righteous ascend through various spiritual realms after death. | Cf. Proverbs 4:18 — This biblical verse is reinterpreted in a kabbalistic context to describe the spiritual illumination that righteous souls experience as they ascend through higher realms after death. | Cf. Isaiah 52:8 — This prophetic verse about the restoration of Zion is reinterpreted kabbalistically to describe the direct spiritual vision that elevated souls will attain in the highest realms. | Cf. Lurianic Kabbalah — This passage reflects post-Zoharic developments in Kabbalah, particularly from the Lurianic school, which elaborated on the concept of partzufim (divine 'faces' or configurations) as complete structures comprising multiple sefirot. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The structure of Eden, River, and Garden (representing Chokhmah, Da'at, and Binah) is a common motif in Tikkunei Zohar and related texts, symbolizing the flow of divine energy through the higher sefirot.

עולמות בה והיא משפעת ודנה
לעולמות שתחתיה כי התחתונים
אינם נדונים בגבורות בחינת
הזכר ח״ו שאין חצונים קרבים
שם אלא בגבורה תחתונה היא
המלכות שזה מדת הדין הרפה
שהם יכולים לסבלו ונעשה
ע״י החיצונים. והגבורה הקשה
דנה לעולמים הרוחניים שאינם
נדונים ע״י הכלים החצונים כלל
אלא ע״י נהר דינור ולכן הדינים
של הנשמה קשים יותר מדיני
הגוף ותשובה אחת בעוה״ז יפה
ומעולה מכמה מיתות וסיבובים.
לכן מעט שנות מעט תנומות
מעט חיבוק ידים לשכב בתענוגי
והבלי הזמן. פוק חזי מה שדרשו
בפ׳ השוכר את הפועלים. על
הפסוק תשת חשך ויהי לילה
זה העוה״ז וכו׳. עד יצא אדם
לפעלו בעוה״ז יצאו צדיקים
לקבל שכרן למי שהשלים
עבודתו עדי ערב ואור שהוא
יקר בעוה״ז יהוה קפוי לעוה״ב
כדדרשו בפ׳ אלו עוברין.
ותחלת מוצא ג״ע הנסתר ברום
חביון הוא כי הנקודה הנעלמה
שממנו התפשטות הכל והיא
יסוד כל ההתפשטות יקרא עדן
והתפשטות ההויות יקרא גן הנה
הגן נמשך מעדן ויהיה העדן
בינוי ליסוד הנמצאות והתחלת
מציאותם והעדן אינה מושגת
כלל. שממנה עדון הנמצאות
בהויות העצמים מעדן נקודת
הטפה הזרעית ולכן סוד העדן
תמיד קיים יסוד מוסד להויות
המציאות וכל עדן הוא מציאות
החכמה ראשית ההויות וממנו
עדון ההויות ונביעתם והגן

contains one thousand worlds within it. It influences and judges the worlds beneath it, for the lower realms are not judged by the severe powers of the masculine aspect, God forbid, as external forces cannot approach there. Rather, they are judged by the lower power—Malchut—which is the milder form of judgment that they can endure, administered through the external forces. 20R

The severe power of judgment governs the spiritual worlds, which are not judged through external instruments at all, but through the River of Fire.[A] Therefore, the judgments of the soul are more severe than those of the body, and a single act of repentance in this world is more beautiful and superior than many deaths and cycles of rebirth. So, "a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to lie in the pleasures and vanities of time."[B] 25R 30R

Go and see what they interpreted in the chapter "The One Who Hires Workers" on the verse "You bring darkness and it becomes night"—this refers to this world, etc. Until "man goes forth to his work" in this world, the righteous go forth to receive their reward—for one who completes his service by evening. And light, which is precious in this world, will be abundant in the World to Come, as they interpreted in the chapter "These Pass Over." 35R 40R

The beginning of the hidden Garden of Eden in the heights of concealment is the hidden point from which everything extends. It is the foundation of all extension, called Eden, while the extension of existences is called Garden. Thus, the Garden flows from Eden, and Eden is a term for the foundation of existences and the beginning of their reality. Eden itself cannot be grasped at all, for from it comes the delight of existences, like the essence of beings from Eden—the point of the seminal drop. Therefore, the mystery of Eden always exists as an established foundation for the existences of reality. 45R 50R

Every Eden is the reality of Wisdom, the beginning of existences, and from it comes the delight of 55R

[A] Or: "Nehar Dinur" — Keeping the original Aramaic term 'Nehar Dinur' might be preferable when discussing this specific mystical concept from Jewish tradition, as it appears in the Talmud and other rabbinic literature. However, the translation 'River of Fire' is more immediately comprehensible to readers unfamiliar with the original term.

[B] Or: "a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to rest—this refers to indulging in temporal pleasures and vanities" — This alternate translation makes clearer that the passage is adapting the biblical verse from Proverbs 6:10 (which warns against laziness) to make a different point about worldly indulgences. The expanded translation clarifies that this is an interpretive application of the biblical verse rather than a direct quotation.

היא סוד הבינה הנמשכת ממנו עד דאית גן עדן למעלה נסתר ברום חביון. ועל דא אמרי אית עדן ואית עדן. ומריש מילין אלה ישכיל המעין בסוד גן עדן מעולם הבריאה סוד הכסא וכן בג״ע תחתון ממנו אשרי עין רואה כל אלה: [i] existences and their flowing forth. The Garden is the mystery of Understanding that extends from it, until there is a Garden of Eden above, hidden in the heights of concealment. And concerning this they say, "There is Eden and there is Eden." From these principles, the discerning one will gain insight into the mystery of the Garden of Eden from the World of Creation—the mystery of the Throne—and likewise into the lower Garden of Eden that derives from it. Happy is the eye that sees all these things.

פרק ה׳

Chapter 5

טעם הנהגת העולם בדין לקיום הנמצאים

The Reason for the Governance of the World Through Judgment for the Sustenance of Creation

אמרו מחצדי חקלא כי הוצרך מתחלה הנהגת הדין והנהגת הרחמים נפרדות דו פרצופין אחור באחור [ii] בדי שימצא הנהגה קשה ליסר החוטאים בדור המבול וביום החרבן וכיוצא והעבודה הרצויה לפניו מבני אדם הנכללים מיצר טוב

The reapers of the field explain[1] that initially, the attributes of Judgment and Mercy were required to function separately, as "two faces back-to-back," in order to enable strict governance to discipline sinners in the generation of the Flood, the day of the Temple's destruction, and similar occasions. The service pleasing to Him from humans—who are composed of both good and evil inclinations—is that

[1] The original Hebrew term 'מחצדי חקלא' (reapers of the field) is a technical term from the Zohar referring to mystical sages who gather and explain spiritual wisdom. I've translated it literally while noting its specialized meaning.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 3, Chapter 1 — This passage builds upon earlier explanations in Ma'avar Yabok about the soul's journey after death, adding details about the cosmic structure of divine realms where righteous souls dwell after death. The earlier section established the basic framework of the soul's components (nefesh, ruach, neshamah), while this section elaborates on the celestial environments these soul components encounter. | Cf. Zohar III:128b-129a — This passage draws heavily from the Zohar's detailed description of the 'beard of the Ancient One' (dikna d'atika), which represents channels of divine mercy flowing into creation. The author adapts this Zoharic concept to explain how divine mercy mitigates judgment in the afterlife realms, particularly for the righteous who have properly prepared through repentance in this world. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 70 — The passage incorporates terminology and concepts from Tikkun 70 of the Tikkunei Zohar, particularly in its description of how the divine worlds are structured and interconnected. This reference helps establish the author's view of the afterlife as a complex multi-leveled reality rather than a simple binary heaven/hell model. | Cf. Proverbs 6:10 — The author repurposes this biblical verse, which originally warned against physical laziness, to instead caution against spiritual laziness and indulgence in worldly pleasures. This creative reinterpretation demonstrates the author's method of finding new spiritual meanings in traditional texts. | Cf. Genesis 2:8-10 — The passage offers a kabbalistic interpretation of the biblical Eden, transforming the physical garden of Genesis into a complex metaphysical structure representing divine wisdom (Eden) flowing into divine understanding (the Garden). This mystical reading aligns with traditional kabbalistic interpretations that view biblical narratives as encoding deeper metaphysical truths.

[ii] This describes the primordial cosmic state where the divine attributes of Judgment (Din) and Mercy (Rachamim) were initially positioned 'back-to-back' (achor be-achor), a fundamental concept in Lurianic Kabbalah representing separation and incomplete relationship before cosmic rectification.

ויצר הרע שע״י עבודתם ימזיגו
וימתיקו ב׳ הנהגות האלו ויתקנו
הספירות וההנהגות בהמזגת
הדין ברחמים. על בני אדם
המשרה לתקנם למתקם ליחדם
באופן שיהיה ה׳ הוא האלהים.
והאלהים הוא ה׳. עוד ראוי
להודיע כי לא היה אפשר לעולם
ולהויות התחתונים להמצא
בלי גבורה חזקה ונפלאת ועל
זה נאמר שאלמלא מוראה של
מלכות איש את רעהו חיים
בלעו[i] כי יחזרו אל נרתקן ואין
מעמידם במקומם בהתפשטות
והשתלשלות אלא מצד רוב הדין
הגובר עליהם ומעמידם על
עמדם והנה מטעם זה בהמתק
דינם מיד ההיכלות נותנים רשות
זה לזה כל אחד ואחד ליכנס
בתחומו של חבירו ויתעלו
ויבלעו זה בזה וכן בחות הכסא
אין מעמידם על משמרתם אלא
כח הדין החזק הנפלא ומכאן
תבין ותדע בכל הויות התחתונות
עד בני אדם כפשט המשנה איש
את רעהו חיים בלעו. א״כ עקר
ההנהגה הוא הדין והדין מוציא
כלי זעמו שמבלעדם אי אפשר
מפני שהאש החזק יעשה היתוך
ולזה הנהגת הדין צריכה מאד
מאד והשפעות הדינים מבינה
לאה וממ״ל רחל למטה במקום
העבד והשפחה נרמזים בתורה
בזלפה ובלהה. זלפה שפחת
לאה שהיא מזלפת בסוד העבד
שם השפעתה[ii] ואין החצוני
נאחז לה׳ ראשונה אלא על
ידי השפחה הזאת ויעקב פדאה

through their devotion they blend and sweeten these two modes of divine governance,[1] rectifying the sefirot and their operations by tempering Judgment with Mercy. This responsibility has been placed upon humanity: to perfect, sweeten, and unify these attributes so that "the LORD is God" and "God is the LORD." 15R

Furthermore, it is important to understand that the world and lower creations could not exist without a strong and wondrous power of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), as it is said, "If not for the fear of government, people would swallow each other alive." For without this, all would return to their original formless state. Nothing maintains them in their proper place and order of emanation except the abundance of Judgment prevailing over them and establishing them in their positions. 20R 25R

For this reason, when their judgment is sweetened, the celestial palaces immediately grant permission to one another, each entering the domain of its fellow, ascending and absorbing one another. Similarly, the powers of the divine Throne are maintained in their posts only by the remarkable power of strict Judgment. From this, you can understand all lower beings down to humans, as the plain meaning of the Mishnah states: "People would swallow each other alive." 30R 35R

Thus, the essence of governance is Judgment, and Judgment brings forth instruments of wrath[2] without which existence would be impossible, for intense fire would cause dissolution. Therefore, the governance of Judgment is absolutely necessary. The influences of judgment flow from Binah to Leah, and from the Mem-Lamed (initials of Malkhut) to Rachel below, in the place of the servant and handmaid, symbolized in Torah by Zilpah and Bilhah. 40R 45R

Zilpah, Leah's handmaid, distributes her influence in the mystery of the servant, and external

[1] The Hebrew terms 'הנהגת הדין' and 'הנהגת הרחמים' refer to how God governs the world through the seemingly opposite attributes of strict justice and compassionate mercy, a fundamental concept in Jewish mysticism.

[2] The phrase 'כלי זעמו' literally means 'vessels/instruments of His wrath' and refers to the cosmic mechanisms through which divine judgment manifests in the world.

[i] This quotes a famous Mishnaic teaching (Avot 3:2) about the necessity of government and social order, applying it to cosmic metaphysics—divine judgment functions like government, creating necessary boundaries that prevent chaos.

[ii] The text employs a wordplay with the name Zilpah (זלפה) and the verb 'mezalephet' (מזלפת), meaning to sprinkle or distribute, suggesting her name reflects her cosmic function of distributing divine influence to lower realms.

מיד לבן והשפיעה לנפרדים
50 בכשרות וטהרה לבן מוציאה
תקון בשבטים בפרקים היוצאים
חוץ בטהרה כדפירשו בזהר פ׳
ויצא ובלהה היא מקום שרחל
מתלבשת בה בהיותה יורדת
55 למטה ובלהה שמה מורה מקום
הדינים והיא שפחה כשרה אמנם
החצוני יונק משם ונפדית על
ידי סלוק רחל וכן פי׳ זלפה
קטנה בלהה גדולה[i] שסוד אחיזת
60 החצונים ברחל מרובה מאחיזתם
בלאה כנודע. הנה כי מלכותו
בכל משלה. גם כן המלאכים
ששלח יעקב היו מאותם שהם חוץ
להיכלות והם בעשיה ראשים על
65 הקליפות והם לבוש לד׳ מחנות
שכינה ועל כל זה אין קדש
וחול מתערבים ח״ו כ״ש טומאה
וטהרה וזהו סוד ההבדלות. הנה
הכרת ההנהגה הנזכר בזולת
70 כמה עניינים המתחייבים בזה
יצר טוב ויצר הרע וג״ע וגהינם
ושכר ועונש ומצות ועבירות
וטהור ומותר וטמא ואסור
והרבה:[ii]

forces cannot grasp the first Hei (of the divine name) except through this handmaid. Jacob redeemed her from Laban and channeled her influence to the separate beings in purity and holiness. Therefore, she brings forth rectification through the tribes in the "outer limbs" in purity,[1] as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Vayetzei. 50R 55R

Bilhah is the place where Rachel clothes herself when descending below. Her name indicates the place of judgments, and though she is a kosher handmaid, external forces draw sustenance from there, which is redeemed through Rachel's withdrawal. Thus, Zilpah is considered "small" while Bilhah is "great," for the external forces have a greater hold on Rachel than on Leah, as is known. 60R

Indeed, "His kingship rules over all." Even the angels sent by Jacob were from those outside the palaces, belonging to the World of Action (Asiyah), heads over the kelipot (shells/husks), serving as garments for the four camps of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). Despite all this, the holy and the mundane never mix, heaven forbid—how much more so purity and impurity—and this is the mystery of the separations. 65R 70R

The recognition of this governance necessarily entails many consequential matters: the good and evil inclinations, the Garden of Eden and Gehenna, reward and punishment, commandments and transgressions, the pure and the permitted, the impure and the forbidden, and much more. 75R

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

טעם וסדר וכוונה איך יעוררו

The Meaning, Order, and Intention: How Those Be-

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'בפרקים היוצאים חוץ בטהרה' refers to spiritual channels that extend outward while maintaining their purity, a concept explained in the Zohar portion mentioned.

[i] This suggests a hierarchical relationship between the handmaids, with Bilhah being 'greater' than Zilpah because external forces have a stronger hold on Rachel (associated with Bilhah) than on Leah (associated with Zilpah), reflecting a mystical interpretation of Genesis 30.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayetzei — This reference supports the text's explanation of how Zilpah represents a specific channel of divine influence that operates through 'outer limbs' or peripheral aspects of the divine structure while maintaining purity. | Cf. Mishnah Avot 3:2 — The text uses this Mishnaic teaching to explain the cosmic necessity of judgment and limitation, drawing a parallel between human governance and divine judgment as forces that maintain order. | Cf. 1 Kings 18:39 — The text references this biblical declaration to illustrate the ultimate goal of human spiritual work: to reveal the unity of God's attributes of mercy and judgment, showing that they are ultimately one despite appearing separate. | Cf. Lurianic Kabbalah — The text draws on the Lurianic concept of 'achor be-achor' (back-to-back) positioning of divine countenances to explain how judgment and mercy initially functioned as separate forces before human spiritual work began to harmonize them.

התחתונים למעלה בתפלתן:

בעת הזווג צריך תקון הדינים מלמעלה והגבורות העליונות מתתקנות ומתמתקות וחמ׳ גם היא מלמטה מתתקנת ומטהרת והצדיקים בתפלתם ותשובתם ומעשים הטובים עוזרים מיד מסתלקים הדינים ממנה ועולה ומסתלקת[i] והעליה תהא על ידי כמה בחינות. הא׳ נכנסת לפנים משערי צדק שהם נצח הוד. הב׳ חבוקה בין תרין דרועין דמלכא וזה נקרא אהבה. הג׳ היותה מכוונת בבחינת אברים באברים עם כח המשפיע לה בחינת פניו על פניה בחינת ראש בראש בחינת גוף בגוף בחינת יד על יד הד׳ בחינות הנשיקות שהוא דבקות רוח החיים הפנימי מזו לזו ומזה לזה פי׳ ממקבל למשפיע והכל דוגמא להוית הכוחות המתאחים יחד להאיר. הה׳ כניסת היסוד אליה שהוא בסוד היחוד[ii] וזהו עיקר המתקת הדינים. הו׳ מזרעת הטפה העליונה והם ב׳ טפות טפת הזכר וטפת הנקבה ויש כאן סוד איש מזריע תחילה. הז׳ העבור: הח׳ הלידה. הט׳ חבלי לידה. הי׳ גדול ולדות. ואלו הבחינות כלם הארות עליונות[iii] ותקונים עליונות מהספירות עליונות אליה שדרך כלל אנו מכנים

low Awaken Those Above Through Their Prayer:

At the time of union, the judgments must be rectified from above, and the supernal powers of Gevurah become rectified and sweetened. Similarly, Malkhut 5R below becomes rectified and purified. Through the prayers, repentance, and good deeds of the righteous, the judgments are immediately removed from her, and she ascends and elevates. This ascent occurs through several aspects: 10R

First, she enters within the gates of righteousness, which are Netzach and Hod.[1]

Second, she is embraced between the two arms of the King, and this is called love.

Third, she is aligned in the aspect of limb to limb 15R with the power that flows to her—His face upon her face, head to head, body to body, hand upon hand.

Fourth, the aspect of kisses, which is the cleaving of the inner life-force from one to the other and back again—that is, from receiver to giver—all this being 20R a model for how spiritual forces unite to illuminate.

Fifth, the entry of Yesod into her, which is the secret of unification, and this is the essential sweetening of judgments.

Sixth, the emission of the supernal drop, which 25R comprises two drops—the male drop and the female drop—and here lies the secret of "the man emits seed first."[2]

Seventh, pregnancy.

Eighth, birth. 30R

Ninth, birth pangs.

Tenth, the growth of offspring.

All these aspects are supernal illuminations and rectifications from the higher Sefirot flowing to her.

[1] The Hebrew uses the kabbalistic terminology 'Netzach' and 'Hod,' which refer to the seventh and eighth divine attributes in the sefirotic system. They are often depicted as the two lower 'pillars' or 'legs' of the divine structure, forming a gateway through which divine energy flows to Malkhut.

[2] This references a Talmudic concept (from Berakhot 60a) about gender determination, but in this kabbalistic context, it takes on a mystical meaning about the order of divine influences in cosmic unification.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept where divine judgments (dinim) are 'lifted' from the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) through proper prayer and ritual. This elevation allows the divine feminine aspect to ascend and unite with higher divine attributes.

[ii] In Kabbalah, Yesod (Foundation) is the divine attribute that channels the flow from all higher sefirot to Malkhut. This 'entry of Yesod' refers to the mystical unification of masculine and feminine divine aspects, which is considered the primary mechanism for 'sweetening judgments.'

[iii] The text presents a complex process of divine unification with ten distinct stages, mirroring both human procreation and the structure of the ten sefirot (divine emanations). These stages form a complete sequence from initial attraction to the development of new spiritual realities.

בעלה ספירות עליונות וכלם
משתוות בת״ת שבו עקר יחודה
ודרך כלל הם אליה ד׳ עניינים
טהרה קדושה ברכה יחוד.
ונכללים אלו בתפלות ויחודים
וכוונת המצות. ויש למ׳ שלשה
פנים למעלה שבהם מתיחדת עם
בעלה. הפן הא׳ יחודה בימין
והיינו בחסד שם אל והיא מגלה
פנים אליו בשם אל כגון בפסח
שמעורר שם אל חסד מלמעלה
כן גם היא מגלה פנים אליו
בסוד פניאל שבה. וכן בתפלת
שחרית. ובסוכות פנים המנהגים
הם אלהים סוד הגבורה גם היא
מגלה פנים בסוד שם אלהים שבה
לכן צריך הכנת תשובה תחלה
להמתיק הדין ולכן אז הוא זמן
שמחה בסוד יין המשמח וגדול
כח רגל זה שאפי׳ בחינת הדין
נמתק ומתלבן ובשבועות שתהיה
ההנהגה מצד קו האמצעי סוד
יחוד השלם היא מגלה פנים אליו
בשם אדנ״י ששם זה הוא מכוון
נגד שם הויה[i] וזה אל אלהים
ה׳ דבר ויקרא ארץ. ויש לה פן
רביעי נגד מטה כי ראוי לה ד׳
פנים נגד ד׳ הנהגות שהם סוד
הויה: [ii]

Generally, we refer to these higher Sefirot as her husband, and they all converge in Tiferet, which is the core of her unification. Overall, they provide her with four elements: purity, holiness, blessing, and unification. These are included in prayers, unifications, and the intentions of the commandments.

Malkhut has three faces above through which she unites with her husband. The first face is her unification with the right, namely with Chesed, the divine name El. She reveals her countenance to Him through the name El, as in Passover, which awakens the name El—Chesed from above—and she too reveals her countenance to Him through the secret of Peniel within her.[1] Similarly, in the morning prayer.

In Sukkot, the governing faces are Elohim, the secret of Gevurah. She also reveals her countenance through the secret of the name Elohim within her. Therefore, preparatory repentance is needed first to sweeten the judgment, which is why this is a time of joy through the secret of wine that gladdens. Great is the power of this festival, for even the aspect of judgment is sweetened and whitened.

In Shavuot, when governance comes from the central column, the secret of complete unification, she reveals her countenance to Him through the name Adonai, which corresponds directly to the name YHVH. This is "El Elohim YHVH spoke and called to earth."[2]

She has a fourth face directed downward, for she properly has four faces corresponding to the four

[1] Peniel (literally 'face of God') references Jacob's encounter with the divine in Genesis 32:31. In this kabbalistic context, it refers to how the divine feminine (Malkhut) reflects the divine attribute of mercy (El) during Passover.

[2] This is a quotation from Psalm 50:1, used here to illustrate how different divine names work together during Shavuot, representing the perfect balance and harmony of divine attributes during this festival.

[i] The divine names Adonai and YHVH are seen as complementary, representing the feminine and masculine aspects of divinity. Their proper alignment is considered essential for cosmic harmony, particularly during Shavuot which celebrates the giving of Torah and represents perfect divine balance.

[ii] Cf. Zohar II:135b — This passage elaborates on the Zoharic concept of divine unification (zivug), explaining how judgments are sweetened when Malkhut rises to unite with the higher divine attributes, particularly through the efforts of the righteous. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 4 — This passage connects to the book's broader theme that human prayers and righteous actions create cosmic effects, particularly the transformation of divine judgment into mercy. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:10 — The four faces of Malkhut allude to Ezekiel's vision of the four-faced creatures, suggesting that the Divine Feminine reflects the complete divine structure described in prophetic vision. | Cf. Tikunei Zohar, Tikun 21 — This reference provides a parallel explanation of how the Shekhinah/Malkhut manifests different aspects according to which divine attribute she is uniting with, similar to how the passage describes her having different 'faces' during different festivals.

modes of governance, which are the secret of the divine name YHVH. 65R

פרק ז׳

הפן הרביעי שאמרנו הפונה למטה ירצה מתפשט בתחתונים ופניו למטה שבו היא מקבלת מעשה התחתונים וכל השיר והשבח והתפלה והתורה ומעשה הטוב הנעשה למטה מבשלת אותו ועושה מטעמים לסוד התעוררות עליון.[i] ושואלת בשביל המלאכים בהתעוררות שירם וזמרם ושואלת לנמצאות התחתונות בשביל שבח העולה אליו מכל הנבראים דכתיב הללו את ה׳ מן השמים תנינים וכל תהומות אש וברד וגו׳[ii] הכל מלאכים ממונים בעולם העשיה ובשירת הצדיקים נכללים כל השירים כלם באשר הוכחנו מאמר א׳ פרק ל׳ ואפי׳ ברכה אחת או מצוה אחת או מעשה או דבור טוב הכל מתקבץ בסוד בזק בהיכל לבנת הספיר[iii] ועומד שם עד זמן עלייתה והכל מסודר בה. והיינו מיין נוקבין התעוררות התחתונים דאושידת לקבלא מיין דכורין[iv] השפע עליון והתעוררות זה עולה מבחינה אל בחינה היא אוספת אותו שם בסוד תקוניה ונובעת מסוד אבריה אל

Chapter 7

The fourth aspect that we mentioned, which faces downward,[1] refers to that which extends into the lower realms with its face turned downward. Through this aspect, she receives the deeds of those below, and all the song, praise, prayer, Torah study, 5R and good actions performed below—she processes them and transforms them into delicacies to awaken a response from above. She petitions on behalf of the angels through the arousal of their song and melody, and she petitions on behalf of the lower 10R creations through the praise that ascends to Him from all created beings, as it is written: "Praise the LORD from the heavens, sea monsters and all depths, fire and hail, etc." All these are angels appointed in the World of Action (Asiyah), and in 15R the song of the righteous, all songs are included, as we have proven in Discourse One, Chapter 30. Even a single blessing, a single commandment, or a good deed or word[2]—all are gathered with lightning speed in the Palace of the Sapphire Brick and remain there 20R until the time of her ascent, all arranged within her.

This constitutes the "feminine waters"—the arousal from below that she pours forth to receive the "masculine waters" of divine influx from above. This arousal ascends from one level to another; she 25R gathers it through her rectifications and causes it to flow from her limbs to the central point of beauty in order to awaken it. This arousal ascends whether it

[1] The original text uses the term 'הפן הרביעי' (the fourth aspect/face) as part of a discussion about the four aspects of Malkhut (the Divine Feminine), corresponding to the four directions or the four letters of God's name.

[2] This passage emphasizes the cosmic significance of even minor human religious actions, suggesting that every positive deed, no matter how small, contributes to the process of cosmic rectification and divine unification.

[i] This metaphor draws on Genesis 27:4 where Isaac asks Esau to prepare 'delicacies' (mat'amim). Here it refers to how human prayers and good deeds are transformed into spiritual sustenance that 'nourishes' and awakens divine response.

[ii] This reference to Psalm 148 is interpreted mystically, with natural phenomena understood as angelic forces appointed over different aspects of creation in the physical world (Asiyah).

[iii] The term 'בזק' (bezek) means 'lightning' or 'flash' and indicates the instantaneous collection of prayers and good deeds in the celestial Palace of the Sapphire Brick, a mystical chamber mentioned in Heikhalot literature and the Zohar.

[iv] These kabbalistic terms describe the reciprocal relationship between human spiritual activity (feminine waters rising from below) and divine response (masculine waters flowing from above), using sexual metaphors to explain cosmic processes.

סוד הנקודה אמצעית היופי הזה
30 כדי להתעוררה. והתעוררות
הזה תעלה בין שתהיה להזדווג
בין שתהיה להשפיע לה שפע
סתם ואלו הם הקדמות ריש
מלין ליודע שותא דרבנן והמלך
35 החכם אשר ישב על כסא ה׳
יסד ותקן מגלת שיר השירים בה
יחוד שכינה וגעגועיה ותיקוניה
וקשוטיה והגבר ראה עני בשבט
עברתו ירמיהו שהיה מלך
40 הכוש״י[i] שב ותקן מגלת איכה
הפכה ומשם ידרוש המעיין בכל
יכלתו ומגילת רות היא המ׳
שרותה להקב״ה בשיריה ובועז
צדיק יחודה והוא רודף אחר
45 היחוד אחריה והיא אחריו גם
כן ושם נעמי היא הבינה בסוד
לחזות בנועם ה׳ והיא המיעצת
אותה אל היחוד ביסוד אחי ת״ת
שהוא דרך היבום לא יחוד גמור
50 כמו ביום השבת[ii] ובועז הוא
מטט׳ עם נערותיו שבע נערות
יחוד ימי החול והוא זורה את
גורן השעורים כי הוא משליך
תבן וקש ומבער החצונים בסוד
55 שערה[iii] והיא בסוד פשתתי את
כתנתי שהיא התבן והקש והמוץ
המכסה על השערה וגם את תכין
עצמך אליו וזהו ורחצת וסכת

is for the purpose of unification or simply to bestow influx upon her. These are foundational principles, the beginning of words for one who understands the discourse of the sages. 30R

The wise king who sat on the throne of the LORD[1] established and arranged the scroll of the Song of Songs, which contains the unification of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), her longings, her rectifications, and her adornments. And the man who "saw affliction by the rod of His wrath," Jeremiah, who was the Cushite king,[2] returned and composed the scroll of Lamentations, its opposite—from there the student may investigate with all his ability. 35R 40R

The scroll of Ruth represents Malkhut (Kingdom), who is connected to the Holy One, blessed be He, through her songs. Boaz represents the righteous one of her unification, who pursues unification after her, while she likewise pursues him. There, Naomi represents Binah (Understanding) in the mystery of "beholding the pleasantness of the LORD," and she is the one who counsels her toward unification with Yesod (Foundation), the brother of Tiferet (Beauty). This is the path of levirate marriage, not complete unification as on the Sabbath day.[3] Boaz is Metatron with his maidens, the seven maidens representing the unification of the weekdays.[4] He winnows the barley threshing floor, for he casts away straw and chaff, burning the external forces through the mystery of barley[5] (se'orah), while she 45R 50R 55R

[1] This refers to King Solomon, traditionally considered the author of Song of Songs. The description of him sitting 'on the throne of the LORD' comes from 1 Chronicles 29:23.

[2] The identification of Jeremiah as 'מלך הכוש״י' (the Cushite king) is unusual and likely draws on rabbinic interpretations connecting Jeremiah with the Cushite mentioned in Jeremiah 38:7-13.

[3] The text establishes a hierarchy of unifications, with weekday unions compared to levirate marriage (a duty-bound union) while Sabbath enables a higher, more complete divine union. This reflects the kabbalistic view that Sabbath creates the most favorable conditions for cosmic harmony.

[4] This refers to the seven days of the week, each associated with a different divine attribute (sefirah) and level of unification between masculine and feminine divine aspects.

[5] There is wordplay in the original between 'se'orah' (barley) and related terms that create mystical connections to concepts of divine judgment and purification of negative forces.

[i] The identification of Jeremiah as 'the Cushite king' is based on rabbinic interpretation of Jeremiah 38:7-13, where Ebed-melech the Cushite rescues Jeremiah. Some traditions identified Jeremiah himself as a Cushite, perhaps based on Numbers 12:1.

[ii] This distinguishes between two levels of divine unification: levirate marriage (yibbum) represents a lesser form of cosmic union available during weekdays, while Sabbath enables 'complete unification' (yichud gamur), a higher level of divine harmony.

[iii] There is wordplay here between 'se'orah' (barley) and 'sa'arah' (storm/tempest), as well as between 'se'orah' and 'se'ar' (hair). These phonetic connections create mystical links between the concepts of barley, divine judgment (storm), and channels of divine influence (hair).

ושמת שמלותיך עליך הם ד׳
60 תקונים בידוע להכנת הזווג
ורחצת וסכת הם תקונים מהבינה
והחכמה. ושמלות באים לה
מהכתר על ידי סוד י״ג מקורות
תקוני דיקנא עילאה ובאים
65 לתשע תקוני דיקנא דזעיר ומשם
על ידי הת״ת אליה. [i]

is in the mystery of "I have taken off my garment," which refers to the straw, chaff, and husk that cover the barley. 60R

"And you shall prepare yourself for him"—this is the meaning of "wash yourself, anoint yourself, and put your garments on"—these are the four rectifications, as is known, for preparing for unification. 65R "Wash yourself and anoint yourself" are rectifications from Binah and Chokhmah (Understanding and Wisdom). And garments come to her from Keter (Crown) through the mystery of the thirteen sources of the rectifications of the supernal beard, which flow 70R to the nine rectifications of the beard of Zeir Anpin, and from there through Tiferet to her.

פרק ח׳

Chapter 8

פסוקי היחוד ופירוש ה׳ אחד
ושמו אחד:

The Verses of Unification and the Explanation of "The LORD is One and His Name is One":

הטביע הבורא שתקון העליונים
תלוי בתחתונים ובזה אין
5 מתפרדין העליונים מן התחתונים
כדכתיב וירכב על כרוב ויעף
תחלה רוכבות הספירות על
המלכות לתקנה ואחר כך וידא
על בנפי רוח ובפסוק ישקני
10 מנשיקות פיהו [ii] כי טובים דודיך
מיין וכן וישק יעקב לרחל
וישא את קולו ויבך בהם שבעה

The Creator established that the rectification of the upper realms depends on the lower realms, and through this the upper and lower realms are not 5R separated from each other, as it is written, "And He rode upon a cherub, and did fly." First, the sefirot ride upon Malkhut to rectify it, and afterward, "He soared upon the wings of the wind." And in the verse, "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, 10R for your love is better than wine," and likewise, "And Jacob kissed Rachel, and lifted up his voice,

[i] Cf. Song of Songs — The author presents Song of Songs as a mystical text about the relationship between God (represented by Solomon/Boaz) and the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). This allegorical reading of the biblical love poetry was standard in kabbalistic literature, where the text was seen as the most sacred depiction of divine unification. | Cf. Book of Ruth — The text presents Ruth as an allegory for Malkhut (the lowest sefirah, representing the Divine Feminine), with Boaz representing Yesod (Foundation) or a righteous intermediary like Metatron. Naomi is interpreted as Binah (Understanding), a higher feminine divine attribute that guides Malkhut toward proper unification. | Cf. Book of Lamentations — Lamentations is presented as the opposite of Song of Songs, composed by Jeremiah (described as 'the Cushite king') to represent the state of divine separation or exile, in contrast to the unification depicted in Song of Songs. | Cf. Psalm 148:7 — The citation 'Praise the LORD from the heavens, sea monsters and all depths, fire and hail' comes from Psalm 148, which the author interprets mystically as describing how all creation, through angelic intermediaries, offers praise that ascends to the Divine. | Cf. Palace of the Sapphire Brick — This refers to Heikhal Livnat HaSapir, one of the mystical palaces or chambers described in Heikhalot literature and the Zohar. It represents a celestial gathering place where prayers and good deeds are collected before being elevated to higher divine realms. | Cf. feminine waters (mayin nukvin) and masculine waters (mayin dekhurin) — These kabbalistic terms describe the reciprocal relationship between human spiritual activity (feminine waters rising from below) and divine response (masculine waters flowing from above). This sexual metaphor is central to kabbalistic understanding of how prayer and ritual stimulate cosmic unification.

[ii] This verse from Song of Songs 1:2 is interpreted mystically as describing the union between the divine masculine and feminine aspects, a foundational concept in Kabbalah.

תיבות לרמוז אל שבעה נשיקות
ז׳ הבלים[i] שמתדבק דכורא
בנוקבא ונוקבא בדכורא רוחא
ברוחא בסוד אהבה והם סוד
שבעה ושבעה מוצקות וירכב על
כרוב ויעף וגו׳ ישקני מנשיקות
פיהו וגו׳ אל אלהים ה׳ וגו׳
מציון מכלל יופי וגו׳ שמע
ישראל וגו׳ ה׳ הוא האלהים
ה׳ אחד ושמו אחד.[ii] ה׳ מלך
ה׳ מלך הבאים מלב שבו אל
לב שבה ועשר מאמרות שהם
בחכמה כדמות רוח החיים
עליהם והם ל״ב נתיבות[iii] שהם
סוד כללות ח׳ ספירות מבינה
ולמטה בארבעה ראשי ההנהגה
כלול כל אחד מהשמנה והם
סוד מ״ב בהשפעת אמש עליהם
שהם כתר חכמה בינה נשמה לז׳
הבלים. כלל היחודים הוא ה׳
אחד ושמו אחד הוא ושמו אחד
כי סוד רמ״ח אברים נרמזים
בסוד רמ״ח כתות קדושים שבשם
אדנ״י.[iv] היחוד צריך קשור
רמ״ח כתות קדושים שהם בעצמן
מעצמן אל עצמן והיינו ה׳ אחד
שיקשור סוד אותיות יה״וה י׳
בה׳ ו׳ בה׳ ויתיחד ה׳ אחד
ואח״כ שמו אחד רמ״ח כתות
קדושים שבשם אדנ״י ואח״כ
יתקשרו ב׳ שמות יחד הוא ושמו
אחד והכל על ידי תוספת הארה
שיש בזכר בסוד האבר הקדוש
הכי נקרא יוסף שממלא חסרון
הנקבה שהוא סוד י״ו נוספים
בזכר יו״ד בסוד טהרה על הו״או
ובזה יאיר בה וישלים דיניה.
סוד יחוד שמע ישראל יש לקשר

and wept”—in these are seven words, alluding to the seven kisses, the seven breaths through which the masculine cleaves to the feminine and the feminine to the masculine, spirit to spirit, in the mystery of love. These are the secret of “seven and seven spouts”: “And He rode upon a cherub, and did fly”; “Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth”; “God, the Lord God”; “From Zion, the perfection of beauty”; “Hear, O Israel”; “The Lord is God”; “The Lord is One and His Name is One.” The Lord reigns, the Lord has reigned—these come from the heart within Him to the heart within Her. The ten utterances, which are in Wisdom, are like the breath of life upon them, and they are the thirty-two paths, which are the mystery of the totality of the eight sefirot from Binah downward, with each of the eight included in the four primary modes of divine governance. They are the mystery of the forty-two, with the influence of AMS”H upon them, which are Keter, Chokhmah, and Binah, serving as the soul to the seven breaths. 15R 20R 25R 30R

The essence of all unifications is “The Lord is One and His Name is One”—He and His Name are One. For the mystery of the 248 limbs is alluded to in the mystery of the 248 holy assemblies contained within the divine name ADNY. Unification requires binding together the 248 holy assemblies that are inherently of themselves and to themselves. This is the meaning of “The Lord is One”—that one should bind together the mystery of the letters of YHVH: Yod with Hei, Vav with Hei, thus unifying “The Lord is One.” Afterward, “His Name is One” refers to the 248 holy assemblies within the name ADNY. Then the two names are bound together: “He and His Name are One.” All this is accomplished through the additional illumination present in the masculine aspect, through the mystery of the sacred organ. This is why Joseph is so called, because he fills the deficiency of 35R 40R 45R 50R

[i] The ‘seven breaths’ refer to the seven lower sefirot (from Chesed to Malkhut) that serve as channels for divine energy. The term ‘hevel’ (breath/vapor) connects to Ecclesiastes’ ‘vanities’ but is reinterpreted positively in Kabbalah as divine emanations.

[ii] This phrase from Zechariah 14:9 is central to Jewish eschatology and mysticism, representing the ultimate unification of all divine aspects at the end of days, which mystical practice seeks to manifest in the present.

[iii] The 32 paths of wisdom come from Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early mystical text, representing the 10 sefirot plus the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet that together form the building blocks of creation.

[iv] The number 248 (RaMaCH) is significant in Jewish mysticism as the number of positive commandments and the traditional count of limbs in the human body. Here it represents the complete structure of divine manifestation through the name ADNY.

א״ס בספירות ואחר כך לכוללם
על ידי היסוד במ׳ ומכחם פירות
העץ שהם פעולות הנק׳ פרי
העץ ופרי האדמה שהם פעילות
עצמה בכח המאציל העליון
ובחינת הזכר נכללות בו׳ תיבות
של שמע וכנגדם הוציאה למטה
בעולם הנקבה ששה מדרגות שהם
הכלל מציאות הנכללות בברוך
שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד
ובכל כוונתו לא יצייר בדעתו רק
אותיות משמות הקדש כפי העת
והמקום כי זה לבד הותר:[i] [ii]

the feminine, which is the mystery of the additional Yod-Vav in the masculine—Yod in the mystery of purity upon the Vav—thereby illuminating her and completing her judgments.

The secret of the unification in "Hear, O Israel" is to connect the Infinite (Ein Sof) with the sefirot, and afterward to include them through Yesod in Malkhut. From their power come the fruits of the tree, which are the actions called "fruit of the tree" and "fruit of the earth"—these are its own activities empowered by the Supernal Emanator. The masculine aspect is included in the six words of the Shema, and corresponding to them, She brought forth below, in the feminine world, six levels, which are the totality of existence included in "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever." And in all one's intention, one should visualize in one's mind only the letters of the holy Names according to the time and place, for this alone is permitted.

פרק ט׳

Chapter 9

רמז מיתה הכתובה בתורה אם
לא חטא אדם הראשון:

A Reference to Death Written in the Torah Even If Adam Had Not Sinned:

קודם החטא ראוי היה אדם
הראשון להתלבש במיתה דכתיב
אדם כי ימות באהל אלא שהקדים
עצמו אליה שלא בעונתה ובפגם
שעשה בעצמו נפגמו כל הבאים
אחריו מפני אחיזתם בו וזה
סוד החטאת אם היתה פגול
או נותר אף הנוגע בה ובלע
ממנה יקדש כמותה ואם היה

Before the sin, Adam was destined to be clothed in death, as it is written, "When a man dies in a tent" (Numbers 19:14), but he hastened himself to it prematurely. Through the blemish he created in himself, all who came after him were also blemished because of their connection to him. This is the mystery of the sin-offering: if it became ritually unfit or remained beyond its time, even one who touches it and absorbs from it becomes sanctified like it. If he was already

[i] The caution that only visualization of divine names is permitted reflects Kabbalistic concerns about proper mystical practice, warning against anthropomorphic visualization of divinity which would be considered idolatrous.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The entire passage draws heavily from Zoharic concepts of divine unification, particularly the union of masculine and feminine aspects of divinity (YHVH and ADNY). The metaphor of kissing as spiritual union is a classic Zoharic motif found in multiple sections. | Cf. Song of Songs — The verse 'Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth' from Song of Songs is interpreted here mystically as representing the union between the divine masculine and feminine aspects, a common kabbalistic reading of this biblical text. | Cf. Genesis 29:11 — The verse about Jacob kissing Rachel is reinterpreted here as a mystical allegory for divine unions between masculine and feminine aspects of divinity. | Cf. Psalms 18:11 — The verses about God riding on a cherub are interpreted as metaphors for the relationship between upper and lower divine realms. | Cf. Deuteronomy 6:4 — The Shema ('Hear O Israel') is presented as a central unification prayer that connects the Infinite with the sefirot. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The reference to 32 paths of wisdom is drawn from Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early mystical text that discusses the 32 paths formed by the 10 sefirot and 22 Hebrew letters.

קדוש מתקדש בקדושתה שכן כל מה שנכלל מהיכל לבנת הספיר ופנימה קדוש ומתאחד בסוד היחוד.[i] והמיתה היתה מכוונת מאתו יתברך באהל והיא גנוזה בקדש. מות וחיים בהדי הדדי[ii] והחטא כפל את המיתה והאכילה פגה והפליגה מן החיים וסוף סוף עצת ה׳ היא תקום וכבר דברנו במספיק במאמר ראשון ושני להוכיח כי אפילו המיתה הלזו היא תמימות ותיקון שאחר שהנשמות יפשיטו חומרם ויכנסו אל נפש העולם מדור הנשמות ויתעלו אל רוחו של עולם מקום ג״ע של מטה מציאות עולם המלאכים ויתעלו ממנו ובו דרך מציאותו עד יכנסו אל נשמתו של עולם סוד הכסא ויתאחזו בכסא בסוד מדור הנשמות למעלה מההיכלות. וזהו אמרם ז״ל גזרה על המת שישתכח מן הלב שגם שנגזר על הנפטר שיסתלק מן העולם הזה התחתון הוא לסלקו ממקום השכחה ששם אחיזת הקליפות בסוד רגליה יורדות מות ומתעלה ומשתכח מן הל״ב נתיבות התחתונים[iii] מתפשטים בעולם הכליון וההפסד ומתעלה לל״ב העליון שהוא עלמא דדכורא אשר עין לא ראתה אלהים זולתך. ובן יהיה סוד נבואה בסוד תוכיותו של עולם בחלק המתלבש זה בתוך זה ובזה יהיה התפשטות המלאכים והתגלמם באויר לאברהם שראם בדמות אנשים וזה נדין בסוד האצילות ובמה שלמעלה ממנו שהוא חיות הכל בסוד holy, he becomes sanctified through its holiness, for everything that is included within the Palace of the Sapphire Brick and inward is holy and unified in the mystery of divine unification. 15R

Death was intended by the Blessed One "in the tent" and is hidden in holiness. Death and life exist together, but sin doubled death, and premature consumption distanced humanity from life. Yet ultimately, the counsel of the Lord will stand. We have 20R already discussed sufficiently in the first and second discourses to prove that even this death is a perfection and rectification. After souls strip away their material substance, they enter the World-Soul, the dwelling place of souls, and ascend to the World-25R Spirit, the location of the lower Garden of Eden, the realm of angels. From there they ascend through its reality until they enter the Soul of the World, the mystery of the Throne, and attach themselves to the Throne in the mystery of the dwelling of souls above 30R the Heavenly Palaces.

This explains the sages' statement, "It is decreed that the dead be forgotten from the heart." Though it is decreed that the departed ascend from this lower world, this is to remove him from the place of for-35R getfulness, where the external forces (kelipot) grasp, as in "her feet descend to death" (Proverbs 5:5). He is elevated and forgotten from the thirty-two lower paths that extend into the world of destruction and decay, and ascends to the upper thirty-two, which is 40R the masculine realm that "no eye has seen, O God, besides You" (Isaiah 64:3).

Similarly, the mystery of prophecy exists in the inwardness of the world, in the part that clothes itself one within the other. Through this occurs the 45R extension of angels and their embodiment in the air, as when Abraham saw them in the form of men. This is judged in the mystery of Atzilut (Emanation) and what is above it, which is the life-force of all, in the mystery from above to below and from below 50R to above, and in the mystery of the Garden of Eden

[i] The 'mystery of divine unification' (sod ha-yichud) is a central kabbalistic concept referring to the cosmic union of masculine and feminine divine aspects, often symbolized by the unification of the divine names YHVH and Adonai.

[ii] This phrase 'death and life exist together' represents a key kabbalistic concept that death was part of the original divine plan, not merely a punishment for sin. This understanding is central to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death as a spiritual transition rather than solely a tragedy.

[iii] The '32 lower paths' refers to the kabbalistic concept of the 32 paths of wisdom in their lower manifestation, representing how divine wisdom manifests in the physical world. The text contrasts this with the '32 upper paths' in the spiritual realm.

ממעלה למטה ובסוד מלמטה למעלה ובסוד ג״ע למעלה מהאצילו[i]ת:[ii] above Atzilut.

פרק י׳

Chapter 10

משלש מתנות שניתנו על ידי יסורים א׳ מהם הוא העה״ב שהיא בינה שנטייתה אל השמאל ובהיותה מתהפכת לפעול כח הרחמים אי אפשר אם לא ינתן חלק לחצונים כעין ואתן אדם תחתיך וכך הטעם בתורה וארץ ישראל ולכן יוכרח שיוקדם לכל אחד מהם היסורין כי המקטרגים ירצו חלקם. ויסורי המיתה הוא חלק אשר לבחות ההם כענין חלק השטן באיוב והם הכנה לנקיית העולם הבא והקבר הבא אחר המיתה הוא כור גדול אל סיגי הגוף ולכן דור המדבר הוליכם שם ארבעים שנה אחר חטא המרגלים כי נדבקו לצרף ארבעים קליפות חסר א׳ הפך טל של ברכה כי לא יתעצם הדבר להיותו

Of the three gifts that are given through suffering, one of them is the World to Come, which is Binah (Understanding), whose inclination is toward the left side. When it turns to exert the power of mercy, this is impossible unless a portion is given to the external forces, as in the verse "I will give men in your place" (Isaiah 43:4). The same principle applies to Torah and the Land of Israel.[A] Therefore, it is necessary that suffering must precede each of these gifts, for the accusers demand their share.

The sufferings of death are the portion that belongs to these forces,[B] similar to Satan's portion in Job, and they serve as preparation for the purification needed for the World to Come. The grave that follows death is like a great crucible for the dross of the body. This is why the generation of the wilderness wandered there for forty years after the sin of the spies, for they needed to be refined from thirty-nine negative forces[C]—the opposite of the dew of blessing[D]—since nothing can attain a

[A] Or: "And this is the reason regarding Torah and the Land of Israel" — This alternative is more literal but slightly less fluent. The original translation better conveys the meaning that the same principle discussed applies to both Torah and the Land of Israel.

[B] Or: "And the sufferings of death are the share belonging to those powers" — This alternative is valid and perhaps slightly more literal, but the original translation better captures the technical kabbalistic meaning of 'forces' (kochot) as negative spiritual entities.

[C] Or: "to refine forty negative shells minus one" — The alternative is more literal in preserving the Hebrew phrase structure of 'forty minus one' and uses 'shells' (kelipot) which is the technical kabbalistic term, though the original translation is more accessible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[D] Or: "contrary to the dew of blessing" — Both translations effectively convey the meaning, but [i] The reference to 'the Garden of Eden above Atzilut' represents an unusual cosmological claim, as most kabbalistic systems place the Garden of Eden in the world of Beriah (Creation), below Atzilut (Emanation). This suggests the author is referring to a particularly elevated spiritual realm.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author references his earlier discussions in 'the first and second discourses' of Ma'avar Yabok, indicating this passage comes from a later section of the same work. | Cf. Numbers 19:14 — The verse 'Adam ki yamut ba'ohel' (When a man dies in a tent) is cited to support the kabbalistic claim that death was part of the divine plan even before Adam's sin. | Cf. Proverbs 5:5 — The reference to 'her feet descend to death' from Proverbs is used to characterize the realm of the kelipot (external forces) where souls can become trapped. | Cf. Isaiah 64:3 — The verse is used to describe the transcendent nature of the 'masculine realm' (alma de-dekhura) to which purified souls ascend after death. | Cf. Zohar — The passage's discussion of the 'Palace of the Sapphire Brick' (heikhal livnat ha-sapir) and the various worlds through which souls ascend draws on Zoharic cosmology, particularly the concept of souls ascending through multiple worlds after death.

במדרגה עליונה אם לא ירד
במדרגות התחתונות להצטרף.
ומקודם הם היו טהורים וברים
ולאהיתה הקליפה נאחזת בהם
מפני טהרתם אבל אחר חטא זה
הוצרכו להיות במדבר נחש שרף
ועקרב וצמאון להצטרף שם ולכן
היו חופרים להם קברים בכל
ערב ט׳ באב שאז היה מתגבר
כח הקליפה ההיא ובהכנס עצמם
בקברות היו משברים ומכתתים
אותה ובעולם הבא דור המדבר
בג״ע עושים כן לטהר עצמם
כדאמרו בינוקא וזה כדי להכין
עצמם לתחיה זכים וברים כראוי
להם שהיו שלימות הדורות
מתחלת העולם ועד הנה. והנה
עונש העבירות אינם על צד
הנקמה והעונש רק על דרך
הנקיות והצירוף ככביסת הבגד
שלפי לכלוכו כן ירבה כביסתו
וכן הוא אש הגהינם לנשמות
והנה הודיעונו חז״ל כי יש שבעה
מדרגות מיתה שבעה תמורות
שהם מיתה עוני שממה מלחמה
אולת כיעור עבדות כדפי׳
בספר יצירה והם שבעה עינים
נובעות גבורות. ונראה לדעתי
כי רמזו חז״ל ז׳ עיני גבורות
אלו במאמרם יום ראשון מיתה
של זעף לשני מיתה של בהלה
לשלישי מיתה של מגפה לרביעי
מיתה בהכרת לחמישי מיתה
הדופה לששי מיתה האמורה
בתורה לשביעי מיתה של חבה
יותר מכאן מיתחשל יסורין
וכשתדקדק בכל א׳ מדיני מיתות
אלו תבין כי הם שבעה עיינין
מתלהטן ממטה למעלה ולכן
מיתה האמורה בתורה היא בכח
מדת הגבורה והמיתה השביעית
שהיא על ידי חסד קראוה מיתה
של חבה והובא מאמר זה גם כן
במדרש תהלים ומשם נראה גם כן
בחובה לצדיק להתפלל כל ימיו
שלא יאסף בלא תשובה ושלא

higher level without first descending to lower levels to be purified.

Previously, they were pure and clear, and the negative forces could not attach to them because of their purity. But after this sin, they needed to be in "a wilderness of venomous snakes, scorpions, and thirst" (Deuteronomy 8:15) to be refined there. This is why they would dig graves for themselves every eve of the Ninth of Av, when the power of these negative forces intensified. By entering these graves, they would break and crush these forces. Similarly, in the World to Come, the generation of the wilderness in the Garden of Eden continues this process to purify themselves, as explained in the story of the Child in the Zohar. This is to prepare themselves for resurrection, pure and clear as befits them, for they represented the perfection of generations from the beginning of the world until then.

The punishment for transgressions is not for the sake of vengeance or punishment itself, but rather for cleansing and refinement, like washing a garment—the more soiled it is, the more washing it requires. This is the nature of the fires of Gehenna for souls. Our Sages have informed us that there are seven degrees of death, seven transformations, which are: death, poverty, desolation, war, foolishness, ugliness, and slavery, as explained in Sefer Yetzirah. These are the seven "eyes" that flow from the attribute of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment).

It seems to me that our Sages alluded to these seven eyes of Gevurah in their teaching: "On the first day, a death of wrath; on the second, a death of panic; on the third, a death of plague; on the fourth, a death of excision; on the fifth, a death of pushing; on the sixth, the death mentioned in the Torah; on the seventh, a death of affection; beyond this, a death of suffering." When you examine each of these types of death carefully, you will understand that they represent seven "eyes" that flame from below to above. Therefore, the death mentioned in the Torah is through the power of the attribute of Gevurah, while the seventh death, which comes through Chesed (Loving-kindness), they called a "death of affection." This teaching is also brought in Midrash Tehillim, which also indicates that it is obligatory for a righteous person to pray throughout his life the alternative might be slightly clearer in conveying the contrast between the negative forces and the positive 'dew of blessing' concept in Kabbalah.

ימות ביום מיתת רשע כדדרשו
שם על פסוק אל תאסף עם
חטאים נפשי. וכנגד ז׳ גבורות
70 אלו יש ז׳ מדרגות של גיהנם
שהם ז׳ כחות כאומרו והכיתי
אתכם גם אני שבע ומאלו השבעה
יתפשטו מ״ב דינים חזקים
כדכתיב ויספתי ליסרה אתכם
75 שבע בחטאתיכם ועל כל פרטי
המיתה יש טעם וסוד כי מיתת
הנפלים ממעי אמן הוא למרק
הכריתות ומיתות בית דין וכן יש
טעם למתים מצד תאות אכילה
80 או מצד מלאכה יתירה. או
מחמת ביאת הזכר על המעוברת
הכל מוקבל נגד מה שנתחייבו
מצד אבותיהם וכן אם חייבים
סקילה נופלת האם ומפלת. אם
85 שריפה נכויה ומצערה ומפלת.
ולכן יש מעוברות שסבה קלה
מפלת אותן ויש שאינה מפלת
משום סבה. עוד יש טעם למתים
בקטנותם משעת לידה עד י״ג
90 שנה ויום א׳ ועליהם נאמר
ראיתי דמעת העשוקים. עוד
נתנו טעם בספר הזהר למתים
מבן י״ג עד עשרים ומיתת
אלו אינו על ידי אותו מלאך
95 המות הממית לגדולים ומיתת
הקטנים בבטן האם היא קלה כי
העובר במעי אמו אין לו אלא
הצלם שעל ידו נמתחים אבריו
והצלם קרוב מאד לחצונים
100 עד שהנפש הרוכבת עליו הוא
מהעשיה. ולכן החצונים בנקל
יפגמו בצלם וימיתוהו ובלדתו
מזדמן לו נפש ובהגיעו לחינוך
רוח מזדמן אליו וביי״ג נשמתו
105 מזדמנת אליו ויצא מכלל
החצונים ובשנת עשרים מגיע
למדרגת עולם האצילות ולכן
נקרא בן ונדון בב״ד של מעלה
והמתים מבן עשרים ולמעלה
110 הוא על ידי מלאך המות ממש כל
א׳ כפי מעשהו שאין מיתה בלא
חטא ואין באן מקום של דרושים
אלו רק די לנו להבין ולהורות
כי הכל משוער ונמדד וקו המדה

not to be gathered without repentance and not to die the death of a wicked person, as they interpreted there the verse "Do not gather my soul with sinners" (Psalms 26:9). 70R

Corresponding to these seven powers of Gevurah are seven levels of Gehenna, which are seven forces, as it says, "I will strike you, even I, seven times" (Leviticus 26:28). From these seven extend forty-two strong judgments, as it is written, "I will continue to 75R discipline you seven times for your sins" (Leviticus 26:21). There is a reason and mystery behind every particular aspect of death. The death of miscarriages from their mother's womb serves to cleanse away the punishments of spiritual excision and capital pun- 80R ishments. Similarly, there are reasons for deaths caused by excessive eating or excessive labor, or from a man having relations with a pregnant woman—all corresponding to what they were liable for due to their ancestors. Thus, if they are liable to stoning, 85R the mother falls and miscarries; if burning, she is scorched, suffers, and miscarries. This is why some pregnant women miscarry from a minor cause while others do not miscarry for any reason.

There is also a reason for those who die in child- 90R hood, from birth until thirteen years and one day, of whom it is said, "I saw the tears of the oppressed" (Ecclesiastes 4:1). The Zohar also gives a reason for those who die between thirteen and twenty years. The death of these is not through the same Angel of 95R Death that kills adults. The death of infants in their mother's womb is easier because the fetus has only the tzelem (divine image) through which its limbs are formed, and this tzelem is very close to the external forces, while the soul riding upon it is from 100R the World of Asiyah (Action). Therefore, the external forces can easily damage the tzelem and cause death. At birth, a nefesh (vital soul) becomes available to the child; when reaching the age of education, a ruach (spirit) becomes available; at thirteen, the 105R neshamah (higher soul) becomes available, and the child emerges from the category of external forces; at twenty, one reaches the level of the World of Atzilut (Emanation), thus becoming fully accountable and judged by the heavenly court. Those who die from 110R twenty years and up die through the Angel of Death itself, each according to their deeds, for there is no death without sin.

This is not the place for these inquiries; it is המהוה את הכל ומי יוכל לעמוד

על דיניו של הקב״ה כי מאד
עמקו מחשבותיו ויש יסורין של
אהבה שירצה אהבת צדק ומשפט
זה לזה ויסורין שאינן של אהבה
הם בפירוד צדק ממשפט ויש
עוד יסורין של אהבה שאינם על עון:[i]

enough for us to understand and teach that everything is measured and calculated by the measuring line that forms everything. Who can comprehend the judgments of the Holy One, blessed be He, for His thoughts are exceedingly deep. There are sufferings of love, which express the love between righteousness and justice;[A] and there are sufferings not of love, which occur when righteousness is separated from justice. There are also sufferings of love that are not for sin.

פרק י״א

Chapter 11

הכחות שמהם מתהוה המיתה
הם מבחינת גל עד[ii] ולמטה
כי כחה קדושה מתפשטת עד
בחינת גל עד הנזכר ועד שם
מתלבשת בלבוש חצוני ונקרא
יגר שהדותא ולבן הארמי שם
הוא מקום אחיזתו ואינו עובר
משם ולמעלה ויעקב מגיע עד
גלעד ואינו עובר משם ולמטה
והיינו אם אתה לא תעבור וגו׳
וגם אני לא אעבור וזהו סוד
לקיטת האבנים שעד שם הוא סוד
האבנים והאכילה היא שם על
הגל אלו אוכלים בקדושה ואלו
אוכלים מחוץ ומשם הדברים
נפרדים אל הקדושים מצד
אחד ואל החצונים מצד אחר

The forces from which death originates derive from the level of Gal-Ed (“heap of witness”) and below, for its holy power extends only as far as the aforementioned level of Gal-Ed. At that point, it becomes clothed in an external garment and is called “Yegar Sahaduta” (the Aramaic equivalent of Gal-Ed). This is where Laban the Aramean has his hold, and he cannot cross beyond that point upward. Similarly, Jacob reaches only as far as Gilead and cannot cross downward from there. This is the meaning of “if you do not cross over, etc., neither will I cross over.”[1] This is the secret of the gathering of stones, for up to that point is the mystery of the stones, and the meal takes place there upon the heap—these eating in holiness and those eating outside. From that point, matters separate toward the holy forces on one side and toward the external forces on the other.

[A] Or: “when righteousness and justice love one another” — The alternative translation more clearly personifies the divine attributes of Tzedek (Righteousness) and Mishpat (Justice) as loving each other, which better reflects the kabbalistic understanding of divine attributes interacting with each other.

[1] This references Genesis 31:52 where Jacob and Laban make a covenant that neither will cross the stone heap to harm the other. The author is using this as a mystical metaphor for the boundary between higher and lower spiritual realms.

[i] Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The author references Sefer Yetzirah to support his explanation of the seven degrees of death, grounding his mystical interpretation in a canonical kabbalistic text. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim — The author cites this midrash to establish the obligation for the righteous to pray that they not die without repentance or die like the wicked. | Cf. Zohar, Story of the Child (Yanuka) — The reference connects the purification process of the generation of the wilderness in the afterlife to kabbalistic teachings about soul refinement found in the Zohar. | Cf. Book of Job — The author uses the example of Satan’s role in Job’s suffering to explain how negative spiritual forces are allowed a portion in the suffering of death as part of the divine plan. | Cf. Leviticus 26:21,28 — These verses are cited to demonstrate the concept of seven levels of judgment that correspond to the seven levels of Gehenna.

[ii] The Hebrew term ‘Gal-Ed’ (heap of witness) appears in Genesis 31:47-48 where Jacob and Laban make a covenant, with Laban using the Aramaic equivalent ‘Yegar Sahaduta.’ In Kabbalah, this becomes a metaphor for the boundary between holy and profane realms.

וכן נאמר במכירת יוסף ארחת ישמעאלים באה מגלעד. ואמרו שכמו שיוסף נטה עד פוטיפר[i] גם יהודה נטה עד איש עדולמי ונשא אשה שאינה הוגנת לו והוליד בנים למטה עד מסוד עץ הדעת טוב ורע[ii] השני אונן מקום האנינות והיינו למטה סוד עולם האופנים א׳ ממשלת היום לכן נאמר בו ויקרא וא׳ ממשלת הלילה לכן נאמר בו ותקרא וכן שבעה היכלות מתלבשים בשבעה מדורין. ושלה הוא מקום השלי והוא בנגד עולם הזה ומה שאירע ליוסף עם אחיו ובפרט עם יהודה הכל דוגמא למה שיתהוה בין משיח בן יוסף ובין משיח בן דוד דרוש משם ותראה ותבין עם מאמרי רז״ל האומרים כי הנה המלכים נועדו וכו׳ וקליפת נוגה[iii] היתה מצע קדוש המבדלת בין הקדושה ובין המצריים שהיא קדושה מצד פנימה ואינה חוששת מן החצונים מצד החוץ להיותה בעין קליפת האילן שמתייחסת מצד חוץ והמים ומצד פנים מתייחסת אל האילן להגין ונרמז זה במלת יעקב יו״ד עקב איש וביתו באו ובחינת שם יעקב גלה למצרים אבל לא בחינת ישראל ובשעת מיתתו האיר בחינת ישראל לבחינת יעקב[iv] ויוסף

Thus it is said regarding the sale of Joseph: "A caravan of Ishmaelites came from Gilead." And they said that just as Joseph descended as far as Potiphar, so too Judah descended to the Adullamite and married a woman unsuitable for him, begetting sons even further below, from the realm of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. The second son, Onan, represents the place of mourning (aninot), corresponding to the lower realm of the world of the Ophanim (Wheels). One rules by day, thus it is written "and he called," while one rules by night, thus it is written "and she called."[1] Similarly, seven palaces clothe themselves in seven dwelling places.[2]

Shelah corresponds to the afterbirth, parallel to this world. What happened to Joseph with his brothers, particularly with Judah, is all a model for what will transpire between Messiah son of Joseph and Messiah son of David. Study this matter and you will understand the rabbinic statement that "the kings assembled together," etc. The translucent shell (kelipat nogah) was a holy buffer separating the sacred from the Egyptians—being holy from its inner side while unconcerned with external forces from the outside, like the bark of a tree that relates to the outside elements and water, while from the inside it relates to the tree for protection.

This is alluded to in the word "Jacob" (יעקב): yod-heel[3]—"a man and his household came." The aspect of the name Jacob went down to Egypt, but not the aspect of Israel. At the time of his death, the aspect of Israel illuminated the aspect of Jacob. Joseph embodied the secret of the concealed

[1] The author is making a distinction between the masculine "and he called" (ויקרא) associated with daytime rule and the feminine "and she called" (ותקרא) associated with nighttime rule, reflecting the kabbalistic principle of masculine and feminine divine energies governing different cosmic domains.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of seven celestial palaces (heichalot) that manifest in seven corresponding domains in the lower worlds, creating a symmetry between higher and lower realms.

[3] The author is engaging in a kabbalistic wordplay on the name יעקב (Jacob), interpreting it as composed of the letter yod (י) plus the word 'heel' (עקב), suggesting that Jacob represents the divine aspect (yod) that descends to the lowest level (heel).

[i] The text draws a parallel between Joseph's descent to Egypt (to Potiphar's house) and Judah's descent to the Adullamite, interpreting both as spiritual descents into lower realms.

[ii] The 'Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil' is being used here metaphorically to represent a mixed realm where both holiness and impurity exist, corresponding to lower spiritual levels.

[iii] In Kabbalistic thought, 'kelipat nogah' (the translucent shell) is a unique type of 'kelipah' (shell/husk) that contains both good and evil elements. Unlike purely negative kelipot, it can be elevated to holiness. It serves as a buffer zone between sacred and profane realms.

[iv] In Kabbalah, the names 'Jacob' and 'Israel' represent different spiritual states of the same entity—'Jacob' indicates a lower spiritual level while 'Israel' represents a higher, more perfected state, as reflected in Genesis 32:28 when Jacob's name is changed to Israel after wrestling with the angel.

היה בסוד האבר המתעלם שאין שולט בו הגלות ותמיד היה עומד בצדקו והוא מיחד בין בחינת ישראל לבחינת יעקב ועצת מצרים על ישראל היה דוגמא עצת דור הפלגה להגביר החצונים ושישראל לא יתאחזו בקדש פן יתגברו עליהם וכוונו שיבנו ערים שאוצרים בהם עוני לישראל והאלהים חשבה לטובה:[i] limb[1] over which exile has no dominion; he always remained steadfast in his righteousness, unifying the aspect of Israel with the aspect of Jacob. Egypt's plot against Israel paralleled the scheme of the Generation of Dispersion—to empower the external forces and prevent Israel from taking hold of the sacred, lest they prevail over them. They intended for them to build cities that would store poverty for Israel, but God turned it to good.

פרק י״ב

Chapter 12

קצת מכוונת התעוררות שעושה המתפלל על החולה[ii] או על כל צרה שלא תבא ולתקון חטא עון ופשע:[iii] [iv]

Some Aspects of the Awakening Intention[2] That One Who Prays Makes for the Sick Person or for Any Calamity That May Not Come,[3] and for the Rectification of Transgression, Iniquity, and Willful Sin:[4]

[1] In kabbalistic symbolism, Joseph is associated with the divine attribute of Yesod (Foundation), often represented as the phallus or 'concealed limb' that channels divine flow. The text suggests that this attribute remains unaffected by exile or negative spiritual forces.

[2] The Hebrew term התעוררות (awakening/arousal) has special significance in Kabbalah, referring to the cosmic process where human actions below stimulate response from divine forces above. Prayer is understood as creating an 'awakening from below' (אתערותא דלתתא) that triggers an 'awakening from above' (אתערותא דלעילא).

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'צרה שלא תבא' is a euphemistic way of referring to potential troubles while simultaneously expressing the hope that they will not materialize. This reflects the Jewish belief that words have power and should be used cautiously when discussing negative possibilities.

[4] This translation preserves the traditional rabbinic understanding of the three Hebrew terms as [i] Cf. Genesis 31:47-52 — The author uses this story as a mystical metaphor for the boundary between sacred and profane realms, with Laban representing external forces that cannot ascend beyond this point, while Jacob (representing holiness) cannot descend below it. | Cf. Genesis 37:25 — The author connects this to the mystical boundary of Gilead, suggesting that the sale of Joseph represented a descent from higher to lower spiritual realms. | Cf. Genesis 38:1-5 — The author interprets Judah's marriage to a Canaanite woman as a spiritual descent parallel to Joseph's journey to Egypt, with each son representing different spiritual levels. | Cf. Zohar — The author employs the Zoharic concept of 'kelipat nogah' (the translucent shell) as an intermediary realm between sacred and profane, comparing it to tree bark that protects the inner tree while interacting with external elements. | Cf. Psalms 48:5 — The author references rabbinic interpretations of this verse, suggesting it contains mystical allusions to the relationship between Messiah son of Joseph and Messiah son of David. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Two — This passage elaborates on the book's central metaphor of 'crossing' between realms, explaining the spiritual mechanics of how death occurs at the boundary between divine and mundane realms.

[ii] The Hebrew term used here refers not just to any ill person but specifically to someone seriously ill, which in kabbalistic thought represents someone under the influence of harsh divine judgment that requires spiritual intervention.

[iii] This threefold formula represents increasingly severe levels of sin in rabbinic tradition: חטא (unintentional transgression), עון (deliberate iniquity), and פשע (rebellious sin). The author will explain how each requires a different level of spiritual repair through prayer.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse One, Chapter 10 — The author refers back to his earlier discussion about the spiritual efficacy of morning prayer, suggesting that this section builds upon previously established principles about proper prayer timing. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse One, Chapters 12 and 15 — The author explicitly references his earlier discussion of confession (vidui) for the sick, showing how the current section on prayer intentions builds upon his previous treatment of proper spiritual care for the ill.

הזהירו גורי האר״י במנהגיו
שאם יש איזה חבר בצרה ח״ו
או חולה ישתתף בצערו ויתפלל
עליו וכן בכל דבריו ישתתף
חבריו עמו. וכיון דאתא לידן
נימא מילתא בסוד התעוררות
בתפלה. וזה כי מדי עלותה
תעורר הרצון העליון[i] ויתעוררו
תלתא מוחין שבחכמה בתלת
חללין. אחד מצד הבינה שבו
צד השמיעה כוללת. הב׳ מוח
המעורר העינים והיא בחינה
עליונה אשר למוח שהיא בחכמה.
הג׳ מוח המעורר הדבור והוא
בסוד הדעת. ובתפלה יתעוררו
המוחין הנזכרים התעוררות
טוב כי ממעלה למטה יתעורר
הכתר ביסוד שהוא רצון כנודע
וימשיך סוד הרצון אל הבינה על
ידי החכמה. והבינה מתעוררת
על ידי התעוררות ההוא ואז
מצד הבינה יתעורר למטה סוד
גולגלתא במוחין דלגאו ואז
יעשה שמיעת התפלה וקבלתה
ברצון ויתפשט אז המציאות אל
העקמימות שנתעקם בספירות
וצורת העקמימות הוא צורת

The disciples of the ARI[A] cautioned in his customs[1] that if any colleague is in distress, God forbid, or ill, one should share in his suffering and pray for him, and likewise in all one's affairs, one should involve one's companions. And since this matter has come to our hands,[B] let us discuss the secret of arousal through prayer. When prayer ascends, it awakens the Supernal Will and arouses the three aspects of consciousness within Wisdom in the three chambers.[2] One is from the aspect of Understanding within it, which is the comprehensive aspect of hearing. The second is the consciousness that arouses the eyes, which is the higher aspect of the mind that is in Wisdom. The third is the consciousness that arouses speech, which is in the mystery of Knowledge. During prayer, these aspects of consciousness are awakened in a positive manner, for from above to below, the Crown is aroused in Foundation, which is Will,[3] as is known, and it draws the mystery of Will to Understanding through Wisdom. And Understanding is aroused through this awakening, and then from the aspect of Understanding, the mystery of the Skull is aroused below in the inner minds,[4] and then the prayer is heard and accepted willingly. Then the divine flow extends to the distortions that have become crooked in the sefiro[C]t, and the form of this crookedness is [A] Or: "the students of Rabbi Isaac Luria" — While 'disciples of the ARI' is accurate, using 'students of Rabbi Isaac Luria' provides clarity for readers who might not be familiar with the acronym ARI (which stands for 'the divine Rabbi Isaac').

[B] Or: "and since this topic has presented itself to us" — The Aramaic phrase is idiomatic, and while 'come to our hands' is a literal translation, 'this topic has presented itself to us' better conveys the meaning in natural English.

[C] Or: "divine flow to the distortions that have occurred within the sefirot" — The original trans-representing a hierarchy of sins: חטא (transgression) refers to unintentional mistakes, עון (iniquity) to conscious wrongdoing, and פשע (willful sin) to deliberate rebellion against divine will.

[1] The ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria, 1534-1572) was the preeminent kabbalist of Safed whose teachings revolutionized Jewish mysticism. His disciples recorded and systematized his oral teachings after his death.

[2] In Lurianic Kabbalah, the divine intellect is composed of three aspects called 'mochin' (consciousnesses): Chokhmah (Wisdom), Binah (Understanding), and Da'at (Knowledge), which correspond to different modes of divine intelligence.

[3] This refers to Keter (Crown) manifesting in Yesod (Foundation). In Kabbalah, Keter represents the highest divine will, while Yesod channels divine flow to Malkhut (Kingdom). This describes how divine will begins to manifest in the cosmos through prayer.

[4] The 'Skull' (Gulgalta) refers to the highest aspect of Keter, while 'inner minds' (mochin d'legau) are the internalized consciousnesses within the divine configuration. This describes how prayer activates the innermost aspects of divine consciousness.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that prayer, as it ascends, awakens the Supernal Will (Ratzon Elyon), the highest level of divine desire that initiates the flow of blessing.

תרועה אוחז בימין ושמאל מצד
דרכי בני אדם המעקם הקול
העולה ויתפשטו עד התחתונים
35 להזמין אותם הממונים לקבלת
תפלת התחתונים שהם בעלי
כנפים כי עליהם נאמר כי עוף
השמים יוליך את הקול ובעל
כנפים יגיד דבר.[i] הנה כי בתפלת
40 וזעקת התחתונים יתמתקו
הדינים והגבורה העליונה והיינו
בהיות הענין נתקן משרשו.
ויש ג׳ בחינות לחסדים כדי
למתק הדינים[ii] לבל יונבע הדין
45 בתוספת שאז הוא בהסכמת
הבינה. ומשם מתגלגל ח״ו דרך
המדרגות והחיכלות ומשם על
החצונים כי הם באים ומלקקים
הדם ופועלים הדין והיינו
50 קץ כל בשר בא לפני. הבחינה
הראשונה. יכוין המתפלל לעורר
חסדי היסוד שהוא חסד בסוד
החסדים העליונים. ולתקון
החטא שוגג די לעורר החסד זה
55 לטהר המ׳ ולהמשיך לה היסוד
ומקור גבורתיה ישתככו וימתקו
בהכנס החסד הזה אליהם אחר
שאין שום דין מתגבר בזכר.
הבחינה הב׳ כאשר הדינים
60 מהגבורה מסבת העון מזיד
החסד ימין יעורר בלובן חסדיו
מן השרשים העליונים אחר
שפנים העליונים בישובן ואינם
בכעס די בהמתקת הגבורה הזאת
65 ומשם אל הגבורה התחתונים

like the form of the teruah [shofar blast], grasping both right and left,[1] corresponding to the ways of humans who bend the rising voice, and they extend to the lower realms to summon those appointed 35R to receive the prayers of those below, who are the winged ones, for of them it is said: "For a bird of the sky will carry the voice, and a winged creature will tell the matter." Thus, through the prayer and outcry of those below, the judgments and 40R the supernal Strength will be sweetened,[A] that is, when the matter is repaired from its root. And there are three aspects of Kindness to sweeten the judgments so that judgment will not flow with increased severity, which would then be with the 45R consent of Understanding. From there it would, God forbid, roll down through the levels and the palaces and from there onto the external forces, for they come and lick the blood and execute judgment, which is "the end of all flesh has come before Me." 50R
The first aspect: the one praying should intend to arouse the kindnesses of Foundation, which is Kindness in the mystery of the supernal Kindnesses. And to rectify an unintentional sin, it is enough to arouse this Kindness to purify Malkhut and 55R draw to it the Foundation, and the source of its strengths will be calmed and sweetened when this Kindness enters them, since no judgment intensifies in the masculine. The second aspect: when the judgments are from Strength due to intentional 60R sin, the Kindness of the right will arouse with the whiteness of its kindnesses from the supernal roots, since the supernal countenance is in its settled state and not in anger. It is enough to sweeten this Strength and from there to the lower Strength 65R lation is overly literal. In kabbalistic context, this refers to the restoration of proper divine flow that has been disrupted or distorted within the cosmic channels (sefirot), not physical crookedness.

[A] Or: "the harsh judgments and the supernal Gevurah will be transformed into mercy" — The kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgments' (mituk ha-dinim) refers specifically to transforming harsh divine judgments into mercy. Including the Hebrew term 'Gevurah' and clarifying the transformation process provides more precision and context.

[1] The teruah is a series of short, staccato blasts on the shofar (ram's horn). Its broken pattern is compared to the distortions in divine flow that prayer aims to repair, affecting both the right side (mercy) and left side (judgment) of the divine structure.

[i] This is a quote from Ecclesiastes 10:20, which in its literal context warns against speaking ill of others because word might spread unexpectedly. In kabbalistic interpretation, it is understood as referring to angelic beings that carry prayers upward.

[ii] The text outlines a three-tiered system for 'sweetening judgments' (mituk ha-dinim), a key kabbalistic concept referring to the transformation of divine severity into mercy. Each tier corresponds to a different type of transgression requiring different levels of spiritual correction.

על ידי היסוד הנמתק ומתיחד עם המל׳. הבחינה הג׳ כאשר הדינים מהבינה מחמת הפשע שאז הם מתעוררים מרישא דמלכא צריך התקון מהכתר גולגלתא חיוורא קדישא סתימא.[i] משם יתעוררו החסדים העליונים ויתמתקו בשרשים הנסתרים ומשם על הגבורה ומשם לגבורה התחתונה. וזה בהקשר ג׳ חסדים גדולים בג׳ גבורות. חסד בכתר והחכמה בבינה חסד ממש בגבורה חסד היסוד במלכות ובזה יומתקו כל הגבורות וזה סוד תקונם דרך כלל. ויש משפטים לאין קץ:[ii]

through the Foundation that is sweetened and unified with Malkhut. The third aspect: when the judgments are from Understanding due to rebellious transgression, then they are aroused from the Head of the King, and the rectification must come from the Crown, the holy, concealed white skull.[1] From there the supernal Kindnesses will be aroused and will be sweetened in the hidden roots, and from there to Strength, and from there to the lower Strength. And this is through the connection of three great Kindnesses to three Strengths:[2] Kindness in the Crown and Wisdom in Understanding, actual Kindness in Strength, and the Kindness of Foundation in Malkhut. Through this, all the Strengths will be sweetened, and this is the mystery of their rectification in general. And there are judgments without end.

פרק י״ג

Chapter 13

ביסום הגבורות ע״י צדיק אחד או צדיקים הרבה[iii] וטעם לסדר

Sweetening the Powers of Judgment[A] Through One Righteous Person or Many Righteous People,[B] and

[A] Or: “Tempering the Severities” — The term ‘bisum’ (sweetening) in Kabbalistic terminology refers to the transformation of harsh divine judgment into mercy. An alternate translation might use ‘tempering’ to convey this metaphysical process of softening judgment.

[B] Or: “By Means of a Single Tzaddik or Multiple Tzaddikim” — The Hebrew term ‘tzaddik’ has specific connotations in Jewish mysticism that aren’t fully captured by ‘righteous person.’ Retaining the Hebrew term might be preferable in a translation aimed at readers familiar with Kabbalistic terminology.

[1] Gulgalta Chivra Kadisha Stima (holy, concealed white skull) refers to the highest aspect of Keter, the ultimate source of divine mercy that can transform even the most severe judgments. This represents the deepest level of divine compassion.

[2] This describes the kabbalistic process of balancing the divine attributes of Chesed (Kindness) and Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) at multiple levels of the divine structure, creating harmony throughout the sefirot.

[i] This refers to the ‘Holy Hidden White Skull,’ a concept from Lurianic Kabbalah representing the highest aspect of Keter (Crown), the first and most elevated sefirah. It is the source of divine mercy that can transform even the most severe judgments.

[ii] Cf. Shaar HaKavanot — This passage appears to draw directly from the Lurianic kabbalistic system detailed in Shaar HaKavanot, particularly regarding how prayer activates specific configurations in the upper worlds. | Cf. Zohar III:223b — This passage parallels the Zohar’s description of prayer as a cosmic mechanism that activates the sefirot and causes divine flow to descend from higher to lower realms. | Cf. Etz Chaim — The threefold structure of consciousness (mochin) mentioned here directly references the Lurianic system outlined in Etz Chaim, where the three mochin correspond to Chokhmah, Binah, and Da’at. | Cf. Kohelet 10:20 — The author uses this biblical verse as a proof text for the mystical concept that angelic beings (described as ‘winged ones’) are the agents that carry prayers from earth to heaven.

[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that certain exceptional individuals (tzaddikim) have the spiritual power to affect cosmic forces directly, while in other cases a collective of righteous people is needed to achieve the same effect.

תפלת חולים בכלל:[i][ii]

the Reason for the Order of Prayers for the Sick in General:

אמנם התקון יהיה לפעמים ע״י
איש צדיק גבור לעמוד בפרץ
שמעמיד הגבורות בסוד היחודים
שעושה ומיחד תמיד הצדק עם
המשפט שלא יפרדו ועליה׳
נאמר צדיק מושל יראת אלהים
וכל יופי המל׳ מתוך מעשה
הצדיקים ומה גם המלמדים
תורה ברבים שהם כשדים ימין
ושמאל ומשפיעים תורה לרבים
יין וחלב וזהו צרור המור
דודי לי בין שדי ילין כי הוא
מתתקנת בסוד עוסקי תורה
ובסוד חכמה ותבונה ודעת והיא
סוגה מכחות החצונים. בשושנים
פי׳ בזכות ששונים. וסוד אבילת
הכהנים הקדשים והבעלים
מתכפרים מורה על חלוק השפע
במדרגות תחתונות ובזה יורו
קשר העולמות ותקונם מפגם
החומא שסלק השפע מהעליונים
והתחתונים ולזה אבילת קדשי
קדשים במקום קדוש וקדשים
במקום טהור וכו׳ ולכן הכהן
הטהור המחטא את הכלה
ומטהרה לבעלה. יאכלנה שהוא

However, the rectification sometimes comes through a righteous person who is mighty enough to stand in the breach,[A] who establishes the powers of Gevurah through the secret of the unifications[B] he performs, constantly uniting Righteousness with Justice so they do not separate. Concerning such individuals it is said, "The righteous rules through the fear of God." All the beauty of Malkhut comes from the deeds of the righteous, especially those who teach Torah to the multitudes, who are like breasts—right and left—flowing with Torah to the masses like wine and milk. This is the meaning of "My beloved is to me a bundle of myrrh that lies between my breasts," for She [the Shekhinah] is adorned through those who engage in Torah study, through wisdom, understanding, and knowledge, and thus She is protected from external forces. "Among the lilies" means "through the merit of those who study [Torah]."

The secret of the priests eating the sacred offerings while the owners receive atonement demonstrates how divine influence is distributed through the lower levels, thereby revealing the connection between worlds and their rectification from the blemish caused by the sinner who removed divine flow from upper and lower realms. This is why the most sacred

[A] Or: "to repair the breach" — The Hebrew phrase can also be translated more literally as 'to repair the breach,' emphasizing the active role of the righteous person in repairing cosmic damage rather than merely standing guard. This might be preferable in contexts emphasizing tikkun (repair).

[B] Or: "who stabilizes the powers of judgment through mystical unifications" — This alternate translation uses more accessible terminology for readers less familiar with kabbalistic terms like 'Gevurah,' while 'stabilizes' might better capture the meaning of מעמיד in this context of controlling potentially destructive forces.

[i] This refers to the eight structured prayer sequences (sedarim) presented in the first discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, which are carefully arranged collections of psalms and biblical verses for healing the sick.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 3, Chapter 15 — This passage connects to earlier discussions in Ma'avar Yabok about how the righteous can affect cosmic forces. The concept of 'sweetening judgments' appears throughout the work as a central kabbalistic framework for understanding how proper ritual and prayer can transform divine severity into mercy. | Cf. Zohar III:65a — The author is drawing on the Zoharic concept that righteous individuals can 'sweeten' divine judgments through their spiritual power. The Zohar teaches that the righteous have the ability to stand against harsh decrees and transform them, which forms the theological foundation for this passage. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 1, Chapter 30 — The reference to 'the order of prayers for the sick' directly connects to the first discourse's detailed presentation of eight structured liturgical sequences designed for healing. This passage appears to explain the metaphysical mechanism by which these prayers operate.

נוטל חלק בראש מהיחיד יושפע עליו חלקו עם נערותיה. ואם אין צדיק בארץ צריך שהרבים יעשו תשובה ותפלה ויתייחדו המדות בזכות הרבים. ומתח הדין ולכן הזהרתי במעירי שחר על כנוס שלמים וכן רבים להעתיר אל ה׳ קודם אור היום וכמה היה זהיר בזה החכם האר״י וסוף דבר עקר המתקת הדינים אינו תלוי אלא ביחוד הנ׳ וכניסת היסוד על המל׳ שהוא אשד הגבורות והתמתקם על ידי היסוד ולזה יכוין המתפלל על החולים ועל כל צרה שלא תבא וכוונת ההויות בנקודים ובגוונים ושאר פרטים המכוונות לזה לא אעלם על ספר וחמבין יבין מדעתו על פי ההקדמות ומפתחות המסורים בידו והמתקת הדינים הוא ע״י יחוד יסוד במלכות כי יסוד סוד לובן העליון מהוה בזכר והנקבה מזרעת אודם ואז יתקרבו הדינים עם החסדים והחסדים הם נמשכים ונגרים בחזקה עד שמתגברין על הדינין וכופין אותם ואז יתלבנו ונודע כי הדינים הקשים הקדושים יש להם הלבנינות בשרשים אשר להם למעלה מעלה ובשנטהרים יעורר הלבנינות ההוא ויתקשרו יחד ובהתקשרו ינוחו מרתיחת הדינים על כן אין קפידה בשום פועל לבטלה בטיפת שכבת זרע שמעלין על החוטא כהורג נפשות ומזה יובן למשכילים טעם הזווג בלילי שבת ואין כאן מקום דרוש זה:[i] offerings must be eaten in a holy place and ordinary sacred offerings in a place of purity, etc. Therefore, the pure priest who purifies the bride and cleanses her for her husband[A] eats of the offering because he takes the first portion from the individual, and his share is bestowed upon him along with her maidens.

If there is no righteous person in the land, the community must perform repentance and prayer, and the divine attributes will be unified through the merit of the many, tempering the judgment. Therefore, I warned in my "Illuminators of Dawn" about gathering the perfect ones and many others to entreat the Lord before daybreak. How careful the sage the ARI was about this! In conclusion, the essential sweetening of judgments depends solely on the unification of Malkhut and the entry of Yesod into Malkhut, which is the confluence of the powers of Gevurah, which are sweetened through Yesod. This should be the intention of one who prays for the sick and for averting any calamity. The specific intentions regarding the divine names with their vowel points and colors, and other details focused on this purpose, I will not commit to writing. The discerning one will understand these matters through the principles and keys already entrusted to him.

The sweetening of judgments occurs through the unification of Yesod with Malkhut, for Yesod contains the secret of the supernal whiteness manifested in the masculine, while the feminine emanates redness. Then the judgments draw close to the mercies, and the mercies flow with great strength until they overpower the judgments and subdue them, causing them to be whitened.[B] It is known that the harsh holy judgments possess whiteness in their highest roots, and when they are purified, that whiteness is awakened and they become bound together. When they are bound, they rest from the intensity of the judgments. Therefore, there is no concern about any

[A] Or: "Therefore, the pure priest who removes sin from the bride and purifies her for her husband" — The Hebrew מחטא more specifically means 'to remove sin' rather than just 'purify,' which captures the specific ritual function being described and preserves the distinction between מחטא and מטהרה.

[B] Or: "and then they are transformed to whiteness" — This alternate translation better captures the transformative process described in the Kabbalistic concept of 'whitening' judgments, emphasizing the change of state rather than just coloration.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First Discourse, Chapter 30 — This reference expands the earlier discussion about Torah's healing properties by explaining its mechanism through Kabbalistic imagery of the 'breasts' (right and left sides of mercy and judgment) flowing divine energy. | Cf. Zohar, act being in vain, such as a drop of seed, for which the sinner is considered as if he had killed souls. From this, the wise will understand the reason for marital union on Sabbath nights, but this is not the place to explore this topic. 70R

פרק י״ד

Chapter 14

נקודת המ׳ שהיא דינים חזקים[i] היא בית קבול לנקודת הזכר שהם חסדים ונקודה זו שבנקבה נקראת נקודת ציון[ii] שהיא הבחינה המשתווה להיות הדינים והחסדים מציאות אחד וענין א׳ ואין לדינים שום מציאות להתמתקם אלא מתוך נקודה זו שהיא נקודת ההשואה אשר אל החסד ואל הגבורה יחד במציאות הגבורות הקשות אשר בנקבה כי בחינת ב׳ זרועות יש להם דרך הכרעה אחרת ומי החסדים עליונים מטהרים קומת

The point of Malkhut, which embodies strong judgments,[A] serves as a receptacle for the masculine point, which embodies mercies. This point within the feminine is called "the point of Zion,"[B] representing the balancing dimension where judgments and mercies become a single reality and unified matter. The judgments have no means to be sweetened except through this point,[C] which is the point of equilibrium between Chesed and Gevurah[1] together, working within the harsh powers that exist in the feminine. The two arms (representing divine attributes) have a different way of mediation, while the upper waters of mercy purify the structure of the feminine, which corresponds to the letters of 5R 10R

[A] Or: "The point of Malkhut, which contains powerful judgments" — The Hebrew term 'dinim' (judgments) often refers to restrictive divine forces in Kabbalah, and 'contains' might be a more literal translation than 'embodies,' though both capture the essential meaning.

[B] Or: "the point of Tzion" — While 'Zion' is the common English spelling, 'Tzion' more accurately represents the Hebrew pronunciation and maintains consistency with other transliterations of Hebrew terms with the tzadi letter.

[C] Or: "The judgments have no existence by which they can be sweetened except through this point" — This translation better captures the nuance of 'metzi'ut' (existence/reality) in the original text, emphasizing that the judgments literally cannot exist in a sweetened state except through this point.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'the middle pillar' where opposing divine forces are harmonized. While typically associated with Tiferet, here the author is describing a similar balancing function within Malkhut itself.

Parashat Terumah — The author is drawing upon classic Zoharic imagery of divine unification through righteous actions, especially the metaphor of the bundle of myrrh between the breasts from Song of Songs, which the Zohar interprets as the Divine Presence being adorned through Torah study. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author builds on the Tikkunei Zohar's framework of mitigating harsh cosmic judgments through proper spiritual intentions that unite Yesod (masculine) and Malkhut (feminine) divine attributes. | Cf. Song of Songs 1:13 — The author uses this biblical verse as interpreted in kabbalistic tradition to illustrate how the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) is adorned through Torah study, which creates the 'breasts' (channels of divine flow) that sustain the world. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The reference to whiteness (masculine) and redness (feminine) echoes fundamental kabbalistic color symbolism from early mystical texts, where white represents mercy/male and red represents judgment/female.

[i] The letter Mem here is an abbreviation for Malkhut, the tenth and lowest sefirah, which represents the divine feminine and is associated with judgment in Kabbalistic thought.

[ii] In Kabbalah, 'the point of Zion' represents a cosmic focal point where divine forces converge and balance, rather than just the geographical Jerusalem.

15 הנקבה שהם אותיות מקוה כי
סוד חמשה נקודות דהיינו סוד
חמש גבורות[i] חמשה אשות בסוד
אשה הנכנסת במים במי מקוה
העליונים הממתקים הדינים
20 וסודם הם מ׳ סאה[ii] י׳ היא
נקודה אמצעית ומ׳ סאה לד׳
צדדין הם סוד מים ודאי הם מצד
הבינה הנקרא מים דהיינו חמשים
בכלל הנקודה האמצעית שהיא
25 במל׳ ומיד היא מאירה הארה
גדולה ואבריה מתקנים תקון
גדול והוא משבח אותה בתקוניה
וויופי אבריה וא״ס מאיר ע״י
כתר דרך החכמה ע״י התפשטות
30 הדעת בסוד היסוד המעורר
אל הגן דהיינו סוד הפעולות
הספירות הנקביות והמתפלל
יכוין לעורר סוד רוח החיים
שהם ד׳ הנהגות הויה מצד הבינה
35 או י׳ הנהגות דהויה במלוי
אלפין מצד החכמה שאלו הם
חיים משולחים בתוך הספירות
להנהגתם בסוד אדם כי יקריב
וזהו סוד אני ישנה ולבי ער
40 דהיינו התעוררות החיים ממונה
עליה להנהיגה והבחינה תחתונה
שהיא אולת אהבה פי׳ יסורין
של אהבה מתראה לה ת״ת מצד
החסד ואפי׳ בקור בעלמא
45 מקל חוליה אחת מס׳ בחוליה.
בסוד ו״ק[iii] והבחינה עליונה

"mikveh."[A] The mystery of the five points—that is, the five powers of Gevurah, the five fires—exists in the concept of "woman" entering the waters[B] of the supernal mikveh that sweeten judgments. 15R

Their secret is forty se'ah: the Yod represents the central point, and forty se'ah in four directions[1] represent the mystery of waters, which come from Binah, called "waters"—that is, fifty in total, including the central point which is in Malkhut. Immediately she shines with great illumination, her limbs being perfectly rectified, and He praises her for her rectifications and the beauty of her limbs. The Infinite Light (Ein Sof) shines through Keter via the path of Chokhmah, through the expansion of Da'at in the mystery of Yesod, which awakens the Garden—namely, the mystery of feminine sefirot operations. 20R 25R 30R

The one who prays should intend to awaken the mystery of the spirit of life, which consists of either the four manifestations of the divine name from Binah, or the ten manifestations of the divine name spelled with Alefs from Chokhmah, for these are the lives dispatched within the sefirot to govern them, in the mystery of "when a person offers a sacrifice." This is the secret of "I sleep but my heart is awake"—meaning the awakening of life appointed over her to guide her. 35R 40R

The lower aspect, which is "foolishness of love" (meaning afflictions of love), appears to her as Tiferet from the side of Chesed, and even the slightest visitation alleviates her sickness, reducing one part out of sixty of her illness.[2] This operates through the mystery of the six extremities. And when the higher 45R

[A] Or: "and the waters of supernal mercies purify the stature of the feminine, which are the letters of "mikveh."" — This translation more literally follows the Hebrew word order and conveys that the letters themselves constitute 'mikveh' rather than merely corresponding to it.

[B] Or: "in the mystery of a woman immersing in water" — The term 'sod' literally means 'secret' or 'mystery' rather than 'concept,' and 'immersing' more specifically captures the ritual action implied than 'entering.'

[1] This cosmological arrangement (40 measures in four directions plus a central point) creates a structure corresponding to the 50 Gates of Understanding associated with Binah, illustrating how ritual requirements often reflect higher metaphysical structures in Kabbalah.

[2] The ratio of 1:60 is significant in Jewish law as the minimum proportion that renders something nullified (batel). Here it's applied mystically to the alleviation of suffering.

[i] The 'five Gevurot' (powers of judgment) correspond to the five final letters in Hebrew (מנצפ״ך) and represent different aspects of divine restriction necessary for creation.

[ii] Forty se'ah is the minimum amount of water required for a valid mikveh (ritual bath) according to Jewish law. Here it's being interpreted kabbalistically as representing cosmic structures.

[iii] The abbreviation ו״ק (Vav Ketzavot) refers to the 'six extremities' or directions (north, south, east, west, up, down), which correspond to the six lower sefirot from Chesed to Yesod.

שמתראה עליה אור החסד בזה מקל מאותה בחינה שהיא א׳ מס׳ בחינותיה הדין מעליה דכד עיינין תתאין מסתכלאן בעינא דאשגחותא נהירין. כי אברהם כח החסד בא בימים עליונים סוד ג׳ עליונות ונכללו בו והוא בהם וזה סוד קריבת ימיהם של צדיקים להתעלם בתמימות המיתה העליונה שהיא הצנע בקדש. וכל הקדמות אלו באו מכוונים בסדר תפלת חולים הן בג׳ מזמורים שלפניה הן בסדר התפלה והפסוקים הנמשכים אחריה. כשתדקדק בפנימיות אמריה כי נעמו: [i]

aspect of the light of Chesed appears to her, it alleviates from that aspect, which is one of her sixty aspects, removing judgment from her, for when the lower eyes gaze upon the eye of providence, they shine. For Abraham, the power of Chesed, "advanced in days" into the higher realms—the mystery of the three supreme attributes—and they were included in him, and he in them. This is the secret of the proximity of the days of the righteous, who delight in the perfection of the supernal death, which is concealed in holiness.

All these principles are aligned in the order of the prayer for the sick, both in the three psalms that precede it and in the order of the prayer and verses that follow it. When you examine the inner dimensions of its words, you will find them pleasant.

פרק ט״ו

Chapter 15

אמירת הוידוי לחולה הרבה פעמים מקל מעליו החולי יען שבזה ממתק כחות הדינים שעליו שלהיות שמדת הדין מתוחה עליו מאמת חטאיו שאין יסורין בלא עון צריך לזבוח עצמו לפייס מדת הדין בשבירת לבו ורוחו בקרבו כי זבח זה הוא למדת הדין כדכתיב זבחי אלהים רוח נשברה[ii] וכן כתיב גם עתה נאום ה׳ שובו עדי בכל לבבכם

Reciting confession (vidui) for the sick person often alleviates their illness because it sweetens the forces of judgment affecting them.[1] Since the attribute of judgment is extended over them due to their sins—for there is no suffering without sin—they must sacrifice themselves to appease the attribute of judgment by breaking their heart and spirit within them. This sacrifice is for the attribute of judgment, as it is written, "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit" (Psalms 51:19), and it is also written, "Even now, declares the LORD, return to Me with all your heart,

[1] The Hebrew term 'ממתק כחות הדינים' refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgments,' which involves transforming harsh divine judgments into mercy through specific spiritual actions. This is not merely alleviating suffering but transforming its spiritual source.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, 'Siftei Renanot,' Chapter 3 — This passage develops ideas introduced earlier in the text about how the feminine aspects of divinity (Malkhut) can be elevated and purified through proper spiritual practice, particularly through the unification of masculine and feminine divine attributes. | Cf. Zohar, Parshat Pinchas, 220a — This passage draws directly on Zoharic conceptions of how harsh judgments are transformed through the 'waters' of divine mercy, using the metaphor of ritual immersion (mikveh) to describe this cosmic process. | Cf. Song of Songs 5:2 — The author interprets this verse kabbalistically as referring to Malkhut (the Divine Feminine) being guided by higher spiritual forces even when appearing dormant, reinforcing the text's theme of the relationship between higher and lower divine realms. | Cf. Genesis 24:1 — The text reinterprets the biblical description of Abraham as 'advanced in days' (בא בימים) in kabbalistic terms, suggesting that Abraham (representing the divine attribute of Chesed/Kindness) has access to higher spiritual realms (the 'upper days'). | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The text employs the concept of the six extremities or directions (״וק—an abbreviation for קצוות ו) from early Jewish mystical cosmology, representing the six lower sefirot that structure manifest reality.

[ii] This quote from Psalms 51:19 establishes a fundamental connection between confession, brokenness of heart, and spiritual sacrifice. The text uses this verse to show that the broken spirit resulting from sincere confession serves as a sacrifice to God, particularly appeasing the attribute of divine judgment.

בצום ובכי ומספד ובאמירת
הודוי נשבר לבו בקרבו ועוד
כי באמרם לו שיתן דעתו על
15 ענייניו אם הלוה או הפקיד אצל
אחרים או אחרים הלוו לו או
הפקידו אצלו ובזה מתקן מה
שבינו לבין חבירו והודוי מה
שבינו לבין המקום כדאמרו
20 בזהר בסוד הודוי שבתפלה ובזה
עושה נייחא לרוגז מדת הדין
ובזה מקל מעליו חוליו. ועוד
זוהמת ומים שופכים המתמצים
למטה באמירת הודוי הוא
25 חלק החצונים[i] שמחלק ס״מ
העונות החם על כחות חוליו
ונוטל לחלקו השופכין ההן
ועוד שבוידוי מסיר מעליו כל
קטיגור ואין מתעסק בדינו אלא
30 הקב״ה[ii] ואם תזכור או כי תשית
לבך אל מה שכתבתי בהערה
במעירי שחר בסוד התשובה
והודוי ולמה תקנוהו באלפא
ביתא תדע נאמנה שבאמירת
35 הודוי בכוונה מעורר הרחמים
העליונים מרישא איוורא
ומי״ג תקוני דיקנא[iii] הרוחצים with fasting, weeping, and mourning"[1] (Joel 2:12).

When reciting the confession, one's heart is broken within, and furthermore, when they advise the sick person to consider their affairs—whether they 15R have loaned or deposited items with others, or others have loaned to or deposited with them—this rectifies matters between the person and their fellow.[2] The confession itself rectifies matters between the person and God, as explained in the Zohar regarding 20R the mystery of confession in prayer. This brings relief to the wrath of the attribute of judgment and thereby alleviates the person's illness. Moreover, the impurity and "poured waters" that are extracted below through the recitation of confession become 25R the portion of the external forces. Samael distributes these sins among the forces causing the illness and takes these "pourings" as his share.[A] Additionally, through confession, one removes all accusers, so that only the Holy One, blessed be He, deals with their 30R judgment.

If you recall or set your heart to what I wrote in the note in my "Illuminators of Dawn"[3] regarding the mystery of repentance and confession, and why the Sages established it in alphabetical order, you 35R will surely know that reciting the confession with proper intention awakens the supernal mercies from [A] Or: "Furthermore, the impurity and effluent waters that are extracted downward through confession become the portion of the external forces, as Samael distributes those sins among the forces causing illness and takes those effluents as his share." — This alternate translation uses 'effluent waters' rather than 'poured waters' to better capture the sense of impurities being extracted and flowing downward. It also simplifies some of the phrasing while maintaining the meaning.

[1] The text quotes Joel 2:12 to establish that true repentance requires both internal contrition (broken heart) and external expressions (fasting, weeping, mourning). This supports the emphasis on tears during confession.

[2] The text distinguishes between two types of rectification: between the person and other people (through addressing financial and material obligations), and between the person and God (through confession). This follows the rabbinic categorization of sins requiring different forms of atonement.

[3] This refers to another work by the author, Aaron Berechia of Modena, titled 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), which apparently included explanations about confession and repentance.

[i] This striking metaphor describes confession as extracting spiritual impurity (zohamah) from the person in the form of 'poured waters' that are then claimed by external forces (chitzonim). This reflects the kabbalistic concept that confession not only acknowledges sin but physically removes it from the person.

[ii] This reflects the theological concept that sincere confession removes spiritual prosecutors/accusers (kategor), leaving only God to judge the person directly. This is considered a favorable outcome since divine mercy can then operate without opposition from negative spiritual forces.

[iii] These are advanced kabbalistic concepts referring to the 'White Head' (associated with Keter/Crown, the highest divine emanation) and the 'Thirteen Rectifications of the Holy Beard' (associated with the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy from Exodus 34:6-7). The text claims that proper confession activates these highest sources of divine mercy.

ומעבירים הדין מעליו בכמה
מיני סליחה וכפרה אשר בהם
40 כפי העת והצורך והשעה והיודע
סוד הדמעות[i] ידע ויבין טעם
למה רוב החולים המורידים
דמעות בודויהם הם נכתבים
לחיים וע״ש מזה ומה טוב
45 שלפחות אותו שמוודה החולה
שידע טעם הדבר כי גם ברכות
יעטה מורה זה אל החולה ובני
רשף יגביהו מעליו ואולי גם
לזה כוונו קדמונינו והנהיגו
50 ליאמר על ידי סרסור מלבד
הטעמים שכתבנו בזה במאמר
ראשון ובפרט כשיאמר בעת
שליטת החסד כאשר הוכחתי
במאמר ראשון פרק י׳. ועוד
55 נודע כי ההתעוררות העולה
מהצדיקים הוא מכניע היצר
הרע וחרטת העבירות ומעשה
הטוב שהוא סוד התשובה שהוא
פרטים על כל חטא וזהו סוד
60 עבירות הנעשות בזכיות לשב
מאהבה[ii] ובזה מתמתק הגבורה
והשכינה מתעלים בסוד קומה
שלמטה בתגבורת החסדים
והכנעת הדינים ומשם דבקה
65 בבינה שהיא נועם ה׳. וכמו
שהשוחט עולה צריך שתהיה

the White Head and from the Thirteen Rectifications of the Holy Beard,[1] which wash away and remove judgment through various forms of forgiveness and atonement according to the time, need, and hour. 40R

One who knows the mystery of tears will understand why most sick people who shed tears during their confessions are inscribed for life—see there for more on this. How good it would be if at least the person who guides the sick person in confession would know the reason for this, as the guide also brings blessings upon the sick person, and "the sons of the flame" (harmful forces) are lifted from them. Perhaps our ancestors also intended this when they instituted that confession be recited through an intermediary, besides the reasons we wrote about in the first discourse, particularly when recited during the time when the attribute of Loving-kindness (Chesed) dominates, as I proved in chapter 10 of the first discourse. 45R 50R 55R

It is also known that the spiritual awakening that arises from the righteous subdues the evil inclination, creates remorse for transgressions, and produces good deeds, which is the essence of repentance—addressing each sin in detail.[A] This is the mystery of how transgressions are transformed into merits for one who repents out of love.[2] Through this, the attribute of Strength (Gevurah) is sweetened, and the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) is elevated in the mystery of the Lower Structure[B3] through the intensification of kindnesses 60R 65R

[A] Or: "It is also known that the awakening that rises from the righteous ones subdues the evil inclination, brings remorse for transgressions, and [inspires] good deeds, which is the secret of repentance—detailing each sin individually." — This alternative more literally translates 'סוד התשובה' as 'secret of repentance' rather than 'essence of repentance,' preserving the mystical connotation of the original. It also more directly renders the Hebrew structure regarding the individual accounting of sins.

[B] Or: "through the mystery of the Lower Stature with the strengthening of mercies and the

[1] These are technical kabbalistic terms referring to the highest sources of divine mercy in the sefirotic system. The 'White Head' refers to Atik Yomin (Ancient of Days), and the 'Thirteen Rectifications of the Beard' correspond to the thirteen channels through which divine mercy flows into creation.

[2] This references the Talmudic concept (Yoma 86b) that repentance motivated by love of God (rather than fear of punishment) has the power to transform past sins into merits. The author integrates this rabbinic concept into his kabbalistic framework.

[3] The text describes a complex kabbalistic process where confession and repentance elevate the

[i] The 'mystery of tears' refers to the kabbalistic understanding that tears have special spiritual power, particularly in breaking divine decrees. This connection between physical tears and spiritual outcomes is a recurring theme in Jewish mystical literature.

[ii] This references the Talmudic concept (Yoma 86b) that one who repents out of love (rather than fear) has their sins transformed into merits. The text integrates this rabbinic idea into its kabbalistic framework of cosmic transformation.

מחשבתו לשם ששה דברים[i] לשם
הזבח לשם זובח ושהזבח
להקב״ה ושיקטירו לאישים
ושהקטרתו לריח ושהריח זה
נחת רוח לפני ה׳. כדרך הזה
לב אדם יחשוב דרכו סמוך לעת
פקידת רוחו ביד ה׳ ועל כן
טוב להזכיר עליו קצת מפסוקי
שחיטת העולה והחטאת. יראה
לי שטוב לחולה להרגיל עצמו
ובפרט אם הוא מסוכן חס ושלום
סדר הודוי שהיה אומר המביא
קרבן בעת שהיה סומך ידו על
ראשו שהוא חטאתי עויתי פשעתי
ועשיתי כך וכך והנה עתה חזרתי
בתשובה לפניך ויסורי גופי
יהיו כפרת נפשי ומרוק אותם
ברחמיך הרבים אך לא על ידי
יסורים והטוב בעיניך עשה.
וזהו ודוי הסומך אשר הביאו
הרמב״ם בפרק ב׳ מהלכות
מעשה הקרבנות:[ii]

and the subjugation of judgments, and from there it cleaves to Understanding (Binah), which is "the pleasantness of the LORD."[A]

Just as one who slaughters a burnt offering must have six intentions: for the sake of the sacrifice, for the sake of the one who sacrifices, that the sacrifice is for the Holy One, blessed be He, that it will be offered to the fires, that its offering is for a pleasing scent, and that this scent is a satisfaction before the LORD—in this manner should a person's heart contemplate its path as the time approaches for their spirit to be entrusted to the hand of the LORD. Therefore, it is good to recite for them some verses about the slaughtering of burnt offerings and sin offerings. 70R 75R 80R

It seems to me that it is beneficial for the sick person to accustom themselves, especially if they are in danger, God forbid, to the order of confession that was recited by one bringing a sacrifice when placing their hand upon its head: "I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have rebelled, and I have done such and such. Now I have returned in repentance before You. May the sufferings of my body be an atonement 85R subjugation of judgments, and from there it adheres to Binah, which is "the pleasantness of the LORD."" — This alternative renders 'קומה שלמטה' as 'Lower Stature' rather than 'Lower Structure,' which may better reflect the kabbalistic concept of divine anthropomorphism. It also uses 'mercies' for 'חסדים' and 'adheres' for 'דבקה,' which are slightly more literal translations.

[A] Or: "through the mystery of the Lower Stature with the strengthening of mercies and the subjugation of judgments, and from there it adheres to Binah, which is "the pleasantness of the LORD."" — This alternative renders 'קומה שלמטה' as 'Lower Stature' rather than 'Lower Structure,' which may better reflect the kabbalistic concept of divine anthropomorphism. It also uses 'mercies' for 'חסדים' and 'adheres' for 'דבקה,' which are slightly more literal translations.

Divine Presence (Shekhinah) by intensifying divine kindness and subjugating judgment. This reflects the author's view that human spiritual actions have cosmic effects on divine attributes.

[i] The six intentions required when slaughtering a sacrifice are drawn from the Mishnah (Zevachim 4:6). The text applies this Temple ritual framework to the deathbed confession, creating a parallel between physical sacrifice and spiritual surrender.

[ii] Cf. Psalms 51:19 — This verse is cited to establish the connection between confession, brokenness of heart, and spiritual sacrifice. It provides biblical authority for the concept that confession with a broken spirit serves as a form of sacrifice acceptable to God. | Cf. Joel 2:12 — This verse is used to establish that true repentance requires wholehearted return to God with external signs of contrition. | Cf. Zohar — The text refers to Zoharic teachings about confession's mystical function in prayer, indicating that confession operates on multiple levels—not just as a personal acknowledgment of sin but as a cosmic process affecting divine attributes. | Cf. The White Head (reisha hivra) — This references the kabbalistic concept of Atik Yomin/Ancient of Days, representing the highest level of divine mercy. The passage suggests that proper confession activates this supreme source of compassion. | Cf. Thirteen Rectifications of the Holy Beard — These represent the thirteen channels of divine mercy in Kabbalistic thought, corresponding to the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy in Exodus 34:6-7. The passage teaches that confession activates these channels of forgiveness. | Cf. Maimonides, Laws of Sacrificial Procedures, Chapter 2 — The author cites Maimonides as an authoritative source for the traditional confession formula used when bringing sacrifices, drawing a parallel between Temple sacrifice and the sick person's confession. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar for my soul, and may You purify them through Your abundant mercies, but not through sufferings, and do what is good in Your eyes." This is the confession of the one who leans [on the sacrifice], as brought by Maimonides in chapter 2 of the Laws of Sacrificial Procedures. 90R 95R

פרק ט״ז

Chapter 16

שבטי יה אשר הם עדות לישראל ביניהם אמרו אבל אשמים אנחנו על אחינו וגומר למדנו בזה להתוודות בעת צרה מפני שהצרה בודוי נאותה להמשיך הדין למטה ולמתק המדה העליונה שאינה מאירה מחמת החטא ובודוי העון עובר והיחוד הוה.[i] ונמצא בדברי החכם כי עקר שבירת הקליפות הוא על ידי הודוי ולכן כתיב כי יחטא ואשם והתודה ובזה פורש החצוני מן הקדושה בסוד מים אחרונים ושפך הדשן והמותר לשעיר המשתלח[ii] ובן בכל יום הכהן תורם תרומת הדשן תחלה קודם כל תקון לא פחות מקומץ כי בלילה ניתן להם

The tribes of the LORD, which are a testimony to Israel,[1] said among themselves, "But we are guilty concerning our brother," etc. From this we learn to confess in times of trouble because confession is appropriate during distress to draw judgment downward and to sweeten the supernal attribute[2] which does not shine due to sin. Through confession, the iniquity passes away and unification occurs. It is found in the words of the Sage that the essential breaking of the shells[A] (negative forces) is accomplished through confession, and therefore it is written, "When he sins and becomes guilty, he shall confess." Through this, the external force separates from holiness—this is the mystery of the "final waters"[3] (hand washing after meals), the removal of ashes, and the portion sent to the scapegoat. 5R 10R 15R

Similarly, each day the priest would remove a portion of ashes first, before any other ritual, no

[A] Or: "the primary shattering of the kelipot" — The term 'kelipot' is a technical kabbalistic term referring to negative spiritual forces or 'husks' that conceal divinity. While 'shells' is accurate, keeping the technical term 'kelipot' might be preferable in a scholarly translation focused on kabbalistic concepts.

[1] This refers to Genesis 42:21, where Joseph's brothers admit their guilt regarding their treatment of Joseph. The author uses this as a biblical precedent for confession during times of distress.

[2] These are technical kabbalistic concepts. 'Drawing judgment downward' means bringing divine severity into the lower worlds where it can be transformed. 'Sweetening' (mituk) refers to transforming harsh judgment into mercy through ritual actions.

[3] Mayim achronim refers to the ritual hand washing performed after meals, before the grace after meals. In kabbalistic thought, it serves to remove the 'portion' that belongs to the forces of impurity, similar to confession removing sin.

(Illuminators of Dawn) — The author refers to his own work 'Me'irei Shachar' which apparently contains additional explanations about confession and repentance. This indicates the author's intellectual production and his integration of this current text with his broader corpus.

[i] This phrase encapsulates a key kabbalistic understanding of confession: it not only removes sin but actively creates divine unification (yichud), connecting lower and higher worlds. The term 'yichud' specifically refers to the unification of divine masculine and feminine principles (YHVH and Shekhinah).

[ii] The author creates a parallel between confession and three Temple/ritual practices: mayim achronim (final water washing after meals), removal of ashes, and the scapegoat ritual. All three involve removing impurity or excess from sacred contexts, metaphorically representing how confession separates negative spiritual forces from holiness.

חלק מקומץ עליון במקום
אחיזתם ועתה מסיר אחיזתם
דינים אלו מהמזבח אשר לפני
ה׳ אותם שאינם בכלל השלום
וההכרעה לכן היה לובש בגדים
פחותים בעבודה זאת[i] ומי שזכה
בתרומת הדשן היה זוכה לתקן
המערכה ושני גזירי עצים כיון
שזכה לתקנה מדיניה הפגומים
היה עולה שלשה מדרגות
ודוגמא לעבודה הזאת היה
הדשן שצוברים בתפוח ומשם
מוצאים אותו חוץ לירושלים
במקום ששורפין פרים הנשרפים
וגם עבודה זו היתה בבגדים
פחותים והודוי שהיה נאמר
על הקרבן בכח הסמיכה בכל
כחו עליו בזה היה לבוש נשמת
החוטא נקרב שכן פני אדם
מתלבש בשאר הפנים[ii] ולכן
קבלת הדם להקריב על גבי
המזבח. ומשם ואילך היה על ידי
הכהן שכן מיכאל עומד ומקריב
נשמות הצדיקים.[iii] ובלבד
מה שהוכחנו בשפה ברורה
במאמר ראשון פרק י״ב וט״ו
כי טוב לחולה להתודות בבקר.
עוד יש ראיה לזה במכילתא
דאמרי׳ שם. מלמד שתפלתן
של צדיקים נשמעת בבקר בקרו
של אברהם בקרו של יעקב
בקרו של משה בקרו של יהושע
וכו׳ והובא בילקוט נבואים
ברמז י״ג על פסוק היה זרועם

less than a handful, because during the night they (external forces) are given a portion from the supernal handful at their point of attachment. Now he removes the attachment of these judgments from the altar before the LORD—those that are not included in peace and balance. Therefore, he would wear lesser garments[A] for this service. And whoever merited the removal of ashes would also merit arranging the altar and the two pieces of wood. Since he merited to repair it from its damaged judgments, he would ascend three steps.

A parallel to this service was the ashes accumulated on the "apple" (of the altar),[1] which were then taken outside Jerusalem to the place where the burned bulls were burned. This service too was performed in lesser garments. The confession that was recited over the sacrifice through forceful leaning with all one's strength—through this the soul of the sinner was clothed and brought near, just as the human face (of the divine chariot) clothes itself in the other faces. Therefore, the blood was received to be offered upon the altar, and from that point forward it was performed by the priest, just as Michael stands and offers the souls of the righteous.

We have already proven clearly in the first discourse, chapters 12 and 15, that it is good for the sick person to confess in the morning. There is further evidence for this in the Mekhilta, where it says: "This teaches that the prayers of the righteous are heard in the morning—the morning of Abraham, the morning of Jacob, the morning of Moses, the morning of Joshua," etc. This is cited in Yalkut Nevi'im, hint 13, on the verse "Be their arm every morning," and in the Pesikta it is interpreted regarding those

[A] Or: "wear worn garments" — The term might refer specifically to worn or older garments rather than garments of lesser quality or importance. This distinction matters in the ritual context of the Temple service.

[1] The 'apple' (tapuach) refers to a mound at the center of the altar where ashes would accumulate. This Temple ritual is presented as a model for the spiritual mechanics of confession.

[i] In the Temple service, the priest would wear simpler garments for the removal of ashes, symbolizing engagement with the less spiritually elevated aspects of the service. This parallels the spiritual mechanics of confession, which deals with the 'lower' aspects of existence (sin and impurity) in order to elevate them.

[ii] This references Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah), where the human face represents the highest aspect that encompasses the other faces (lion, ox, eagle). Similarly, in the confession ritual, the human soul encompasses and elevates all aspects of creation affected by sin.

[iii] This refers to the rabbinic tradition that the angel Michael serves as the heavenly High Priest who offers the souls of the righteous on the celestial altar. This creates a parallel between earthly confession and heavenly atonement.

לבקרים ובפסיקתא פירשוהו
על אותם שמשלימים בכל בקר
ובקר לבקש רחמים על הישועה
ונתאבלו על ציון כאשר הובא
בילקוט ירמיהו רמז שס״ד:
וכבר הערנו לב הנרדמים קרא
נא אחי מזה בסוף מעירי שחר
שלנו והעידו גורי האר״י עליו
שהיה אומר בלילי אשמורות עם
הצבור הכל מלה במלה והזהירו
שם מאד לומר סדר חורבן הבית
בכל לילה קודם הלימוד ואמרו
שכן. היה עושה הוא בכונה
גדולה והיה בוכה בו בכל
לילה. וכל הדברים והמזמורים
שקבלנו מפי מגידי אמת וקצת
מהם ראינו בקונטרסיו הגם
שבא לידנו הלכתא בלא טעמא
הכל הכללנו אותם בדברינו
שם ועשינו להם סמוכות כאשר
שת אלהים בפינו. ונמצא כתוב
בשמו שראוי לאדם לכוין אחר
חצות בפסוק פקח עיניך וראה
שוממותינו ולכוין בתיבת פקח
בגימטרא שם הו״יה אהיה במלוי
אלפין שהוא קפ״ח[i] הרי שניהם
בגימטריא פקח ותאיר בהם מן
שם אהיה דיודין בגימטריא עיניך
קס״א וזה מועיל מאד אל האדם.
ובין המצרים טוב להתאבל
על החרבן אחר חצות ולבכות
כמו חצי שעה ויועיל לנפש.
עוד בילקוט ברמז שס״ה נראה
שהמתים מדיינים זה עם זה אחר
מיתתן לפני שופט צדק[ii] כאשר who complete their prayers every morning seeking mercy for salvation, and who mourned for Zion, as is brought in Yalkut Jeremiah, hint 364. 55R

We have already awakened the hearts of those who slumber—please read, my brother, from the end of our "Me'irei Shachar"[1] (Dawn Illuminators). The disciples of the ARI testified about him that he would recite the midnight vigils with the 60R congregation, word for word, and they emphasized there the importance of reciting the order of the destruction of the Temple every nig[2]ht before study. They said that he did this with great intention and would weep over it every night. All the words and 65R psalms that we received from reliable sources, some of which we saw in his pamphlets—even though the laws came to us without their reasons—we have included all of them in our words there and provided support for them as God placed in our mouths. 70R

It is found written in his name that it is proper for a person to focus after midnight on the verse "Open Your eyes and see our desolations," and to concentrate on the word "pakach" (open), which has the numerical value of the divine names YHVH and Ehyeh 75R with the alef filling,[3] which is 188—both together equal the numerical value of "pakach." And "illuminate them" with the divine name Ehyeh with the yod filling, which has the numerical value of "einekha" (Your eyes), 161. This is very beneficial for a person. 80R And during the Three Weeks[4] (between the 17th of Tammuz and the 9th of Av), it is good to mourn over the destruction after midnight and to weep for about half an hour, which will benefit the soul.

Further, in Yalkut, hint 365, it appears that the 85R dead argue with each other after their death before the Righteous Judge, as we proved in the second

[1] This appears to be a prayer collection or treatise composed by the author, Aaron Berechia of Modena, containing liturgical material for dawn prayers, including confessional prayers.

[2] This refers to the practice of Tikkun Chatzot, the midnight lamentation over the destruction of the Temple, which was emphasized in Lurianic Kabbalah as a significant spiritual practice.

[3] This refers to spelling divine names with specific letter 'fillings' (milui), a kabbalistic practice that affects the name's numerical value and spiritual potency. 'Alef filling' means using the letter alef in the expanded spelling of the divine name.

[4] The period between the 17th of Tammuz and the 9th of Av, commemorating the events leading to the destruction of both Temples. This is a time of mourning in the Jewish calendar.

[i] This illustrates the kabbalistic practice of using gematria (numerical values of Hebrew letters) to create correspondences between words and divine names. The numerical value of the word 'pakach' (open) is equated with the combined value of two divine names written with specific letter fillings, creating a spiritual mechanism for 'opening' divine mercy.

[ii] This reflects the Jewish belief that judgment continues after death and that souls may have

הוכחנו במאמר שני כי כתוב
שם שאמר אבנר לישראל אחר
שתפסו ליואב בידיו שהיו ישראל
מפייסים לפניו שלא יהרוג אותו
אחר שהכהו וכמת היה תחת ידו
מכח גבורתו כדאמרי׳ אמר רבי
יוסי נוח לכל אדם לזוז כותל
של שש מאות אמות מלזוז רגל
אחד של אבנר ואז אמר להם מה
אעשה שכבה את נרי. א״ל תדון
עמו לפני דיין האמת השליכו
אותו מידו ונפל זה חי וזה מת אם
בן לטובתו נתכוון דוד בצוותו
את שלמה בנו שלא ינקהו מן
המיתה פן חס ושלום יוריד את
שיבתו ביגון שאולה ליה עבד
ליה דלשקיל למטרפסיה בהאי
עלמא כנדרש אצלנו במקומו
והובא גם כן באגדת ירושלמי: [i] discourse. For it is written there that Abner said to Israel after they seized Joab in his hands—as Israel was appeasing him not to kill Joab after he had struck him and Joab was like a dead man under his hand due to Abner's strength—as they said: Rabbi Yosi said, "It is easier for any man to move a wall of six hundred cubits than to move one foot of Abner." Then Abner said to them, "What shall I do, for he has extinguished my lamp."[1] They said to him, "You will judge him before the True Judge." They cast Joab from Abner's hand, and one fell alive and the other dead. If so, David intended for Joab's benefit when he commanded his son Solomon not to let Joab go unpunished from death, lest, God forbid, Joab bring his gray head down to Sheol in sorrow. Rather, he ensured that Joab would receive his portion in this world,[A] as we have explained in its place, and as is also brought in the Jerusalem Aggadah.

פרק י״ז

Chapter 17

אשרי אדם שאמונת עתו

Blessed is the person whose faith is in the Torah,

[A] Or: "he acted to ensure Joab would take his sustenance in this world" — This Aramaic phrase is challenging to translate precisely. 'Matrapsya' can refer to sustenance or livelihood, but in this context it may specifically refer to receiving punishment in this world rather than the next. Either translation conveys the general meaning, but the nuance differs slightly.

[1] This is both literal (referring to death, as the soul is compared to a lamp) and figurative (referring to legacy and reputation), conveying Abner's complaint that Joab had attempted to end both his life and his honor.

disputes that require divine adjudication. This understanding provides additional motivation for proper confession before death, as unresolved matters may continue into the afterlife.

[i] Cf. Genesis 42:21 — The author uses this biblical example to establish confession as a spiritually effective response to trouble. The brothers' confession during their distress in Egypt serves as a paradigm for the spiritual efficacy of confession during times of trouble. | Cf. Leviticus 5:5 — The author quotes this verse to establish the biblical basis for confession as a mechanism for separating negative forces from holiness. In the ritual context, confession is portrayed as an essential component that precedes physical atonement. | Cf. Zohar — The author alludes to Zoharic teachings about confession's power to break the kelipot (shells/husks), portraying confession as a mystical act that has cosmic significance beyond personal atonement, affecting the balance of forces in higher worlds. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First Discourse, Chapters 12 and 15 — The author refers to his earlier chapters which provide more detailed explanations about the importance of morning confession for the sick. This self-reference indicates the work's internal coherence and the author's intention to build upon earlier material rather than repeat it. | Cf. Mekhilta d'Rabbi Ishmael — The author cites this midrash to support his recommendation for morning confession, building on the tradition that the morning is especially auspicious for prayer, with biblical examples of morning prayers being answered. | Cf. 2 Samuel 3:27-38 — This reference to the biblical story of Abner and Joab is used to illustrate how judgment continues after death, suggesting that confession is important not only for this world but also for judgment in the next world. The author uses this to emphasize the cosmic significance of proper confession.

בתורה[i] וכמו שכתוב וחרפה
לא נשא על קרובו כי ישכב
בשלום וממרחק יובא לחמו
כדתניא דבי אליהו כיון שבא
אדם למקרא למשנה ומ״ט הם
זנין ומפרנסים ומכלכלים אותו
עד שעה שהוא נכנס לבית עולמו.
ועליו אמר הכתוב והיה אמונת
עתך וגו׳ ובילמדנו פ׳ תשא
כתוב כל העוסק בתורה פרנסתו
מן התורה ומתעשר ומצליח.
פוק חזי דברי הרמב״ם על זה
סוף הלכות שמיטה ויובל. גם
כן בילמדנו דף נ״ג ע״ב אשרי
המלמד עצמו תורה ונותן ממונו
ללמד עצמו ובניו תורה. וכתוב
שם בפרשה קדושים דף ס״ב כל
מצות וחסד שאדם עושה דיו
לשעה שנפשו יוצאה ממנו לכן
כתיב כל עמל האדם לפיהו. הנה
כי לעת מצא צריך בוונה ותפלה
ועיין בפי׳ משלי להחכם אלשיך
דרוש יפה ונעים על עסק התורה
בפ׳ הט אזנך ושמע דברי חכמים
ותחלתו בדף קי״ח ואיכות
התורה עצמה שעסק האדם
בעולם הזה היא תשוש עם נפשו
בגילה עצמית בדדרשו על פסוק
ותגל יולדתך כי השפע שלה
תחכים לעוסק בה כאלו ילדו
והיא באורה ושמחה עמו והזהיר
האר״י לכוין בכל מקום בהזכרת
שם הויה באותיות יה״ו לזעיר
ובה׳ אחרונה לנוקביה[ii] שכולל

as it is written, “He does not bear reproach against his relative, for he will lie down in peace and his bread will be brought from afar.” As taught in the school of Elijah: Once a person has studied Scripture, Mishnah, and the forty-nine aspects of Torah interpretation,[1] these sustain and nourish him until the time he enters his eternal home. Of such a person Scripture says, “Faith in your times will be...” And in the Yelamdeinu commentary on Parashat Ki Tisa, it states: “Whoever engages in Torah study receives his livelihood from the Torah itself, becoming wealthy and prosperous.” Go and see the words of Maimonides on this topic at the end of the Laws of the Sabbatical and Jubilee Years.[2] Similarly, in Yelamdeinu page 53b: “Fortunate is one who teaches himself Torah and provides his money to teach himself and his children Torah.” And it is written there in Parashat Kedoshim, page 62: “All the commandments and acts of kindness that a person performs are sufficient for the moment when his soul departs from him,” which is why Scripture states, “All the labor of a person is for his mouth.”

Indeed, at the time of finding[3] [death], one needs proper intention and prayer. Examine the commentary on Proverbs by the sage Alshekh—a beautiful and pleasant exposition on Torah study in the section “Incline your ear and listen to the words of the wise,” beginning on page 118. The quality of the Torah itself that a person studies in this world brings his soul to inherent joy, as they interpreted the verse “and your mother who bore you will rejoice,” for the divine flow of Torah enlightens those who engage with it as if the Torah itself had given birth to them, and the Torah radiates light and rejoices with them.

[1] The Hebrew ‘ומ״ט’ (ve-M”T) refers to the 49 (mem-tet = 40+9) methods or aspects of Torah interpretation in rabbinic tradition, symbolically connected to the 49 levels of understanding.

[2] This refers to Maimonides’ famous conclusion to Hilkhot Shemitah ve-Yovel, where he states that anyone who dedicates themselves to divine service will have their needs provided for, just as the Levites were supported while serving in the Temple.

[3] The Hebrew phrase ‘לעת מצא’ (le-et matza) is from Psalm 32:6, traditionally interpreted as referring to the time of death. The term carries the double meaning of ‘finding’ (as in finding one’s final destiny) and ‘going forth’ (departing from life).

[i] This opening references Isaiah 33:6, “faith in your times shall be a strength of salvation,” applying it to Torah study as providing spiritual sustenance at the time of death.

[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic teaching of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the ARI) about proper intention when pronouncing the divine name. The first three letters (YHV) correspond to Zeir Anpin (the Lesser Countenance), while the final letter (H) corresponds to Nukvah (the feminine aspect of divinity).

הכל ממעלה למטה וגם באמצע
שהם הוי״ה ואדנו״ת משולבים
בסוד הקריאה והכתיבה ולזה
יכוין בפסוק פותח את ידיך לשני
יודי״ן כנודע והוא גם כן הזהיר
על שאלת המזונות בכל יום
בשומע תפלה להורות שבוטח
בה׳ והיודע לחשב ברמז ההויות
וסמיכות הפסוקים בנקודותיהם
ר״ת וס״ת ותוכי תיבות ושאר
כוונות שבאו בשאלת מזונות
הערוך במעירי שחר ואומר
אותם בכל יום מובטחים אנו
ברחמי שמים שלא יבא לעולם
לידי חוסר מזונות וכל שכן אם
יאמרם במקהלו״ת בגימטריא
עשרה[i] והיה מרגלא בפומיה
של החכם הנזכר זצ״ל שעקר
כוונת קביעות התורה וההשגה
תלוי בכוונה הזאת היינו שיכוין
לקשר נפשו ולהדביקה בשרשה
על ידי התורה כדי להשלים
אילן החיים ואדם העליון
ולתקנו[ii] כי זה תכלית בריאת
האדם ותכלית עסקו בתורה
וכן היה אומר כי אין דבר מונע
ההשגה כמו העצבות[iii] והיה
מזרז ג״כ לתלמידיו שיסתכלו
חמיד בשמים כי בזה יוסיף להם
טהרה והיה מזהיר מאד על
כוונת ברכות הנהנין. וכתוב
בילמדנו סוף פרשת ברכה
הצדיקים מברכים על כל דבר
ודבר שאוכלים ושותים ושרואין
וששומעין ולא בחייהם בלבד
אלא אפילו במיתתן מברכים
ומודים לפני הקב״ה שנאמר
יעלזו חסידים בכבוד וגו׳

The ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria) cautioned[1] to concentrate, whenever mentioning the Divine Name, on the letters Y-H-V as representing Zeir Anpin (the Lesser Countenance) and on the final H as representing its feminine counterpart, thus encompassing everything from above to below. This also applies to the center, where YHVH and ADNY are interwoven in the mystery of reading and writing. One should have this intention when reciting the verse "You open Your hand," focusing on the two Yods, as is known. He also emphasized requesting sustenance daily in the "Hear our prayer" blessing, demonstrating trust in God. Those who know how to calculate the divine names through hints, the connections between verses with their vowel points, acronyms, final letters, interior letters, and other kavanot (mystical intentions) that appear in the request for sustenance arranged in "Me'irei Shachar" (Illuminators of Dawn) and recite them daily—we are assured by the mercies of Heaven that they will never experience lack of sustenance, especially if recited in "congregations" (numerically equivalent to ten).

It was a common saying of the aforementioned sage, of blessed memory, that the essential intention of establishing Torah study and spiritual attainment depends on this intention—namely, that one should intend to bind one's soul and attach it to its root through Torah study, in order to complete the Tree of Life and the Supernal Adam and rectify them. For this is the purpose of human creation and the ultimate goal of one's engagement with Torah. He would also say that nothing hinders spiritual attainment as much as sadness. He would encourage his students to gaze frequently at the heavens, as this increases their purity, and he was very particular about the proper intentions for blessings over enjoyment.

It is written in Yelamdeinu at the end of Parashat Berachah: "The righteous bless everything they eat,

[1] Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), known as the ARI (the Lion), was the preeminent kabbalist of Safed whose teachings revolutionized Jewish mysticism. His influence is evident throughout Ma'avar Yabok, particularly in its approach to kavvanot (mystical intentions) during prayer.

[i] The Hebrew word 'mak'helot' (congregations) has the numerical value of 10, which corresponds to a minyan, the quorum required for communal prayer.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic purpose of Torah study: to bind one's soul to its divine source, thereby completing and rectifying the cosmic structures known as the 'Tree of Life' and the 'Supernal Adam.'

[iii] This reflects a core Hasidic principle (though predating Hasidism proper) that sadness is the greatest obstacle to spiritual attainment, while joy facilitates connection to the divine.

רוממות אל בגרונם וחרב
75 פיפיות בידם. והיה מזהיר
החכם גם כן לקום מפני שיבה
להיותו דוגמת דיוקן סבא קדישא
ודיקנא חיוורא. ואמרו במדרש
בשכר עוסקי תורה כאשר הובא
80 בילקוט ישעיה רמז רצ״ג כי
אין אדם יושב בישיבה של
מעלה אא״כ יושב בישיבה של
מטה.[i] ועוד שהבריות מרננים
אחריו ואומרים איש פלוני
85 כשר וחסיד ונאה להיות חכם
וכמו שהאדם עוסק בתורה
בעולם הזה כן מפלפל בישיבה
של מעלה כדאמרו בסוטה על
יהודה בדרשת פ׳ ידיו רב לו
90 לא הוה ידע למשקל ולמטרא
בשמעתתא וכו׳ לא הוה סלקא
ליה שמעתתא אליבא דהלכתא
וכו׳ וכן במדרש תנחומא פרשת
שמות כשם שנושאים ונותנים
95 בהלכה למטה כך נושאין ונותנים
בהלכה למעלה וראיה גם כן
ממעשה דרבה בר נחמני. על כי
יזהר האדם להודות על האמת
ואל יפלפל לקנתר חס ושלום כי
100 בפלפול שלא לשם שמים שפחה
תירש גברתה ומפרי מעשיו
ישביעוהו מרורים ואמרו שם פ׳
בא אריב״ל בג׳ מקומות מצינו
שהאדם משמיע למודו סמוך
105 למיתתו מנין שנאמר להודיעך
קושט דברי אמת להשיב אמרים
אמת לשולחך. וכן שלמה אמר
סוף דבר הכל נשמע וגומר רבי
תנחומא בר אבא אומר כיון שבא
110 להסתלק מלאכי השרת אומרים
תנו עוז לאלהים:[ii]

drink, see, and hear—not only in their lifetime but even in their death they bless and give thanks before the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is said, 'Let the pious exult in glory... The high praises of God in their throats and a double-edged sword in their hands.'" The sage would also instruct to rise before the elderly, as they exemplify the image of the Holy Elder and the White Beard. 75R 80R

They said in the Midrash regarding the reward for those who engage in Torah study, as brought in Yalkut Isaiah, hint 293: "No person sits in the heavenly academy unless he sits in an earthly academy." Furthermore, people speak admiringly of him, saying, "Such a person is upright, pious, and worthy of being a sage." Just as a person engages in Torah study in this world, so does he engage in dialectical analysis in the heavenly academy, as they said in Sotah regarding Judah, in the exposition of the verse "his hands shall contend for him": "He did not know how to weigh and give in discussions of legal traditions... his legal discussion did not ascend in accordance with the halakhah..." Similarly, in Midrash Tanchuma, Parashat Shemot: "Just as they discuss halakhah below, so do they discuss halakhah above," with further evidence from the story of Rabbah bar Nachmani. 85R 90R 95R

Therefore, a person should be careful to acknowledge the truth and not engage in pilpul (dialectical argumentation) to provoke, God forbid, for in pilpul not for the sake of Heaven, "the maidservant inherits her mistress,"[1] and from the fruit of his actions, he will be filled with bitterness. They said there in Parashat Bo: Rabbi Joshua ben Levi taught, "We find in three places that a person transmits his learning shortly before his death. From where do we know this? As it is said, 'To make known to you the truth of reliable words, so that you may give a true reply to those who sent you.' And thus Solomon said, 100R 105R 110R

[1] This metaphor refers to when dialectical argumentation (pilpul) becomes an end in itself rather than a means to truth, causing Torah study to lose its spiritual purpose. The 'maidservant' (inferior motivation) displaces the 'mistress' (authentic Torah understanding).

[i] This is a key theological concept in rabbinic Judaism that one's status in the heavenly academy (yeshiva shel ma'alah) depends on one's Torah study in the earthly academy (yeshiva shel matah).
[ii] Cf. The concept of proper kavvanot (intentions) during prayer — This passage connects to the fourth section of Ma'avar Yabok, which focuses on prayer as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings. Both emphasize that proper intention (kavvanah) during religious acts creates cosmic effects beyond the physical world. | Cf. Psalm 149:5-6 — The passage quotes 'Let the pious exult in glory... high praises of God in their throats and a double-edged sword in their hands' (Psalm

'The end of the matter, all has been heard...' Rabbi Tanchuma bar Abba says, 'When one is about to depart, the ministering angels say, "Give strength to God."'" 115R

פרק י״ח

כתוב במנהגי האר״י כי אין דבר מועיל להשגת האדם כמו ענין הטהרה והטבילה שיהיה האדם טהור בכל עת וכמה פעמים הזהרתי לחברי ותלמידי שירגילו עצמם ברחיצת ט׳ קבין לפחות בכל חדש בימים שאשתו פורשת ממנו עד כי תתקדש מטומאתה דכל אינון יומין זווגא עילאה מזדווג בהדיה דישתכח דכר ונוקבא כדאמרי׳ בזהר פ׳ בראשית וזה לפי שכל טומאה פוגמת בנפש שכמו שבהיות האדם נמשך אחר יצר הרע פוגם נפשו כן בהשליט עליו כח הטומא׳ קרוב אל החטא שהיצה״ר מתגבר בימינו וקדושה אינה שורה עליו לעוזרו ועל כן הטובל לקרייו ירגיש בנפשו תוספת קדושה וזהו טעם האוכלי׳ חוליהן בטהרה. וכבר כתבתי כוונת רחיצת ט׳ קבין ושעורה בדקדוק במאמר שני פרק כ״ה. עוד כתוב שם כי הוא היה נוהג לומר קודם שיכנס לבית המדרש תפלת ר׳ נחוניא בן הקנה הכתובה במשנה ומפורשת בגמ׳ ואח״כ היה אומר

Chapter 18

It is written in the customs of the ARI that nothing benefits a person's spiritual attainment like the matter of purity and immersion, that a person should be pure at all times. I have warned my colleagues and students many times to accustom themselves to 5R washing with nine kav [of water] at least once each month, on the days when his wife separates from him until she becomes purified from her impurity. For during all those days, a supernal union joins with him so that male and female are found [together], 10R as stated in the Zohar, Parashat Bereshit. This is because all impurity damages the soul,[A] for just as when a person is drawn after the evil inclination he damages his soul, so too when the power of impurity dominates him, he is close to sin, as the evil 15R inclination strengthens at his right side, and holiness does not rest upon him to help him. Therefore, one who immerses after a seminal emission will feel an addition of holiness in his soul. This is the reason for those who eat their ordinary food in a state of 20R ritual purity.[B]

I have already written about the intention for washing with nine kav and its precise measurement in the second discourse, chapter 25. It is further written there that he [the ARI] would customarily 25R recite, before entering the study hall, the prayer of Rabbi Nechunya ben HaKanah that is written in the

[A] Or: "ritual impurity blemishes the soul" — The Hebrew term 'pegimah' often refers specifically to a 'blemish' or 'flaw' in kabbalistic contexts rather than general damage, and 'tumah' has the specific meaning of ritual impurity in Jewish law.

[B] Or: "those who consume their non-sacred food in a state of ritual purity" — The term 'chullin' specifically refers to non-sacred food (as opposed to terumah or other sacred foods), which provides more precision about the rabbinic practice being referenced.

149:5-6) to demonstrate that the righteous continue to praise God even after death, supporting the book's view that souls remain spiritually active beyond physical life. | Cf. Interweaving of divine names YHVH and ADNY — The passage's reference to interweaving the divine names YHVH and ADNY connects to the book's deathbed prayers, where these combined divine names create special protection for the departing soul. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 12:13 — The reference to Solomon's 'The end of the matter, all has been heard' (Ecclesiastes 12:13) supports the book's theme that final words before death carry special spiritual significance. | Cf. Proverbs 22:21 — The citation of 'To make known to you the truth of reliable words, so that you may give a true reply to those who sent you' (Proverbs 22:21) supports the book's emphasis on confession and truthful speech at the time of death.

פסוק כי ה׳ יתן חכמה מפיו
דעת ותבונה גל עיני ואביטה
וגו׳ וקבלתי כי פסוק יערוף
במטר לקחי תז״ל בט״ל אמרת״.
בשעירים עלי ד״שא וכרביבים
ע״לי עשב ופסוק צור תעודה
חתום תורה בלמודי ישר והפוך
ושלשה פעמים ברוך אתה ה׳
למדני חוקיך ופסוק בחוקותיך
אשתעשע לא אשכח דבריך
ומזמור שיר המעלות הנה ברכו
את ה׳ וגו׳ טוב לאומרם קודם
הלימוד. וכתוב בסדר עולם כי
אליהו כותב כל מעשה הדורות
כולם וכן אמרו במדרש רבה שעל
כל מצוה אליהו כותב והקב״ה
חותם. וגדול כח הדבור שנחשב
עקימת שפתים עתה כמעשה בזמן
המקדש וזה שבהיות בית המקדש
קיים שהיתה שכינה שורה בו
והיחוד בכל העולמות החוטא
אז היה גורם הפירוד במעשה
לכן צריך ליחד במעשה הקרבן
ואז אם אדם היה חייב חטאת
אפילו יעסוק כל ימיו בחטאת
ומעשהו בתורה שבכתב ושבע״פ
לא מפני זה יכופר נפש ההוא
אבל אחר חרבן הבית היחודים
עתה עולים בבחינתה המסתלקת
למעלה דהיינו הבחינה הנקרא
דבור עם המחשבה העליונה לכן
עסק התורה גורם תקון לעונו
וכל העוסק בתורת חטאת כאילו
הקריב חטאת וכו׳ כי האותיות
יעלו ויפעלו התעוררות למעלה
במציאות שהוא ע״י קול ודבור
שהם תפארת ומלכות ומחשבה
ורעותא דלבא שהם חכמה ובינה
י״ה על ו״ה ועקימת שפתים
משויא להו מעשה עם תנועת
הגוף קצת וכבר דברנו הזה
במאמר ראשון ובחלק מנחת
אחרן. אשרי המטהר רעיוניו
וגופו כי בזה משים בקרבו את
רוח קדשו ותמימי דרך ההולכים

Mishnah and explained in the Gemara. Afterward he would say the verse "For the LORD gives wisdom; from His mouth come knowledge and understanding" [Proverbs 2:6], "Uncover my eyes that I may behold..." [Psalm 119:18], etc.

I have received [a tradition] that it is good to recite before study the verse "May my teaching drop like rain, may my words flow like dew" [Deuteronomy 32:2], "Like showers on tender grass, like raindrops on the herb" [Deuteronomy 32:2], and the verse "Bind up the testimony, seal the teaching among My disciples" [Isaiah 8:16] both forward and backward, and [to recite] three times "Blessed are You, O LORD, teach me Your statutes" [Psalm 119:12], and the verse "In Your statutes I will delight; I will not forget Your word" [Psalm 119:16], and the psalm "A Song of Ascents: Behold, bless the LORD..." [Psalm 134:1], etc.

It is written in Seder Olam that Elijah writes all the deeds of the generations, and so they said in Midrash Rabbah that for every commandment, Elijah writes and the Holy One, blessed be He, seals. Great is the power of speech, for the movement of the lips is now considered like the actual deed was in the time of the Temple. For when the Temple was standing, with the Divine Presence dwelling in it and unity in all worlds, one who sinned then caused separation through [his] deed; therefore, one needed to unify through the deed of the sacrifice. Then, if a person was obligated to bring a sin-offering, even if he were to occupy himself all his days with [studying] the sin-offering and its procedures in the Written and Oral Torah, the soul would not be atoned for because of this. But after the destruction of the Temple, the unifications now ascend in its aspect that rises above, namely the aspect called "speech" with the supernal thought. Therefore, the study of Torah causes rectification for one's sin, and whoever engages in the laws of the sin-offering, it is as if he offered a sin-offering, etc.

For the letters ascend and effect an awakening above in reality, which is through voice and speech, which are Tiferet and Malkhut,[A] and through thought and the desire of the heart, which are Chokhmah and Binah—[represented by the letters]

[A] Or: "Tiferet and Malkhut (Beauty and Kingdom)" — Adding the English translations of these kabbalistic terms would be helpful for readers unfamiliar with the sefirot, though in a scholarly context the Hebrew terms alone might be sufficient.

בתורת ה׳ אפילו מלאך המות
אוהב אותם כדדרשו בסוף פ׳
אין מעמידין על פסוק עלמות
אהבוך:[i]

Yod-Hei over Vav-Hei[A]—and the movement of lips with some movement of the body renders it an [actual] de[B]ed. We have already discussed this in the first discourse and in the section Minchat Aharon.

Fortunate is one who purifies his thoughts and body, for through this he places within himself His holy spirit. And those of perfect way who walk in the Torah of the LORD, even the Angel of Death loves them, as they expounded at the end of the chapter "Ein Ma'amidin" on the verse "Therefore maidens love you" [Song of Songs 1:3].

פרק י״ט

Chapter 19

אם יסורי החולה הם מעין יסורין
של אהבה שאין בהם ביטול תפלה
ולבו יאמר לו כי ירבה תחנונים
לאלהים שישיבהו לאיתנו הנה
כבר העלינו במעירי שחר שלנו
בדף ר״י ואילך בקשות נאות
לחולה וגם שהם בלשון רבים
ישים אל לבו לבקש רחמים על
כל חולי עמו באהבה כי לעולם
לשתתף איניש נפשיה בהדי
צבורא וכל הצריך לאותו דבר
ומתפלל על חבירו הוא נענה
תחלה. פוק חזי עוד משם בדף
קצ״א ע״ב עד דף קצ״ה[ii] ושם

If the sick person's afflictions are like the "afflictions of love" which do not involve the cancellation of prayer, and his heart tells him to multiply supplications to God to restore him to health, we have already included in our "Me'irei Shachar" [Illuminators of Dawn] on page 210 and onwards appropriate prayers for the sick. Even though they are written in the plural form, one should direct one's heart to seek mercy for all the sick of the nation with love, for a person should always include himself with the community, and whoever needs something himself but prays for his fellow will be answered first. Go and see further there from page 191b to page 195, where there are certain supplications designed to be recited

[A] Or: "Yod-Hei (representing the upper sefirot) over Vav-Hei (representing the lower sefirot)" — This expanded translation explains the kabbalistic significance of these letter pairs as representing different aspects of the divine emanations, which provides important context for understanding the mystical concept being described.

[B] Or: "the articulation of the lips is considered equivalent to an action" — This is a Talmudic phrase with technical legal significance about verbal declarations being legally binding, so a more precise translation conveys the legal equivalence being established.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Bereshit — This reference establishes that marital separation doesn't mean spiritual separation—in fact, it can create a different type of spiritual union. This supports the ARI's instruction about ritual immersion during these periods. | Cf. Prayer of Rabbi Nechunya ben HaKanah — This prayer reflects the ARI's emphasis on proper spiritual preparation before Torah study, creating the right mindset and spiritual protection. | Cf. Seder Olam — The reference suggests that our actions have cosmic significance and are recorded in the heavenly realms, emphasizing the importance of proper spiritual conduct. | Cf. Minchat Aharon — This self-reference shows that Aaron Berechia of Modena addressed this topic of speech as a spiritual substitute for Temple offerings in multiple works, indicating its importance in his thought. | Cf. 'Therefore maidens love you' (Song of Songs 1:3) — This creative reading of the verse from Song of Songs supports the author's point that true Torah devotees are beloved even by the Angel of Death, emphasizing the protective power of Torah study and ritual purity.

[ii] The author is referring readers to specific pages in his own prayer collection, 'Me'irei Shachar,' demonstrating how this work serves as a practical complement to the more theoretical discussions in Ma'avar Yabok.

איזה סליחות שמכוונות להאמר ביום אשר תקדש עצמך בתענית של ערב ר״ח באשר כוונתי במאמר ד׳ בקרבן תענית וזה נוסף על סליחות אחרות והודוי המכוין ליום צום שהם מדף ק״פ עד דף קפ״ו. וכבר הרגלנום בסוד ישרים ועדה ביום התענית של המשמרת שלנו בס״ד כי ראוי לכל אדם להצטער בעת מעוט הלבנה.[i] אך מצאתי בדברי החכם שאין ראוי להסתכל בלקות הלבנה והראיה כי הכהן אינו אומר טמא לבית המנוגע שאינו נוהג אלא בארץ ישראל דוקא עד אחר שיצא מפתח הבית כי בלה שפרסה נדה אין ראוי שהשושבין יאמר כך בפניה. וזהו טעם בנגע נראה לי לא נגע[ii] כדי שלא להוציא דבה על ארץ ישראל בת מלך. כי נגע הוא מכתש סגירו שסוגר ומונע השפע נגד הארץ אשר ה׳ אלהיך דורש אותה תמיד. ואם תזכה ביום התענית לכוין מעשיך בסוד תקון עליון הנה מה טוב כי בבקר השכם ביום ההוא בהיותך לבדך מתבודד בבית הכנסת אחר עלות השחר תקיף הדוכן שבעה פעמים עם שבח אנא בכח ותאמר המזמור והפסוקים אשר באו במעירי שחר הנזכר בסדר ר״ה בדף קמ״ח. תכוין לבך בהם ותתענג. עוד טוב לכוין בכל שעה מיום התענית מלבד הנדרש בקרבן תענית להשפיע עליך מדה אחת מי״ג תקוני דיקנא דאריך שהם בפסוקי מי אל כמוך פוק עיין בתומר דבורה כי שם פירש אותם החכם. ובי״ג שעות אחרות תכוין להמשיך עליך הארת י״ג מדות אל רחום וחנון ותכוין עוד בי״ג on the day when you sanctify yourself with a fast on the eve of the New Moon, as I intended in the fourth discourse in "Korban Ta'anit" [Sacrifice of Fasting]. This is in addition to other supplications and the confession appropriate for a fast day, which are from page 180 to page 186. We have already made these customary among the upright and the community on the fast day of our prayer group, with God's help, for it is appropriate for every person to feel distress at the time of the waning of the moon.

However, I found in the words of the Sage that it is not appropriate to look at an eclipse of the moon. The proof is that the priest does not pronounce "unclean" to a house afflicted with leprosy (which only applies specifically in the Land of Israel) until after he has left the doorway of the house, for when a bride begins her menstrual period, it is not appropriate for her attendant to declare this in her presence. This is the reason for "a plague appears to me" rather than "a plague" [in the biblical text]—to avoid spreading evil reports about the Land of Israel, the king's daughter. For the plague is a "closing affliction" that closes and prevents the divine flow toward "the land which the Lord your God cares for continually."

If you merit on the fast day to direct your actions according to the mystery of supernal rectification, how good it is! For early in the morning on that day, when you are alone in seclusion in the synagogue after sunrise, encircle the platform seven times while reciting the praise "Ana Bekoach" and say the psalm and verses that appear in Me'irei Shachar mentioned in the Rosh Hashanah order on page 145. Direct your heart to them and take pleasure.

It is also good to focus in each hour of the fast day, beyond what is required in Korban Ta'anit, on drawing upon yourself one measure from the thirteen rectifications of the beard of Arich Anpin, which are in the verses "Who is a God like You," go and look in "Tomer Devorah" for the Sage explained them there. And in the other thirteen hours, intend to draw upon yourself the illumination of the thirteen attributes: "God, merciful and gracious..." And also focus on the thirteen attributes of Arich that clothe themselves

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the waning of the moon represents a time of increased divine judgment, requiring special spiritual practices to mitigate these cosmic forces.

[ii] The author provides a kabbalistic interpretation of the biblical phrasing for identifying leprosy in houses (Leviticus 14:35), explaining that the indirect language avoids speaking negatively about the Land of Israel, which is personified as a royal daughter.

מדות דאריך המתלבשים בתשעה
תקוני דזעיר. כללם יחד ב״ך
ישראל והם אותם שהזכיר משה
בעון המרגלים ובאו רמוזים
בפסוקי מן המצר ככתוב בספרי
המקובלים. ובכל שעה תכוין
למדה אחת כנזכר הרי כ״ב
ובד׳ שעות הנשארות עד כ״ו
תכוין שעה ראשונה לשם אדנות
ושניה לשם הויה ושלישית לשם
אהיה ושעה רביעית משולבים
כלם יחד שכן סוד י״ג מדות הם
בשלש מערכות השמות האלו
ומאד מכוונת כוונה זו לתענית
בהפסקה מבעוד יום שעולה כמו
י״ג תעניות כאשר כתבנו בקרבן
תענית פרק רביעי. ויכוין בסוד
התענית חלב ודם המתמעט
דוגמא לחלב הניתן על גבי אש
המזבח[i] דהיינו כללו חסד בדין.
והדם היה נזרק סביב למזבח
שהוא בסוד הרחמים ודאי. שכן
היו מלבנין המזבח והדם אדום
על הלבן ובזה תכוין ברתיחת
חולשת גופך והרי זה קשר גדול.
עוד החלב שהוא גשמי נעשה ריח
ניחוח רוחני. הדם שהוא רוחני
נעשה גשמי בגוף המזבח להורות
קשר העולמות זה בזה. עוד
טוב לכוין בכל תפלותיו לעולם
ובפרט ביום התענית בחתימת
מקבץ נדחי עמו ישראל לתקון
טפות ש״ז הנדחין לחצונים[ii] ואם
תרגיש בעצמך ביום הנזכר מן
המנחה ולמעלה רוח טהרה
תתפלל בבית הכנסת אתה לבדך
מעוטף בציצית ומוכתר בתפלין
בכריעה על ברכים תפלה נוראה
מזווגא דמטרוניתא[iii] אשר היא
תקון קדמונים הנה הנה במעירי
שחר בסדר יום הכיפורים בדף

in the nine rectifications of Zeir Anpin. All together they equal 22 [in Hebrew: כ״ב/KaF-Bet] Israel, and they are the ones Moses mentioned in relation to the sin of the spies, alluded to in the verses "From the straits," as written in the books of the Kabbalists. In each hour, focus on one attribute as mentioned—that makes 22—and in the four remaining hours until 26, focus the first hour on the divine name Adnut, the second on the name YHVH, the third on the name Ehyeh, and the fourth hour on all of them interwoven together, for the secret of the thirteen attributes is in these three arrangements of divine names. This intention is very appropriate for a fast that begins while it is still day, which is equivalent to thirteen fasts, as we wrote in Korban Ta'anit, chapter four. 60R 65R 70R

One should focus on the mystery of the fast: the fat and blood that are diminished [in the body during fasting] correspond to the fat placed upon the altar's fire, which combines kindness with judgment. And the blood was sprinkled around the altar, which is certainly in the realm of mercy. For they would whiten the altar, and the red blood [would be visible] upon the white, and with this you should focus on the heat of your body's weakness, and this creates a great connection. Additionally, the fat, which is physical, becomes a spiritual pleasant aroma. The blood, which is spiritual, becomes physical in the body of the altar, showing the connection between the worlds. 75R 80R 85R

It is also good to focus in all one's prayers always, and particularly on the fast day, during the conclusion of the blessing "Who gathers the dispersed of His people Israel," on rectifying the seed that has been scattered to external forces. And if you feel within yourself on the mentioned day, from the afternoon prayer onwards, a spirit of purity, pray in the synagogue by yourself, wrapped in tzitzit and crowned with tefillin, kneeling on your knees, the awesome prayer of the union of the Divine Feminine, which is an ancient rectification—it is there in Me'irei Shachar in the Yom Kippur order on page 90R 95R

[i] This presents a profound mystical interpretation of fasting where the body's deprivation of fat and blood becomes a spiritual sacrifice comparable to Temple offerings, transforming physical discomfort into cosmic repair.

[ii] The author reveals a kabbalistic intention for the standard blessing about gathering Israel's exiles, connecting it to the mystical concept of rectifying seminal emissions, which were believed to create negative spiritual entities.

[iii] This describes a specific kabbalistic prayer practice with precise ritual elements (tzitzit, tefillin, kneeling) designed to effect cosmic unification of masculine and feminine divine aspects.

קנ״ה ועפעפיך יזלו בה מים
100 ותשא אל אלוה פניך ורעיונך.
ויש עוד תפלה מיוחדת לג׳
צומות וליום תשעה באב אחר
חצות הודפסה אחר סדר של
כל יום. ובסדר סוכות תמצא
105 תפלה הגונה לומר אותה בליל
ראשון בעת כניסתך לסוכה
בכבוד אושפיזין עילאין. ותפלת
רבי אלעזר בן ערך הרגלנו
לומר אותה ג״כ בשמיני עצרת
110 אך לא סופי עניינים שמדברים
מהחתימה. הנה פקדתי עליך
אחי דרכי והטוב בעיניך עשה
כי אתה תבחר ולא אני ואם
תורגלת בתחנות ובקשות אחרות
115 מאותם המורגלים בפי רוב עם
ישראל טוב שתאחז בזה וגם מזה
אל תנח ידך כי יום אחד בחדש
בלבד תקדישהו כלו לאלהיך אך
לעולם ישן מפני חדש אל תוציא
120 שכל המשנה ופורש מהם ידו על
התחתונה ואורח עולם תשמור
אשר גבלו וציינו ראשונים הגם
שהניחו לנו אבותינו ג״כ מקום
להתגדר ולזכות בו עצמנו
125 וזולתנו. ובהלכות שבת באורח
חיים סי׳ ל״ד בסופו בא בדברי
המגיה כי טוב להפריש י״ח
פשוטים לצדקה והם במקום
חטאת. וז״ל אם חלל שבת
130 צריך להתענות ארבעים יום
שני וחמישי ולא ישתה יין ולא
יאכל בשר ויתן במקום חטאת
י״ח פשוטים לצדקה.[i] ואם ירצה
לפדות התענית יתן בעד כל יום
135 י״ב פשוטים וביורה דעה סימן
קמ״ה על מי שהיה משמש עם
הטהורה ושגג ופירש בקושי אחר
שאמרה לו נטמאתי כתב ג״כ
תקון זה של מ׳ תעניות אמנם
140 בפדיון התעניות כתב נכון שיתן
כפי ממון שיש לו כי עשיר יתן
יותר קצת מהעני עכ״ל. וכל

155—and let your eyelids flow with tears as you lift your face and thoughts to God. There is also a special prayer for the three fasts and for the Ninth of Av after midday, printed after the daily order. And in the Sukkot order, you will find a proper prayer to recite on the first night when you enter the sukkah in honor of the supernal guests. And we have made it customary to recite the prayer of Rabbi Eleazar ben Arakh also on Shemini Atzeret, but not the concluding matters that speak of the closing [of the festival]. 100R 105R

Behold, I have charged you, my brother, with my ways, and do what is good in your eyes, for you shall choose and not I. And if you are accustomed to other supplications and petitions from those common in the mouths of most of the people of Israel, it is good to hold onto this and also not to let go of that, for only one day in the month should you dedicate entirely to your God. But never discard the old because of the new, for whoever changes and separates from them, his hand is on the lower side, so keep to the path of the world which the ancients established and marked out, even though our fathers also left us room to distinguish ourselves and merit through it, both for ourselves and for others. 110R 115R 120R

In the laws of Shabbat in Orach Chaim, section 34, at the end, the editor writes that it is good to set aside 18 simple coins for charity, and they are in place of a sin-offering. And these are his words: “If one desecrated the Sabbath, one must fast for forty days on Mondays and Thursdays, and not drink wine or eat meat, and give in place of a sin-offering 18 simple coins to charity. And if one wishes to redeem the fast, one should give for each day 12 simple coins.” And in Yoreh De’ah, section 145, regarding one who was intimate with his ritually pure wife and withdrew with difficulty after she told him “I have become impure,” he also wrote this remedy of 40 fasts, but regarding the redemption of the fasts, he wrote that it is proper to give according to one’s means, for a rich person should give a bit more than a poor person, end of quote. And all who are pure of hands will increase in strength. 125R 130R 135R 140R

[i] The author cites a specific halakhic remedy for Sabbath violation: giving 18 coins to charity as a substitute for the sin-offering that would have been brought in Temple times. This practical guidance integrates legal and mystical approaches to atonement.

טהר ידים יוסיף אומץ:[i]

פרק כ׳

Chapter 20

מצאתי כי רבי חנינא בן דוסא
כשהיה מתפלל על החולים היה
מניח ראשו בין ברכיו. ע״כ אחד
מתקוני התענית הוא לכבוש פניו
בקרקע[ii] זמן הרבה מהיום ההוא
ובזה מסוגל להקנות הכנעה
בנפשו ובעת שמתחנן בו הנה
מה טוב להניח ראשו בין ברכיו
כמו שמצינו באליהו דכתיב ביה
וישם פניו בין ברכיו[iii] ולהיות
שאלת המטר שאלה כוללת כל
צרכי עליונים ותחתונים לכן
הוצרך התעוררות גדול להוריד
השפע מבחינת רישא עד סוף
מקום ההתפשטות ולמתק תרין
קשרין תתאין שהם בסוד הברכים
כנודע בסוד בני השפחות כדי
שכל אחוריהם של ד׳ קשרין
יהיו ביתה. וכדאיתא באגדת

I found that Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa, when praying for the sick, would place his head between his knees. Therefore, one of the rectifications of fasting[A] is to press one's face to the ground for a long time on that day, which is conducive to acquiring humility in one's soul. And when one beseeches during this time, how good it is to place one's head between one's knees, as we find with Elijah, of whom it is written "and he put his face between his knees." Since the request for rain is a comprehensive request including all the needs of the upper and lower realms, a great awakening was required to draw down divine influence from the aspect of the "Head" to the end point of expansion, and to sweeten the two lower knots[B] that are in the mystery of the knees, as is known in the mystery of "the children of the handmaids,"[1] so that all the back parts of the four knots would turn inward.

As is stated in the Aggadah on "One should not stand [to pray]," likewise when Rabbi Hanina sought

[A] Or: "one of the spiritual practices associated with fasting" — While 'rectifications' (תקונים) is the literal translation and conveys the kabbalistic concept of spiritual repair, 'spiritual practices' might be more accessible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: "to transform the two lower bonds from severity to mercy" — This alternate translation unpacks the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening' (המתקה) more explicitly, making clear that it refers to the transformation of divine judgment into mercy.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic interpretation of the children born to Jacob's handmaids (Bilhah and Zilpah) in Genesis. In mystical thought, they represent certain spiritual forces associated with the 'back' or external aspects of divine emanation, which need to be rectified or 'turned inward.'

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part 6 (Korban Ta'anit/Sacrifice of Fasting) — The author refers here to his own work 'Korban Ta'anit' (Sacrifice of Fasting) which is Part 6 of Ma'avar Yabok, indicating this passage's connection to his broader discussion of fasting as spiritual remedy. | Cf. Taanit 8a — The author draws on the Talmudic principle that one who prays for others while needing the same blessing will be answered first, applying it to prayers for healing. | Cf. Tomer Devorah by Moses Cordovero — The author explicitly refers readers to 'Tomer Devorah' (Palm Tree of Deborah) by Moses Cordovero for an explanation of the 13 attributes of divine mercy, showing his reliance on and respect for this kabbalistic work. | Cf. Zohar on the 13 Rectifications of the Beard (Tikkunei Dikna) — The author references the Zoharic concept of the 13 rectifications of the beard of Arich Anpin, a complex kabbalistic idea about divine emanations and mercy, suggesting readers should meditate on these during specific hours of their fast. | Cf. Leviticus 14:34-35 (regarding leprosy in houses) — The author draws on the biblical procedure for a priest examining houses with leprosy-like afflictions to make a spiritual point about not announcing negative things in the presence of the affected party.

[ii] This practice of pressing one's face to the ground during prayer is described as a physical expression of complete humility and submission before God. It appears in several places in rabbinic literature as a particularly powerful posture for prayer in times of urgent need.

[iii] This refers to 1 Kings 18:42, where Elijah assumes this posture when praying for rain after the drought during his confrontation with the prophets of Baal on Mount Carmel. This biblical precedent gives authority to the practice.

אין עומדים גם כן כשבקש רבי חנינא רחמים על בנו של רבי יוחנן בן זכאי ואמר הוא אלמלא הטיח בן זכאי פניו בקרקע כל היום[i] וכו׳ וכן מצינו באלעזר בן דורדיא שהניח ראשו בין ברכיו וגעה בבכיה וכן מצינו בתשובת רבינו האי בפי׳ ארבע נכנסו לפרדס[ii] מי שהוא הגון בכמה מדות זכורות ומבוארות כשמבקש להציץ בכח שכלו בהיכלות של מלאכי מרום יש לו דרכים לעשות שישב בתענית ימים ידועים ומניח ראשו בין ברכיו וילחוש בפיו שירות ותושבחות הרבה שהם מפורשות ובכן מציץ מפנימיו ובחדרי שכלו כמו שהוא רואה בעיניו היכלות וצופה בשכלו באלו הוא נכנס. מהיכל להיכל ורואה מה שישיגו ויש שתי משניות שהתנאים שונים אותו בדבר זה הנקרא היכלות רבתי והיכלות זוטרתי[iii] וסוד שני מיני היכלות הוא כי ע״י השבעה היכלות שביצירי[iv]ה משם פונים בהסתכלות בינתם להיכלות עליונות שבבריאה ומהם לאורות שבאצילות המתלבשים בהם וראו רבי עקיבא וחביריו mercy for the son of Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai, he [Rabbi Yohanan] said, "Had ben Zakkai pressed his face to the ground all day, etc." Similarly, we find with Eleazar ben Dordaya that he placed his head between his knees and burst into tears. And we also find in the responsum of Rabbenu Hai explaining "Four entered the Pardes" that one who is worthy in several attributes, remembered and clarified, when seeking to gaze with the power of his intellect into the palaces of the supernal angels, has ways to do so: he should sit in fasting for specific days, place his head between his knees, and whisper with his mouth many songs and praises that are specified. Thus, he gazes from within himself and in the chambers of his intellect,[1] as if seeing with his eyes the palaces and beholding with his intellect as if he were entering from palace to palace, seeing what they perceive.

There are two Mishnaic texts that the Tannaim study on this matter, called Heikhalot Rabbati and Heikhalot Zutarti. The secret of these two types of palaces is that through the seven palaces of Yetzirah (Formation), from there they turn in the contemplation of their understanding to the supernal palaces of Beriah (Creation), and from them to the lights of Atzilut (Emanation) that clothe themselves in them. Rabbi Akiva and his colleagues who entered the palaces[2] did so just as they entered the Pardes. Thus explained the Arukh that they had Halakhot Rabbati and Halakhot Zutarti, and they saw the watches of the angels in their stations, and [1] This describes a technique of spiritual visualization where the mystic does not physically see the heavenly palaces but perceives them through inner spiritual vision or intellectual contemplation.

[2] This connects the Heikhalot literature's accounts of heavenly ascent with the famous Talmudic story of the four who entered Pardes (Paradise), suggesting that they represent the same mystical experience described in different ways.

[i] This alludes to a story in Berakhot 34b where Rabbi Hanina ben Dosa prayed for Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai's son, and when the son recovered, Rabbi Yohanan ben Zakkai commented that had he himself pressed his face to the ground in prayer all day, it would not have been as effective as Rabbi Hanina's brief prayer.
[ii] This refers to the famous Talmudic account (Hagigah 14b) of four sages who entered 'Pardes' (literally 'orchard,' but interpreted as an acronym for different levels of textual interpretation or as a reference to mystical paradise): Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, Aher (Elisha ben Abuyah), and Rabbi Akiva. Only Rabbi Akiva is said to have 'entered in peace and departed in peace.'
[iii] These are two major texts from the Heikhalot literature, an early corpus of Jewish mystical writings (3rd-7th centuries CE) that describe ascents to the heavenly realms and visions of the divine throne (Merkavah mysticism). 'Rabbati' means 'greater' and 'Zutarti' means 'lesser,' indicating two different compilations of these mystical teachings.
[iv] This refers to the kabbalistic cosmology where creation is divided into four worlds: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). The seven palaces or chambers in the world of Yetzirah are mystical structures that the initiate contemplates in order to ascend to higher spiritual realms.

שנכנסו להיכלות כמו שנכנסו
לפרדס וכן פירש הערוך
כי היו להם הלכות רבתי
והלכות זוטרתי ורואין משמרות
המלאכים במעמדם והיאך היכל
אחר היכל וכו׳ כי ההכנה
לשמיעת תפלה ולסכות ברוח
הקדש הוא בהטחת פניו בקרקע.
ואם יארע ליל טבילת אשתו
במוצאי תעניתו היה טוב לו מאד
וירגיל עצמו בתפלה ובפסוקי
היחוד שהם בסוד הקומה השלמה
העליונה בסוד נפש רוח ונשמה
על הסדר אשר בא בסוף מעירי
שחר שלנו מכוונת קודם הזווג
כנתבאר שם בפי הפשט כי
אין לכל דעת נקיה כדאמרו
בירושלמי דחגיגה ונהורן הוא
דלא בריא.[i] ויזהר לבל יפסול
זרעו במחשבה בלתי טהורה
ח״ו ואמרו בזהר פ׳ יתרו שכל
הפוסל זרעו אין מתיישב הפיסול
ההוא עד שלשה דורות ולכן
משפחה שנפל בה איזה פיסול
אפילו לא יהיה ממזר כגון בן
קדשה או נדה וכיוצא לא יערבו
זרעם בזרעו עד אחר שלשה
דורות ברם שם כוונו לנושא
אשה שאינה הוגנת לו ויהי מה גם
פסול המחשבה קראוה בגמרא
בני תמורה[ii] ובמה שכוונתי שם
בחבור פסוקים שבאו על זה כל
חכם ומבין מדעתו ימצא בהם
דבש וחלב הראויים ליכנס תחת

how one palace follows another, etc. For the preparation for hearing prayer and for attaining the Holy Spirit is by pressing one's face to the ground. 50R

If the night of his wife's ritual immersion happens to fall on the night after his fast, this would be very good for him. He should accustom himself to prayer 55R and to the verses of unification, which are in the mystery of the complete supernal structure,[A] in the mystery of nefesh, ruach, and neshamah, according to the order that appears at the end of our "Me'irei Shachar,"[1] to be intended before marital union, as 60R explained there according to the plain meaning, for not everyone has pure knowledge, as they said in the Jerusalem Talmud of Hagigah, "and it is the light that is not created." He should be careful not to invalidate his seed with impure thoughts,[2] God forbid. 65R And they said in the Zohar, Parashat Yitro, that anyone who invalidates his seed, that invalidation does not settle until three generations. Therefore, a family in which some invalidation has occurred, even if not [producing] a mamzer, such as the son 70R of a prostitute or [conceived during] menstruation and the like, should not mix their seed with his seed until after three generations. However, there they were referring to one who marries a woman who is unsuitable for him. Whatever the case, they also 75R called defective thoughts in the Talmud "children of substitution." And in what I intended there in the compilation of verses about this, every wise person who understands from his own knowledge will find in them honey and milk worthy to enter under his 80R tongue, for this is the way I kept to direct the intention of everything to the extent my humble hand could reach, according to the true principles in the

[A] Or: "in the esoteric concept of the complete divine configuration" — This alternate translation might better convey to modern readers that this refers to the complete structure of divine emanations (sefirot) in kabbalistic thought.

[1] This appears to be a reference to the author's own prayer collection titled 'Illuminators of Dawn,' which contained specific prayers and meditations to be recited before marital relations to ensure proper spiritual intention.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the spiritual quality of a person's thoughts during marital relations affects the spiritual nature of any children conceived. Pure, holy thoughts were believed to draw down a holy soul, while impure thoughts could have the opposite effect.

[i] This Aramaic phrase means 'and it is the light that is not created,' possibly referring to the idea that not everyone is capable of receiving or understanding mystical illumination, as this requires special preparation or inherent spiritual capacity.

[ii] This term refers to children conceived when the husband's thoughts are directed toward someone other than his wife during marital relations. The Talmud (Nedarim 20b) discusses this concept, suggesting that such thoughts can have spiritual effects on the offspring.

לשונו כי דרך זו שמרתי לכוין
כוונת כל דבר עד מקום שידי
הצעירה מגעת על פי ההקדמות
האמיתיות באמרות טהורות של
פסוקי הנבואה כנזכר במנחת
אהרן מפרק ז׳ ואילך: [i] pure sayings of the prophetic verses, as mentioned in "Minchat Aharon"[1] from chapter 7 onward.

פרק כ״א

Chapter 21

על כן בני ורעי שנו מדותי שהם
תרומות מד״ת וקבלה[ii] ותרא
דברים ישנים מסודרים וכתובים
על נייר חדש וסדרא וחושבנא
בעלמא ידענא בהון ומאן דידעי
לדרוש סמוכים אלו מן התורה
בהם יצפצף להגות בכבוד
אומר כלו דוגמא למה שפעל
ועשה בכח התורה בורא עולם
שלהיותו רחוק מכל התגשמות
האציל והמשיך פנימיות רוחניות
התורה[iii] עד גדר התלבשות
נאות ומוכן להמצא דבר גשמי יש

Therefore, my sons and friends, study my principles,[A] which are offerings derived from Torah and Kabbalah. You will see ancient matters arranged and written on new paper. I know their order and calculation in the world,[B] and whoever knows how to seek connections to these from the Torah should chirp and meditate upon them with respect for all that is said. This parallels what the Creator of the world accomplished through the power of the Torah.[2] Because God is far removed from any physical form, He emanated and drew forth the inner spirituality of the Torah to the point of appropriate embodiment, making it ready

[A] Or: "Therefore, my sons and friends, repeat my teachings" — The Hebrew verb 'shanu' can mean both 'study' and 'repeat/review.' In traditional Jewish learning contexts, repetition is often emphasized as a key learning method, so this alternate translation captures that nuance.

[B] Or: "I know only their basic order and calculation" — The phrase 'bealma' can connote 'merely' or 'simply,' suggesting the author is being humble about his knowledge, claiming to know only the basic structure rather than a comprehensive understanding.

[1] This is a reference to another work by the author, Aaron Berechia of Modena, whose name is reflected in the title 'Offering of Aaron.'

[2] The author is drawing a comparison between human study of Torah and God's use of Torah for creation. Just as God used the Torah to create physical reality from spiritual essence, humans can use proper Torah study to strengthen and maintain creation.

[i] Cf. Talmud Berakhot 34b — The author uses this Talmudic account to demonstrate the power of assuming a posture of extreme humility (placing head between knees) when praying for healing. | Cf. 1 Kings 18:42 — The biblical reference to Elijah putting his face between his knees when praying for rain serves as a scriptural basis for the prayer posture being described. | Cf. Avodah Zarah 17a — This Talmudic account of a penitent who placed his head between his knees provides another example of this prayer posture being effective for eliciting divine mercy. | Cf. Hagigah 14b — The author connects mystical ascent practices to the famous Talmudic account of four sages who entered the 'Pardes' (mystical paradise), suggesting similar techniques for spiritual elevation. | Cf. Heikhalot literature — The author references these ancient Jewish mystical texts as sources for techniques of spiritual ascent through visualization of heavenly palaces. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Yitro — The author uses this Zoharic teaching to emphasize the importance of pure thoughts during marital relations, as improper thoughts have spiritual consequences lasting three generations.

[ii] The author employs wordplay here; 'terumot' means 'offerings' or 'contributions,' but also connects to the word 'Torah' in the phrase 'mi-d't' (from Torah). This suggests his teachings are distilled essence of Torah and Kabbalah.

[iii] This language reflects kabbalistic cosmology, where divine emanation (atzilut) allows the transcendent to manifest in increasingly concrete forms, paralleling how God uses the Torah as an instrument to create physical reality from spiritual essence.

מאין וזהו ה׳ קנני ראשית דרכו
כי היתה כלי אומנתו ובקיומנו
אותה ובהגיגנו בה בהויתה
ובלשונה יתחזק מה שנעשה בה
וזהו פירוש נגידים אדבר ירצה
שכל דברותיה נגידים ושרים
שכל התורה שמותיו של הקב״ה
ואפילו התפשטות כסא הכבוד
הוא על ידי התורה וכן תמיד
מהוה שפע אור מפנימיותה וזהו
משחקת לפניו בכל עת באדם
השמח ובשמחתו מגלה פנימיות
לבו מלבד כי אמרו כי שמ״ח
אורות היה האור הראשון במנין
שמ״ח[i] והקול יוצא מגילוי שפע
אור התורה ופנימיותה ועל פי
הדברים האלה חזר הדין לסיני
ונאדר כח הפסוקים בכתבם
ובלשונם הרבה יותר מאותם
הנפסקים בסבינא חריפא בדברי
שיחה ביניהם[ii] הגם כי תהיה
שיחה נאה בעיני הבריות דוגמא
לשברי כלי חרס שבמקדש כי היו
נבלעים במקומן הגם שבתוכן
היו שירי טהרה. הנה הלוים
בהרנינם על דוכנם הגם שלא
היה דומה כוונת הכהן בקרבן
שהיה מקריב יום ראשון לקרבן
המקריב יום שני וכן בכל ימי
השבוע. וכן יחוד שעושה קרבן
העשיר חלוק מיחוד הגורם קרבן
העני ולבן מומין אין בו כי היה

for physical things to be created ex nihilo. This is the meaning of "The LORD acquired me at the beginning of His way" [Proverbs 8:22], for the Torah was His crafting instrument.[A] When we fulfill it and meditate upon it in its true essence and language, what was created through it is strengthened. 15R

This is the interpretation of "I will speak noble things" [Proverbs 8:6]—meaning that all of its utterances are noble and princely, for the entire Torah consists of the names of the Holy One, blessed be He.[1] Even the extension of the Throne of Glory exists through the Torah. Similarly, it constantly generates a flow of light from its inner essence, which is the meaning of "rejoicing before Him at all times" [Proverbs 8:30], like a person who in his joy reveals his inner heart. Beyond this, they said that there were 348 (שמ״ח) lights in the primordial light, corresponding to the numerical value of שמ״ח (joy), and the voice emerges from the revelation of the flowing light of the Torah and its inner essence. 20R 25R 30R

Based on these principles, the law returned to Sinai, and the power of the verses as they are written and in their language is much greater than those cut with a sharp knife by casual conversation between them, even if such conversation appears pleasant in people's eyes. This is analogous to the broken earthenware vessels in the Temple that were absorbed in their place,[2] even though they contained remnants of purity. 35R 40R

Indeed, the Levites in their joyful singing on their platform, even though the intention of the priest with the offering he brought on the first day was not the 45R

[A] Or: "This is the meaning of "The LORD created me as the beginning of His way" [Proverbs 8:22], for the Torah was His artisan's tool" — The Hebrew 'kanani' in this biblical verse has been variously translated as 'acquired,' 'created,' or 'possessed.' Additionally, 'kli umnuto' could be rendered as 'artisan's tool' to better capture the sense of divine craftsmanship in creation.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the Torah is composed entirely of divine names in various combinations and permutations. This is not merely metaphorical but understood literally in mystical tradition—each letter and word contains divine power.

[2] This reference to broken vessels that are 'absorbed in their place' likely alludes to the rabbinic teaching that broken sacred vessels were buried within the Temple grounds rather than discarded. The author uses this as a metaphor for how even imperfect speech about sacred matters retains some residual holiness.

[i] The author employs gematria, Jewish numerology, noting that the Hebrew word for 'joy' (sameach) has the numerical value 348 (שמ״ח), which he connects to primordial light. This reflects the kabbalistic practice of finding deeper meanings through numerical equivalences.

[ii] The phrase 'cut with a sharp knife' (b'sakina charifa) is a vivid metaphor for interrupting or fragmenting biblical texts with human conversation, which the author sees as diminishing their spiritual power.

בסוד דרך הנשר בשמים מקום
שאין קליפות[i] ועוד אין הקב״ה
מדקדק עם העני על פגם עונות
כדכתיב כי לא בזה ולא שקץ
50 עונות עני וגו׳ ולכן בין זכר בין
נקבה הכל עולה כי אין תמות
וזכרות בעוף כי העשיר פגם
עונו במקום העושר והדל אינו
משיג לפגום בעליונות ברם יש
55 עני שנאחז בספירות העליונות
והוא השמח בחלקו ובבחינה זו
נקרא עשיר וב״ש שהיה הכהן
חלוק בכוונותיו בקרבן השבתות
וראשי חדשים וימים טובים על
60 הדרך אשר נבאר אם יגמור ה׳
על ידינו בספר טעמי המצות בלי
נדר ופרטות כוונות אלו נרמזו
ונמצאו בשיר המיוחד על הקרבן
בכל יום ולכל חילוק זמן כנדרש
65 שם וכן שיר של פגעים ובשהיו
מוסיפין על העיר והעזרות
הכל היה במזמורים ופסוקים
וכן אמרו בגמרא פסוקי דרחמי
כי קדש מוציא קדש[ii] וזהרורי
70 דשמשא הוא שמש ומגן ה׳ אלהים
אינון כשמשא ודאי והרבה יותר
ממה שכתוב כאן כתוב וערוך
בהקדמת הרב הגדול בעל
מעשה אפוד כי הפליא לדבר
75 מזה ואמר כי הקדמונים קראו
לארבעה ועשרים מקדש י״ה
ונתעצם בטענותיו והוכיח מפי
השמועה והראיה כי הקהלות
המתחננים בתחנונים מיוסדים
80 במאמרי הכתובים והמזמורים
הם מושגחים ונמלטים מכל פגע

same as the offering brought on the second day, and so throughout the days of the week. Similarly, the unification created by the rich person's offering differs from the unification caused by the poor person's offering. Therefore, blemishes do not apply to birds, 50R as they exist in the secret of "the way of the eagle in the sky" [Proverbs 30:19], a place without shells (kelipot). Moreover, the Holy One, blessed be He, is not exacting with the poor regarding the flaws of sins, as it is written, "For He has not despised nor 55R abhorred the affliction of the poor" [Psalms 22:25]. Therefore, whether male or female, all ascend, for there is no perfection or masculinity in birds, because the rich person's sin blemishes in the place of wealth, while the poor cannot reach to blemish in 60R the higher realms.[1] However, there is a poor person who grasps the higher sefirot—one who rejoices in his portion—and in this aspect he is called rich.

All the more so that the priest differed in his intentions regarding the offerings of Sabbaths, New 65R Moons, and festivals, in the manner that we will explain if the Lord enables us to complete the Book of Reasons for the Commandments, without making a vow. The particulars of these intentions were alluded to and found in the special song for the offering 70R each day and for each division of time as expounded there, as well as in the Song of Afflictions. When they would add to the city and the courtyards, everything was done with psalms and verses. Similarly, they said in the Talmud regarding verses of mercy, 75R that holiness brings forth holiness, and the rays of the sun are indeed like the sun, for "the LORD God is a sun and shield"[2] [Psalms 84:12].

Much more than what is written here is written and arranged in the introduction of the great 80R rabbi, author of Ma'aseh Efod, for he spoke won-

[1] The author presents an unusual mystical interpretation of why bird offerings (typically brought by the poor) don't need to be perfect: the wealthy person's spiritual reach extends to higher realms where their sins can cause damage, while the poor person's influence is more limited. This reverses conventional assumptions by suggesting spiritual disadvantages to wealth.

[2] The author is making a mystical point about emanation—just as sunrays share the essential nature of the sun itself, so too words derived from scripture retain the divine power of their source. This supports his argument for the superiority of prayers composed of biblical verses.

[i] The author provides a mystical interpretation of Proverbs 30:19 ('the way of an eagle in the sky'), suggesting it refers to a spiritual realm above the influence of negative forces (kelipot). This explains why bird offerings don't require the same perfection as animal offerings.

[ii] The phrase 'holiness brings forth holiness' expresses a fundamental principle that true holiness is generative—the words of scripture produce holy effects because they originate from divine holiness itself.

ובחתום דבריו כלל ואמר סוף
דבר העבודה האמיתית לאלהים
הוא העוסק בתורה ובנביאים
ובכתובים ואפילו ההגיה לבד
הוא סבה לקיום העולם בסגולה
ונתעצם הרבה להוכיח ולברר
אמתת דברים אלו וקיימו
ואושרו דבריו השלמים וכן רבים
שהעלום בספריהם ולא אאריך
להעתיק דבריהם כי בהא שוו
חכימיא וספריא ודרשיא ורישי עמא:[i]

drously about this and said that the ancients called the twenty-four books of the Bible "the sanctuary of Yah." He strengthened his arguments and proved from tradition and evidence that communities who supplicate with prayers founded on the sayings of Scripture and psalms are watched over and delivered from all harm. In concluding his words, he summarized and said, "In the end, the true service to God is engagement with Torah, Prophets, and Writings,[1] and even recitation alone is a means for the world's existence in a wondrous way." He greatly exerted himself to prove and clarify the truth of these matters, and his complete words were affirmed and validated, as were many who raised them in their books. I will not elaborate by copying their words, for in this the sages, scribes, preachers, and leaders of the people are in agreement.

פרק כ״ב

Chapter 22

עוד כתב ה״ר יונה החסיד כי
אין טוב לומר בשבחי המקום רק
פסוקים וכן פסק מהרר״י קארו
בסוף סי׳ קי״ג כי בהון בוצינין
מתנהרן ברעותא[ii] שהוא שפע
הכתר באחדותא שפע החכמה
באחוותא שפע הבינה והגינה
זרועיה תצמיח על כן אנכי חזון

Rabbi Jonah the Pious also wrote that it is best to use only scriptural verses when praising God, and Rabbi Joseph Karo similarly ruled at the end of section 113, for through them "the lights illuminate with divine will," which is the flow from Keter (Crown) in unity, the flow from Chokhmah (Wisdom) in brotherhood, and the flow from Binah (Understanding),[2] whose arms produce shelter.

[1] The author concludes by citing the Ma'aseh Efod to emphasize that even simple recitation of biblical texts has cosmic significance for maintaining the world's existence. This reflects the kabbalistic view that proper engagement with sacred texts sustains creation itself.

[2] This passage describes how biblical verses activate a flow of divine energy through the highest sefirot (divine emanations). The author uses technical kabbalistic terminology about the three highest divine attributes: Keter (Crown), Chokhmah (Wisdom), and Binah (Understanding).

[i] Cf. Proverbs 8:22-31 — The author draws on the personification of Wisdom in Proverbs 8 and applies it to the Torah, viewing the Torah as God's pre-existent instrument for creation. This interpretation follows rabbinic tradition that identifies the personified Wisdom in Proverbs with the Torah itself. | Cf. Zohar — The notion that 'the entire Torah consists of the names of the Holy One' is a fundamental kabbalistic concept found throughout the Zohar. Similarly, the description of divine emanation creating physical reality reflects core Zoharic cosmology about how the divine extends into the material world through successive emanations. | Cf. Ma'aseh Efod by Isaac ben Moses Halevi (Profiat Duran) — The author refers to this 14th-century work to bolster his argument that prayers composed of biblical verses have special efficacy and divine protection. This reflects the ongoing medieval and early modern debate about the relative value of biblical verses versus later poetic compositions in prayer. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Berakhot 32b — The reference to Levites singing on their platform (dukhan) connects to Talmudic discussions about Temple service. The author uses this to illustrate how different intentions can exist within formally identical ritual actions, just as different days' offerings might appear similar externally but differ in their spiritual effect.

[ii] This phrase uses technical Aramaic kabbalistic terminology to describe how biblical verses activate divine illumination. The phrase literally means 'through them, the lights are illuminated with divine will.'

הרבתי בראש ותוך וסוף של סדר
החרבן מכל יום וביום השבת יש
תקוני דודין ורעין ושם תקוני
הרעיה שהיא בינה ותקוני הכלה
שהיא המלכות[i] ותקוני רעיה הם
ממעלה למטה ותקוני הכלה הם
ממטה למעלה אמנם תקוני החתן
הם ביושר ותקוניו עד השוקים
מה שתקוני הרעה אינם מתפשטים
רק עד שדים שהם חסד גבורה
נכללים כאחד אל הבחינה
הממוצעת בגוה קו האמצעי
וסוד כל זה מתבאר למשכיל
והכל רמז שלמה בשיר השירים
בחכמה רבה והפיוטים קצרים
הם מכוונים לכוולת הפסוקים
ולהיות שמלבד תקוני אלו הכלה
תתקשט גם כן בכ״ב אותיות
שבפסוקי אשת חיל[ii] בידוע
סודם למביני החכמה לכן באו
שם בכתובים והכ״ו קשוטי
הכלה המתפרשים בפסוקי
ישעיהו ומתחילים יסיר ה׳
את תפארת העכסים[iii] יחזקאל
ביאר תקונם אחד לאחד גם הם
באו בסדר תשעה באב ותחנות
ובקשות שאינם פסוקים שבאו
במעירי שחר הנ״ל בדברים
העקרים הלכתי לי אל הגדולים
ורבים דא״א להשיב עליהם
ע״ד שאמרו בתוספת׳ דטהרות
אפשר להשאיל על היחיד וא״א
להשאיל על הרבים וכל אחד

Therefore, I have greatly incorporated scriptural verses at the beginning, middle, and end of the daily destruction liturgy. On the Sabbath, there are rectifications of "lovers and friends," including rectifications of the "Shepherdess" (which is Binah) and rectifications of the "Bride" (which is Malkhut). The rectifications of the Shepherdess descend from above to below, while the rectifications of the Bride ascend from below to above. The rectifications of the "Bridegroom," however, proceed in a direct line, extending down to the legs, whereas the rectifications of the Shepherdess extend only to the breasts,[1] which represent Chesed and Gevurah (Kindness and Strength) united as one in the intermediary aspect within the central column.[2] The secret of all this becomes clear to the discerning, and Solomon alluded to it all with great wisdom in the Song of Songs. The liturgical poems, though brief, are aligned with the full meaning of the biblical verses.

Besides these rectifications, the Bride is also adorned with the twenty-two letters found in the verses of "Woman of Valor" (Proverbs 31), as is known to those who understand wisdom, which is why they appear in the Scriptures. The twenty-six adornments of the Bride, which are explained in the verses of Isaiah beginning with "The Lord will remove the splendor of the anklets," and which Ezekiel clarified one by one, also appear in the Ninth of Av liturgy.

For supplications and petitions that are not scriptural verses, which appear in my "Illuminators of Dawn" prayer book[3] mentioned above, I turned to

[1] The author is using the metaphor of a human body to describe the different extents to which divine attributes (sefirot) manifest. This anthropomorphic approach is common in Kabbalah, where divine structures are often mapped onto a cosmic human form called Adam Kadmon.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the central column (kav ha'emtza'i) of the sefirot, where Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) balances and unites the right column of Chesed (Kindness) and the left column of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment).

[3] The author refers to his own prayer collection or prayer society called 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illumi-

[i] This passage employs kabbalistic terminology from the Zohar, where 'lovers and friends,' 'Shepherdess,' and 'Bride' are technical terms for divine configurations. In Kabbalah, Binah (Understanding) is the third sefirah, often portrayed as the Divine Mother, while Malkhut (Kingdom) is the tenth sefirah, representing the Divine Feminine in her worldly aspect.

[ii] The author refers to a kabbalistic tradition that connects the 22 verses of the 'Woman of Valor' poem (Proverbs 31:10-31) with the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet, seeing them as symbols for different aspects of the divine feminine.

[iii] The author refers to the 26 feminine ornaments listed in Isaiah 3:18-24, which kabbalists interpret as representing spiritual qualities of Malkhut (the divine feminine). The number 26 is significant as it corresponds to the numerical value of the divine name YHVH.

מהם הם דוגמא לכל דורות
ה״ה רבי נחוניא בן הקנה ורבי
אלעזר בן ערך ופרקי היכלות
מרבי ישמעאל ורבינו סעדיה
והרמב״ן והחכם קורדו״אירו
וגורי האר״י והחכם ד״אטו
והחכם מורי מפאנו זצ״ל ומהם
קרתי וששיתי מים זכים וברורים
הגם שהרבה הוספתי וגרעתי
בכל מקום לפי הענין המכוון
אלי ועכ״ז אם לא מפני הסבה
הכתובה בסוף החבור ההוא
לא הייתי מביא אותו אל בית
הדפוס. וגבול זה הגבילו
לנו הראשונים כי לא חדשו
מדעתם במקום שמצאו להתלות
בדברי חכמי המשנה הגמרא.
הנה בסדר התרעה בפה כתב
מהרר״י קארו באורח חיים סימן
תקע״ו ז״ל תקלו נוסח תפלה
שהיא הרכבת ב׳ תפלות של
ר׳ ישמעאל בן אלישע כ״ג ושל
חוני המעגל וכבר ידוע שבימי
התעניות של הגשמים הרבה
מהיום דהוא עסקם היה בקריאת
התורה ולהפטיר בנביאים כאשר
הובא בגמרא ובסי׳ תקע״ו
וכן המעמדות שהיו מתפללים
על הקרבן. ושליח צבור ראוי
להתפלל בתענית אמרו בגמרא
כי צריך שיהיה רגיל לקרא
בתורה ובנביאים ובכתובים
וכן חזינן במס׳ יומא פרק יום
הכפורים דרב הוה פסיק סדרא
קמיה דרבי ופרש״י מקרא של
נביאים ושל כתובים ובמקומות
הרבה נראה שעקר בקשותיהם
היו במקראות יבא שלום ינוח על
משכבו הגאון האר״י כי העידו
עליו תלמידיו במנהגיו שלא היה
חפץ רק בסדרי הראשונים וז״ל
התלמיד הכותב שם גם מורי לא
היה חפץ בשום פזמון או פיוט
מאותם שסדרו אחרונים רק מן
הראשונים כמו תפלת רבי עקיבא
ורבי ישמעאל ורבי אלעזר בן
ערך ורבי אלעזר הקלירי

the great authorities whose words cannot be questioned, as they said in the Tosefta of Taharot: "One can question the ruling of an individual but not the ruling of the many." Each of these authorities serves as a model for all generations: Rabbi Nechunya ben HaKanah, Rabbi Eleazar ben Arakh, the Hekhalot chapters of Rabbi Ishmael, Rabbeinu Saadia, Ramban, Rabbi Moses Cordovero, the disciples of the ARI, Rabbi Da'ato, and my teacher the sage of Fano, of blessed memory. From these sources I drew and drank pure, clear waters, though I added and subtracted much in each place according to the intended purpose. Nevertheless, if not for the reason written at the end of that work, I would not have brought it to press.

The early authorities established this boundary for us: they did not innovate on their own in places where they could rely on the words of the Mishnaic and Talmudic sages. Thus, regarding the order of oral blasts, Rabbi Joseph Karo wrote in Orach Chaim section 576: "They established a prayer formula combining two prayers: one from Rabbi Ishmael ben Elisha the High Priest and one from Honi HaMe'agel." It is well known that during rain fast days, much of their time was spent reading Torah and the Prophetic portions, as mentioned in the Talmud and in section 576, and similarly with the Ma'amadot prayers that were recited for the sacrifices.

Regarding the prayer leader on a fast day, the Talmud states that he should be someone familiar with Torah, Prophets, and Writings. Thus we see in Tractate Yoma, Chapter "Yom HaKippurim," that Rav would recite the biblical portion before Rabbi, which Rashi explains as readings from the Prophets and Writings. In many places, it appears that their primary petitions were scriptural passages.

May peace come and rest upon the resting place of the Gaon, the ARI, for his disciples testified about his practices that he desired only the arrangements of the early authorities. As the disciple wrote there: "My teacher had no desire for any hymn or liturgical poem composed by later authorities, only those of the early ones such as the prayer of Rabbi Akiva, Rabbi Ishmael, Rabbi Eleazar ben Arakh, and Rabbi Eleazar HaKalir (about whom he testified that he had some relationship with Rabbi Eleazar the son of Rabbi Shimon). This is because they were composed nators of Dawn), which appears in multiple places throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

(שהוא העיד עליו שהיה לו איזה
90 התיחסות עם רבי אלעזר ברבי
שמעון)[i] ודוגמתם לפי שנתקנו
על דרך האמת אך לא אחרונים
שלא ידעו דרך הקבלה ואינם
יודעים מה שאומרים וטועים
95 בסדר דבורם בלי ידיעה כלל
ועיקר ולא היה אומרם כלל
ובפרט יגדל אלהים חי ודוי
אשמנו באומר ובפועל וכו׳ וכל
שאר ודוים דר׳ נסים ואדרו״טיל
100 וכיוצא לא היה רוצה לאומרם
כלל עכ״ל דוגמא לזה אמרו
במס׳ כלים אין לך מחשבה
מועלת אלא מחשבת בעלים שהם
בני דעה:[ii]

according to the path of truth, unlike later ones who did not know the way of Kabbalah and do not understand what they are saying,[1] making errors in the order of their words without any knowledge whatsoever. He would not recite them at all, particularly 'Yigdal Elohim Chai' and the confession 'Ashamnu' with its 'in word and deed,' etc., and all other confessions by Rabbi Nissim and Adriotil and the like—he would not recite them at all." This exemplifies what they said in Tractate Kelim: "No thought is effective except the thought of the owners who have understanding." 90R 95R 100R

פרק כ״ג

Chapter 23

אם יאמר אומר מצאתי און לי
בשבחי כי אספתי חמרים חמרים
מאגדות הגמ׳ ומדרשים חצונים
אשיב כדאמר רבי טרפון לרבי
5 אלעזר המודעי ביומא עד מתי
אתה מגבב דברים ומביא עלינו
ואומר כי מלבד שזו מלאכת

If someone should say, "I have found strength for myself in my praises, for I have gathered heaps upon heaps from the aggadot of the Talmud and external midrashim," I would respond as Rabbi Tarfon said to Rabbi Elazar HaModa'i in Yoma: "How long will you continue to collect sayings and bring them upon us?"[2] And I say that besides this being the 5R

[1] This passage reflects the ARI's (and the author's) preference for liturgy composed with proper kabbalistic knowledge. This approach became influential in Jewish prayer traditions, particularly in Italy and Safed, where kabbalistic intentions (kavvanot) were considered essential to effective prayer.

[2] This is a reference to a Talmudic exchange where Rabbi Tarfon criticizes Rabbi Elazar HaModa'i for excessive compilation of sayings. The author uses this as a rhetorical device to criticize those who merely collect aggadic material without deeper understanding.

[i] This refers to a tradition, attributed to the ARI, that Rabbi Eleazar HaKalir (an early liturgical poet from approximately the 6th-7th century CE) had some mystical connection with Rabbi Eleazar son of Rabbi Shimon (a Tanna from the 2nd century CE). This claim suggests a spiritual continuity between these figures separated by centuries, possibly implying reincarnation.

[ii] Cf. Song of Songs — The author sees Song of Songs as a mystical text that encodes secrets about the relationships between divine attributes (sefirot), particularly Tiferet (the Bridegroom), Binah (the Shepherdess), and Malkhut (the Bride) | Cf. Proverbs 31 (Woman of Valor) — The author interprets the Woman of Valor passage as a kabbalistic text where each verse corresponds to one of the 22 Hebrew letters, creating a complete system of adornments for the divine feminine (Malkhut) | Cf. Isaiah 3:18-24 — The author interprets Isaiah's list of 26 feminine adornments as representing spiritual qualities of the divine feminine (Malkhut) rather than merely physical ornaments | Cf. Ezekiel's visions — The author suggests that Ezekiel's visions contain detailed explanations of the spiritual qualities represented by the adornments mentioned in Isaiah | Cf. Hekhalot literature — The author considers the mystical Hekhalot literature, which describes heavenly palaces and ascent experiences, as a legitimate source for liturgical composition | Cf. Tosefta Taharot — The author uses this citation to justify relying on multiple traditional authorities rather than introducing personal innovations in prayer composition

השיר היא ולא חכמה וברננה
דשותא לא מפקינן רחמי ואם
קצת מן הראשונים עשו כן אין
דנין איש מהאיש כדאמרי׳ במס׳
יומא פרח ח׳ כי הם היו יודעים
למתח את י״ם הגד״ול[i] כדאמרי׳
בירושלמי בפרק אין מעמידין
על רבי מונא ורבי תנחום עוד
ידענו כי אפי׳ אגדות אשר באו
בגמרא הם שיחתם של תלמידי
חכמים וכל שכן שאר האגדות
שחוץ ממנה וקראום בגמרא
מילי דבדיחותא בשמחה של
מצוה כדאמרי׳ בשבת פרק
במה מדליקין בפי׳ שמחה של
מצוה ובפסחים כי רבה מקמי
דפתח להו לרבנן אמר מילתא
דבדיחותא ובדחי רבנן לסוף
יתיב באימתא ופתח בשמעתא.
וזה נראה ברור מדברי רש״י
שכתב למעלה על מה שבא שם
שאילו שאלה זו מרבי תנחום
מהו לכבות בוצינא דנורא מקמי
באישא בשבתא ופתח ואמר
באינון מילי דאגדתא הנזכר
שם ושם כתב רש״י כך היו
רגילים לפתוח באגדה תחלה
שהיא דומה לשאלה ובגמרא
דירושלמי דמס׳ הוריות פ״ג
דרשו על בעלי אגדה פסוק ולא
ישליטנו האלהים לאכול ממנו.
עוד רב נחמן דהוא מחסידי

craft of poetry rather than wisdom[A]—and with the jubilation of mere talk, we do not elicit mercy[B]—and even if some of the early authorities did so, we do not judge one person by another,[1] as we say in Tractate Yoma, chapter 8, for they knew how to stretch "the Great Sea" [of Torah], as is said in the Jerusalem Talmud in the chapter "Ein Ma'amidin" concerning Rabbi Muna and Rabbi Tanchum.[C] 10R 15R

Furthermore, we know that even the aggadot that appear in the Talmud are merely the casual conversation of the sages, and all the more so the other aggadot outside of it. They called them in the Talmud "matters of levity," like "joy of a mitzvah," as is explained in Shabbat, chapter "Bameh Madlikin," regarding the definition of "joy of a mitzvah." And in Pesachim, before Rabbah would begin teaching the rabbis, he would say something humorous to cheer up the rabbis, and afterwards he would sit in awe and begin the lesson. This is clearly evident from Rashi's words, who wrote above, concerning what appears there about the question from Rabbi Tanchum about whether it is permitted to extinguish a lamp because of danger on Shabbat, and he began by speaking about those matters of aggadah mentioned there. And there Rashi wrote: "Thus they were accustomed to begin with aggadah first, which resembles the question." And in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Horayot, chapter 3, they expounded regarding the masters of aggadah the verse: "God does not allow him to enjoy it" [Ecclesiastes 6:2]. 20R 25R 30R 35R

Moreover, Rav Nachman, who was among the pious of Babylonia, is reported in chapter "Bnei Ha'ir"

[A] Or: "besides this being mere poetic craftsmanship and not true wisdom" — This alternate translation more clearly conveys the author's dismissive attitude toward poetry as compared to genuine wisdom, emphasizing the contrast between artistic composition and true spiritual knowledge.

[B] Or: "and through joyful speech alone we cannot evoke divine mercy" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the theological implication that mere pleasurable speech cannot effectively bring about divine compassion, which requires more substantive spiritual content.

[C] Or: "as is mentioned in the Jerusalem Talmud in the chapter "Ein Ma'amidin" about Rabbi Muna and Rabbi Tanchum" — This is a slight refinement that better reflects the reference to a text rather than a direct quotation.

[1] This phrase refers to the rabbinic principle that we cannot necessarily apply the same standards to different individuals. The author is suggesting that while earlier sages could properly incorporate aggadic material, contemporary authors lack the same capacity.

[i] This appears to be a metaphor where "the Great Sea" represents the vast expanse of Torah knowledge that earlier sages knew how to "stretch" or expand through their deep understanding. The author suggests that previous generations had greater capacity to properly incorporate aggadic material.

דבבל אמרו בפרק בני העיר
שלא רצה להספיד ההוא צורבא
דרבנן דלא תני שמעתא הגם
דהוה תני ספרא וספרי ותוספתא
וכל שכן שלא היה מספידו אם
היה לומד באגדה לבד ואם
יצא מפי אומר לכנות הפיוטים
והקינות המתחדשים בשם דברי
שיחה הגם לפי דעת הממציאן
שתו בשמים פיהם במילי דלא
מקניאן ולא ממסרן לכל שליח
שותא דא אפיקו על מין שיחה
הנזכר אשר מזה תרדנה עינינו
דמעה כי שחה לעפר נפשנו
נפש דוד באשר דרש הרב
הגאון קורדוא״רו[i] על פסוק
אקים את סוכת דוד הנופלת
שתמיד בעונותינו נופלת ופירשו
בזהר פ׳ פקודי שהיא יורדת
דרך המעלות ממשנה לברייתא
ואמר כי ירדה מהברייתא
לאמוראים ומאמוראים לרבנן
סבוראי ומרבנן סבוראי לגאונים
ומגאונים לנגידים ומנגידים
לחכמים עד כי שרו חכימיא
למהוי כספריא וספריא כעמא
דארעא ועמא דארעא אזלא
ומדלדלא ואין דורש ומבקש
וכו׳ עד כי גיורא בשמי
שמיא[ii] ועולם הפך ראינו כי
דברי אגדה ושיחה נעלם עתה
בראש כל חולה לתהלה וקצת מן
החיים המתהלכים תחת השמש
הולכים על דרך שיחתן זה

to have refused to eulogize a certain rabbinic scholar who did not study halakhic teachings, even though he studied Sifra, Sifrei, and Tosefta, and certainly he would not have eulogized him if he had studied only aggadah. And if a speaker should categorize newly composed liturgical poems and lamentations as "mere talk"—even though according to their creators' intent they have "set their mouth in heaven" with matters that are not transferable or transmissible to any messenger—they have cast such speech in a manner that causes our eyes to shed tears, for "our soul is bowed down to the dust" [Psalms 44:26], [A]the soul of David, as the great Rabbi Cordovero expounded on the verse "I will raise up the fallen booth of David" [Amos 9:11], which continually falls because of our sins.[1]

It is explained in the Zohar, Parashat Pekudei, that it descends through levels—from Mishnah to Baraita—and he said that it descended from Baraita to the Amoraim, and from the Amoraim to the Rabbanan Savorai, and from the Rabbanan Savorai to the Geonim, and from the Geonim to the Negidim [leaders], and from the Negidim to the sages, until the sages began to be like scribes, and the scribes like common people, and the common people going and becoming impoverished, with no one seeking or inquiring, etc., until a convert is in the highest heavens. And we have seen the world turned upside down, for words of aggadah and conversation are now concealed at the head of every sick person to praise, and some of the living who walk under the sun follow this path of conversation. And among them are those whose light and name are pure, and they prefer it as one of the heavenly hosts,[B] and with their throat

[A]Or: "our soul is bowed down to the dust—the Davidic soul" — This alternative better conveys the mystical concept of 'soul of David' as representing the collective Jewish spiritual essence rather than simply referencing the biblical King David personally.

[B]Or: "And among them are those whose luminous reputation is unblemished, yet they value

[1]This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the divine presence (Shekhinah, symbolized by the 'booth of David') descends through successive historical periods due to Israel's sins. This descent parallels the decline in spiritual understanding through generations of scholars.

[i]This refers to Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), the prominent kabbalist from Safed whose works, including Pardes Rimmonim, were highly influential in systematizing Kabbalah. The author of Ma'avar Yabok appears to be drawing on Cordovero's interpretation of spiritual decline through successive generations.

[ii]This phrase "until a convert is in the highest heavens" appears to be a proverbial expression indicating a complete inversion of the proper order of things—suggesting that the world has been turned upside down when those with less traditional standing occupy the highest positions in spiritual matters.

ומנייהו דנהורא דשמיהו בריא
ועדיף להו כאחד מצבאי המרום
וביה בגרון לשם יקראו ואלומי
אלמי לקליהו באמור אליו אנא
נפשאי כתבת ויהבת[i] ולית סוגין
דיהא מיניה על דרך שאמרו
בירושלמי דבתרא. את כל זאת
חזיתי ואספר להגיד לכם אלופי
ובני ורעי כי לא ימושו חוקי
דברי הנבואה מפיכם ומנייהו
לא תזועו:[ii]

they call out to the Name, and they forcefully silence those who say to them, "I myself have written and given, and there is no fence that can come from it," as they said in the Jerusalem Talmud at the end of Bava Batra.

All this I have seen, and I tell it to declare to you, my teachers, my sons, and my friends, that the statutes of the words of prophecy shall not depart from your mouth,[1] and from them you shall not waver.

פרק כ״ד

Chapter 24

כתב מהרר״י קארו בסי׳ תר״ו
תקנת קדמונינו שלא להוציא שם
רע על המתים[iii] פן ח״ו יגביר
בקטרוגו כחות הדינים עליו שכן
המתין הקב״ה שלא לעורר כחות
הדין במבול בשבעת ימי אבלו
של מתושלח הצדיק[iv] מלבד

Rabbi Joseph Karo wrote in section 606 that our ancestors instituted a practice not to speak ill of the dead, lest, heaven forbid, one strengthen the forces of judgment against them through accusation. Indeed, the Holy One, blessed be He, waited to unleash the flood during the seven days of mourning for the righteous Methuselah, besides the fact that there was such talk as if it were equal to the celestial hosts" — This alternative better captures the irony in the original text, where even respected scholars sometimes inappropriately elevate simple speech to the level of celestial wisdom.

[1] This echoes biblical language from Joshua 1:8 about the constancy of Torah study. The author concludes by encouraging adherence to authentic prophetic tradition rather than the poetic elaborations he has been criticizing.

[i] This Aramaic phrase approximates to "I myself have written and given," suggesting that these scholars claim their compositions as their own creation rather than as transmission of traditional wisdom. The author criticizes this self-referential approach to religious writing.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The author references this Zoharic passage to illustrate the spiritual decline through successive generations of Jewish scholarship, from Tannaim to his own time, suggesting that with each decline, authentic mystical understanding becomes more obscured by mere talk. | Cf. Amos 9:11 — The author mentions Cordovero's interpretation of this verse to illustrate the decline of authentic Jewish mystical tradition (the 'booth of David'), which has 'fallen' through successive generations but will eventually be restored. This serves as a metaphor for the decline in quality of religious discourse from profound mystical insight to mere talk. | Cf. Tractate Yoma — The author uses this reference to criticize those who merely compile aggadic material without deeper understanding. This serves as a proof text for his argument against valuing quantity over quality in religious discourse. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — While criticizing others for merely collecting aggadot, the author implicitly defends his own compilation method in Ma'avar Yabok as being qualitatively different, suggesting that his work organizes material according to authentic mystical principles rather than simply gathering entertaining stories. | Cf. Rabbi Moses Cordovero's works — The author aligns himself with Cordovero's kabbalistic perspective, viewing history as a process of spiritual decline where each generation is further removed from direct mystical understanding. This framework justifies the author's concern about the proliferation of mere poetic compositions that lack genuine mystical insight.

[iii] This reflects the Jewish ethical principle of not speaking ill of the dead (לא לדבר רע על המתים), which is both a matter of respect and, as the text explains, has spiritual implications for the deceased's soul.

[iv] According to rabbinic tradition, the Flood was delayed for seven days to allow for the mourning period of the righteous Methuselah, who died just before the Flood began. This tradition appears in Genesis Rabbah 32:7.

שהיה גם כן למעלה מבול רוחני׳
ופן תצטער נפשו העולה ויורדת
המתין לו והם דברי המרדכי 10R
במסכתא יומא ויש סמך לדבר
בהגדה דרבי חנינא פ׳ ואתחנן
ושם אמר עוד כי כשאמרו למשה
שיש רגע לפטירתו פתח ואמר
ברוך שמו חי וקיים לעולם ועד 15R
ומזה ילמד כל אדם. וקריאת
שמע סמוך למיתה הוא תקון
ודאי להיותו תקון רמ״ח אברי
הקומה העליונה ברמ״ח תיבות
שבו בנודע[i] וכל שכן אם יהיה 20R
בזמנו כדאמרי׳ על זה אמרו
בלבבכם על משכבכם ובפרט אם
יכוין במספר מפקד תיבותיו מה
שכתבנו בסוף מאמר שפתי רננות
ובששים הפסקותיו[ii] ליתן ריוח 25R
בין הדבקים שבין אחורי זעיר
לנוקביה כנודע למבינים שבהם
מתמתקים בחות הדין ומצננים
אשו של גיהנם למטה וכן אמרו
שם כי הוא ביקש מחילה מישראל 30R
חצי שעה קודם מיתתו ומה יעשו
אזובי קיר.[iii] ונראה לי ממה
שמצאתי בפ׳ ויקהל בזהר כי
ממונה דקאים לסטר דרום אומר
נגד התפלה דסלקא מגו עקו 35R
ותבירא דלבא קודשא בריך
הוא יחוס לקבלך ועלך יתמלי
רחמין שטוב לומר בזה בשנפטר

also a spiritual flood occurring in the upper realms. And lest the soul of the departed, which ascends and descends, be distressed, He waited for him. These are the words of Mordecai in Tractate Yoma, and there is support for this in the Aggadah of Rabbi Hanina in the portion Va'etchanan. There it is also stated that when they told Moses there was but a moment until his death, he began by saying, "Blessed is His name, who lives and endures forever," and from this every person should learn.

Reciting the Shema near the time of death is certainly a rectification,[1] for it repairs the 248 limbs of the supernal structure through its 248 words, as is known. This is especially so if recited at the proper time, as they said regarding the verse "Speak in your hearts upon your beds." Particularly if one focuses on the number of its words as we wrote at the end of the discourse "Lips of Joy," and on its sixty pauses which create space between the attached aspects,[2] specifically between the back of Zeir Anpin and its feminine counterpart, as is known to those who understand, for through these the forces of judgment are sweetened[3] and the fires of Gehenna below are cooled. They also said there that Moses requested forgiveness from Israel half an hour before his death, so what should ordinary mortals do?[4]

It seems to me, from what I found in the Zohar portion Vayakhel, that the appointed angel who stands to the south speaks against the prayer that rises from distress and brokenness of heart: "May the Holy One, blessed be He, have compassion upon

[1] The Hebrew term 'tikkun' (תקון) has mystical significance beyond simple 'repair'—it refers to cosmic restoration and the harmonization of divine forces through human ritual actions.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that pauses in prayer create 'cosmic space' that allows divine energies to flow properly between different spiritual realms. The technical terminology refers to the relationship between masculine and feminine aspects of divinity.

[3] The kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgments' (המתקת הדינים) refers to transforming divine severity into mercy through proper spiritual actions, a central concept in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death rituals.

[4] The Hebrew uses the idiom 'hyssop of the wall' (אזובי קיר) from 1 Kings 4:33, contrasting humble plants with the mighty cedar, to express human insignificance compared to Moses—if even Moses needed forgiveness, how much more so ordinary people.

[i] The Shema prayer and its accompanying blessings traditionally contain 248 words, corresponding to the 248 positive commandments in Torah and the 248 limbs said to be in the human body according to rabbinic tradition.

[ii] This refers to a kabbalistic practice of pausing sixty times during the recitation of the Shema, corresponding to specific mystical intentions (kavvanot).

[iii] A biblical idiom from 1 Kings 4:33, literally "the hyssop that grows in the wall," used figuratively to refer to ordinary people in contrast to the great (like Moses in this context), suggesting "if even Moses needed to ask forgiveness, how much more so ordinary people."

מן החולה אחר בקירתו ויוסיף
40 על זה התפלה שעשה אברהם
אבינו ושרה בעת צרה הנזכרת
במדרש תנחומא שהוא רבונו של
עולם עשה למען רחמיך וחסדיך
ולמען שמך הגדול ואל תביש
45 החולה הזה מסברו וכל חולי
עמך ישראל יהיו בכלל הברכה
והחנינה וכתוב שם מאן דבעי
צלותא בצערא יתהפך ליה דינא
לרחמי וזה אמר על המתפלל
50 על חלומו ואם החולה הוא מבין
דברי חכמים טוב להרגילו לומר
לפעמים תפלה נוראה שבא
בספר התקונים אשר הדפסתיה
במעירי שחר דף רמ״ב עמוד א׳.
55 ולמען לא תהיה שגורה בפי הכל
לא הדפסנוה בסוף סדר שבת
קדש ששם היה מקומה. עוד ממה
שאמר להם בבקשה מכם זכרו
אותי ואת עצמותי בשתכנסו
60 לארץ למדנו שבכל מקום קדוש
ועת רצון זכות יהיה לנפטר
להזכיר נשמתו וכבר נתננו טעם
לשבח לזה פרק ג׳ ממאמר ג׳
וממה שכתב הרמב״ן ז״ל בסוף
65 פ׳ ויחי נראה שאין להזכיר
סמוך למיתתו שם רשעים ובפרט
אם הם אחיו או קרוביו ע״ש
על פסוק שמה קברו את יצחק
ואמרו בספרי פ׳ פנחס והובא
70 בילקוט פ׳ ואתחנן על פסוק
כבוד ה׳ יאספך מלמד שהמקום
נכנס בנשמותיהם של צדיקים
וכונסם בנחת רוח ובכבוד
ואמר שמיתת כל הצדיקים גם

you and may you be filled with mercy."[C] It is good to say something like this when departing from a 40R sick person after visiting them. One should add to this the prayer composed by our father Abraham and Sarah in their time of distress, mentioned in Midrash Tanchuma: "Master of the Universe, act for the sake of Your mercies and kindnesses, and for the sake of 45R
Your great Name, and do not disappoint this sick person from their hope, and may all the sick of Your people Israel be included in the blessing and grace."
It is written there that one who seeks prayer in distress will have judgment transformed to mercy for 50R them.[D] This was said regarding one who prays about a troubling dream.

If the sick person understands the words of the sages, it is good to accustom them to occasionally recite the awesome prayer found in the Book of Tikku- 55R nim, which I printed in Me'irei Shachar, page 242, column 1. In order that it not be fluently known by everyone,[1] I did not print it at the end of the Sabbath liturgy, where it would have belonged.

Furthermore, from what Moses said to them, "I 60R ask of you, remember me and my bones when you enter the land," we learn that in every holy place and favorable time, there is merit for the departed when their soul is mentioned.[E] I have already given a praiseworthy reason for this in chapter 3 of the third 65R discourse. And from what Nachmanides, of blessed memory, wrote at the end of the portion Vayechi, it appears that one should not mention the names of wicked people near the time of death, especially if they are one's brothers or relatives. See his commen- 70R tary there on the verse "There they buried Isaac."

In Sifrei, portion Pinchas, and brought in Yalkut, portion Va'etchanan, on the verse "The glory of the Lord will gather you in," it teaches that the Divine

[C] Or: "The Holy One, blessed be He, will show compassion toward you and fill you with mercy" — This alternative uses future tense rather than subjunctive mood, which might better reflect the confidence expressed in the Aramaic original that divine compassion will actually occur, rather than merely expressing a wish.

[D] Or: "judgment will be transformed into mercy for them" — This alternative uses passive voice which might better reflect the Aramaic construction, emphasizing the transformation process itself rather than the person experiencing it.

[E] Or: "to mention their soul" — This alternative preserves the infinitive construction of the Hebrew original, emphasizing the active practice of mentioning the soul rather than the passive fact of it being mentioned.

[1] This reflects the traditional rabbinic approach of keeping certain powerful prayers somewhat restricted, based on the concern that esoteric prayers might be misused or misunderstood if too widely distributed.

היא מפי הקב״ה שנאמר והלך לפניך צדקך ונוטל נשמתו בנחת. וממה שהובא בילמדנו ובילקוט פ׳ חקת במיתת אהרן במדרש תהלים ובילקוט משלי ממקומות אלו נראה כי ראוי לצדיק לקבל עליו המיתה ברצונו כקרבן[i] הנאמר בו לרצונו לפני ה׳ וכן משה סיבב עמו הקב״ה בדברים ובסיבובים עד כי מרצון נפשו השלים עצמו למיתה והוא אמר פ׳ הצור תמים פעלו כשידע ודאי שנקנסה עליו מיתה כדאיתא במדרש רבה:[ii]

Presence enters into the souls of the righteous and gathers them with gentleness and honor. It states that the death of all righteous people comes directly from the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is said, “And your righteousness shall go before you,” and He takes their soul gently.[1]

From what is brought in Yelamdeinu and Yalkut in the portion Chukat concerning Aaron’s death, in Midrash Tehillim, and in Yalkut Mishlei, from these places it appears that it is fitting for a righteous person to willingly accept death as a sacrifice, as it is said, “of his own free will before the Lord.” Similarly, the Holy One, blessed be He, engaged with Moses in discussions and circuitous conversations until he willingly completed himself for death. And Moses said the verse “The Rock, His work is perfect” when he knew with certainty that death had been decreed upon him, as is found in Midrash Rabbah.

פרק כ״ה

Chapter 25

מצאתי מדרש תהלים שבשעה שהיה משה עולה לרקיע היה אומר שיר של פגעים[iii] ויפה עשה להקדים התפלה והפגיעה כי היתה צורתו צרה עם מלאכי

I found in Midrash Tehillim that when Moses was ascending to heaven, he would recite the Song of Afflictions[2] [Psalm 91]. He acted wisely by preparing himself with prayer and supplication, for his form was constricted among the high angels and celestial

[1] The text presents death for the righteous as a gentle, peaceful transition rather than a harsh judgment. This positive reframing of death is characteristic of Ma’avar Yabok’s approach throughout.
[2] I’ve included the clarification that this refers to Psalm 91, which is not stated explicitly in the original text but would be known to the intended audience.

[i] This presents a profound theological concept that the righteous should accept death willingly as a sacrifice (korban), transforming what might be seen as a punishment into a sacred offering to God.

[ii] Cf. Tractate Yoma — The citation to the Mordechai’s commentary on Tractate Yoma provides halakhic support for the prohibition against speaking ill of the dead, connecting it to the divine precedent of delaying the flood during Methuselah’s mourning period. | Cf. Midrash Tanchuma — The text references a prayer from Midrash Tanchuma attributed to Abraham and Sarah, suggesting it as an appropriate prayer when leaving a sick person, connecting ancient precedent to contemporary practice. | Cf. Zohar portion Vayakhel — The reference to the Zohar provides mystical context for prayer on behalf of the sick, suggesting that prayers arising from distress have special efficacy and explaining the spiritual mechanics behind them. | Cf. Book of Tikkunim — The author references a prayer from the Tikkunei Zohar that he published in his own work Me’irei Shachar, which he considers particularly powerful but deliberately kept somewhat esoteric by not including it in the standard Sabbath liturgy. | Cf. Nachmanides on Vayechi — This reference to Nachmanides’ commentary provides a scriptural basis for the practice of not mentioning wicked people near the time of death, especially if they are relatives of the dying person. | Cf. Sifrei, portion Pinchas — This reference provides a scriptural and midrashic basis for understanding death as a gentle gathering of the righteous by God, rather than a harsh judgment, supporting the text’s view of death as potentially positive for the righteous.

[iii] This refers to Psalm 91, which was known in rabbinic tradition as ‘Song of Afflictions’ or ‘Song of Demons’ (Shir Shel Pega’im) and was believed to have special protective powers against harmful spiritual forces.

מרום ומשרתי עליונים בהיותו
בתוך הענן ומתקרב והולך אל
האלהים פ׳ בשלח וכן אמרו
בגמרין מתירא אני שמא ישרפוני
וכו׳ עד כי אחז פני כסא ונשגב
מהם כי ידע שמו ברוך הוא
ובסוד ידיעת שם מ״ב[i] בפרט קם
ועלה וכשנבין במספר ההזאות
של פר ושעיר של יום הכפורים
שהיו מ״ג במספר שם מ״ב עם
הכולל[ii] ועם שפיכת היסוד היו
מ״ד במספ׳ דם[iii] הנה שבח שם
מ״ב מהפך הדם לחלב[iv] וכן טבע
האשה בימי עבורה שהדם נעבר
ונעשה חלב ולמיתוק הנעשה
לפני ולפנים בידוע לזוכה
בו יחשבו העומדי׳ המקריב
נשמתו קרבן לה׳ בבח שם מ״ב
המזכירים עליו בנזכר. וראוי
בעת זכירת שם מ״ב ליתן ריוח
בין כל שני תיבות בגון אנא
בכח. ואח״כ גדולת ימינך.
ואח״כ תתיר צרורה. לרמוז
שש כנפים הראשונות בשתים
יכסה פניו. והשניות בשתים
יכסה רגליו. ובשלישית בשתים
יעופף[v] וכן עד תשלום כל סדר
השם. וזה לבד מה שכתבנו
ולחכימיא ברמיזא ובכח שם זה
עם חסדי ה׳ אשר גברו עליו

ministers when he was within the cloud, drawing ever closer to God, as mentioned in Parashat Beshalach. Similarly, our sages stated in the Gemara: "I fear they might burn me," etc., until "he grasped the Throne of Glory and was protected from them, for he knew the blessed Name." Through the secret knowledge of the 42-letter Name in particular, he arose and ascended. 10R

When we consider the number of sprinklings of the bull and goat on Yom Kippur, which were 43 (corresponding to the 42-letter Name plus the collective[1]), and with the pouring at the foundation there were 44, matching the numerical value of "dam" (blood), we see how the praise of the 42-letter Name transforms blood into milk.[2] This mirrors the natural process in a woman during pregnancy, when blood is transformed and becomes milk. For the sweetening that occurs "within the innermost sanctuary,"[3] as is known to those who merit it, those who stand by will consider the one who offers his soul as a sacrifice to God through the power of the 42-letter Name that is recited over him, as mentioned. 15R 20R 25R

When reciting the 42-letter Name, one should leave a space between each pair of words, such as "Ana Bekoach," then "Gedulat Yemincha," then "Tatir Tzerura"—symbolizing the six wings [of the seraphim]: with the first two he covers his face, with the second two he covers his feet, and with the third two he flies. Continue this pattern until completing 30R 35R

[1]The Hebrew term 'im hakolel' refers to a kabbalistic numerological concept where one adds a number representing the whole in addition to the sum of the parts.
[2]This metaphor describes the kabbalistic concept of sweetening harsh judgments (blood) into mercy (milk), a fundamental principle in Jewish mysticism where divine names are used to transform spiritual qualities.
[3]The Hebrew 'lifnei v'lifnim' literally means 'before and within' and refers to the Holy of Holies in the Temple, but is used here metaphorically to indicate the deepest spiritual realms.

[i]This refers to the mystical 42-letter Divine Name (Shem Mem-Bet), which was considered one of the most powerful divine names in Kabbalah. Knowledge of this name was believed to provide protection and spiritual power.
[ii]The author is drawing a kabbalistic connection between the 42-letter Divine Name (plus one for the 'collective' or whole) and the 43 sprinklings of blood performed by the High Priest in the Temple on Yom Kippur, suggesting that these ritual actions correspond to mystical realities.
[iii]The Hebrew word for blood (דם) has the numerical value of 44 (ד=4, מ=40), which the author connects to the 44 ritual actions in the Temple (43 sprinklings plus the pouring at the foundation).
[iv]This is a kabbalistic concept that the proper use of divine names can transform harsh judgment (symbolized by blood) into mercy and sustenance (symbolized by milk).
[v]This refers to Isaiah's vision of the seraphim (Isaiah 6:2) who have six wings: with two they cover their face, with two they cover their feet, and with two they fly. The author is connecting the structure of the 42-letter name prayer (Ana Bekoach) to this angelic imagery.

נעשו לו למשה המלאכים חברים
והסכימו כי יותן לו תורה ונתנו
בידו טובם בסוד לקחת מתנות
באדם[i] על הדרך שסיבב הקב״ה
בבאו משעיר ובהפיעו מהר
פארן כנדרש בזהר במקומו פוק
חזי רחימו׳ דמרן אם כן שיר
זה יהיה סולם גם כן להעלות
נשמת הנפטר וטוב שבכל עת
שיאמר פסוק כי בי חשק יכוין
לשם הנזכר שהוא בגימטריא כ״י
ב״י ולכן אמר הכתוב אחר כך
אשגבהו כי ידע שמי. ובמדרש
רבה פרשת חקת ובתנחומא
מצינו שפסוק היחוד מאכיל
המחבלים[ii] שהיה אומר בלעם
אם נתקל אחד מהם מכלום או
אם מחבלים באים ליגע באחד
מהם ממליך לקודשא בריך הוא
לא ישכב עד יאכל טרף כשהוא
אומר ה׳ אחד נאכלין המחבלין
לפניו ומלחשין אחריו ברוך
שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד
ובורחין והוא נסמך בקריאת
שמע משומרי היום לשומרי
הלילה ושומרי הלילה מוסרין
אותו לשומרי הבקר וזה יהיה
אחד מהטעמים שהנהיגו לאומרו
סמוך ליציאת נשמה מלבד
כמה נוראות גדולות ובצורות
הנכללים בב׳ פסוקים אלו
ובסדר ק״ש כלו ובגמרא דר״ה
אמרינן כיון שאמר ובתורתך
כתוב וגו׳ שוב אינו צריך.
וממה דאמרו בירושלמי במדרש

the entire sequence of the Name. This is beyond what we have already written, and for the wise, a hint is sufficient.[1]

Through the power of this Name, together with God's abundant kindness toward him, the angels became Moses' companions and agreed that the Torah should be given to him. They placed their goodness in his hand, in fulfillment of "You have received gifts among men," in the manner that the Holy One, blessed be He, arranged when "He came from Seir and shone forth from Mount Paran," as expounded in the Zohar in its place. Go and see the love of our Master![2]

Similarly, this song [Psalm 91] serves as a ladder to elevate the soul of the deceased. It is beneficial that whenever one recites the verse "Because he has set his love upon Me" [Psalm 91:14], one should have in mind the aforementioned Name, which has the numerical value of "ki vi chashak" (כי בי חשק), and therefore Scripture continues, "I will set him on high because he knows My name."

In Midrash Rabbah, Parashat Chukat, and in Tanchuma, we find that the verse of unity [Shema] feeds the destructive forces.[3] Balaam would say: If one of them stumbles in any way, or if destructive forces come to touch one of them, he proclaims the kingship of the Holy One, blessed be He: "He will not rest until he consumes prey" [Numbers 23:24]. When one says "The Lord is One," the destructive forces are consumed before him, and they whisper after him, "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever," and then flee.

The person is entrusted in the recitation of the Shema from the guardians of the day[4] to the guardians of the night, and the guardians of the [1] This translates the Hebrew expression 'l'chakimaya b'remiza' which indicates that certain mystical concepts are deliberately left unexplained because those with sufficient wisdom will understand from mere hints.

[2] The Hebrew 'rechimuta d'maran' uses an Aramaic term of endearment to refer to God, emphasizing the intimate relationship between God and Moses that enabled the giving of the Torah.

[3] This unusual expression refers to the kabbalistic concept that sacred words can neutralize negative spiritual entities by 'feeding' them transformative divine energy that renders them harmless.

[4] In Jewish mystical thought, different angels are appointed over different times of day and night, and the recitation of the Shema facilitates the proper transition of spiritual guardianship.

[i] This quotes Psalm 68:19, which is interpreted in rabbinic tradition as referring to Moses receiving the Torah from reluctant angels during his ascent to heaven.

[ii] The 'verse of unity' refers to the Shema (Deuteronomy 6:4), and the phrase 'feeds the destructive forces' reflects a kabbalistic concept that reciting sacred texts properly can neutralize negative spiritual entities by transforming them through holy words.

רבה מזבדי בר לוי ורבי יוסי בן
פטרס ורבי יהושע בן לוי דאמרין
תלתא פסוקי מן דדמכין[i] לראיה
כי הצדיקי רואין שכרן ביום
75 המיתה משם נראה כי סימן
טוב כשמתפטר האדם מתוך פ׳
טוב ומראין לו שכרו לפי שאין
מדרגת הצדיק מושגת לו אחר
מיתתו רק עד אחר י״ב חדש וזה
80 טעם מה שהמלאכי׳ מקדימים
לו שלום כדאמרי׳ במדרש רבה
פ׳ י״א ופ׳ ס״ב. וכתוב בספר
החסידים סי׳ רל״ד דף ל״ג שאין
נותנין לגוסס לאכול כי אינו
85 יכול לבלוע אבל נותנין בפיו
המים שמוצנין מן שלוו״יא בג״א
שג״א בלעז ויבתשוהו וימוצו
המרק ממנו ונותן בפיו שיוכל
לדבר אשרי היוצא מן העולם
90 בתמות[ii] ואשרי השומע דברי
תורה בכל יום ובה יהיו זממיו
כי בה ירבו ימיו:[iii]

night entrust him to the guardians of the morning. This is one of the reasons why the custom was established to recite it at the moment the soul departs, aside from the many great and profound mysteries included in these two verses and in the entire order of the Shema recitation. In the Gemara of Rosh Hashanah, it states: "Once one has said 'And in Your Torah it is written,' etc., one need not say more." 75R

From what is said in the Jerusalem Talmud and Midrash Rabbah by Mizvadi bar Levi, Rabbi Yose ben Patros, and Rabbi Joshua ben Levi, who said three verses before they slept—evidence that the righteous see their reward on the day of death—it appears that it is a good sign when a person departs while reciting a good verse, and his reward is shown to him. This is because the level of the righteous is not fully attained after death until after twelve months,[1] which explains why the angels greet him with "peace," as stated in Midrash Rabbah, chapters 11 and 62. 80R 85R 90R

It is written in Sefer Hasidim, section 234, page 33, that one should not give food to a dying person

[1] Jewish tradition holds that the soul undergoes a period of judgment and purification after death, typically lasting twelve months, before reaching its final status in the afterlife.

[i] The text references a tradition that these rabbis would recite three specific verses before sleeping, which parallels the practice of reciting specific verses before death. The connection suggests that sleep (as a 'small death') and actual death involve similar spiritual transitions.

[ii] The word 'temut' (תמות) can be translated as 'perfection' or 'integrity,' but also evokes the word for death (mavet), creating a wordplay suggesting that dying in a state of spiritual perfection is blessed.

[iii] Cf. Psalm 91 — This psalm is referred to as 'Shir Shel Pega'im' (Song of Afflictions/Demons) and was believed to have special protective properties against harmful spiritual forces. Moses is said to have recited it when ascending to heaven for protection, and it's recommended for recitation at deathbed contexts to facilitate the soul's safe transition. | Cf. Ana Bekoach prayer — This kabbalistic prayer contains the 42-letter Divine Name, structured as seven names of six letters each. The text explains the proper method of recitation with pauses between word pairs, connecting it to the six wings of the seraphim. This prayer was believed to have special protective powers when recited with proper intention. | Cf. Shema prayer — The Shema prayer is identified as particularly powerful at the moment of death. The text explains that this prayer 'feeds' and neutralizes destructive spiritual forces, creating protection for the dying person. It also facilitates the transition of the soul between spiritual guardians. | Cf. Zohar on Moses receiving the Torah — The passage alludes to a Zoharic interpretation of Deuteronomy 33:2 about God coming from Seir and shining from Mount Paran, connecting it to Moses receiving the Torah from the angels through the power of divine names. | Cf. Yom Kippur Temple Service — The passage refers to the High Priest's service on Yom Kippur, where blood was sprinkled in specific patterns. It connects the 43 sprinklings (counting the collective) plus the pouring at the foundation (44 total) to the 42-letter Divine Name plus the collective, and to the numerical value of 'dam' (blood = 44), showing how spiritual forces can transform blood to milk through proper mystical intention. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah and Tanchuma on Balaam — The text references midrashic sources explaining how Balaam recognized the power of the Shema to protect Israel from destructive forces. The recitation of 'The Lord is One' consumes harmful spiritual entities, who then whisper 'Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever' before fleeing.

because he cannot swallow, but one may place in his mouth water that has been cooled with sage (salvia) in the vernacular. Crush it and extract the juice, placing it in his mouth so he can speak. Blessed is he who departs from this world in perfection, and blessed is he who hears words of Torah every day and sets them as his purpose, for through them his days will be multiplied.

פרק כ״ו

Chapter 26

בימי הקדמונים היה המנהג בכל מקום לומר צדוק הדין עם יציאת נשמה כדתניא אין פותחין בצדוק הדין על המת עד שתצא נפשו ובראש חדש ובחול המועד אם עונים כלם כאחד מותר ואם אחד מדבר וכלם עונים אחריו אסור כך נמצא בחשובת הגאונים ובזהר פ׳ תרומה כתב כי בכל חדש מתקשרת הנשמה עם הרוח ונפש כאחד וכל הצדיקים מודים ומשבחים להקדוש ברוך הוא אף על קבריהם ואתגלימו כדיוקנא דהוו בהאי עלמא ועדון זה יהיה לדעתנו לסבת חדוש הלבנה העליונה דאוסיף חדוש בכלא בי״ד עתים של ראש החדש עד דקימא באשלמותא.[i] וכתב רב הא״י כי לומר צדוק הדין יחד דמי לעינוי ונשים במועד מענות ואם א׳ אומר וכלם עונים אחריו

In ancient times, it was customary everywhere to recite Tziduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment) at the moment of the soul's departure,[1] as it is taught: "One does not begin Tziduk HaDin for the deceased until the soul has departed." On New Moon days and during the intermediate days of festivals, if everyone recites it together, it is permitted; but if one person leads and the others respond after him, it is forbidden. This is found in the responsa of the Geonim. In the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, it states that each month the soul reconnects with the spirit and vital soul as one,[A] and all the righteous acknowledge and praise the Holy One, blessed be He, even from their graves, appearing in the same form they had in this world.[B] This delight occurs, in our view, because of the renewal of the supernal moon, which adds renewal to everything through the fourteen phases of the New Moon until it reaches fullness.

Rav Hai Gaon wrote that reciting Tziduk HaDin together resembles a communal lament, and women during festivals engage in responsive mourning. If [A] Or: "The Zohar in Parashat Terumah states that each month the neshamah (higher soul) reconnects with the ruach (spirit) and nefesh (vital soul) as one unit" — This alternative translation preserves the specific Hebrew terminology for the three soul components (neshamah, ruach, nefesh), which might be valuable for readers familiar with kabbalistic concepts who want to understand the precise spiritual mechanics being described.

[B] Or: "and they materialize in the same form they possessed in this world" — The Aramaic term 'אתגלימו' has connotations of becoming embodied or materialized, suggesting a more substantial manifestation than just 'appearing'. This alternative better captures the mystical idea that the souls temporarily take on a quasi-physical form similar to their earthly bodies.

[1] Tziduk HaDin is a prayer affirming the justice of divine judgment, particularly recited during funeral services. The text discusses complex questions about when this prayer is appropriate, revealing tension between various ritual requirements: mourning customs, festival joy, and honoring the deceased.

[i] This kabbalistic explanation connects the monthly spiritual reunion of the soul components to the lunar cycle. The "supernal moon" refers to the divine feminine (Malkhut), and the fourteen phases refer to the fourteen days from new moon to full moon. This cosmic pattern is understood to create a monthly opportunity for spiritual renewal affecting the souls of the deceased.

דמי לקינה וכתב הרא״ש כי חכמי גרמיז״א אמרים אותו בראש חדש חנוכה ופורים דרך הלוך וחכמי מגנצ״א אין אומרים אותו אלא על חכם גדול והטעם יהיה כי אמרו בגמרא ואלו מגלחין אמר רבה בר רב הונא אין מועד בפני תלמיד חכם וכן חנוכה ופורים וה״מ בפניו אבל שלא בפניו לא אמר רב פפא ויום שמועה כבפניו דמי ובחלוק המנהגים שבין בני ארץ ישראל לבבל כתוב שלדברי שניהם אין אומרים צדוק הדין בחול המועד וכיון שאין צדוק הדין אין קדיש וכתב הרמב״ן כי צדוק הדין הוא הודאה וקבלת דין שמים[i] ור״י היה אומר שראוי היה לאומרו בבית הקברות אפילו כשקוברין אותו ביום טוב שלמה לא יצדיקו דין שמים ביום טוב כמו בחול ואם נקבר בחול המועד כתב שראה במחזור ויטר״י שיסדו זקנו ה״ר שמחה שהוא מתלמידי רש״י שפעם אחת אירע שהיו שם בני אדם מוחין בידם מלומר צדוק הדין ועמד רש״י ואמר עליו צדוק הדין וקדיש ע״ש במרדכי ריש מסכת מועד קטן ופוק חזי מאי עמא דבר וכבר כתבנו דעתנו בזה בפרק כ״ט מאמר ב׳. ומצאתי בירושלמי סמך למנהג שאומרים צדוק הדין על קברו של הנקבר בחול המועד או ברגל דאמרינן התם רבי אבון דמך במועד ולא גמל ליה רבי מונא חסדא אמר בתר מועדא עבדי ליה יקרא. וכתב גם כן שהלכה רווחת כי אין קוברין את המת אלא בטלית שיש בו ציצית בין טלית חדשה בין טלית מצויצת משלו וטעמא משום לועג לרש

one person leads and everyone responds after him, it resembles a dirge. The Rosh wrote that the sages of Worms recited it on New Moon days, Hanukkah, and Purim while walking, whereas the sages of Mainz would only recite it for a great scholar. The reason would be, as stated in the Talmudic tractate Mo'ed Katan: Rabbah bar Rav Huna said, "There is no festival in the presence of a Torah scholar," and this applies to Hanukkah and Purim as well. This only applies when the death occurs during the festival, but not if it happened before. Rav Papa said that the day one hears of a death is treated the same as if the death occurred that day. Regarding the differences in customs between the people of the Land of Israel and Babylonia, it is written that according to both opinions, Tziduk HaDin is not recited during the intermediate days of festivals, and since there is no Tziduk HaDin, there is no Kaddish.

The Ramban wrote that Tziduk HaDin is an acknowledgment and acceptance of divine judgment. Rabbi Isaac said it would be appropriate to recite it at the cemetery even when burying someone on a festival day—why should one not justify God's judgment on a festival as on a weekday? Regarding burial during the intermediate days of festivals, he wrote that he saw in the Machzor Vitry, compiled by his grandfather Rabbi Simcha (one of Rashi's students), that once it happened that people there were preventing the recitation of Tziduk HaDin, and Rashi stood up and recited Tziduk HaDin and Kaddish for him. See the Mordechai at the beginning of tractate Mo'ed Katan, and observe what the common practice is. I have already written my opinion on this in Chapter 29 of the second discourse.

I found support in the Jerusalem Talmud for the custom of reciting Tziduk HaDin at the grave of someone buried during the intermediate days of a festival or on a festival, as it states there: "Rabbi Abun died during the festival, and Rabbi Muna did not perform an act of kindness for him. He said, 'After the festival, we will honor him.'"

He also wrote that it is a widespread ruling that one buries the dead only in a tallit with

[i] The Ramban (Nachmanides) offers an important insight into the theological purpose of Tziduk HaDin—it is not merely a ritual formality but an act of spiritual acceptance and acknowledgment of divine justice. This understanding explains why there would be tension about whether it should be recited during joyous occasions like festivals.

כדמפורש במנחות[i] וגם שאבא
שאול במסכת שמחות צוה את
בניו שיקברוהו תחת מרגלותיו
של אביו ויתירו תכלת מפוליונו
מכל מקום מצינו שטוב לקשר
אותו ובזה אין צריך לחוש אם
הכתפים לובשים טלית בציצית
בעת נשיאתם אותו כאשר כתב
הרא״ש ומהרר״י קארו ובפרט
עתה שכל הקהל או רובם רוצים
לזכות במצות היה צריך להמתין
להסיר הציצית מבגד המת
סמוך לקבר ולא ראיתי נזהרין
מזה על כן טוב לקושרו יעיין
במרדכי דף רצ״א ע״א דברי
ר״י בזה ועיין במאמר ג׳ פי״ג
מה שהעלינו ברמז הטלית של
מתים. ובפרקי רבי אליעזר
אומר כל המתים עולים לתחית
המתים בתכריכיהן וכן אמרו
בפירוש בגמרין פרק אלו מגלחין
קל וחומר מחטה וכן למדנו
משמואל הנביא שנאמר זקן עולה
והוא עוטה מעיל ומעיל זה הוא
לבוש מיוחס לראוים לדבר
ברוח הקדש כאשר כתב הרמב״ם
בהלכות כלי המקדש והוא רמז
לחלוקא דרבנן כאשר כתב
הריקאנט״ו על פסוק ומעיל קטן
עשה לו אמו ובתשובת הגאונים
נראה שהתכריכין יהיו תפורים
בחוט של פשתן וכן כתב הרמב״ם
בהלכות אבל. שהפשתן נקרא
עץ יורה להנהגת עץ החיים
אפילו בסוד מלבושיו שהם
רמז לחלוקא דרבנן[ii] כנודע

tzitzit,[1] whether it is a new tallit or the deceased's own fringed tallit. The reason is to avoid "mocking the poor," as explained in tractate Menachot. And although Abba Shaul, in tractate Semachot, instructed his sons to bury him beneath his father's feet and to remove the blue threads from his garment, we find that it is good to tie them [rather than remove them completely]. In this way, there is no need to be concerned if the pallbearers wear a tallit with tzitzit while carrying the deceased, as written by the Rosh and Rabbi Joseph Karo. Especially now, when the entire congregation or most of them wish to participate in the mitzvah, one would need to wait to remove the tzitzit from the deceased's garment near the grave, and I have not seen people being careful about this. Therefore, it is good to tie them [rather than remove them]. See Mordechai, page 291a, for Rabbi Isaac's words on this matter, and see what we have suggested symbolically about the tallit of the deceased in Discourse 3, Chapter 13.

In Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer, it states that all the dead will rise at the resurrection of the dead in their shrouds, and this is explicitly stated in our Talmud in the chapter "Eilu Megalchin," using a kal vachomer (a fortiori) argument from wheat. We also learn this from the prophet Samuel, of whom it is said, "An old man is coming up, and he is wrapped in a robe." This robe is the distinguished garment worn by those worthy to speak with the Holy Spirit, as the Rambam wrote in the Laws of Temple Vessels, and it alludes to the "scholarly garment" (chaluka d'rabbanan)[2] as written by the Recanati on the verse, "And his mother made him a little robe." From the responsa of the Geonim, it appears that the shrouds should be sewn with linen

[1] This passage reveals an interesting ritual question: should the deceased be buried with tzitzit (ritual fringes) attached to their tallit (prayer shawl)? The concern stems from the principle of "loeg larash" (mocking the poor/deceased) by dressing them in garments intended for commandments they can no longer perform. The author describes different approaches to resolving this tension.

[2] Chaluka d'rabbanan (literally "rabbis' garment") is a kabbalistic concept referring to a spiritual garment formed from one's Torah study and good deeds that clothes the soul in the afterlife. This passage connects physical burial shrouds with their spiritual counterparts, suggesting that the material garments have mystical significance.

[i] The Talmudic concept of "loeg larash" (mocking the poor) is based on Proverbs 17:5 and refers to performing mitzvot (commandments) in front of the dead, who can no longer fulfill them. This creates a potential problem with burying someone in ritual garments they can no longer use properly.

[ii] This passage contains a fascinating kabbalistic interpretation that connects linen (called "wood"

ממעשה שהובא בירושלמי פ׳
הנושא מאותם שראו ארונו שהם
באין מחוצה לארץ ואמר רבי
אלעזר לרבי נתן קריא כיון
שמגיעין לארץ היו נוטלין גוש
עפר ומניחין על ארונו דכתיב
וכפר אדמתו עמו על זה כתבו
ההגהות מימוניות בסוף פרק
ה׳ מהלכות מלכים ומלחמות
ז״ל מכאן נראה סמך למה שנהגו
להניח עפר מארץ ישראל על
המתים אע״ג דהאי דירושלמי
איירי בארץ ישראל ע״כ וקבלתי
כי חלוקא דרבנן נעשה כמין
קומה שלמה וגדולה והולך לפני
הצדיקים ואולי זה סוד עמודא
דנורא ושוטיתיה דההוא סבא
בנודע:[ii] [i] thread, and so wrote the Rambam in the Laws of Mourning. Linen, which is called "wood," teaches about the governance of the Tree of Life even in the mystery of its garments, which symbolize the scholarly garment, as is known from the story brought in the Jerusalem Talmud in the chapter "HaNose" about those who saw coffins coming from outside the Land of Israel. Rabbi Eleazar said to Rabbi Nathan, "When they reach the Land, they would take a clod of earth and place it on the coffin, as it is written, 'And His land will atone for His people.'" Regarding this, the Hagahot Maimoniyot wrote at the end of Chapter 5 of the Laws of Kings and Wars:[1] "From here there appears to be support for the custom of placing earth from the Land of Israel on the deceased, even though the Jerusalem Talmud is discussing [burials] in the Land of Israel." I have received a tradition that the scholarly garment takes the form of a complete and great stature, and walks before the righteous,[A] and perhaps this is the secret of the "pillar of fire and

105 105R 110 110R 115 115R 120R

[A] Or: "the chaluka d'rabbanan (scholarly garment) manifests as a complete divine structure and proceeds before the righteous" — The phrase 'קומה שלמה' has specific kabbalistic connotations referring to the complete divine structure or spiritual body. This alternative better captures the mystical significance while preserving the original technical term.

[1] Hagahot Maimoniyot (Maimonidean Glosses) is a medieval commentary on Maimonides' Mishneh Torah by Rabbi Meir HaKohen. The passage shows how later authorities found support for customs not explicitly mentioned in earlier sources, demonstrating the evolving nature of Jewish burial practices.

in Joshua 2:6) with the Tree of Life. The author suggests that even burial shrouds made of linen serve as a symbolic connection to eternal life and the spiritual garment (chaluka d'rabbanan) that the soul wears in the afterlife.

[i] This reference alludes to a famous Talmudic story (Bava Metzia 85b) about Rabbi Judah the Prince, where after his death a pillar of fire was seen accompanying him. The author suggests that this pillar may have been the visible manifestation of the spiritual "scholarly garment" (chaluka d'rabbanan) that precedes the righteous in the afterlife.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This reference establishes a kabbalistic understanding of the soul's ongoing existence after death and explains why certain prayers might be more appropriate at specific calendar times. The author is using this to ground the halakhic discussion in mystical concepts. | Cf. Tractate Mo'ed Katan — The reference is cited to support the ruling of the sages of Mainz who would recite Tziduk HaDin on festivals only for a great scholar, based on the principle that normal festival restrictions on mourning don't apply for a Torah scholar. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — This reference supports the custom of reciting Tziduk HaDin at the grave of someone buried during intermediate festival days, showing that certain mourning customs were practiced even during festivals. | Cf. Tractate Menachot — This reference explains why there's concern about burying someone in a tallit with tzitzit—because the deceased can no longer fulfill commandments, and it might seem like mockery to dress them in ritual garments they cannot use. | Cf. Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer — The reference supports the idea that the dead will rise at resurrection wearing the same shrouds in which they were buried, establishing a connection between burial practices and eschatological beliefs. | Cf. Machzor Vitry — This reference demonstrates the tension between different halakhic opinions and how Rashi resolved it in practice, showing that a great authority permitted reciting Tziduk HaDin even during festival periods.

the attendant of that Elder," as is known.[1]

פרק כ״ז

Chapter 27

ממה שאמר הכתוב ותמת שרה בקריית ארבע היא חברון שם הורה על תוספת מעלת שרה שהחזירה פקדונה במקום הקדושה שער גן עדן שהוא חברון והוא אחד מג׳ מקומות שנפדו בארץ ישראל בדמים קבורת חברון בד׳ מאות שקל כסף על ידי אברהם הב׳ חלקת השדה דשכם במאה קשיטה על ידי יעקב ובזמן הקנין ויבא שלם לא בעת המיתה כמערה שקנה אברהם. הג׳ גורן ארונה והקונה דוד ופדיונו בחמשים שקל כסף אמנם נתנם בזהב והיה על ידי דוד. ולא היה מלכות לישראל רק על ידי חברון ואין תורה לישראל אלא על ידי סוד החלקה זאת ששם הר גריזים ועיבל. ואין לישראל מקדש אלא מצד הגורן. ועפרון וחמור וארנן נמשלים לנחש שתפס ג׳ חלקים אלו הכוללים כל אושר האדם והם ג׳ חלקים א״י הגשמית המורה על הרוחנית וג׳ מקומות אלו מורים לג׳ חלקי נשמה רוח ונפש ולכן פדיונן ע״י אברהם יעקב דוד מוקבלים למרכבת כל אחד מהם[i] והדרוש

From the scriptural verse "And Sarah died in Kiryat Arba, which is Hebron" (Genesis 23:2), we learn of Sarah's elevated status, as she returned her soul in a holy place—the gateway to the Garden of Eden, which is Hebron.[2] This is one of three locations in the Land of Israel that were redeemed with money: first, the burial cave in Hebron for four hundred silver shekels by Abraham; second, the plot of land in Shechem for one hundred kesitah by Jacob, purchased when he arrived whole (Genesis 33:18), not at the time of death as with the cave Abraham bought; third, the threshing floor of Araunah, purchased by David for fifty silver shekels, though he paid in gold. Israel's monarchy was established only through Hebron, the Torah came to Israel only through the mystery of this plot where Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal stand, and Israel received its Temple only through the threshing floor. Ephron, Hamor, and Araunah are comparable to the serpent[3] who seized these three portions that encompass all human wellbeing. These three locations correspond to the physical Land of Israel, which indicates the spiritual realm, and to the three components of the soul: neshamah, ruach, and nefesh.[4] Their redemption by Abraham, Jacob, and David corresponds to the divine chariot associated with each of them. This subject is extensive in its place, and there is significance to the redemption amount for each when you examine it closely.

[1] This refers to a famous Talmudic account (Bava Metzia 85b) describing a pillar of fire that appeared at Rabbi Judah the Prince's funeral. The author suggests this visible phenomenon might actually represent the spiritual "scholarly garment" that accompanies the righteous after death, connecting a mystical concept with a physical manifestation recorded in rabbinic literature.

[2] In kabbalistic tradition, certain physical locations are understood as entry points to spiritual realms. Hebron is associated with the Cave of Machpelah where the patriarchs are buried, and is considered a gateway to Gan Eden (Paradise).

[3] These three biblical figures sold sacred land to the patriarchs. The comparison to the serpent (nachash) from the Garden of Eden story suggests they represented negative spiritual forces that had seized control of holy places which needed to be redeemed by righteous individuals.

[4] These are the three primary components of the soul in Kabbalistic thought. Neshamah is the highest, most divine aspect; ruach is the middle component associated with emotion and spirit; nefesh is the lowest aspect connected to vitality and physical life.

[i] The author connects the three patriarchs (Abraham, Jacob, and David) with the concept of the divine chariot (merkavah). In Kabbalistic thought, these biblical figures are not merely historical personages but correspond to different divine attributes (sefirot) and serve as 'chariots' or vehicles for divine presence in the world.

רחב במקומו ויש טעם למספר
הפדיון לכל אחד כשתעיין בו.
ומצאתי כתוב בדברי החכם
קורדואי״רו זצ״ל שאין ספק
ששם בחברון היה מיתת האדם
בחכמתו הגדולה וצוה ליקבר
שם כדפירשו בזהר ומזה נראה
ודאי שמקום הקבורה והמיתה
יגרום חלק מה לשרות שכינה
בשיתוף סילוק הנשמה על פי ה׳
כפי ענין קדושת המקום ששכינה
שורה בו[i] לכן התאזרנו עז
להזהיר גם בני אדם גם בני איש
לקדש מקום מעמד הנפטר בשפת
אמת. ואפילו בארץ ישראל יש
חילוק בין מקום למקום כאמרם
רגלוהי דבר אינש אינון ערבין
ביה וכן עבדי שלמה ששלחם
ללוז. שים נא עיניך בילמדנו
פ׳ פקודי דף מ״ט ע״ב כי על
פסוק ויורני ויאמר לי כתב כל
מה שעושה המלאך עם הנשמה
קודם בואה לעולם ובפרט
אמר שמטייל אותה מהבקר עד
הערב ומראה לו מקום שעתיד
למות בו ומקום שעתיד ליקבר
בו. ובויקרא דף נ״ב ע״ב אמר
כי נשמת הרשעים אינה עולה
למקום שנגזר שם עד י״ב חדש
שיכלה הגוף מה עושה הולכת
וחוזרת על הקבר וקשה עליה
ראיית הגוף נרקב למה״ד וכו׳
וכן הרוח שוטט בעולם וחוזר
לקבר והנפש מתאבלת עליו.

I found written in the works of the sage Rabbi Moses Cordovero, may his righteous memory be blessed, that without doubt Adam died in Hebron with his great wisdom and commanded to be buried there, as explained in the Zohar. From this it is certainly evident that the location of burial and death contributes in some measure to the presence of the Divine Presence, in conjunction with the departure of the soul by God's command, according to the sanctity of the place where the Divine Presence dwells. Therefore, we have strengthened our resolve to warn both common and distinguished people to sanctify the place where the deceased stands with truthful speech. Even within the Land of Israel, there are distinctions between places, as they say, "A person's feet are his guarantors,"[A] as with Solomon's servants whom he sent to Luz.[1]

Consider what is written in Yalkut Pekudei, page 49b, on the verse "He instructed me and said to me" (Proverbs 4:4): it describes everything the angel does with the soul before it comes into the world, particularly stating that the angel walks with it from morning until evening,[2] showing it the place where it is destined to die and the place where it is destined to be buried. And in Leviticus, page 52b, it states that the souls of the wicked do not ascend to their destined place until twelve months after the body has decomposed. What does it do? It goes back and forth to the grave, and it is difficult for it to see the body decaying, like the parable, etc. Similarly, the spirit wanders in the world and returns to the grave, and the nefesh (vital soul) mourns over it.

From the story in Tractate Yoma about Kidor's father, who appeared to Kidor in a dream saying,

[A] Or: "A person's feet lead him to his destined place" — This Aramaic phrase appears in Talmudic literature with a nuanced meaning that a person's feet will naturally lead them to their destined location or fate. The alternate translation better captures this concept of divine providence guiding one's physical movements.

[1] This refers to a rabbinic tradition that Luz was a city where the Angel of Death had no power, and where Solomon sent his servants who feared death. The reference supports the idea that different locations have different spiritual qualities.

[2] This describes the soul's pre-birth experience, where an angel shows it both the place where it will die and be buried. This kabbalistic concept emphasizes that a person's death location is preordained and has spiritual significance.

[i] This reveals a fundamental principle in Ma'avar Yabok: the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) dwells in particular locations, and dying in such places facilitates the soul's ascent. This connects to the rabbinic teaching that some locations, like Jerusalem or Hebron, have special sanctity that affects spiritual processes.

וממעשה שהובא ביומא פרק
יום הכפורים מאבוהי דכידור
דאתחזי לכידור בחלמיה ואמר
תא שקיל כיסא דמנח ברישא
דההוא גברא נראה שהרשעים
אפילו בפתחה של גיהנם אינם
שבים הגם שנוכל לומר שהיה
מקפיד שלא יהיה דבר אחר
בתוך קברו ועל ראשו וממה
שהובא במסכת בתרא ממעשה
דרבי בנאה דהוה מציין מערתא
וחזא אליעזר עבד אברהם דקאי
אבבא (שהוא במדרגת מטטרון
ולכן נקרא עבד)[i] משם נראה כי
אשרי המשמש אדם גדול בעה״ז
שכן זוכה לשמשו בעולם הבא
וכמעשה דאותו תלמיד של רבי
אליעזר שאמרו הניחו לו שאדם
גדול שימש. הנה גם שלמעלה
בפרק ט״ו ממאמר ב׳ חזרתי
למצוא סמך מדברי הזהר על
מנהג המסלקים מחדר הגוסס
קרוביו הבוכים הוא דוקא כדי
שלא לצערו בהרמת קולם כי אז
עת לחשות מבכי שלא להטריד
כוונת הזוכה לקדש עצמו אז
כשרפים אבל אם היו יכולים
לעמוד על עמדם בלא דלויי קול
אין ספק שיש תענוג למת בחיות
קרוביו החיים שם בעת סילוק
נשמתו כמו שמענג מקריבוהי
ומרחימוהי המתים בנזבר בזהר
פ׳ ויחי והעד על זה מאמר
הכתוב ויוסף ישית ידו על עיניך

"Come take the purse that rests at the head of that man," it appears that the wicked do not repent even at the entrance to Gehenna—although we could say he was merely being particular that nothing else should be inside his grave or on his head. And from what is brought in Tractate Bava Batra about Rabbi Banah who was marking graves and saw Eliezer, Abraham's servant, standing at the entrance (who was at the level of Metatron and therefore called "servant"), we see how fortunate is one who serves a great person in this world, for he merits to serve him in the World to Come, as in the case of that student of Rabbi Eliezer, about whom they said, "Leave him be, for he served a great man."

Although earlier in chapter 15 of the second discourse, I found support in the Zohar for the custom of removing crying relatives from the room of a dying person, this is specifically to avoid distressing them with raised voices, for then is a time to refrain from weeping[1] so as not to disturb the intention of one who merits to sanctify himself like the seraphim.[A] But if they could stand their ground without raising their voices,[B] there is no doubt that the deceased derives pleasure from having living relatives present at the time of his soul's departure, just as he enjoys the presence of his deceased relatives and loved ones, as mentioned in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi. The evidence for this is the verse "And Joseph shall place his hand upon your eyes" (Genesis 46:4). It is not satisfactory to say this refers merely to physical resemblance or physical pleasure, as the masses might think, for Jacob the pious one would not have been given good tidings about such a trivial matter. However, if a son is present for his father at the time

[A] Or: "like the burning angels" — The Hebrew word 'seraphim' derives from the root 'to burn,' and these angels are often characterized by their fiery nature. This alternate translation would be more explanatory for readers unfamiliar with angelic categories, though less precise as a technical term.

[B] Or: "without lifting up their voices in lamentation" — The Hebrew phrase refers specifically to the raising of voices in mourning or lamentation, rather than simply speaking loudly. This alternate translation better captures the ritual context of formal mourning expressions.

[1] This alludes to Ecclesiastes 3:4, "A time to weep and a time to laugh; a time to mourn and a time to dance," suggesting that while mourning is appropriate after death, the moment of transition itself requires silence and focus.

[i] This parenthetical comment reveals a sophisticated kabbalistic understanding of Eliezer, Abraham's servant. By associating him with the angel Metatron (who in Jewish mysticism was once the human Enoch), the text suggests that righteous servants can attain angelic status after death and continue their service in the spiritual realm.

ולא ניחא לומר שיהיה דמיון
גשמי והנאה גשמית כדעת החמון
שלא על דבר קל זה יתבשר
יעקב החסיד. אמנם אם הוא בן
לגבי אביו בעת סלוק הנשמה
והרוח והנפש. והנפש הגשמית.
מידי רכיבתם על ענפיהם שבכח
הבן יהיה בזה בלי ספק מעלה
אל האב מצד הבן מפני שהאב
רוכב על בניו כענין יעקב
על י״ב שבטים וכן הרב על
תלמידיו[i] שע״כ אמר רבי יוסף
חפני ושמעון אפרתי הם שמשוני
בחיי וכו׳ כדהוו סברי רבנן
כנזכר שם:[ii]

when the neshamah, ruach, nefesh, and the physical soul depart from their branches, the son's presence undoubtedly elevates the father through the son, because the father rides upon his children, just as Jacob rode upon the twelve tribes, and as a teacher upon his students. This is why Rabbi Joseph Chofni and Shimon Efrati, who served Rabbi Yehudah HaNasi in his lifetime, were considered as the rabbis thought, as mentioned there.

פרק כ״ח

Chapter 28

זכינו בזה לדעת שבהיות הבן
עומד על אביו בעת פטירתו זה
יהיה חסד האב עם הבן והבן עם
האב[iii] האב מנחיל לבן העה״ז
הגשמי למעשה המצות וזה יהיה
סוד המנהג הברכה מאב לבן
בפרט בשעת מיתה כדאמרו
בילמדנו אתה מוצא שהצדיקים
מברכין לבניהם בשעת מיתתן
ובירושה המנחיל לו מעמידו
על רגליו וסבותיו לכוין מעשיו
לתקון גבוה שלכן נקרא הממון
יקום[iv] והבן מעלה האב על שכמו

Through this we have learned that when a son stands by his father at the time of his death, this constitutes an act of loving-kindness between father and son, each to the other. The father bequeaths to his son the physical world for the performance of commandments, and this explains the custom of a father blessing his son, particularly at the time of death, as stated in Yelamdeinu: "You find that the righteous bless their children at the time of their death." Through inheritance, the father establishes his son and provides the means for him to direct his actions toward higher spiritual rectification; this is why wealth is called "substance" (yekum). The [i] This metaphor of 'riding upon' children or students reflects a kabbalistic concept where the teacher or parent's spiritual essence continues through and is elevated by their disciples or children. This explains why having children or students present at death is spiritually beneficial for the departed soul.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2, Chapter 15 — The author references his earlier discussion about removing crying relatives from the deathbed, now qualifying that this is only necessary if they cannot control their voices. This shows the text's consistent concern with creating proper spiritual conditions for the dying person. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The author cites the Zohar to support the claim that the deceased derives pleasure from the presence of loved ones, establishing a mystical connection between the living and the dead that is central to Ma'avar Yabok's theology of death rituals. | Cf. Tractate Yoma — The author uses this Talmudic story to illustrate that the wicked remain connected to physical concerns even after death, reinforcing the book's theme that one's character and behavior in life affects one's experience after death. | Cf. Works of Rabbi Moses Cordovero — The citation of Cordovero (one of the most important kabbalists) establishes the author's intellectual lineage within Kabbalah and supports the claim about sacred burial locations, connecting Adam's burial to the same location as the Patriarchs.

[iii] The text presents a reciprocal relationship of chesed (loving-kindness) between father and son that extends beyond death, establishing a theological framework for inheritance laws and burial customs.

[iv] The Hebrew term 'yekum' (substance/that which stands) is used as a wordplay on the purpose of למעלה עטרה להתעטר בעולם

העליון במעשיו הטובים[i] וזהו
צוואת יעקב לבניו בנשיאת
מטתו ומנהג התלמידים הנושאים
מטת רבן. ממה שאמר הכתוב
באברהם יצחק ויעקב כי קברו
אותם בניהם נראה כי נייחא
גדולה יהיה לאב בעת שבניו
יעסקו בקבורתו וגם כן ודאי
יהיה זכות והנאה לבן בחייו
ובמותו ולא לחנם מנהגן של
ישראל להקפיד על זה קפידה
גדולה ומחולי יעקב וצוואת בניו
ופרטי קבורתו ובמלוים אותו
והאבל כבד שעשו בעבורו משם
יש למשכיל לדרוש ולהבין כמה
פרטים בבקור חולים ובהלואת
המת וקבורתו ובביתו ואבלותם
עליו ובעסיקת הבן בצרכי
קבורת אביו משם יהיה לבן זכות
אבות ואור מתנוצץ לו ממנו וזה
טעם הירושה לקרובים ואיסור
העברת נחלה בנזכר בגמרא
אפילו מברא בישא לטבא. וכתב
המגיה בסוף סי׳ רנ״ב בחשן
המשפט זה לשונו מי שהפקיד
מעות אצל חברו ואומר שאם
ימות יעשה בהם המוטב יתנו
ליורשיו והירושה תלויה בבחינת
נפש האב לבן והקונה הנשמה
קונה הירושה[ii] ואם זכית לידע
טעם למה היו נכסי הגר בנעני
שמת כל הקודם בהם זכה תבין
למה ישראל עשו מצרים במצולה
שאין בה דגים ופירוש ואחרי כן
יצאו ברכוש גדול ולמה לא זכו

son, in turn, elevates his father, carrying him on his shoulders as a crown to be adorned in the upper world through his good deeds. This explains Jacob's instructions to his sons regarding the bearing of his bier, and the custom of disciples carrying their teacher's bier. 15R

From what Scripture says about Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—that their sons buried them—it appears that a father derives great comfort when his sons attend to his burial. This certainly also benefits the son, both in his lifetime and after his death. It is not without reason that Jewish custom is so particular about this matter. From Jacob's illness, his instructions to his sons, the details of his burial, those who accompanied him, and the heavy mourning they observed for him, a discerning person can derive and understand many principles regarding visiting the sick, accompanying the dead, burial practi[1]ces, weeping and mourning for the deceased, and a son's involvement in his father's burial arrangements. Through this, the son gains ancestral merit[2] and a radiant light shines upon him. This explains the law of inheritance to relatives and the prohibition against transferring inheritance, as mentioned in the Talmud: "Even from a bad son to a good one." 20R 25R 30R 35R

The commentator wrote at the end of section 252 in Choshen Mishpat: "One who deposits money with another and says that if he dies, the recipient should do what is best with it—it should be given to his heirs. Inheritance depends on the connection between the father's soul and the son's, and one who acquires the soul acquires the inheritance. If you have merited to understand why the property of a deceased convert or Canaanite belongs to whoever claims it first,[3] you will understand why Israel emp- 40R 45R

[1]The Hebrew term 'halvayat ha-met' specifically refers to the Jewish practice of escorting the deceased to burial, considered one of the highest forms of chesed (loving-kindness) because it cannot be reciprocated.

[2]The concept of 'zechut avot' (ancestral merit) is a significant theological principle in Judaism, suggesting that righteous actions of ancestors create spiritual benefits for descendants, and conversely, descendants' actions can elevate their ancestors' souls.

[3]This refers to the halakhic principle that a convert who dies without Jewish descendants has no inheritance—to establish the son and enable him to 'stand' spiritually through the father's legacy.

[i]This reflects the kabbalistic concept that children's good deeds create a 'crown' for their parents in the afterlife, elevating their spiritual status.

[ii]This cryptic phrase suggests that inheritance has a spiritual dimension beyond mere property transfer—one who has a soul connection to the deceased (typically a son) is the appropriate inheritor of their legacy.

ישראל לששים רבוא רק במצרים
ומה היה כוונת יוסף לדון בין
המצריים על העריות וביוצא
מז׳ מצות ותבין כי יציאת מצרים
הכרח לבריאת העולם מפני
שעל ידי זה נתקן ובן מצינו
כי היורש הוא חייב להשתדל
לנייחת נפש מורישו שבנרצח
אמרו אבל הראוי לירושה הוא
גואל הדם ונפסק ההלכה בדברי
הרמב״ם ריש פרק קמא מהלכות
רוצח שהיה מצוה ביד גואל הדם
להמית הרוצח שנאמר גואל הדם
הוא ימית את הרוצח וכבר כתבנו
במאמר ב׳ שבהריגת הרוצח עשה
נייחא לנרצח[i] וכל שכן שהיה
חייב לבזבז ממון לעשות לו
נייחא ולבער המזיק אם אחד
היה ולטעם הנזכר נשתנה הרוצח
משאר חייבי מיתות ב״ד אם ברח
לב״ד אחר כל מקום שעמדו
שנים ואמרו שנגמר דינו בבית
דין פלוני נהרג ובשאר היה
צריך שיבואו עדיו הראשוני׳
דוקא כדאמרי׳ בסוף פרק קמא
דמכות. עוד אמרינן בפרק
לגמר הדין שאם עמד הנידון
על נפשו לא היה רשות לשאר
העם להורגו רק לעדיו והרוצח
היו רודפיו אחריו בכל דבר
וביד כל אדם עד שהיו ממיתין
אותו ממה שאמרו שם בגמרא
שאין קוברין אבן הנסקל וסייף
הנהרג בקברו רק בתפיסתו יש
ללמוד שמרחיקין כל מזיק מקבר
המת[ii] וכבר ביארנו למה אין
קוברין רשע אצל צדיק במאמר
ב׳ ועיין מה שכתבנו מהרוצח

tied Egypt like a pool without fish, and the meaning of 'afterward they went out with great possessions.' And why Israel only attained the number of six hundred thousand in Egypt, and what was Joseph's intention in judging the Egyptians regarding forbidden relationships and other of the seven Noahide commandments. You will understand that the Exodus from Egypt was necessary for the creation of the world, because through it the world was rectified."

We also find that an heir is obligated to strive for the repose of the soul of the one who bequeathed to him. Regarding a murder victim, they said that the one entitled to the inheritance is the blood redeemer.[1] The law was established in the words of Maimonides at the beginning of the first chapter of the Laws of Murder, that it was a commandment for the blood redeemer to execute the murderer, as it is said, "The blood redeemer shall put the murderer to death." We have already written in the second discourse that by killing the murderer, one brings repose to the victim, and certainly one would be obligated to spend money to bring him repose and to eliminate the harmful person if there was one.

For the reason mentioned, a murderer differs from other people sentenced to death by the court: if he fled to another court, wherever two witnesses stood and testified that his judgment was concluded in a certain court, he would be executed. In other cases, it was necessary for the original witnesses themselves to come, as we say at the end of the first chapter of Makkot. We also say in the chapter on concluding judgment that if the condemned person defended himself, the general populace had no authority to kill him, only his witnesses could do so; but in the case of a murderer, his pursuers would chase him in every way, and any person had the right to execute him.

From what the Talmud says there—that the stone used for stoning and the sword used for beheading inheritance relationship, so their property becomes ownerless and available to the first claimant. The author uses this to explain the spiritual principle behind the Israelites taking property from Egypt during the Exodus.

[1] The 'goel ha-dam' (blood redeemer) in biblical law was the nearest relative of a murder victim, who had both the right and duty to avenge the death by killing the murderer. The author connects this to inheritance law, suggesting that the same spiritual connection that qualifies one as an heir also creates the obligation to bring justice and rest to the deceased's soul.

[i] The author posits that executing a murderer brings spiritual rest (neicha) to the victim's soul, providing a mystical justification for capital punishment beyond mere retribution or deterrence.

[ii] This principle explains various burial customs that involve separating harmful or negative elements from the deceased, based on the belief that such elements could disturb the soul's rest.

בחלק עתר ענן הקטרת. ולהיות
נשיאת המת על הכתף לעטר
אותו בעולם העליון במעשיו
הטובים כנזכר בזה נבין למה
צריך לעמוד בפני המת העובר
ולמה היה בר נדוי למי שאינו
מלוה המת כשרואה אותו עובר
לפחות ד׳ אמות כדפסק מהרר״י
קארו בסוף סימן שס״א. וגם
זכינו לטעם ומנהג המקומות
שלוקחים האבלים והקרובים
המטה על כתפיהם ואחר כך
שאר העם באשר כתב המגיה
בסי׳ שנ״ז ואין ספק שיש לאשה
תועלת בהיות בעלה שם בסלוק
נשמתה וגם בבניה שיש לה יחס
גדול עם בניה וכל שכן עם בעלה
כי דו פרצופין נבראו ואחר כך
ננסרו בהיכל לבנת הספיר[i] ומה
גם סוד חלק הבעל הנקשר עמה
על הדרך שפירשו בסבא פוק
חזי תמן ובפרט כל עוד שלא
נשאת[ii] ומטעם תועלת המת בעת
המתנתה אליו תקנו כי אלמנה
ניזונת מנכסי בעלה ומשתמשת
במדור ובכרים ובכסתות וכלים
שנשתמשה בהן בחיי בעלה ולסוד
החלק המיוחד הזה שביניהם
בעת סלוקה בחיי בעלה במעמד
בעלה תקבל הנאה גדולה מזה
הנה פסקו הפוסקים כי יכולים
לחלל שבת לשלוח אחר קרוביו
של חולה ומלבד שעקר הטעם
שלא תטרף דעתו עליו אפשר
שקצת מהם כוונו גם כן למה
שאמרנו:[iii]

are not buried with the executed person in his grave but only in the place of detention—we learn that all harmful things are kept far from the grave of the dead. We have already explained why a wicked person is not buried next to a righteous one in the second discourse. See also what we wrote about the murderer in the section "Eter Anan HaKetoret" (The Cloud of Incense Prayer). 90R 95R

Understanding that carrying the deceased on one's shoulder serves to crown him in the upper world with his good deeds, as mentioned, we can understand why one must stand before a passing corpse, and why one who does not accompany the dead when seeing them pass by at least four cubits is subject to excommunication,[1] as Rabbi Joseph Karo ruled at the end of section 361. We have also learned the reason for the custom in some places where the mourners and relatives take the bier on their shoulders, and afterward the rest of the people, as the commentator wrote in section 357. 100R 105R

There is no doubt that it benefits a woman to have her husband present when her soul departs, and likewise her children, as she has a great relationship with her children and especially with her husband, for they were created as a dual-faced being and were later separated in the Palace of the Sapphire Brick.[2] This is particularly true regarding the secret of the husband's portion that is bound with her, as explained in the Saba section—go and see there—especially as long as she has not remarried. 110R 115R

Because of the benefit to the deceased during the time of waiting for him, they instituted that a widow is sustained from her husband's property and may use the dwelling, pillows, blankets, and vessels that she used during her husband's lifetime. Due to this special connection between them, at the time of her 120R

[1] The text references the serious religious obligation to show respect to the dead by accompanying the funeral procession at least four cubits (approximately 6-8 feet). Failing to do so was considered so serious that it could result in nidui (excommunication).

[2] Heikhal Livnat HaSapir is a kabbalistic term referring to a celestial realm where souls and divine emanations interact. The author uses this mystical concept to explain the spiritual connection between husband and wife that persists even after death.

[i] This references the kabbalistic concept that Adam and Eve were originally created as a single dual-faced being and later separated. 'The Palace of the Sapphire Brick' (Heikhal Livnat HaSapir) is a mystical realm where divine unifications occur. The author applies this concept to all married couples.

[ii] This refers to the principle that a spiritual connection remains between husband and wife as long as the widow has not remarried, creating special obligations but also spiritual benefits.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2 — The author refers back to his earlier discussion to establish departure during her husband's lifetime, in the presence of her husband, she receives great benefit from this. Thus, the legal authorities ruled that one may violate the Sabbath to send for relatives of a sick person.[1] Apart from the main reason being so that the sick person's mind not become distressed, it is possible that some of them also intended what we have mentioned.

פרק כ״ט

Chapter 29

ממצות כסוי הדם מחיות ועופות המותרים לאכול ושצריך עפר למטה ולמעלה נבין ג״כ טעם הקבורה כי דם הוא סוד הברית[i] כי ע״י היות דם יוצא הברית מתקיים והוא בין עפר עליון בינה לתחתון מלכות[ii] ולכן העפר מוליד ומהוה תולדות ובינה ומלכות הם ב׳ בריכות בריכה עליונה ותחתונה ואין ליהנות מפנימיות כל חי וזה טעם אסור אכילת הדם וכסויו ג״כ ולכן צריך לכסות המקומות ההם בסוד עפר למעלה ועפר למטה כי

From the commandment of covering the blood of permissible wild animals and birds that one may eat, and the requirement for earth below and above, we can also understand the reason for burial. For blood represents the mystery of the covenant,[A] since through the shedding of blood the covenant is established. This covenant exists between the upper earth (Binah) and the lower earth (Malkhut). Therefore, earth generates and produces offspring, and Binah and Malkhut are two pools—an upper pool and a lower pool. One should not derive benefit from the inner essence of any living being, which explains the prohibition against consuming blood and the requirement to cover it. Thus, one must cover these places with the mystical "earth above and earth below," for [A] Or: "For blood is the secret of the covenant" — The Hebrew word 'סוד' (sod) can be translated as either 'mystery' or 'secret.' The latter might better convey the esoteric nature of the kabbalistic teaching being presented.

[1] This refers to the halakhic principle that saving a life (pikuach nefesh) overrides Sabbath prohibitions. The author extends this to include the psychological wellbeing of the sick person through having relatives present, and suggests a deeper mystical benefit to the sick person's soul.

continuity in his theological framework that connects ritual practices with spiritual benefits for the deceased. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, 'Eter Anan HaKetoret' section — The author directs readers to another section of his work for more detailed information, indicating the interconnected nature of his theological system across the entire book. | Cf. Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Laws of Murder, Chapter 1 — The author cites this authoritative legal source to ground his mystical interpretations in established halakhic tradition, showing how legal and mystical frameworks can complement each other. | Cf. Talmud, Tractate Makkot, end of Chapter 1 — The author uses this reference to highlight the unique severity with which Jewish law treats murder, supporting his argument about the special spiritual damage caused by murder and the corresponding need for rectification. | Cf. Zohar, Saba d'Mishpatim section — The author references this kabbalistic source to provide deeper understanding of why a husband's presence at his wife's deathbed would be spiritually beneficial for her soul's journey.

[i] The mystical significance of blood as representing the covenant (brit) is a fundamental kabbalistic concept. Here, the author draws on traditions that view blood as the physical manifestation of the soul's life-force, creating a link between ritual slaughter, blood coverage, and human burial.

[ii] The author employs the kabbalistic correspondence between Binah (Understanding, the eighth sefirah) and Malkhut (Kingdom, the tenth sefirah), characterizing them as 'upper earth' and 'lower earth' respectively. This relationship forms a fundamental axis in the kabbalistic system, with Binah representing the higher feminine principle and Malkhut the lower feminine principle.

בזה מתעלמי׳ ונסתרים ואין
החצוני שולט ופוגם[i] וחיה ועוף
עקריים בזה שרומזים בסוד
עליון ושאר הדם אף אם ישלטו
בו אינם פוגמים למעלה. ברם
קבורת גוף האדם מסייע ליחוד
עליון בנשמתו וזהו כי קבור
תקברנו[ii] קבור למעלה תקברנו
למטה כמו שהגוף נכנס אל
הקבר כן הנפש תכנס אל הלבוש
השני המזדמן לה זה מתלבש
בעפר תחתון ומתכפר וזה
מתלבש בעפר עליון ואין הנשמה
מתקבלת למעלה אל היחוד עד
שיקבר למטה וכמו שהוא אדם
נכנס בעפר דהיינו זכר בתוך
נקבה כן הנשמה למעלה מתקבל׳
כעין זכר בתוך נקבה וכבר
כתבנו כי המלכות מתעלם עם
הצדיק בסלוק נשמתו ולכן נקרא
יומא דהלולא דעילאי[iii] באומרם
עליוני׳ מבקשי׳ את רבי כי הנפש
דבק בגוף והנפש ברוח והרוח
בנשמה ונשמה בקדושה עליונה
ומדור הנפשות הוא עולם ובחינה
שכנגד הקבר ממש ונקרא חצר
מות[iv] בעובדא דשמואל דאזל
לחצר מות ולכן מרע״ה אם היה
קבור בא״י לא ישתתף עם דור
המדבר שמתו חוצה לה ויחסר

through this they are concealed and hidden, preventing external forces from controlling and damaging them. Wild animals and birds are essential in this regard, as they symbolize supernal mysteries, while other blood, even if external forces gain control over it, does not cause damage to the higher realms. 20R

However, the burial of a human body assists in the supernal unification of the soul, which is the meaning of "you shall surely bury him"—bury him above, bury him below. Just as the body enters the grave, so does the soul enter the second garment prepared for it. The body clothes itself in the lower earth and receives atonement, while the soul clothes itself in the upper earth. The soul is not received above for unification[A] until the body is buried below. And just as a person enters the earth—that is, as the masculine enters the feminine[B]—so too is the soul received above as the masculine within the feminine. 25R 30R

We have already written that Malkhut (Divine Kingdom) is concealed with the righteous person at the departure of his soul,[C] which is why it is called "the wedding day of the supernal ones," as they say, "The celestial beings desire Rabbi [Judah the Prince]." For the nefesh (vital soul) clings to the body, the nefesh to the ruach (spirit), the ruach to the neshamah (higher soul), and the neshamah to the supernal holiness. The dwelling place of souls is a world and dimension that truly corresponds to the grave, and is called "the Court of Death," as in the 35R 40R 45R

[A] Or: "The soul cannot be accepted above for the divine union" — This alternate translation emphasizes the mystical concept of 'יחוד' (yichud) as specifically referring to divine union rather than the more general term 'unification,' which might better convey the kabbalistic significance.

[B] Or: "the male within the female" — This alternate translation maintains the gender binary terminology more literally, which may be preferred in certain scholarly contexts where precise reflection of kabbalistic gender concepts is desired.

[C] Or: "Malkhut ascends with the righteous person when his soul departs" — The verb 'מתעלם' can mean both 'concealed' and 'ascends/elevates.' The latter may better convey the active upward movement that the author is describing in the soul's journey.

[i] The term החצוני (ha-chitzoni, 'the external forces') refers to negative spiritual entities that, according to kabbalistic thought, seek to draw power from holy sources. The covering of blood prevents these forces from accessing its spiritual potency.

[ii] This is a quote from Deuteronomy 21:23, which commands the burial of an executed person before nightfall. The author interprets the doubled language ('bury you shall bury him') as indicating both physical burial below and spiritual elevation above.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase meaning 'wedding day of the supernal ones' is traditionally used in Jewish mysticism to refer to the day of a righteous person's death. It reframes death not as an ending but as a mystical marriage between the soul and divine realms.

[iv] The 'Court of Death' (חצר מות) is a mystical concept referring to a spiritual realm where souls dwell after death. The reference to Samuel relates to the biblical account in 1 Samuel 28 where the prophet's spirit is summoned from the realm of the dead.

להם השלימות ההוא ומעיינות החכמה שנפתחים להם על ידי מרע״ה והוא אומרם לאהרן ואהרן לשאר רישי מתיבתי כדפירשו בזהר פ׳ בלק לכן רצה הקדוש ברוך הוא שישאר הרועה עם צאנו ויהיו מובטחים שיכנסו אחר התחיה יחד: [i] account of Samuel who went to the Court of Death.

Therefore, if Moses our Teacher had been buried in the Land of Israel, he would not have been able to join with the generation of the wilderness who died outside it, and they would have lacked that perfection and the wellsprings of wisdom that are opened to them through Moses our Teacher. This is what they meant when they said that he speaks to Aaron, and Aaron to the other heads of the academies, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Balak. Therefore, the Holy One, blessed be He, desired that the shepherd remain with his flock, so they would be assured of entering together after the resurrection.

פרק ל׳

Chapter 30

הגם שאמרו בגמרין שמי שעושה דבר של רשות במקום שלא נהגו נקרא טועה וזהן דברי רב יוסף נגד רב אויא דעבד לאתתיה מעמד ומושב ואומר שטעה בתרין. [ii] אם יעלה על

Although they said in the Gemara that one who does something optional[A] in a place where it is not customary is called mistaken—these being the words of Rav Yosef against Rav Avia[1] who made a standing and sitting ceremony[B] for his wife,[2] saying that he erred in two ways[C]—if someone should consider per-

[A] Or: "a discretionary matter" — The Hebrew phrase 'davar shel reshut' specifically refers to actions that are neither required nor forbidden by Jewish law. 'Discretionary matter' might better capture this technical legal concept than 'optional,' which could imply something trivial.

[B] Or: "the ceremony of standings and sittings" — This alternate translation more explicitly indicates the plural nature of the ritual, which involved multiple acts of standing and sitting in succession as part of the mourning ceremony.

[C] Or: "and he said that he erred in two respects" — The Aramaic word 'b'tarein' specifically means 'in two' or 'in two respects.' This alternate translation more clearly indicates that there were two specific errors identified, though the original translation adequately conveys the meaning.

[1] The original text has 'Rav Avia' (רב אויא) which might be a variant spelling of 'Rav Avya' or possibly a different sage altogether. I've maintained the spelling as closely as possible to the original while transliterating.

[2] The phrase 'maamad u'moshav' refers to a specific mourning ritual that involved participants standing and sitting multiple times as part of honoring the deceased. This practice appears to have varied by location in Talmudic times.

[i] Cf. Talmud Chullin 83b — The author uses this halakhic requirement as a mystical metaphor for burial practices, drawing a parallel between covering animal blood and human burial, both of which involve earth above and below. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Balak — The author cites this to explain why Moses needed to be buried outside the Land of Israel with the generation of the wilderness, facilitating his ongoing spiritual connection with them. | Cf. Talmud Bava Metzia 85b — The author references this in explaining the phrase 'wedding day of the supernal ones' (יומא דהלולא דעילאי), suggesting that the death of a righteous person represents a cosmic unification. | Cf. 1 Samuel 28 — The author refers to this as evidence that souls dwell in a realm corresponding to their burial place, called 'the Court of Death' (חצר מות). | Cf. Deuteronomy 21:23 — The author interprets this verse mystically as indicating both physical burial below and spiritual elevation above, creating a correspondence between bodily interment and soul ascension.

[ii] This refers to a Talmudic passage (likely in Moed Katan) where Rav Yosef criticized Rav Avia for performing mourning ceremonies for his wife that were not customary in that location. The phrase 'maamad u'moshav' (standing and sitting) refers to specific mourning rituals where mourners would stand and sit multiple times to honor the deceased.

לב איזה פרטי לעשות ההקפות
למתו לא יקרא דבר הרשות
כי אם דבר מצוה ליודע טעמם
בסוד ההקפות והעד כבוש
ירי[i]חו והקפת המזבח בימי
הקרבת ע׳ פרים בחג[ii] עם
נוסח שירים החלוקים הנאמרים
בימי החג כגון מי יקום לי
עם מרעים[iii] כדאיתא בסוכה
פרק החליל ואמרו בירושלמי
דסוכה בזמן הזה חזן הכנסת
עומד כמלאך אלהים וספר
תורה בזרועו והעם מקיפין
אותו דוגמת המזבח וכבר אמרנו
במאמר ג׳ דבאתר דליכא
למיחש לאנצויי טוב להרגיל
אותם ואז תשמח נפש הנפטר
בסוד מחול וסבובים אלו
ויאירו עליו מאורי אור תחלתן
בסופן וסופן בתחלתן[iv] מארבע
כנפות הארץ והשמים יענו את
הארץ והמבין על מתכונתו
מה שאמרו בירושלמי מסכת
שבועות פרק ג׳ מלאכי חבלה

forming circuits for their deceased, this should not be called an optional matter but rather a religious duty for one who knows their significance in the mystery of the circuits.[1] Witness the conquest of Jericho and the circling of the altar during the offering of seventy bulls on the festival, with the various songs recited during the festival days, such as "Who will rise up for me against evildoers?" as stated in Tractate Sukkah, chapter "The Flute." And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sukkah, that nowadays the synagogue cantor stands like an angel of God with the Torah scroll in his arm, and the people circle around him like the altar.[2]

We have already stated in Discourse Three that in a place where there is no concern for quarreling,[A] it is good to accustom them to this practice. Then the soul of the departed will rejoice in the mystery of the dance and these circuits, and the lights will shine upon him, their beginning in their end and their end in their beginning,[3] from the four corners of the earth, and the heavens will answer the earth. One who understands its pattern, as they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shevuot, chapter three, "The angels of destruction have no ability to leap, as [A] Or: "in a situation where there is no reason to worry about disputes arising" — This Aramaic phrase could be interpreted more broadly as referring to any situation (not just physical location) where conflict is unlikely. The alternate translation captures this broader possible meaning.

[1] The Hebrew word 'sod' (סוד) literally means 'secret' but in kabbalistic contexts refers to the mystical or esoteric dimension of a practice. The author is suggesting that circuits around the deceased have spiritual significance beyond their physical appearance.

[2] The comparison between synagogue practice (circling with the Torah) and Temple ritual (circling the altar) is significant, as it suggests that post-Temple Jewish practices were designed to spiritually parallel or substitute for Temple rituals.

[3] This phrase reflects a kabbalistic concept from Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) describing the circular nature of divine emanations. It suggests that the circuits create a complete spiritual circuit connecting the highest realms (beginning) with the lowest (end).

[i] This references the biblical account in Joshua 6 where the Israelites circled the walls of Jericho seven times before the walls fell. The author uses this as a precedent showing the spiritual power of ritual circuits.

[ii] This refers to the ritual of circling the altar during the festival of Sukkot, when a total of seventy bulls were sacrificed over the seven days of the festival. Each day, the priests would circle the altar while reciting different prayers.

[iii] This is a quote from Psalm 94:16, 'Who will rise up for me against the evildoers?' It appears to have been recited during the altar-circling rituals on Sukkot, according to the passage referenced in Tractate Sukkah.

[iv] This is a kabbalistic concept that appears in Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), describing the circular nature of divine energy where the highest point (beginning) connects with the lowest point (end). It reflects the idea that the circuits create a complete spiritual circle linking heaven and earth.

אין להם קפיצין[i] שנאמר משוט
בארץ והתהלך בה יבין טעם
ההקפות ולמה משהין פעמים
הרבה נושאי המטה כדי להפריח
רוחות[ii] גם ראיה במשנת מסכת
כלים כי העיירות המוקפות
חומה שבארץ ישראל שאין
קוברין שם מת לדברי הרמב״ם
בפרק ז׳ מהלכות בית הבחירה
עד שירצו ז׳ טובי העיר או כל
אנשי העיר ולדברי הראב״ד
בהשגה לעולם אין קוברין
ואפילו הכי מסבבים לתוכן מת
עד שירצו הנה שבסוד הסבוב
והמחול יעלזו חסידים בכבוד
וירננו על משכבותם[iii] וכל
שאין מתעסקין בתורה חייבין
להתעסק עם המת ואפילו איתיה כל צרכו[iv] לאותם דאין
מבטלין דברי תורה כך פסק
הרמב״ם פרק י״ד נגד דעת
השאלתות עיין שם בהגה״ה
וכתוב בירושלמי האנק מכאן
שצווחין על המתים כי הקול
עולה חלוק ומבסס הדין בסוד
תקיעת שופר וזה יהיה טעם למה
אמרינן במסכת שמחות כי בגוסס

it is said, ‘going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it,’” will understand the reason for the circuits and why the bearers of the bier sometimes pause frequently in order to drive away spirits.[A] 35R

There is also evidence in the Mishnah of Tractate Kelim that in walled cities in the Land of Israel, where according to the Rambam in chapter seven of the Laws of the Temple, one may not bury the dead until seven city elders or all the townspeople consent—and according to the Raavad in his critique, one may never bury there—nevertheless, they would bring the deceased in circuits within them until they consented. This shows that through the mystery of circling and dancing, “the pious will rejoice in glory and sing upon their beds.” 40R 45R

And all those who are not engaged in Torah study[1] are obligated to attend to the deceased, even if all his needs are already provided for—this applies even to those for whom Torah study is not to be interrupted, as the Rambam ruled in chapter fourteen, against the opinion of the Sheiltot; see the note there. And it is written in the Jerusalem Talmud, “Groan,” from which we learn that we cry out for the dead, for the voice rises, divides, and establishes judgment in the mystery of the shofar blast.[2] This is the reason why we say in Tractate 50R 55R

[A] Or: “to disperse spiritual forces” — The Hebrew ‘ruchot’ can refer specifically to spirits/ghosts or more generally to spiritual forces/energies. This alternate translation avoids the potentially anachronistic connotation of ‘ghosts’ while preserving the mystical dimension.

[1] This statement addresses a tension in Jewish law between the obligation to study Torah (considered equivalent to all other commandments) and the obligation to attend to the dead. The author cites the Rambam’s position that even dedicated Torah scholars must participate in funeral proceedings.

[2] This cryptic phrase connects funeral lamentations with the shofar (ram’s horn) blast, suggesting that both serve to ‘divide’ or ‘separate’ negative judgments. In kabbalistic thought, the shofar’s sound breaks through negative decrees, and the author suggests funeral cries may function similarly.

[i] This Talmudic teaching states that ‘angels of destruction have no ability to leap,’ meaning they cannot travel instantaneously like certain divine messengers. The author cites this to explain why circuits are effective—they create a boundary that harmful spirits must travel around rather than cross directly.

[ii] Literally ‘to make spirits fly away,’ this phrase reveals the protective function of funeral pauses and circuits—they are understood to disperse harmful spiritual entities that might interfere with the deceased’s soul.

[iii] This is a quote from Psalm 149:5, ‘Let the pious exult in glory; let them sing for joy on their couches.’ The author applies this verse to the deceased, suggesting that proper funeral rites cause the souls of the righteous to rejoice even after death.

[iv] Even if all the deceased’s needs are already taken care of (such as having enough people for burial), implying that participation in funeral circuits has spiritual value beyond merely ensuring practical needs are met.

רבי יהודה אומר אם היה חכם משמיעין עליו מעשיו:[i][ii]

Semachot that concerning a dying person, Rabbi Yehudah says: If he was a sage, they proclaim his deeds.[1] 60R

פרק ל״א

Chapter 31

ממה דאמרינן בפרק אלו מגלחין על חכם חולץ מימין ועל אב בית דין דעדיפא מיניה כדפירש רש״י ע״כ חולץ משמאל[iii] מזה יצא המנהג לקרוע על שאר המתים הבגד העליון לבד מימין כמו שעל חכם חולץ מימין ועל אביו ואמו כל בגדיו משמאל וכן יתבאר מפשט דברי הגמרא שמנוהו בכלל החומרות שבאו

From what we learn in the chapter "Elu Megalchin" (Moed Katan),[2] regarding a sage, one removes the right shoe [in mourning], and for the head of the court, who is superior to him as Rashi explained, one removes the left shoe. From this arose the custom to tear for other deceased only the upper garment on the right side, just as for a sage one removes from the right, while for one's father and mother, one tears all garments from the left side. This is also explained from the plain meaning of the Talmud, which counts 5R 10R

[1] The practice of publicly recounting a scholar's accomplishments at their deathbed serves multiple purposes: honoring the deceased, providing a model for others to emulate, and possibly helping the soul's transition by emphasizing their merits before divine judgment.

[2] The Hebrew refers to a chapter in Tractate Moed Katan that deals with mourning practices. I've provided the transliteration and tractate name for clarity.

[i] This teaching from Tractate Semachot states that when a Torah scholar is dying, it is customary to publicly proclaim his good deeds and scholarly achievements. The author connects this to the 'voice' raised during funeral processions, suggesting a spiritual parallel.

[ii] Cf. Tractate Moed Katan — The passage opens by referencing a talmudic discussion where Rav Yosef criticized Rav Avia for performing mourning ceremonies that were not customary in that location, suggesting that local custom carries significant weight in mourning practices. | Cf. Book of Joshua — The reference to the conquest of Jericho draws a parallel between the biblical circling of Jericho's walls (which caused them to fall) and the ritual circling around the deceased, suggesting that these circuits have transformative spiritual power. | Cf. Tractate Sukkah — The text cites Tractate Sukkah regarding the practice of circling the altar during Sukkot with different songs each day, establishing a connection between Temple rituals and funeral practices. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Three — The author self-references an earlier section of his own work where he apparently discussed similar concepts about funeral circuits, showing the interconnectedness of the book's parts. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shevuot — The citation about angels of destruction lacking the ability to leap is used to explain the spiritual mechanism behind funeral circuits—they create a boundary that harmful spirits cannot cross quickly. | Cf. Mishnah, Tractate Kelim — The reference to Tractate Kelim provides a halakhic basis for the practice of circuits, showing that even in places where burial was restricted, the procession of circuits was still permitted. | Cf. Psalms 149:5 — The phrase 'the pious will rejoice in glory and sing upon their beds' quotes Psalms 149:5, suggesting that the deceased righteous experience joy through the proper performance of these funeral circuits. | Cf. Maimonides (Rambam), Mishneh Torah — The citation of Maimonides establishes the halakhic framework regarding burial in walled cities, which is then used to demonstrate the importance of circuits even in places where burial itself might be restricted. | Cf. Raavad's critique on Maimonides — The mention of Raavad's stricter position highlights the author's awareness of halakhic debates while still arguing for the significance of circuits regardless of burial permissions. | Cf. Book of Ezekiel — The word 'ha'anek' (groan) appears to reference Ezekiel 24:17 where the prophet is commanded to 'sigh in silence' for the dead, which the Jerusalem Talmud interprets as evidence for vocal mourning. | Cf. Tractate Semachot — The reference to Tractate Semachot (a minor tractate on mourning) connects the circuits to the broader context of honoring the deceased, particularly emphasizing the special treatment for sages.

[iii] This refers to the ritual of removing shoes during mourning. For a sage (חכם), one removes the right shoe, while for the head of the court (אב בית דין), considered more important, one removes the left shoe. The author uses this as a basis for understanding clothing tear customs.

בהם הקריעה עד שיגלה את לבו מכלל שהיא מצד הלב ושם פירש רש״י בגמרא קריעה של שמאל הויא עדיפא בההוא יומי טפי מימין. ויזהר אדם בקריעה דחמירא מאבילות כדאמרינן בפרק אלו מגלחין אבלות לחוד וקריעה לחוד ולא אמרינן בה הלכה כדברי המיקל כדאמרינן באבילות. וכתוב בספר התרומה בהא דאמרינן הלכה כדברי המיקל באבל זהו בתנאי אבל לא באמוראי[i] והביאוהו הגהות מימוניות ריש פרק עשירי. עוד נתבאר בפרק ד׳ בשם סמ״ג דאבלות חמור טפי מאנינות. והקריעה מצד שמאל מלבד שמורה על קריעת הלב[ii] עוד לפי טבעו של אדם יד ימין בכחה נאדרי בקריעה לצד שמאל ממה שעושה יד שמאל ומורה שגם הימין נהפך לרועץ ובזה מודיע לכל צערו שיבקשו עליו רחמים ולכן קורע מבחוץ על אביו ועל אמו כדאמרי׳ בגמרא ומבדיל שפה כרבי יהודה דאפליג את״ק ואמר כל שאין מבדיל קמי שפה אינו אלא קרע של תיפלה[iii] ובשאר מתים פסקו כת״ק וטעם ההבדלה בקריעה זו יהיה כי בחינת השמאל שנפרד ונקרע היא מעירה חמתה הפך הימין שממתקת פיות הדין שדומיה שלה תהלה והקריעה היא בצואר והוא this among the stringencies of tearing "until one reveals his heart," implying that it relates to the heart. There Rashi explained in the Gemara that tearing on the left side is superior on that day more than the right. 15R

One should be careful regarding tearing, which is more stringent than mourning, as we say in chapter "Elu Megalchin": "Mourning is one matter and tearing is another,"[1] and we do not apply the principle "the law follows the lenient opinion" to tearing as we do with mourning. It is written in Sefer HaTerumah that when we say "the law follows the lenient opinion in mourning," this applies only to Tannaim but not to Amoraim, as cited in Hagahot Maimoniot at the beginning of chapter ten. It is further explained in chapter four in the name of the Semag that mourning is more severe than aninut (acute mourning before burial). 20R 25R

Tearing on the left side, besides indicating the tearing of the heart, also relates to human nature: the right hand has greater strength in tearing toward the left than what the left hand can do, and it shows that even the right side (representing mercy) has been turned to severity. Through this, one makes known to all his grief so they will seek mercy for him. Therefore, one tears from the outside for one's father and mother, as stated in the Gemara, and separates the hem according to Rabbi Judah, who disagreed with the first Tanna and said that any tear that does not separate the hem is merely a tear of foolishness. For other deceased, the ruling follows the first Tanna. 30R 35R 40R

The reason for this separation in tearing is that the aspect of the left that is separated and torn arouses its anger, unlike the right which sweetens the mouths of judgment,[2] for its silence is praise. 45R

[1] This is a direct translation of the Talmudic statement "אבלות לחוד וקריעה לחוד" which establishes that the rules of tearing garments (keriah) are distinct from the general laws of mourning.

[2] The phrase "פיות הדין" (mouths of judgment) is a kabbalistic term referring to the outlets or expressions of divine judgment. I've maintained the imagery of "mouths" in the translation to preserve the original metaphor.

[i] The author cites Sefer HaTerumah's important distinction that the principle "the law follows the lenient opinion in mourning matters" applies only to Tannaitic sages (earlier authorities) but not to Amoraic ones (later authorities).

[ii] The author explains that tearing on the left side symbolizes the tearing of the heart, which is located on the left side of the body. This reflects the internal grief being externalized through the ritual action.

[iii] The author refers to a dispute between Rabbi Judah and the first Tanna (ת״ק) about whether the hem must be separated during tearing. Rabbi Judah requires separating the hem, calling a tear without this separation a "tear of foolishness."

מעומד כדמוכחינן בפרק אלו מגלחין במעשה דאמימר ואם קרע מיושב לא יצא וצריך לחזור ולקרוע לדברי הרי״ן גיאת והרמב״ם ומהרר״י קארו והרבה. וטעם לזה כי מורה שנעקר המת מעלמא דדכורא שרמז תחלתו ממקום הצוואר כי בחינת רישא הוא עלמא סתימא וירד לעלמא דנוקבא שסיבותיה אחרונות יורדות מות[i] ולכן קורע מעומד שדברים שהם נגד עלמא דדכורא הן לטוב הן למוטב לעולם הם בעמידה ואם היה קורע מיושב תהיה הוראה שירד גם מבחינת עלמא דנוקבא למקום החיצונים חס ושלום ולא ניחא למרי דאברהם דיימו הכי על בניה ולכן לא יצא. ויחזור ויקרע. והקריעה היא טפח שהוא כולל חמשה אצבעות מקומצים[ii] שיש חמשה מריבות בין בעלי הדין ונרמזו בברכת האל הרב את ריבנו שהם חמש, ושור וחמור צאן ועבד ושפחה הם חמשה מדרגות חצוניות שבהם מתלבשות חמשה היכלות שהם למטה מהיכל הרצון והיכל זה הוא בין מחנה שכינה הנקרא היכל קדש הקדשים למחנה

The tearing is at the neck area and must be done while standing, as we prove in chapter "Elu Megalchin" from the incident with Ameimar. If one tore while seated, it is invalid[A] and one must tear again,[1] according to Rabbi Isaac Giat, Maimonides, Rabbi Joseph Karo, and many others. 50R

The reason for this is that it signifies that the deceased has been uprooted from the masculine realm,[B] which begins at the neck, for the head aspect is the concealed realm,[2] and has descended to the feminine realm, whose final aspects descend to death. Therefore, one tears while standing, for matters relating to the masculine realm, whether for good or bad, are always done standing. If one were to tear while seated, it would indicate that the deceased had descended even lower, from the feminine realm to the realm of the external forces, God forbid, and it is not pleasing to the Master of Abraham that such would be thought about His children. Therefore, it is invalid and one must tear again. 55R 60R 65R

The tear must be a handbreadth,[3] which includes five clenched fingers, for there are five disputes between litigants, alluded to in the blessing "God who champions our cause," which are five. And ox, donkey, sheep, servant, and maidservant are five external levels in which are clothed five chambers that are below the Chamber of Will. This chamber is between the camp of the Divine Presence, called the Chamber of the Holy of Holies, and the camp of the 70R 75R

[A] Or: "he has not fulfilled his obligation" — The phrase "לא יצא" is a technical halakhic term indicating that one hasn't fulfilled a ritual obligation. While "it is invalid" conveys the general meaning, "he has not fulfilled his obligation" more precisely captures the legal terminology.

[B] Or: "world of the masculine principle" — "World of the masculine principle" is a more expanded translation that better conveys the cosmic and metaphysical dimensions of this kabbalistic concept, though "masculine realm" is more concise.

[1] The Hebrew "לא יצא" literally means "he has not fulfilled his obligation," a technical halakhic term indicating that the ritual action was invalid and must be repeated.

[2] I've translated the kabbalistic terms "עלמא דדכורא" as "masculine realm" and "עלמא סתימא" as "concealed realm." These reflect the author's use of kabbalistic concepts to explain ritual mourning practices.

[3] The Hebrew "טפח" refers to a specific halakhic measurement approximately equal to a handbreadth (about 3-4 inches or 8-10 cm). This is an important legal detail in the laws of tearing garments for mourning.

[i] This presents a kabbalistic interpretation of death as the soul's transition from the "masculine realm" (עלמא דדכורא) to the "feminine realm" (עלמא דנוקבא). The neck represents the boundary between the head (associated with the concealed realm) and the lower body (associated with the manifest realm).

[ii] The author specifies that the tear must be a handbreadth (טפח), which corresponds to five clenched fingers, and then provides kabbalistic symbolism for this number.

המלאכים ועליו אמר יעקב
והיה המחנה הנשאר לפליטה כי
כבודו לאחר לא יתן חס ושלום.
ובחוץ יש חמשה דמים טמאים
באשה ונודע כי למעלה במלכות
הגבורות הם חמשה בסוד שהיא
ה״א וכן יעקב קלל ה׳ מדרגות
קשות הדין ארור א׳ אפם ב׳ עז
ג׳ עברתם ד׳ קשתה ה׳ שאות ה׳
מתנהגת בקושי הדין והגבורות
החצונות. ביום הכפורים צריך
ה׳ ענויים למתק החמש גבורות
במקומן[i] ואכילה ושתיה היינו
ת״ת נקודה אמצעית ובזה הגוף
מתענה ומתחלש וסוד נשמה
למעלה מתגברת ועולה ורחמי
אריך מאירין:[ii]

angels. Concerning this Jacob said, "The remaining camp shall survive," for His glory He will not give to another, God forbid.

Externally, there are five impure bloods in a woman, and it is known that above in Malkhut, the powers of judgment are five, corresponding to the letter hei. Similarly, Jacob cursed five levels of harsh judgment: (1) "cursed be their anger," (2) "fierce," (3) "their wrath," (4) "cruel," (5) "I will divide them." The letter hei is conducted through the harshness of judgment and external severities. On Yom Kippur, five afflictions are required to sweeten the five powers of judgment[A] in their place, while eating and drinking correspond to Tiferet, the central point.[1] Through this, the body is afflicted and weakened, and the secret of the soul above is strengthened, rises, and the mercies of Arich Anpin shine forth.[B]

פרק ל״ב

Chapter 32

[A] Or: "to mitigate the five powers of severity" — "Mitigate the five powers of severity" might better convey the meaning to readers unfamiliar with the kabbalistic concept of "sweetening" (המתקה), which refers to the transformation of divine judgment into mercy.

[B] Or: "the compassions of the Long-Faced One illuminate" — This alternate translation provides the literal meaning of 'Arich Anpin' while maintaining the poetic quality of the original, though it might be less immediately clear to readers without kabbalistic background.

[1] Tiferet (ת״ת) is a central divine attribute in Kabbalah, often associated with harmony, beauty, and balance. It is frequently symbolized as the central point that mediates between mercy and judgment.

[i] The author connects the five afflictions of Yom Kippur to the five powers of judgment (גבורות), suggesting that the afflictions serve to "sweeten" or mitigate these judgments. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that physical practices have metaphysical effects.

[ii] Cf. Tractate Moed Katan 22b — The author uses this source as the foundation for the halakhic distinctions in mourning practices for different categories of deceased, particularly the symbolic significance of right versus left side in tearing. | Cf. Sefer HaTerumah (by Rabbi Baruch ben Isaac of Worms) — The author cites this work to establish that the principle of following the lenient opinion applies only to earlier Tannaitic authorities but not to later Amoraic authorities, reinforcing the stringency of tearing laws. | Cf. Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Laws of Mourning — The author references Maimonides among those who rule that tearing while seated is invalid, emphasizing the importance of proper ritual performance. | Cf. Genesis 32:9 — The author uses this verse in a kabbalistic context to describe the separation between spiritual realms, comparing Jacob's two camps to the division between the "Camp of the Divine Presence" and the "Camp of Angels." | Cf. Genesis 49:7 — The author interprets this verse as referring to five levels of harsh judgment, parsing out five specific terms from the curse to develop a kabbalistic structure of divine judgment. | Cf. Zohar — The author adapts Zoharic terminology to explain the metaphysical meaning of standing versus sitting during the tearing ritual. The position of the mourner corresponds to different cosmic realms through which the deceased's soul is transitioning. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2, Chapter 4 — The author refers back to this earlier section when mentioning that "it is further explained in chapter four in the name of the Semag that mourning is more severe than aninut," creating an internal cross-reference within the work.

בהקדמה שאמרנו תבין למה
קריעת אביו ואמו וחכם ונשיא
ואב בית דין ורוב הצבור וכו׳
כאשר פרטם הרמב״ם פרק ט׳
מהלכות אבל היא עד שיגלה
את לבו וכמה טעמים לפרטי
הקריעה וטעם הרבה דברים
אשר נאמרו באבל בגמרא
ובפוסקין ועל חמשה מאורעים
קורעין על מת ועל שמועות
רעות ועל ברכת ה׳ מישראל
ועל כתבי הקדש שנשרפו בזרוע
ועל ערי יהודה בחרבן וכל
שכן ירושלים ובית המקדש נגד
חמש סיבות הנזכרים וכן יש
בקדושה חמש תיבות בשם אלהים
וחמש אותיות מנצפ״ך שהם
פ״ר דינים[i] והאבל אסור בי״א
דברים כאשר הובאו בפרק אלו
מגלחין ובאבל רבתי ובהרמב״ם
פרק ה׳ מהלכות אבל נגד עשתי
עשרה יריעות שמחזין למחנה
מושבם[ii] והנה הרמב״ם בפרק
ט׳ פרט לי״א המקרים והדברים
שחייב לקרוע עליהם עד שיגלה
את לבו ואינם מאחים לעולם
ויעקב קרע שמלותיו על יוסף
להורות ששמלותיו העליונים לא
היו משתלמים על ידי אבודו של
יוסף[iii] וזה ג״כ טעם לקריעת

According to the introduction we presented, you will understand why the rending of garments for one's father, mother, a Torah scholar, a leader, the head of the court, the majority of the community, etc., as enumerated by Maimonides in chapter 9 of the Laws of Mourning,[1] must be done until one's heart is exposed. There are many reasons for the specific details of rending, and for many practices mentioned regarding mourning in the Talmud and legal authorities. We rend our garments for five types of occasions: for the dead, for bad tidings, for blasphemy against God by a Jew, for Torah scrolls burned with intent, and for the destruction of the cities of Judah—all the more so for Jerusalem and the Temple. These correspond to the five aforementioned causes.[2] Similarly, in the realm of holiness, there are five letters in the name Elohim and five final letters (MaNTZaPaKH), which represent 280 judgments.

The mourner is prohibited from eleven activities, as listed in the chapter "These are the ones who may cut their hair" in tractate Mo'ed Katan,[3] in Avel Rabbati,[4] and in Maimonides chapter 5 of the Laws of Mourning, corresponding to the eleven curtains that were outside the camp of their dwelling. Maimonides in chapter 9 details eleven cases and matters for which one must rend garments until one's heart is exposed, and these tears are never mended.

Jacob tore his garments over Joseph to indicate that his supernal "garments" could not be completed due to the loss of Joseph. This is also the reason for

[1] The text references Maimonides' (Rambam's) Mishneh Torah, his comprehensive legal code. The specific citation is to Hilkhot Avel (Laws of Mourning), chapter 9, which details the laws of rending garments (keriah).

[2] The author is establishing a mystical correspondence between the five occasions requiring rending garments and the five letters of God's name Elohim, suggesting that these rituals have cosmic significance beyond their practical observance.

[3] This refers to the third chapter of Talmudic tractate Mo'ed Katan, which begins with the words "Elu Megalchin" ("These are the ones who may cut their hair") and contains many laws of mourning.

[4] Avel Rabbati (Great Mourning) is another name for Masechet Semachot (Tractate of Joys), a minor tractate of the Talmud dealing with laws of mourning. The ironic title "Joys" is a euphemism for death and mourning customs.

[i] The Hebrew letters מנצפ״ך (MEM, NUN, TZADI, PEI, KAF in their final forms) have a gematria (numerical value) of 280, which is represented here by the Hebrew letters פ״ר (PEI-REISH). In Kabbalah, these letters represent the 280 forms of divine judgment.

[ii] This refers to the eleven goat-hair curtains that covered the Tabernacle in the wilderness (Exodus 26:7). The author is drawing a parallel between these eleven curtains, which were outside the sacred space, and the eleven mourning restrictions which mark a temporary separation from normal life.

[iii] This is a kabbalistic interpretation where "garments" (שמלות) refer to spiritual vestments or divine emanations. The author suggests that Jacob's tearing of his physical garments symbolized a disruption in the cosmic spiritual order due to Joseph's disappearance.

הבגדים על המת כל אחד סדינו
ולהיות שלא היה בוכה אלא על
התורה והמצוה אחר שהודיע
זה לבניו לכן ויבך אותו אביו
35 יותר משלשה לבכי.[i] ומצאתי
סמך לטעם זה של הקריעה
ממה דאמרינן בירושלמי כי רבי
יוחנן בעת פטירת רבי חנינא
אייתי מאני טבא דשבתא ובזע
40 עליה והובא בהגהות מהלכות
אבל עוד אמרו כי מהשפע
נעשת לבוש וזה סוד מלביש
ערומים כי מרוחא דנשיב מפומא
דאריך המתלבש זעיר וברוח
45 דזעיר מתלבש נוקביה[ii] וברוחא
דנוקביה מתלבשין כל חיילי
מלאכים דכתיב וברוח פיו כל
צבאם ועל זה נאמר ונתן לי בגד
ללבוש ושפע פנימי הוא סוד
50 המזון. ושתית העשרה כוסות
שהותר לשתות בבית האבל
ולא יותר כדאמרינן בכתובות
פרק קמא הוא למתק בהם י״א
קליפות ביין המשמח מצד י׳
55 נהורין[iii] שבהם יין המשמח ואין
להוסיף פן ישתכר ויצא לחוץ
ליינו של נח חם ושלום[iv] ואין
צריך לפרש יותר לחכם ועתה
בדורות אחרונים דלא אכשור
60 דרי בטלו אותם לגמרי כי
התחילו להיות שותין ומשתכרין

tearing garments over the deceased, each person tearing their own garment. And since Jacob wept only for the Torah and commandments after informing his sons of this, therefore "his father wept for him" more than the three days of weeping. 35R

I found support for this explanation of rending from what is stated in the Jerusalem Talmud that when Rabbi Yochanan, at the time of Rabbi Chanina's passing, brought his fine Sabbath garments and tore them, as cited in the glosses 40R to the Laws of Mourning.[1] It is further taught that from divine flow, garments are made, which is the secret of "clothing the naked."[2] For from the breath that flows from the mouth of Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One), Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced 45R One) is clothed, and from the breath of Zeir Anpin, its feminine counterpart is clothed, and from the breath of the feminine aspect, all the angelic hosts are clothed, as it is written: "By the breath of His mouth all their host."[3] Concerning this it is said: 50R "And He gave me a garment to wear." And the internal flow is the secret of nourishment.

The drinking of the ten cups that was permitted in the house of mourning, but no more, as stated in Ketubot chapter 1, is to sweeten the eleven husks 55R through the joy-inducing wine from the aspect of the ten lights within them—the wine that gladdens. One should not add more lest one become drunk and go outside to the wine of Noah, God forbid. There is no need to explain further to the wise. Now in recent 60R generations, when the generations have declined in [1] This likely refers to the Hagahot Maimoniyot, a commentary on Maimonides' Mishneh Torah by Rabbi Meir HaKohen of Rothenburg (13th century).

[2] "Clothing the naked" (malbish arumim) appears in the daily morning prayers as one of God's attributes that humans should emulate. Here the author gives it a mystical interpretation, suggesting that divine emanation creates spiritual "clothing" throughout all levels of creation.
[3] This is a quotation from Psalm 33:6, which the author interprets kabbalistically to describe how divine breath/speech creates angelic beings.

[i] The phrase refers to Jacob mourning for Joseph beyond the customary three days of intense weeping, suggesting an extended period of grief.
[ii] This passage uses technical kabbalistic terminology describing how divine emanation flows downward: from the breath of Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One, representing a high divine configuration) comes the clothing of Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced One, a lower divine configuration), and from Zeir's breath comes the clothing of its feminine counterpart (Nukvah/Malkhut).
[iii] According to Kabbalah, wine has the spiritual power to "sweeten" or mitigate harsh judgments. The ten cups correspond to the ten sefirot (divine emanations), while the eleven husks (kelipot) represent negative spiritual forces that require transformation.
[iv] This is an allusion to the biblical story of Noah becoming drunk and being uncovered in his tent (Genesis 9:21), which led to negative consequences. The author uses this as a cautionary example of excessive drinking.

כדאמרינן בפרק קמא דמגלה וכשתבין מה שכתבנו לעיל בפרק כ״ב בסוד התקונים והקשוטים והיחוד והזווג וסוד השערות וסוד הרחיצה וסיכה והשמלות תמצא טעם לאסור כל אחד מהם בימי האבל: [i] quality,[1] they have completely abolished these cups because people began to drink and become intoxicated, as stated in the first chapter of Megillah. And when you understand what we wrote above in chapter 22 concerning the secret of the spiritual rectifications, adornments, unification, coupling, the secret of the hairs, and the secret of washing, anointing, and garments, you will find the reason for prohibiting each of these during the days of mourning.

פרק ל״ג

Chapter 33

סדר צדוק הדין הראוי לאבל לומר בפרט קודם שנקבר המת ואינו לפניו נתבאר בפרק מי שמתו שאומר צדיק אתה ה׳ על כל הבא עלינו יהי רצון מלפניך ה׳ אלהינו ואלהי אבותינו שתגדור פרצותינו ופרצות עמך ישראל ברחמים וגם מידי חזרתו לביתו מסכרא לאבולא יאמר כן ובפרק קמא דמס׳ ע״ג במעשה

The proper order of Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment)[2] for a mourner to recite, particularly before the deceased is buried and not in their presence, is explained in the chapter "One Whose Dead Relative" [in Tractate Berakhot]. The mourner says: "Righteous are You, O Lord, concerning all that has come upon us." [Then adds:] "May it be Your will, O Lord our God and God of our fathers, that You repair our breaches and the breaches of Your people Israel with mercy."[3] Likewise, upon

[1] The phrase "דלא אכשור דרי" ("the generations have declined in quality") is a common Talmudic expression indicating moral or spiritual deterioration over time. The author uses this to explain why certain mourning practices involving wine were discontinued.

[2] Tzidduk HaDin is a central Jewish mourning ritual in which mourners affirm the justice of God's decree even in the face of personal tragedy. This theological affirmation distinguishes Judaism's approach to grief, emphasizing acceptance of divine judgment while allowing for emotional expression.

[3] This prayer transitions from personal acceptance of judgment to communal concerns, reflecting Judaism's emphasis on seeing personal tragedy within the context of collective Jewish destiny and redemption.

[i] Cf. Exodus 26:7 — The author creates a mystical correspondence between the eleven curtains that were outside the sacred space of the Tabernacle and the eleven mourning restrictions that symbolize the mourner's temporary separation from normal life. This reflects the kabbalistic tendency to find cosmic significance in ritual practices. | Cf. Genesis 37:34 — The author interprets Jacob's tearing of garments kabbalistically, suggesting it symbolized a disruption in cosmic spiritual order. This exemplifies how Ma'avar Yabok consistently reads biblical narratives through a mystical lens, finding in them templates for mourning practices and their deeper significance. | Cf. Zohar — The kabbalistic terminology used here (Arich Anpin, Zeir Anpin, Nukvah) comes directly from the Zohar and later kabbalistic works. The author applies this cosmological framework to explain the spiritual significance of tearing garments during mourning, suggesting that physical actions create corresponding effects in higher spiritual realms. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Mo'ed Katan — The author cites this Talmudic story to demonstrate that even valuable garments should be torn to show proper respect for the deceased, especially for great scholars. This supports the author's broader argument about the importance of rending garments as a mourning practice with deep spiritual significance. | Cf. Genesis 9:20-23 — The author refers to "the wine of Noah" as a cautionary example against excessive drinking, even in the context of mourning rituals. This illustrates how Ma'avar Yabok integrates biblical narratives as moral guidance for appropriate ritual behavior. | Cf. Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Hilkhot Avel (Laws of Mourning) — The author uses Maimonides' legal code as an authoritative source for mourning practices, while simultaneously adding kabbalistic interpretations that go beyond the plain legal meaning. This demonstrates how Ma'avar Yabok integrates halakhic (legal) and mystical approaches to death rituals.

דרבי חנניא בן תרדיון מצינו כי סדר צדוק הדין הוא הצור תמים פעלו כי כל דרכיו משפט אל אמונה ואין עול צדיק וישר הוא. גדול העצה ורב העליליה אשר עיניך פקוחות על כל דרכי בני אדם. ושם אמר רבי כמה גדולים ג׳ צדוקים הללו שהיה הוא ואשתו ובתו שנזדמנו להם ג׳ מקראות של צדוק הדין בשעת צ״ה וגם שיש לומר כי אמרו ג׳ פסוקים אלו על מה שאירע להם כדאיתא שם ע״מ יצדקו ודאי בכל מין הצדקות דין וכן קבעום בראש סדר צדוק הדין והפסוק הא׳ יהיה להצדיק דין שמים מבעל המשפט שהוא מתווך שלום בין החסד והדין[i] והב׳ להמשיך חסד אל כי דין הגוף הוא חסד לנשמה[ii] באשר היה עסקנו בזה במאמר א׳ בפסוק גדול העצה והג׳ יהיה להמתיק הנהגת הדין מסוד והשפעת עינא פקיחא ועינין דמתלהטן יהו רוחצות בחלב האם.[iii] ובירושלמי סוף פרק ארבע מיתות אמרו רבנן לפני רבי אבהו שנפטר לו בן מה אם רשות שלמטן שיש בה שקר וכזב וגניבות דעת ומשוא פנים ומקח שחד והיום עודנו ומחר איננו נאמר בה הקרובים באים returning home from closing the gate [after the funeral], one should say the same prayer.

In the first chapter of Tractate Avodah Zarah, in the account of Rabbi Hanina ben Teradion, we find that the order of Tzidduk HaDin is: "The Rock, His work is perfect, for all His ways are justice; a God of faithfulness without iniquity, righteous and upright is He" [Deuteronomy 32:4]. "Great in counsel and mighty in deed, whose eyes are open to all the ways of human beings" [Jeremiah 32:19]. And there Rabbi [Judah HaNasi] said: "How great are these three justifications," for Rabbi Hanina, his wife, and his daughter were granted three verses of Tzidduk HaDin at the time of distress. Although one could say they recited these three verses in response to what happened to them, as related there, they certainly justified judgment in all types of justification, and thus these verses were established at the beginning of the Tzidduk HaDin liturgy.

The first verse serves to justify heavenly judgment from the Master of Justice, who mediates peace between mercy and judgment.[1] The second verse draws forth divine kindness, for the judgment of the body is kindness to the soul,[2] as we discussed in the first discourse regarding the verse "Great in counsel." And the third verse sweetens the governance of judgment through the mystery of the influence of the watchful eye, and the flaming eyes are bathed in the milk of the Mother.[3]

In the Jerusalem Talmud, at the end of the chapter "Four Death Penalties," the Rabbis said to Rabbi

15R 20R 25R 30R 35R 40R

[1] The author provides a kabbalistic interpretation of each verse of Tzidduk HaDin, explaining how they function spiritually to balance cosmic forces of judgment and mercy. This represents a mystical dimension beyond the plain meaning of the prayers.

[2] This reflects the complex theological perspective that physical suffering or death, while painful in this world, can serve as spiritual purification or elevation for the soul—transforming apparent severity into ultimate kindness.

[3] This is deeply mystical language drawing from kabbalistic concepts. The 'flaming eyes' represent harsh divine judgment, while the 'milk of the Mother' refers to the nurturing, compassionate influence of the divine attribute of Binah (Understanding), often portrayed as a maternal force that softens judgment.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that judgment (din) and kindness (chesed) are divine attributes that need to be balanced and mediated. The 'Master of Justice' mediates between these attributes to ensure cosmic harmony.

[ii] This expresses a profound theological idea that physical suffering or death, while painful for the body, can be beneficial for the soul's spiritual journey—transforming apparent severity into kindness from a higher perspective.

[iii] This contains complex kabbalistic imagery: the 'watchful eye' (divine providence), 'flaming eyes' (divine judgment), and 'milk of the Mother' (soothing influence from Binah/Understanding). The metaphor suggests harsh judgment being softened by maternal divine nurturing.

ושואלים שלום הדיינים והעדים
לומר שאין בלבנו עליכם כלום
שדין אמת דנתם, רשות של מעלן
שאין בה לא כזב ולא שקר ולא
גניבת דעת ולא משוא פנים
ולא מקח שחד והוא חי וקיים
לעולמי עולמים על אחת כמה
וכמה שחייבים אנו לקבל עלינו
מדת הדין. ויזהר האבל שלא
יפתח פיו לשטן[i] כי החרב היינו
כח הדין מונחת לו בין כתפיו
ומשלשה ועד שבעה כאילו
מונחת כנגדו בקרן זוית[ii] וכו׳
כדאמרי׳ במועד קטן וצריך
האבל לפחד ולדאג ולפשפש
במעשיו ויחזור בתשובה וכן
הוא אומר הכיתי אותם ולא חלו
מכלל דצריך להקיץ ולחול וכן
המנחמים יזהרו בדבריהם עמו
שלא יתנו מקום למקטרג לתפוש
דבריהם וכ״ש מבקרי החולה
כדאמר רבי יוחנן התם לכל
אומרין שבו חוץ מאבל וחולה
דמשמע שב באבילות שלך שב
בחולי שלך[iii] וה״ה לכל דבר
הדומה לזה שלא ימצא מקום
בעל דין לחלוק ולעורר מדנים
נגד מי דכבר איתרע מזליה
ומעשים הרבה באו במס׳ מועד
קטן דפעמים דברים ממיתים
כדאמרי׳ אילו בדידך הוה וכו׳.
והיה כשגגה שיוצאת מלפני
השליט וכן הרבה בגמרא כי
העולם הזה לא נברא אלא לבחון
בו הבריות ופעמים אדם מת
על ידי מקרה אבל לעתיד לבא
כתיב כי הנער בן מאה שנה ימות

Abbahu, who had lost a son: "If in an earthly court, which contains falsehood, deception, theft of knowledge, favoritism, and bribery, and which exists today but may not tomorrow, it is said that the relatives come and ask after the welfare of the judges and witnesses, declaring, 'We bear no ill will against you, for you have judged a true judgment'—then regarding the heavenly court, which contains no deception, no falsehood, no theft of knowledge, no favoritism, no bribery, and which exists and endures forever and ever, how much more are we obligated to accept the attribute of judgment upon ourselves."

The mourner should be careful not to "open his mouth to Satan,"[1] for the sword—that is, the power of judgment—rests between his shoulders from the third to the seventh day [of mourning], as if placed opposite him in a corner, etc., as stated in Tractate Mo'ed Katan. The mourner needs to fear, worry, examine his deeds, and return in repentance. As it says [in Jeremiah 5:3]: "I have struck them, but they did not feel it," implying that one must awaken and feel [the divine rebuke]. Similarly, those who comfort the mourner should be careful with their words, not giving the accuser an opportunity to seize upon their words. This applies all the more so to those visiting the sick, as Rabbi Yohanan said there: "To all we say 'sit,' except to a mourner and a sick person," as this would imply "remain in your mourning" or "remain in your sickness." The same applies to anything similar that might give the prosecutor grounds to contend and stir up strife against one whose fortune has already been compromised.

Many incidents are recorded in Tractate Mo'ed Katan where words can cause death, as we say, "If it were to happen to you..." It is like an error that proceeds from the ruler. There are many such examples in the Talmud, for this world was created only to test

[1] This reflects the Jewish belief that one's words can create spiritual realities, and negative statements might invite misfortune. Mourners are especially vulnerable to accidental negative self-fulfilling prophecies through careless speech.

[i] This reflects the Jewish belief that one should avoid negative speech that might invite misfortune, based on the idea that words have power to create reality and that Satan (the accuser) might use one's own words against them.

[ii] This metaphorical image describes how the power of judgment remains especially potent during different phases of the mourning period, with specific temporal markers (from day three to day seven) having different spiritual significances.

[iii] This demonstrates the Jewish attention to nuanced language, where even a seemingly innocuous word like 'sit' (שב) could be interpreted as a command to 'remain' in a negative state, showing how carefully language should be used around those who are vulnerable.

ולא ימצא צדוק ורע לו רשע
80 וטוב לו דכתיב ושבתם וראיתם
בין צדיק לרשע וגו׳ ואם הנפטר
הוא אחד מבניו בפרט ומת שלא
כדרכו של עולם ח״ו כל שכן
שצריך פשפוש ומשמוש במעשיו
85 כי הלא דבר הוא כדחזינן
במס׳ תענית פ׳ מאימתי במעשה
דחולדה ובור[i] המובא בפירוש
רש״י ובתוס׳ ובספר הערוך ג״כ
שאמרה אשתו לבעלה במיתת
90 בניה אילו בדרך בני אדם היו
מתים הייתי אומרת צד״ה עבשו
שמתו מיתה משונה עון הוא
וכו׳. ובמרירות רוחו ילחוש
לה׳ ויענה ואם לחש ולא נענה
95 אמרו בתענית מאי תקנתיה
ילך אצל חסיד שבדור וירבה
עליו בתפלה[ii] שנאמר ויצו
עליו במפגיע ואין פגיעה אלא
תפלה מכאן גם כן סמך לתפלה
100 שמתפלל החכם על החולה וכן
כתיב יגיד עליו רעו והוא רחום
יכפר. והוכיח הרמב״ן פרשת
יתרו כי תפלה על החולים יקרא
דרישת אלהים וכן ודרשת את ה׳
105 לאמר האחיה מחולי זה פירוש
שיתפלל עליו וכן ותלך לדרוש
את ה׳.[iii]

creatures,[1] and sometimes a person dies by chance. But in the future, it is written [Isaiah 65:20]: "For the youth shall die a hundred years old," and there will no longer be a righteous person who suffers or a wicked person who prospers, as it is written [Malachi 3:18]: "Then you shall again discern between the righteous and the wicked." 80R 85R

If the deceased is one of his children in particular, and the child died unnaturally, God forbid, all the more so does one need to search and examine one's deeds, for surely it is significant, as we see in Tractate Ta'anit, chapter "From When," in the story of the weasel and the pit, as brought in Rashi's commentary, in Tosafot, and also in the Arukh. There, a man's wife said to him upon the death of their children: "If they had died in the manner of all people, I would say it is the decree of divine judgment. Now that they have died an unusual death, it is a sin," etc. 90R 95R

In the bitterness of his spirit, he should whisper to the Lord, who will answer him. If he whispered but was not answered, they said in Tractate Ta'anit: "What is his remedy? Let him go to the pious person of the generation, who should increase prayer on his behalf, as it is said [Job 36:32]: 'He commands concerning him with a plea,' and 'plea' refers only to prayer." From here we also have support for the prayer that a sage offers for the sick. And so it is written [Job 36:33]: "His friend declares concerning him, and He, being merciful, atones." 100R 105R

[1] This theological statement frames suffering as purposeful within a divine plan of spiritual testing and growth, rather than random misfortune. It provides a framework for understanding tragedy as meaningful even when painful.

[i] This refers to a Talmudic story (Ta'anit 8a) about children who died unusually when a weasel emerged from a hole and bit them. Their father was initially comforted by attributing their deaths to their predestined time, but his wife argued that the unusual circumstances indicated divine displeasure requiring repentance.

[ii] This establishes the Jewish practice of seeking intercession from exceptionally pious individuals when one's own prayers seem ineffective, reflecting the belief that some individuals have special spiritual access or merit with God.

[iii] Cf. Tractate Berakhot 59b — The passage from Berakhot establishes the basic prayer formula for accepting divine judgment, which became central to the Tzidduk HaDin ritual. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:4 — This central verse affirms divine justice even in the face of tragedy, forming the theological core of accepting God's judgment. | Cf. Jeremiah 32:19 — This verse emphasizes God's providential awareness of all human actions, suggesting that divine judgment is based on complete knowledge rather than arbitrary decisions. | Cf. Avodah Zarah 18a — This reference connects the Tzidduk HaDin liturgy to a powerful narrative of martyrdom, suggesting that these verses were meaningful even in the most extreme circumstances of suffering. | Cf. Mo'ed Katan 27b — This metaphorical image of judgment hovering over the mourner explains why extreme caution is needed in speech during the mourning period. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin 6:6 — This powerful a fortiori argument suggests that if one accepts human judgment despite its flaws, one should certainly accept Nahmanides, in his commentary on Parshat Yitro, proved that prayer for the sick is called "seeking God,"[1] as in [2 Kings 8:8]: "And you shall inquire of the Lord, saying, 'Shall I recover from this illness?'" meaning that one should pray for him. Similarly [2 Kings 22:18]: "And she went to inquire of the Lord." 110R 115R

פרק ל״ד

Chapter 34

מצאתי קצת סמך למה שאמר רבי יהושע בגמרא כי אין התחלת האבלות רק כשיסתום הגולל שכן דוד רחץ וסך כשמת הילד קודם שיקבר וכבר דרשו מחצדי חקלא בבחינת נפש הילד הזה בפירוש בר נפלי[i] וסמך הנזכר הוא במה שאמרו במדרש תהלים על האבות שלא נקראו קדושים עד שניתנו בארץ ונסתם הגולל בפניהם וכן כתוב במדרש תנחומא פ׳ תולדות על פסוק לקדושים אשר בארץ המה אימתי הם קדושים כשהם נתונים בארץ ואולי יהיה בסוד חזרת הדברים אל נרתקן כי אז הוא שלמותן ותמימותן בסוד כי עפר אתה ואל עפר תשוב[ii] שדברנו ממנו בפ׳ כ״ז ממאמר ב׳ ואמרו במדרש קהלת אימתי והרוח

I found some support for Rabbi Joshua's statement in the Talmud that mourning only begins when the grave is sealed,[A] as we see that David washed and anointed himself when the child died before it was buried. The Kabbalistic scholars ("reapers of the field"[2]) have already expounded on the soul of this child in the explanation of "son of the fallen." The aforementioned support is found in the Midrash Tehillim regarding the Patriarchs, who were not called "holy ones" until they were placed in the earth and the grave was sealed before them. Similarly, it is written in Midrash Tanchuma, Parashat Toldot, on the verse "To the holy ones who are in the earth"—when are they holy? When they are placed in the earth. 5R 10R 15R

Perhaps this relates to the mystical concept of things returning to their sheath, for that is their perfection and completeness, as in the secret meaning of "for dust you are, and to dust you shall return," which we discussed in chapter 27 of Discourse 2. The 20R

[A] Or: "that the mourning period only commences when the grave is sealed" — This alternate translation might be preferable in formal contexts as it more precisely conveys the legal (halakhic) nature of the beginning of the mourning period.

[1] Nahmanides (Ramban, 1194-1270) was a major Spanish Talmudist, kabbalist, and biblical commentator whose interpretations are highly respected in Jewish tradition. His linking of healing prayer with 'seeking God' elevates medical concerns to a spiritual plane.

[2] The term 'מחצדי חקלא' (reapers of the field) is a technical term from the Zohar referring to kabbalistic sages who 'harvest' mystical wisdom. I've chosen to translate it literally but clarify with 'Kabbalistic scholars' to convey the proper meaning.

divine judgment which is perfect. | Cf. Ta'anit 8a — This reference suggests that unnatural deaths particularly call for introspection, as they may indicate divine displeasure rather than natural causes.

[i] The term 'bar nefli' (son of the fallen) is likely a reference to the Talmudic identification of the Messiah in Sanhedrin 96b-97a, where this phrase is applied to the Messiah using a play on words from Amos 9:11 regarding the 'fallen booth of David.' Here it may suggest a mystical interpretation of the deceased child's soul.

[ii] This biblical quotation (Genesis 3:19) is being interpreted not merely as a statement about physical decomposition but as revealing a mystical principle about the completion of the soul's journey and its preparation for resurrection.

תשוב אל האלהים אשר נתנה
כשישוב העפר אל הארץ כשהיה
ואם לאו נפש אויבך יקלענה
על כן אמרינן בגמרא האומר
אל תקברוהו אין שומעין לו
ומצינו שהאבות היו מחבבין
הקבורה כדאמרי׳ במדרש רבה
ובתנחומא ואמרו שם אבילו
אדם מת בספינה הנפש הולכת
אצל אבותיו וכן אמר יעקב
כשאני מסתלק אצל אבותי אני
הולך, והנותן מתו בארון ולא
קברו בקרקע עובר משום מלין
את המת וכבר אמרו הפוסקים
כי יפה לקוברו בקרקע ממש
ואפילו בחוצה לארץ ורבי
חזקיה מוסיף בצוואת של רבי
תהא ארוני זקופה לארץ וגם
שאמרו שם מפני העכול מכל
מקום יהיה משם ראיה שכל עוד
שגוף האדם סמוך לקרקע טוב
לו. ומצאתי כי סוד הקבורה
היא כניסת הנשמה לגן עדן ולזה
לא נקנה לאברהם איש החסד
המערה עד מיתת שרה וקנייתה
היתה בארבע מאות שקל כסף
דאינון עלמין דכסופא ושעשוע
הצדיקים[i] ואברהם בחר לו
קבורתו שם עם אדם וחוה לפי
שנפשותיהם של רשעים שהם
המזיקים ורצה להתרחק מהם
ושם במערה היו ד׳ פנים וד׳
כנפים הויה בזכרים ואדנות

Midrash Kohelet states: When does "the spirit return to God who gave it"? When "the dust returns to the earth as it was." If not, "He will sling out the souls of your enemies." Therefore, we say in the Talmud that if someone says, "Do not bury him," we do not listen to him.[A] 25R

We find that the Patriarchs cherished burial, as stated in Midrash Rabbah and Tanchuma. They said there that even if a person dies on a ship, the soul goes to its ancestors. Thus Jacob said, "When I depart to my fathers, I will go." One who places his dead in a coffin without burying it in the ground transgresses the prohibition against leaving the dead unburied. The legal authorities have already stated that it is best to bury directly in the ground, even outside the Land of Israel. Rabbi Hezekiah adds in Rabbi's testament: "Let my coffin be upright to the ground." Although they said this was for the sake of decomposition, this nonetheless proves that as long as a person's body is close to the ground, it is good for him. 30R 35R 40R

I found that the secret of burial is the soul's entrance into the Garden of Eden. For this reason, the cave was not acquired for Abraham, the man of kindness, until Sarah's death. Its purchase was for four hundred silver shekels, corresponding to the worlds of divine delight and the righteous ones' pleasure.[B] Abraham chose his burial place there with Adam and Eve because the souls of the wicked become harmful spirits,[1] and he wanted to distance himself from them. In that cave were four faces and four wings—YHVH for the males and ADNY for the females.[2] 45R 50R

[A] Or: "if one requests not to be buried, this request is disregarded" — This alternative more clearly conveys that this refers to someone requesting not to be buried themselves (rather than requesting someone else not be buried).

[B] Or: "which represent the realms of spiritual longing and the delight of the righteous" — This alternate captures another nuance of 'כסופא' which can mean both 'delight' and 'longing/yearning' in kabbalistic terminology.

[1] The original Hebrew uses a word that literally means 'damagers' or 'harmful ones' (המזיקים), which in Jewish mystical tradition refers to destructive spiritual entities often associated with the souls of the wicked.

[2] This is a kabbalistic concept referring to the divine names as they manifest in the spiritual structure of the burial cave. The four faces likely refer to the four letters of the divine name, while the wings represent the extension of divine influence.

[i] The author gives a kabbalistic interpretation to Abraham's purchase of the Cave of Machpelah, suggesting that the 400 silver shekels correspond to spiritual realms of divine delight where righteous souls experience pleasure in the afterlife.

בנקבות.[i] ונייחא למת שיקנו
55 לו קרקע אחוזתו באשר נראה
בהרבה מקומות מדברי רבותינו
ולכן מפנין אותו אפילו מקבר
מכובד לבזוי אם היה בתוך
שדהו כדאמרינן בירושלמי
60 ופסקו הרמב"ם בפרק י"ד.
וכתוב במסכת שמחות ובס'
התרומה כי האבל אומר לרבים
הבאים לנחמו משום כבודם
לכו לבתיכם לשלום ושכרכם
65 כפול מן השמים וזה אינו בכלל
שאלת שלום דאסור בשלשה ימים
הראשונים[ii]

It is restful for the dead when they are purchased land for their possession, as is evident in many places 55R in our rabbis' teachings. Therefore, we move the deceased even from an honorable grave to a dishonorable one if it was within his own field, as stated in the Jerusalem Talmud and ruled by Maimonides in chapter 14. It is written in Tractate Semachot and 60R in Sefer HaTerumah that the mourner says to the many who come to comfort him, out of respect for them: "Go to your homes in peace, and may your reward be doubled from Heaven." This is not included in the prohibition against greeting during the first 65R three days of mourning.

פרק ל"ה

Chapter 35

כתוב בספר תורת האדם
כי קבלה מיד אחד מרבותיו
שרחיצת ידים בבואם מבית
הקברות ותלישת עשבים רמז
5 לטהרת הטומאה לומר טומאה
זו אינה ניתרת אלא בעין שלשה

It is written in the book Torat Ha'Adam that one of his teachers handed down a tradition[A] that washing the hands upon returning from the cemetery[1] and plucking grass[2] symbolizes purification from impurity,[B] suggesting that this impurity can only 5R be cleansed through three elements: water, ash,

[A] Or: "he received a tradition directly from one of his teachers" — This more literal translation emphasizes the direct transmission of the tradition from teacher to student, which is significant in rabbinic culture.

[B] Or: "alludes to the purification from ritual impurity" — This alternate specifies that the impurity being discussed is ritual impurity (tumah), a specific halakhic category rather than general uncleanliness.

[1] This refers to the Jewish practice of netilat yadayim (ritual hand washing) after visiting a cemetery, which is still observed today. The custom is meant to remove ritual impurity (tumah) believed to be contracted in the presence of the dead.

[2] This refers to the practice of plucking grass at a cemetery and throwing it behind one's back. Various explanations exist for this custom beyond the resurrection symbolism mentioned here, including representing the cycle of life and death or acknowledging that humans, like grass, will eventually wither.

[i] This is a kabbalistic description of the Cave of Machpelah as containing mystical configurations of the divine names: YHVH (associated with the masculine divine attribute) and ADNY (associated with the feminine divine attribute).

[ii] Cf. Midrash Tehillim — The text cites Midrash Tehillim to support the idea that the Patriarchs were not called 'holy ones' until after their burial, suggesting burial completes a spiritual transition. | Cf. Midrash Tanchuma — The citation from Midrash Tanchuma reinforces the notion that holiness is attained through burial, interpreting the verse 'To the holy ones who are in the earth' to mean that sanctity is achieved when one is placed in the earth. | Cf. Genesis 3:19 — The biblical verse is referenced to support the mystical concept that returning to earth through burial represents a completion of the soul's earthly journey. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 12:7 — This verse is cited to show that the soul's return to God is contingent upon the body's return to earth through burial. | Cf. Zohar — The reference to 'מחצדי חקלא' (reapers of the field) is a term commonly used in the Zohar for kabbalistic sages, suggesting that mystical interpretations of the child's soul had been developed in kabbalistic literature.

דברים הללו במים ואפר ואזוב ואמר כי זה טעם יפה ורבינו ישעיה כתב בהגהה כי המים והעפר אלו הם רמז ליצירה ולמיתה וסמך דבריו במדרש שאמרו במדרש רבה[i] על למה מים ועפר שתחלתה מן המים וסופו לעפר לפיכך נבדקת במים ובעפר אם טהורה היא כברייתא ואם לאו חזרת לעפרה כן הרמז כאן ליצירה ולמיתה כנזכר והעשב רמז לתחית המתים כמו שנאמר ויציצו מעיר[ii] וגו׳ ואת אשר הורינו ה׳ בטעם מנהגים אלו העלינו בפני המעיין במאמר ב׳[iii] [iv] and hyssop.[1] He stated that this is a beautiful explanation. Rabbi Isaiah wrote in a gloss that the water and earth symbolize creation and death, supporting his words with a midrash that appears in Midrash Rabbah explaining why water and earth are used: "Because man's beginning is from water and his end is dust; therefore, the woman suspected of adultery is examined with water and dust[2]—if she is pure as when first created,[A] [she is vindicated], and if not, she returns to her dust." Thus, the symbolism here refers to creation and death as mentioned. The grass symbolizes the resurrection of the dead, as it is written, "They shall flourish from the city, etc." As for what the Lord has taught us regarding the reasons for these customs, we have presented them to the reader in Discourse 2.

10R 15R 20R

פ׳ ל׳ ול״א וגם במאמר ג׳ פ״כ. בסוף גמרא במסכת שמחות כתוב הנפטר מן המת יאמר לו לך בשלום שנאמר ואתה תבא אל אבותיך בשלום וכתב הר״ן כי מפני שהוא נבעת צריך לפוקדו לשלום בהליכתו וכזה פסק

At the end of chapters 30 and 31, and also in chapter 20 of the third discourse, it is written in the concluding section of Tractate Semachot that one who takes leave of the dead should say to them, "Go in peace," as it is said, "And you shall go to your fathers in peace" (Genesis 15:15). The Ran explains that because the deceased is frightened, it is necessary to bid

25R

[A] Or: "if she is pure as in her original state of creation" — This alternate more clearly conveys the meaning of 'כברייתא' as referring to the woman's original created state, making the theological parallel more explicit.

[1] These three elements were used in the biblical purification ritual for someone who had come into contact with a corpse, as described in Numbers 19. The ritual involved sprinkling water mixed with the ashes of a red heifer using a hyssop branch.

[2] This refers to the sotah ritual described in Numbers 5:11-31, where a woman suspected of adultery would drink water mixed with dust from the Tabernacle floor. The outcome of this ritual was believed to reveal her guilt or innocence.

[i] The text refers to a teaching from Midrash Rabbah, a collection of homiletical interpretations of the Torah. The specific midrash cited appears to relate to the ritual of the sotah (a woman suspected of adultery), comparing her examination with water and dust to human creation and mortality.

[ii] This is a quote from Psalm 72:16, which reads in full: "May grain abound throughout the land; on the tops of the hills may it sway. May the crops flourish like Lebanon and thrive like the grass of the field." The author uses this verse to connect the sprouting of grass with the concept of resurrection.

[iii] The author refers to having already discussed these customs in Discourse 2 of Ma'avar Yabok, showing the interconnected nature of the work and suggesting that this passage is part of a later discourse.

[iv] Cf. Sotah ritual — The author uses the sotah ritual as a parallel to explain the symbolism of water and earth in cemetery rituals, suggesting both involve transformation or revelation of one's true nature. | Cf. "They shall flourish from the city" — The author cites this verse as biblical support for grass symbolizing resurrection, drawing a parallel between plants sprouting from the earth and the dead rising from their graves. | Cf. Water, ash, and hyssop — The author connects cemetery practices to the biblical purification ritual that specifically addresses corpse impurity, suggesting these modern customs preserve the symbolic elements of the ancient ritual.

הרמב״ם בפרק ד׳ מהלכות אבל
שחובה למלוין לומר כן והיאך
יתנהגו המנחמים בא מפורש שם
בגמרא ולהיות כי המנחם מעורר
כח הימין לכן האבלים עומדים
לשמאלו כדאמרינן באבל רבתי
ובתשובת הגאונים וכן פסק
הרמב״ם בפרמ י״ג מהלכות אבל
ואומרים להם תנוחמו מן השמים
שהיא בשום הדין ברחמים ומטה
הכרעתו כלפי חסד. ובכל יום
באים בני אדם לנחמו שבכל יום
צריך מיתוק חדש ופנים חדשות
עדיפי כי כל ז׳ גבורות חיצונות
הזרות מתדבקות[i] שכיון שפותחת
אחד מהם בדין כלם גוברות
כמו שבנדה ישראלית אפילו
תראה רק יום א׳ בכל שבעה
ימים יש שליטת הנחש[ii] ולכן
משכבה ומושבה ומרכבה טמא
בימי חסרונה שהמשכב וחבריו
הם רמז למדרגות החצונות

them farewell with words of peace as they depart. Similarly, Maimonides ruled[A] in chapter 4 of the Laws of Mourning that it is obligatory for those accompanying the deceased to say this.[1] How mourners should conduct themselves is explicitly stated there in the Talmud.

Since the comforter awakens the power of the right side (mercy), the mourners stand to his left,[2] as stated in Avel Rabbati and in the responsa of the Geonim, and as Maimonides ruled in chapter 13 of the Laws of Mourning. The comforters say to them, "May you be comforted from Heaven," which places divine judgment within mercy and tips the balance toward lovingkindness.[3]

People come each day to comfort the mourner because each day requires new sweetening of judgment,[B] and new faces are preferable, for all seven external, foreign powers of severity[C] cling to the mourner.[4] Once one of these powers opens with judgment, they all gain strength. This is similar to a menstruating Israelite woman who, even if she sees blood on only one day, the influence of the serpent

[A] Or: "And Maimonides issued this ruling" — While 'similarly' captures the comparison being made, the alternate is more direct about indicating that Maimonides specifically codified this exact ruling mentioned previously.

[B] Or: "each day requires fresh spiritual amelioration" — The term 'mituk' (sweetening) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to the transformation of divine judgment into mercy. While 'sweetening of judgment' is accurate, 'spiritual amelioration' might be more accessible for readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[C] Or: "seven external powers of severity that are alien in nature" — This alternate translation emphasizes that these 'gevurot' (powers of severity/judgment) are not only external but fundamentally foreign or alien to the natural spiritual order, which more fully captures the nuance of 'zarot' (strange/foreign).

[1] The original text uses 'melavin' (מלוין), which refers specifically to those who accompany the deceased to burial, not just any attendees at a funeral.

[2] This physical positioning has mystical significance in Kabbalah, where the right side represents mercy (Chesed) and the left side represents judgment (Gevurah). By standing to the comforter's left, the mourner positions himself to receive the flow of mercy from the comforter's right side.

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'mateh hachraato klapei chesed' alludes to the rabbinic concept that God judges 'tipping the scales toward mercy,' a principle found in the Talmud (Rosh Hashanah 17a).

[4] This is a kabbalistic explanation for the seven-day mourning period (shiva), suggesting that each day corresponds to a different aspect of divine judgment that must be 'sweetened' or transformed into mercy through the comfort offered by visitors.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of seven external powers of judgment (representing the seven lower sefirot in their aspect of severity) that affect the mourner during the seven days of mourning. These powers are considered 'foreign' or 'alien' (zarot) because they represent an intrusion of harsh judgment into normal life.

[ii] The author draws a parallel between menstrual impurity and mourning, noting that just as a menstruant remains ritually impure for seven days even if she bleeds only on one day, so too the mourner is affected by the 'serpent' (representing negative spiritual forces) for all seven days of mourning.

שהם דין בני חלוף מרכבה
טמאה[i] ולכן שוין בזה הזב והזבה
והנדה והיולדת. ועדיף טומאת
התחתון מכלים הראויים למדרס
מטומאות העליון שאינו אלא
מדף והתחתון אב לטומאה.
וזה טעם לכל הדינים ולבשעת
ימי טומאה והפרשה בכל מקום
עוד יש להם דוקא טומאת הסט
בטהור. וכן מצינו כי שבעה
מיני כלים מקבלים טומאה
מן התורה[ii] כדאמרו בתורת
כהנים ובהרמב״ם ריש פרק
א׳ דכלים וסמ״ג עשין רמ״ו
וכשתדקדק במיני החצונים
הנקובים בפסוקים לא יעלו יותר
על שבעה מינים ודי למבין. ולכן
האבל אינו משלח קרבנותיו
כל שבעה אפילו יין או עצים
או לבונה כדאמרי׳ בפרק אלו
מגלחין וכן פסק הרמב״ם פ״ב
מהלכות ביאת מקדש וסמ״ג
לאוין י״ג ופשוט כי נחום
האבלים מלבד כי הוא יקרא
דחיי גם הוא נייחא דשכבי ולכן
תנחומי האבל קודם לשמחת חתן
כדפסק מהר״י קארו בסי׳ ש״ס.
[iii]

remains for all seven days. Therefore, her bed, seat, and conveyance become impure during her days of impurity, for the bed and its companions symbolize the external levels that are judgments subject to exchange—an impure vehicle. For this reason, the man with discharge, the woman with discharge, the menstruant, and the woman after childbirth are all equal in this regard. 55R

The impurity of the lower entity from vessels suitable for treading is more severe than the impurity of the upper entity, which is merely considered "a shaking" (midaf), while the lower is a primary source of impurity (av ha-tumah). This is the reason for all the laws concerning the time of impurity and separation in every place. Additionally, they specifically have the impurity of displacement when touching something pure. 60R 65R

We also find that seven types of vessels receive impurity according to the Torah,[1] as stated in Torat Kohanim and by Maimonides at the beginning of chapter 1 of the Laws of Vessels, and in Sefer Mitzvot Gadol, positive commandment 246. When you examine carefully the types of external forces (chitzonim) mentioned in the verses, they do not exceed seven types, and this is sufficient for the wise to understand. 70R 75R

Therefore, a mourner does not send his offerings during all seven days, not even wine, wood, or

[1] The author is drawing a mystical parallel between the seven types of vessels that can become ritually impure according to Torah law and the seven types of external negative forces that affect mourners, suggesting that the laws of ritual impurity have deeper spiritual significance.

[i] The author is employing kabbalistic symbolism, interpreting the laws of ritual impurity as reflecting spiritual realities. The bed, seat, and conveyance of a menstruant symbolize external levels of reality dominated by judgment (din) rather than mercy, and subject to exchange or fluctuation (bnei chiluf), serving as a vehicle (merkavah) for impurity.

[ii] The Torah specifies seven categories of vessels that can become ritually impure: those made of metal, wood, animal hide, cloth, sackcloth, earthenware, and glass. The author suggests that these correspond to seven types of external negative forces mentioned in Scripture.

[iii] Cf. Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Laws of Mourning, chapter 4 — The author cites Maimonides to establish the halakhic requirement for those attending a funeral to say specific words when departing from the deceased, grounding this ritual practice in authoritative legal sources. | Cf. Tractate Semachot — The author cites this post-Talmudic tractate as the original source for the custom of saying 'Go in peace' to the deceased, establishing the practice's rabbinic pedigree. | Cf. Genesis 15:15 — The author uses this biblical verse as the scriptural foundation for the custom of saying 'Go in peace' to the deceased, showing how ritual practices are derived from and justified by biblical texts. | Cf. Zohar — The author's explanation of the seven external powers of severity that affect the mourner during the seven days of mourning reflects Zoharic teaching about how divine judgment manifests and operates in the world. | Cf. Moed Katan — The author cites this Talmudic source to establish the rule that mourners are prohibited from sending offerings during the seven days of mourning, connecting this practical halakhah with the kabbalistic explanation provided earlier.

frankincense, as stated in the chapter "These May Shave" (Moed Katan), and as Maimonides ruled in chapter 2 of the Laws of Entry to the Temple, and Sefer Mitzvot Gadol, negative commandment 13. It is obvious that comforting mourners, besides being an honor for the living, also provides rest for the deceased. Therefore, comforting a mourner takes precedence over rejoicing with a bridegroom,[1] as Rabbi Joseph Karo ruled in section 360.

וכתב הרמב"ן על מה שאמרי׳ בגמ׳ מת שאין לו מתנחמים וכו׳ באין עשרה ב"א כשרים ויושבין במקומו וכל העם מתקבצין עליהם וכו׳[i] מכאן ראיה שהאבלי׳ צריכין להתאבל במקום שיצתה נשמתו של מת כי באותו מקום שמת הנפש מתאבלת ושם צריך לתת לה תנחומין כדעבד רבי יהודה להההוא גברא דשכיב דלא ה"ל מנחמין וכו׳ ויש טעם לומר דתנחומין שהמת מקבל בז׳ ימים כשמתאבלת נפשו היינו התפלה שמתפללין במקומו בי׳ שמלבד כי גדול כח ביסום התפל׳ כאשר בא במאמרות בכוונת שונות[ii] וכולן אמיתיות ונאותות למשכילי עם שכל אדם בליעל מכחות החצונים לא יראה ולא ימצא שם[iii] עוד תגרום הופעת השכינ׳ במקום שנפטר שם המת כי שכינה בי י׳ שריא ובאור

Nachmanides commented on the Talmudic passage that states: "For a deceased person who has no mourners... ten worthy men come and sit in his place, and all the people gather around them, etc." From here we have proof that mourners need to mourn in the place where the deceased's soul departed, for in that very place where the person died, the soul mourns, and there it needs to be given consolation. This is just as Rabbi Judah did for that man who died and had no mourners, etc. And there is reason to say that the consolation the deceased receives during the seven days when his soul is mourning refers to the prayer that is recited in his place by a quorum of ten men. Not only is the power of sweetening through prayer great, as explained in various discourses with different interpretations—all of which are true and appropriate for the wise among the people (while a base person connected to external forces will neither see nor find anything there)—but it also causes the Divine Presence to appear in the place where the deceased departed,[A] for "the Divine Presence rests where ten are gathered," and "in the light of the

[A] Or: "the manifestation of the Divine Presence at the location where the deceased passed away" — This alternative more precisely captures the mystical concept of 'hofa'at ha-Shekhinah' as a manifestation or revelation rather than simply an appearance.

[1] This halakhic ruling, which prioritizes comforting mourners over celebrating with a bridegroom, is significant because Jewish law generally prioritizes joyous occasions. The justification given—that comforting mourners benefits both the living and the dead—provides the rationale for this exception.

[i] This refers to a Talmudic passage that describes what to do when someone dies without relatives to mourn for them: ten worthy men should come and sit in the place where the person died, and others should gather around them for the mourning rituals.

[ii] The term 'bisum' (sweetening) comes from Kabbalistic terminology and refers to the transformation of harsh divine judgment into mercy through proper prayer. The author suggests that prayer has the power to 'sweeten' or mitigate divine judgment for the deceased.

[iii] The phrase 'kochot ha-chitzonim' (external forces) refers to negative spiritual entities in Kabbalistic thought. The author is suggesting that base or evil people, being connected to these negative forces, cannot perceive the spiritual benefits of proper prayer and consolation rituals.

פני מלך חיים וחסד.[i] ויהי מה
נראה דכל תנחומין סגי אפילו
בלא תפלה דהכי משמע מפשט
ההלכה והילכך אפילו לא הניח
אלא אשה שאין מתפללין בי׳
בעדה[ii] ביון שצריך לעשות
לה תנחומין סגי ע״כ חובה על
המנחמים ליסדא מלין לנחום
האבל על הדרך שכתבנו בפ׳
י״ט ממאמר ג׳ ואח״כ לבקש
רחמים על הנפטר במקום ההוא
ומה טוב שיהיה מוכן שם לפני
הבאים אחד מספרים אלו בגין
אינון דלא ידעי לסדרא מלין
לבקשת רחמים על הנפטר כי
דברי שיחה הנהוגים הם למשא
ולא לנייחא וראשי קהלות חברי
בני ג״ח יצ״ו[iii] בכלל החסד
שעושי׳ יזמינו שם א׳ מהם. וסמך
לזה ממה דאמרי׳ במס׳ תעניות
דלא הוה דברתא בששבותיה
דההוא גברא בגין דהוה משאיל
מרא וזבלא לקבורה.[iv][v]

king's countenance is life" and kindness.

Nevertheless, it appears that any form of consolation is sufficient even without prayer,[A] as this seems to be the plain meaning of the law. Therefore, even if the deceased left only a woman (for whom we do not gather a quorum of ten to pray), since it is necessary to provide consolation for her, that is sufficient. Consequently, it is the obligation of the comforters to compose words to console the mourner[B] in the manner we described in Chapter 19 of the Third Discourse, and afterward to pray for mercy for the departed in that place. How good it would be if one of these books were prepared there before those who come, for the sake of those who do not know how to arrange words for requesting mercy for the departed,[C] since the conventional conversations are burdensome rather than comforting. The leaders of the communities, friends, members of the burial society (may their Rock keep them and grant them life), in their general acts of kindness, should arrange for one of these books to be there. Support for this comes from what is said in Tractate Ta'anit that there

[A] Or: "it seems that any consolation ritual is adequate even without formal prayer" — This alternative highlights the ritual aspect of 'tanchumin' and clarifies that 'tefillah' likely refers to formal prayer services rather than prayer in general.

[B] Or: "to formulate words of comfort for the mourner" — This alternative uses the more precise term 'formulate' for 'lisda' and 'comfort' for 'nichum', which might better convey the sense of creating a structured consolation for mourners.

[C] Or: "who don't know how to compose prayers seeking compassion for the deceased" — This alternative uses 'compose prayers' for 'arrange words' and 'compassion' for 'mercy', which might better reflect the liturgical nature of what's being described.

[i] This references the rabbinic principle that the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) rests where ten Jews gather, combined with a biblical verse (Proverbs 16:15) about the life-giving quality of the king's countenance. The author uses these to explain why a minyan (quorum of ten) brings comfort to the departed soul.

[ii] This reflects the traditional Jewish practice that women are not counted in a prayer quorum (minyan). The author is addressing what happens when the deceased only leaves a female mourner, for whom a full prayer service with a minyan would not traditionally be conducted.

[iii] This is an acronym referring to the Chevra Kadisha (burial society), with the letters ג״ח standing for 'gemilut chasadim' (acts of loving-kindness), which is how burial preparation is categorized in Jewish tradition. The letters יצ״ו are a blessing meaning 'may their Rock keep them and grant them life.'

[iv] This refers to a Talmudic story about a man in whose neighborhood there was no plague because he would lend a shovel and fertilizer for burial purposes. The author uses this as proof that providing resources for proper burial brings divine protection.

[v] Cf. Talmud, tractate Mo'ed Katan — Nachmanides cites this Talmudic source to establish that mourning should take place where the person died, as the soul remains connected to that location. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Third Discourse, Chapter 19 — The author refers to his own previous writing on how to properly console mourners, suggesting internal consistency in the book's approach to mourning practices. | Cf. Talmud, tractate Ta'anit — This reference supports the author's point that providing resources for proper burial and mourning rituals brings divine was no plague in the neighborhood of a certain man because he would lend a shovel and manure for burial purposes. 135R

והפסוקים והשכבות שבתוכו יתאמרו על הנפטר מדלת העם הנכנסין והיוצאין אשר אין להם שיח וסוג מעצמם ליסד ולחבר פסוקי מאמרי שפר.[i] ומאמר א'[ii] נאות להקרא בפני כל חולה ובפרט פ' י"ז וי"ח וכ' וכ"א. ובפ' כ"ו אמרנו כי פ' כ"א ופ' כ"ב ממאמר ב' יאותו על זרוז אב לבנים אחר הודוי. עוד יש כמה פסוקים הרבה מפרשיות הקרבנות פ' ויקרא ופ' צו המכוונים לבקש רחמים על הגוסס ועל הנפטר ולא הדפסנום שלא להאריך והחכם יבין וידע מעצמו על פי ההקדמות האמיתיות כי דרכם צריך לשמור בצירוף הפסוקים ג"כ ובזה מקל מעל הנפטר צער המיתה.[iii] וכתב הרמב"ן בפ' תולדות[iv] כי גויעה שנאמרה בצדיקים היא מיתה בלא חולי מכאוב בלא יסורין אשרי הזוכה אליה ובפרט צריך ליזהר בק"ש

The verses and memorial prayers contained within should be recited for the deceased by the common people who enter and exit,[1] who lack the eloquence and ability to compose elegant scriptural verses on their own. Discourse One is suitable[2] to be read before any sick person, particularly chapters 17, 18, 20, and 21. In chapter 26, we stated that chapters 21 and 22 from Discourse Two are appropriate for a father to encourage his children after the confession. There are also many verses from the Torah portions dealing with sacrifices, Parashat Vayikra and Parashat Tzav, that are intended to seek mercy for the dying and the deceased, but we have not printed them to avoid lengthiness. The wise will understand and know for themselves, based on the true principles,[A] that one must preserve their method when combining verses, and in doing so, this alleviates the pain of death for the deceased. Nachmanides wrote in his commentary on Parashat Toldot that the term "gevi'ah" (expiration) used for the righteous[3] refers to death without illness, suffering without pain—blessed is one who merits this. One must be particularly careful with reciting the Shema near the time of death, as we mentioned 140R 145R 150R 155R 160R

[A] Or: "The learned reader will comprehend and discern for themselves, based on the authentic premises established earlier" — This alternative translation more explicitly indicates that the "true principles" refers to premises established earlier in the work, and uses terminology that better reflects the scholarly context.

[1] The original uses the phrase "מדלת העם" (from the door/threshold of the people), an idiom referring to common or ordinary people without specialized religious knowledge.

[2] The author refers to sections of his own book, organizing it into numbered discourses (ma'amarim) and chapters, a common structure in rabbinic works of this period.

[3] The Hebrew Bible uses different terms for death, with "gevi'ah" often reserved for the patriarchs and other righteous figures. Nachmanides interprets this terminological distinction as indicating a qualitative difference in how the righteous experience death.

protection and blessing. | Cf. Kabbalistic concept of the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) dwelling among ten people — The author uses this concept to explain why having ten people gather where the deceased died provides spiritual benefit—it literally brings divine presence to comfort the soul.

[i] The term "מאמרי שפר" refers to beautiful or elegant scriptural compositions, suggesting that the average person lacks the literary skill to compose appropriate biblical verses for memorial prayers.

[ii] The author refers to sections of his own book, Ma'avar Yabok, with "Discourse One" (מאמר א') referring to the first major section of the work.

[iii] This reflects the belief that proper recitation of biblical verses can actually alleviate the spiritual suffering experienced by the deceased during the transition from life to death.

[iv] Nachmanides (Rabbi Moses ben Nachman, 1194-1270) was a prominent Spanish Talmudist, Kabbalist, and biblical commentator whose views on death are cited here as an authoritative source.

סמוך למיתה כמו שאמרנו למעלה בפ׳ כ״ה ויש לזה ראיה ממה דאמרי׳ בירושל׳ דזעירא היה קורא את שמע וחוזר וקורא כמה פעמי׳ עד שמשתקע בשינה. וכתוב בהגהות מיימוניות בשם רבינו נסים גאון מכאן משמע שק״ש יהיה אחרון לקריאה סמוך לשינה וכבר נודע כי השינה אחד מס׳ במיתה.[i] וידוע כי סגולת ק״ש להבריח המזיקין כמ״ש בברכו׳ על פסוק ובני רשף יגביהו עוף[ii] וכן וכל הקורא ק״ש על מטתו באלו אוחז חרב פיפיות בידו וגו׳. ובמגלה אמרי׳ בפ״ק על מאן דמבעית[iii] דאע״ג דאיהו לא חזי מזליה חזי מאי תקנתיה לקרי ק״ש וכו׳:[iv]

above in chapter 25. There is evidence for this from what they said in the Jerusalem Talmud that Ze'ira would recite the Shema and repeat it many times until he fell asleep.[A] It is written in the Hagahot Maimoniyot in the name of Rabbeinu Nissim Gaon that from this we learn that the Shema should be the last thing read before sleep, and it is already known that sleep is one-sixtieth of death.[1] It is known that the special virtue of the Shema is to drive away harmful spirits, as mentioned in Berakhot regarding the verse "and the sons of flame soar upward," and likewise, "whoever recites the Shema upon his bed is as if he holds a double-edged sword[2] in his hand," etc. And in Megillah, in the first chapter, concerning one who is frightened, even though he himself does not see [the harmful spirit], his guardian angel sees it;[B] what is his remedy? To recite the Shema, etc.

[A] Or: "that Ze'ira would recite the Shema and continue reciting it repeatedly until he sank into sleep" — This alternative translation better captures the nuance of the Hebrew "משתקע בשינה" which suggests a gradual sinking into sleep rather than simply falling asleep.

[B] Or: "concerning one who is frightened, that although he himself does not perceive it, his spiritual fortune (mazal) does perceive it" — This alternative preserves the term "mazal" which has complex connotations beyond just "guardian angel," referring to a person's spiritual fortune or destiny as well as their protective force.

[1] This concept appears in the Talmud (Berakhot 57b) and became an important principle in Jewish thought, creating a conceptual link between sleep and death that influences ritual practices surrounding both.

[2] The metaphor of the Shema as a "double-edged sword" (חרב פיפיות) appears in the Talmud (Berakhot 5a) and suggests that reciting this prayer provides spiritual protection against harmful forces.

[i] This reflects the rabbinic concept that sleep is one-sixtieth of death, establishing a spiritual connection between the two states that justifies applying practices from one context to the other.

[ii] This verse from Job 5:7 is interpreted in the Talmud as referring to harmful spirits that can be driven away by reciting the Shema.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase refers to someone who is frightened or startled, particularly by what was believed to be harmful spiritual forces.

[iv] Cf. Nachmanides' commentary on Genesis — The author cites Nachmanides' distinction between 'gevi'ah' (expiration) used for the righteous versus other terms for death, explaining that 'gevi'ah' implies a peaceful death without suffering, which was considered a divine blessing. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — The Jerusalem Talmud is cited to establish the importance of reciting the Shema before sleep, which is then connected to death since sleep is considered one-sixtieth of death. This reinforces the practice of reciting Shema before death. | Cf. Hagahot Maimoniyot — This medieval halakhic commentary is cited to establish the practice of making the Shema the final text recited before sleep, which by extension applies to death. | Cf. Tractate Berakhot — The Talmudic passage is referenced to establish the protective power of the Shema against harmful spiritual forces, which is particularly important at vulnerable moments like sleep or death. | Cf. Tractate Megillah — This reference reinforces the protective function of reciting the Shema, suggesting that even if a person cannot perceive spiritual dangers, their guardian angel can, and the Shema serves as protection.

פרק ל״ו

Chapter 36

על זאת יתפלל כל חסיד אליך לעת מצוא זה מיתה כדברי רב נחמן בר יצחק במסכת ברכות[i] כי יקר בעיני ה׳ המותה לחסידיו ואמרו במדרש תהלים אימתי הקב״ה מראה היוקר שהוא מתוקן להם סמוך למיתתם ואשרי אדם שיש לו יתד לתלות עליו ואמרו במדרש רבה על פסוק כל עמל האדם לפיהו וגם הנפש לא תמלא אמר רבי שמואל בר נחמני כל מה שמסגל אדם מצות ומעשים טובים אינם מספיקין להבל היוצא מפיו בשעה שהנשמה יוצאה ממנו[ii] וסוכה תהיה לצל יומם מחורב ומגרושי תבל שהם נשואי העולם הבא ופשיטת הלבוש החומר הזה הוא הכנה להתלבש בבגדי הקדושה לזוכים להם[iii] על דרך שאמרו בתורת כהנים על אהרן כי הפשיטו משה בגדי כהונה ובגדי קדושה נלבשים תחתיהן והטובות גם הרעות באשר יחנו כן יסעו ואמרו במסכת תענית כל השמח ביסורין בעולם הזה מביא ישועה לעולם שנאמר בהם עולם

For this shall every pious person pray to You at a favorable time—this refers to death,[1] according to Rav Nachman bar Yitzchak in Tractate Berakhot, for precious in the eyes of the LORD is the death of His pious ones. And they said in Midrash Tehillim: 5R
When does the Holy One, blessed be He, show the preciousness that is prepared for them? Near the time of their death. Happy is the person who has a stake upon which to hang himself [spiritually], and they said in Midrash Rabbah on the verse "All the 10R labor of man is for his mouth, yet the soul is not satisfied" (Ecclesiastes 6:7): Rabbi Samuel bar Nachmani said, all the commandments and good deeds that a person accumulates are not sufficient for the breath that leaves his mouth at the moment when the soul 15R departs from him.[2]

And [the verse states] "A shelter shall be for shade by day from the heat" (Isaiah 4:6)—from the exiles of the world, which are the bearers of the World to Come. And the removal of the garment of 20R this material [body] is preparation for being clothed in the garments of holiness for those who merit the[3]m, as they said in Torat Kohanim concerning Aaron, that Moses removed from him the priestly garments, and garments of holiness were put on in 25R their place. And both the good and the bad—as they encamp, so shall they journey.[4]

And they said in Tractate Ta'anit: Whoever re-

[1]The Hebrew phrase 'לעת מצוא' (at a favorable time) comes from Psalm 32:6. Rav Nachman bar Yitzchak's interpretation in Berakhot 8a identifies this 'favorable time' specifically as death, suggesting death is actually an opportune spiritual moment rather than merely an ending.

[2]This striking rabbinic teaching suggests that the spiritual significance of the final breath at death surpasses even a lifetime of accumulated merits, emphasizing the profound importance of the transition moment between worlds.

[3]This metaphor of exchanging physical 'garments' (the body) for spiritual 'garments' reflects both biblical imagery (Moses removing Aaron's priestly garments) and kabbalistic concepts of the soul's 'clothing' in different spiritual realms.

[4]This phrase adapts biblical language about the Israelites' journey in the wilderness (Numbers 2:17) to refer to the soul's journey after death, suggesting that just as the camp had an orderly arrangement, so too the transition to the next world follows divine order.

[i]The author interprets 'favorable time' (לעת מצוא) from Psalm 32:6 as referring to death, citing Rav Nachman bar Yitzchak's teaching in Tractate Berakhot 8a. This interpretation is key to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death as a spiritual opportunity rather than merely an ending.

[ii]This striking teaching suggests that the spiritual significance of the final breath at death transcends even a lifetime of accumulated good deeds, emphasizing the profound importance of the moment of transition between worlds.

[iii]The metaphor of removing physical 'garments' (the body) to don spiritual 'garments' draws on both biblical imagery (Moses removing Aaron's priestly garments) and kabbalistic concepts of spiritual 'clothing' for the soul in different realms.

ונושע ומרגלא בפומייהו דרבנן לומר חביבין יסורין בקמא דברכות ובמציעא בהשוכר ובפרק חלקן[i] ואם לא יהיה מה שתרצה ירצה מה שיהיה. וכל נברא שיש לו ראשית הוכרח להיות לו אחרית. ואמרו במדרש שוחר טוב שאברהם היה לוקה והיה משחק ודוד היה אומר למה הרצועה תלויה הכוני בה דכתיב לדוד שפטני כי ארחות ה׳ חסד ואמת והוא הפועל ועושה ומי יאמר לו מה תעשה ואלהים לברי לבב כי היסורין המביא הם טובים. למה לברי לבב להבריא את לבם וכשלוקח ממון וכל שכן נפשות לוקח ברחמים ולא עוד אלא שנמלך בב״ד שלו קודם לקיחה כדאמרו בויקרא רבה. אשרי מי שהשתדל גופו במנוחת נפשו. והמות אין רע ברם היא שלמות טבענו לפי דברי הפילוסוף האומר כי גדר האדם חי מדבר מת. וחכמים העמיקו יותר לפי דברי האמת שאמרו והנה טוב מאד זה מות[ii] ואמרו בפסיקתא אין בין הצדיקים החיים לצדיקים המתים אלא הדבור בלבד[iii] והם מקלסים לקב״ה דכתיב יעלזו חסידים בכבוד ירננו על משכבותם ואחר שהגיע האדם אל עולם השכל

joices in sufferings in this world brings salvation to the world,[1] as it is said regarding them, "the world is saved." And it was commonly quoted by the rabbis to say, "Sufferings are beloved" in the first chapter of Berakhot, in Metzia in "The One Who Hires," and in the chapter "Chelek." And if what you desire does not happen, desire what does happen. Every created being that has a beginning must have an end. 30R 35R

And they said in Midrash Shocher Tov that Abraham was afflicted and would laugh, while David would say, "Why is the strap hanging? Strike me with it," as it is written, "Judge me, O LORD, for the paths of the LORD are kindness and truth" (Psalms 25:10). And He is the actor and doer, and who can say to Him, "What are You doing?" And God is for the pure of heart, for the sufferings He brings are good. Why for the pure of heart? To heal their hearts. And when He takes money, and all the more so lives, He takes with mercy. And not only that, but He consults with His heavenly court before taking, as they said in Vayikra Rabbah. 40R 45R

Happy is one who has exerted his body for the rest of his soul. And death is not evil, but rather it is the perfection of our nature, according to the words of the philosopher who said that the definition of man is "a living, speaking, dying being." And the sages delved deeper according to the words of truth, saying, "And behold, it was very good"—this refers to deat[2]h. And they said in the Pesikta: There is no difference between living righteous ones and deceased righteous ones except speech alone,[3] and they praise the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written, "Let 50R 55R 60R

[1]This teaching from Ta'anit 8a reflects the rabbinic concept that accepting suffering with joy transforms it from punishment to spiritual opportunity, a principle that Ma'avar Yabok applies to death itself.

[2]This radical interpretation of Genesis 1:31 identifies death as part of what God declared 'very good' in creation, suggesting death was part of the divine plan from the beginning rather than merely a punishment for sin.

[3]This teaching from the Pesikta minimizes the distinction between life and death for the righteous, suggesting death changes only the mode of existence, not its essential quality or proximity to God.

[i]The concept that 'sufferings are beloved' (חביבין יסורין) appears in multiple Talmudic contexts, reflecting its centrality in rabbinic thought. This teaching reframes suffering, including death, as spiritually beneficial rather than merely punitive.

[ii]The rabbinic interpretation of 'very good' in Genesis 1:31 as referring to death represents a radical theological position. By identifying death as part of what God declared 'very good' in creation, the rabbis suggest death was part of the divine plan from the beginning, not merely a punishment for sin.

[iii]This teaching from the Pesikta minimizes the distinction between living and deceased righteous ones, suggesting death is merely a change of state rather than an end. This supports Ma'avar Yabok's view of death as a transition rather than a termination of existence.

אילו יאמרו לו שוב בעולם
ותהיה מלך גדול לא יאבה
ולא ישמע דוגמא לזה אמרי׳
במס׳ מועד קטן אילו אמר
65 לו הקב״ה זיל בההוא עלמא
כדהויית לא בעינא.[i] ואמרו
במדרש שצדיקים שמתים ימיהם
בטלים והם קיימים שנאמר
ויקרבו ימי דוד למות[ii] ובמדרש
70 שוחר טוב כתוב מתוך בעס
רצון. מתוך רוגז רחמים. מתוך
צרה רווחה. ומתוך רחוק קרוב.
ומתוך נפילה קימה. ובעל סדר
עולם כתב כשאדם ברעה אל
75 יתיאש מן הטובה. ואם ראית
בית הקברות לפניך משם תראה
מדינת ארץ החיים הקרובה
לך שנאמר יענך ה׳ ביום צרה
וסכות לראשי ביום נשק פירשו
80 במדרש תהלים ביום שישקעו
שני עולמות זה בזה העוה״ז
יוצא והעוה״ב נכנס ואין חשך
גדול בקודם עלות השחר[iii] וזהו
למנצח על אילת השחר וכי אשב
85 בחשך בעוה״ז ה׳ אור לי בעולם
הנשמות וגם כי אלך בגיא צלמות
לא אירע רע כי נפשי ישובב
לעוה״ב ואמרו במדרש משלי על
פסוק לא ירעיב ה׳ נפש צדיק
90 מלמד שאין הצדיקים נפטרים
מן העולם עד שהקב״ה מוחל
להם עונותיהם ות״ח אם נעלם
ממנו דבר אחד מתלמודו מלאכי

the pious exult in glory; let them sing for joy upon their beds" (Psalms 149:5).

And after a person has reached the world of intellect, if they were to say to him, "Return to the world and be a great king," he would not consent 65R and would not listen. Similar to this, they said in Tractate Mo'ed Katan: If the Holy One, blessed be He, were to say to him, "Go to that world as you were," [he would respond,] "I do not want to."[1] And they said in the Midrash that the righteous who die— 70R their days cease but they remain,[2] as it is said, "And the days of David drew near to death" (1 Kings 2:1).

And in Midrash Shocher Tov it is written: Out of anger comes favor; out of rage comes mercy; out of distress comes relief; out of distance comes closeness; 75R out of falling comes rising. And the author of Seder Olam wrote: When a person is in bad circumstances, he should not despair of good.

And if you see a cemetery before you, from there you will see the country of the land of the living that 80R is near to you, as it is said, "May the LORD answer you on the day of distress" (Psalms 20:2), and "You covered my head on the day of arms" (Psalms 140:8). They explained in Midrash Tehillim: On the day when two worlds sink into each other—this 85R world departing and the World to Come entering—and there is no darkness greater than before the dawn rises,[3] and this is [the meaning of] "To the Chief Musician, upon Ayelet HaShachar [the morning star]" (Psalms 22:1). "Though I sit in darkness, the LORD 90R is a light to me" (Micah 7:8)—in the world of souls. "Even though I walk in the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for You restore my soul"

[1] This teaching from Mo'ed Katan portrays the afterlife as so superior that even returning to earth as a king would be undesirable, emphasizing death as spiritual promotion rather than loss.
[2] This midrashic interpretation of 1 Kings 2:1 makes a subtle distinction between the death of days (temporal existence) and the continued existence of the righteous person themselves, suggesting only the temporal aspect ceases.
[3] This midrashic interpretation uses the astronomical metaphor of dawn breaking after darkest night to describe the transition from death to afterlife, suggesting that the moment of greatest darkness (death) immediately precedes spiritual illumination.

[i] This teaching portrays the afterlife as so superior that even returning to earth as a king would be undesirable, emphasizing death as spiritual promotion rather than loss. This counters natural human fear of death by presenting it as entry into a preferable state of existence.
[ii] This midrashic interpretation of 1 Kings 2:1 makes a subtle but profound distinction between the death of days (temporal existence) and the continued existence of the righteous person themselves, suggesting that only the temporal aspect of the righteous person dies.
[iii] This midrashic interpretation uses the astronomical metaphor of dawn breaking after darkest night to describe the transition from death to afterlife. Just as dawn follows the darkest part of night, so the illumination of the afterlife follows the darkness of death.

השרת באים וסודרין אותו לפניו
בשעת פטירתו כדי שלא יהא לו
בושת פנים לפני הקב״ה לעתיד
לבא[i] ואמרו במדרש תנחומא
אמר ריב״ל בג׳ מקומות שמענו
שאדם משמיע תלמודו סמוך
למיתתו וכו׳ ומסיים כל אדם
בצלה של מות סודר תלמודו הוי
צלמות ולא סדרים[ii] ומה יקר
חסדך אלהים הפועל גבורות כי
בזה בני אדם בצל כנפיך יחסיון
וירווין מדשן ביתך. ויפה כח
הצדיקים גם במיתתן שמלמדים
זכות על בניהם ותובעים עלבונם
בחיים לראויים לכך[iii] כדחזינן
בסדר תעניות מהנהו דבי נשיאה
דאנקיט ברעא דסוסתיהו על
קברא דר׳ יונה עד דקבילו דלא
לצערו לרבי מני בריה: [iv]

(Psalms 23:4)—for the World to Come.

And they said in Midrash Mishlei on the verse "The LORD will not let the soul of the righteous go hungry" (Proverbs 10:3): This teaches that the righteous do not depart from the world until the Holy One, blessed be He, forgives their sins. And [regarding] a Torah scholar, if one matter of his learning is forgotten from him, the ministering angels come and arrange it before him at the time of his departure, so that he will not be embarrassed before the Holy One, blessed be He, in the future.[1]

And they said in Midrash Tanchuma, Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said: In three places we have heard that a person communicates his learning near his death, etc. And he concludes: Every person in the shadow of death arranges his learning—this is [the meaning of] "death-shadow (tzalmavet) and no arrangements (sedarim)"[2] (Job 10:22). And how precious is Your kindness, O God, who works mighty

[1]This teaching suggests a special divine provision for Torah scholars at death, where angels ensure they remember all their learning to prevent embarrassment in the afterlife, reflecting the high value placed on Torah knowledge.

[2]This creative interpretation of Job 10:22 is based on wordplay, reading צלמות (tzalmavet, 'shadow of death') as related to סדר (seder, 'arrangement'). It transforms the verse's meaning to suggest that in death's shadow, one reviews one's learning.

[i]This teaching suggests a special divine provision for Torah scholars at death, where angels ensure they remember all their learning to prevent embarrassment in the afterlife. This reflects the high value placed on Torah knowledge and the belief that scholarly identity continues after death.

[ii]This is a creative interpretation of Job 10:22 based on wordplay, reading צלמות (tzalmavet, 'shadow of death') as containing the word סדר (seder, 'arrangement'). The interpretation suggests that in death's shadow, one arranges or reviews one's learning, transforming the biblical verse's meaning.

[iii]This teaching on the continuing spiritual power of the righteous after death reflects the Jewish belief that deceased righteous ones can intercede on behalf of the living. It suggests that death does not diminish but may even enhance the righteous person's ability to influence events in this world.

[iv]Cf. Psalm 32:6 — The author uses this verse to introduce the concept that death is a 'favorable time' for which the pious should prepare through prayer. | Cf. Berakhot 8a — The author cites Rav Nachman bar Yitzchak's interpretation from the Talmud that identifies the 'favorable time' mentioned in Psalm 32:6 as the moment of death. | Cf. Psalm 116:15 — The author uses this verse to establish that death, though feared by humans, is viewed positively from the divine perspective when it comes to the righteous. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim on Psalm 116 — This midrashic interpretation suggests that the righteous are granted a special vision or understanding of their spiritual reward just before death. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 6:7 — This verse is interpreted to suggest that even a lifetime of good deeds cannot equal the spiritual significance of the final breath at death. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah on Ecclesiastes 6:7 — This midrashic teaching suggests that the spiritual significance of the moment of death transcends even a lifetime of accumulated merit through good deeds. | Cf. Isaiah 4:6 — The author reinterprets this verse metaphorically to suggest that death provides shelter from the hardships of exile and physical existence. | Cf. Sifra (Torat Kohanim) on Leviticus 8:28 — This reference creates a metaphor where the physical body is compared to priestly garments that are removed at death and replaced with spiritual 'garments of holiness.' | Cf. Ta'anit 8a — This teaching supports the text's positive view of suffering and death as spiritually beneficial rather than merely punitive. | Cf. Berakhot 5a — This common rabbinic saying reinforces the text's theme that suffering, including death, should be embraced rather than resisted. | Cf. Bava deeds, for in this, people take refuge in the shadow of Your wings and are satiated from the abundance of Your house. 115R

And great is the power of the righteous even in their death, for they teach merit for their children and demand justice for their insult among the living for those who deserve it,[1] as we see in the Order of Ta'aniyot regarding those of the house of the Nasi 120R who placed the leg of their horse on the grave of Rabbi Yonah, until they received [punishment] for not distressing Rabbi Mani, his son.

פרק ל״ז

Chapter 37

כבר כתבנו במאמר ג׳ פ״כ טעם ומנהג ישראל לתליש׳ עשבים

We have already written in Discourse 3, Chapter 20, about the reason and custom of Israel to pluck

[1]This teaching on the continuing spiritual power of the righteous after death reflects the Jewish belief that deceased righteous ones maintain awareness of and influence over worldly affairs, particularly regarding their descendants.

Metzia, chapter 'The One Who Hires' — The author demonstrates the pervasiveness of this concept by noting its appearance in multiple Talmudic contexts. | Cf. Sanhedrin, chapter 'Chelek' — This third reference further emphasizes the centrality of this concept in rabbinic thought. | Cf. Midrash Shocher Tov (Midrash on Psalms) — This midrash presents two models of righteous response to suffering: Abraham's joyful acceptance and David's active embrace. | Cf. Psalm 25:10 — This verse is presented as evidence of David's willingness to accept divine judgment, knowing it ultimately stems from kindness. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah — This midrash presents death not as arbitrary but as a carefully considered divine action, emphasizing God's merciful nature even in judgment. | Cf. Genesis 1:31 — This surprising interpretation of Genesis 1:31 radically reframes death not as a curse but as part of the divine good of creation. | Cf. Pesikta — This teaching minimizes the distinction between life and death for the righteous, suggesting death is merely a change of state rather than an end. | Cf. Psalm 149:5 — This verse is interpreted to suggest that the righteous continue to praise God even after death, reinforcing the continuity of spiritual existence. | Cf. Mo'ed Katan — This teaching portrays the afterlife as so superior that even returning as a king would be undesirable, emphasizing death as promotion rather than loss. | Cf. 1 Kings 2:1 — This verse is interpreted to mean that while days pass away, the righteous person continues to exist, separating the temporal aspect of death from the eternal reality. | Cf. Psalm 20:2 — This verse is applied to death as the ultimate 'day of distress' that nonetheless contains divine response and salvation. | Cf. Psalm 140:8 — This verse is reinterpreted to refer to divine protection during the spiritual battle of death. | Cf. Psalm 22:1 — The author interprets this metaphorically to represent the transition from the darkness of death to the dawn of afterlife. | Cf. Micah 7:8 — This verse is applied specifically to the soul's experience after death, suggesting continued divine illumination in the afterlife. | Cf. Psalm 23:4 — This verse is understood as referring to the soul's restoration in the World to Come after death. | Cf. Proverbs 10:3 — The midrashic interpretation of this verse connects it to divine forgiveness of sins before death. | Cf. Midrash Tanchuma — This teaching suggests a special clarity or spiritual insight that comes to scholars at the moment of death. | Cf. Job 10:22 — This verse is reinterpreted through wordplay to suggest that in the shadow of death, one arranges or reviews one's learning. | Cf. Psalm 36:8 — This verse is applied to the divine protection and nourishment offered to souls after death. | Cf. Ta'aniyot (possibly referring to a story in Ta'anit) — This reference illustrates the continuing spiritual power of the righteous even after death, able to demand justice for disrespect to their remains.

בבית הקברות[i] ואומרים ועתה
ה׳ אבינו אתה וגו׳ ופסוק זכור
כי עפר אנחנו ויציצו מעיר
כעשב הארץ. ובצאתם אומרים
ויהי נועם על הסדר והכוונה
הנזכר שם ויושבים ז׳ פעמים
וטעם הישיבות ג״פ או ז׳ באו
שם. ובפסוק כי מלאכיו יש ז׳
תיבות בסוד ז׳ ישיבות ואח״כ
יאמרו אתה גבור עד ונאמן
אתה להחיות מתים ושם נתבאר
איך יגרום מיתוק לדינין בסוד
עקידת יצחק ויצחק מתנחם
ברבקה אשתו וצחוק יעשה לנו
אלהים[ii] אכי״ר. והאבל הולך
לביתו עם אחוזת רעיו ומנחמיו
וישב בראש ומשם ישב להמתיק
הפה מר בסוד הביצה המגולגלת
ויין המשמח[iii] כאשר כתבנו סודם
וטעמם בפרק כ״ח מאמר ב׳.
ואין די לאבל שיעמוד בביתו
דומם באבלו רק מדברי שיחה
והלכות דרך ארץ ברם חובה
לו להרבות מזמורים והשכבות
ותחנונים ובכיה על מתו ובפרט
בג׳ ימי הבכי׳[iv] וזה יהיה אחד

grass[C] in the cemetery while saying, "And now, O LORD, You are our Father, etc." and the verse "Remember that we are dust" and "May they flourish from the city like the grass of the earth." Upon leaving, they recite "May the pleasantness of the Lord" in order, with the intention mentioned there, and they sit seven times.[1] The reason for sitting three times or seven times is explained there. In the verse "For His angels" there are seven words, corresponding to the secret of the seven sittings. Afterward, they say "You are mighty" until "And You are faithful to revive the dead." There it is explained how this causes a sweetening of the judgments[2] through the secret of the binding of Isaac, and "Isaac was comforted after [the death of] his mother through Rebecca his wife," and "God will bring laughter to us, Amen, may it be His will." 5R 10R 15R

The mourner goes to his home accompanied by his friends and comforters. He sits at the head [of the table], and from there he sits to sweeten the bitter taste through the secret of the hard-boiled egg and the cheering wine,[D] as we have written about their secret and reason in Chapter 28 of Discourse 2. It is not enough for the mourner to sit silently in his house during his mourning, abstaining from casual conversation and ordinary matters.[E] Rather, it is 20R 25R

[C] Or: "to pull grass" — While 'pluck' is an accurate translation, 'pull' is another common way to express this action in English and might be more readily understood in some contexts.

[D] Or: "to mitigate the bitterness through the mystical significance of the hard-boiled egg and gladdening wine" — This alternative more clearly conveys the kabbalistic concept that these mourning foods have spiritual significance beyond their physical properties.

[E] Or: "to remain silent in his house during mourning, refraining only from idle talk and mun-

[1] The practice of sitting and rising seven times at the cemetery is a ritual based on the verse "though the righteous fall seven times, they rise again" (Proverbs 24:16). It symbolizes both the mourner's eventual recovery from grief and the deceased's ultimate resurrection.

[2] "Sweetening of judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) is a key kabbalistic concept referring to the transformation of divine severity into mercy through proper ritual actions and intentions. This metaphysical process affects the deceased's soul in the afterlife.

[i] This custom of plucking grass in cemeteries symbolizes resurrection, referencing Isaiah 26:19 ("and the earth shall cast out the dead") and the idea that human bodies will regenerate like vegetation. The physical act creates a corresponding spiritual effect for the deceased.

[ii] This alludes to Genesis 24:67, where Isaac was comforted after his mother's death through Rebecca. The phrase plays on Isaac's name (meaning "laughter") to suggest that proper mourning rituals transform judgment (associated with Isaac) into joy.

[iii] The mourning foods (eggs and wine) are understood kabbalistically as having spiritual properties that 'sweeten' divine judgment. The round egg symbolizes the cycle of life, while wine corresponds to the divine attribute of Binah (Understanding) which transforms harsh judgment into mercy.

[iv] Jewish mourning practice divides the mourning period into stages, with the first three days being most intense and dedicated specifically to weeping. This corresponds to kabbalistic teachings about the soul's journey after death, where it remains close to the body for three days.

מהטעמים שאסרו אפילו לעני
30 לעשות מלאכה בהם וימשך עד
סוף השבעה וכן עד סוף השלשים
ראוי לו שבכל יום ייחד איזה
פסוקים או מזמורים לעורר
על מתו הרחמים על כן ערכתי
35 שלחן לפניהם כי בו יחסו עניי
עמנו והמשכיל יוסיף ברצונו
ברוחב לבו וכן יעשה עד תשלום
השנה ובפרט לאביו ולאמו
ויזכיר נשמתם לטוב בשבתות
40 וברגלים כנדרש טעם לזה
במאמר ג׳ וכן בכל ימיו ביום
ענות נפשו על מיתת רבו ואביו
ואמו ישכיבם וירבה עליהם
תחנונים ויוסיף צדקה לכפרת
45 נפשם. ובזהר אחרי מות כתב
כל מאן דאצטער על יסוריהון
דצדיקייא מעבירים חובה דלהון
מעלמא[i] ועל דא קורין פ׳ אחרי
מות ביום הכפורים והמנהג שהיה
50 בימי חכמי המשנה שהספדנים
היו מחזירין על קרובי המתים
ואומרים בכו עמו כל מרי לב
כדאמרינן במועד קטן על משנת
לא יעורר אדם על מתו ודאי
55 כי היה להם דברים המיוחדים
להעתיק הדינים ולכלות פשע
ולהתם חטאת מעל גופי הנקברים
ומנהג אבות תורה לבנים וכאשר
עשה כן יעשו לו כי אין הקב״ה
60 מקפח שכר כל בריה ומדה כנגד
מידה לא בטלה וביום רעה
יראה בטוב אשר יטיבו לו בניו

his obligation to recite numerous psalms, memorial prayers, supplications, and to weep for his deceased, 30R especially during the three days of weeping.[1] This is one of the reasons that even a poor person is forbidden to work during these days. He should continue this until the end of the seven days [of mourning], and likewise until the end of the thirty days, it is ap- 35R propriate for him to dedicate specific verses or psalms each day to arouse mercy for his deceased. Therefore,
I have arranged a table before them, for in it our poor people will find refuge, and the wise person will add according to his desire and the breadth of his heart. 40R
He should continue this until the completion of the year, especially for his father and mother, and he should remember their souls for good on Sabbaths and festivals,[2] as the reason for this is explained in Discourse 3. Similarly, throughout his life, on 45R the day of his soul's affliction over the death of his teacher, father, or mother, he should recite memorial prayers for them, multiply supplications, and increase charity for the atonement of their souls.

In the Zohar, in the portion "After the Death," it 50R is written that whoever grieves over the sufferings of the righteous, their sins are removed from the world.
This is why we read the portion "After the Death" on the Day of Atonement. The custom during the days of the Sages of the Mishnah was that professional 55R mourners would go to the relatives of the deceased and say, "Weep with him, all who are bitter of heart," as we say in Moed Katan regarding the Mishnah "A person should not arouse [excessive mourning] for his dead." Certainly they had special words to transfer 60R the judgments, to consume transgression, and to remove sin from the bodies of the buried.[3] The custom dane conversations" — This alternative more clearly communicates that the mourner should not merely be silent but should specifically avoid certain types of conversation while engaging in more meaningful spiritual activities.

[1] Jewish mourning tradition divides mourning into distinct periods: three days for intense weeping, seven days (shiva) for more structured mourning, thirty days (sheloshim), and a full year for parents. These periods correspond to kabbalistic stages of the soul's journey after death.

[2] The custom of reciting Yizkor (memorial prayers) on festivals reflects the belief that souls experience elevation during sacred times, creating special opportunities for the living to benefit the deceased through prayer.

[3] This describes the mystical function of professional mourners and eulogizers, whose carefully chosen words were believed to have actual metaphysical effects, removing negative spiritual judgments from the deceased.

[i] This Zoharic teaching suggests that mourning has atoning power not only for the deceased but also for the mourners themselves. Those who properly grieve over the suffering of the righteous have their own sins removed from the world.

ומיודעיו וירבץ ואין מחריד כי
יחלו פניו רבים וכבר הוכחנו
למעלה בזה וגם בשפתי רננות
שמעין מה שיוצא מפי האדם
כך עושה רושם למעלה ובכל
העולמות ככל היוצא מפיו
דוגמתו כך יעשה הן לטוב הן
למוטב ובפ׳ אמור בזהר בענין
השופר תנינן במילין ועובדא
בעינן לאחזאה ולאתערא מלין
סתימין. וישים מחסום לפיו
במקום ששלט כח הדין שם ע״י
מלאכא דמותא צריך הרבה
להזהר ועל זה נדרש הכתוב לא
יחל דברו בשום חלול[i] כי ככל
היוצא מפיו כך כדוגמתו יעשם
רושם למעלה ואמרו בפ׳ אמור
כי כשאדם עושה מעשה אכזרי
באיזה יום פוגם היום ההוא
ומלביש אותו באכזריות חמה ה׳
יצילנו זכאה מאן דאחזי עובדא
דכשרא לתתא דהא בעובדא
תליא מילתא בכלא לאתערא
מילא אחרא ומדברו הטוב ימשיך
לו מלמעלה כי יזכה למה שאמר
הכתוב ותגזור אומר למטה
ויקם לך למעלה וגו׳ והעד לזה
ברכת כהנים כי באמירה כל
דהו מלמטה אני אברכם לישראל
וכ״ש שהמעשה וגמילות חסדים
יפעל למעלה דכתיב בצדקה
למען יברכך ה׳ אלהיך בכל
מעשיך ובכל משלח ידך ואוי
לפוערים פיהם מדברים אשר
לא כן בכל מקום ובפרט במקום
שיש שם בר מינן כי יגרמו להם
ולאחרים רעה פוק עיין מאמר
ג׳ פ״ד הנה כי ביד האדם לגמול
חסד של אמת עם המת בהבל פיו
הקדוש המצנן ודאי כחות הדינים
מעליו.[ii] אשרי תמימי דרך:[iii]

of the fathers is instruction for the children, and as one does, so shall be done for him, for the Holy One, blessed be He, does not withhold the reward of any creature, and the principle of measure for measure has not been abolished. On a day of adversity, he will see good that his children and acquaintances will do for him, and he will lie down with none to make him afraid, for many will entreat his favor.

We have already proven this above, and also in "Lips of Song," that just as what comes out of a person's mouth makes an impression above in all worlds, so will it be done according to what comes from his mouth, whether for good or for ill. In the Zohar portion "Emor," regarding the shofar, we learned that through words and deeds we need to demonstrate and awaken hidden matters. One should place a guard on his mouth in a place where the power of judgment rules through the Angel of Death. One must be very careful about this, and on this is expounded the verse "He shall not profane his word" in any way, for as everything that comes from his mouth, so correspondingly will it make an impression above. And they said in the portion "Emor" that when a person performs a cruel action on any day, he blemishes that day and clothes it in cruelty—may the Merciful One save us! Fortunate is one who demonstrates proper deeds below, for in deeds the matter depends entirely, to awaken another matter. Through his good speech, he will draw down [blessings] from above, for he will merit what Scripture says: "You will decree a matter below, and it will be established for you above," etc. The evidence for this is the Priestly Blessing, for through mere speech from below, [God says] "I will bless Israel." How much more so will deeds and acts of kindness operate above, as it is written regarding charity, "So that the LORD your God may bless you in all your work and in all your undertakings." Woe to those who open their mouths with improper words in any place, especially in a place where there is one who has passed away,[1] for they will cause harm to themselves

[1]The text emphasizes the power of speech for either good or harm. Negative speech near the

[i]This is a wordplay on Numbers 30:3 ("he shall not profane/violate his word") with deeper mystical significance—suggesting that inappropriate speech creates actual spiritual damage ("profanation") in higher realms that can affect the deceased's soul.

[ii]This reflects the kabbalistic concept that proper speech, especially sacred words, literally has cooling power over the forces of judgment (imagined as burning fire) that might otherwise affect the deceased.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 3, Chapter 20 — The author is building on previously established and to others. Go and see Discourse 3, Chapter 4. For it is in the power of a person to perform true kindness with the deceased through the breath of his holy mouth, which certainly cools the forces of judgment from upon him. Happy are those who are perfect in their way!

פרק ל״ח

Chapter 38

מצינו בירושלמי שמתיר רחיצה
א׳ אחר המטה כדאמרי׳ שם
מקום שנהגו לרחוץ אחר המטה
רוחצין אמר רבי יוסי ברבי
בון מי שמתיר ברחיצה עושה
אותו כאכילה ושתיה וכן כתב
הרמב״ן ז״ל נראה מכאן שיש
נוהגים בקצת מקומות שהקרובים
היו מרחיצין את האבל קודם
ההבראה וצורך זה מלבד
הפשט יהיה לרחוץ הליכיו
בחמאה[i] ולמתק בחות הדין
המתגבר על האבל כפי שאפשר
וגם זה הוא כמו תקון ההבראה
וצורך הנחמה ברם אחר כך
אבל אסור בתכבוסת וברחיצה

We find in the Jerusalem Talmud that it permits one washing after the bier, as is stated there: "In a place where they were accustomed to wash after the bier, they may wash." Rabbi Yosi bar Rabbi Bun said: "One who permits washing treats it like eating and drinking." And so wrote Ramban (Nachmanides) of blessed memory: "It appears from here that in some places it was customary for relatives to wash the mourner before the first meal after the funeral. The purpose of this, beyond the simple meaning, would be to 'wash his paths with butter'[A] and to sweeten the forces of judgment that intensify upon the mourner[B][1] as much as possible. This is similar to the purpose of the consolation meal and the need for comfort. However, afterward, a mourner is forbidden in laundering, bathing, and all other laws of

105R 5R 10R 15R

[A] Or: "to soothe his ways with butter" — This is a metaphorical expression alluding to Job 29:6. The alternate translation emphasizes the comforting, soothing effect rather than literal washing, which might better capture the intended meaning of easing the mourner's suffering.

[B] Or: "the powers of judgment that overwhelm the mourner" — The Hebrew verb 'מתגבר' can suggest something stronger than merely 'intensifying'—it can mean to overpower or overwhelm, which might better convey the oppressive weight of judgment that the mourner experiences.

deceased is considered particularly harmful as it may strengthen the forces of judgment at a time when the soul is especially vulnerable.

[1] This kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgment' (mituk ha-dinim) is central to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of death rituals. It refers to transforming harsh divine judgment into mercy through ritual actions.

customs and their kabbalistic interpretations, showing the systematic nature of the work and its internal coherence. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2, Chapter 28 — The author creates internal consistency by referencing his earlier explanations of mourning foods, showing how ritual actions integrate with kabbalistic understanding of death and mourning. | Cf. Zohar, Acharei Mot — This Zoharic reference provides mystical justification for mourning practices, suggesting they have spiritual benefit not only for the deceased but also for the mourners themselves. | Cf. Zohar, Emor — This reference establishes the kabbalistic principle that human actions below create parallel effects above, which is central to understanding the spiritual efficacy of mourning rituals. | Cf. Genesis 24:67 — This reference creates a biblical precedent for the concept of consolation after loss, linking modern mourning practices to patriarchal examples and suggesting that proper comfort can transform grief (associated with Isaac/judgment) into joy (laughter/play on Isaac's name).

[i] This phrase alludes to Job 29:6, "when I washed my steps with butter," which is used metaphorically here to describe how ritual washing can transform the harshness of mourning into something smoother and more comfortable.

ובכל שאר דיני אבילות וכבר אמרו בפרק אלו מגלחין אמר רב תחליפא בר אבדימי משמיה דשמואל אבל שלא פרע ולא פירם חייב וכתב הרמב״ם בפרק ב׳ מהלכות אבל כמה חמורה מצות אבלות שהרי כהן נדחית לו הטומאה מפני קרוביו כדי שיתעסק עמהן וכן אמרו ביבמות פרק האשה רבה ולא עוד אלא שמטמאין אותו בעל כרחו כאשר הובא מעשה מזה בירושלמי וכלם הם תקוני המת והחי כאשר ביארנו. והחספד הוא יקרא ונייחא דשיכבי דהכי אפסיק בפרק נגמר הדין וחכמי המשנה קראו להספד המת לשון עירור כי בהספד יתעוררו עליו למעלה כחות החסדים ויסתלקו כח הדינים דניחין ושכבין עלוהי וכן מי שנתחייב גלות מגלין עצמותיו ובעת שימות הכהן גדול מוליכין עצמות הרוצח משם לקברי אבותיו כדפסק הרמב״ם בפרק ז׳ מהלכות רוצח והובא בספרי פ׳ שופטים וזה כדי לעורר מעליהם הדינים וכן חזקיה גירר עצמות אביו[i] ובירושלמי מוכח בפרק קמא דמועד קטן בלקוט עצמות אביו שאחר שנתעכל הבשר נח מהדין (כאשר ביארנו במאמרים הקודמים מדברי הזהר) שאמר שם נתעכל הבשר מלקטין mourning."

They already stated in chapter "Elu Megalchin" (Mo'ed Katan): Rav Tachlifa bar Avdimi said in the name of Samuel: "A mourner who has not disheveled his hair nor rent his garments is liable."[1] And Maimonides wrote in chapter two of the Laws of Mourning: "How weighty is the commandment of mourning, for even a priest—who is normally forbidden contact with the dead—is permitted to become ritually impure for his relatives so that he may attend to them." And so they stated in Yevamot, chapter "Ha-Ishah Rabbah," and not only that, but they would force him to become impure against his will, as an incident about this was brought in the Jerusalem Talmud. All these are rectifications for both the deceased and the living,[2] as we have explained.

The eulogy brings honor and comfort to the deceased,[A] as is concluded in the chapter "Nigmar HaDin." The Sages of the Mishnah called the eulogy for the dead by the term "arousal," because through the eulogy, the forces of loving-kindness are aroused abov[3]e, and the forces of judgment that rest and lie upon him are removed. Similarly, one who is condemned to exile has his bones exiled, and when the High Priest dies, the bones of the murderer are brought from there to the graves of his ancestors, as Maimonides ruled in chapter seven of the Laws of Murder, and as is brought in Sifrei, Parashat Shoftim. This is in order to remove the judgments from them. Likewise, Hezekiah dragged the bones of his father, and it is proven in the Jerusalem Talmud in the first chapter of Mo'ed Katan regarding the collection of his father's bones that after the flesh has decomposed, there is rest from judgment (as [A] Or: "The eulogy provides dignity and solace for the deceased" — This alternate translation might better capture the Aramaic phrase 'נייחא דשיכבי' which specifically refers to the spiritual comfort or rest provided to the deceased's soul.

[1] These visible signs of mourning (disheveled hair and torn garments) are considered obligatory demonstrations of grief in Jewish law, to the point that one who fails to perform them is considered 'liable' or culpable.

[2] The term 'rectifications' (tikunim) reflects the kabbalistic worldview that ritual practices create cosmic repairs, benefiting both the living and the dead by restoring divine harmony.

[3] This reflects the kabbalistic view that human actions below create corresponding effects in higher spiritual realms. The eulogy doesn't merely comfort the living but activates cosmic forces of mercy that benefit the deceased.

[i] This refers to King Hezekiah dragging his father Ahaz's bones on a rope bed rather than giving him an honorable burial, as mentioned in the Talmud (Pesachim 56a). This was due to Ahaz's wickedness and idolatry.

העצמות וקוברין בארונות
ואותו היום היה מתאבל למחר
היה שמח לומר נחו אבותיו מן
הדין ואמרו בסנהדרין פרק
55 נגמר הדין כשהיו הרוגי בית דין
לא היו נקברין עם אבותיהם
עד שיתעכל הבשר ונודע שאין
מתאבלין עליהם בעת מיתתם על
ידי בית דין וכן פסק הרמב״ם
60 בפרק א׳ מהלכות אבל ולכן אין
אומרים קינות ונהי על לקוט
עצמות[i] ולא ברכת אבלים שהם
דברים הנאמרים בבית האבל
ולא תנחומי האבלים שהם דברים
65 הנאמרים בשורה אלא אומרים
עליהם דברי שבח להקב״ה
ודברי כבושים כדאמרי׳ בפרק
אלו מגלחין ובירושלמי ובאבל
רבתי (שהיא מסכת שמחות שכך
70 כתבו הגהות מימוניות בהגהה ד׳
מפרק י״ב מהלכות אבל) ופירשו
איזו היא עירור מזכירו בין
המתים כי בזכות הצדקה שנותנין
לכופר נפשו ביום שעוררין
75 עליו עירי ושכבי ליבעו עלוי
רחמי. וגם שפיכת המים בשבונת
המת שאמרנו שהיא ביסום הדין
מעליו אמרו כי יש רמז לשפיכה
זו מן התורה שנאמר ותמת
80 שם מרים וסמיך ליה ולא היה
מים לעדה[ii] ואמרו במנחות
שביום שמת כהן גדול יורשים
היו מביאים עשירית האיפה
שלימה לכפרתו וכתבו הרמב״ם
85 בהלכות מעשה הקרבנות סוף
פרק ג׳. וכתוב בפרקי רבי
אליעזר על פסוק ויקונן ירמיהו
על יאשיהו מכאן התקינו

we explained in previous discourses from the words of the Zohar). It states there: "Once the flesh has decomposed, they collect the bones and bury them in coffins,[1] and on that day one mourns, but the next day one rejoices, saying 'My ancestors have found rest from judgment.'" 55R

They stated in Sanhedrin, chapter "Nigmar HaDin," that those executed by the court were not buried with their ancestors until the flesh had decomposed. And it is known that one does not mourn for them at the time of their death by the court. So ruled Maimonides in the first chapter of the Laws of Mourning. Therefore, one does not recite dirges and lamentations over collected bones, nor the blessing of mourners which are statements recited in the house of mourning, nor the consolations of mourners which are statements recited in the line of comforters. Rather, one recites words of praise to the Holy One, blessed be He, and words of admonition, as stated in chapter "Elu Megalchin" and in the Jerusalem Talmud and in Avel Rabbati (which is Masechet Semachot, as the Hagahot Maimoniyot wrote in note four of chapter twelve of the Laws of Mourning). 60R 65R 70R

They explained what "arousal" means: mentioning him among the dead, for in the merit of the charity given as atonement for his soul on the day they arouse him, the awake and the sleeping will seek mercy for him.[A] Regarding the pouring of water in the neighborhood of the deceased, which we said is a sweetening of the judgment from him, they said that there is an allusion to this pouring in the Torah, as it is said: "And Miriam died there," and immediately following: "And there was no water for the congregation." They said in Menachot that on the day a High Priest died, his heirs would bring a complete tenth of an ephah as atonement for him, and Maimonides wrote this in the Laws of Temple Offerings, at the 75R 80R 85R

[A] Or: "those awake and those at rest will plead for mercy on his behalf" — This more explicitly identifies the metaphorical meaning of 'the sleeping' as the dead, and 'ליבעו' has a connotation of pleading or beseeching rather than merely seeking.

[1] This refers to the practice of secondary burial (likut atzamot), where after the flesh decomposed (usually about a year), the bones would be collected and placed in an ossuary or bone repository.

[i] "Likut atzamot" (collection of bones) refers to the secondary burial practice where, after the flesh has decomposed, the bones would be collected and placed in an ossuary or bone repository. This practice was common in ancient Israel during the Second Temple period.

[ii] This refers to Numbers 20:1-2, where Miriam's death is immediately followed by a water shortage. The rabbis interpreted this juxtaposition to suggest a connection between death and water rituals.

החכמים שיהו עושים כן לכל
90 זקני ישראל וגדוליהם שנאמר
ויתנום לחק על ישראל: [i]

end of chapter three.

It is written in Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer on the verse 90R
"And Jeremiah lamented for Josiah": "From here, the Sages instituted that they should do likewise for all the elders of Israel and their great ones, as it is said: 'And they made them an ordinance in Israel.'"

פרק ל״ט

Chapter 39

מסדר הברכה שתקנו בבית
האבל[ii] כאשר הובא בגמרא
ובהרמב״ם בפ׳ שני מהלכות
ברכות וכן בסדר רב עמרם
5 האומרים המלך החי וכו׳ היא 5R
מוקבלת לפי עניות דעתנו לתקון
הנעשה בשבעה ישיבות כאשר
כתבנו בפרק ל׳ ול״א ממאמר
ב׳ כי מלת המלך הח״י[iii] הוא
10 מתוק מדת החסד שנתלבשה בדין 10R
עד הנה. הטוב והמטיב הוא
מיתוק דין הגבורה שבה לטוב
ולמוטב וכל מדותיו אפילו
פעולות הדין הם חסד ורחמים.
15 א״ל אמ״ת הוא מדת אמת של 15R
יעקב ת״ת מיוחדת בחסד. דיי״ן
אמ״ת הוא נצח ירבא דימינא
שעדיה מגיע קטרוג החצונים

Concerning the order of the blessing established for the house of mourning, as brought in the Talmud and by Maimonides in Chapter 2 of the Laws of Blessings, and also in the Seder of Rav Amram where they say "The Living King, etc."—according to our humble understanding, this corresponds to the rectification accomplished through the seven sittings,[1] as we wrote in Chapters 30 and 31 of Discourse 2. For the phrase "The King who lives" represents the sweetening of the attribute of Loving-kindness[2] (Chesed) that had been clothed in judgment until now. "The Good who does good" represents the sweetening of the judgment of Gevurah (Strength) within it, transforming it for good and for benefit, as all His attributes, even the actions of judgment, are loving-kindness and mercy. "God of Truth" represents the attribute of Truth associated with Jacob, which is Tiferet (Beauty)

[1] The 'seven sittings' refers to the Jewish mourning practice of shiva (seven days of mourning), which the author has previously explained has kabbalistic significance in helping the soul ascend through spiritual realms.

[2] The kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening' (mituk) refers to transforming harsh divine judgment into mercy. Throughout this passage, the author interprets the phrases of the mourner's blessing as spiritual processes that help transform judgment into mercy, benefiting both the deceased and the mourners.

[i] Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Mo'ed Katan — The Jerusalem Talmud permits one washing after the funeral, which is interpreted by Nachmanides as a custom in some places for the relatives to wash the mourner before the consolation meal (se'udat havra'ah). | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Mo'ed Katan — The obligation of a mourner to demonstrate visible signs of mourning by disheveling hair and rending garments. | Cf. Maimonides, Laws of Mourning — Maimonides emphasizes the significance of mourning by noting that even priests, who are normally forbidden contact with the dead, are permitted to become impure for relatives. | Cf. Zohar — The text alludes to Zoharic teachings that after the flesh has decomposed, the deceased finds rest from judgment, which is why collecting bones after decomposition is associated with rejoicing rather than mourning. | Cf. Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer — This source is cited to establish the precedent for eulogizing distinguished individuals, with Jeremiah's lamentation for King Josiah serving as the biblical model.

[ii] The author is referring to the blessing called Birkat Ha-Avelim (Mourner's Blessing), which is recited in a house of mourning as part of the meal of consolation.

[iii] This is the beginning of the mourner's blessing: 'The Living King.' The author interprets this kabbalistically, suggesting that the use of 'living' (chai) in reference to God has spiritual significance related to the transformation of judgment into mercy.

מבחוץ[iv] במדורין בסוד העשיה
רוחניותי דתמן נחיתו דתמן
רגלין ותמן טופרין[i] וזהו
סוד ורחצו רגליכם לטהרם
מהחצונים להיות מרכבה לעץ
החיים[ii] וזהו והשענו תחת העץ
בסוד כי מגרעות נתן לבית
סביב חוצה ועל פיהם יצא הדין
בקול הנותנים מבית ה׳. שופ״ט
בצד״ק זהו סוד המשפיע דין
למלכות ושל״ט בעול״מו הוא
יסוד אשד הנחלים המשפיעים על
ידו במלת הנקרא עולם. לוקח
במשפ״ט[iii] בהלכות גדולות וכן
הרי״ף גם כן כתבו שאין לאומרו
משום דאיתא בפרק ב׳ דשבת יש
מיתה בלא חטא והרא״ש כתב
שאין למוחקו וכתוב בהגהה
מיימו׳ פרק קמא מהלכות
ברכות וכן עמא דבר[iv] הנה
שגם הראשונים נוטים לדברי
ה״ר יונה שכתב בפרק הרואה
דיש מיתה בלא חטא ועל כל זה
קצתם ס״ל דלוקח במשפט אתי
כמאן דאמר אין מיתה בלא חטא united with Chesed. "True Judge" corresponds to Netzach (Victory), the right thigh,[1] for from there 20R the accusations of the external forces reach from outside, in the dwellings of the spiritual realm of Asiyah, where they descend, where the feet are, and where the nails are. This is the mystery of "wash your feet"[2]—to purify them from external forces so 25R that they become a vehicle for the Tree of Life. This is the meaning of "recline under the tree," in the mystery of "for he made recesses for the house all around outside,"[3] and according to them judgment is pronounced in the voice of those who issue it 30R from the house of the Lord. "Who judges with righteousness" is the mystery of that which channels judgment to Malkhut (Kingdom). "And rules in His world" refers to Yesod (Foundation), the flowing stream of rivers that pour forth through it into what 35R is called "world." Regarding the phrase "who takes in judgment," the Halakhot Gedolot as well as the Rif wrote that it should not be recited because it is stated in Chapter 2 of Tractate Shabbat that there can be death without sin.[4] However, the Rosh wrote 40R that it should not be deleted, and it is written in the Hagahot Maimoniyot, Chapter 1 of the Laws of Blessings, that this is the common practice. Thus,

[1] In the kabbalistic system, body parts correspond to divine attributes (sefirot). The 'right thigh' corresponds to Netzach (Victory/Eternity). The author explains that this area is vulnerable to accusations from negative spiritual forces.

[2] The author reinterprets Abraham's hospitality to the angels (Genesis 18:4-5) as a kabbalistic paradigm for spiritual purification. 'Feet' represent the lowest aspects of the soul that need cleansing from negative influences.

[3] This biblical reference to Solomon's Temple architecture (1 Kings 6:6) is reinterpreted metaphorically to explain how divine judgment emerges through structured channels from the divine realm outward.

[4] This references a fundamental theological debate in Judaism about whether death is always a punishment for sin or can occur without sin. This debate affected whether the phrase 'who takes in judgment' should be included in the mourner's blessing, as it implies death is always judgment for sin.

[iv] The Hebrew term 'chitzonim' (external forces) refers to negative spiritual entities in Kabbalistic thought. The author suggests that accusations from these forces reach up from the lower realms, particularly affecting the 'right thigh' (Netzach in the sefirotic system).

[i] This passage uses Aramaic-influenced terminology typical of kabbalistic texts. The author is describing the world of Asiyah (Action), the lowest of the four spiritual worlds, where negative forces tend to gather and where 'feet' and 'nails' (symbolic of the lowest aspects of the spiritual body) are located.

[ii] The concept of becoming a 'vehicle' (merkavah) for the Tree of Life represents spiritual elevation, where one transcends the negative forces and becomes a conduit for divine energy.

[iii] This phrase from the mourner's blessing became controversial because it implies that death is a divine judgment for sin. The author presents a halakhic debate about whether to include it, showing different scholarly opinions on whether death can occur without sin.

[iv] This Aramaic phrase means 'and so the people practice,' indicating that despite theoretical debates, the common practice includes the disputed phrase in the blessing.

ועל כל זה כתבו לקיים המנהג.
ואנח״נו עמ״ו ועבד״יו זהו
מיתוק מוצא הנשמות קדושות [i] even the early authorities tend toward the view of Rabbi Jonah, who wrote in the chapter "One who sees" that there can be death without sin. Nevertheless, some maintain that "who takes in judgment" accords with the view that there is no death without sin, yet they wrote to maintain the custom. "And we are His people and His servants" represents the sweetening of the source from which holy souls emerge.[1]

לכן נקראו כנסת ישראל[ii] כי
בה יש בינוס ושרשי נשמות
ופארותיהם משתלחים להתלבש
בגופות בני אדם[iii] כאשר ביארנו
במקומו ונהגו לומר בברכה
ה׳ יגדור הפרצה הזאת[iv] וכו׳
ומלבד הפשט נוכל לומר שכוונו
על דרך שאמרו במדרש ילמדנו
פרשת תשא מה עשה משה סתם
הפרץ שהיה העון נכנס בו לקטרג
על ישראל שנאמר לולי משה

Therefore they called the congregation of Israel "Knesset Israel,"[2] for within it there is a gathering and roots of souls, and their branches are sent forth to be clothed in human bodies,[3] as we have explained in its place. And they customarily say in the blessing "May the Lord fence this breach, etc." Beyond the simple meaning, we can say that they intended this in the way described in the Midrash Yelammedenu, Parashat Ki Tisa: What did Moses do? He sealed the breach through which sin entered to accuse Israel, as it is said, "Had not Moses, His

[1] The author concludes the kabbalistic interpretation by explaining that acknowledging ourselves as God's people and servants has the spiritual effect of 'sweetening' (transforming from judgment to mercy) the divine source from which souls originate, thus helping the deceased soul's journey.
[2] The term 'Knesset Israel' has layers of meaning beyond just 'congregation of Israel.' In kabbalistic thought, it represents the collective soul of the Jewish people and is often identified with the Shekhinah or divine feminine presence (Malkhut).
[3] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of the pre-existence of souls, where all Jewish souls originate from a common root before being sent to inhabit physical bodies.

[i] Cf. Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Laws of Blessings, Chapter 2 — The author cites Maimonides as a primary halakhic source for the mourner's blessing, establishing its textual authority. | Cf. Seder Rav Amram Gaon — The author reinforces the antiquity and authoritative nature of this blessing by showing it was already included in Rav Amram's prayer book from the Geonic period. | Cf. Chapters 30 and 31 of Ma'avar Yabok's Discourse 2 — The author creates an internal cross-reference to his own earlier explanation of the seven sittings ritual, showing how the mourner's blessing connects to this kabbalistic practice. | Cf. Genesis 18:4-5 ('wash your feet' and 'recline under the tree') — The author reinterprets this biblical passage kabbalistically, seeing Abraham's hospitality as a template for purifying the lower spiritual realms (feet) from external negative forces and connecting to the Tree of Life. | Cf. 1 Kings 6:6 ('for he made recesses for the house all around outside') — The author uses this seemingly unrelated architectural detail metaphorically to explain how divine judgment emerges through structured channels, comparing the Temple's design to the way judgment flows through spiritual realms. | Cf. Tractate Shabbat, Chapter 2 — The author cites this as a source for the halakhic debate about whether to include 'who takes in judgment' in the mourner's blessing, as this phrase implies that death is always a punishment for sin. | Cf. Halakhot Gedolot, Laws of Blessings — The author presents a balanced halakhic discussion by citing authorities on both sides of this textual debate.
[ii] The term 'Knesset Israel' (Congregation of Israel) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to the collective soul of the Jewish people, often identified with the divine feminine attribute of Malkhut.
[iii] This describes the kabbalistic concept that all Jewish souls originate from a common source (Knesset Israel/Malkhut) and are then sent forth to be embodied in physical form.
[iv] This is part of the traditional blessing recited by mourners, asking God to 'seal the breach' (the death) that has occurred in the community.

בחירו עמד בפרץ לפניו[v] וסוד
גדירת הפרץ נודע למבינים
בעיון קל.[i] ואמרו כי בשבת
אין לומר נוסח זה כי אין לומר
צדוק הדין על מת בשבת[ii] וכל
שכן לפי דרכנו שהוא לביסום
ז׳ עיני ה׳[iii] ואז ריעין ודודין
ממתיקים[iv] ולהיות כל כך רב
תועלת נחום אבלים לכן קודם
לביקור חולים כאשר הובא
ביורה דעה סוף סי׳ של״ה
ובשבת עינים רוחצות בחלב
מנעימותא עילאה דנגיד ונפיק
מעתיקא קדישא[v] כי שער הקדים
ביום השבת יפתח[vi] כי משם
כל טוב וארוכה ומרפא כאשר
כתבנו במאמרים הקודמים
וראיה למקום מוצא הרפואה
במציצת המילה[vii] כי כמו שחטא
אדם הראשון בידים שלקח הפרי
והפה אכל. גם אנו מולים אות
הכמוסה[viii] בידים ומוצצים

chosen one, stood in the breach before Him." The secret of sealing the breach is known to those who understand with minimal contemplation.

They said that on the Sabbath one should not recite this formula, for one does not say the Justification of Divine Judgment (Tzidduk ha-Din)[1] over the dead on the Sabbath. This is especially true according to our approach, that it is for sweetening the seven eyes of the Lord,[2] and then companions and lovers sweeten [harsh judgments].[3] Since consoling mourners is so greatly beneficial, it takes precedence over visiting the sick, as mentioned in Yoreh De'ah at the end of section 335. On the Sabbath, eyes are washed in milk from the supernal pleasantness that flows from the Holy Ancient One,[4] for the eastern gate opens on the Sabbath day, since from there comes all goodness, healing, and remedy, as we have written in previous discourses.

Evidence for the source of healing can be found in the sucking [of blood] during circumcision.[5] For just as the first man sinned with his hands by taking the fruit, and his mouth ate it, so too we circumcise

[1] I've added the Hebrew term in parentheses for clarity. Tzidduk ha-Din is a specific prayer affirming God's justice even in death, recited at funerals and during the mourning period.

[2] This is a technical kabbalistic phrase referring to tempering the seven lower sefirot (divine emanations) that are associated with judgment, transforming them from severity to mercy.

[3] I've added '[harsh judgments]' to clarify the object of 'sweeten,' which is implied but not explicit in the Hebrew. This refers to divine unifications that mitigate severity.

[4] These terms (supernal pleasantness, Holy Ancient One) are technical kabbalistic references to divine configurations (particularly Atik Kadisha, one of the highest divine aspects).

[5] I've added '[of blood]' to clarify what is being sucked. This refers to metzitzah, the traditional practice of drawing blood from the circumcision wound by mouth.

[v] This references Psalms 106:23, describing Moses as standing 'in the breach' to avert divine wrath after the sin of the Golden Calf.

[i] The author hints that the 'secret of sealing the breach' has deeper kabbalistic significance known to initiates, without explicitly explaining it.

[ii] Tzidduk ha-Din (Justification of Divine Judgment) is a prayer recited at funerals affirming God's justice even in death. Jewish law prohibits reciting this on Sabbath because of its mournful nature.

[iii] The phrase 'sweetening the seven eyes of the Lord' refers to the kabbalistic concept of tempering divine judgment (associated with the seven lower sefirot) with mercy.

[iv] 'Companions and lovers sweeten' refers to the kabbalistic concept that divine unifications between masculine and feminine aspects of divinity 'sweeten' harsh judgments.

[v] This highly technical kabbalistic language describes how on Sabbath, divine illumination ('milk') flows from Atik Kadisha (the Ancient Holy One, a high divine configuration) to wash away judgments.

[vi] This references Ezekiel 46:1, where the eastern gate of the Temple is closed on weekdays but opens on Sabbath, interpreted here as a metaphor for special divine channels that open only on Sabbath.

[vii] Metzitzah refers to the practice of sucking blood from the circumcision wound, which the author interprets symbolically.

[viii] The 'concealed sign' refers to the male organ, specifically in the context of circumcision as a covenant sign.

בפה כי אמה בין שני רגלים הנה הוא [ix]יסוד בין נצח הוד וע״י שתי ידים המוהל משלימה בעשר אצבעות ידיו דהיינו חסד וגבורה[i] הרי היא בעלת ה׳ [ii]ספירות

the concealed sign with our hands and suck with the mouth.[6] For the penis between the two legs is the foundation (Yesod) between Netzach and Hod.[1] And through the mohel's two hands, he completes it with his ten fingers, namely Chesed and Gevurah, thus it possesses five sefirot.[2] 90R

שתי אצבעות ושתי רגלים והיא נקודה באמצע יבא הראש שלש ראשונות וישלים הקומה כי הפה הוא פתח הראש כלו[iii] לכן צריך מילה הכורת המותר

Two fingers and two legs with a point in the middle;[3] the head, which is the three supernal [sefirot], comes and completes the structure,[A 4] for the mouth is the opening of the entire head. Therefore, circumcision is necessary to cut away the excess, which is 95R

[A] Or: "completes the divine stature" — The term 'קומה' in kabbalistic contexts often specifically refers to the complete divine structure or stature (Shiur Komah) rather than just any structure. This alternate translation better captures the mystical anthropomorphism where human and divine bodies correspond.

[1] The author is creating a symbolic parallel between Adam's sin (taking fruit with hands, eating with mouth) and the ritual of circumcision (cutting with hands, sucking with mouth) as a form of rectification.

[2] I've kept the Hebrew terms for the sefirot (divine attributes) while adding translations in parentheses where they first appear. These terms are central to the kabbalistic meaning.

[3] The five sefirot mentioned or implied are Yesod, Netzach, Hod, Chesed, and Gevurah, creating a partial representation of the divine structure through the circumcision ritual.

[4] This anatomical description likely refers to the male genitalia with circumcision occurring at the 'point in the middle,' establishing a mystical correspondence between physical circumcision and cosmic structures.

[5] The author is creating a kabbalistic anthropomorphism where the human body mirrors the divine structure (partzuf), with circumcision enabling the completion of this structure through proper connection between lower and higher elements.

[ix] The author draws a correspondence between human anatomy and the divine structure (sefirot), equating the penis with Yesod (Foundation) positioned between Netzach (Victory) and Hod (Splendor), which correspond to the legs.

[i] The ten fingers represent the complete sefirot system, with special emphasis on Chesed (Loving-kindness) and Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), corresponding to the right and left hands.

[ii] Cf. Zohar I:206a-b — The author is drawing on the Zoharic concept that all individual Jewish souls are branches of a collective soul-root (Knesset Israel), which is why he emphasizes the 'gathering' and 'roots' of souls. | Cf. Psalm 106:23 — The author uses this biblical verse to illustrate how a righteous person can 'seal the breach' caused by sin, analogizing this to how mourning rituals help 'seal the breach' caused by death. | Cf. Ezekiel 46:1 — The author interprets this verse mystically to suggest that special channels of divine blessing and healing are accessible on the Sabbath that remain closed during the week. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2 — The author self-references his earlier work to show continuity in his teaching that the Sabbath provides special access to divine healing energy. | Cf. Zohar III:94b — The author is likely drawing on this Zoharic concept that on Sabbath, the seven lower sefirot (the 'seven eyes of the Lord') are 'sweetened'—transformed from judgment to mercy. | Cf. Zohar II:88b — The author's mapping of human anatomy to the sefirotic system draws on this Zoharic tradition of seeing the human body as a microcosm of divine structures.

[iii] The text uses anatomical symbolism to connect physical circumcision with spiritual access. The mouth as 'the opening of the entire head' creates a parallel with circumcision opening access to divine realms.

שהוא להט החרב שבפתח גן
עדן[i] ובפריעה פותח דלתות
השער שהם הכרובים שומרי
הגן[ii] שלא יעכבו הכניסה
ובמציצה מעביר דין פנימי שלא
וקנתר ויצטער ואחר כך יבא
שם סוד הכתר ברפואה דהיינו
בא"א[iii] והיינו רטיה ואחר כך
קושרת שם סוד הרפואה לקשור
הכל בכתר הנה שעל המוהל
גם כן מצות הקשירה וקודם
יחוד זה צריך שיתגלה עליו
אור שבת פני מטרונה משער
הקדים[iv] ובזה יזכה במצוה
לנפש רוח ונשמה שהם קשר עשר
ספירות מהמלכות עליו שדיוקן
נשמתו אשר כלול בה מאירה
בסוד המצוה בכל בחינותיה

the flaming sword[B5] at the entrance to the Garden of Eden.[A] Through the peri'ah [uncovering], one opens the doors of the gate, which are the cherubim guarding the garden so they do not prevent entry. 100R
Through the metzitzah [suction],[1] one removes the inner judgment so it does not antagonize and cause suffering. Afterward comes the secret of the Crown in healing, namely in Arich Anpin,[2] which is the bandage. Then one binds there the secret of healing to 105R connect everything to the Crown. Thus, the mohel [circumciser] also has the obligation of binding. Before this unification, the light of Sabbath, the face of the Matronita [Divine Feminine], must be revealed upon him from the eastern gate. Through this, he 110R will merit the commandment for the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah [soul levels], which are the connection of the ten sefirot from Malkhut above him, so that the image of his soul which is included within [A] Or: "the revolving flaming sword at the entrance to the Garden of Eden" — The biblical phrase in Genesis 3:24 describes the sword as 'מתהפכת' (revolving/turning), which is an important aspect of its nature. Including this element would more fully capture the biblical reference being invoked.

[B] Or: "the revolving flaming sword at the entrance to the Garden of Eden" — The biblical phrase in Genesis 3:24 describes the sword as 'מתהפכת' (revolving/turning), which is an important aspect of its nature. Including this element would more fully capture the biblical reference being invoked.

[1] The author interprets the foreskin as corresponding to the 'flaming sword' that guards Eden in Genesis 3:24. In this kabbalistic reading, circumcision removes this barrier, allowing spiritual access to divine realms.

[2] The passage explains all three parts of traditional circumcision (cutting, uncovering, and suction) as having distinct spiritual purposes. Metzitzah is particularly presented as removing harsh judgment (din) from the child.

[3] Arich Anpin ('Long Face') is a kabbalistic term for one of the highest divine configurations, associated with mercy. The healing after circumcision is connected to this divine mercy descending to heal the wound.

[iv] This is a reference to Genesis 3:24, where God placed cherubim and a flaming sword to guard the way to the Tree of Life. In kabbalistic thought, the foreskin symbolizes this barrier that prevents spiritual access.

[i] Another biblical reference to Genesis 3:24, reinforcing the parallel between physical circumcision and gaining access to divine mysteries.

[ii] Kabbalistic terminology where Keter (Crown) is associated with Arich Anpin (א"א), the highest divine configuration accessible to human comprehension. The healing after circumcision is linked to this highest divine realm.

[iii] Refers to the Divine Feminine aspect (Shekhinah/Matronita) that is especially revealed on Sabbath. 'Eastern gate' may refer to Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 43:4) where divine glory enters through the eastern gate.

חיות גדולות עם קטנות.[v] וכתב
הרי״ן גיאת[vi] שמנהג זקנים
הראשונים שלא לומר צדוק
הדין אחר המת בראש חדש
במועד בחנוכה ופורים דלא
עדיפא צדוק הדין מהדיוט
מצדוק הדין של משה רבינו עליו
השלום[i] דמסלקינן ליה בשבת
שחל להיות בימים אלו הגם כי
תלמידי רש״י והרמב״ם כתבו
לומר צדוק הדין במועד כי
איננו אלא הודאה וקבלת דין
שמים כאשר כתבנו למעלה וגם
הם יודו מיהא כי בשבת המקדש
ישראל אין לאומרו מהטעם
שזכרנו וכן ביום טוב דאינון
מקראי קדש אושפיזין דמלכא
קדישא כי על שלחן המלך הם
אוכלים משום כבודו גם אין
צריכין ביסום כי הפנים מאירים
ואפילו בי״ט שני שהוא להרחיב
גבול השכינה חוצה לארץ כאשר
דרשנו למעלה הגם שבעל הלכות
גדולות[ii] שכתבו עליו שדבריו
דברי קבלה סובר דנהיג ביה
אבילות משום דאבלות יום
ראשון דאורייתא כתב רבינו
תם[iii] כי היה מאור עינים ופעמים

her[B] shines[3] in the mystery of the commandment in all its aspects, both the greater and lesser vitalities. 115R

Rabbi Isaac ibn Giat wrote that the custom of the early elders was not to recite Tziduk HaDin[1] [Justification of Divine Judgment] for the deceased on the New Moon, during festivals, on Hanukkah, or on Purim. For the Tziduk HaDin of an ordinary person is not superior to that of Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, which we omit on Sabbath that falls on these days. Although disciples of Rashi and Maimonides wrote that one should recite Tziduk HaDin during festivals because it is nothing but acknowledgment and acceptance of divine judgment, as we wrote above, even they would certainly agree that on the Sabbath, which sanctifies Israel, one should not recite it for the reason we mentioned. The same applies on festivals, which are called "holy convocations," sacred guests of the Holy King, for they eat at the King's table out of respect for Him. Also, there is no need for sweetening[2] [of judgments] because the [divine] countenance shines. This applies even on the second day of a festival, which serves to extend the boundary of the Divine Presence beyond the Land of Israel, as we explained above. 120R 125R 130R 135R

Although the author of Halakhot Gedolot, whose words are considered received tradition, maintains that mourning practices apply on the second festival day because first-day mourning is biblically man- 140R

[B] Or: "the imprint of his soul which is contained within her" — The term 'דיוקן' (diyokan) in kabbalistic literature can specifically refer to a spiritual imprint or impression rather than just an image. This rendering might better convey the technical mystical meaning of how individual souls relate to their spiritual source.

[3] This describes how the child's soul is connected to the broader divine structure through circumcision, with Malkhut (the Divine Feminine/Shekhinah) serving as the mediating presence that contains and nurtures the individual soul.

[1] Tziduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment) is a prayer recited at funerals and during mourning, acknowledging the righteousness of divine judgment even in death. The passage discusses when this prayer should or should not be recited.

[2] 'Sweetening' (bisum) is a kabbalistic concept referring to the transformation of harsh divine judgments into mercy. On festivals, this transformation occurs automatically through the sanctity of the day, making additional ritual actions unnecessary.

[iv] Kabbalistic term for different levels of divine vitality or energy, often corresponding to different aspects of divine illumination.

[v] Rabbi Isaac ibn Giat (1038-1089), an important Spanish rabbinic authority whose works on Jewish law were highly regarded.

[i] Refers to a tradition that even for Moses, whose death is described in the Torah, Tziduk HaDin is not recited on Sabbath. This serves as a precedent for all other cases.

[ii] Refers to the Halakhot Gedolot, an important early Jewish legal code attributed to Rabbi Shimon Kayyara (9th century).

[iii] Refers to Rabbi Jacob ben Meir (c.1100-1171), known as Rabbenu Tam, one of the most prominent Tosafists and a grandson of Rashi.

שהיו התלמידים כותבין לפניו
משמו את אשר לא יצא מפיו
והוא כתב דאין אבלות יום
ראשון דאורייתא אלא לאסור
אכילת הקדשים א״כ אפילו ביום
טוב שני לא ינהוג בו אבלות
ואין אומרים בו צדוק הדין וכן
עמא דבר ברם בחול המועד גם
שהוא אות לענין הנחת תפילין
ואין צריך הוראת מוחין מאימא
המתלבשים בסוד צ״לם בזעיר
המתראים דוגמא בסוד ורמז
תפילין מסודרים לדעת רש״י
וגם כן סוד התלבשות מוחי אבא
הנרמזים בסדר הבתים של תפלין
לדעת ר״ת כי מן השמים הוכיחו
שאמרו בפלוגתא בארעא כך
פלוגתא דרקיע[i] ויש לכל הדעות
שרש וענף שכן הושב שמור ת״ם
וראה יש״ר[ii] עיין בדברי מגדל
עוז[iii] פרק ג׳ מהלכות תפלין.
וגם סוד האות קוצו של יו״ד
הנרמז בסדר הנחת הפרשיות
לדעת הגאונים בכל יום שיש בו
קצת נפש יתירה בסוד תפלין
של אור[iv] אין אנו צריכין לאות
תפלין של עור ובחול המועד
מצד קצת נפש יתירה המתחדש
באדם די זה לאות כאשר ביארנו
לפנינו בספר מ״מ צריכין
ביסום אבל אין המנהג כך והנח
להם לישראל והמבין רמז מה
שכתבנו בדעות התפלין ידע
למה נתפשט בעולם לפי הסוד
התפלין כדעת רש״י כאשר נמצא

dated, Rabbenu Tam wrote that [the author of Halakhot Gedolot] had poor eyesight, and sometimes students would write in his name things that never left his mouth. Rabbenu Tam himself wrote that first-day mourning is not biblically mandated except to prohibit eating sacred foods. Therefore, even on the second day of a festival, one should not observe mourning practices or recite Tziduk HaDin, and this is the common practice. 145R 150R

However, on the intermediate days of festivals, even though they serve as a "sign" regarding the wearing of tefillin—and there is no need for a sign of the mochin [intellectual faculties] from Imma [the Mother] which clothe themselves in the mystery of the Tzelem in Zeir Anpin, appearing as an example in the mystery and allusion of tefillin arranged according to Rashi's view, and also the mystery of the clothing of the mochin of Abba [the Father] which are alluded to in the arrangement of the compartments of tefillin according to Rabbenu Tam's view, for Heaven has demonstrated that "as is the dispute on earth, so is the dispute in heaven," and all opinions have a root and branch, thus "shamor" [guard] and "zachor" [remember] are perfect and righteous (TAM and YASHAR)—see the words of Migdal Oz, chapter 3 of the Laws of Tefillin. And also the mystery of the illumination of the point of the Yod which is alluded to in the arrangement of the Torah portions according to the Geonim, on any day that has some additional soul in the mystery of "tefillin of light,"[A] we do not need the sign of "tefillin of leather." On the intermediate days of festivals, due to the partial additional soul that is renewed in a person,[B] this is sufficient as a sign, as we explained earlier in the book. Nevertheless, 155R 160R 165R 170R 175R

[A] Or: "luminous tefillin" — While 'tefillin of light' is a literal translation, 'luminous tefillin' might better convey in English the metaphysical nature of these spiritual entities that exist in contrast to physical tefillin.

[B] Or: "On the intermediate days of festivals, because of the partial extra soul-essence that is

[i] A reference to the Talmudic concept that disputes in the heavenly academy mirror those among scholars on earth, suggesting that legitimate halakhic disagreements reflect different aspects of divine truth.

[ii] A wordplay combining biblical terms with the names of sages: 'shamor' (guard) and 'zachor' (remember) are perfect (TAM, alluding to Rabbenu Tam) and righteous (YASHAR, possibly alluding to Rabbi Isaac).

[iii] A commentary on Maimonides' Mishneh Torah written by Rabbi Shem Tov ben Abraham ibn Gaon (13th-14th century).

[iv] A kabbalistic concept of spiritual tefillin made of divine light, contrasted with physical 'tefillin of leather.' On days with special spiritual qualities, these metaphysical tefillin are present without the need for physical ones.

בקבר יחזקאל אשר התנבא חוצה לארץ[v] והמשכיל יבין וידום. ורומז עוד לאור שנתגלה בבית ראשון ולא משם ולמעלה עד יערה עלינו רוח ממרום:[vi] sweetening [of judgments] is needed, but this is not the custom. Leave Israel to their practice. And one who understands what we have hinted regarding the 180R views on tefillin will know why the practice of tefillin according to Rashi's view has spread throughout the world,[1] as was found in the grave of Ezekiel who prophesied outside the Land of Israel. The wise will understand and be silent. This also alludes to the 185R light that was revealed in the First Temple, and not from there and above, until a spirit from on high is poured upon us.[2]

פרק מ׳

Chapter 40

הגם דאמרו בירושלמי דשקלים פרק ב׳ תני רשב״ג אומר אין עושין נפשות לצדיקים[i] דדבריהן הן זכרונן ובעל יפה מראה פירש[ii] צדיקים חכמים שדרך הלשון לקרותן צדיקים אי נמי צדיקים אע״פ שאינם חכמים וכן פסק הרמב״ם בפרק ג׳

Although it is stated in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shekalim Chapter 2, that Rabbi Shimon ben Gamliel taught, "We do not make monuments for the righteous, for their words are their memorial,"[3] and the author of Yefeh Mareh explained that 5R "righteous" here refers to scholars, as it is customary to call scholars "righteous," or alternatively, it refers to the righteous even if they are not scholars.

renewed in a person" — The concept of 'נפש יתירה' (nefesh yeteirah) might be better conveyed as 'extra soul-essence' rather than 'additional soul' to emphasize that it's not a complete separate soul but an enhancement of spiritual capacity during sacred times.

[1] The passage acknowledges the historical predominance of Rashi's view on tefillin arrangement while suggesting mystical reasons for this prevalence, connected to Ezekiel's prophecy outside the Land of Israel.

[2] This concluding phrase alludes to Isaiah 32:15, expressing hope for divine inspiration that will reveal even higher spiritual illumination in the future.

[3] This is a direct quote from the Jerusalem Talmud expressing the principle that the righteous don't need physical monuments because their teachings and words serve as their eternal memorial.

[v] Refers to archaeological evidence of tefillin found at Ezekiel's tomb that apparently conformed to Rashi's view. The author sees significance in this since Ezekiel prophesied outside the Land of Israel.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Two — This passage elaborates on when the Tziduk HaDin prayer should be recited, connecting to broader discussions in Ma'avar Yabok about proper mourning practices and their kabbalistic significance. | Cf. Zohar on circumcision — The passage draws on Zoharic teachings about circumcision as a cosmic act that removes spiritual barriers (the 'flaming sword') preventing access to divine realms (Garden of Eden). | Cf. Genesis 3:24 — The text interprets the biblical 'flaming sword' guarding Eden as corresponding to the foreskin that must be removed through circumcision to gain spiritual access to divine realms. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The passage's structure of explaining ritual elements (milah, peri'ah, metzitzah) in terms of their effects on divine structures parallels the approach in Tikkunei Zohar. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Three — This passage cross-references other sections of Ma'avar Yabok that discuss mourning practices, indicating the book's internal structure of returning to key themes across different discourses.

[ii] The term "nefashot" (monuments) refers to grave markers or tombstones. The Talmudic teaching suggests that the righteous don't need physical monuments because their teachings serve as their lasting legacy.

[iii] Yefeh Mareh is a commentary on the Jerusalem Talmud written by Rabbi Shmuel Yafeh Ashkenazi (1525-1595).

מהל׳ אבל והריב״ש בתשובה
פי׳ דברי הרמב״ם שאמר ולא
יפנה אדם אל בית הקברות
כלומר שאין להביט אל בית
הקברות ולבנין שעל קברותיהם
כי אם למעשיהם הטובים יפנה
וזה די להם לזכרון תמיד וכן
פי׳ בעל כסף משנה בפרק
ד׳ מהל׳ אבל. ברם מהרר״י
קארו בפסקיו לא הביא דין זה
מהרמב״ם הגם שבמקומות רבות
מעתיק שם דבריו כצורתן. והנה
עתה בראותינו כי כמה צדיקים
יש להם ציונים על קבריהם
מימי קדם[i] ובפרט בארצות
המערב כנודע ומפורסם ושמעתי
משם האר״י זצ״ל שהיה אומר
שהצדיקים השלמים שיש להם
ציוו הם מעלמא דאתגליא ואותם
הרשומים שאין להם ציון הם
מעלמא דאתכסיא[ii] הנה כי הציון
לצדיקים מורה מקום מוצא
נשמתם וכן נראה שהיה המנהג
בימי חכמי המשנה כדאמרי׳
בפ׳ כיצד מעברין ונפשות שיש
בהם בית דירה הגם שנוכל לומר
דמיירי באותם שאינם צדיקים
שהרי פסק הרמב״ם שם כי לאלו
בונין נפש על הקבר עם כל זה
לקיים המנהג נאמר כי הציון
לקברי הצדיקים יועיל לצורך
החיים[iii] כי בראותם ציון אדם

And so ruled Maimonides in Chapter 3 of the Laws of Mourning. The Rivash, in his responsum, interpreted Maimonides' statement "A person should not turn toward the cemetery" to mean that one should not look toward the cemetery and the structures over their graves, but rather turn toward their good deeds, and this is sufficient as a perpetual memorial. This is also how the author of Kesef Mishneh explained it in Chapter 4 of the Laws of Mourning. 10R 15R

However, Rabbi Joseph Karo in his rulings did not cite this law from Maimonides, even though in many places he quotes his words verbatim.[1] And now, seeing that many righteous people have had markers on their graves since ancient times, particularly in the western lands, as is well-known and famous, and I have heard in the name of the ARI, of blessed memory, that he used to say that the perfectly righteous who have markers are from the "revealed world,"[C] while those distinguished ones who have no markers are from the "concealed world."[2] Thus, the marker for the righteous indicates the source of their souls. 20R 25R 30R

It also appears that this was the custom in the days of the Mishnaic sages, as we say in the chapter "How do we extend [city limits]" regarding monuments that have dwelling places in them. Although we could say this refers to those who are not righteous, since Maimonides ruled there that for these people, we build a monument over the grave, nevertheless, to uphold the custom, we can say that markers for the graves of the righteous benefit the 35R 40R

[A] Or: "from the world of revelation" — This alternate translation might better capture the kabbalistic concept of different spiritual domains or levels of reality, though it's less literal than the original translation.

[1] This observation about Rabbi Joseph Karo (author of the Shulchan Aruch) not including this ruling in his code despite typically following Maimonides closely suggests that he may have deliberately omitted it because it contradicted common practice.

[2] This kabbalistic concept from the ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria) introduces a mystical explanation for why some righteous people have grave markers while others don't. It suggests this reflects different spiritual sources of their souls rather than simply being a matter of halakhic compliance.

[i] The author addresses the tension between the theoretical prohibition and the widespread practice, noting that many righteous people throughout history have had marked graves.

[ii] This kabbalistic concept distinguishes between souls from "the revealed world" and "the concealed world," suggesting that the presence or absence of a grave marker reflects the spiritual origin and nature of the righteous person's soul.

[iii] This pragmatic justification shifts the focus from the needs of the deceased to the benefits for the living, suggesting that grave markers serve an important religious function for visitors.

חשוב מעוררים לבקש רחמים
על קברו עבור החיים והמתים
דודאי ניחא להו לצדיקים
דאיתיקרו בהו אינשי ועוד כי
בזה גורמים להם זכות דחשיבי
למבעי רחמי לכולי דרא ועוד
דאגביה מבקשים רחמים על כל
שכבי עמו ישראל: [i] living.[3] For when they see the marker of an important person, they are inspired to seek mercy at his grave for the living and the dead. And certainly it is pleasing to the righteous that people honor them, and furthermore, this causes them the merit of being considered worthy of seeking mercy for the entire generation.[A] Additionally, through this, people pray for mercy for all the deceased of Israel who rest with him.[1]

פרק מ״א

Chapter 41

על פי הדברים האלה חברתי
והעלתי למעלה בחבורי זה איזה
תפלות מיוחדים להתפלל על
קברי עמנו ובהם רבים יחכמו
לעורר זכות הקדושים אשר
בארץ וכן במשנת שקלים פרק ב׳
אמרו מותר המת בונין לו נפש על
קברו [ii] והגם דלא אפסיק הלכתא
בהא כר׳ נתן מ״מ נראה כי נייחא

Based on these principles, I have composed and included in this work of mine certain special prayers[2] to be recited at the graves of our people, through which many will gain wisdom to awaken the merit of the holy ones who rest in the earth. Similarly, in Tractate Shekalim, chapter 2, they said, “The excess funds designated for a deceased person are used to build a monument over his grave.” Although the law was not definitively established

[A] Or: “being regarded as effective intercessors for the entire generation” — This alternate translation captures the functional role of the righteous as spiritual intermediaries, which might be clearer for readers unfamiliar with the concept of tzaddikim seeking divine mercy on behalf of others.

[3] The author attempts to reconcile the theoretical prohibition with the widespread practice by focusing on the benefits to the living rather than on the needs of the deceased, demonstrating a pragmatic approach to halakhic interpretation.

[1] The passage concludes with multiple justifications for the practice of erecting monuments, showing how communal practices often develop additional religious significance beyond their original purpose.

[2] The author refers to prayers he has included elsewhere in Ma’avar Yabok specifically for recitation at gravesites. This establishes the practical nature of the work as a guide for religious practice.

[i] Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Shekalim Chapter 2 — This source is the foundation for the halakhic debate about whether monuments should be erected for righteous individuals, with the principle that their words and teachings serve as their true memorial. | Cf. Maimonides, Laws of Mourning Chapter 3 — This reference shows how the Talmudic teaching was incorporated into normative Jewish law by Maimonides, suggesting that monuments should not be made for the righteous. | Cf. Kesef Mishneh on Laws of Mourning Chapter 4 — This commentary by Rabbi Joseph Karo (who was also the author of the Shulchan Aruch) provides further explanation of Maimonides’ view that one should focus on the righteous person’s deeds rather than physical monuments. | Cf. Teachings of the ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria) — This reference introduces a mystical dimension to the discussion, suggesting that the presence or absence of a monument reflects the spiritual nature and cosmic source of the righteous person’s soul. | Cf. Mishnah in Tractate Eruvin (‘How do we extend [city limits]’) — This reference is used to demonstrate that grave monuments existed in Talmudic times, suggesting that despite the theoretical prohibition, there was a practical tradition of marking graves.

[ii] This refers to Mishnah Shekalim 2:5, which states that excess funds designated for burial expenses may be used to build a monument (nefesh) over the grave. The Hebrew term ‘nefesh’ (literally ‘soul’) is used here to refer to a physical monument, showing the conceptual connection between the memorial structure and the deceased’s soul.

איתי למת מיהא בנפש ולאנשים דעלמא יהני להו להזכירם. ולבעל מעשים יועילו לו לזכות החיים ולרשום להם איזה מקום כבודו וגדול כח אדם גדול כי נסתפק לאבי"ה[iii] אם דינו כנשיא לענין טומאה דאמרי' בירושלמי דברכות ובנזיר פרק כהן גדול כד דמך רבי יודן נשיאה אכריז רבי יאי אין בהונה היום[i] במו שאמרו בנשיא שלפי שהכל חייבין בכבודו עשאוהו כמת מצוה לכל והרמב"ם כתב בפרק ג' מהלכות מלכים כי לב הנשיא שהוא המלך הוא לב כל קהל ישראל ולכן הקפידה תורה על הסרת לבו הנה דבתר רישא גופא אזיל ולכן מציינין מקום לגוף שיוכל להתפלל אצל הראש כי גדולים צדיקים במיתתן וכל מין טומאה נדחית מהם ומהמונם ורבינו חיים כהן אמר אילו הייתי שם כשנפטר רבינו תם הייתי מתעסק בו[ii] והנה פסק מהרר"י קארו

according to Rabbi Nathan's opinion,[3] nevertheless it appears that the deceased derives some spiritual satisfaction from having a monument,[A] and for living people it benefits them by helping them remember the dead. For one who performed good deeds in life, a monument will help bring merit to the living[A] and mark for them a place of his honor. 10R 15R

Great is the power of a great person, for the AVI"AH (Rabbi Elijah ben Solomon of Vilna) was uncertain[B] whether a great sage's status regarding ritual impurity is equivalent to that of a Nasi (Prince/President), as stated in the Jerusalem Talmud in Berakhot and in Nazir, chapter "High Priest." When Rabbi Yudan Nesia died, Rabbi Yannai announced, "There is no priesthood today," just as they said regarding a Nasi: because everyone is obligated to honor him, they considered him like a met mitzvah (an unattended corpse that anyone, even a priest, must bury) for all. And Maimonides wrote in chapter 3 of Laws of Kings that the heart of the Nasi, who is the king, is the heart of all the congregation of Israel, and therefore the Torah was strict about removing his heart—for the body follows the head. Therefore, we mark a place for the 20R 25R 30R

[A] Or: "there is at least some rest/comfort for the deceased through a monument" — The term 'niycha' (נייחא) more literally means 'rest' or 'comfort' rather than 'satisfaction.' This alternative translation preserves the more literal meaning while still conveying the concept that the monument provides some benefit to the deceased's soul.

[A] Or: "For a person of good deeds, monuments will benefit him by bringing merit to the living" — This alternative more clearly indicates that the righteous person himself benefits when the living receive merit through honoring him, emphasizing the reciprocal relationship between the deceased and those who remember them.

[B] Or: "there was uncertainty for the later authorities" — The acronym ABI"AH is ambiguous and might not specifically refer to the Vilna Gaon (who is typically abbreviated GR"A). It could instead be a generic reference to later rabbinic authorities. This alternative avoids specifying a particular rabbi.

[3] The author acknowledges a legal uncertainty in rabbinic sources about building monuments but proceeds to support the practice anyway based on its spiritual benefits, demonstrating his approach of balancing strict legal considerations with spiritual needs.

[i] The acronym ABI"AH may refer to Rabbi Elijah ben Solomon of Vilna (the Vilna Gaon), though it could also be a reference to another rabbinic authority. The text is citing a legal uncertainty regarding whether a great sage has the same status as a Nasi (Prince/President) regarding laws of ritual impurity for priests.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase means 'When Rabbi Yudan Nesia died, Rabbi Yannai announced, "There is no priesthood today."' This refers to the concept that priests (kohanim), who are normally forbidden from contact with the dead, were permitted to attend the funeral of an exceptionally great leader.

[iii] This references Rabbeinu Hayyim Cohen, who was himself a kohen (priest), stating that he would have involved himself with the burial of Rabbeinu Tam (Jacob ben Meir, 12th-century Tosafist) despite the normal prohibition for priests to come in contact with the dead. This illustrates the principle that great Torah scholars merit special honor even at the expense of certain ritual prohibitions.

בסי׳ שמ״ח[iii] שהאבן שנותנין על
35 הקבר נקרא צורך קבורה לבני
משפחה הרגילים בה והם דברי
הרא״ש בפרק נגמר הדין ופסק
ג״כ הכי בתשובה כלל י״ג על כן
ראוי והגון לבנים שציינו מקום
40 אביהם ויבנו לו נפש על קברו
וזה יהיה בכלל גם כן מכבדם
במותו וכדברי הרמב״ם ואם
יהיה גברא רבא יעשו טובה להם
ולאחרים עמם [i]

body so that one can pray near the head, since the righteous are greater in their death than in life,[1] and all forms of impurity are pushed away from them and their followers. 35R

Rabbeinu Hayyim Cohen said, "If I had been present when Rabbeinu Tam passed away, I would have involved myself with his burial." Indeed, Rabbi Joseph Karo ruled in section 348 that the stone placed on the grave is considered a burial necessity for family members who regularly visit it. These are the words of the ROSH (Rabbi Asher ben Yehiel) in the chapter "The Verdict is Concluded," and he also ruled similarly in his Responsa, category 13. Therefore, it is proper and fitting for children to mark the place of their father and build a monument over his grave, and this would also be included in honoring him in his death, as per Maimonides' words. And if the deceased was a great man, they will do good for themselves and for others with them.[1] 40R 45R 50R

45 כי אחוזת רעיו ותלמידיו
ויודעי שמו ילכו להשתטח על
קבר אביהם כי ידוע ידעו כי
בקבר הזה יש עצם אדם חשוב
אשר יתעצם ברחמים על קוראי
50 שמו[ii] ולמדה תורה את האדם

For his companions, disciples, and those who knew him will go to prostrate themselves on their father's grave,[2] as they surely know that in this grave lies the remains of an important person who will exert himself mercifully on behalf of those who call upon his name. The Torah taught people to be generous 55R

[1] This is a reference to a rabbinic concept (found in Talmud Chullin 7b) that the righteous have even greater spiritual influence after death than during life. This principle serves as a foundation for many Jewish practices related to visiting graves of the righteous and seeking their intercession.
[1] The author emphasizes the mutual benefit of erecting grave monuments: they honor the deceased while also benefiting the living who visit and pray there. This reflects the work's consistent theme of the interdependence between the living and the dead.
[2] The Hebrew term 'lehishtateach' (להשתטח) literally means 'to spread oneself out' and refers to a practice of prostrating oneself at the graves of the righteous. In Jewish tradition, this is not merely a physical act but represents intense prayer and spiritual connection with the deceased.

[iv] This refers to Rabbi Joseph Karo's ruling in his authoritative legal code Shulchan Arukh, Yoreh De'ah section 348, regarding the laws of burial and monuments.
[i] Cf. Tractate Shekalim — This serves as a primary rabbinic source for the practice of erecting grave monuments, showing that such structures have ancient origins in Jewish tradition. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud (Yerushalmi) — The author uses this reference to establish the elevated status of great sages in Jewish law, which would justify special consideration for their burial monuments. | Cf. Maimonides (Rambam) — The author employs this reference to emphasize how prominent leaders serve as spiritual centers for the community, justifying special honor even after death. | Cf. Rabbi Asher ben Yehiel (ROSH) — The author cites this as authoritative legal precedent to support the practice of erecting monuments, framing it as a legitimate need rather than an optional custom. | Cf. Rabbi Joseph Karo — This reference to a more recent legal authority demonstrates the continuity of this practice through Jewish legal tradition, helping establish it as normative rather than innovative.
[ii] This statement reflects the theological belief that the deceased righteous actively intercede on behalf of those who invoke them at their graves. This concept appears repeatedly in Ma'avar Yabok and is central to its understanding of the relationship between the living and the dead.

שיהיה ותרן בתוך ביתו כדאמרו
במדבר רבה בשפיכת יינו ושמנו
ובקריעת בסותו כל שכן וכ״ש
בדברים שיחלוצו ויזיינו וישזיבו
ויניחו עצמות המתים ואפילו
במקום שאין ההלכה רופפת
בידינו מצינו בכמה מקומות
מחשובי הפוסקים ראשונים וגם
אחרונים שאמרו על איזה דברים
שבאו מפורשים בגמרא ועתה
מנהג העולם אינו כן ואמרו
בהם פוק חזי מאי עמא דבר.
וכתוב בהגהות מיימנית פרק
י״ג מהלכות תפלה כי רשאין
הגאונים לשנות מסדרי התפלות
והקריאות ממה שכתוב במשנה
ובגמרא וכן באבלות המתאבלים
נהגו להקל כדכתבו הרמב״ן
והרמב״ם הגם שבא מפורש
בגמרא. והגהות מיימוניות
בפרק ב׳ מהלכות אבל טרחו
לתת טעם לזה באמרם כי
לכבוד האבלים תקנוהו ושלכן
יכולים למחול וכתב גאון על
המעמדות והמושבות דאמרו
בגמרא בדורותינו בטלו מנהגות
אלו ואמר דכשאמרו במי שחוזר
מאחורי המת לישב ז׳ פעמים
לא אמרו אלא למי שהולך לבית
הקברות ובחזרתו ובקרובים
וביום ראשון ובמקום שנהגו
וכבר העלינו על ספר טעם
למנהגינו בישיבות במאמר ב׳.
ולרש״י לא ניחא ליה דטעם
המושבות תהיה משום סלוק
הרוחות[i] אלא משום תשובה

within their households, as they said in Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah regarding the spilling of one's wine and oil and the tearing of one's garment—all the more so regarding matters that will strengthen, equip, rescue, and provide rest for the bones of the dead.[3]

Even in cases where the halakhah is firmly established, we find in many places that prominent early and later authorities have said regarding certain practices that are explicitly mentioned in the Talmud, yet current custom differs, "Go and see what the people actually do."[1] It is written in the Hagahot Maimoniyot, chapter 13 of the Laws of Prayer, that the Geonim were permitted to change the order of prayers and readings from what is written in the Mishnah and Talmud. Similarly, regarding mourning practices, mourners have adopted leniencies as written by Ramban and Rambam, even though the Talmud explicitly states otherwise.

The Hagahot Maimoniyot in chapter 2 of the Laws of Mourning took pains to provide a reason for this, saying that these changes were instituted to honor the mourners, who therefore have the right to forgo these practices. A Gaon wrote concerning the custom of standing and sitting (ma'amadot u-moshavot)[2] mentioned in the Talmud that in our times these customs have been abandoned. He said that when they spoke of one who returns from behind the deceased to sit seven times, they were referring only to one who goes to the cemetery and returns, and only for close relatives, only on the first day, and only in places where this was the custom. We have already recorded the reason for our custom of sittings in Discourse 2.

Rashi was not satisfied with the explanation that

[3]This poetic sequence uses an unusual series of verbs (יחלוצו, יזיינו, ישזיבו, יניחו) that are difficult to translate precisely. I've rendered them as 'strengthen, equip, rescue, and provide rest' to capture the essence of providing comprehensive care for the deceased's remains.

[1]The Aramaic phrase 'puk chazi mai ama davar' is a technical legal term in rabbinic literature indicating that established custom should be followed when it differs from formal legal requirements. This principle is being applied here to justify modifications to mourning practices.

[2]Ma'amadot u-moshavot refers to a specific ritual practice where mourners would stand and sit multiple times when returning from a burial. The exact nature of this practice had various interpretations, as the author proceeds to discuss.

[i]This refers to the competing explanations for the custom of seven sittings after a funeral. One tradition explains it as driving away harmful spirits (ruchot) that might follow mourners from the cemetery, while Rashi interprets it as an opportunity for repentance and contemplation of mortality.

ולהזכיר שחיי האדם הבל וזהו הבל הבלים.[ii] והנה על פי הדברים הנז׳ ביון שהוא מנהג ותיקים שהוקבע נראה שבך הוא עקרו וסברו של דבר עתה לפי הזמן והמקום כדאמר אליהו לרבי נהוראי במדרש שוחר טוב ומנהג זה יש לסמוך עליו כי אינו מנהג הדיוט מאותם שכתבו התוספות שאין לסמוך עליהם באשר הובא בהגהות מימוניות פרק ב׳ מהלכות שכנים ז״ל ומכאן יש ללמוד דיש מנהגים שאין לסמוך עליהם אפילו היכא דתנן הכל כמנהג המדינה. אלא הוא מנהג ותיקין דמבטל הלכה[i] כדברי הירושל׳ דבבא מציעא והובא בהגהות מימוניות ריש פ׳ ט׳ מהל׳ שכירות ולו שומעין.[ii]

the purpose of the sittings was to drive away spirits, but rather that they were for repentance and to remind us that human life is fleeting—this is "vanity of vanities." Based on these statements, since this is an established custom of the pious, it seems that this is the essence and reasoning of the matter nowadays according to the time and place, as Elijah said to Rabbi Nehorai in Midrash Shocher Tov. This custom can be relied upon because it is not a common folk custom of the sort that Tosafot wrote should not be relied upon, as cited in Hagahot Maimoniyot, chapter 2 of the Laws of Neighbors, which states: "From here we learn that there are customs that should not be relied upon, even in cases where we teach 'everything follows the custom of the locality.'" Rather, this is a custom of the pious that overrides halakhah,[1] as stated in the Jerusalem Talmud in Bava Metzia and cited in Hagahot Maimoniyot at the beginning of chapter 9 of the Laws of Hiring, and this is what we follow.

ואפילו יהיה הנקבר שם יושב ומתעדן בשיבה טובה שהוא עדן הספיר העליונות מקום הזקנה[iii] באשר הובטח אברהם

Even if the one buried there sits and delights in good old age, which is the higher sapphire Eden, the place of elder status, as was promised to Abraham in the verse, "You shall go to your fathers in peace;

[1] The concept of 'minhag vatikin' (custom of the pious) having the power to override formal halakhic requirements is a significant principle in Jewish legal development. The author invokes this to justify adaptations to mourning practices that differ from talmudic prescriptions.

[ii] This phrase ('vanity of vanities') from Ecclesiastes is used here to emphasize the fleeting nature of human life. According to Rashi's interpretation, the ritual sittings serve as a reminder of mortality rather than a protection against harmful spirits.

[i] This is a significant halakhic concept stating that an established custom of the pious (minhag vatikin) can override formal halakhic requirements. The author uses this principle to justify modifications to mourning practices even when they differ from explicit talmudic instructions.

[ii] Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah — The author cites this source to show that if Jewish tradition encourages generosity even in minor household matters like spilled wine, all the more so should people be generous in matters relating to honoring the dead. | Cf. Hagahot Maimoniyot on Maimonides' Laws of Prayer — The author cites this as precedent that authoritative rabbis can change established practices, supporting the flexibility of custom regarding burial monuments. | Cf. Hagahot Maimoniyot on Laws of Mourning — The author uses this reference to show that mourning practices have been modified from talmudic requirements for the sake of honoring mourners, establishing precedent for adapting burial customs. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author self-references his earlier discussion of the custom of seven sittings when returning from a burial, showing the internal structure of Ma'avar Yabok and its comprehensive treatment of mourning customs. | Cf. Midrash Shocher Tov (Midrash on Psalms) — The author cites this midrash to support the principle that customs should be adapted to contemporary conditions and local contexts. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Bava Metzia — This reference supports the author's claim that established customs of the pious (minhag vatikin) can override formal halakhic requirements, providing legitimacy for modified burial and mourning practices.

[iii] The phrase 'good old age' (שיבה טובה) is being interpreted mystically here, not merely as physical longevity but as a spiritual state in the 'higher sapphire Eden' (עדן הספיר העליונות), referring to a celestial realm associated with divine wisdom and elder status.

בפסוק ואתה תבא אל אבותיך בשלום תקבר בשיבה טובה כי צדיק כזה מעורר היחוד עליון והשעשוע בסוד טיולו בגן עדן כי הטיול מהצדיקים גורם השעשוע על ידי נקודת ציון אות ברית ששם סוד הכבים פירוש הנשמות הקדושות[i] ובשפע הנשפע מהספירות הרצים יצאו דחופים והחצונים מתבטלים על ידי כח הגדולה והגבורה[ii] שמשם עולים לים או לאש ששם ביעור חמץ ולכן בביאת הנשמות באש ובמים וכן הגופים בטבילה ותעניות[iii] אז תוציאנו לרויה לסוד המנוחה והנחלה כי ה׳ שמו יעלזו לפניו. וכתב הערוך ערך פרדס כי הוא מעין גן עדן שהיא גנוזה לצדיקים בן אותו מקום היא מקום בערבות שנשמות של צדיקים צרורות והביאו הגהות מיימוניות ה׳ יסודי תורה פרק ד׳. והמלאכים המעלים בסאות הצדיקים לישיבה של מעלה הם you shall be buried in a good old age" (Genesis 15:15)—for such a righteous person awakens the supernal unification and divine delight through the mystery of his strolling in the Garden of Eden.[2] For the strolling of the righteous causes divine delight through the point of Zion, the sign of the covenant, where lies the secret of the stars, meaning the holy souls.[A] And through the abundant flow from the sefirot, "the runners go forth hastily" (based on Esther 3:15), while the external forces are nullified[1] through the power of Gedulah (Greatness) and Gevurah (Strength), from which they ascend to the sea or to fire, where chametz (leaven) is burned. Therefore, when souls enter through fire and water, and likewise bodies through immersion and fasting, "then You will lead us to abundance" (Psalm 66:12), to the mystery of rest and inheritance,[2] "for His name is the LORD; they shall rejoice before Him" (Psalm 68:5).

The Arukh, entry "Pardes," writes that just as the Garden of Eden is hidden away for the righteous, so too that place is a realm in Aravot (the highest heaven) where the souls of the righteous are bound up.[B] This is cited in Hagahot Maimoniyot,

[A] Or: "where lies the mystery of the stars, which symbolize the holy souls" — The term 'sod' (סוד) could be translated as either 'secret' or 'mystery' in kabbalistic texts, and the relationship between stars and souls might be better expressed as symbolic rather than definitional.

[B] Or: "that place is a location in Aravot (the highest heaven) where the souls of the righteous are gathered in the bond of life" — The term 'tzerurot' (צרורות) specifically alludes to the biblical phrase 'bound in the bond of life' (צרורה בצרור החיים) from 1 Samuel 25:29, which is a common Jewish expression for the afterlife state of souls.

[2] The Hebrew term 'tiyul' (טיול), translated here as 'strolling,' has a deeper mystical significance in Kabbalah, referring to the soul's movement through various spiritual realms. This isn't mere wandering but a form of spiritual engagement that activates cosmic processes.

[1] The 'external forces' (החצונים/chitzonim) are negative spiritual entities in Kabbalah that might interfere with the soul's journey. The nullification of these forces is a key spiritual benefit described throughout Ma'avar Yabok as resulting from proper death rituals and the merit of the righteous.

[2] The 'mystery of rest and inheritance' refers to the ultimate spiritual reward in kabbalistic thought, where souls achieve both tranquility (מנוחה) and their divine portion (נחלה), forming a complete state of spiritual fulfillment.

[i] The 'point of Zion' refers to the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation) in Kabbalah, often symbolized by the male generative organ as the 'sign of the covenant.' The text mystically identifies stars with souls, drawing on biblical imagery where the righteous shine like stars (Daniel 12:3).

[ii] The terms 'Gedulah' (Greatness) and 'Gevurah' (Strength) refer to specific divine emanations (sefirot) in Kabbalah. The text states that these divine powers nullify the 'chitzonim' (external forces), which are negative spiritual entities that might interfere with the soul's journey after death.

[iii] The text creates a parallel between the souls' spiritual journey through 'fire and water' (metaphors for purification) and the physical practices of ritual immersion and fasting. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that physical ritual actions in this world mirror and affect spiritual processes in higher realms.

חול הנעשים ממצותיו[iv] וזהו
ויהללוה בשערים מעשיה אמנם
הבחינות של הארות הקדושה
שהיו סביב גוהרקיה דרבי חייא
היו נעלמים מעין כל אדם כי
גדולים היו מעשי חייא.[i] ועיין
בפירוש שהוא בהרמב״ם גדול
בהלכות תשובה פרק ח׳ דברי
הרמב״ן על מהות הגיהנם דף
ל״ד ובדף ל״ה ע״א כלל דברי
הרב בפירוש עולם הנשמות.
ובע״ב באו דבריו במהות עולם
הבא ואמר שהוא בגוף ונפש
ואין בו לא אכילה ולא שתיה
והקב״ה משביען מזיו שכינתו
כמשה בארבעים יום שעמד
בהר ואליהו[ii] ובפסוקים יביאו
לבוש מלכות וגו׳ ומרדכי יצא
מלפני המלך בלבוש מלכות רמז
ענג הצדיקים בעולם הנשמות
ובעולם הבא.[iii]

Laws of the Foundations of Torah, chapter 4. The angels who elevate the thrones of the righteous to the heavenly academy are the sand (common materials) transformed by their mitzvot,[C] and this is the meaning of "Let her be praised in the gates for her works" (Proverbs 31:31). However, the aspects of holy illumination that surrounded Rabbi Chiya's throne were hidden from everyone's sight, for great indeed were the deeds of Chiya. 145R 150R

See the commentary that appears in the greater Maimonides, Laws of Repentance, chapter 8, where the Ramban (Nachmanides) discusses the nature of Gehenna on page 34, and on page 35a he summarizes the Rabbi's explanation of the World of Souls. On the reverse side (35b) his words address the nature of the World to Come, stating that it involves both body and soul, yet has neither eating nor drinking, and the Holy One, blessed be He, satisfies them with the radiance of His Divine Presence—just as Moses did for forty days on the mountain, and Elijah likewise. The verses that speak of "bringing royal garments" and "Mordecai went out from before the king in royal attire" (Esther 8:15) allude to the pleasure of the righteous in the World of Souls and in the World 155R 160R 165R

[C] Or: "The angels who elevate the thrones of the righteous to the heavenly academy are formed from the mundane actions that have been transformed by their commandment observance" — The word 'chol' (חול) has multiple meanings including 'sand,' 'secular,' or 'mundane,' creating an ambiguity about whether these angels are formed from actual sand, from secular/mundane acts, or whether this is a metaphor for transformation of the ordinary into the sacred.

[iv] This is a profound mystical concept that the mitzvot (commandments) performed by the righteous during their lifetime are transformed into the very angels who serve them in the afterlife, literally creating the 'sand' or material that becomes their heavenly attendants.

[i] This refers to the Talmudic story (Bava Metzia 85b) where Rabbi Chiya's great deeds caused such spiritual illumination that even in the heavenly academy his light was extraordinary. The author is using this as evidence that exceptional righteousness creates special spiritual effects even in the afterlife.

[ii] The text draws a parallel between the experience of the righteous in the World to Come and Moses' experience during the forty days on Mount Sinai, when according to tradition he neither ate nor drank but was sustained by divine radiance. This explains how existence without physical sustenance is possible.

[iii] Cf. Genesis 15:15 — This biblical verse is cited as evidence that righteous people like Abraham will experience 'good old age' (seivah tovah) in the afterlife, which the author interprets mystically as referring to the 'higher sapphire Eden.' | Cf. Proverbs 31:31 — The author applies this verse mystically to explain how the righteous are praised in the heavenly realms for their good deeds, with their mitzvot becoming the very angels who elevate their thrones in the afterlife. | Cf. Esther 3:15 — This biblical phrase about messengers rushing is reinterpreted mystically to describe how divine flow from the sefirot moves swiftly through the cosmic realms, affecting souls after death. | Cf. Psalm 66:12 — The author uses this psalm verse to explain how souls that have been purified through the metaphorical fire and water of spiritual trials are rewarded with divine abundance in the afterlife. | Cf. Ramban's commentary on the World to Come — The author cites Nachmanides' views to validate his mystical framework about the afterlife, particularly noting the paradoxical state of having both body and soul but not requiring physical sustenance.

to Come.[1]

אתה ה׳ עזרתני ונחמתני.[iv] רבון
כל העולמים אתה הוא בטחוני
ואתה הוא פטרוני[i] יהיו נא
אמרי פי לפניך לרצון[ii] שיעשו
לדורות ויחקקו לדורות[iii] ויהיו
קורין בהם והוגין בהם ונוטלין
שכר עליהם ואגורה באהלך
עולמים[iv] ופי ידבר חכמות ועיני
יאירו במאור תורה ורגלי ירוצו
לשמוע דברי עתיק יומיא[v] אמן
כן יהי רצון:[vi]

You, O LORD, have helped me and comforted me.[2] Master of all worlds, You are my trust and You are my protector. May the words of my mouth be acceptable before You,[1] that they may endure for generations and be engraved for generations, and that people may read them and meditate on them and receive reward for them.[2] And may I dwell in Your tent forever, and may my mouth speak wisdom, and may my eyes be illuminated with the light of Torah, and may my feet run to hear the words of the Ancient of Days.[3] Amen, may it be Your will.

פרק מ״ב

Chapter 42

[1]The text distinguishes between two afterlife states: the 'World of Souls' (עולם הנשמות), an intermediate state after death, and the 'World to Come' (עולם הבא), the ultimate state after resurrection. This distinction is important in Jewish eschatology and throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[1]This concluding prayer reveals a deeply personal dimension of Aaron Berechia of Modena's work. Having completed his comprehensive guide to death rituals and afterlife theology, he now expresses both gratitude for divine assistance and his hope that his writing will have lasting impact.

[2]The author consciously frames his scholarly work as a form of divine service, seeking God's approval for his efforts to systematize Jewish approaches to death and dying.

[3]This reflects a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok that proper ritual practices create spiritual merit not only for the deceased but also for those who perform them. Here the author extends this principle to those who will study his book.

[4]By concluding with this kabbalistic reference to the highest aspect of divinity, the author reinforces the mystical framework that has structured his entire approach to death and the afterlife throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[iv]This opening line quotes Psalm 86:17, expressing gratitude for divine assistance and comfort.

[i]The term 'patron' (פטרוני) borrows from Roman legal terminology, referring to God as both the author's source of trust and legal advocate/protector.

[ii]This phrase echoes the conclusion of the Amidah prayer (Psalm 19:15), but here applies specifically to the author's written work rather than personal prayer.

[iii]The verb 'yechakeku' (engraved) suggests permanence, possibly alluding to the printing of his book.

[iv]Echoes Psalm 61:5, expressing the author's hope for spiritual immortality through his written work.

[v]This Aramaic term 'Ancient of Days' appears in Daniel 7:9 and is also a kabbalistic reference to the highest aspect of divinity (Atik Yomin).

[vi]Cf. Psalm 86:17 — By beginning with this biblical verse of divine comfort, the author frames the entire work of Ma'avar Yabok as divinely assisted, suggesting that proper death rituals similarly provide divine comfort to the deceased. | Cf. Psalm 19:15 — By adapting this familiar liturgical formula to his written work, the author presents Ma'avar Yabok as a form of prayer and divine service rather than merely an academic treatise. | Cf. Psalm 61:5 — The author hopes his book will grant him a form of spiritual immortality, consistent with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper religious practices ensuring positive afterlife experiences. | Cf. Daniel 7:9 — This reference connects the conclusion to Ma'avar Yabok's frequent discussions of divine judgment after death, while also introducing the kabbalistic dimension where 'Atik Yomin' represents the highest aspect of divinity.

נפש ברכה תדושן[vii] אשר מפרי
אמרי פיך אשבע טיב מאתך
תהלתי המעיין וקורא באהבה
בחמשה אמרותי אלה[viii] הגם
דלכאורה האי דישנא אינו כדאי
להאי פרדשנא כמוך אחת אשאל
מעמך אותה אבקש כי אל נא
תזלזל בפרורין אלה דאפילו
בעלי חיים לעולם אין נדחין כ״ש
פרורי תורה[i] כי רמז פרורין
לפי הנדרש ממחצדי חקלא
עילאה[ii] הם סוד פרפראות
התורה וכמו דשרא דעניותא
רדיף אבתריה דמאן דמזלזל
בפירורין דנחמא כדאמרי׳
בגמרין ובזהר פ׳ פנחס ובפ׳
עקב בן עניותא דדעתא אזיל
ח״ו בתר מאן דמזלזל בפירורי
התורה הנה רובם של פרקי
מאמרות אלו בכלם אם ראשון
ראשון יתקיים בידך ועוד
יהיה נא פי שנים ברוחך אליו

A generous soul will be enriched,[A] and from the fruit of your lips I will be satisfied with goodness. My praise comes from you, reader who studies with love these five discourses of mine.[4] Although at first glance this humble offering may not seem worthy of 5R such a distinguished interpreter as yourself,[A] I ask one thing of you, this I request: please do not belittle these crumbs, for even animals are never rejected, how much more so crumbs of Torah.[1] For these crumbs, according to what is taught by the "reapers 10R of the supernal field,"[2] contain the secret of the side dishes of Torah. And just as poverty pursues one who belittles bread crumbs, as stated in the Talmud and in the Zohar in Parashat Pinchas and Parashat Ekev, similarly, poverty of knowledge—God forbid— 15R follows one who belittles crumbs of Torah.

Behold, if you retain most of these chapters and discourses, one after another, and furthermore, may you have a double portion of their spirit,[B] then with your understanding you will grow stronger in each of 20R them with superior wisdom. Perhaps you will say, "I want both his sweetness and his terrors."[3] This

[A] Or: "A blessing-giving soul will be made fat" — This more literal translation preserves the physicality of the Hebrew verb 'תדושן' (will be made fat/prosperous) and maintains the biblical idiom. However, the idiomatic translation I chose better conveys the meaning in contemporary English.

[A] Or: "Although at first glance this threshing is not worthy of such an expounder as yourself" — This alternate preserves the wordplay in the original between 'דישנא' (threshing/offering) and 'פרדשנא' (expounder/interpreter). However, the more interpretive translation I chose better conveys the author's intended meaning of humility.

[B] Or: "and moreover, may there be a double portion of their spirit in you" — This alternative more directly translates the construction 'יהיה נא פי שנים ברוחך' but the chosen translation better captures the biblical allusion to Elisha's request to Elijah (2 Kings 2:9).

[1] The author explicitly refers to his work as comprising five major sections or discourses, confirming the overall structure of Ma'avar Yabok.

[2] The metaphor of 'crumbs' appears throughout this passage, with the author humbly describing his insights as mere crumbs while simultaneously arguing for their value, drawing on the rabbinic concept that even seemingly minor elements of Torah study have profound significance.

[3] This poetic kabbalistic phrase refers to mystics who harvest divine wisdom from higher spiritual realms. The author is positioning his work within this mystical tradition.

[4] The author acknowledges that his work contains both pleasant and challenging aspects, likely referring to the comforting elements of his death rituals alongside the fearsome descriptions of judgment and afterlife.

[vii] The author begins with a creative adaptation of Proverbs 11:25, "A generous person will be enriched," applying it to the relationship between the author and reader.

[i] The author refers to his work as 'five discourses,' confirming the five-part structure of Ma'avar Yabok.

[ii] The metaphor of 'crumbs of Torah' reflects the author's humility while simultaneously arguing for the value of seemingly minor insights, a common rhetorical device in rabbinic literature.

[iii] This poetic phrase 'reapers of the supernal field' is a kabbalistic term from the Zohar referring to mystics who harvest divine wisdom from higher realms.

אז בתבונתך חילים תגבר בכל אחד מהם ביתרון הכשר חכמה[iii] ואולי תאמר איהו בעינא ובסימותיה עם ביעתותיה בעינא. יען כי הרבה הקדמות וחדושים ודרושים כוללים הנוגעים לענין מעשה ביילתי בהם באגב וקני. ובשפה ברורה התהלכתי בהם ברחבה ובדרך קצרה וישיחו אמונ״ה יגידו צד״ק דצבורים בעינן להו ופרשת נא כנפיך על עבדך כי גואל אתה.[i] וזאת התעודה בישראל לקיים כל דבר תורה ולקבלו באהבה רבה ואפילו מקטלי קני באגמא[ii] is because I have incorporated many foundational principles, innovations, and comprehensive expositions relevant to practical matters as incidental inclusions. I have discussed them in clear language, both expansively and concisely, so they speak of faith and declare righteousness, for we need them collected together. Now spread your wings over your servant, for you are a redeemer. And this is the testimony in Israel: to uphold every word of Torah and receive it with great love, even from those who cut reeds in the swamp.[A]

ובזה מתרחב תקון הקדושה העליונה ויהדר סודרא למרי דעלמא עם כמה ככרים דנרד כנדרש בזהר פ׳ חקת בסוד החליצה[iii] על מנהג קנין סודר שהוא רמז לבל יגלה האדם כנף

Through this, the rectification of the supernal holiness expands, and the cloth is returned to the Master of the Universe[B] with many measures of spikenard,[1] as expounded in the Zohar portion of Chukat regarding the ritual of chalitzah. This reflects the custom of kinyan sudar[2] (acquisition

[A] Or: "from reed-cutters in the marsh" — This alternative is more concise but loses some of the vivid imagery. The Talmudic idiom refers to people of seemingly low status or simple laborers, which the author uses as a self-deprecating reference.

[B] Or: "and the scarf is adorned for the Master of the World" — The term 'סודרא' (sudra) can be translated as cloth, scarf, or garment used in symbolic transactions. The verb 'יהדר' can mean either 'return' or 'adorn/beautify.' This alternate translation emphasizes the ceremonial beautification aspect rather than the return aspect.

[1] The Hebrew 'ככרים דנרד' refers to 'kikkarim' (measures or talents, a unit of weight) of 'nard' (spikenard, an aromatic oil). This imagery evokes the precious offerings made in Temple times and is being used metaphorically for spiritual offerings or rectifications.

[2] Kinyan sudar is a formal act of acquisition in Jewish law where one party hands over a garment (typically a handkerchief or scarf) to another to symbolically confirm a transaction. The author is interpreting this legal formality as containing profound mystical significance.

[iv] This phrase alludes to Ecclesiastes 2:13, "Then I saw that wisdom excels folly as light excels darkness," suggesting that proper understanding of the text will illuminate the reader's mind.

[i] This is an allusion to Ruth 3:9, where Ruth asks Boaz to spread his garment over her as her redeemer. Here the author is asking the reader to take his work under their protection.

[ii] Cf. Proverbs 11:25 — The author uses this verse to suggest that readers who generously engage with his text will be spiritually enriched by it | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas — The author draws a parallel between physical and spiritual poverty, suggesting that just as wasting bread crumbs leads to material poverty, dismissing small insights from Torah leads to spiritual poverty | Cf. 2 Kings 2:9 — This alludes to Elisha asking Elijah for a double portion of his spirit, suggesting the author hopes readers will receive abundant spiritual insight from his work, even exceeding what he himself possessed | Cf. Ruth 3:9 — The author is humbly asking the reader to take his work under their protection and care, just as Boaz was asked to be Ruth's protector and redeemer

[iii] This refers to the biblical ritual called 'chalitzah' described in Deuteronomy 25:5-10, where a brother-in-law who refuses to marry his deceased brother's widow removes his shoe as part of a ceremony. In kabbalistic interpretation, this ritual contains deep significance regarding the soul's garments and cosmic rectification.

אביו[iv] שהם הקליפות הנקראים
ערוה ואסור לגלותם ולהמשיכם
אל גבול הקדושה ברם צריך
לכסותם בכנף מלבושו שהוא
רמז לתקונים שתעשה הנשמה
בלבוש החומרי הזה ולזה נתקן
קנין סודר לקיים כל דבר כמו
שאין השגה לנשמה רק בסוד
הלבושים כאשר הרחבנו במאמר
ראשון ושני. וכן המקנה דבר
לחברו אם לא יקיים הדבר
ההוא שקנה בקנין סודר אפילו
לא תקע כפו לחבירו אז הוא
באילו פגע ח״ו למעלה וכסות
שהיה מכוסה נגלה על ידו אם
כן בעת ששולף אפי׳ איש אנוש
את נעלו[i] שהוא בחינת נשמתו
הגם שתהיה מאיפה התחתונה
שלאדם הראשון ומדיוטא זעירא
מבחינת נעל ונתן לרעהו לאכול
מפריה זאת לפנים בישראל
לשמור דברי תורה בתוך לבבם
ובאהבתה ישגו תמיד ואורח
חיים בל יפלסון כל עוד אשר
נוכח עיני ה׳ דרכי איש כי בכל
אשר נעשה תחת השמים להשלים
נו״ת צד״ק[ii] יש חפץ למעלה
והכל לפי הכוונה. הנה זה חזיתי
ואספרה ריש מלין לבד בהנהגת המלמדי תנוקות אשר הפליגו

through a garment), which symbolizes that one should not uncover his father's corner, representing the kelipot (negative forces) that are called "nakedness." It is forbidden to reveal them or draw them into the realm of holiness. Rather, one must cover them with the corner of one's garment, symbolizing the rectifications that the soul performs within this physical garment. For this reason, the kinyan sudar was established to confirm every matter, just as the soul can only be apprehended through the mystery of garments, as we have explained at length in the first and second discourses. 40R 45R 50R

Similarly, when one transfers something to another through a kinyan sudar and does not fulfill what was acquired through this symbolic act—even if he did not clasp hands with his fellow—it is as if he has, heaven forbid, damaged the supernal realms, and what was covered has been revealed through him. Therefore, when even an ordinary person removes his shoe—which represents his soul, even if it comes from the lowest level of Adam and from the smallest dimension of the aspect of "shoe"—and gives it to his fellow to partake of its fruit, this was formerly practiced in Israel to preserve the words of Torah within their hearts.[1] In their love for Torah they would always be enraptured, and they would not deviate from the path of life so long as "the ways of man are before the eyes of the Lord," for in everything done under the heavens to perfect Tzedek (Righteousness)[A] there is divine purpose, and all de- 55R 60R 65R

[A] Or: "to complete the letters Nun-Vav-Tav of TzeDeK" — The original text uses the abbreviation 'נו״ת' which likely refers to the letters nun, vav, and tav in the word צדק (tzedek). This alternate translation makes the kabbalistic letter-based interpretation more explicit.

[1] The passage transitions from discussing ritual symbolism to how these principles apply to the transmission of Torah, particularly in education. The author suggests that proper understanding of symbolic acts creates proper intention in Torah study and observance.

[iv] This is an allusion to Deuteronomy 23:1, 'A man shall not take his father's wife, nor uncover his father's skirt/corner.' In kabbalistic interpretation, the 'corner' or 'wing' (kanaf) refers to spiritual dimensions that should remain properly covered.

[i] In kabbalistic symbolism, the shoe represents the lowest aspect of the soul that interfaces with the physical world, just as a shoe connects the body to the ground. The removal of a shoe in ritual contexts represents a transition between spiritual states or realms.

[ii] This is a kabbalistic reference to completing or perfecting the divine attribute of Tzedek (Righteousness). The letters nun-vav-tav (נו״ת) are the latter part of the word Tzedek (צד״ק), and may relate to mystical letter combinations or gematria.

שכרם בבתרא[iii] [iv]

pends on one's intention.[2] 70R

Behold, this I have seen and will relate, just the beginning of the matter, regarding the conduct of teachers of children, whose reward was described so extensively in Bava Batra.[1]

בפירוש פסוק והמשכילים יזהירו כזוהר הרקיע[i] וכו׳. הנה בעת אשר האדם מטפל ללמד נערי בני ישראל קריאת התורה שבכתב ופסוק טעמים אז נשמתו נעשית מרכבה להנהגת עשייה רוחניות ויאדיר מאד כח הבנתם אם יכוין לתקון ושעשע יונק על חור פתן ועל מאורת צפעוני ותקון מדור האופנים עולם העשיה הנהגת סנדלפון ובזה ומלכותו בכל משלה לאבנעא לאינון קליפין

On the interpretation of the verse "And those who are wise shall shine like the brightness of the firmament" (Daniel 12:3): When a person endeavors to teach the young children of Israel to read the Written Torah and learn the cantillation marks, his soul becomes a vehicle for the governance of the spiritual realm of Asiyah[2] (Action). He greatly strengthens their understanding if he intends to bring rectification and to "delight the nursling over the hole of the asp and over the den of the viper" (based on Isaiah 11:8). He rectifies the dwelling place of the Ophanim (angelic Wheels) in the world of Asiyah under the governance of Sandalphon. Through this, "His king- 75R 80R 85R

[2]The concept that 'all depends on intention' (hakol lefi hakavanah) is a fundamental kabbalistic principle suggesting that the spiritual efficacy of an action is determined by the consciousness and intention behind it, not merely its external performance.

[1]The passage ends by beginning to transition to a discussion of teachers of children, referring to Talmudic teachings about their great reward. This suggests the author is about to explain how teaching Torah corresponds to different cosmic levels, particularly how teaching children relates to the World of Action (Asiyah).

[2]The Hebrew term 'מרכבה' (vehicle/chariot) has profound mystical significance in Kabbalah, referring to humans serving as conduits for divine influence based on Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot. The author uses this term to suggest that teaching creates a cosmic connection between worlds.

[iii]This refers to the Talmudic tractate Bava Batra, which contains a discussion about the great spiritual reward reserved for those who teach Torah to children. This reference begins a transition to a new topic about the spiritual dimensions of Torah teaching.

[iv]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Chukat — The author explicitly references the Zohar commentary on Parashat Chukat regarding the chalitzah ritual. This reference reinforces the kabbalistic understanding of the ritual of removing a shoe as having cosmic significance in terms of spiritual rectification. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First and Second Discourses — The author directly references his own earlier writings in the first and second discourses of Ma'avar Yabok, where he apparently discussed the concept of spiritual garments or vestments of the soul at length. This self-reference demonstrates how the author is building a cohesive theological framework across the entire work. | Cf. Ruth 4:7 — The passage alludes to the biblical custom described in Ruth 4:7 regarding the removal of a shoe to confirm transactions. The author is drawing a parallel between this ancient practice and kabbalistic concepts of soul rectification, suggesting that mundane legal practices had deeper spiritual significance. | Cf. Deuteronomy 25:5-10 — The reference to the chalitzah ritual comes from the biblical commandment in Deuteronomy 25:5-10, where a brother-in-law who refuses to marry his deceased brother's widow removes his shoe as part of a public ceremony. The author is interpreting this ritual in kabbalistic terms, seeing the physical shoe as representing spiritual dimensions of the soul. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Bava Batra — The final line refers to the extensive discussion in the Talmudic tractate Bava Batra regarding the great spiritual reward granted to those who teach Torah to children. The author seems to be transitioning to a new topic about spiritual levels of Torah teaching, which corresponds to different cosmic realms.

[i]This phrase from Daniel 12:3 is traditionally interpreted as referring to teachers of Torah, particularly those who guide others in spiritual knowledge. It serves as the foundation for the author's hierarchy of teaching levels.

אשר יצאו מבן הגר המצרית
שהם לקדר ולמשמע ולדומא
ולמשא[ii] על התנוק הבורח
תמיד מבית הספר ומשם יעלה
בהדרגה לסדר המשנה עם
הגדולים מהם ואז ישים אל לבו
להעשות מרכבה לסדר הנהגת
עולם היצירה מסכן הנער דז׳
עולמת שפרתי דאינון נערות
ותמן אית סוד עץ הדעת טוב ורע
טהור וטמא איסור והיתר מותר
ואסור ובזה נהרא מכפיה מבריך
כי עמודא דאמצעיתא תקנן
ביצירה בסוד תורת עץ חיים.
וכשמורה הוראות ומפלפל
וממית עצמו על דברי תורה
בכח עיונו עד כי יוציא דין או
דבר ברור לאמתו. וכן בעת
שמלמד תורה לתלמידים חברים
הוא מקביל להנהגת עולם הכסא
וחביט חביט עליה ובריך בסוד
זיעת החיות הנושאות הכסא כי
בחסד של תורה יכין כסא וכל
עמודוהי וסמכוהי ובתבו״נה
יתכונן שכן אימא עילאה מקננא
בכורסיא[i] ובהכות בשבט מוסר
לתלמידיו יכוין לסוד ערקתא
דמסאנא[ii] כי בעת ששלף איש

ship rules over all" (Psalms 103:19), subduing those husks (negative forces) that emanated from the son of Hagar the Egyptian[3]—namely Kedar, Mishma, Dumah, and Massa (descendants of Ishmael)—who burden the child who constantly flees from school. 90R

From there, one ascends gradually to teaching Mishnah to older students. At this stage, one should set his heart on becoming a vehicle for the governance of the World of Yetzirah (Formation), as in "the youth is endangered" (based on Ecclesiastes 4:13) through the seven handmaidens who are young wome[A]n. There exists the secret of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, pure and impure, permitted and forbidden. Through this, "light shines from his palms" (Habakkuk 3:4), for the central column is established in Yetzirah through the secret of the Torah of the Tree of Life.[1] 95R 100R

When one renders halakhic decisions, engages in dialectical analysis, and sacrifices himself for the words of Torah through the power of his intellect until he produces a clear ruling or matter of truth—and likewise when he teaches Torah to colleagues and students—he corresponds to the governance of the World of the Throne (Beriah). He toils intensely and receives blessing through the secret of the "sweat of the living creatures that bear the Throne," for through the loving-kindness of Torah, "he establishes the throne and all its 105R 110R 115R

[A] Or: "the youthful soul traverses the seven cosmic maidens" — This highly mystical phrase is difficult to translate precisely. My alternative suggests a more cosmological interpretation where the 'נער' (youth) represents the soul journeying through spiritual realms represented by the seven maidens, rather than being in danger from them. However, this is a speculative interpretation of an obscure kabbalistic concept.

[3] The author draws on kabbalistic cosmology where 'קליפות' (husks/shells) represent negative spiritual forces that obstruct divine light. By associating these forces with Ishmael (son of Hagar), the author creatively interprets biblical genealogy as a spiritual metaphor for obstacles in Torah education.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that Torah study, particularly of Jewish law, establishes cosmic balance by strengthening the 'central column' (primarily the sefirah of Tiferet) in the spiritual world of Yetzirah, creating harmony between the right side (mercy) and left side (judgment).

[ii] These are names of Ishmael's sons mentioned in Genesis 25:13-14. The author creatively interprets them as representing negative spiritual forces that burden children's learning, drawing on the rabbinic tradition that viewed Ishmael negatively.

[i] This phrase draws on the Zoharic teaching that Binah (the Supernal Mother) 'nests' in the world of Beriah (the Throne). It refers to a foundational kabbalistic concept of how divine emanations manifest in different spiritual worlds.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase literally means 'strap of the sandal' and refers to the biblical ritual of chalitzah (Deuteronomy 25:9-10) where a widow removes the shoe of her husband's brother if he refuses to marry her. In Kabbalah, this ritual became a metaphor for transfers of spiritual power and obligation.

נעלו ונותן לרעהו זאת התעודה
תתקיים בישראל ודי לאוזן
שומעת וכוונתו תהיה לבטל
הקליפות אשר הם בהדרגה
120 בג׳ עולמות הנזכרים שהם
קדר ואדבאל ומבשם או לוטן
ושובל וצבעון וענה[iii] ומפרי
פיו ישבע איש כזה כי יזכה
להעמיד תלמידים הגונים ובעת
125 שלאם מלאם יאמץ ויהיו שדיו
באשכלות הגפן להרביץ תורה
לשמה ברבים אם יזכה לדחות
מעליו גאה וגאון ודרך רע ופי
תהפוכו״ת אשר מאד שנאתי או
130 בעת שעוסק במעשה מרכבה
ולבו דואג בקרבו אם תלמיד
חכם ומבין מדעתו ומוסר לו
ראשי פרקי הקדושה והיחוד אז
חיילים יגבר והוא כלי מחזיק
135 ברכה מהנהגת עולם האצילות
וימצא בשינון ההוא מאה
שערים[i] ויברכהו ה׳ וילך הלוך
וגדל וגם ברוך יהיה והצעת
דרוש זה עם תאיו ואולמיו בלי
140 נדר יבא במקום כבודו אשר
יעדתיו שם אם יגזור ה׳ לבד פי pillars and supports." "Through Understanding it is established" (Proverbs 24:3), for the Supernal Mother (Binah) nests in the Throne.

When disciplining his students with the rod of instruction, he should contemplate the secret of the "strap of the sandal,"[B][2] for when a man removes his shoe and gives it to his fellow, this testimony is established in Israel. This is sufficient for the attentive ear. His intention should be to nullify the husks that exist in hierarchical order in the three worlds mentioned—namely Kedar, Adba'el, and Mibsam, or Lotan, Shobal, Zibeon, and Anah (biblical names representing negative forces).

From the fruit of his lips shall such a person be satisfied, for he will merit raising worthy students. When he wearies himself completely, he will be strengthened, and "his breasts will be like clusters of the vine"[A] (Song of Songs 7:8) to spread Torah for its own sake among the many—if he merits to cast off pride, arrogance, evil ways, and "the mouth of perversity, which I greatly hate"[1] (Proverbs 8:13).

Or when he engages in the Work of the Chariot (mystical studies),[2] with his heart anxious within him, if he is a Torah scholar who understands through his own intellect, and transmits to him the introductory chapters of holiness and unification,

[B] Or: "shoelace ritual" — The phrase 'ערקתא דסאנא' refers to the ritual of chalitzah (shoe removal) mentioned in Deuteronomy 25:9-10. While 'strap of the sandal' is literally correct, 'shoelace ritual' might better convey the ceremonial significance to readers unfamiliar with this Jewish legal concept of transferring rights or obligations.

[A] Or: "his teachings will be like clusters of the vine" — While the literal translation refers to 'breasts' (שדיו), in this context it likely metaphorically refers to the teacher's nourishing teachings that sustain students spiritually, similar to how a vine's clusters provide sustenance. A more contextually appropriate translation might use 'teachings' rather than the anatomical 'breasts.'

[2] The author makes a surprising connection between pedagogical discipline and the ritual of chalitzah (shoe removal), suggesting that both involve a formal transfer of responsibility. This reflects the kabbalistic tendency to find mystical correspondences between seemingly unrelated religious practices.

[1] The author emphasizes that spiritual advancement through teaching requires moral refinement. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that cosmic rectification (tikkun) requires both ritual action and ethical improvement.

[2] Ma'aseh Merkavah (Work of the Chariot) is a technical term for the most esoteric aspects of Jewish mysticism, based on Ezekiel's vision. The author places this as the highest level of teaching, corresponding to the world of Atzilut, indicating that mystical instruction is considered the pinnacle of Torah teaching.

[i] These names appear in Genesis 36 as descendants of Esau and Seir the Horite. In kabbalistic literature, they represent negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that must be subdued through Torah study and mitzvot.

[ii] This is an allusion to Genesis 26:12, where Isaac sowed and reaped a hundredfold. In rabbinic literature, this became a metaphor for exceptional spiritual or intellectual achievement, particularly in Torah study.

פתחתי בו כאן להודיע כי התורה חסד על לשונה ובכפה פרשה לעני וידיה שלחה לאביון כמוני היום אשר מפרי כפיה נטעתי ושתלתי חמשה חלוקים אלו מן שלולית קטנה שלה. והיא תקדמך ברכות לעד. ואורח צדיקים ומשכילי עם הנבונים הוא כאור נוגה הולך ואור עד נכון היום כי מלך אל יקום עמו. [ii]

then he will gain strength upon strength. He becomes a vessel holding blessing from the governance of the World of Atzilut (Emanation), and in that study he will find "a hundredfold" (Genesis 26:12). 145R
The Lord will bless him, and "he will go on, growing ever greater" (Genesis 26:13), and he shall also be blessed.

The exposition of this discourse with its chambers and halls will, without a vow, come in its place 150R of honor where I have designated it, if the Lord so decrees. I have only introduced it here to make known that "the Torah has kindness on her tongue, she opens her palm to the poor, and stretches out her hands to the needy" (based on Proverbs 31:26, 20) 155R like myself today, who from the fruit of her palms have planted and sown these five divisions from her small puddle. And she shall greet you with blessings forever. "The path of the righteous" and the wise and understanding people "is like the light of dawn, 160R growing brighter until the full day" (Proverbs 4:18), for God the King will arise with His people.

ואז תמלא הארץ דעה את ה׳ כמים לים מכסים [i] ועצת ה׳ לעולם תעמוד ובחכמה יבנה בית עילאה ובתבונה יתכונן כי

And then "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea" and the counsel of the Lord shall stand forever, and through wisdom 165R the supernal house[A] shall be built,[1] and through [A] Or: "celestial dwelling" — While 'supernal house' is the most direct translation capturing the kabbalistic meaning, 'celestial dwelling' might better convey the concept of a divine spiritual structure to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[1] The term 'בית עילאה' (supernal house) has kabbalistic significance, referring to the divine spiritual

[iii] Cf. Daniel 12:3 — The author uses this verse to establish a hierarchy of Torah teachers, suggesting that different levels of teaching correspond to different spiritual worlds in the kabbalistic cosmology (Asiyah, Yetzirah, Beriah, and Atzilut). The 'shining' represents the spiritual illumination achieved through teaching at progressively higher levels. | Cf. Isaiah 11:8 — In Ma'avar Yabok, this image is repurposed as a metaphor for how teaching Torah to children transforms dangerous spiritual forces (represented by venomous creatures) into harmless ones. It suggests that proper education creates spiritual protection for vulnerable young souls. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Ma'amar 1 — This passage extends that framework specifically to Torah teaching, showing how different levels of teaching correspond to and activate different spiritual worlds. It follows the same pattern of explaining how physical actions below create metaphysical effects above that is central to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death rituals. | Cf. Ezekiel's Vision of the Divine Chariot (Ezekiel 1) — The author draws a parallel between the intense intellectual effort of Torah study and the celestial creatures' labor in bearing the divine throne. The 'sweat' of these creatures becomes a metaphor for the effort of deep Torah study, suggesting that such study actually strengthens the cosmic throne structure. | Cf. Zohar, Section on Yitro — This passage in Ma'avar Yabok applies the Zoharic cosmology specifically to Torah teaching, showing how teaching at different levels corresponds to different divine configurations. The reference to 'Supernal Mother' (Binah) nesting in the Throne (Beriah) follows standard kabbalistic correspondence.

[i] This phrase is quoted from Isaiah 11:9, which describes the messianic era when divine knowledge will permeate all existence. The author uses this to express hope for the ultimate spiritual enlightenment that will come when all ritual work described in the book is properly performed.

איש דעת מאמץ כח ויגדל נא כח אדנ״י ויהי שמיה רבא מברך לעלם ולעלמי עלמיא[ii] אמן כן יהי רצון. יהי כבוד ה׳ לעולם ישמח ה׳ במעשיו:[i] understanding it shall be established, for a man of knowledge increases strength.[B] May the power of the Lord be magnified, and may His great Name be blessed forever and ever,[2] Amen, so may it be His will. May the glory of the Lord endure forever; may the Lord rejoice in His works.

[B] Or: "one who possesses knowledge strengthens power" — This alternative translation emphasizes the active role of the knowledgeable person in strengthening divine power, which aligns with Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on human ritual actions affecting divine realms.

structure that is established through proper observance of rituals and commandments. In the context of Ma'avar Yabok, this likely refers to the cosmic spiritual architecture that proper death rituals help to maintain and perfect.

[1] This is a translation of the Aramaic phrase from the Kaddish prayer, traditionally recited by mourners. Its inclusion at the conclusion of this work on death rituals creates a powerful thematic resonance, as the author ends with the very prayer that mourners would recite following the practices outlined in the book.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase comes from the Kaddish prayer, traditionally recited by mourners. Its inclusion here creates a thematic connection between the conclusion of this book on death rituals and the very prayers it instructs readers to recite.

[i] Cf. Isaiah 11:9 — The author uses this prophetic verse about universal divine knowledge to express hope for the ultimate spiritual enlightenment that will come when all spiritual work is completed. | Cf. Psalm 33:11 — The reference to God's counsel standing forever emphasizes the eternal nature of divine wisdom, contrasting with the temporary nature of human existence discussed throughout Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Proverbs 24:3-4 — The author applies this verse about building a house through wisdom to the 'supernal house' (spiritual realm), suggesting that divine wisdom establishes cosmic spiritual structures. | Cf. Proverbs 24:5 — The author uses this wisdom verse to emphasize that true knowledge increases spiritual power, connecting to Ma'avar Yabok's theme of proper knowledge preparing the soul for its journey. | Cf. Kaddish Prayer — The author incorporates language from the Kaddish, a prayer recited by mourners, appropriately concluding this work on death rituals with this liturgical element focused on divine glorification. | Cf. Psalm 104:31 — This final verse expresses hope that God will rejoice in His creation, including the spiritual work accomplished through proper death rituals as outlined in Ma'avar Yabok.

Discourse 10

חתימת הספר / Sealing of the Book

אשריך העולם שהקב״ה מלך בך. ויאמר נא אהרן כי לעולם חסדו ויברך יה מעתה ועד עולם כי מאוצר של חנם חנן אותי במצוה קבועה לדורות על דרך שאמרו בויקרא רבה פ׳ כ״ב שכל מי שהומה ומהמה אחר המצות ומצוה קבועה לדורות אין לו מה הנאה יש לו וחדאי נפשאי ובדיחנא דעתאי כי גם שמעפר יצפצפו אמרותי אלה מהם ילמדו לקח השמחים אלי גיל נשמתם וישישו כי ימצאו קבר כי בזה הנערה בת מלך רו״ח נדיב״ה תבא אל המלך מקץ היות לה כדת הנשים ששה חדשים בשמן המר וששה חדשים בבשמים ובתמרוקי הנשים.[i] כאשר

Fortunate are you, O world, that the Holy One, blessed be He, reigns over you.[1] May Aaron now say, "For His kindness endures forever," and may he bless the Lord from now until eternity, for from His treasury of grace He has favored me with an 5R enduring commandment for generations, as they said in Leviticus Rabbah, chapter 22: "Whoever yearns and longs after the commandments[A] and an enduring commandment for generations—what pleasure does he have? My soul rejoices and my 10R mind is gladdened,[B] for even though these sayings of mine chirp from the dust,[2] from them those who rejoice will learn a lesson, their souls will exult, and they will delight when they find a grave.[3] For in this way the maiden, the king's daughter with a noble 15R spirit, will come to the king after she has fulfilled the women's customary period of six months with bitter oil and six months with spices and women's

[A] Or: "whoever murmurs and yearns for the commandments" — The Hebrew root המה can refer to murmuring or making a sound, which might better capture the audible nature of devotional longing implied in the original text.

[B] Or: "My soul rejoices and my spirit is cheered" — The Aramaic term 'דעתאי' could be rendered as 'spirit' rather than 'mind' to better capture the emotional rather than purely intellectual nature of the gladness described.

[1] The author begins with a traditional formula of praise, but makes it personal by using his own name (Aaron) in the following line.

[2] A humble metaphor comparing his words to the faint chirping of birds in dust, suggesting his awareness of his own mortality and the humble nature of his contribution.

[3] This paradoxical phrase reflects the book's central theme that proper understanding of death is actually a source of spiritual joy rather than sorrow, as it represents the soul's liberation.

[i] This alludes to Esther 2:12, which describes the preparation of young women before meeting King

מאופל ומחשך עיני עורים
תראינה[i] בפרקי גיהנם אשר
סדרנו בשפתי רננות שלנו.
ומלבד אשר דברנו שם בואו
וקחו לכם דוגמא מזה בדברי
החכם בעל העקידה[ii] בשער
כ״ב וכ״ה וס״ט והבורר יברר
לעצמו כי דרך אחרת היא אתו
בהא נסלק ונחית כי ימי״ם תהיה
גאולת הנשמה[iii] ואחר שנה זו
תובל שי לה׳ צבאות עד כי תשוב
אל אחוזתו וכל פקודת גומלי
חסדים אשר יפקדו בגוף יועילו
ויצילו עליו ויחדו בזה פניו
יחורו וטירחא יתירא טרחינן
ואפילו במקום דפסידא לאוקומי
נפשא דמיתא בבילת׳ עילאה
באשר חדשתי והודעתי בדברי
אלו בשם אל אורי וישעי אשר
לא יבושו קויו. ואין הקב״ה
פוסל לשום בריה אלא לכל
הוא מקבל כדאמרי׳ בשמות
רבה פ׳ י״ז שעל ידי אזוב שהוא
שפל שבאילנות גאל את ישראל.
כען אנא משבח ומרומם ומהדר
ובהלליה ובהלל אודה אברם
השם הנכבד והנורא אשר לא
עזב חסדו ואמתו מעם עבד
אדוני זה אפר בעפר יסודו ולא
כראות אנוש יראה ועם כל זה
יותר ממה שהבטחתי אמרתי
לפניכם בהקדמה בכפלים
לתושיה מצאתי כתוב וסדור

cosmetics. Just as from darkness and gloom the eyes of the blind will see in the chapters on Gehenna 20R that we arranged in our ‘Lips of Praise.’[1]

And beyond what we spoke of there, come and take for yourselves an example of this from the words of the sage, the author of the Akedah, in gates 22, 25, and 69. One who chooses will clarify for himself, for 25R he has a different approach to this matter—we shall ascend and descend with it. For after a time will come the redemption of the soul, and after that year it will be brought as a gift to the Lord of Hosts until it returns to its inheritance. And all the duties of 30R those who perform acts of kindness that are assigned to the body will benefit and protect it, and together in this “his face will turn pale.” We have made extraordinary efforts, even in cases of loss, to establish the soul of the deceased in the supernal canopy,[2] as 35R
I have innovated and made known in these words of mine in the name of God, my light and my salvation, in whom those who hope will not be ashamed.

The Holy One, blessed be He, does not disqualify any creature; rather, He receives all, as they said in 40R Exodus Rabbah, chapter 17, that through the hyssop, which is the lowliest of plants, He redeemed Israel. Now I praise, exalt, and glorify, and with songs of praise I acknowledge and bless the honored and awesome Name, who has not withdrawn His kindness 45R and truth from this servant of my Lord, who is dust founded in ashes. He does not see as mortals see, and despite this, I have found written and arranged before me in various homiletical teachings more than what I promised you in the introduction—double the 50R wisdom[A]—these words clothed on my tongue, and

[A] Or: “with a double measure of sound wisdom” — The term ‘תושיה’ refers specifically to sound, practical wisdom or substance, which might better convey the nature of what the author claims to have provided beyond his initial promise.

[1] The author refers to an earlier section of Ma’avar Yabok titled ‘Siftei Renanot’ (Lips of Praise), which contains discussions of the afterlife including Gehenna (the realm of spiritual purification).
[2] This refers to the mystical concept of the soul finding rest under the ‘divine canopy’ in the Garden of Eden after death, a key goal of the proper rituals described throughout Ma’avar Yabok.

Ahasuerus. Here it serves as an allegory for the soul’s preparation before meeting the divine King after death.

[i] This phrase, drawing on Isaiah 29:18, creates a powerful contrast between spiritual blindness and insight, suggesting that understanding death properly brings illumination rather than darkness.
[ii] This refers to Rabbi Isaac Arama (c. 1420-1494), author of Akedat Yitzchak, a philosophical commentary on the Torah. The author is directing readers to specific sections where Arama discusses relevant concepts about the afterlife.
[iii] The phrase “redemption of the soul” refers to the process by which the soul is liberated from physical constraints after death and ascends to higher spiritual realms.

לפני באגדות דרושים שונים
שמלתם על לשוני ופקודתם
שמרה רומי יען חסד ואמת נפגשו
צדק ושלום נשקו[i] וה׳ יתן חכמה
להולכי תום מלבד שהרבה מהם
השמטתים ובלבי צפנתים כי
להג הרבה יגיעת בשר ויקום
פרחם של מאמרים אלו קדם
עמא פזיזא המאספים אתר מתנה
עם הנקראו על ידי רועה נאמן
ממלכת כהנים וגוי קדוש. ואל
נא יזלזלו במשיחת״א קדישא
דאורייתא דכל פורתא דסובלנו
חזי לברכומא ריסקא מחילא
דאורייתא.[ii] יהא רעוא דאטום
בשיראי דעולמתא שפירתא
דהיא רישא דכולי כרכא ולא
תפסק מצוה זאת מביתי כאשר
הבטיחונו חכמינו ז״ל בשמות
רבה אמר ר״י מכאן אתה למד
מי שמקבל על עצמו לעשות
מצוה אין אותה מצוה פוסקת
מביתו וגם לעתיד לבא אמרו שם
פ׳ כ״א שכל א׳ עומד ומשמיע
למודו וכבי״כול הקב״ה יושב
ומשמיע עמהם כדפ״ב וכל בניך
למודי ה׳ ויקיים בי תפלת נעים
זמירות כדאמרו במדרש פרק
י״ט אמר דוד רבון העולמים
כשאני עוסק בחקיך לא יהא
רשות ליצר הרע להציץ בי
שנאמר הורני ה׳ דרכך אהלך
באמתך שלא יטעה אותי יצר
הרע ואני מתבייש מן הצדיקים

my spirit has preserved their mandate, because kindness and truth have met, righteousness and peace have kissed, and the Lord gives wisdom to those who walk in integrity. Beyond this, I have omitted many of them and kept them hidden in my heart, for excessive talk is weariness of the flesh.

May the blossoms of these statements arise before the hasty nation, the gatherers of gift offerings[A] with those who were called by the faithful shepherd "a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." Please do not disrespect the holy anointing of the Torah, for every bit of understanding is worthy of the crushed saffron from the strength of the Torah. May it be His will that I bind myself with the silks of the beautiful maiden[B] who is the head of the entire city,[1] and may this commandment not cease from my house, as our sages of blessed memory promised us in Exodus Rabbah. Rabbi Yochanan said: "From here you learn that whoever takes upon himself to perform a commandment, that commandment will not cease from his house." And they also said there in chapter 21 that in the future, each one will stand and proclaim his learning, and as it were, the Holy One, blessed be He, will sit and proclaim with them, as it says, "And all your children shall be taught by the Lord."

May He fulfill in me the prayer of the sweet psalmist, as they said in the Midrash, chapter 19: "David said, 'Master of the Universe, when I engage in Your statutes, let not the evil inclination have permission to peer at me,[2] as it is said, "Teach me, O Lord, Your way; I will walk in Your truth," so that the evil inclination will not lead me astray. I am embarrassed before the righteous, for because he leads me astray, I withhold myself from words

[A] Or: "the impetuous people who gather at the place of the gift" — This difficult phrase might refer to the Israelites, often called 'impetuous' in rabbinic literature, and 'אתר מתנה' could be understood as 'the place of the gift' (possibly referring to Mount Sinai or the Temple).

[B] Or: "May it be His will that I wrap myself in the silken garments of the beautiful maiden" — The verb 'אטום' has connotations of wrapping or covering oneself, which might better capture the image of being enveloped in the protection and beauty of Torah wisdom.

[1] This likely refers to the Torah or divine wisdom personified as a female figure, a common metaphor in Jewish mystical literature.

[2] The author quotes King David's prayer from a midrashic source, identifying with the struggle against distractions and intellectual errors that might compromise one's Torah study.

[i] This quotes Psalm 85:11, which describes divine attributes meeting together. The author uses this to suggest that his work similarly brings together different aspects of truth and righteousness.

[ii] This difficult Aramaic phrase suggests that even a small amount of understanding is worthy of being treated as precious as crushed saffron (a valuable spice) due to the power of Torah.

שמתוך שהוא מתעה אותי אני מונע עצמי מדברי תורה ואני בא להשמיע תלמודי לפניך וקטנים ממני הם משיבים ואומרים אינו כך ואני מתבייש. אלא עשה לבי אחד כדי שיהא עסוק בתורה הדא הוא דכתיב יחי לבי תמים בחקיך למען לא אבוש. ע״כ ולא יבצר מלבבי את אשר יזם לעשות בלי נדר ברוב חיל עם המהדורות הראויות ונזכה נחיה ונראה בשובע שמחות ונירש נעימות בימינך נצח ויספיק לנו מעדני גן עדן והמלך שבארץ יברך את המלך שבשמים וכסא כבוד ינחילנו אמן סלה ועד: [i]

of Torah. And when I come to make my learning heard before You, those lesser than I respond and say, "It is not so," and I am embarrassed. Rather, make my heart single-minded so that it may be engaged in Torah.' This is what is written: 'May my heart be perfect in Your statutes so that I will not be ashamed.'"

And He will not withhold from my heart that which He has planned to do, without a vow, with great might and with the appropriate revisions. May we merit to live and see an abundance of joys, and inherit pleasantness at Your right hand forever. May He provide us with the delicacies of the Garden of Eden, and may the king on earth bless the King in heaven, and may He bequeath to us a throne of glory. Amen, Selah, and forever.

בנל״ך ואע״י לק״י [ii]

Blessed is He and blessed is His Name, and may His Will be done.[AB]

[A] Or: "Blessed is His Name and may the Will of the Holy One be fulfilled." — This appears to be a standard closing acronym typical of Jewish religious texts. The letters likely stand for phrases such as 'Baruch Hu' (Blessed is He) and possibly 'L'Kvodo Yitbarach' (For His blessed glory). The alternative offers a slightly different arrangement of blessing elements while maintaining the reverent tone.

[B] Or: "Blessed is His crown, and by His help, may His glory be exalted." — The acronym could potentially represent other formulaic phrases. This interpretation assumes letters might stand for 'Baruch Nizro L'Kvodo' and 'V'Al Ezrato Yitromem Kvodo' or similar phrases, which would create a more poetic closing blessing focusing on divine glory and exaltation.

[i] Cf. Leviticus Rabbah 22 — The author cites this midrash to establish the spiritual value of dedicating oneself to fulfilling divine commandments, presenting his work as such a meritorious endeavor. | Cf. Exodus Rabbah 17 — The author uses this reference to demonstrate divine acceptance of humble offerings, suggesting that his own modest work may similarly find divine favor despite its humble nature. | Cf. Exodus Rabbah 21 — This reference supports the author's hope that his teachings will endure and be studied in the messianic future, establishing the eternal value of Torah study. | Cf. Sefer Ha'Akedah — The author refers readers to these specific sections of the Akedah for additional perspectives on the afterlife and redemption of souls, suggesting alternative philosophical approaches to his own mystical framework. | Cf. Psalms 119:80 — This verse from Psalms expresses the author's prayer for single-minded devotion to Torah study without distraction from the evil inclination, revealing his spiritual aspirations. | Cf. Song of Songs — The author employs allegorical imagery from Song of Songs to represent the soul's preparation for its ultimate reunion with the divine, using the familiar bridal metaphor for spiritual perfection. | Cf. Psalms 84:5-7 — The author alludes to the soul's journey through death (the valley) before appearing before God, connecting his work to biblical precedents for describing the afterlife journey.

[ii] Cf. Traditional Hebrew text closings — This appears to be a standard Hebrew acronym used to conclude a text or section of a text with praise and acknowledgment of divine sovereignty. Such acronyms are common in Hebrew religious literature, particularly at the conclusion of prayers, books, or major sections. | Cf. Amidah prayer — The sentiment expressed in this acronym echoes the closing formulas of many Jewish prayers, particularly the Amidah, which concludes with affirmations of God's blessed nature and expressions of hope for divine will to be realized.

Part V

Appendices

Appendix A

The sefirotic system

In the mystical framework of Jewish Kabbalah that forms the theological underpinning of Aaron Berechia of Modena's Ma'avar Yabok, the sefirot (singular: sefirah) represent the primary conceptual structure through which divine energy flows into and sustains the created universe. Far more than abstract philosophical constructs, the sefirot in Ma'avar Yabok function as active channels through which human ritual actions—particularly those surrounding death, burial, and mourning—create tangible effects in higher spiritual realms. Understanding this system is essential for comprehending how the text conceptualizes the soul's journey after death and the efficacy of mourning practices.

The term "sefirot" derives from the Hebrew root s-p-r, connected to concepts of counting, telling, or recounting. This etymology reflects their function as discrete, enumerable manifestations of divine attributes that bridge the gap between the infinite, unknowable divine essence (Ein Sof) and the finite created world. As Aaron Berechia repeatedly emphasizes throughout Ma'avar Yabok, the sefirot constitute a complex divine system that humans can influence through properly performed rituals with appropriate intentions (kavvanot).

In kabbalistic thought, and particularly in Ma'avar Yabok, the sefirot are organized in a hierarchical structure often depicted as a tree or as a human form (sometimes called Adam Kadmon, or Primordial Man). This anthropomorphic representation is significant, as it establishes a direct correspondence between human actions in the physical world and their effects on the divine "body" composed of sefirot. When Ma'avar Yabok discusses ritual washing of the deceased's body, for instance, it simultaneously references the purification of corresponding aspects of the divine structure.

The sefirotic system represents a delicate balance of forces—particularly between judgment (din) and mercy (rachamim)—that requires constant maintenance through human ritual action. Death, in this framework, represents not merely a biological cessation but a cosmic event that disrupts this balance. The extensive rituals outlined in Ma'avar Yabok for handling the deceased and comforting mourners serve to restore cosmic equilibrium while facilitating the soul's transition through various spiritual realms that correspond to different sefirot.

What makes Ma'avar Yabok particularly significant is its practical application of this mystical framework to concrete ritual actions. Aaron Berechia repeatedly emphasizes that physical actions performed with proper intention directly affect specific sefirot, creating effects that ripple through the entire divine system. A mourner tearing their garment, for example, is not merely expressing grief but performing an action that, when done with proper intention, helps release the soul from the "feminine realm" (associated with the sefirah of Malkhut) to higher sefirotic levels. This practical integration of mystical concepts into everyday ritual represents the pinnacle of applied Kabbalah in early modern Italian Jewish communities.

The intellectual triad: Keter, Chokhmah, Binah

The uppermost three sefirot—often called the "intellectual triad" or "supernal triad"—represent the highest and most abstract divine attributes in the sefirotic system. In Ma'avar Yabok, these three sefirot play crucial roles in the soul's journey after death, though they remain somewhat removed from everyday ritual practice due to their transcendent nature.

Keter (Crown) stands at the apex of the sefirotic tree, representing the divine will that precedes all manifestation. Aaron Berechia frequently refers to it using terms like "Ancient One" (Atik Yomin), "White Head" (Reisha Chivra), or "Supernal Crown" (Keter Elyon). As the closest sefirah to the infinite Ein Sof, Keter transcends ordinary human comprehension and is rarely accessed directly through ritual. However, in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly difficult cases—souls burdened by the most severe transgressions—require correction that reaches to the level of Keter. The text describes how certain deathbed confessions and funeral prayers performed with specific kavvanot (mystical intentions) can activate "the concealed holy White Skull" (Gulgalta Chivra Kadisha Stima), a reference to an aspect of Keter, to provide the most powerful spiritual remedy possible.

Chokhmah (Wisdom) represents the first flash of divine creative insight, the primordial point from which all subsequent creation unfolds. In Ma'avar Yabok, Chokhmah is often associated with the "light of the Ancient One" (nehiru d'Atika) and the Father principle. The text describes how souls of the most accomplished Torah scholars ascend after death to draw sustenance from this exalted level. Chokhmah also relates to the "hidden light" (or ganuz) stored within the letters of Torah and prayer texts, which explains why Ma'avar Yabok places such emphasis on reciting specific biblical verses during deathbed and funeral rituals—each verse contains a spark of this primordial light that aids the soul's ascent.

Binah (Understanding) represents the divine womb where Chokhmah's seed-like insight expands into comprehensible form. Aaron Berechia frequently refers to it as "Supernal Mother" (Imma Ila'ah) or "Upper Eden." In the context of death rituals, Binah plays a particularly important role as the source of "thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil" (thirteen channels of divine mercy) that purify the ascending soul. Ma'avar Yabok describes how the soul must be immersed in these rivers before entering the Garden of Eden. The text explicitly connects several funeral customs to Binah, including the washing of hands after a funeral (symbolizing purification in these rivers) and the seven-day mourning period (corresponding to the "seven chambers of Binah" through which the soul ascends).

The intellectual triad collectively serves as the source of divine mercy that tempers judgment during the soul's posthumous journey. Ma'avar Yabok explains that while the lower sefirot (particularly Gevurah) administer judgment to the deceased soul, the intellectual triad—especially Binah—provides the divine compassion needed to mitigate this severity. This helps explain the text's frequent emphasis on "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim), a technical kabbalistic term for transforming harsh divine judgment into mercy through proper ritual action that activates these higher sefirot.

One of the most important functions of the intellectual triad in Ma'avar Yabok is its role in the process of "death by divine kiss" (mitah bi-neshikah). Reserved for the most righteous individuals, this exalted form of death involves the soul being drawn upward by the intellectual triad rather than being forcibly extracted by the Angel of Death. The text describes this as the neshamah (highest soul level) being "kissed" by the divine and drawn to the "concealed Eden" associated with the intellectual triad. The deathbed recitation of the Shema prayer with proper kavvanah is described as facilitating this process, explaining why Ma'avar Yabok places such emphasis on this practice.

The emotional sefirot: Chesed to Yesod

The six sefirot positioned between the intellectual triad and Malkhut are often referred to as the "emotional sefirot" or "six extremities" (sheshet ketzavot). In Ma'avar Yabok, these intermediate sefirot play crucial roles in the soul's journey after death and in the efficacy of mourning rituals. They are frequently associated with the divine configuration known as Zeir Anpin (the "Small Face" or "Impatient One"), representing God's more immediate and accessible presence in creation compared to the transcendent intellectual triad.

Chesed (Loving-kindness), the fourth sefirah, embodies divine benevolence, expansion, and unconditional giving. In Ma'avar Yabok, Chesed is frequently associated with Abraham and with the "right arm" of the divine structure. This sefirah serves as the primary source of mercy that counterbalances the severity of divine judgment at death. Aaron Berechia explains that funeral practices like washing the body and providing clean shrouds specifically activate Chesed, ensuring that the deceased receives divine mercy during judgment. The text also associates Chesed with morning hours, explaining why confession (vidui) and prayers for the ill are particularly effective during this time, when "the gates of loving-kindness open."

Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), the fifth sefirah, represents divine restriction, limitation, and judgment. Associated with Isaac and the "left arm" of the divine structure, Gevurah is the primary source of din (judgment) that the soul faces after death. In Ma'avar Yabok, Gevurah is personified by the Angel of Death and the various "agents of judgment" (shlukhei ha-din) that examine the soul. However, Aaron Berechia is careful to present this judgment not as punitive but as a necessary purifying process. The text describes how various mourning practices—particularly the recitation of Tzidduk Ha-Din (Justification of the Divine Judgment)—serve to "sweeten" or transform the harsh aspects of Gevurah into constructive spiritual purification.

Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the sixth sefirah, represents the perfect balance between Chesed's expansion and Gevurah's contraction. Associated with Jacob and the "torso" of the divine structure, Tiferet serves as a central mediating force in the sefirotic system. In Ma'avar Yabok, Tiferet plays a crucial role in the soul's journey after death, particularly for the ruach (middle level of the soul), which ascends to this sefirah. The text associates Tiferet with the "lower Garden of Eden" where righteous souls dwell after death, and with various ritual objects including the prayer shawl (tallit) placed on the deceased. Aaron Berechia explains that funeral prayers specifically directed toward Tiferet help unite it with Malkhut (Kingdom), facilitating the soul's ascent.

Netzach (Victory/Eternity) and Hod (Splendor/Glory), the seventh and eighth sefirot, function as a pair representing the extension of Chesed and Gevurah into more concrete manifestation. Associated with Moses and Aaron respectively, and with the "right and left legs" of the divine structure, these sefirot govern the prophetic transmission of divine will. In Ma'avar Yabok, Netzach and Hod play important roles in funeral rituals, particularly in the seven circuits (hakafot) performed around the deceased's bier. The text explains that these circuits activate Netzach and Hod, helping to "break the shells" (klipot) that might impede the soul's ascent.

Yesod (Foundation), the ninth sefirah, channels the combined energies of the higher sefirot into Malkhut. Associated with Joseph and the "phallus" of the divine structure, Yesod represents the cosmic conduit of divine blessing and the principle of union. In Ma'avar Yabok, Yesod plays a critical role in death rituals, particularly through the recitation of Psalm 91 ("Song of Afflictions"), which Aaron Berechia identifies as especially effective for activating this sefirah. The text explains that proper burial practices create a cosmic "union" (zivug) between Yesod and Malkhut, generating spiritual sustenance for the departed soul. This divine union is one reason why Ma'avar Yabok places such emphasis on gender separation during funeral processions—human separation paradoxically facilitates cosmic union between these masculine and feminine divine principles.

Together, these six emotional sefirot form what Ma'avar Yabok calls the "central column" (amuda d'emtza'ita) of the divine structure. The text repeatedly emphasizes how proper death rituals create balanced flow through this central column, ensuring that the soul's judgment (via Gevurah) is tempered by mercy (via Chesed) and harmonized through Tiferet. This balanced flow explains the careful structure of funeral prayers outlined in the text, which alternate between themes of judgment and mercy to maintain cosmic equilibrium.

Malkhut: the divine feminine

Malkhut (Kingdom), the tenth and final sefirah, occupies a unique position in the sefirotic system and plays an especially significant role in Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of death and the afterlife. Frequently referred to as the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), Knesset Yisrael (Community of Israel), or the "divine feminine," Malkhut serves as the meeting point between the divine and earthly realms. Unlike the higher sefirot that remain transcendent, Malkhut directly interfaces with our physical world, making it the primary focus of most ritual actions described in Ma'avar Yabok.

Aaron Berechia frequently associates Malkhut with what he terms the "feminine realm" (alma de-nukba), a cosmic domain characterized by limitation, judgment, and physicality. This association establishes a fundamental principle throughout Ma'avar Yabok—that death represents a transition from the "feminine realm" of Malkhut to the "masculine realm" (alma de-dekhura) associated with the higher sefirot, particularly Tiferet. The text presents numerous funeral and mourning rituals as mechanisms to facilitate this transition, helping the soul ascend from Malkhut to higher sefirotic levels.

Malkhut's relationship to death in Ma'avar Yabok operates through several key principles. First, Malkhut serves as the primary realm of judgment (din) that the soul encounters after death. While Gevurah (the fifth sefirah) is the ultimate source of judgment, this judgment manifests primarily through Malkhut. Aaron Berechia describes how Malkhut contains "courts of judgment" where the departed soul faces evaluation of its deeds. The text explains that funeral rituals like Tzidduk Ha-Din (Justification of Divine Judgment) specifically address these courts, acknowledging their authority while simultaneously appealing to higher sefirot for mercy.

Second, Malkhut is portrayed as the realm where the nefesh (lowest level of the soul) remains after death. While the higher soul components (ruach and neshamah) ascend to higher sefirot, the nefesh typically remains connected to Malkhut, often dwelling near the grave. This explains Ma'avar Yabok's detailed instructions for proper grave maintenance and cemetery visits—these actions directly affect the nefesh in Malkhut. The text describes how reciting psalms and prayers at gravesites provides "nourishment" for the nefesh in Malkhut, which in turn benefits the higher soul components.

Third, Ma'avar Yabok presents Malkhut as experiencing "exile" (galut) when separated from the higher sefirot, particularly Tiferet. This separation intensifies at the moment of death, creating a cosmic disruption that funeral rituals aim to repair. The text explains that properly performed burial and mourning practices help "reunite" Malkhut with Tiferet, facilitating not only the soul's ascent but also a cosmic restoration. This restoration is described using technical kabbalistic terminology as a "unification" (yichud) between "the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence" (kudsha brikh hu u-shekhintei).

Fourth, Malkhut is associated with specific times and days that have particular significance for death rituals. Aaron Berechia explains that Friday afternoon and the eve of the new moon are times when Malkhut is most receptive to divine influence, making these optimal times for prayers benefiting the deceased. Conversely, the text warns that at other times—particularly Saturday night—Malkhut is more vulnerable to negative forces, requiring additional protective measures during funeral preparations.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok presents Malkhut as the sefirah most directly affected by human ritual actions. Throughout the text, Aaron Berechia emphasizes that specific actions—from washing the deceased's body to reciting psalms to observing seven days of mourning—create tangible effects within Malkhut that reverberate throughout the entire sefirotic system. This principle establishes the theological basis for the extensive ritual practices detailed in the text, presenting them not merely as comforting customs but as cosmically efficacious actions with direct impact on divine realms.

The text also establishes a complex relationship between Malkhut and the concept of death impurity (tum'at met). Aaron Berechia explains that death creates a temporary withdrawal of divine light from Malkhut, allowing negative forces to enter this realm. Funeral rituals—particularly purification of the body and recitation of protective psalms—help restore this divine light to Malkhut, driving away the forces of impurity. This restoration explains the text's emphasis on prompt burial and proper tahara (ritual washing) procedures.

Finally, Ma'avar Yabok presents Malkhut as the primary "gateway" through which souls enter higher spiritual realms after death. Using Jacob's biblical crossing of the Yabok River as a metaphor (hence the book's title), Aaron Berechia describes how souls must "cross over" from Malkhut to higher sefirot. This crossing requires "toll payments" in the form of good deeds performed during life or posthumous merit generated through charity and Torah study performed by survivors. The text explains that funeral and mourning rituals help "open the gates" of Malkhut, allowing the soul to ascend more easily to higher sefirot.

Sefirotic map of the human body and soul

A central principle throughout Ma'avar Yabok is the correspondence between the sefirotic structure and both the human body and the multi-layered human soul. This correspondence establishes a conceptual framework that makes the abstract sefirotic system tangible and applicable to physical death rituals. Aaron Berechia repeatedly emphasizes that physical actions performed on the deceased's body have direct parallels in the divine realm, affecting the soul's journey through the sefirot.

The text presents the human body as a microcosm of the divine sefirotic structure, with each body part corresponding to a specific sefirah. This correspondence appears most explicitly in the detailed instructions for the tahara (ritual washing) of the deceased, where Aaron Berechia prescribes specific biblical verses to be recited when washing each body part, based on its sefirotic correspondence. For example:

- The head corresponds to the intellectual triad (Keter, Chokhmah, and Binah), which is why the text prescribes verses from Song of Songs 5:11 ("His head is finest gold") when washing this area.

- The right arm corresponds to Chesed (Loving-kindness), requiring verses about Abraham (the patriarch associated with this sefirah) during washing.

- The left arm corresponds to Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), requiring verses about Isaac and divine power during washing.

- The torso corresponds to Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), requiring verses from Song of Songs 5:14 ("His body is polished ivory") during washing.

- The reproductive organs correspond to Yesod (Foundation), requiring verses about Joseph (the patriarch associated with this sefirah) during washing.

- The legs correspond to Netzach and Hod (Victory and Splendor), requiring verses about divine support and stability during washing.

- The feet correspond to Malkhut (Kingdom), requiring verses from Song of Songs 5:15 ("His legs are columns of marble") during washing.

This body-sefirot correspondence explains why Ma'avar Yabok places such emphasis on proper handling of the deceased's body. Actions performed on each body part directly affect the corresponding sefirah, influencing the soul's journey through the divine realms. The text warns that improper handling of the body—particularly leaving body parts uncovered or improperly washed—can impede the soul's ascent through the corresponding sefirot.

Equally important is the correspondence between the sefirot and the structure of the human soul. Ma'avar Yabok presents a complex model of the soul divided into multiple levels, each associated with different sefirot and experiencing distinct posthumous journeys:

- Nefesh (the vital soul): Associated primarily with Malkhut, the nefesh is the lowest soul level that remains most connected to the physical body. After death, the nefesh typically remains near the grave for a period, which explains the importance of proper burial practices and cemetery visits. Aaron Berechia describes how the nefesh gradually ascends through the "seven chambers of Malkhut" during the seven days of mourning (shivah), explaining the cosmic significance of this mourning period.

- Ruach (the spirit): Associated primarily with the six emotional sefirot (particularly Tiferet), the ruach is the intermediate soul level that ascends to what the text calls the "Lower Garden of Eden" after completing its purification. Ma'avar Yabok explains that the ruach undergoes judgment primarily through these six sefirot, with the balance between Chesed (mercy) and Gevurah (judgment) determining its experience. The text details how specific prayers and rituals during the thirty days after death (shloshim) help the ruach navigate these sefirot.

- Neshamah (the higher soul): Associated primarily with the intellectual triad (Keter, Chokhmah, and Binah), the neshamah is the highest soul level that potentially ascends to what the text calls the "Upper Garden of Eden." Aaron Berechia explains that only the most righteous individuals' neshamot reach this exalted level, while most experience some form of purification before ascending. The text describes rituals performed during the first year after death as particularly beneficial for the neshamah's ascent through these highest sefirot.

Ma'avar Yabok also mentions two additional, more rarified soul levels—Chayah and Yechidah—associated with the highest aspects of Keter, but these remain somewhat abstract in the text's practical focus on death rituals.

This soul-sefirot correspondence explains the careful timing of mourning practices outlined in Ma'avar Yabok. The initial seven days (shivah) primarily benefit the nefesh in Malkhut; the thirty days (shloshim) primarily benefit the ruach in the emotional sefirot; and the full year of mourning primarily benefits the neshamah in the intellectual triad. The text explains that each mourning period creates specific effects in its corresponding sefirot, facilitating the associated soul level's journey.

Perhaps most significant is how Ma'avar Yabok connects specific ritual objects with sefirotic correspondences and soul levels. For example:

- The shrouds (tachrichim) correspond to Malkhut and benefit the nefesh.

- The tallit (prayer shawl) placed on the deceased corresponds to Tiferet and benefits the ruach.

- The atara (crown) sometimes placed on the deceased's head corresponds to the intellectual triad and benefits the neshamah.

This correspondence between physical objects, soul levels, and sefirot creates a comprehensive system where ritual actions in the physical world directly impact the soul's journey through the divine realms. By understanding these correspondences, those performing death rituals can ensure they are providing optimal spiritual assistance to the deceased at every level of soul and sefirah.

Masculine and feminine realms

One of the most distinctive features of Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic framework is its consistent use of gendered terminology to describe cosmic domains and processes. Throughout the text, Aaron Berechia employs the technical kabbalistic terms "masculine realm" (alma de-dekhura) and "feminine realm" (alma de-nukba) to explain the soul's journey after death and the cosmic effects of mourning rituals. Understanding this gendered conceptual framework is essential for comprehending the text's approach to death and afterlife.

In the kabbalistic system presented in Ma'avar Yabok, the ten sefirot are organized into masculine and feminine domains. The upper nine sefirot, from Keter through Yesod, are collectively associated with the "masculine realm," while the tenth sefirah, Malkhut, constitutes the "feminine realm." This division reflects fundamental kabbalistic principles about divine energy flow, with the masculine realm characterized by active giving and the feminine realm by receptive containment.

Death, in this framework, represents a transition from the feminine realm (Malkhut) to the masculine realm (the higher sefirot). Aaron Berechia explains that during life, the soul is primarily bound to the feminine realm through its physical embodiment. At death, the soul must ascend from this realm to the masculine realm—a process the text compares to Jacob's biblical crossing of the Yabok River (hence the book's title). This transition forms the theological basis for the extensive ritual actions described in Ma'avar Yabok, which aim to facilitate this cosmic crossing.

Several key principles govern the relationship between these gendered realms in the context of death and mourning:

First, Ma'avar Yabok presents the feminine realm (Malkhut) as the primary domain of judgment (din), while the masculine realm (particularly Tiferet) serves as the source of mercy (rachamim). This explains why the text places such emphasis on "elevating" the soul from Malkhut to higher sefirot—this elevation represents a transition from judgment to mercy. Funeral prayers and rituals specifically aim to facilitate this elevation, helping the soul ascend from the "strict justice" of the feminine realm to the "compassionate judgment" of the masculine realm.

Second, the text describes these realms as normally united during life but temporarily separated at death. This separation creates a cosmic imbalance that funeral and mourning rituals aim to repair. Aaron Berechia explains that properly performed death rituals help "reunite" the masculine and feminine realms, described in technical kabbalistic terminology as the "unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence" (yichuda de-kudsha brikh hu u-shekhintei). This unification benefits both the deceased's soul and the broader cosmic order.

Third, Ma'avar Yabok presents mourners as temporarily situated in the feminine realm (alma de-nukba) during the mourning period. This explains various mourning restrictions, including the prohibition against wearing tefillin during the initial days of mourning. Aaron Berechia explains that tefillin represent the masculine realm, and mourners—temporarily bound to the feminine realm—cannot properly integrate this masculine energy until their mourning period progresses. The gradual relaxation of mourning restrictions represents the mourner's reintegration of masculine and feminine energies.

Fourth, the text establishes a complex relationship between physical gender and cosmic gender in death rituals. While all human souls, regardless of physical gender, must transition from the feminine to masculine realm after death, Ma'avar Yabok provides some gender-specific instructions for death rituals. For example, it prescribes distinct confessional formulas for men and women, with women's confessions placing special emphasis on the three commandments traditionally associated with them: challah (dough separation), niddah (menstrual purity), and hadlakat nerot (candle lighting). The text explains that these gender-specific practices help each soul navigate its unique path through the masculine and feminine cosmic realms.

Perhaps most significant is how Ma'avar Yabok employs marriage metaphors to describe the relationship between masculine and feminine realms in the afterlife. Aaron Berechia describes the soul's posthumous ascent as a form of "spiritual marriage" between the individual soul and its divine source. For the righteous, this cosmic reunion is described as a "wedding feast" (hillula) in the upper worlds. This marriage metaphor explains why the text places such emphasis on proper burial shrouds, comparing them to wedding garments that prepare the soul for its divine union.

The text also establishes a theological justification for gender separation during funeral rituals based on these cosmic gender principles. Aaron Berechia explains that mixing men and women during funerals can strengthen negative forces by creating improper "unions" between masculine and feminine energies. Conversely, proper gender separation during funerals facilitates the appropriate cosmic union between masculine and feminine divine realms, benefiting the deceased's soul. This explanation transforms what might appear as a social custom into a cosmically significant practice with direct impact on the soul's journey.

Tiferet and Malkhut: central sefirot in death rituals

While all ten sefirot play important roles in Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of death and the afterlife, two sefirot—Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) and Malkhut (Kingdom)—emerge as particularly central to the death rituals described in the text. Their relationship forms a crucial axis around which much of the kabbalistic framework revolves, with numerous ritual actions specifically designed to affect these two sefirot and their interaction.

Tiferet, the sixth sefirah, occupies the central position in the sefirotic tree, balancing the right column of mercy (anchored by Chesed) with the left column of judgment (anchored by Gevurah). In Ma'avar Yabok, Tiferet is frequently associated with Jacob, with the divine name YHVH (the Tetragrammaton), and with the "torso" of the divine structure. Most significantly, Tiferet is identified as the primary destination for the ruach (middle level of the soul) after death and is associated with the "Lower Garden of Eden" where righteous souls dwell.

Malkhut, the tenth and lowest sefirah, serves as the divine interface with our physical world and is associated with the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). In Ma'avar Yabok, Malkhut is frequently identified with King David, with the divine name Adonai, and with the "feminine realm" (alma de-nukba). The text presents Malkhut as the primary residence of the nefesh (lowest level of the soul) after death and associates it with the grave and its vicinity.

The relationship between Tiferet and Malkhut is portrayed in Ma'avar Yabok through several key dynamics:

First, Tiferet and Malkhut are presented as the primary channels through which divine energy flows to sustain both the living and the dead. Aaron Berechia describes how proper death rituals create a balanced flow from Tiferet to Malkhut, ensuring that the deceased's soul receives spiritual sustenance. This flow is particularly important during the initial stages after death, explaining why the text places such emphasis on immediate post-mortem rituals.

Second, the text presents Tiferet and Malkhut as cosmic "husband and wife" whose proper union generates blessing for all worlds. Death temporarily disrupts this union, creating a cosmic imbalance. Funeral and mourning rituals aim to restore this union, described in technical kabbalistic terminology as a "supernal union" (zivuga ila'ah). The text explains that this restoration benefits not only the deceased but the entire cosmic order, elevating these rituals beyond mere social customs to cosmic imperatives.

Third, Ma'avar Yabok associates specific funeral prayers and rituals with Tiferet and Malkhut. The Kaddish prayer, recited by mourners, is explicitly identified as creating a union between these sefirot. The text explains that when mourners recite "May His great Name be blessed forever and ever," they specifically activate the flow from Tiferet to Malkhut. Similarly, the seven circuits (hakafot) performed around the deceased's bier are described as creating pathways between these sefirot.

Fourth, Aaron Berechia presents Tiferet and Malkhut as the primary sefirot affected by the ritual washing of the deceased (tahara). The text provides detailed instructions for this ritual, explaining that water poured over the body symbolizes the flow of divine energy from Tiferet to Malkhut. This explains why precisely nine measures (kav) of water should be used—this quantity corresponds to the nine sefirot from Keter to Yesod that channel energy into Malkhut.

Fifth, the text associates specific ritual objects with Tiferet and Malkhut, establishing a material basis for affecting these sefirot. The tallit (prayer shawl) placed on the deceased is associated with Tiferet, while the earth used in burial corresponds to Malkhut. Aaron Berechia explains that wrapping the deceased in a tallit before burial symbolically unites Tiferet and Malkhut, facilitating the soul's ascent.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok presents death as a transition from Malkhut to Tiferet—from the "feminine realm" to the "masculine realm." The text explains that during life, the soul is primarily bound to Malkhut through its physical embodiment. At death, the soul must ascend to Tiferet and beyond, a process facilitated by proper funeral and mourning rituals. This ascent represents not an abandonment of Malkhut but a restoration of proper flow between these sefirot, benefiting both the individual soul and the cosmic order.

The text also establishes specific times when the relationship between Tiferet and Malkhut is particularly potent for death rituals. The Sabbath is identified as a time when these sefirot are naturally united, explaining why prayers for the deceased are especially effective on this day. Conversely, Saturday night is described as a time when these sefirot temporarily separate, requiring additional protective measures during funeral preparations.

This central focus on Tiferet and Malkhut explains many practical aspects of the death rituals prescribed in Ma'avar Yabok, from the timing of prayers to the washing procedures to the recitation of specific psalms. By understanding how these rituals affect these two crucial sefirot, practitioners can ensure optimal spiritual assistance for the deceased's soul in its posthumous journey.

Sweetening judgments

A central theological concept that appears repeatedly throughout Ma'avar Yabok is "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim or bisum ha-dinim), a technical kabbalistic term for transforming harsh divine judgment into merciful correction through proper ritual action. This concept provides the theological foundation for many death rituals described in the text and offers insight into how the sefirotic system functions during the soul's posthumous journey.

In the kabbalistic framework presented in Ma'avar Yabok, judgment (din) originates primarily in the sefirah of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), the fifth sefirah associated with restriction, limitation, and severity. While necessary for cosmic order, judgment unchecked by mercy can become destructive. Death represents a moment when judgment potentially intensifies, as the soul faces divine evaluation of its earthly deeds. Aaron Berechia explains that funeral and mourning rituals aim to "sweeten" this judgment by activating Chesed (Loving-kindness), the sefirah of divine mercy that balances Gevurah.

Several key principles govern this process of sweetening judgments in the context of death rituals. First, Ma'avar Yabok presents judgment not as punitive but as purificatory. Aaron Berechia repeatedly emphasizes that divine judgment after death aims not to punish the soul but to purify it for ascent to higher realms. The text compares this process to the refinement of metals, where fire removes impurities rather than destroying the precious material. This purificatory understanding explains why the text describes even difficult posthumous experiences like Chibut Ha-Kever (the Beating of the Grave) as ultimately beneficial for the soul.

Second, the text explains that sweetening judgments requires creating proper balance between the "right side" (associated with Chesed) and the "left side" (associated with Gevurah) of the sefirotic structure. Aaron Berechia describes specific prayers and rituals designed to activate this balance. For example, the Tzidduk Ha-Din prayer (Justification of Divine Judgment) recited at funerals is described as simultaneously acknowledging the justice of God's judgment (activating Gevurah) while appealing to divine mercy (activating Chesed). This balanced approach "sweetens" judgment by integrating it with mercy.

Third, Ma'avar Yabok presents specific divine names as tools for sweetening judgments. The text explains that reciting combinations of the names YHVH (associated with mercy) and Elohim (associated with judgment) creates cosmic effects that transform severe judgment into compassionate correction. Aaron Berechia provides detailed instructions for these recitations, including specific vowel patterns (nikudot) that enhance their efficacy. This explains the text's emphasis on proper pronunciation and intention (kavvanah) during funeral prayers.

Fourth, the text identifies specific ritual actions that sweeten judgments through their sefirotic effects. Charitable giving (tzedakah) in memory of the deceased is presented as particularly effective, as it activates Chesed to balance Gevurah. Similarly, the seven circuits (hakafot) around the deceased's bier are described as creating pathways for divine mercy to flow into judgment, sweetening its severity. Water used in washing the deceased symbolizes the "waters of loving-kindness" from Chesed flowing into the "fires of judgment" from Gevurah, creating balanced purification.

Fifth, Aaron Berechia describes how different levels of transgression require different approaches to sweetening judgments. For unintentional sins (shogeg), activation of Chesed within Yesod is sufficient. For intentional sins (mezid), Chesed from "the right side" must be invoked. For rebellious transgressions (pesha), sweetening must come from the highest level—"the concealed holy White Skull" (Gulgalta Chivra Kadisha Stima), an aspect of Keter. This graduated approach explains the multiple layers of prayers and rituals prescribed in the text, ensuring comprehensive spiritual assistance for all souls regardless of their condition.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that the efficacy of sweetening judgments depends not only on the ritual actions themselves but on the intentions (kavvanot) of those performing them. Aaron Berechia repeatedly stresses that funeral prayers and rituals must be performed with specific mental focus on the sefirotic processes they aim to activate. The text provides detailed guidance for these kavvanot, explaining, for example, that when reciting certain psalms, one should visualize divine light flowing from Chesed to Gevurah, transforming judgment into mercy.

This concept of sweetening judgments transcends the individual soul's journey to address cosmic restoration. Ma'avar Yabok explains that death creates a temporary cosmic imbalance, with judgment potentially dominating mercy throughout creation. By performing proper funeral and mourning rituals with appropriate kavvanot, practitioners help restore cosmic balance between these divine forces, benefiting not only the deceased but all worlds. This cosmic dimension elevates death rituals from mere personal comfort to universal significance.

Aaron Berechia also establishes specific times when sweetening judgments is particularly effective or necessary. Morning hours are associated with Chesed, making them optimal for prayers that aim to sweeten judgments. Conversely, afternoon hours relate to Gevurah, requiring additional emphasis on merciful intentions during funeral rituals performed at this time. This temporal dimension explains the text's detailed instructions regarding the timing of various death rituals.

Unifications and divine names

At the heart of Ma'avar Yabok's kabbalistic system lies the concept of "unifications" (yichudim), technical mystical processes through which properly performed rituals create cosmic effects by uniting different aspects of divinity. Understanding these unifications and their relationship to divine names provides insight into how Aaron Berechia conceives the efficacy of death rituals within the sefirotic framework.

The term "unification" in Ma'avar Yabok refers primarily to the mystical joining of different divine names, attributes, or sefirot that have become temporarily separated. Death represents a moment of cosmic separation—particularly between the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, or between the higher and lower sefirot. Funeral and mourning rituals aim to restore these cosmic connections, creating "unifications" that benefit both the deceased's soul and the broader cosmic order.

The text presents several key types of unifications particularly relevant to death rituals. The most fundamental unification mentioned throughout Ma'avar Yabok is the joining of "the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence" (kudsha brikh hu u-shekhintei). This technical phrase refers to the unification of Tiferet (representing the masculine divine aspect) with Malkhut (representing the feminine divine aspect). Aaron Berechia explains that this unification is temporarily disrupted at death but can be restored through proper funeral rituals. This restoration facilitates the soul's ascent while strengthening divine presence in the world.

A second crucial unification involves joining the divine names YHVH (the Tetragrammaton, associated with mercy) and Adonai (associated with judgment). Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed instructions for visualizing these names interwoven during certain prayers, explaining that this mental unification transforms harsh judgment into merciful correction. The text even prescribes specific letter patterns and vowel points for these visualizations, establishing a precise technical system for their efficacy.

A third type of unification connects the "upper unification" (yichuda ila'ah) involving the intellectual sefirot with the "lower unification" (yichuda tata'ah) involving the emotional sefirot. Aaron Berechia explains that comprehensive spiritual assistance for the deceased requires activating both levels. This dual activation explains the text's prescription of both philosophical contemplation and emotional expression during funeral rituals.

The mechanism for these unifications frequently involves divine names, which Ma'avar Yabok presents as direct channels to specific sefirot. The text establishes detailed correspondences between divine names and sefirotic forces:

- The name YHVH (the Tetragrammaton) corresponds primarily to Tiferet but contains aspects of all six emotional sefirot. Different vowel patterns (nikudot) for this name activate different sefirotic combinations.

- The name Adonai corresponds primarily to Malkhut and represents divine presence in the physical world.

- The name Ehyeh ("I Will Be") corresponds to the intellectual triad, particularly Keter and Binah.

- The name Elohim corresponds primarily to Gevurah and represents divine judgment.

The 42-letter divine name (often referenced by its first word, "Ana Bekoach") is particularly emphasized in Ma'avar Yabok for death rituals. Aaron Berechia explains that this name, divided into seven words of six letters each, activates all seven lower sefirot from Chesed to Malkhut. The text provides detailed instructions for reciting this name during deathbed rituals and funeral prayers, explaining its efficacy for "breaking the shells" (klipot) that might impede the soul's ascent.

The numerical values of divine names also play important roles in the unifications described in Ma'avar Yabok. The text notes that the numerical value of YaBOK (יב״ק) equals 112, which corresponds to the combined values of the divine names YHVH (26), Adonai (65), and Ehyeh (21). This numerical correspondence establishes the book's title as a cosmic formula for unifying these divine names, facilitating the soul's crossing from death to eternal life.

Aaron Berechia emphasizes that effective unifications require proper intention (kavvanah) during ritual actions. The text provides detailed guidance for these kavvanot, explaining, for example, that when reciting specific psalms or verses, one should mentally focus on uniting certain divine names or sefirot. This mental dimension explains why Ma'avar Yabok places such emphasis on the spiritual preparation of those performing death rituals.

The text also establishes specific ritual objects as physical vehicles for these unifications. The tallit (prayer shawl) placed on the deceased is described as embodying the unification of YHVH and Adonai through its structure and fringes. Similarly, the shrouds (tachrichim) represent the unification of the soul with its divine source. These material correspondences explain the text's detailed instructions regarding these ritual objects.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok presents the recitation of the Shema prayer ("Hear, O Israel: The LORD our God, the LORD is One") as the ultimate unification, particularly when recited at the moment of death. Aaron Berechia provides extensive kabbalistic analysis of this prayer, explaining how its words and letters activate comprehensive unification across all sefirot. The text's emphasis on reciting Shema for the dying reflects this prayer's unique power to facilitate the soul's transition through cosmic unification.

Through these technical mechanisms of unifications and divine names, Ma'avar Yabok establishes a sophisticated mystical framework that transforms seemingly simple funeral rituals into cosmically significant actions. By understanding these mechanisms, practitioners can ensure that their ritual actions create optimal effects in the sefirotic system, providing the deceased's soul with comprehensive spiritual assistance in its posthumous journey.

The practical application of sefirotic wisdom

The sefirotic system presented in Ma'avar Yabok represents far more than abstract mystical speculation. Throughout the text, Aaron Berechia consistently demonstrates how this cosmic framework provides practical guidance for those caring for the dying, preparing the deceased, and comforting mourners. By understanding how human actions affect the sefirotic system, practitioners can ensure optimal spiritual assistance for souls transitioning from this world to the next.

Several principles govern this practical application of sefirotic wisdom in Ma'avar

Yabok:

First, the text emphasizes the profound interconnection between physical actions and cosmic effects. Simple rituals like washing the deceased's body, reciting psalms, or circumambulating the bier create tangible effects in the sefirotic system when performed with proper intention. This correspondence between physical and metaphysical realms transforms everyday ritual actions into spiritually powerful tools for aiding the deceased.

Second, Aaron Berechia presents the sefirotic system as accessible through proper intention (kavvanah) rather than reserved for mystical elites. While the text contains sophisticated kabbalistic concepts, it consistently emphasizes that ordinary Jews can activate these cosmic processes through sincere devotion and following prescribed rituals. This democratization of mystical efficacy reflects the text's practical orientation toward community needs.

Third, Ma'avar Yabok balances universal principles with individual variations in the soul's journey through the sefirot. While all souls follow similar posthumous paths through the divine realms, the text acknowledges that different individuals require different forms of spiritual assistance based on their lives and deeds. This explains the multiple layers of rituals described in the text, ensuring comprehensive coverage for all possible spiritual needs.

Fourth, the text presents death rituals not merely as comforting customs but as cosmic imperatives with universal significance. By properly facilitating the soul's journey through the sefirot, practitioners help maintain cosmic balance and divine flow that benefits all creation. This cosmic dimension elevates death rituals from mere personal concerns to universal importance.

Finally, Aaron Berechia emphasizes that proper understanding of the sefirotic system enhances rather than replaces traditional Jewish practices. Throughout Ma'avar Yabok, mystical interpretations serve to deepen appreciation for established customs rather than supersede them. This integration of Kabbalah with mainstream practice reflects the text's aim to strengthen rather than revolutionize Jewish death rituals.

The enduring value of Ma'avar Yabok lies precisely in this practical application of profound mystical wisdom to life's most challenging transition. By presenting the sefirotic system as a roadmap for the soul's journey after death, Aaron Berechia offers both spiritual comfort and practical guidance to generations of Jewish communities navigating the mysteries of mortality. The text's sophisticated yet accessible approach to death and the afterlife continues to resonate with readers seeking deeper understanding of traditional practices and their cosmic significance.

In this comprehensive integration of theoretical Kabbalah with practical ritual guidance, Ma'avar Yabok represents the pinnacle of applied Jewish mysticism—a testament to how profound cosmic wisdom can inform and elevate everyday religious practice, particularly in life's most challenging moments. By understanding the sefirotic framework that underlies the text's extensive ritual instructions, modern readers can appreciate the depth and significance of traditional Jewish approaches to death and mourning, finding in these ancient practices both practical wisdom and spiritual illumination.

Appendix B

The structure of the soul in kabbalistic thought

The Jewish conception of the soul, particularly as articulated within kabbalistic thought, presents a complex and nuanced model that extends far beyond simplistic notions of an ethereal counterpart to the physical body. In Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia of Modena provides an elaborate framework for understanding the soul's multi-layered composition, its journey through life and death, and its ultimate destiny. This appendix aims to elucidate the kabbalistic understanding of the soul's structure as presented in Ma'avar Yabok and related mystical Jewish texts, offering modern readers insight into this sophisticated system of thought that has profoundly influenced Jewish approaches to mortality, spirituality, and religious practice.

The kabbalistic conception of the soul represents one of the most developed and intricate aspects of Jewish mystical thought, evolving over centuries from biblical notions through rabbinic elaborations and reaching its most systematic articulation in medieval and early modern kabbalistic works. Within this tradition, the soul is not understood as a monolithic entity but rather as a complex, hierarchical structure of interconnected dimensions or levels, each with distinct qualities, functions, and cosmic significance. This multi-dimensional model offers a profound understanding of human consciousness, spiritual development, and the metaphysical journey of the human spirit across multiple planes of existence.

Ma'avar Yabok, composed in the early 17th century, stands as a particularly comprehensive exposition of Jewish soul doctrine, drawing upon earlier kabbalistic sources such as the Zohar, the writings of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria, and integrating them into a cohesive framework focused on end-of-life care, deathbed rituals, and the soul's posthumous journey. The text's detailed exploration of the soul's structure serves a fundamentally practical purpose: to guide those caring for the dying and deceased in performing appropriate rituals that address the specific needs of each soul component, thereby facilitating the soul's transition between worlds.

Understanding the kabbalistic model of the soul is essential for comprehending the rationale behind Jewish mourning practices, burial customs, and prayers for the dead. Each ritual element corresponds to particular aspects of the soul's structure and addresses specific spiritual needs during the complex process of separating from physical existence and transitioning to spiritual realms. Without this conceptual framework, many traditional Jewish practices surrounding death might appear as mere customs without deeper significance.

This appendix will explore the hierarchical structure of the soul as presented in Ma'avar Yabok, examining each component's nature, function, origin, and destiny. We will investigate how these soul levels interact with physical existence during life, their progressive separation during illness and death, and their divergent journeys after physical dissolution. Additionally, we will examine related concepts such as the divine image (tzelem), the indestructible luz bone, spiritual garments, and the intricate connections maintained between the souls of the living and the dead. Finally, we will consider how this sophisticated understanding of the soul informed practical ritual guidance and shaped Jewish approaches to mortality, influencing everything from daily religious observance to end-of-life care.

The five-level structure of the soul

The kabbalistic tradition, particularly as articulated in Ma'avar Yabok, presents a five-tiered model of the soul that organizes human consciousness into a hierarchical structure ranging from the most material to the most transcendent dimensions. This framework, though rooted in earlier rabbinic conceptions, received its most systematic elaboration in medieval Kabbalah and serves as the foundation for understanding the soul's complex journey through life, death, and beyond. Each level represents not merely a component of individual consciousness but also connects to corresponding planes of cosmic reality, establishing profound relationships between microcosm and macrocosm, human existence and divine order.

At the foundation of this structure lies the Nefesh (נפש), the most basic soul-level associated with vital functions, physical animation, and bodily existence. The Ruach (רוח) constitutes the intermediate level, encompassing emotional capacities, moral intuition, and social consciousness. The Neshamah (נשמה) represents the higher intellectual and spiritual dimension, connecting the individual to divine wisdom and transcendent awareness. Less frequently discussed are the two highest levels: Chayah (חיה), representing the life-force that transcends individual existence, and Yechidah (יחידה), the singular point of unity with the divine essence.

Ma'avar Yabok elaborates on this structure, noting: "The soul has five names: nefesh, ruach, neshamah, chayah, and yechidah. These correspond to the five sefirot: Malkhut, Tiferet, Binah, Chokhmah, and Keter." This correlation between soul levels and divine emanations (sefirot) reveals the kabbalistic understanding that the human soul mirrors the structure of divinity itself, with each component reflecting and connecting to a particular aspect of the cosmic order. This parallelism establishes the theological basis for understanding the soul's journey as a process of progressive reunification with its divine source.

The text further explains that these soul levels are not equally distributed among all individuals. While every human possesses the nefesh by virtue of being alive, the higher levels must be developed or earned through spiritual practice, moral refinement, and religious observance. Aaron Berechia writes: "All Israel have nefesh from the realm of holiness… but not everyone merits to have ruach, which is attained through Torah and mitzvot. Even fewer merit neshamah, which is acquired through deeper study of Torah's mysteries." This developmental model establishes spiritual practice as the mechanism for actualizing the soul's higher potentials, with each level of attainment representing a deeper connection to divine reality.

This hierarchical structure extends beyond individual spiritual development to encompass the community's collective religious rhythms. Ma'avar Yabok notes that during Sabbaths and festivals, additional soul dimensions temporarily descend to those who properly observe these sacred times: "On Sabbath, one receives an additional soul (neshamah yeteirah) from the supernal realm… on festivals, this illumination increases even further." This teaching establishes sacred time as a context for expanded consciousness, offering temporary access to higher soul dimensions that remain latent during ordinary experience.

The five-level soul structure also carries significant implications for understanding the process of death. Rather than conceiving death as the soul's abrupt departure from the body, Ma'avar Yabok presents it as a gradual unwinding of the soul's multiple layers. The author explains: "Thirty days before death, during the 'night of sealing,' parts of the soul begin to depart," followed by progressive separation of the remaining components. This understanding transforms death from a single event to an extended process requiring specific ritual support at each stage.

Understanding this five-fold structure provides essential context for comprehending Ma'avar Yabok's elaborate system of deathbed rituals, mourning practices, and afterlife conceptions. Each ritual element addresses particular soul components, facilitating their proper transition between realms. With this foundation established, we can examine each soul level in greater detail, exploring its nature, function, and destiny within the kabbalistic worldview.

The Nefesh: vital soul

The Nefesh (נפש) constitutes the most fundamental level of the soul, serving as the animating principle that vitalizes the physical body and grounds consciousness in material existence. In Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia describes the nefesh as "the lower soul that is clothed within the blood," drawing on the biblical association between nefesh and blood expressed in Leviticus 17:11: "For the life (nefesh) of the flesh is in the blood." This connection to blood and bodily functions establishes the nefesh as the soul dimension most intimately intertwined with physical existence, mediating between material and spiritual realms.

Ma'avar Yabok elaborates on the nefesh's composition, explaining that it comprises two primary powers: "The 'breath of the bones' (havla d'garmi), which is the natural heat that remains even after death, and the 'distress of the flesh' (atzvona d'bishrah), which is the sensing soul that experiences pain from decomposition." This bipartite structure reveals the nefesh's complex role spanning life and death, maintaining connection to the physical vessel even as other soul dimensions depart.

The nefesh serves as the foundation for basic consciousness, governing instinctual drives, physical sensations, and the automatic processes necessary for bodily maintenance. As the lowest soul level in the kabbalistic hierarchy, it corresponds to the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom), the final sefirah that manifests divine energy in the material world. This correspondence reflects the nefesh's function as the interface between spiritual and physical reality, translating higher soul impulses into concrete action within the body.

Unlike the higher soul levels, the nefesh maintains a profound connection to the physical body even after death. Ma'avar Yabok states: "After death, the nefesh remains near the grave, hovering near the body and experiencing the process of physical decomposition." This ongoing attachment explains numerous Jewish burial customs aimed at providing comfort to the nefesh during this difficult transition. Proper burial in the earth, specific shroud materials, and the recitation of particular verses during funeral proceedings all serve to ease the nefesh's experience as it witnesses its former vessel's dissolution.

The text provides detailed information about the nefesh's post-mortem journey: "For the first three days after death, the nefesh remains near the body, hoping it might return… for seven days it travels between the grave and the house… for thirty days it ascends and descends between earth and heaven." This precisely calibrated timeline corresponds directly to Jewish mourning periods, with the most intense mourning practices (shiva) aligning with the nefesh's most acute period of transition.

The nefesh's connection to the grave explains why visitation of burial sites holds special significance in Jewish tradition. Ma'avar Yabok notes that when the living visit graves and pray there, "the nefesh of the deceased rejoices and ascends to inform the ruach, which then informs the neshamah, creating a chain of positive influence through all soul dimensions." This teaching establishes cemetery visits as not merely commemorative but actively beneficial for the deceased's spiritual welfare.

Though the nefesh represents the soul's most basic level, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes its sanctity and significance. The text warns against certain burial practices that might disturb the nefesh's transition and prescribes specific prayers to assist its journey. The book's extensive treatment of proper burial procedures—from washing rituals to specific shroud preparations—primarily addresses the nefesh's needs during its gradual separation from physical existence.

The nefesh's inherent connection to the material realm makes it particularly vulnerable to spiritual impurity (tumah). Aaron Berechia explains that improper conduct during life "creates blemishes that adhere to the nefesh," necessitating purification through physical suffering during illness and spiritual cleansing after death. This vulnerability informs the text's emphasis on deathbed confession (vidui) as a means of purifying the nefesh before its departure, preventing prolonged suffering in posthumous realms.

Despite its attachment to the physical body, the nefesh ultimately seeks elevation to higher spiritual levels. Ma'avar Yabok describes how, after twelve months, "the purified nefesh ascends from the grave to the 'Court of Death,' where it begins its gradual ascent toward reunification with the higher soul dimensions." This upward trajectory establishes death not as the soul's final state but as a transitional process leading toward eventual reintegration and cosmic harmony.

The nefesh's journey illuminates the profound significance of Jewish mourning customs, transforming seemingly arbitrary time periods and ritual practices into meaningful accompaniment for the soul's complex transition. Understanding the nefesh's nature and posthumous experience provides essential context for comprehending Aaron Berechia's practical guidance for those attending to the deceased and mourning their passing.

The Ruach: emotional and moral soul

The Ruach (רוח), constituting the intermediate level of the soul's five-tiered structure, functions primarily as the seat of emotional experience, moral discernment, and interpersonal consciousness. Ma'avar Yabok describes the ruach as "dwelling in the heart," reflecting its association with emotional life and ethical awareness. This placement between the more physical nefesh and the more transcendent neshamah positions the ruach as a mediating force that integrates bodily impulses with higher spiritual aspirations, transforming abstract principles into lived experience.

In the kabbalistic schema presented in Ma'avar Yabok, the ruach corresponds to the divine attribute of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the central sefirah that balances and integrates opposing cosmic forces. Aaron Berechia explains this correspondence: "The ruach connects to the six extremities governed by Tiferet, which is why it mediates between higher and lower realms." This cosmic parallelism reveals the ruach's function as an integrative force within human consciousness, harmonizing physical needs with spiritual ideals and reconciling opposing emotional impulses.

Unlike the nefesh, which every human possesses by virtue of being alive, the ruach requires development through conscious spiritual practice. Ma'avar Yabok states: "The ruach is acquired through engaging in Torah study and fulfilling the commandments with proper intention." This developmental aspect establishes the ruach as a dimension of spiritual attainment rather than an inherent human quality, explaining why individuals demonstrate varying degrees of emotional refinement and moral sensitivity based on their spiritual cultivation.

The text elaborates on the ruach's acquisition: "At education age, one begins to develop ruach by learning Torah's ways; at thirteen years, with greater responsibility, the ruach strengthens further." This progressive development aligns with traditional Jewish educational milestones and ritual coming-of-age ceremonies, suggesting that religious maturation directly correlates with the ruach's cultivation. During sleep, Ma'avar Yabok explains, "the ruach temporarily ascends to draw spiritual nourishment from higher realms," suggesting that even regular sleep cycles contribute to the ruach's ongoing development and refinement.

The ruach serves as the primary seat of moral agency, enabling individuals to distinguish between good and evil and motivating ethical action. Aaron Berechia notes that "the ruach experiences the pleasure of mitzvot and the pain of transgressions," establishing it as the soul dimension most directly engaged in religious and ethical decision-making. This moral sensitivity explains why spiritual practices aimed at character refinement (such as prayer, meditation, and ethical self-examination) primarily address the ruach's development.

After death, the ruach follows a different trajectory than the nefesh. While the nefesh remains connected to the physical body and grave, "the ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Tachton)," a spiritual realm corresponding to the World of Formation (Olam ha-Yetzirah). There, according to Ma'avar Yabok, "the ruach enjoys spiritual delights proportionate to its refinement through Torah study and mitzvot performed during life." This realm is described as filled with "rivers of pure balsam oil" where souls engage in continuing spiritual development and communion with other righteous spirits.

Despite this ascent, the ruach maintains connection with the nefesh during the transitional period after death. The text states: "During the first twelve months, the ruach descends periodically to check on the nefesh's condition, particularly during Sabbaths and festivals." This ongoing relationship explains why mourning practices intensify during sacred times, when connections between soul dimensions strengthen, potentially increasing the deceased's awareness of earthly proceedings.

The ruach's intermediate position creates a unique responsibility as a spiritual messenger. Ma'avar Yabok describes how prayers offered at gravesides activate a chain of communication: "The nefesh receives the prayers and informs the ruach, which then transmits this awareness to the neshamah." This communicative function allows the ruach to serve as a conduit between material and celestial realms, connecting the most physical and most transcendent aspects of posthumous existence.

In the lower Garden of Eden, the ruach continues its spiritual development through what the text describes as "spiritual study in heavenly academies (yeshivot shel ma'alah)." These divine study halls parallel earthly institutions of learning but focus on deeper mystical dimensions of Torah accessible only to disembodied consciousness. The ruach's experiences in these realms depend directly on the spiritual knowledge acquired during physical life, explaining the text's emphasis on Torah study as preparation for posthumous existence.

The ruach also serves as the primary vehicle for ongoing intercession on behalf of the living. Ma'avar Yabok states that "the ruach of the deceased prays for living relatives, particularly during times of distress," establishing reciprocal relationships between the living and the dead. This intercessory function provides theological justification for prayers asking the deceased to advocate before the heavenly court, a practice detailed in several cemetery prayers included in the text.

Understanding the ruach's nature and function illuminates numerous ritual practices described in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly those focusing on emotional and moral preparation for death. The text's emphasis on resolving interpersonal conflicts, cultivating proper intentions during prayer, and maintaining emotional equilibrium during illness all address the ruach's specific needs during the transition from physical to spiritual existence.

The Neshamah: divine intellect

The Neshamah (נשמה) represents the highest regularly accessible dimension of the soul's five-level structure, functioning as the seat of divine intellect, spiritual illumination, and transcendent awareness. Ma'avar Yabok describes the neshamah as "the supernal soul, portion of divinity from above," emphasizing its direct derivation from divine sources. This description reflects the biblical teaching that God "breathed into [Adam's] nostrils the breath (nishmat) of life" (Genesis 2:7), establishing the neshamah as the most explicit connection between human consciousness and divine reality.

In the kabbalistic correspondence system presented by Aaron Berechia, the neshamah aligns with the divine attribute of Binah (Understanding), the third sefirah associated with divine intellect, comprehension of abstract principles, and the capacity for contemplative insight. This correspondence illuminates the neshamah's function as the soul dimension capable of grasping divine wisdom beyond rational categories, facilitating direct mystical apprehension of spiritual truths inaccessible to ordinary thought.

The neshamah's elevated nature makes it the least commonly developed soul dimension among ordinary individuals. Ma'avar Yabok states: "Few merit to attain neshamah, which requires profound engagement with Torah's mysteries, pure intentions in divine service, and spiritual refinement beyond conventional observance." This rarified status explains why the text associates the neshamah primarily with exceptional individuals such as scholars, mystics, and those of extraordinary spiritual sensitivity who have cultivated receptivity to divine illumination.

Unlike the nefesh and ruach, which maintain some connection to physical reality, the neshamah exists primarily in spiritual dimensions. Aaron Berechia explains: "The neshamah does not fully descend into the body but rather 'shines upon' the individual from above, transmitting divine insight to the lower soul dimensions." This partial descent preserves the neshamah's purity while still allowing its influence to permeate human consciousness through mystical experiences, prophetic insights, and moments of spiritual clarity.

The text elaborates on the neshamah's developmental timeline: "At twenty years of age, one begins to access neshamah through deeper wisdom." This progression correlates with traditional Jewish educational patterns, where advanced mystical studies were traditionally reserved for mature students who had already mastered fundamental texts and developed moral stability. The delayed development reflects the neshamah's profound nature, requiring extensive preparation before its potentials could safely and effectively manifest.

During life, the neshamah serves as the soul dimension capable of experiencing devekut (mystical attachment to God), facilitating moments of transcendent awareness when ordinary boundaries between self and divine reality temporarily dissolve. Ma'avar Yabok describes how, during such experiences, "the neshamah perceives divine light directly, unmediated by lower faculties," creating states of consciousness that transform the individual's entire relationship to existence. These experiences, though typically brief during physical life, anticipate the neshamah's posthumous state.

After death, the neshamah follows a different trajectory than the lower soul dimensions. While the nefesh remains near the grave and the ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden, "the neshamah rises to the upper Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Elyon)," a spiritual realm corresponding to the World of Creation (Olam ha-Beriah). There, according to Aaron Berechia, "the neshamah enjoys the radiance of the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) directly, basking in spiritual illumination beyond all physical metaphors."

In this elevated realm, the neshamah experiences what the text describes as "gazing through the illuminating lens" (aspaklaria ha-me'irah), a mode of perception that allows direct apprehension of divine truth without the distortions characteristic of physical existence. This direct perception represents the fulfillment of the biblical promise that the righteous will "behold the pleasantness of the Lord" (Psalm 27:4), establishing death as a transition to heightened spiritual awareness rather than diminished existence.

Despite its elevated posthumous state, the neshamah maintains connection with the lower soul dimensions. Ma'avar Yabok explains: "During sacred times, particularly Sabbaths, festivals, and Rosh Chodesh (new moon), the neshamah descends from the upper Garden to reunite temporarily with the ruach and nefesh." This periodic reintegration creates moments of heightened posthumous consciousness, explaining why the text recommends intensified prayers for the deceased during these sacred times when the soul experiences momentary wholeness.

The neshamah's capacity for divine perception makes it the primary vehicle for posthumous intercession on behalf of the living. Aaron Berechia states that "the neshamah, perceiving divine intentions directly, can advocate before the heavenly court with greater efficacy than any living individual." This intercessory power provides theological justification for Ma'avar Yabok's numerous prayers invoking deceased sages, relatives, and Biblical figures as spiritual advocates, suggesting that the neshamah's elevated position grants it special influence in celestial realms.

In the upper Garden of Eden, the neshamah engages in what the text describes as "contemplation of divine secrets beyond those accessible to embodied consciousness." This continuous illumination fulfills the Talmudic promise that "in the World to Come, there is no eating or drinking, but the righteous sit with their crowns upon their heads, enjoying the radiance of the Divine Presence" (Berakhot 17a). The neshamah's experience represents the highest form of spiritual reward, where consciousness merges with its divine source while maintaining individual identity.

Understanding the neshamah's nature illuminates Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on specific deathbed practices such as meditation on divine names, recitation of mystical unification formulas, and contemplation of Isaiah's throne vision. These advanced spiritual techniques specifically address the neshamah's needs during the transition from physical to spiritual existence, facilitating its ascent to elevated realms and ensuring its proper reception in celestial dimensions.

Chayah and Yechidah: transcendent dimensions

Beyond the three commonly discussed soul levels (nefesh, ruach, and neshamah) lie two additional, more transcendent dimensions: Chayah (חיה) and Yechidah (יחידה). Ma'avar Yabok mentions these higher soul aspects less frequently, reflecting their extremely rarified nature and limited accessibility during ordinary human existence. Nevertheless, understanding these transcendent soul dimensions completes the kabbalistic model and illuminates certain mystical practices described in the text.

The Chayah, whose name derives from the Hebrew word for "living essence," functions as the animating life-force that transcends individual existence. Aaron Berechia describes it as "the soul dimension corresponding to Chokhmah (Wisdom), the second sefirah associated with the first flash of intuitive insight beyond discursive thought." This correspondence reveals the Chayah's function as the soul aspect that connects individual consciousness to universal life principles, facilitating moments of profound insight that seem to arrive from beyond ordinary mental processes.

Unlike the lower soul dimensions that operate within the parameters of personal identity, the Chayah exists partially beyond individual boundaries. Ma'avar Yabok states: "The Chayah dwells primarily in supernal realms, extending only a subtle influence into human consciousness during moments of extraordinary spiritual illumination." This transcendent quality explains why even advanced spiritual practitioners rarely maintain conscious awareness of this soul dimension, experiencing it instead as spontaneous flashes of wisdom that transcend their normal cognitive capacities.

The Yechidah, meaning "singular one," represents the highest and most transcendent soul dimension, corresponding to Keter (Crown), the supreme sefirah that exists at the threshold between divine infinity and manifestation. Aaron Berechia characterizes the Yechidah as "the singular point of unity between the individual soul and its divine source, where all distinction between creator and created momentarily dissolves." This profound unity represents the ultimate spiritual potential within human consciousness, though it remains largely latent during physical existence.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that the Yechidah "remains above in the supernal realms and does not descend into the body, but rather 'shines upon' the individual from its elevated position." This permanent transcendence preserves the Yechidah's perfect unity with divine reality while still allowing its influence to occasionally penetrate human awareness during rare moments of mystical elevation described in kabbalistic literature as "annihilation in divine unity" (bitul ba-yichud).

Though generally inaccessible during ordinary consciousness, these higher soul dimensions play significant roles in Ma'avar Yabok's deathbed practices. The text explains that at the moment of death, "as lower soul dimensions begin separating from the body, momentary awareness of Chayah and Yechidah becomes possible." This expanded consciousness explains reports of heightened spiritual perception among the dying, including visions of deceased relatives, angelic beings, and divine light described in both traditional sources and contemporary near-death accounts.

Aaron Berechia includes specific mystical practices designed to facilitate connection with these higher soul dimensions during the death process. He prescribes meditation on particular divine names, especially the 42-letter Name (Shem Mem-Bet) and 72-letter Name (Shem Ayin-Bet), explaining that these advanced techniques "awaken awareness of the soul's higher dimensions, preparing consciousness for the transition beyond physical limitations." These practices aim to expand awareness beyond individual identity into the universal dimensions represented by Chayah and Yechidah.

After death, these transcendent soul dimensions follow different trajectories than the lower aspects. While nefesh, ruach, and neshamah maintain some degree of individual identity in their respective realms, "Chayah and Yechidah return to their source in the highest divine realms, maintaining only subtle connections with the individual consciousness they illuminated during life." This return to source explains why Ma'avar Yabok's prayers for the deceased focus primarily on the three lower soul dimensions, which remain accessible to ritual influence.

Despite their elevated nature, Chayah and Yechidah maintain connection with lower soul dimensions through what the text describes as "subtle threads of divine light that extend from the highest realms down through all levels of existence." These connections allow moments of integration during sacred times when, according to Aaron Berechia, "all five soul dimensions temporarily reunite, creating profound spiritual illumination." This periodic reunification anticipates the complete reintegration promised in eschatological teachings about resurrection and cosmic restoration.

Understanding these transcendent soul dimensions illuminates certain mystical practices described in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly those associated with the most advanced stages of deathbed ritual. The text's references to "death by divine kiss" (mitah be-neshikah), characterizing the highest form of death where consciousness merges seamlessly with divine reality, specifically relate to momentary awareness of Chayah and Yechidah during the transition. These practices transform death from fearful dissolution into the ultimate spiritual ascent, fulfilling the soul's highest potential.

The Tzelem and the Luz: bridges between worlds

Beyond the five-level soul structure, Ma'avar Yabok elaborates on two additional metaphysical components that serve as crucial interfaces between physical and spiritual existence: the Tzelem (צלם), or divine image, and the Luz (לוז), an indestructible physical element that maintains connection between body and soul after death. These components function as bridges between worlds, facilitating the soul's transition between physical and spiritual states while preserving essential continuity despite apparent dissolution.

The Tzelem, whose name derives from the biblical statement that humans were created "in the image (tzelem) of God" (Genesis 1:27), represents the spiritual blueprint or template that organizes soul energy into human form. Aaron Berechia describes the Tzelem as "the subtle body that clothes the soul, mediating between pure spiritual essence and physical manifestation." This intermediate structure provides the pattern through which formless divine energy assumes particular human shape, explaining the persistence of recognizable identity across multiple planes of existence.

Ma'avar Yabok distinguishes between the "upper Tzelem" (tzelem elyon) and "lower Tzelem" (tzelem tachton), corresponding to different levels of manifestation. The text explains: "The upper Tzelem belongs to the World of Formation (Yetzirah) and clothes the ruach, while the lower Tzelem belongs to the World of Action (Asiyah) and clothes the nefesh." This hierarchical arrangement creates a graduated series of interfaces through which soul energy progressively densifies as it approaches physical manifestation.

The Tzelem serves critical functions during both life and death. During physical existence, Aaron Berechia explains, it "filters divine light into forms accessible to human consciousness, preventing overwhelming spiritual intensity while preserving connection to higher realms." This protective function shields limited human awareness from direct exposure to unmediated divine energy, which kabbalistic texts describe as potentially destructive to unprepared consciousness.

During the death process, the Tzelem undergoes significant transformation. Ma'avar Yabok states: "Thirty days before death, in the 'night of sealing,' the upper Tzelem begins withdrawing, creating subtle changes in the person's appearance perceptible to those with spiritual sensitivity." This withdrawal explains certain physical changes observed in the terminally ill, including altered facial appearance, diminished physical presence, and the characteristic distant gaze often noted as death approaches.

The text provides practical guidance based on this understanding, instructing caregivers: "When changes in the Tzelem become apparent, preparations for death should begin, including confession arrangements and final spiritual teachings." This practical application transforms metaphysical knowledge into compassionate care, allowing timely spiritual support based on awareness of the soul's progressive separation from physical form.

After death, the Tzelem fulfills another crucial function that Aaron Berechia describes as "providing recognizable form to the disembodied soul in posthumous realms." This continued identity explains traditional beliefs that souls maintain recognizable appearance after death, allowing them to be identified by other deceased individuals and by the living during dreams or visions. Without the Tzelem, the soul would revert to formless energy, losing the individuality developed through physical existence.

The Luz, by contrast, represents a physical rather than spiritual bridge between worlds. Ma'avar Yabok describes it as "an indestructible bone, impervious to fire, water, or decomposition, which preserves the physical blueprint from which the body will be reconstructed during resurrection." This persistent physical element maintains continuity between the present body and its future restored form, addressing philosophical questions about identity persistence through death and rebirth.

The text presents varying traditions regarding the Luz's location, noting: "Some say it resides at the base of the skull, others at the base of the spine, and still others beneath the brain." Despite these anatomical variations, all traditions emphasize its indestructibility, with Aaron Berechia stating: "Even Nebuchadnezzar's furnace could not consume it, nor can any physical force destroy it, for it contains the divine spark from which physical existence will be renewed."

The Luz serves as the physical counterpart to the spiritual Tzelem, with Ma'avar Yabok explaining their complementary functions: "The Tzelem preserves spiritual form while the Luz preserves physical pattern, together maintaining complete human identity across the threshold of death." This dual preservation explains the text's emphasis on proper burial practices that respect bodily integrity despite the soul's apparent departure, recognizing that physical remains continue serving important metaphysical functions.

These bridging components illuminate numerous ritual practices described in Ma'avar Yabok. The careful washing and dressing of the deceased, the prohibition against cremation, and the emphasis on burial in the earth rather than above-ground entombment all reflect awareness of the Luz's ongoing significance. Similarly, prayers visualizing the deceased in recognizable form address the Tzelem's continued function as the soul's subtle clothing in posthumous realms.

Understanding these metaphysical bridges helps explain Ma'avar Yabok's consistent emphasis on maintaining connection between the living and the dead. The text states: "Through these persistent elements, channels of communication remain open between worlds, allowing ritual actions by the living to benefit deceased souls." This ongoing relationship transforms mourning practices from mere commemoration into active spiritual assistance, with specific prayers, charitable acts, and Torah study directly aiding souls in their posthumous journey.

The concepts of Tzelem and Luz thus resolve an apparent contradiction in traditional Jewish approaches to death. While acknowledging the soul's departure from the body, tradition maintains both respect for physical remains and belief in ongoing connection with the deceased—seemingly contradictory positions reconciled through these bridging elements that span physical and spiritual existence, maintaining continuity despite apparent dissolution.

The soul's journey after death

Ma'avar Yabok presents an elaborately choreographed account of the soul's posthumous journey, describing precisely calibrated timelines, specific transitional experiences, and diverse destinations for different soul components. This detailed cartography of afterlife experiences directly informs the text's ritual prescriptions, with each practice addressing particular aspects of the soul's complex transition between worlds.

The journey begins before physical death, with Aaron Berechia describing preliminary soul movements: "Thirty days before death, in the 'night of sealing,' parts of the soul begin withdrawing, particularly aspects of the upper Tzelem connected to the ruach." This gradual separation accelerates as death approaches, with the text noting specific signs of imminent transition: "When the soul reaches the throat, consciousness shifts between worlds, allowing glimpses of deceased relatives, angels, and spiritual guides coming to escort the departing soul."

At the moment of death, different soul components begin separate journeys. Ma'avar Yabok states: "The neshamah immediately ascends toward the upper Garden of Eden, the ruach begins its journey toward the lower Garden, while the nefesh remains with the body, experiencing the initial separation as significant distress." This divergent movement explains the text's emphasis on providing distinct ritual support for each soul component, addressing their unique needs during transition.

The nefesh undergoes the most complex transitional process, moving through precisely defined stages: "For the first three days after death, the nefesh hovers near the body, witnessing initial decomposition while hoping to return… for seven days it travels between the grave and the home, gradually accepting its new state… for thirty days it ascends and descends between earth and heaven, establishing new patterns of existence… for twelve months it undergoes purification before settling into its permanent posthumous dwelling."

These carefully defined periods directly correspond to traditional Jewish mourning stages: the three days of deepest mourning (sheloshim), the seven days of shiva, the thirty days of sheloshim, and the twelve months of saying Kaddish. Aaron Berechia explains this correspondence: "The mourning periods established by tradition align precisely with the soul's transitional stages, providing ritual support when most needed." This alignment transforms seemingly arbitrary time periods into meaningful accompaniment for the soul's journey.

The ruach follows a different trajectory, with Ma'avar Yabok describing its ascent: "After separation from the body, the ruach travels through what appears as a dark tunnel, eventually emerging into the light of the lower Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Tachton)." There, according to the text, "the ruach undergoes initial judgment, with angels reviewing its life record before determining appropriate posthumous experience." This judgment process evaluates actions, intentions, and spiritual achievements during physical life, establishing the ruach's specific placement within the Garden's hierarchical structure.

Within the lower Garden, the text describes hierarchical arrangements based on spiritual attainment: "The Garden contains seven chambers corresponding to different levels of spiritual accomplishment, with each soul placed according to its merits." This stratified afterlife reflects kabbalistic teachings about cosmic justice, where posthumous experience precisely mirrors spiritual development during physical existence, creating neither arbitrary reward nor punishment but rather natural consequences of soul cultivation.

The neshamah's journey extends furthest from physical existence, with Aaron Berechia describing its ascent "through multiple heavenly firmaments, each requiring specific 'passwords' in the form of divine names learned during life through Torah study and spiritual practice." This cosmic ascent explains the text's emphasis on studying divine names and mystical concepts during life, characterizing such knowledge as essential preparation for the soul's posthumous navigation through celestial realms.

Upon reaching the upper Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Elyon), the neshamah experiences what the text describes as "direct perception of divine reality through the 'illuminating lens,' without the veils and barriers that limited spiritual perception during physical existence." This heightened awareness fulfills biblical promises that "the pure of heart shall see God" (Psalm 24:4), establishing death not as consciousness's termination but as its expansion into more comprehensive spiritual perception.

For souls requiring purification, Ma'avar Yabok describes interim experiences in Gehinnom (often translated as "Hell" but more accurately understood as a realm of spiritual purification). The text characterizes this realm not as eternal punishment but as therapeutic cleansing: "Gehinnom purifies the soul through experiences corresponding to spiritual imbalances developed during physical life, removing accumulated negativity before the soul can enter eternal rest." This purification process typically lasts a maximum of twelve months (explaining the tradition of reciting Kaddish for eleven months to avoid implying the deceased requires the full purification period).

Throughout these posthumous journeys, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes ongoing connections between soul components. The text states: "During Sabbaths, festivals, and new moons, soul parts temporarily reunite, with the neshamah descending to join the ruach, and both visiting the nefesh near the grave." This periodic reintegration creates heightened posthumous consciousness during sacred times, explaining the text's recommendation that cemetery visits and prayers for the deceased concentrate on these spiritually potent moments.

Aaron Berechia presents this elaborate posthumous journey not as speculative theology but as practical knowledge informing ritual practice. Each prayer, custom, and observance described in Ma'avar Yabok addresses specific aspects of the soul's transition, providing targeted spiritual assistance during critical phases. This practical application transforms abstract metaphysics into compassionate care, allowing the living to meaningfully support the deceased through properly informed ritual action.

The living and the dead: reciprocal relationships

One of Ma'avar Yabok's most distinctive contributions lies in its detailed exploration of the ongoing reciprocal relationship between the living and the dead. Rather than presenting death as an absolute separation, Aaron Berechia describes elaborate mechanisms through which actions in each realm directly influence the other, creating continuous circuits of spiritual exchange that benefit both the deceased and those who remember them. This reciprocity transforms mourning practices from mere commemoration into active spiritual assistance while simultaneously establishing the deceased as potential intercessors for the living.

The text articulates this fundamental principle: "The dead are aware of the living and maintain concern for their welfare, while the living can actively assist the dead through properly directed spiritual actions." This bidirectional relationship explains the text's emphasis on both prayers offered for the deceased and prayers addressed to them, recognizing mutual capability for spiritual influence across the threshold between worlds.

Ma'avar Yabok describes specific mechanisms through which the living benefit the dead, with prayer serving as the primary channel. Aaron Berechia states: "When one prays at a grave, the nefesh of the deceased rejoices and ascends to inform the ruach, which then notifies the neshamah, creating ripples of positive influence through all soul dimensions." This chain reaction explains the Jewish custom of visiting graves during times of personal or communal distress, when the deceased's spiritual elevation might generate reciprocal benefits for those seeking their intercession.

Charitable giving represents another powerful mechanism for assisting deceased souls. The text explains: "When charity is given in memory of the deceased, with explicit verbalization that the merit should benefit their soul, this creates actual spiritual currency in posthumous realms." This transaction explains the tradition of establishing charitable foundations, scholarship funds, and community services in memory of the departed, transforming material resources into spiritual assets that accompany the soul through its afterlife journey.

Torah study conducted in the deceased's memory generates particularly potent posthumous benefits. Aaron Berechia states: "When someone studies Torah and dedicates the merit to a departed soul, this creates the equivalent of the deceased having performed the study themselves." This spiritual substitution explains traditions of completing Mishnah study in memory of the dead, with specific tractates chosen based on letters in the deceased's name to create personalized spiritual remedies.

The text emphasizes that these posthumous benefits depend on explicit verbalization: "When performing meritorious actions for the deceased's benefit, one must verbally state: 'May this be for the elevation of the soul of [name],' creating a directed channel for the spiritual influence." This explicit dedication transforms general positive actions into targeted spiritual assistance, explaining Ma'avar Yabok's frequent inclusion of dedicatory formulas within memorial prayers.

Reciprocally, the deceased actively assist the living through various spiritual mechanisms. Aaron Berechia explains: "The departed soul, no longer limited by physical constraints, can perceive divine intentions more clearly and access spiritual channels unavailable to embodied consciousness." This expanded awareness enables deceased souls—particularly those who achieved spiritual elevation during life—to serve as effective intercessors before the heavenly court.

Ma'avar Yabok describes specific circumstances when the dead intercede for the living: "During times of communal distress, the righteous dead arise from their resting places and plead for divine mercy on behalf of their descendants and communities." This intercession explains the Jewish custom of visiting graves during droughts, epidemics, and other calamities, when the deceased's advocacy might prove particularly effective in arousing divine compassion.

The text presents biblical precedents for this intercessory relationship, noting: "When God remembers the covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, this reflects the continuing spiritual influence of the Patriarchs on behalf of their descendants." This ongoing efficacy of ancient merit explains the liturgical pattern of invoking the Patriarchs and Matriarchs during prayers, acknowledging their continuing role in sustaining the relationship between God and Israel.

Family relationships create particularly strong channels for posthumous influence. Aaron Berechia states: "A child's righteous actions directly benefit the parent's soul, elevating it to higher spiritual levels, while a parent's accumulated merit continues protecting descendants long after physical death." This intergenerational spiritual economy explains the emphasis on children reciting Kaddish for parents, establishing a reciprocal channel where the parent's nurturing of the child during life is balanced by the child's spiritual support after death.

The text describes physical mechanisms that facilitate communication between realms, with graves serving as "portals where the worlds touch most closely, allowing directed communication between the living and the dead." This understanding explains the Jewish custom of physically touching graves during visits, leaving written notes with requests, and prostrating oneself on the graves of particularly righteous individuals—all practices aimed at optimizing the transmission of spiritual influence across realms.

This reciprocal relationship transforms bereavement from passive suffering into active spiritual engagement. Ma'avar Yabok characterizes mourning practices not merely as expressions of grief but as "cooperative spiritual projects where the living and dead work together toward mutual elevation." This collaborative framework provides consolation by establishing continuing bonds with the deceased while simultaneously offering practical guidance for transforming grief into spiritually productive action.

Understanding this reciprocal relationship illuminates numerous ritual practices detailed in Ma'avar Yabok, from the recitation of memorial prayers to the custom of visiting graves on significant dates. These practices emerge not as superstitious relics but as sophisticated spiritual technologies designed to maintain vital connections across the threshold of death, allowing influence to flow in both directions for mutual benefit.

The soul's ultimate destiny

Ma'avar Yabok's elaborate model of the soul culminates in a vision of ultimate spiritual destiny that transcends even the complex posthumous journeys previously described. Aaron Berechia presents resurrection and cosmic restoration as the final chapter in the soul's narrative, when fragmented soul components will reunite, spiritual and physical dimensions will reintegrate, and the entire cosmic order will achieve harmonious completion. This eschatological framework transforms the soul's temporary posthumous arrangements into way stations along a more comprehensive journey toward universal perfection.

The text articulates this ultimate vision: "In the future resurrection, the soul's separated dimensions will fully reunite, the indestructible luz bone will regenerate the physical body in perfected form, and consciousness will experience both spiritual transcendence and physical existence simultaneously." This integration resolves the tension between bodily and spiritual existence that characterizes the soul's earthly journey, establishing a perfected state where material and divine realms achieve seamless coordination.

Aaron Berechia describes the resurrected state as incorporating the best aspects of both physical and spiritual existence: "The resurrected body will maintain physical form but transcend material limitations, while the reunited soul will retain individual identity while participating directly in divine consciousness." This balanced integration represents the ultimate fulfillment of human potential, where neither physical nor spiritual dimensions are sacrificed but rather mutually enhanced through perfect coordination.

The text presents this resurrection not as arbitrary divine intervention but as the natural culmination of cosmic processes set in motion at creation. Ma'avar Yabok states: "The entire cosmic order moves gradually toward this perfected state, with each proper human action advancing this progression while each transgression temporarily delays it." This participatory framework establishes human activity as crucial to cosmic development, with ritual practices, ethical actions, and spiritual cultivation directly contributing to universal restoration.

Within this eschatological vision, the soul's complex structure and journey take on broader significance. Aaron Berechia explains: "The soul's division into multiple components serves temporary developmental purposes, allowing different aspects to undergo appropriate experiences across various cosmic planes before eventual reintegration." This developmental model characterizes the soul's fragmentation not as metaphysical tragedy but as necessary preparation for more comprehensive future unity.

The text describes how this ultimate destiny retroactively illuminates earlier stages of the soul's journey: "From the perspective of final resurrection, physical death represents not termination but transformation, not punishment but preparation for more expansive existence." This reframing establishes death as a developmental threshold rather than existential conclusion, helping readers interpret current experiences within a more comprehensive cosmic context.

Ma'avar Yabok connects individual resurrection with broader cosmic restoration, stating: "As individual souls achieve reintegration, the entire cosmic order undergoes parallel harmonization, with divine light permeating all existence without obstruction or limitation." This universal vision expands the soul's journey beyond personal salvation to participation in cosmic perfection, establishing individual spiritual development as contributing directly to universal completion.

The resurrected state represents not static perfection but dynamic integration. Aaron Berechia describes it as "continuous creative participation in divine reality, where perfected human consciousness actively contributes to ongoing cosmic development." This collaborative model establishes eternal life not as passive reward but as expanded participation in divine creativity, fulfilling the kabbalistic teaching that humans were created as "partners with God in the work of creation."

Understanding this ultimate destiny illuminates Ma'avar Yabok's practical guidance for current religious life. The text consistently presents ritual practices not merely as means for navigating death but as "rehearsals for ultimate cosmic harmony, training consciousness for its future expanded state." This preparatory framework transforms religious observance from mere obligation into developmental practice, cultivating capacities that will find complete expression in the world to come.

The text's detailed attention to proper care for both body and soul reflects this eschatological awareness. Aaron Berechia explains: "Since both physical and spiritual dimensions will ultimately reunite, both require appropriate attention during their temporary separation." This balanced concern illuminates the text's emphasis on proper treatment of physical remains alongside spiritual care for the deceased's soul, recognizing that both contribute to the individual's comprehensive future restoration.

Ma'avar Yabok concludes its soul teachings with a profound theological affirmation: "The soul's complex structure and journey reflect divine wisdom, guiding consciousness through necessary developmental stages toward its ultimate destiny of perfected existence in both spiritual and physical dimensions." This teleological framework establishes the soul's current fragmentation and complexity not as metaphysical confusion but as intentional divine pedagogy, preparing consciousness for its future integrated state.

This vision of ultimate destiny transforms Ma'avar Yabok from mere practical manual for death rituals into comprehensive spiritual guidebook, addressing not only immediate needs surrounding mortality but humanity's broader metaphysical journey toward cosmic fulfillment. Through its sophisticated model of the soul, the text offers both practical guidance for navigating death and transcendent vision of existence's ultimate purpose, uniting immediate pastoral concerns with cosmic spiritual perspective.

Appendix C

The Four Worlds

Jewish mystical tradition, particularly as developed in the kabbalistic literature that reached its zenith in the 16th century, presents a sophisticated metaphysical architecture of reality that extends far beyond the material universe we perceive with our senses. Central to this cosmic vision is the doctrine of the Four Worlds (Arba'ah Olamot), a hierarchical structure of existence that describes how divine emanation progressively materializes through increasingly dense layers of reality. This conceptual framework provides the spiritual scaffolding that undergirds many Jewish mystical practices, particularly those surrounding death and the afterlife—as exemplified in the comprehensive ritual manual Ma'avar Yabok by Rabbi Aaron Berechia of Modena (17th century).

The Four Worlds doctrine represents a profound spiritual cartography that maps not only the cosmos but also the human soul's structure and its journey through life, death, and beyond. This mapping is not merely theoretical or speculative; rather, it serves as the foundation for understanding how ritual actions performed in the physical world generate effects that reverberate through the higher spiritual realms. For the kabbalists, and particularly for Rabbi Aaron Berechia, these rituals are not simply symbolic gestures; they are cosmic technologies with the power to facilitate the soul's transition through multiple dimensions of reality.

In Ma'avar Yabok, this kabbalistic framework underpins the entire approach to death and mourning rituals. The text's central metaphor—the soul's crossing of the "ford of Yabok" (an allusion to Jacob's transformative night crossing in Genesis 32)—represents the transition between worlds that occurs at death. The numerical value of YaBOK (יב״ק = 112) corresponds to the combined value of three divine names that themselves correspond to different levels of soul and different cosmic realms. This intricate correspondence between numbers, divine names, soul components, and cosmic dimensions is characteristic of the kabbalistic worldview that permeates Jewish mystical approaches to death.

Understanding the Four Worlds is essential for comprehending how traditional Jewish death rituals function as more than mere cultural customs or psychological coping mechanisms. From the kabbalistic perspective, these practices serve as spiritual technologies designed to facilitate the soul's navigation through complex cosmic territories. The washing of the body (tahara), the recitation of specific biblical verses, the circuits around the bier, and even the tearing of garments—all these actions generate ripple effects through multiple dimensions, creating pathways for the soul's ascent and protection from harmful spiritual forces.

The correspondence between the Four Worlds and the components of the human soul provides a particularly important key to understanding death rituals. Just as the cosmos is structured in four descending layers of reality, the human soul comprises multiple levels that correspond to these cosmic domains. At death, these soul components begin a complex process of separation, with different aspects journeying to different destinations. The rituals performed by the living are designed to facilitate this separation process while providing protection and guidance for each soul component on its particular journey.

This appendix explores this cosmic framework in detail, examining how the Four Worlds doctrine illuminates the spiritual mechanics underlying Jewish death rituals. By understanding this metaphysical background, we gain deeper insight into the purpose and function of these practices, seeing them not merely as cultural traditions but as sophisticated spiritual technologies designed to navigate the complex territories that lie beyond physical existence.

The doctrine of the four worlds

The kabbalistic doctrine of the Four Worlds represents a comprehensive model of reality that describes how divine energy emanates from its infinite source, progressively condensing through layers of increasing materiality until it manifests in our physical universe. This cosmic structure is derived primarily from Isaiah 43:7, where God speaks of "everyone who is called by My name, whom I have created, formed, and made." From this verse, the kabbalists extracted four divine actions—emanation (implied), creation, formation, and making—that became the basis for the Four Worlds model.

At the summit of this hierarchical structure stands Atzilut (אצילות), the World of Emanation. This is the highest and most sublime realm, where divine energy first emerges from its infinite, unknowable source (the Ein Sof) into the beginnings of differentiated form. In Atzilut, the ten sefirot (divine emanations or attributes) exist in their purest state, still entirely unified with their divine source. This realm is characterized by perfect unity where no separation exists between Creator and creation—indeed, in Atzilut, everything remains fully divine. It is described in Ma'avar Yabok as "the world that is entirely Sabbath" (olam she-kulo Shabbat), a realm of perfect divine rest beyond all striving and effort.

Below Atzilut lies Beriah (בריאה), the World of Creation, where divine energy begins to take on more distinct form. Beriah is the realm of the divine throne (Kisse ha-Kavod) and the dwelling place of the highest archangels. Here, the first hint of separation between Creator and creation appears, though everything in Beriah remains primarily spiritual in nature. In this realm dwell the souls of the greatest tzaddikim (righteous individuals) who have achieved exceptional spiritual elevation. Beriah is often associated with pure understanding (Binah) and is sometimes described as the realm where divine thought first begins to take concrete form.

The third world, Yetzirah (יצירה), is the World of Formation, where spiritual forms become more distinctly defined. This is the primary angelic realm, inhabited by various orders of angels including the seraphim, ofanim, and chayot—the beings described in Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot. In Yetzirah, the divine unity present in the higher worlds becomes increasingly diversified, with distinct forms taking shape. This realm is associated with the emotional attributes (middot) and serves as an intermediate zone between the purely spiritual domains above and the material world below.

Finally, Asiyah (עשיה), the World of Action, represents the realm of physical manifestation and tangible existence. In its highest aspect, Asiyah contains spiritual forces directly responsible for governing physical processes, while in its lower aspect, it constitutes the material universe that we perceive with our senses. It is important to note that Asiyah is not merely the physical world but includes spiritual dimensions that animate and sustain physical existence. In Ma'avar Yabok, Asiyah is described as having both spiritual (Asiyah ruchanit) and physical (Asiyah gashmit) components.

These four worlds are not entirely separate domains but form a continuous chain of manifestation, with divine energy flowing from the highest to the lowest. Each world contains within it reflections of all the others, creating a complex, fractal-like cosmic structure. This interpenetration of worlds means that actions performed in the lower realms can generate effects that ripple upward through the entire cosmic system—a principle that forms the metaphysical basis for ritual practice in kabbalistic Judaism.

The Four Worlds correspond to the four letters of the divine name YHVH (יקוק), the Tetragrammaton.[3] The initial Yod (י) corresponds to Atzilut, the first Heh (ה) to Beriah, the Vav (ו) to Yetzirah, and the final Heh (ה) to Asiyah. This correspondence is significant because it indicates that the cosmic structure itself is a manifestation of the divine name—the cosmos is, in a sense, God's name writ large across multiple dimensions of reality. When rituals invoke divine names, particularly the Tetragrammaton, they are activating the corresponding cosmic forces across all four worlds.

In the context of death rituals, this cosmic structure takes on profound significance. Death, from the kabbalistic perspective, involves a complex process of soul components separating and journeying to their appropriate destinations across multiple cosmic domains. The rituals performed by the living are designed to facilitate this process, ensuring that each component receives the guidance and protection it needs for its particular journey. By understanding the Four Worlds structure, we can better appreciate how these rituals function as spiritual technologies designed to navigate complex cosmic territories.

Soul structure and the four worlds

The kabbalistic understanding of the human soul presents it not as a single, unified entity but as a complex, multi-layered structure comprising several distinct components. This conception mirrors the cosmic architecture of the Four Worlds, with each soul component corresponding to a particular cosmic domain. This correspondence provides the metaphysical foundation for understanding how death affects the soul and how ritual practices can facilitate its journey after physical demise.

[3] Facilitator's note: per tradition, I have not printed the actual Tetragrammaton. Instead, I have substituted ק for ה.

The most common model describes three primary soul components: Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah. Ma'avar Yabok, however, frequently references a five-part structure that adds Chayah and Yechidah as higher soul components. These components are not entirely separate entities but represent different dimensions or aspects of a single, complex spiritual organism. Each component has its own characteristics, functions, and destiny after death.

The Nefesh (נפש) represents the most basic level of the soul—the animating life-force that sustains physical existence. It is deeply connected to the body and remains with it even after death. In Ma'avar Yabok, the Nefesh is described as having two aspects: the "breath of the bones" (havla d'garmi), which represents the natural heat that remains even after death, and the "distress of the flesh" (atzvona d'bishrah), which experiences the pain of decomposition. The Nefesh corresponds to the World of Asiyah and remains near the grave for a period after death, gradually dissipating as the body decomposes. Certain burial customs, such as placing earth from the Land of Israel in the coffin, are designed specifically to provide comfort to this aspect of the soul.

The Ruach (רוח) represents a higher level of soul associated with emotion, moral character, and interpersonal connection. This aspect corresponds to the World of Yetzirah and, after death, ascends to the lower Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Tachton). The Ruach retains the individual's personality and experiences both the pleasures of paradise and, if necessary, the purifying fires of Gehenna. Many of the prayers recited during the funeral service, particularly Psalms and verses that speak of divine mercy, are intended to facilitate the Ruach's journey and protect it from harmful spiritual forces during its ascent.

The Neshamah (נשמה) represents the highest aspect of the soul accessible to ordinary human consciousness. Associated with intellect, divine connection, and spiritual perception, the Neshamah corresponds to the World of Beriah and ascends to the upper Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Elyon) after death. In Ma'avar Yabok, the Neshamah is described as "the soul of the soul" and is associated with the highest levels of Torah study and spiritual attainment. Rituals that involve recitation of kabbalistic unifications and divine names, particularly the 42-letter Name, are specifically designed to elevate and protect the Neshamah during its post-mortem journey.

Beyond these three primary soul components, Ma'avar Yabok sometimes references the Chayah (חיה) and Yechidah (יחידה). The Chayah represents a transcendent level of soul associated with the living essence beyond individuality, while the Yechidah embodies the ultimate, indivisible unity with the divine. These higher soul aspects correspond to the World of Atzilut and beyond, and are typically beyond the reach of ordinary human experience except in rare moments of prophetic illumination or mystical union.

An important concept in this soul structure is the "lower image" (tzelem tachton), a spiritual template that mediates between the higher soul levels and the physical body. This tzelem has both internal and external aspects, with the external aspect departing thirty days before death (during what is called the "night of sealing"). The internal aspect remains until the moment of death, when it too departs, allowing the soul components to begin their separate journeys. Many deathbed practices described in Ma'avar Yabok are designed to facilitate the proper dissolution of the tzelem and the orderly separation of soul components.

Also significant is the concept of the luz bone, a small, indestructible part of the body (variously identified as located at the base of the skull or at the bottom of the spine) that preserves a connection between the Nefesh and the body even after death. This connection serves as the nucleus for eventual resurrection, when the body will be rebuilt from this seed. The belief in this physical anchor for resurrection informs certain burial practices, particularly the care taken not to damage the body unnecessarily.

The correspondence between soul components and cosmic worlds creates a comprehensive framework for understanding death rituals. When a person dies, different soul components journey to different cosmic destinations, each requiring specific forms of guidance and protection. The rituals performed by the living—from the washing of the body to the recitation of particular prayers to the observance of mourning customs—are designed to facilitate these complex journeys, ensuring that each soul component reaches its proper destination and receives appropriate spiritual sustenance along the way.

Atzilut: the world of emanation and highest soul

Atzilut, the World of Emanation, represents the highest and most sublime realm in the kabbalistic cosmos. As the first manifestation of divine energy emerging from the infinite unknowable source (Ein Sof), Atzilut exists in a state of perfect unity where no separation between Creator and creation can be discerned. In Ma'avar Yabok, Atzilut is described as "the world that is entirely Sabbath" (olam she-kulo Shabbat), indicating its nature as a realm of perfect divine rest beyond all striving and effort.

The spiritual landscape of Atzilut consists of the ten sefirot (divine emanations or attributes) in their purest form, still entirely unified with their divine source. These sefirot—Keter (Crown), Chokhmah (Wisdom), Binah (Understanding), Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), Netzach (Victory/Eternity), Hod (Splendor), Yesod (Foundation), and Malkhut (Kingdom)—represent the primary channels through which divine energy flows into the lower worlds. In Atzilut, these sefirot exist in a state of perfect harmony and interpenetration, with each containing aspects of all the others.

Atzilut corresponds to the highest aspects of the human soul, particularly the Yechidah and Chayah. The Yechidah represents the ultimate, indivisible unity with the divine—the aspect of the soul that remains eternally connected to its source regardless of the individual's spiritual state. The Chayah represents the living essence beyond individuality—the soul's participation in divine life-force itself. These highest soul aspects typically remain in Atzilut even during life, descending only partially into the lower worlds and the physical body. In death, they return fully to their source in Atzilut, bringing with them the spiritual essence of the individual's life experiences and accomplishments.

For most individuals, these highest soul aspects remain largely inaccessible to conscious experience during physical life. However, the most elevated tzaddikim (righteous individuals) may achieve states of consciousness that allow them to access these sublime levels. Such spiritual masters are described in Ma'avar Yabok as experiencing "death by divine kiss" (mittat neshikah), a form of passing that bypasses ordinary death processes and allows the soul to ascend directly to the highest realms. This elevated form of death, attributed in tradition to figures like Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, involves no suffering and represents a direct spiritual absorption into the divine.

Although Atzilut lies beyond the reach of ordinary ritual action, certain advanced kabbalistic practices are designed to create effects that reverberate even in this highest realm. In Ma'avar Yabok, specific meditations on divine names are prescribed for those attending a dying person, particularly focusing on the 42-letter Name (Shem Mem-Bet) and its seven component names (beginning with ABGI-TATZ). These meditations are believed to create channels for the soul's highest aspects to ascend safely to their source in Atzilut.

The concept of yichud (unification) plays a central role in these advanced practices. Through proper meditation on divine names and attributes, the practitioner aims to unify the divine masculine and feminine principles (represented by the Tetragrammaton YHVH and the divine name ADNY, respectively). This unification is believed to create a harmonious flow of energy through all the worlds, facilitating the soul's ascent. In Ma'avar Yabok, the phrase "to unify the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence" (leyachada kudsha brich hu u-shechintei) appears repeatedly as the ultimate purpose of many deathbed and funeral rituals.

Atzilut corresponds to the Yod (י) of the Tetragrammaton, representing the initial divine point from which all creation emanates. This correspondence highlights Atzilut's nature as the primary source of divine influence flowing into the lower worlds. In the context of death rituals, invoking the Yod (through proper meditation and intention) activates the corresponding forces in Atzilut, creating a spiritual conduit for the soul's highest aspects to return to their source.

While ordinary ritual actions may not directly affect Atzilut, the kabbalistic principle that "the awakening below causes an awakening above" means that properly performed rituals in the physical world can indirectly influence even this highest realm. The purification of the body through tahara (ritual washing), the recitation of sacred texts with proper intention, and the performance of charitable acts in memory of the deceased all create ripple effects that ascend through the cosmic hierarchy, ultimately reaching even Atzilut and benefiting the soul's highest aspects.

For the kabbalists, and particularly for Rabbi Aaron Berechia in Ma'avar Yabok, Atzilut represents not just a theoretical cosmic domain but the ultimate destination for the highest aspects of the human soul. Death rituals, properly understood and performed with appropriate intention, serve as technologies for facilitating this return to source—ensuring that the divine spark within each human being finds its way back to the perfect unity of Atzilut.

Beriah: the world of creation and the Neshamah

The World of Beriah (בריאה), or Creation, represents the second highest realm in the kabbalistic cosmos, where divine energy begins to take on more distinct form. In this realm, the first hint of separation between Creator and creation appears, though everything in Beriah remains primarily spiritual in nature. Beriah is often described as the realm of the divine throne (Kisse ha-Kavod) and the abode of the highest archangels, particularly Metatron, who is sometimes called "the lesser YHVH" because of his proximity to divine power.

Beriah corresponds to the sefirah of Binah (Understanding) and represents the realm where divine thought begins to take concrete form. The creative process referenced in Genesis 1:1—"In the beginning, God created (bara) the heavens and the earth"—refers primarily to this level of creation, where the initial differentiation from absolute unity occurs. In Beriah, the sefirot exist as distinct intellectual constructs, though they remain entirely spiritual without any material manifestation.

The human soul component that corresponds to Beriah is the Neshamah (נשמה), the highest aspect of the soul that is typically accessible to human consciousness. The Neshamah represents the divine intellectual essence within each person—the capacity for spiritual perception, abstract understanding, and connection with the divine. In Ma'avar Yabok, the Neshamah is described as "the soul of the soul" and is associated with the highest levels of Torah study and spiritual attainment.

After death, the Neshamah ascends to the upper Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Elyon), which exists within the World of Beriah. This upper Garden is described in Ma'avar Yabok as a realm of "hidden goodness" where souls experience direct insight into divine wisdom. The text describes how, in this realm, righteous souls study Torah directly from the Divine Presence, gaining understanding that was inaccessible during physical life. The Talmudic concept of heavenly academies (yeshivot shel ma'alah) where souls continue their learning after death is associated primarily with this realm.

The transition of the Neshamah to Beriah after death involves a complex process of purification and elevation. According to Ma'avar Yabok, the soul must pass through the "River of Fire" (Nehar Dinur) before entering the upper Garden of Eden. This river, created from the intellectual "heat" generated by Torah scholars' debates, serves to cleanse the soul of any remaining spiritual impurities. The intensity of this purification process varies depending on the individual's spiritual state at death, with the most righteous experiencing it as a refreshing bath rather than a burning fire.

Several death rituals are specifically designed to facilitate the Neshamah's journey to Beriah. Particularly important are those involving the recitation of Torah verses with proper intention. The compilation of 112 verses corresponding to the numerical value of Yabok (יב״ק = 112) includes specific sections associated with divine names that correspond to the Neshamah's elevation. The first 21 verses correspond to the divine name Ehyeh (אהיה), which is associated with the sefirah of Binah and the World of Beriah.

The ritual of tahara (purification of the body) also contains elements specifically designed to facilitate the Neshamah's ascent. When washing the head, particular verses are recited that activate the corresponding spiritual channels. In Ma'avar Yabok, the pouring of water over the head is understood as a physical analog to the Neshamah's immersion in the supernal waters of Binah, helping to cleanse it for its journey to the upper Garden.

The recitation of Psalm 90 ("A prayer of Moses, the man of God") during funeral services is particularly associated with the Neshamah's elevation to Beriah. Moses, as the greatest of prophets, represents the highest level of Neshamah attainment, and this psalm is believed to create a channel connecting the deceased's Neshamah to the spiritual level of Moses in the upper Garden. Similarly, the recitation of kabbalistic texts like sections of the Zohar or Tikkunei Zohar is believed to create spiritual pathways through which the Neshamah can ascend to its proper place in Beriah.

The World of Beriah corresponds to the first Heh (ה) of the Tetragrammaton, representing the initial expansion and differentiation from the divine point of the Yod. This correspondence highlights Beriah's nature as the realm where divine energy first begins to take distinct form while remaining entirely spiritual. In death rituals, meditations on this letter of the divine name are believed to activate the corresponding cosmic forces, helping to draw the Neshamah upward to its source.

For those practicing the advanced kabbalistic techniques described in Ma'avar Yabok, specific visualizations involve seeing the deceased's name surrounded by divine light and ascending through the gates of Beriah. The text describes how each Hebrew letter of the person's name becomes a vessel carrying their spiritual essence upward, guided by the angels who govern the gates of the upper Garden. These meditations, performed with proper intention (kavvanah), are believed to create tangible spiritual pathways that assist the Neshamah's journey.

The ongoing relationship between the living and the dead plays an important role in the Neshamah's experience in Beriah. According to Ma'avar Yabok, when descendants or disciples study Torah and perform good deeds in memory of the deceased, these actions create "crowns" for the Neshamah in the upper Garden, enhancing its spiritual status and expanding its capacity to receive divine light. This understanding provides the metaphysical basis for customs like studying Mishnah chapters whose initial letters spell out the deceased's name or establishing charitable foundations in their memory.

Yetzirah: the world of formation and the Ruach

The World of Yetzirah (יצירה), or Formation, represents the third cosmic realm in descending order, where spiritual forms become more distinctly defined and differentiated. This is the primary angelic realm, inhabited by various orders of angels including the seraphim, ofanim, and chayot—the beings described in Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot. In Yetzirah, the divine unity present in the higher worlds becomes increasingly diversified, with distinct forms taking shape that will eventually manifest in the physical world.

Yetzirah corresponds to the six sefirot known collectively as Zeir Anpin (the Small Face): Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), Netzach (Victory/Eternity), Hod (Splendor), and Yesod (Foundation). These represent the emotional attributes through which divine energy is channeled and modulated. The creative process referenced in Genesis 2:7—"And the LORD God formed (yatzar) man"—refers primarily to this level of creation, where spiritual forms are shaped and organized in preparation for physical manifestation.

The soul component that corresponds to Yetzirah is the Ruach (רוח), which represents the emotional and ethical dimension of human consciousness. The Ruach encompasses personality, character traits, emotional responses, and moral decision-making. It serves as a mediator between the higher intellectual Neshamah and the more physical Nefesh, translating spiritual insights into emotional responses and ethical actions. In Ma'avar Yabok, the Ruach is described as the aspect of the soul that experiences both the pleasures of paradise and, if necessary, the purifying fires of Gehenna.

After death, the Ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Tachton), which exists within the World of Yetzirah. This lower Garden is described as a realm where souls experience spiritual pleasure appropriate to their level of development. Unlike the upper Garden in Beriah, which is characterized by pure intellectual illumination, the lower Garden offers delights that are more accessible to souls still connected to emotional experience. The text describes how, in this realm, souls enjoy the "radiance of the Shekhinah" filtered through various "chambers" (heikhalot) that correspond to different spiritual levels.

The transition of the Ruach to Yetzirah after death involves passing through various judgments and potential purifications. According to Ma'avar Yabok, the Ruach must undergo a process called "Chibut ha-Kever" (the Beating of the Grave), where four angels examine the soul regarding its conduct in life. This process, more intense for those who lived unrighteously, serves to separate remaining impurities from the Ruach before it can enter the lower Garden. The ritual of seven circuits (hakafot) around the bier during funeral processions is specifically designed to protect the Ruach during this vulnerable phase, creating a protective spiritual barrier against the "external forces" that might interfere with its journey.

Several aspects of Jewish death rituals focus specifically on facilitating the Ruach's journey to Yetzirah. The recitation of Psalm 91 (known as "Shir Shel Pega'im" or "Song of Afflictions") seven times during the funeral procession is believed to provide special protection for the Ruach as it navigates the potentially dangerous territories between worlds. Each recitation corresponds to one of the seven lower sefirot, creating a complete circuit of spiritual protection.

The confession (vidui) recited before death is particularly important for the Ruach's journey. In Ma'avar Yabok, confession is described as having the power to transform the Ruach, allowing it to "pass from the side of impurity to the side of holiness." This transformation creates a spiritual alignment that facilitates the Ruach's ascent to the lower Garden. The alphabetical structure of traditional confession prayers (beginning with "We have sinned, we have betrayed…") corresponds to the 22 letters that, according to Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), are the building blocks of the World of Yetzirah.

The World of Yetzirah corresponds to the Vav (ו) of the Tetragrammaton, representing the vertical channel that connects the upper realms to the lower. This correspondence highlights Yetzirah's nature as an intermediary realm that translates higher spiritual energies into forms that can eventually manifest in the physical world. In death rituals, meditations on this letter activate the corresponding cosmic forces, helping to guide the Ruach through its post-mortem journey.

For those practicing the advanced kabbalistic techniques described in Ma'avar Yabok, specific visualizations involve seeing the deceased surrounded by the six directions (above, below, east, west, north, south) corresponding to the six sefirot of Zeir Anpin. This practice, called "setting a divine name in the six directions," creates a protective sphere around the Ruach as it navigates the complex territories of Yetzirah. Similarly, the practice of reciting the Shema at the moment of death, with specific meditations on divine unifications, is believed to create channels through which the Ruach can ascend safely.

An important concept related to the Ruach's journey through Yetzirah is that of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim). Many death rituals are specifically designed to transform the attribute of Judgment (associated with Gevurah in Yetzirah) into Mercy (associated with Chesed). The recitation of specific divine names, the performance of charitable acts, and the study of Torah in memory of the deceased are all believed to effect this transformation, ensuring that the Ruach encounters merciful rather than severe judgment during its ascent.

The relationship between the living and the dead also operates strongly at the level of Ruach and Yetzirah. According to Ma'avar Yabok, when mourners recite Kaddish or perform mitzvot in memory of the deceased, these actions create "garments of light" for the Ruach in the lower Garden. These spiritual garments enhance the Ruach's capacity to receive divine illumination and protect it from the potentially overwhelming intensity of spiritual light in Yetzirah. This understanding provides the metaphysical basis for the emphasis on Kaddish recitation during the eleven-month mourning period.

Asiyah: the world of action and the Nefesh

The World of Asiyah (עשיה), or Action, represents the lowest of the four cosmic realms, where divine energy manifests in tangible, physical form. In its highest aspect, Asiyah contains spiritual forces directly responsible for governing physical processes, while in its lower aspect, it constitutes the material universe that we perceive with our senses. The name Asiyah derives from the Hebrew verb "to make" or "to do" (עשה), reflecting this world's focus on concrete manifestation and action rather than abstract thought or emotion.

Asiyah corresponds primarily to the sefirah of Malkhut (Kingdom), which represents the final stage in the downward flow of divine energy. In Malkhut, the creative potential present in the higher sefirot becomes actualized in the physical world. The creative process referenced in Genesis 2:2—"And on the seventh day God completed His work (melakhto) which He had made (asah)"—refers to this level of creation, where divine energy finally takes material form.

The soul component that corresponds to Asiyah is the Nefesh (נפש), which represents the most basic level of the soul—the animating life-force that sustains physical existence. The Nefesh is deeply connected to the body and remains with it even after death for a certain period. In Ma'avar Yabok, the Nefesh is described as having two aspects: the "breath of the bones" (havla d'garmi), which represents the natural heat that remains even after death, and the "distress of the flesh" (atzvona d'bishrah), which experiences the pain of decomposition.

After death, the Nefesh initially remains near the grave, gradually disconnecting from the body as it decomposes. According to Ma'avar Yabok, the Nefesh hovers near the body for the first three days after death (when decomposition is most intense), gradually ascending to a realm called "the Court of Death" (Chatzer Mavet). This realm exists within the World of Asiyah and serves as a transitional space where the Nefesh begins to adjust to existence without the physical body. The thirty-day mourning period (sheloshim) corresponds to the Nefesh's gradual ascent through the thirty spiritual levels that separate Asiyah from the higher worlds.

An important concept related to the Nefesh's post-mortem experience is that of the luz bone—a small, indestructible part of the body (variously identified as located at the base of the skull or at the bottom of the spine) that preserves a connection between the Nefesh and the body even after death. This connection serves as the nucleus for eventual resurrection, when the body will be rebuilt from this seed. The belief in this physical anchor for resurrection informs certain burial practices, particularly the care taken not to damage the body unnecessarily.

Many aspects of Jewish burial practices focus specifically on providing comfort and protection for the Nefesh during its transitional period. The washing of the body (tahara) is understood not merely as a physical cleansing but as a spiritual purification that benefits the Nefesh. The recitation of specific verses during the washing of different body parts creates a correspondence between physical cleansing and spiritual purification, helping to free the Nefesh from its attachment to the body.

The custom of burial in a simple wooden coffin, rather than an elaborate metal one, is related to the concept that the body should return to the earth as quickly as possible. This facilitates the Nefesh's gradual release from its physical attachment. Similarly, the prohibition against embalming in traditional Jewish practice stems from the understanding that artificial preservation of the body prolongs the Nefesh's attachment, potentially causing it distress.

The recitation of Psalms at the graveside, particularly Psalm 91, is believed to provide protection for the Nefesh during its vulnerable transitional period. The custom of placing earth from the Land of Israel in the coffin is understood to provide comfort to the Nefesh, connecting it to the sacred soil that will play a role in resurrection. Similarly, the practice of building a proper tombstone (typically after the first year) serves both as a marker for the living and as a "dwelling place" for the Nefesh when it visits the grave.

The World of Asiyah corresponds to the final Heh (ה) of the Tetragrammaton, representing the manifestation and actualization of divine potential. This correspondence highlights Asiyah's nature as the realm where divine energy completes its journey from potential to actual, from abstract to concrete. In death rituals, meditations on this letter activate the corresponding cosmic forces, helping to provide comfort and protection for the Nefesh in its transitional state.

For those practicing the advanced kabbalistic techniques described in Ma'avar Yabok, specific visualizations involve seeing the deceased's body surrounded by divine light, with each organ connected to its corresponding spiritual source. This practice, called "unifying the dwellings" (yichud ha-mezuzot), helps to disentangle the Nefesh from its physical attachments while maintaining the essential connection through the luz bone that will enable eventual resurrection.

The relationship between the living and the dead also operates at the level of Nefesh and Asiyah. According to Ma'avar Yabok, when mourners visit the grave and pray there, their presence provides comfort to the Nefesh, particularly during the first year after death when the connection to the physical world remains strongest. The custom of placing small stones on the grave during visits serves as a tangible marker of this ongoing connection between the living and the dead in the physical realm of Asiyah.

An important concept related to the Nefesh's experience in Asiyah after death is that of "Chibut ha-Kever" (the Beating of the Grave). This process, which primarily affects the Nefesh, involves a reckoning with the physical actions performed during life. The intensity of this process varies depending on the individual's conduct, with those who lived righteously experiencing it as a mild purification rather than a painful punishment. Many burial customs, such as the placement of the body directly in contact with the earth rather than in an elaborate casket, are designed to mitigate the intensity of Chibut ha-Kever.

The soul's journey through the four worlds

The kabbalistic doctrine of the Four Worlds, when integrated with the understanding of the soul's multi-layered structure, provides a comprehensive framework for understanding the spiritual mechanics of death and the purpose of associated rituals. After death, the soul components embark on distinct but interconnected journeys through the cosmic hierarchy, each requiring specific forms of guidance and protection. Jewish death rituals, as codified in works like Ma'avar Yabok, are designed as spiritual technologies to facilitate these complex journeys.

The process begins even before physical death occurs. According to Ma'avar Yabok, thirty days before death (during what is called the "night of sealing"), the external aspect of the tzelem (spiritual image) begins to separate from the body. This initial separation may manifest as changes in the person's appearance or demeanor, often noticed by those with spiritual sensitivity. As death approaches, the internal aspect of the tzelem also begins to withdraw, allowing the soul components to prepare for their separate journeys.

At the moment of death, a complex process of separation begins. The highest aspects of the soul—Yechidah and Chayah—which correspond to the World of Atzilut, return fully to their divine source. For most individuals, these aspects have remained primarily in Atzilut even during life, descending only partially into the lower worlds. Their return represents the reunification of the divine spark with its source.

The Neshamah, corresponding to the World of Beriah, begins its ascent to the upper Garden of Eden. This journey involves passing through the "River of Fire" (Nehar Dinur), a purification process whose intensity varies depending on the individual's spiritual state. For the righteous, this river appears as a refreshing bath; for others, it may involve more intense purification. In the upper Garden, the Neshamah experiences direct insight into divine wisdom, studying Torah from the Divine Presence itself.

The Ruach, corresponding to the World of Yetzirah, undergoes a process called "Chibut ha-Kever" (the Beating of the Grave), where four angels examine the soul regarding its conduct in life. After this examination, the Ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden, where it experiences spiritual pleasure appropriate to its level of development. If necessary, the Ruach may undergo periods in Gehenna for purification before entering the Garden.

The Nefesh, corresponding to the World of Asiyah, initially remains near the grave, gradually disconnecting from the body as it decomposes. Over time, the Nefesh ascends through thirty spiritual levels until it reaches the "Court of Death," a transitional realm within Asiyah. A small connection remains through the luz bone, which will serve as the nucleus for eventual resurrection.

During this complex separation and ascension process, the soul components remain connected to each other through spiritual "threads" or "cords." On Sabbaths, festivals, and other sacred occasions, these components may temporarily reunite, allowing the soul to experience more complete spiritual awareness. This understanding informs the custom of reciting special prayers for the deceased on Sabbaths and festivals, when the soul's components are in a state of greater unity and more receptive to spiritual influence.

The rituals performed by the living play a crucial role in facilitating these complex journeys. The confession (vidui) recited before death prepares the soul for its transition, creating spiritual alignments that will assist its passage through the cosmic hierarchy. The washing of the body (tahara) after death serves as a physical analog to the spiritual purification processes that the soul undergoes, with specific verses recited for different body parts creating correspondences between physical and spiritual cleansing.

The funeral service, with its psalms, prayers, and eulogies, provides spiritual protection for the soul during its vulnerable transitional period. The seven circuits (hakafot) around the bier create a protective spiritual barrier against the "external forces" that might interfere with the soul's journey. The recitation of the Tzidduk ha-Din ("Justification of Divine Judgment") prayer acknowledges the righteousness of God's decree while seeking mercy for the departed soul.

After burial, the mourning practices observed by the living continue to provide support for the soul's journey. The seven-day shiva period corresponds to the soul's passage through seven spiritual chambers or gates. The thirty-day sheloshim period parallels the Nefesh's ascent through thirty spiritual levels. The recitation of Kaddish during the eleven-month mourning period creates "garments of light" for the Ruach in the lower Garden of Eden.

The ongoing relationship between the living and the dead operates across all four cosmic worlds. When descendants or disciples study Torah and perform good deeds in memory of the deceased, these actions create "crowns" for the Neshamah in the upper Garden, enhancing its spiritual status. Charitable acts performed in the deceased's name generate "merit" (zechut) that assists the soul at all levels of its journey, from the Nefesh in Asiyah to the highest aspects in Atzilut.

Understanding this complex cosmic framework reveals the profound spiritual technology embedded in Jewish death rituals. These practices are not merely cultural customs or psychological coping mechanisms; they are sophisticated spiritual tools designed to navigate the complex territories that lie beyond physical existence. From the washing of the body to the recitation of Kaddish, each ritual element serves a specific function in facilitating the soul's journey through the Four Worlds.

For the kabbalists, and particularly for Rabbi Aaron Berechia in Ma'avar Yabok, this understanding transforms death from a tragedy to be feared into a transition to be navigated with wisdom and precision. Just as Jacob crossed the ford of Yabok before his transformative encounter with the divine, so too does the soul cross the metaphysical "ford" between worlds—a crossing that, when properly facilitated through ritual action, leads to spiritual elevation and the fulfillment of the soul's cosmic purpose.

Appendix D

Divine names and their mystical functions

In Jewish mystical thought, divine names represent more than mere designations for the Deity—they are understood as active channels of divine power that mediate between human consciousness and the infinite divine reality. Ma'avar Yabok, Rabbi Aaron Berechia of Modena's comprehensive guide to Jewish death rituals, presents divine names as essential components in facilitating the soul's transition from this world to the next. Throughout the text, these names function not merely as appellations but as mystical instruments with distinct metaphysical properties, each associated with different aspects of the divine and serving specific functions in death rituals.

The kabbalistic understanding of divine names presupposes that Hebrew letters possess intrinsic cosmic potency, embodying creative forces through which God brought the world into existence. As the Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) states, God "engraved and created His world with three books (sefarim): with text (sefer), with number (sefar), and with communication (sippur)." This foundational concept establishes Hebrew letters and their combinations as both the building blocks of creation and the means through which humans can interact with divine realms. In Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia draws extensively on this tradition, integrating divine names into every aspect of deathbed, funeral, and mourning rituals.

The mystical approach to divine names derives primarily from the Zohar and later kabbalistic works, particularly those influenced by Lurianic Kabbalah. Rabbi Aaron Berechia, who identifies Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano as his teacher, stands firmly within this tradition. His systematic application of divine names in death rituals reflects the belief that these names provide access points to different aspects of divinity, allowing humans to navigate the complex relationship between divine mercy and judgment that becomes particularly acute at the moment of death.

Ma'avar Yabok presents death as a spiritual transition rather than merely a biological cessation, requiring precise ritual actions with proper mystical intentions (kavvanot) to ensure the soul's safe passage. Divine names constitute the core of these intentions, with each name corresponding to specific divine attributes, cosmic realms, and soul components. The proper invocation of these names, according to the text, creates metaphysical pathways for the soul's ascent, mitigates harsh judgments, and establishes protective shields against negative spiritual forces.

This appendix explores the principal divine names appearing in Ma'avar Yabok, examining their origins, specific functions in death rituals, and the complex system of correspondences through which they operate. We will see how Aaron Berechia integrates earlier kabbalistic traditions into a comprehensive framework that guides religious practitioners through every stage of death-related rituals, from attending the deathbed to post-burial practices. Understanding this system of divine names provides essential context for comprehending the metaphysical dimensions of Jewish death rituals as presented in Ma'avar Yabok.

The tetragrammaton (YHVH) in death rituals

The four-letter divine name YHVH (יהו״ה), traditionally referred to as the Tetragrammaton or Shem HaMeforash (the Explicit Name), occupies a central position in Ma'avar Yabok's mystical system. This name is considered the most sacred in Jewish tradition, representing God's essential nature and serving as the primary channel for divine influence in the world. Throughout Ma'avar Yabok, the Tetragrammaton appears in various contexts related to death rituals, with multiple functions depending on its vowelization, combinations, and the specific intention (kavvanah) accompanying its contemplation.

Aaron Berechia presents the Tetragrammaton as corresponding primarily to the divine attribute of mercy (rachamim), in contrast to divine names associated with judgment (particularly Elohim). This polarity between mercy and judgment forms a crucial theological framework for understanding death in Ma'avar Yabok. The text consistently presents death-related rituals as opportunities to "sweeten judgments" (mituk ha-dinim), transforming the potentially harsh experience of death into a merciful transition. The Tetragrammaton serves as the primary instrument for this transformation.

The letters of the Tetragrammaton are associated with different aspects of divinity within the kabbalistic system of the ten sefirot (divine emanations). The first letter, Yod (י), corresponds to Chokhmah (Wisdom); the first Heh (ה) to Binah (Understanding); the Vav (ו) to the six middot (emotional attributes) from Chesed to Yesod; and the final Heh (ה) to Malkhut (Kingdom). This correspondence system allows the Tetragrammaton to function as a comprehensive channel connecting all levels of divine reality.

In Ma'avar Yabok, the Tetragrammaton appears with various vowelizations, each serving a specific metaphysical function. The text refers to "YHVH with the segol vowel points" (havayah nekudah segol), "YHVH with sheva vowel pointing" (havayah nekudah sheva), and "YHVH with the cholam vowel pointing" (havayah nekudah cholam). Each vowelization activates different spiritual channels, directing divine influence to specific cosmic realms and aspects of the soul.

One of the most significant applications of the Tetragrammaton in Ma'avar Yabok involves the 112 biblical verses recommended for recitation at the time of death. Of these, exactly 26 verses correspond to the Tetragrammaton, with 26 being the numerical value (gematria) of YHVH. These verses form part of a carefully structured mystical system designed to facilitate the soul's transition. According to Aaron Berechia, proper recitation of these verses with the correct intention regarding the divine name creates a spiritual vehicle for the soul's ascent through cosmic realms.

The text also describes specific meditations on the Tetragrammaton for those attending a dying person. During these critical moments, contemplation of the divine name with proper intention is believed to shield the departing soul from negative forces while opening channels of divine mercy. Aaron Berechia instructs that when death is imminent, those present should focus on unifying the Tetragrammaton with other divine names, particularly Adonai, creating a comprehensive spiritual protection.

The Tetragrammaton also features prominently in Ma'avar Yabok's treatment of the Shema prayer as a deathbed practice. Following Rabbi Akiva's example of reciting the Shema at his martyrdom, the dying person is encouraged to recite or contemplate this prayer with specific attention to the divine unifications it contains. The declaration "YHVH is One" is understood as facilitating what the text calls "death by divine kiss" (mittat neshikah), considered the most elevated form of death where the soul departs in mystical union with the divine.

Furthermore, Ma'avar Yabok presents various expansions of the Tetragrammaton, including "the divine name YHVH spelled fully with Yuds" and other alphanumeric formulations. These expansions serve to amplify specific aspects of divine influence, creating more specialized channels for divine mercy during the death process. The text also references combinations of the Tetragrammaton with other divine names, particularly "YHVH and ADNY interwoven" (havayah ve-adnut meshulabim), which represents the mystical union of masculine and feminine divine principles considered essential for cosmic harmony.

Through these varied applications, the Tetragrammaton emerges in Ma'avar Yabok as the primary divine name for facilitating the soul's peaceful transition at death. Its fundamental association with mercy serves to counterbalance the judgment inherent in the death process, while its connections to all levels of divine reality enable it to guide the soul through the various spiritual realms it must traverse after departing from the body.

Adonai (ADNY): the divine feminine and judgment

The divine name Adonai (אד״נ״י), often represented in kabbalistic texts with its Hebrew letters Alef-Dalet-Nun-Yod, holds a special place in Ma'avar Yabok's mystical system. While in standard Jewish practice Adonai serves as the vocalized substitute for the ineffable Tetragrammaton, in kabbalistic thought it represents a distinct divine aspect with its own metaphysical properties. Throughout Ma'avar Yabok, Adonai is consistently associated with Malkhut (Kingdom), the tenth and lowest sefirah, which represents the divine feminine principle often referred to as the Shekhinah (Divine Presence).

In Aaron Berechia's kabbalistic framework, Adonai embodies the attribute of judgment (din) and governs the realm that the soul must first navigate after death. The text refers to this realm as the "feminine world" (alma de-nukba), contrasting it with the "masculine world" (alma de-dekhura) associated with the Tetragrammaton and higher spiritual realms. This gendered cosmic structure informs many of the ritual practices described in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly those designed to elevate the soul beyond the initial stage of judgment represented by Adonai.

The gematria (numerical value) of Adonai is 65, which explains why exactly 65 verses are included in the collection of 112 biblical verses to be recited at the time of death. These 65 verses specifically correspond to Adonai and are intended to address the soul's passage through the realm of judgment. According to Ma'avar Yabok, proper recitation of these verses with the correct intention regarding Adonai helps mitigate harsh judgments and facilitates the soul's elevation to higher realms.

A central concept in Ma'avar Yabok is the need to "sweeten judgments" (mituk ha-dinim or bisum ha-din), transforming the potentially harsh experience of divine judgment into a merciful process. This transformation is often achieved through the mystical unification of Adonai with the Tetragrammaton, representing the union of feminine and masculine divine principles, judgment and mercy. The text frequently refers to "YHVH and ADNY" (havayah ve-adnut) as paired divine names that need to be unified through proper ritual intentions.

One particularly significant formulation in Ma'avar Yabok is "YHVH and ADNY interwoven" (havayah ve-adnut meshulabim), describing a specific contemplative practice where the letters of these two divine names are mentally intertwined to create a unified channel of divine influence. This practice is recommended at various points in the death ritual, particularly when reciting the Shema prayer and during the tahara (ritual washing of the deceased).

In burial prayers, Adonai features prominently as the divine name most directly connected to the physical body and its return to earth. The text explains that the body derives from the realm of Malkhut/Adonai, while higher soul components connect to other divine names and sefirot. Funeral prayers therefore often invoke Adonai to facilitate the proper reintegration of the body with its source, while simultaneously calling upon other divine names to guide the soul's ascent.

Ma'avar Yabok also refers to Adonai as "Tzedek, the lower Mother" (Tzedek ima tata'ah), highlighting its connection to both justice (tzedek) and the feminine divine principle. This designation emphasizes Adonai's role in receiving and judging souls as they depart from the physical world. The text explains that proper ritual actions and intentions can transform this judgment into a form of purification that prepares the soul for higher spiritual realms.

During the seven days of mourning (shiva), Ma'avar Yabok prescribes specific prayers and meditations focused on Adonai, helping to guide the soul through what the text describes as seven celestial chambers or palaces (heikhalot) within the realm of Malkhut. These chambers represent progressive stages of the soul's purification after death, with the divine name Adonai serving as both gateway and guide through this initial phase of the afterlife journey.

The mourning rituals themselves are explained as creating cosmic effects within the realm of Adonai/Malkhut, with each ritual action below having a corresponding impact above. This metaphysical correspondence between human action and divine response forms a central principle in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death rituals, with Adonai serving as the primary channel through which this correspondence operates.

Through these various functions, Adonai emerges in Ma'avar Yabok as a divine name of profound significance for death rituals, representing both the challenges the soul faces in its initial post-mortem state and the means through which these challenges can be transformed into opportunities for spiritual elevation.

Ehyeh (אהיה): divine becoming and soul elevation

The divine name Ehyeh (אהיה), meaning "I Will Be" or "I Am That I Am," appears in Ma'avar Yabok as a powerful mystical name particularly relevant to the soul's elevation after death. This name, first revealed to Moses at the burning bush (Exodus 3:14), represents divine becoming and potentiality within Aaron Berechia's kabbalistic system. Throughout the text, Ehyeh is associated with Binah (Understanding), the third sefirah, which functions as the supernal source of souls and the ultimate destination for their return after death.

Ma'avar Yabok refers to Ehyeh as connected to the "supernal Mother" (Ima Ila'ah) or "supernal Eden" (Eden Ila'ah), portraying it as the divine aspect that initially emanates souls and ultimately receives them back after their journey through lower realms. This cyclic process of emanation and return provides the metaphysical framework for understanding death as a form of spiritual homecoming rather than an ending.

The gematria of Ehyeh is 21, which explains why exactly 21 biblical verses from the collection of 112 verses for the dying correspond specifically to this divine name. These verses are described as creating a channel for the soul's ascent to the highest realms associated with Binah/Ehyeh. According to Aaron Berechia, proper recitation of these verses with the correct intention facilitates what the text calls "death by divine kiss" (mittat neshikah), the most elevated form of death reserved for the righteous.

In Ma'avar Yabok's deathbed rituals, Ehyeh features prominently in prayers designed to release the soul from its attachment to the body. The text instructs those attending the dying to meditate on Ehyeh with specific vowelizations that activate its potential to draw the soul upward. This practice is described as creating a "supernal attraction" that gently separates the soul from physical existence while minimizing suffering.

The divine name Ehyeh also appears in Ma'avar Yabok's instructions for tahara (ritual washing of the deceased). During this ritual, contemplation of Ehyeh while pouring water over specific body parts is said to facilitate the elevation of corresponding soul aspects to their source in Binah. The text prescribes a precise sequence of washings, each accompanied by biblical verses and intentions focused on different divine names, with Ehyeh featured prominently when addressing the higher soul components.

Ma'avar Yabok discusses the mystical significance of Ehyeh in relation to the afterlife journey, describing how this divine name opens what the text calls the "concealed channel from Keter to Binah" (tzinor ha-ne'elam mi-Keter le-Binah). This metaphysical pathway represents the highest route of ascent for the soul, bypassing lower realms of judgment and allowing direct access to the supernal source. According to Aaron Berechia, this channel opens fully on Yom Kippur, which explains the special efficacy of prayers for the dead on this holy day.

The text also discusses combinations of Ehyeh with other divine names, particularly "YHVH and Ehyeh" (havayah ve-ehyeh), representing the mystical union of Binah (Understanding) and the six emotional attributes governed by the Tetragrammaton. This combination is described as particularly powerful for elevating the soul beyond the realm of judgment and into the "supernal delight" (oneg ha-elyon) associated with Binah.

Aaron Berechia explains that the threefold repetition of the confession formula "I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have rebelled" (chatati, aviti, pashati) corresponds to the three letters of Ehyeh, creating a mystical alignment that transforms confession into a vehicle for the soul's ascent to Binah. This exemplifies the text's consistent approach of finding correspondences between ritual actions and divine names to create cosmic effects.

For those who have achieved high spiritual levels during life, Ma'avar Yabok describes a direct connection between their souls and the divine name Ehyeh. These elevated souls are said to bypass lower judgments entirely, ascending directly to what the text calls the "supernal whiteness" (loven ha-elyon) associated with Ehyeh. This concept provides consolation by suggesting that the righteous experience death not as judgment but as immediate spiritual elevation.

Through these various functions, Ehyeh emerges in Ma'avar Yabok as a divine name particularly concerned with the soul's ultimate destination and highest potential. While Adonai governs the initial phase of the afterlife journey and the Tetragrammaton mediates between judgment and mercy, Ehyeh represents the final ascent to the soul's divine source—the culmination of the spiritual process that begins at death.

The 42-letter divine name (Shem Mem-Bet)

The 42-letter Divine Name, referred to in Ma'avar Yabok as "Shem Mem-Bet" (שם מ״ב), represents one of the most powerful mystical formulations in Jewish esoteric tradition. This name receives extensive treatment in Aaron Berechia's text, with multiple chapters dedicated to its structure, origins, cosmic organization, and specific applications in death rituals. Unlike the Tetragrammaton or Adonai, the 42-letter Name is not a single word but a complex sequence of letters divided into seven groups of six letters each, often represented by their initial letters or through acrostics.

The first group of letters, "ABGITATZ" (אבגיתץ״), is frequently mentioned in Ma'avar Yabok as shorthand for the entire name. The text also refers to the last group, "SHAKUTZIT" (שקוצי״ת), creating a symbolic representation of the complete 42-letter sequence. According to kabbalistic tradition, this name derives from the first 42 letters of the creation narrative in Genesis, or alternatively, from permutations of the Tetragrammaton, though Aaron Berechia does not explicitly commit to either origin theory.

In Ma'avar Yabok, the 42-letter Name serves primarily as a protective force during the soul's vulnerable transition at death. The text describes this name as creating a metaphysical shield that prevents negative spiritual entities (referred to as "external forces" or chitzonim) from interfering with the soul's journey. Aaron Berechia provides detailed instructions for how attendants at a deathbed should meditate on this name, visualizing it as surrounding the dying person in letters of light.

The ritual of seven circuits (hakafot) around the deceased's bier before burial is directly connected to the seven groups of the 42-letter Name in Ma'avar Yabok. Each circuit corresponds to one group of six letters, with specific prayers structured around these letters to be recited during each circuit. This practice is described as creating a sevenfold protection that accompanies the soul through its initial post-mortem journey while simultaneously driving away harmful spiritual forces.

The text associates each of the seven groups with a specific sefirah, creating a comprehensive system of correspondences that maps the 42-letter Name onto the kabbalistic Tree of Life. The first group corresponds to Chesed (Loving-kindness), the second to Gevurah (Strength), the third to Tiferet (Beauty), and so on through all seven lower sefirot. This correspondence system enables the name to function as a channel connecting all levels of divine reality, making it particularly effective for guiding the soul through various cosmic realms.

Ma'avar Yabok contains specific instructions for visualizing the 42-letter Name during the recitation of Isaiah's throne vision (Chapter 6:1-3), which the text recommends as a key practice when death is imminent. This visualization involves complex mental arrangements of letters, combined with specific breathing techniques and physical gestures like raising the hands. According to Aaron Berechia, this practice facilitates what he calls "the elevation of divine sparks" (ha'ala'at nitzotzot), a concept derived from Lurianic Kabbalah referring to the liberation of divine light trapped in material existence.

The 42-letter Name also features prominently in protective prayers recited after death to shield the soul during its initial vulnerable state. The text presents formulations like "Ana Bekoach" (אנא בכח), a prayer containing 42 words that serve as a vessel for the power of the 42-letter Name. This prayer appears specifically in the context of deathbed rituals, where it is to be recited to facilitate the soul's peaceful transition.

Aaron Berechia explains that the numerical value 42 has special significance because it represents the mystical "42 journeys" of the Israelites in the wilderness, which serve as a metaphor for the soul's journey after death. Just as the Israelites traveled through 42 stations before reaching the Promised Land, the soul traverses 42 spiritual stages before reaching its divine destination. The 42-letter Name thus functions as both map and passport for this metaphysical journey.

The text provides detailed instructions for various deathbed practices involving the 42-letter Name, including specific visualizations of the name in different colors and configurations depending on the condition of the dying person. These practices are described as capable of transforming even difficult deaths into peaceful transitions, demonstrating the name's power to override negative judgments and spiritual obstacles.

In the context of tahara (ritual washing of the deceased), Ma'avar Yabok prescribes meditations on the 42-letter Name while pouring water over the body. This practice is said to cleanse not only the physical remains but also the "garment of the soul" (levush ha-nefesh), a subtle energetic envelope that accompanies the soul after death. The 42 letters correspond to 42 channels of purification that restore the soul's original luminosity.

Through these varied applications, the 42-letter Divine Name emerges in Ma'avar Yabok as a comprehensive spiritual technology for managing the complex transition of death. Its extensive treatment in the text reflects Aaron Berechia's commitment to providing practical mystical guidance for this critical spiritual passage, combining protective, elevating, and transformative functions in a single powerful formulation.

The 72-letter divine name (Shem Ayin-Bet)

The 72-letter Divine Name, referred to in Ma'avar Yabok as "Shem Ayin-Bet" (שם ע״ב), represents another powerful mystical formulation with specific applications in death rituals. This name consists of 72 three-letter combinations derived from three verses in Exodus (14:19-21), each containing exactly 72 letters. When these verses are arranged in a specific pattern (the first verse written forward, the second backward, and the third forward), they yield 72 three-letter sequences that collectively form this extended divine name.

In Ma'avar Yabok, the 72-letter Name is primarily associated with angelic forces that guide and protect the soul during its post-mortem journey. Aaron Berechia describes this name as creating what he calls "72 bridges of kindness" (ayin-bet gishrei ha-chesed), metaphysical pathways that allow the soul to safely traverse potentially dangerous spiritual territories. These bridges connect different cosmic realms, providing the soul with secure passage through the complex metaphysical landscape it encounters after death.

The text associates the 72-letter Name with Chesed (Loving-kindness), the fourth sefirah, positioning it as a powerful force for mitigating judgments and attracting divine mercy. Unlike the 42-letter Name, which functions primarily as protection against external forces, the 72-letter Name actively transforms the spiritual environment, creating what Aaron Berechia calls "illuminated pathways" (netivin de-nehirin) through otherwise darkened realms.

Ma'avar Yabok presents specific applications of the 72-letter Name in protective prayers for the dying, particularly recommending its use when the dying person appears to be struggling with the departure of the soul. The text explains that each three-letter sequence within the name corresponds to a specific angelic force that can assist with different aspects of the death transition. These angels are described as "escorts" (melavin) who guide the soul safely through the initial stages of its journey.

Aaron Berechia provides instructions for visualizing the 72 three-letter sequences arranged in specific geometric patterns around the dying person. These visualizations, combined with whispered recitations of the corresponding angel names, are said to create a protective shield that prevents harmful spiritual entities from interfering with the soul's departure. The text emphasizes that these practices should be performed discreetly, without disturbing the dying person's concentration.

The 72-letter Name also features in Ma'avar Yabok's instructions for tahara (ritual washing of the deceased). The text recommends that those performing this ritual mentally divide the body into 72 segments, each corresponding to one three-letter sequence of the name. As water is poured over each segment, the corresponding angel is invoked to purify and protect that aspect of the deceased's being. This practice is described as ensuring that all components of the person's spiritual structure receive proper attention during the purification process.

During the funeral procession, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes meditations on the 72-letter Name as a means of creating what the text calls a "celestial escort" (livuy shel ma'alah) that accompanies the soul. This escort is described as consisting of 72 angelic beings who form a protective entourage around the soul, shielding it from accusers and guiding it toward its proper place in the afterlife realms.

The text associates specific three-letter sequences from the 72-letter Name with particular transitions in the afterlife journey. For example, the sequence מה״ש (MHS) is described as assisting the soul's passage through what Aaron Berechia calls the "River of Fire" (nehar dinur), a metaphysical barrier that souls must cross after death. Other sequences correspond to entrance points for different chambers or palaces (heikhalot) that the soul must navigate.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that the 72-letter Name has special efficacy for elevating the soul because it connects to what the text calls the "World of Mercy" (alma de-rachamei), a cosmic domain where harsh judgments cannot penetrate. By invoking this name with proper intention, those conducting death rituals can help ensure that the deceased's soul bypasses or minimizes exposure to judgmental forces, experiencing instead a direct elevation to realms of divine benevolence.

The text also discusses how the 72-letter Name interacts with the three primary components of the soul: Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah. According to Aaron Berechia, each component requires different aspects of the name to guide its specific journey. The Nefesh, which remains closest to the physical world, is assisted by the first 24 three-letter sequences; the Ruach, which ascends to intermediate realms, by the middle 24; and the Neshamah, which reaches the highest realms, by the final 24 sequences.

Through these various applications, the 72-letter Divine Name functions in Ma'avar Yabok as a comprehensive system for managing the soul's cosmic ascent after death. While other divine names address specific aspects of the death process, the 72-letter Name provides a complete metaphysical infrastructure for the soul's journey, combining protective, guiding, and elevating functions through its connection to angelic forces and pathways of divine mercy.

Unification of divine names: cosmic integration

A fundamental principle in Ma'avar Yabok's mystical system is the unification (yichud) of divine names to create powerful spiritual effects during death rituals. Rather than treating divine names as isolated forces, Aaron Berechia consistently emphasizes their integration and interaction, presenting death rituals as opportunities to facilitate cosmic unifications that benefit both the deceased and the broader spiritual universe.

The most frequently mentioned unification involves the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) and Adonai (ADNY), represented in the text as "YHVH and ADNY" (havayah ve-adnut). This pairing symbolizes the union of divine masculine and feminine principles, or more specifically, the harmonization of mercy (represented by YHVH) and judgment (represented by Adonai). Aaron Berechia describes this unification as creating a balanced channel for the soul's transition, ensuring that it experiences neither excessive severity nor undisciplined compassion.

Ma'avar Yabok presents several methods for achieving this unification, including the formula "YHVH and ADNY interwoven" (havayah ve-adnut meshulabim). This practice involves mentally interweaving the letters of these two names to create a unified channel of divine influence. The text explains that this interweaving mirrors a cosmic process occurring in higher realms when the unification is properly executed, creating what Aaron Berechia calls "supernal unions" (zivugim ila'in) that facilitate the soul's ascent.

Another significant unification involves the divine names YHVH and Ehyeh, represented as "Havayah and Ehyeh" (havayah ve-ehyeh). This combination connects the realms of Tiferet (associated with YHVH) and Binah (associated with Ehyeh), creating a direct channel for the soul's elevation to higher spiritual dimensions. Aaron Berechia recommends this unification particularly during the recitation of the Shema at the moment of death, describing it as facilitating the mystical experience of "death by divine kiss" (mittat neshikah).

The text also discusses unifications involving all three primary divine names—YHVH, Adonai, and Ehyeh—noting that their combined numerical value equals 112, which is also the gematria of Yabok (יב״ק). This numerical correspondence explains why Ma'avar Yabok prescribes exactly 112 biblical verses for recitation at the time of death: 21 corresponding to Ehyeh, 26 to YHVH, and 65 to Adonai. According to Aaron Berechia, proper recitation of these verses with the correct intentions regarding the corresponding divine names creates a comprehensive unification that addresses all aspects of the soul's journey.

More complex unifications involve combining the explicit divine names with expanded formulations and permutations. Ma'avar Yabok discusses practices such as meditating on "the divine name YHVH spelled fully with Yuds" and various other alphanumeric expansions. These expanded formulations serve to amplify specific aspects of divine influence, creating specialized channels for different components of the soul during their distinct journeys through the afterlife realms.

The text presents specific visualizations for achieving divine name unifications at critical moments in the death process. For example, Aaron Berechia instructs that when death is imminent, those present should visualize the letters of the Tetragrammaton surrounded by the letters of Adonai, creating a protective shield around the departing soul. This visualization is accompanied by whispered recitations of biblical verses that contain these divine names, establishing a rhythm that guides the soul's exit from the body.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that divine name unifications have particular potency during death rituals because the boundary between physical and spiritual realms temporarily dissolves at this transition point. The text describes death as creating an "opening of gates" (petichat she'arim) that allows more direct access to higher spiritual dimensions. Divine name unifications serve to structure and direct the energies flowing through these open gates, ensuring they benefit rather than overwhelm the departing soul.

The concept of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) features prominently in discussions of divine name unifications. Aaron Berechia explains that the proper integration of divine names transforms what might otherwise be experienced as harsh judgment into a process of purification and elevation. This transformation is described as occurring through the mystical mechanism of redirecting divine energies from the "left side" (associated with judgment) to the "right side" (associated with mercy).

Beyond their effect on the individual soul, divine name unifications in death rituals are presented as having cosmic significance. Aaron Berechia explains that these practices contribute to what he calls "rectification of the upper realms" (tikkun ha-olamot ha-elyonim), helping to restore cosmic harmony disrupted by various metaphysical factors. Death rituals thus become opportunities for tikkun olam (world-repair) in its most profound sense, with each properly conducted ritual contributing to universal spiritual restoration.

The text emphasizes that divine name unifications must be performed with proper kavvanah (intention), requiring both intellectual understanding and emotional alignment. Those performing death rituals are instructed to cultivate specific mental and emotional states corresponding to different divine names and their unifications. For example, meditations on YHVH should evoke compassion and expansiveness, while meditations on Adonai should evoke reverence and containment. The proper balance and integration of these states creates the ideal condition for effective divine name unification.

Through these various practices, the unification of divine names emerges in Ma'avar Yabok as both the method and goal of death rituals—the means through which the soul navigates its transition and the cosmic result of properly conducted rituals. This dual function highlights Aaron Berechia's view of death not merely as an individual passage but as an opportunity for universal spiritual harmonization.

Divine names as cosmic technology

In Ma'avar Yabok, divine names function as a sophisticated cosmic technology for navigating the complex transition of death. Aaron Berechia presents these names not merely as designations for God but as active channels of divine influence that can be precisely applied to facilitate the soul's journey. This approach transforms death rituals from mere customs into spiritual techniques with profound metaphysical effects.

The system of divine names in Ma'avar Yabok reflects a comprehensive kabbalistic worldview in which the boundaries between physical and spiritual realms are permeable, particularly at moments of transition like death. Divine names serve as the primary means for managing this permeability, allowing controlled interactions between realms while maintaining necessary protections and boundaries.

Aaron Berechia's treatment of divine names demonstrates the integration of earlier kabbalistic traditions—particularly those deriving from the Zohar and Lurianic Kabbalah—into a practical manual for religious practitioners. Rather than presenting these traditions as abstract theological concepts, Ma'avar Yabok translates them into specific ritual actions with clear instructions regarding the application of divine names at each stage of the death process.

The text consistently emphasizes that proper intention (kavvanah) is essential when working with divine names. It is not enough to mechanically recite or visualize these names; one must understand their significance and cultivate the appropriate spiritual state corresponding to each name. This requirement transforms death rituals into opportunities for deep spiritual practice not only for the dying but also for those attending them.

The metaphysical framework underlying Ma'avar Yabok's system of divine names presents death as a transition rather than an ending—a passage from one state of being to another that requires proper navigation. Divine names serve as both map and vehicle for this navigation, guiding the soul through various spiritual territories while protecting it from potential dangers along the way.

For modern readers, the elaborate system of divine names in Ma'avar Yabok may seem distant from contemporary approaches to death and dying. However, this system addresses universal human concerns about the meaning of death, the fate of consciousness, and the possibility of continued existence beyond physical dissolution. Through its sophisticated application of divine names, Ma'avar Yabok offers a response to these concerns that affirms both the reality of death and the possibility of transcendence.

Moreover, the text's emphasis on community involvement in death rituals, facilitated through the shared contemplation of divine names, provides a model for addressing death not as an isolated individual experience but as a communal transition with cosmic significance. This approach contrasts sharply with modern tendencies to isolate and medicalize death, offering instead a vision of death integrated into the spiritual life of the community.

While few contemporary readers may engage with divine names in the precise manner prescribed by Ma'avar Yabok, understanding this system provides valuable insight into Jewish mystical approaches to death and reveals the profound spiritual resources that traditional practices can offer for confronting mortality. The elaborate correspondences between divine names, cosmic realms, and soul components present death not as a chaotic rupture but as a structured transition within a meaningful spiritual cosmos.

In the final analysis, Ma'avar Yabok's system of divine names represents one of the most sophisticated attempts in Jewish tradition to address the ultimate human transition through a combination of mystical insight and practical ritual. Its comprehensive integration of divine names into every aspect of death rituals demonstrates a commitment to honoring this transition with the full resources of Jewish spiritual tradition, transforming death from a merely biological event into a meaningful spiritual passage.

Appendix E

Deathbed practices and the vidui (confession) ritual

Within the rich tapestry of Jewish religious life, few moments hold as much spiritual gravity as the transition from life to death. While contemporary Western culture often regards death as a topic to be avoided or sanitized, the Jewish tradition has developed a sophisticated framework for approaching death that acknowledges its inevitability while infusing it with profound spiritual meaning. Ma'avar Yabok, the seventeenth-century handbook authored by Rabbi Aaron Berechia of Modena, stands as perhaps the most comprehensive guide to these practices, integrating practical ritual instruction with kabbalistic interpretation to create a holistic approach to the final moments of life.

The very title of the work—"The Crossing of the Jabbok"—provides a powerful metaphorical framework for understanding the Jewish conception of death. The reference is to the biblical narrative of Jacob, who crossed the Jabbok River before his transformative encounter with an angel (Genesis 32). Just as Jacob's crossing marked a moment of profound spiritual transition, so too does death represent not an ending but a crossing over, a transition from one state of being to another. This conceptualization stands in stark contrast to views that regard death simply as cessation or annihilation.

Jewish tradition conceptualizes terminal illness not merely as biological failure but as a spiritual process with profound purpose. Ma'avar Yabok presents illness as "divine correction" and an opportunity for spiritual purification. Rather than viewing suffering as random misfortune or punishment, Aaron Berechia frames it within a comprehensive theological system where physical decline serves a spiritual purpose. As he explains, God communicates through progressive physical ailments as warnings, providing opportunities for repentance and spiritual preparation before death.

This perspective may seem foreign to modern sensibilities, which often frame illness in purely mechanistic terms. However, it offers an important alternative that many find meaningful even today—the possibility that suffering can have purpose and that proper preparation for death is a sacred obligation rather than a surrender to the inevitable. The rituals surrounding the deathbed that will be explored in this appendix represent the practical manifestation of this theological framework, offering structure and meaning during what could otherwise be a chaotic and frightening time.

The Jewish approach to terminal illness and death stands on two pillars that might initially seem contradictory: unflinching acknowledgment of death's reality coupled with unwavering affirmation of life's sanctity. On one hand, Judaism rejects any notion of hiding the reality of impending death from the dying person; on the other, it maintains that until the final moment, life must be preserved and valued. This tension creates a unique ritual approach that balances pragmatic preparation for death with an attitude that regards each remaining moment as precious.

Within this conceptual framework, Ma'avar Yabok outlines specific rituals for those approaching death. These practices are not mere formalities but represent a sophisticated spiritual technology designed to assist the soul in its transition. The deathbed rituals combine biblical verses, prayers, confessional formulas, and specific physical actions that collectively create what might be understood as a sacred choreography for the final moments of life. For the dying person, these rituals provide structure and meaning; for those in attendance, they offer a way to be genuinely helpful at a moment when one might otherwise feel helpless.

Central to these practices is the concept that proper spiritual preparation can influence one's experience in the afterlife. While contemporary Judaism often downplays discussions of the afterlife (olam ha-ba), Ma'avar Yabok—influenced by kabbalistic thought—provides an elaborate conception of what awaits the soul after death. The rituals performed at the deathbed are understood to directly affect the soul's journey, potentially easing its passage through judgment and toward divine presence. This understanding provides added urgency and significance to ensuring that death occurs within a proper ritual framework.

The ethical obligation to inform the dying

One of the most striking aspects of Ma'avar Yabok's approach to terminal illness is its insistence on truth-telling, albeit with appropriate sensitivity. While modern medical ethics continues to debate whether and how to inform patients of terminal diagnoses, the Jewish tradition as articulated by Aaron Berechia takes a clear position: the dying person should be made aware of their condition to enable proper spiritual preparation.

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that approaching death should be communicated truthfully but gently to the dying person, contrasting with harmful practices of false reassurance. The text states that "one should not give false hope to the ill person, telling him that he will recover when one sees that he is on the verge of death." This approach reflects the view that concealing the truth about one's condition deprives the individual of the opportunity to engage in essential spiritual preparation, particularly confession (vidui) and reconciliation with others.

However, this truth-telling comes with important qualifications. The information should be conveyed with sensitivity and compassion, never bluntly or harshly. Moreover, it should be presented within a framework that offers spiritual purpose and meaning rather than simply delivering the cold facts of medical prognosis. Ma'avar Yabok recommends a gradual approach, where someone close to the patient—not a physician—gently suggests that they put their affairs in order and prepare spiritually, just as all must eventually do.

The ethical framework underlying this approach values autonomy and dignity. By informing individuals of their condition, they regain a measure of control at a time when much seems beyond their control. They can choose how to spend their remaining time, with whom to reconcile, and how to prepare spiritually. In this way, the truth serves not to diminish hope but to redirect it from unrealistic expectations of physical recovery to spiritual preparation and meaningful closure.

This approach stands in notable contrast to practices common in many cultures, where terminal diagnoses may be concealed from patients while being disclosed to family members. Such practices often assume that knowledge of impending death would cause unbearable anguish or that patients would "give up" if informed. The Jewish tradition as articulated in Ma'avar Yabok takes a different view—that knowledge of one's condition, when properly framed, can be empowering rather than demoralizing.

The text also warns against the opposite extreme—creating unnecessary anxiety by suggesting that death is imminent when it may not be. Baseless predictions of impending death are considered harmful and prohibited. The goal is accurate, compassionate communication that serves the dying person's spiritual needs, not dramatization or unnecessary distress.

This balanced approach to truth-telling reflects Judaism's broader ethical stance that values truth (emet) as a divine attribute while also recognizing that how truth is communicated matters deeply. The objective is not merely factual accuracy but wisdom in how information is conveyed, always with the well-being of the recipient as the guiding principle.

The concept of a 'good death' in Jewish tradition

The idea of a "good death" (mitah yafah) appears throughout rabbinic literature and is elaborated in Ma'avar Yabok. Far from simply indicating a painless physical end, this concept encompasses a complex set of spiritual, emotional, and communal elements that together constitute the ideal transition from life to death according to Jewish tradition.

Central to the Jewish conception of a good death is the element of conscious preparation. Unlike traditions that might valorize sudden death as sparing suffering, Jewish thought generally regards unexpected death as less than ideal because it deprives the individual of the opportunity for final spiritual preparations. Ma'avar Yabok frames death as a spiritual birth, contrasting physical birth (birth of the body) with death (birth of the soul). Just as physical birth requires preparation, so too does this spiritual birth demand mindful attention and specific rituals.

A good death in the Jewish tradition is one that occurs with full consciousness and in a state of spiritual readiness. Ideally, the dying person has reconciled with others, settled worldly affairs, offered ethical guidance to descendants, and most importantly, made peace with God through confession (vidui). The traditional deathbed confession is not merely an acknowledgment of wrongdoing but a comprehensive spiritual closure that includes expressions of faith, acceptance of divine judgment, and surrender of the soul to its Creator.

Ma'avar Yabok also emphasizes the communal dimension of a good death. Death should not occur in isolation but in the presence of the community, represented by a minyan (quorum of ten Jews). This presence serves multiple functions: it provides comfort to the dying, creates a sacred space where the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) is believed to dwell, and forms a protective spiritual barrier that aids the soul's transition. The text uses the biblical concept of "Mahanaim" (two camps) to describe how at death, the human realm (represented by ten Jews) meets the angelic realm, creating a protected pathway for the soul's ascent.

Physical elements also factor into the Jewish conception of a good death. Ideally, death occurs in a state of ritual purity, with the body positioned properly (lying flat rather than upright), and with nothing impeding the soul's departure. Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed instructions about removing pillows, placing the dying person on the ground (symbolizing return to the earth), and ensuring that nothing (like salt or metal) that might attract harmful spiritual forces is present.

Perhaps most distinctively, a good death in Jewish tradition is characterized by specific verbal formulations. The recitation of the Shema prayer at the moment of death is considered especially powerful, following the example of Rabbi Akiva, who recited it during his martyrdom. The declaration "Into Your hand I commit my spirit" (Psalm 31:6) is also prescribed for the final moments. These verbal elements are understood as not merely symbolic but efficacious, actively facilitating the soul's transition.

The kabbalistic concept of "death by divine kiss" (mitat neshikah) represents the highest form of good death in Ma'avar Yabok. This metaphor describes a death that occurs through mystical union with the divine rather than through the agency of the Angel of Death. While traditionally reserved for the most righteous individuals like Moses, the text suggests that proper spiritual preparation can help anyone approach this elevated form of departure, where the soul is received directly by God rather than being subjected to the harsher processes of judgment.

Ma'avar Yabok frames a good death not as the absence of suffering but as its transformation into spiritual elevation. Physical suffering is understood to weaken negative spiritual forces (kelipot/chitzonim) while strengthening the soul's dominance. The text employs a motif of the body as sacrifice, connecting physical suffering to Temple sacrificial rituals and positioning the righteous person's body as a direct offering to God. This conceptual framework provides meaning to what might otherwise seem like senseless suffering, integrating it into a larger spiritual narrative.

Ultimately, the concept of a good death in Jewish tradition as articulated in Ma'avar Yabok is less about the physical circumstances of dying and more about the spiritual state in which death occurs. A good death is one where the individual has achieved a measure of spiritual completion, has been reconciled with both God and community, and approaches death not as an ending but as a transition—a crossing of the Jabbok—into another form of existence.

The Minyan at the deathbed

Among the most distinctive features of Jewish deathbed practice is the gathering of a minyan—a quorum of ten Jewish adults—to accompany the dying person in their final hours. Ma'avar Yabok places great emphasis on this practice, explaining it not merely as a comfort to the dying but as a spiritual necessity with profound mystical significance for the soul's journey.

The basic requirement stems from the principle that the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) dwells among a gathered community of ten. This concept derives from the rabbinic interpretation of Psalm 82:1, "God stands in the divine assembly," with "assembly" being understood to require a minimum of ten individuals. By ensuring that death occurs within such an assembly, one creates a sacred space where the Divine Presence itself receives the departing soul. Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that this presence "precedes and arrives" at the bedside, establishing a direct divine encounter at the moment of transition.

However, the text goes beyond this fundamental understanding to elaborate a sophisticated kabbalistic framework for the minyan's function. The ten individuals collectively embody the ten sefirot (divine emanations), creating a complete cosmic structure that facilitates the soul's ascent through the spiritual worlds. Their presence serves to "sweeten" or mitigate harsh judgment, transforming what could be a difficult transition into one characterized more by divine mercy than severity.

Ma'avar Yabok employs the biblical concept of "Mahanaim" (two camps) from Genesis 32:1–2, where Jacob encounters angels, as a metaphor for what occurs at death. The text explains that the gathering of ten Jews creates a "human camp" that interfaces with the "angelic camp," establishing a protected corridor for the soul's journey. This dual encampment provides spiritual protection against harmful forces that might otherwise impede the soul's peaceful transition.

The minyan serves another crucial function according to the text: neutralizing spiritual accusers or prosecutors. In kabbalistic thought, a person's sins create negative spiritual entities that may serve as accusers in the heavenly court after death. The collective spiritual merit of the gathered minyan helps to counterbalance these accusations, providing a measure of protection for the departing soul. The text states that ten Jewish men (minyan) around the dying person creates a sacred space that drives away spiritual accusers and harmful forces through the power of their collective soul-sparks.

Not just any ten individuals constitute a proper deathbed minyan. Ideally, the text suggests, the gathering should include individuals of spiritual merit, particularly those well-versed in Torah. Their presence amplifies the protective and elevating effect. However, in the absence of such individuals, any Jewish adults fulfilling the requirements of a minyan will suffice, as the essential power derives from the divine promise to dwell among a community of ten regardless of their individual spiritual status.

The minyan is not passive during this time but actively engaged in specific ritual practices. They recite designated psalms, offer prayers on behalf of the dying, and assist with the confession ritual if necessary. During the final moments, they may recite the Shema in unison and, after death occurs, participate in the initial purification rituals. This active engagement creates a framework of continuous sacred action surrounding the dying person.

In practical terms, Ma'avar Yabok acknowledges that assembling a complete minyan may not always be possible, especially in cases of sudden death. In such instances, one should gather as many people as possible, with even a single knowledgeable individual being preferable to none. The text places such importance on this practice that it permits violation of Sabbath restrictions to bring close relatives to a dying person's bedside, not only for the emotional comfort this provides but for the spiritual benefit to the departing soul.

The presence of the minyan continues to be important even after death occurs. The ten remain to recite specific prayers and psalms that guide the soul in its initial journey, to prevent harmful spiritual forces from approaching the body, and to begin the process of purification. The community that witnessed the death thus maintains a continuous sacred enclosure around both body and soul during the vulnerable initial phase of transition.

This practice reflects Judaism's fundamentally communal nature. Even in death—perhaps especially in death—the individual is not isolated but remains part of the community. The minyan's presence demonstrates that death is not a private affair but a communal transition, where the gathered community bears witness to and facilitates a fellow member's passage from one state of being to another.

The deathbed confession (Vidui)

At the center of Jewish deathbed practices stands the ritual of confession (vidui), a practice that Ma'avar Yabok describes as having profound spiritual significance beyond its apparent function. Far from being a mere acknowledgment of wrongdoing, the deathbed confession represents a comprehensive spiritual closure that prepares the soul for its transition through multiple spiritual realms.

The ritual's basic structure follows a pattern that has remained remarkably consistent through centuries of Jewish practice. It begins with an acknowledgment that one's death is in God's hands, continues with a confession of sins (often following an alphabetical acrostic pattern similar to the Yom Kippur liturgy), and concludes with an affirmation of faith in God and acceptance of divine judgment. The traditional formula includes the declaration: "I acknowledge before You, Lord my God and God of my ancestors, that my healing and my death are in Your hands. May it be Your will that You heal me with complete healing, but if I die, may my death be an atonement for all the sins, iniquities, and transgressions that I have committed before You."

Ma'avar Yabok provides multiple versions of the confession, ranging from elaborate formulations for those with sufficient time and mental clarity to abbreviated versions for emergency situations. The most complete form includes detailed enumeration of various categories of transgressions, organized according to their prescribed punishments in Jewish law—those warranting capital punishment, those requiring sin-offerings, those demanding guilt-offerings, and so forth. For each category, the confession acknowledges potential violations and seeks divine forgiveness.

The timing of the confession is crucial. The text emphasizes that confession should not be delayed until the final moments when consciousness may be impaired. Ideally, it should be recited while the dying person remains lucid and can participate fully in the ritual. However, the text is also practical, acknowledging that some may resist confession out of fear that it signifies giving up hope. In such cases, it suggests framing the confession as a precautionary measure that does not preclude the possibility of recovery, noting that even the healthiest individuals should confess daily.

According to Ma'avar Yabok, certain times are more spiritually auspicious for confession than others. Morning is considered particularly favorable due to the dominance of Chesed (divine kindness/mercy) at that time, making it more likely that repentance will be accepted. The text also explains the correspondence between days of the week and specific divine attributes (sefirot): Sunday corresponds to Chesed, Monday to Gevurah (strength/judgment), Tuesday to Tiferet (beauty/harmony), and so forth. These correspondences create a kabbalistic calendar that indicates optimal times for confession based on which divine attributes are ascendant.

The mystical dimensions of the confession ritual receive extensive treatment in Ma'avar Yabok. Drawing on kabbalistic sources, particularly the Zohar, the text explains that confession has profound effects across multiple spiritual worlds. It states that proper confession literally draws spiritual blemishes downward from higher realms and neutralizes Satan's ability to act as prosecutor in the divine court. It transforms the penitent from the "evil side" (sitra achra) to the "side of holiness," creating a metaphysical realignment of the soul with its divine source.

Aaron Berechia describes confession as having a threefold structure corresponding to the three most common terms for sin in Hebrew: chet (sin), avon (iniquity), and pesha (transgression). This tripartite division corresponds to damage in three divine attributes—Tiferet, Malkhut, and Yesod—which can be repaired through proper confession with specific mystical intentions. The text presents a detailed cosmological system where human confession creates cosmic repairs through a complex interplay of divine lights, desires, and emanations flowing through various levels from Keter (crown) down to the physical elements.

Ma'avar Yabok makes the remarkable claim that confession remains effective even when incomplete. The text states: "Even if one only recalls some of their sins during confession, all others are drawn along with them," providing comfort that perfect recall isn't necessary for complete repentance. This reflects a compassionate understanding of human limitations, particularly in the context of approaching death when full mental clarity may not be possible.

The physical circumstances of confession receive attention as well. The text recommends having a learned person act as an intermediary (sarsor) who recites the words for the dying person to repeat, comparing this to a prisoner who cannot free himself. This practical guidance acknowledges the physical limitations that may accompany terminal illness while ensuring that the ritual can still be properly performed.

For those too weak to recite the full confession, Ma'avar Yabok provides a drastically abbreviated form consisting of a single sentence: "May my death be an atonement for all my sins." In extreme cases, the text suggests that merely raising ten fingers toward heaven while thinking about divine unity constitutes a valid substitution for the verbal confession, demonstrating the tradition's flexibility in accommodating the realities of death.

Particularly notable is the text's emphasis on confession's continued efficacy even at the very threshold of death. It affirms that deathbed repentance is valid and effective, arguing that far from being insincere, repentance at the time of death can be especially genuine due to heightened spiritual awareness. Drawing on rabbinic sources, it assures readers that even someone who only contemplates repentance but dies before completing it can be rescued from negative spiritual realms by righteous souls who descend to retrieve them.

The gender dimensions of confession receive specific attention in Ma'avar Yabok. The text provides gender-specific confession guidance, with women specifically directed to focus on their three primary religious obligations: niddah (menstrual purity), challah separation, and candle-lighting. This reflects the gendered nature of religious obligations in traditional Judaism while ensuring that the confession ritual remains accessible and relevant to all.

Throughout its treatment of the confession ritual, Ma'avar Yabok balances technical kabbalistic exposition with profound psychological insight. The act of confession serves not only metaphysical purposes but provides psychological closure, allowing the dying person to review their life, acknowledge imperfections, and ultimately surrender to a process beyond their control. In this way, the ritual addresses both spiritual and emotional needs at a critical moment of transition.

The Shema at the moment of death

Among the various prayers and biblical verses recited at the deathbed, none holds greater significance than the Shema—Judaism's central declaration of faith proclaiming divine unity: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One." Ma'avar Yabok assigns special importance to this prayer during the final moments of life, explaining its profound mystical significance for the soul's transition.

The practice of reciting the Shema at death draws inspiration from the martyrdom of Rabbi Akiva, who, according to Talmudic tradition, recited this prayer as he was being executed by the Romans. The text presents Akiva's example as the ideal model for surrendering one's soul to God, noting that as he recited the final word "echad" (one), his soul departed with that declaration of divine unity on his lips. This historical precedent establishes the Shema as the quintessential deathbed prayer.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that the Shema is not merely a declaration of belief but a powerful mystical tool that creates cosmic unifications between different divine attributes and realms. When recited with proper intention (kavvanah), especially at the moment of death, it facilitates what the text calls "death by divine kiss" (mitat neshikah)—a spiritually elevated experience where the soul departs through direct divine reception rather than through the agency of the Angel of Death.

The kabbalistic dimensions of the Shema receive extensive treatment in the text. Drawing primarily on the Zohar, Aaron Berechia explains how each word and letter of the prayer corresponds to specific divine configurations and attributes. The six words of the first verse correlate to the six directions of space, while the first letter of the first word ('Shin' in "Shema") and the last letter of the last word ('Dalet' in "echad") together spell "shed" (demon). This teaches that proper recitation of the Shema with correct intention drives away harmful spiritual forces that might otherwise interfere with the soul's peaceful transition.

The final word of the first verse—"echad" (one)—receives particular attention. The tradition of elongating this word during recitation takes on special significance at death, as it represents the soul's final declaration of divine unity before departing. Ma'avar Yabok explains that the three letters of this word (alef, chet, dalet) correspond to different spiritual worlds and divine attributes. The numerical value of these letters ($1 + 8 + 4 = 13$) equals the Hebrew word for "love" (ahavah), suggesting that the declaration of divine unity is simultaneously an expression of love for God—an appropriate final sentiment.

The text provides detailed instructions for those attending the dying regarding how to assist with the Shema recitation. If the dying person is capable, they should recite it themselves. If not, those present should recite it in their hearing, ideally close to their ear. The attendants are instructed to recite clearly but not too loudly, maintaining a reverential atmosphere. After the first verse, the traditional practice of quietly reciting "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever" should be followed.

Ma'avar Yabok connects the Shema recitation to the concept of yichud (unification), explaining that through this prayer, the dying person participates in unifying divine masculine and feminine attributes (represented by the divine names YHVH and ADNY). This cosmic unification facilitates the soul's ascent through various spiritual worlds. The text states that through proper recitation with correct intention, one creates angels from each word that accompany the soul on its journey, offering protection and guidance.

The timing of the Shema recitation is crucial. Ideally, it should be said at the very moment when death appears imminent, but not so early that it must be repeated multiple times, which might diminish its spiritual power. The text advises close observation of the dying person's condition to determine the appropriate moment. Signs that death is imminent include changes in breathing patterns, facial coloration, and pulse, which those with experience attending the dying learn to recognize.

For kabbalistic practitioners, Ma'avar Yabok provides even more elaborate instructions regarding specific divine names and letter combinations to contemplate while reciting the Shema. These include visualizations of divine names with specific vowel patterns, meditations on the unity of the four-letter divine name (YHVH), and contemplation of how each component of the prayer affects different levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah). While acknowledging that such advanced practices are not for everyone, the text suggests that even those without kabbalistic training can benefit from reciting the prayer with sincere devotion.

The Shema's effectiveness at the moment of death is explained through the concept of deveikut (cleaving to God). The text describes the final moments as an opportunity for the soul to achieve an elevated state of communion with the divine, where the boundaries between individual consciousness and divine reality begin to dissolve. The declaration of God's unity in the Shema mirrors and facilitates this spiritual unification of the soul with its divine source.

Ma'avar Yabok acknowledges that not every death allows for the ideal scenario of conscious Shema recitation. In cases of sudden death or unconsciousness, those present should still recite the prayer on behalf of the dying person. The text assures readers that the soul, even when the body appears unresponsive, often retains awareness of surroundings and can benefit from hearing the Shema even if unable to participate verbally.

This practice reflects Judaism's emphasis on conscious engagement with death rather than avoidance or denial. By framing the final moments of life as an opportunity for the ultimate affirmation of faith, the tradition transforms what could be a moment of fear or despair into one of profound spiritual significance and connection.

The 112 biblical verses and divine names

One of the most distinctive elements of Ma'avar Yabok's deathbed liturgy is the compilation of 112 biblical verses organized according to divine names. This specific number is not arbitrary but reflects deep kabbalistic significance tied to the very title of the work. The numerical value of the Hebrew letters in "Yabok" (יב״ק) equals 112, creating a direct correlation between the book's central metaphor and this collection of verses.

These 112 verses are further organized into three groups corresponding to three divine names: 21 verses for the divine name Ehyeh (אהי״ה), 26 verses for the Tetragrammaton (יקו״ק), and 65 verses for Adnut (אדנו״ת). Together, these three names total 112, matching the numerical value of YaBOK. The specificity of this arrangement reflects the text's meticulous attention to numeric symbolism as a vehicle for spiritual efficacy.

The divine name Ehyeh, meaning "I Will Be," appears in Exodus 3:14 when God identifies Himself to Moses at the burning bush as "Ehyeh asher Ehyeh" (I Am That I Am). In kabbalistic thought, this name represents God's self-sufficient existence beyond all limitation and corresponds to the highest divine attribute of Keter (Crown). The 21 verses associated with this name focus primarily on divine protection, mercy, and transcendence.

The Tetragrammaton (YHVH), Judaism's most sacred divine name, has the numerical value of 26 (10+5+6+5), explaining why exactly 26 verses are included in this section. In kabbalistic thought, this name represents God's eternal, unchanging essence and is associated with the divine attribute of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony). The verses in this section emphasize divine compassion, covenant faithfulness, and redemption.

The divine name Adnut (often vocalized as Adonai, "my Lord") has a numerical value of 65 and represents God's sovereignty and immanence—the divine presence as experienced in the world. In the kabbalistic system, this name corresponds to the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom). The 65 verses in this section focus on themes of divine judgment, governance, and manifestation in the physical world.

The arrangement of these verses is not merely symbolic but serves a practical spiritual purpose. According to Ma'avar Yabok, when recited at the deathbed, these verses create a protected spiritual pathway for the soul's ascent through various cosmic realms. Each verse is understood to generate a spiritual entity that accompanies and guides the soul, with the complete set of 112 verses creating a comprehensive protective framework.

The methodology for selecting these particular verses involved both thematic relevance and letter-counting techniques derived from kabbalistic practice. Many verses contain references to salvation, divine protection, or soul ascension. Others were chosen because they contain letter combinations that spell out divine names or because their first and last letters form meaningful acronyms when combined.

The verses are to be recited in sequence, beginning with those associated with Ehyeh, proceeding to those connected to the Tetragrammaton, and concluding with those linked to Adnut. This progression mirrors the soul's journey from the highest divine realms (represented by Ehyeh) through intermediate realms (Tetragrammaton) to the lower realms most connected to physical existence (Adnut). When recited in the proper order, these verses are believed to create a complete circuit of divine energy that facilitates the soul's transition.

Ma'avar Yabok provides specific instructions regarding how these verses should be recited. They should be spoken clearly but not too loudly, with careful attention to pronunciation. Ideally, they should be recited by someone knowledgeable in Torah who understands their significance, though in the absence of such a person, any Jewish adult may recite them. If the dying person is conscious and able, they may participate in the recitation, but this is not required for the verses to benefit their soul.

The timing of this recitation is important. The verses should be begun when death appears imminent but not so early that they must be repeated multiple times. The text suggests that those experienced in attending the dying develop an intuition about the appropriate moment to begin this recitation. If death does not occur during the initial recitation, the verses may be repeated as necessary.

The compilation includes verses from all sections of the Hebrew Bible—Torah (Pentateuch), Nevi'im (Prophets), and Ketuvim (Writings)—creating a comprehensive representation of scripture. This inclusivity reflects the belief that the entire biblical canon contains divine power that can be activated through proper recitation. The selected verses range from well-known passages like the Priestly Blessing (Numbers 6:24–26) to more obscure texts that contain particular letter combinations with mystical significance.

Beyond their specific content, the rhythmic recitation of these 112 verses creates an atmosphere of sacred focus that benefits both the dying person and those in attendance. The structured liturgy provides a framework for channeling emotion and intention during what might otherwise be an overwhelming experience. For the companions of the dying, the recitation offers a way to be actively helpful rather than passively witnessing, while for the dying person, the familiar biblical language provides spiritual reassurance.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that these verses serve multiple functions simultaneously: they protect the departing soul from harmful spiritual forces, create a direct channel between the deathbed and divine realms, activate the supernal mercy of the three divine names they represent, and generate angelic escorts that accompany the soul on its journey. This multilayered effectiveness makes them a central component of the deathbed ritual system.

The practice illustrates the Jewish tradition's sophisticated integration of numerology, biblical exegesis, and mystical theology into practical ritual applications. Far from being arbitrary, the selection and arrangement of these 112 verses represents a carefully constructed spiritual technology designed to activate divine names and attributes at a crucial moment of transition.

Spiritual intentions (Kavvanot) and practicality

Ma'avar Yabok places great emphasis on proper intention (kavvanah) during deathbed rituals, teaching that the same actions performed with or without appropriate spiritual focus produce dramatically different results. For those attending the dying, the text provides detailed guidance on both the internal attitudes and external practices that facilitate a peaceful transition for the departing soul.

At the most basic level, those present should maintain an attitude of reverence and compassion. The deathbed is understood as a sacred space where the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) dwells, demanding conduct similar to that observed in a synagogue. Frivolous conversation, laughter, or distraction is strictly prohibited. Instead, attendants should focus their thoughts on divine mercy and the soul's peaceful transition. The text recommends silent prayer when not actively engaged in prescribed rituals, maintaining an atmosphere of sacred attention.

For those with kabbalistic training, Ma'avar Yabok provides more elaborate instructions regarding specific divine names and configurations to visualize during different stages of the process. These include contemplating the unification of divine masculine and feminine attributes (represented by the divine names YHVH and ADNY), visualizing specific letter combinations that spell out divine names, and mentally connecting the dying person to various divine attributes associated with mercy rather than judgment.

The text emphasizes that proper intention during prayer and especially at the time of death involves precise visualization of divine names, their vowelization, and corresponding spiritual realms. It presents a sophisticated understanding of the four spiritual worlds (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) and how prayer and divine names function to elevate the soul through these worlds. Each soul component (Neshamah, Ruach, Nefesh) corresponds to different divine names and requires specific intentions for its elevation.

A central kavvanah practice described in Ma'avar Yabok involves the 42-letter Divine Name (Shem Mem-Bet), especially during the recitation of Isaiah's throne vision (Isaiah 6:1–3). The text provides detailed instructions for meditating on this name using specific visualizations that correspond to different spiritual worlds and divine configurations. These advanced practices are particularly recommended for those present at the death of a righteous person, creating unique opportunities for soul elevation and spiritual protection.

The text acknowledges that such complex kavvanot may be beyond the capability of many people, especially in the emotionally charged atmosphere of a deathbed. It therefore provides simpler alternatives that anyone can implement. These include focusing on divine mercy, visualizing light surrounding the dying person, and maintaining thoughts of divine unity expressed in the Shema prayer. The essential intention, accessible to all, involves recognizing death not as an ending but as a transition to another form of existence.

In addition to these internal intentions, Ma'avar Yabok provides extensive practical guidance for those attending the dying. When death appears imminent, attendants should ensure that the dying person is lying flat rather than in a seated position, which might impede the soul's departure. Pillows should be removed from beneath the head, symbolizing the return to earth and removing physical impediments to the soul's release.

The text includes specific instructions regarding the environment: windows should be opened (symbolizing an open path for the soul's ascent), mirrors should be covered (to prevent the soul from being confused by reflections), and any salt in the room should be removed (as it might attract harmful spiritual entities). Metal objects, particularly knives, should be removed from the vicinity of the dying person, as these too are believed to attract negative forces.

Practical guidance extends to the positioning of those attending the deathbed.

The text warns against standing at the foot of the bed, where the Angel of Death is believed to stand. Instead, attendants should position themselves at the head or sides of the bed. This arrangement creates a protected space for the dying person, surrounded by human presence that counterbalances the spiritual forces of judgment associated with death.

The practice of raising ten fingers toward heaven at the moment of death receives special attention. This gesture symbolizes acceptance of the Ten Commandments and submission to divine authority. It serves as a visual declaration of faith even when verbal declaration becomes impossible. The text explains that this practice creates a spiritual connection between the dying person and the divine realm, facilitating the soul's ascent.

Ma'avar Yabok also addresses post-mortem practices that should be prepared for in advance. These include closing the eyes and mouth immediately after death (preferably by the deceased's son if present), straightening the limbs while they are still flexible, and placing the body on the floor with feet pointing toward the door (symbolizing the soul's departure). These actions should be performed with reverence and gentleness, acknowledging that the recently departed soul remains aware of how its body is treated.

The text emphasizes the importance of continuous prayer and recitation of psalms from the moment of death until burial. Specific psalms are recommended, particularly Psalm 91 (known as "The Song of Afflictions"), which is believed to have special protective power against harmful spiritual forces. Those attending the body should not leave it alone, maintaining a continuous watch that serves both practical and spiritual purposes.

Throughout these instructions, Ma'avar Yabok balances technical ritual requirements with profound compassion. The kavvanot and practical guidelines serve not only the spiritual needs of the departing soul but also provide structure and meaning for those in attendance, transforming what could be a chaotic and frightening experience into a sacred ritual with deep significance. The text repeatedly emphasizes that proper intention transforms even simple actions into powerful spiritual tools that facilitate the soul's journey and bring comfort to both the dying and those who remain.

The enduring relevance of deathbed practices

The deathbed practices detailed in Ma'avar Yabok represent a sophisticated ritual system that addresses both practical and spiritual dimensions of the transition from life to death. While developed within a specific historical and cultural context, these practices contain wisdom that remains relevant even in our contemporary setting, offering potential resources for addressing the often-sanitized and medicalized approach to death in modern society.

At their core, these rituals acknowledge death as a significant spiritual transition rather than merely a medical event. By creating a sacred framework around the deathbed, they transform what might otherwise be experienced as chaotic and frightening into something meaningful and structured. The gathering of community, the recitation of ancient texts, and the performance of specific ritual actions all serve to place individual death within a larger cosmic and communal context.

The emphasis on conscious preparation for death presents a striking alternative to modern tendencies to avoid discussing death until it becomes imminent. Ma'avar Yabok's insistence on truthful communication with the dying, albeit with appropriate sensitivity, challenges contemporary practices that sometimes prioritize false hope over meaningful closure. The text suggests that acknowledging the reality of approaching death enables important spiritual work that might otherwise remain undone.

The confessional practices outlined in the text offer a model for life review and spiritual closure that has psychological as well as religious value. The process of acknowledging imperfection, seeking reconciliation, and ultimately accepting mortality represents a profound form of psychological integration that can benefit even those outside the specific religious tradition. Modern hospice and palliative care approaches increasingly recognize the importance of such life review processes in facilitating peaceful death.

The communal dimension of these deathbed practices—particularly the gathering of a minyan—stands in stark contrast to the isolation that often characterizes death in modern medical settings. By insisting that death should occur within community, the tradition acknowledges both the dying person's continued membership in the human collective and the community's responsibility toward its dying member. This mutual recognition of obligation and belonging can serve as a corrective to the sometimes atomized experience of modern death.

The structured liturgy of psalms, prayers, and biblical verses creates a shared language for approaching death that many find lacking in contemporary society. When words fail in the face of mortality, these ancient texts provide a vocabulary for expressing complex emotions and spiritual aspirations. Even for those who may not subscribe to their theological premises, these texts can offer poetic and symbolic resources for articulating the often inexpressible experience of confronting death.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok's approach frames death not as a failure to be avoided at all costs but as a transition to be approached with appropriate preparation and spiritual intention. This perspective offers a meaningful alternative to both excessive medical intervention that may prolong suffering and nihilistic views that see in death only meaningless cessation. Instead, death becomes a sacred passage—a crossing of the Jabbok—that can be approached with dignity, meaning, and proper spiritual preparation.

The enduring relevance of these practices lies not necessarily in their literal application but in the wisdom they embody about how humans might approach mortality. They suggest that death is best faced consciously rather than denied, communally rather than in isolation, with structured ritual rather than improvisational confusion, and with attention to both practical and spiritual dimensions. These insights transcend their specific religious context and speak to universal human needs in confronting our mortality.

Ma'avar Yabok reminds us that how we die matters—not just medically but spiritually and communally. In an age that often struggles to find meaningful approaches to death, these ancient practices offer wisdom worthy of renewed consideration, even as they are adapted to contemporary circumstances and diverse religious perspectives. The crossing of the Jabbok remains a powerful metaphor for the journey we all must eventually undertake, and the rituals that facilitate this crossing continue to offer guidance for that universal human passage.

Appendix F

Jewish mourning customs

In Jewish tradition, death is not merely an ending but a transition—a crossing over from one state of existence to another. This concept is central to Ma'avar Yabok, whose very title evokes Jacob's biblical crossing of the Jabbok River, serving as a powerful metaphor for the soul's journey from this world to the next. The customs and rituals surrounding death and mourning in Judaism reflect this understanding of death as a passage rather than an annihilation, with each practice carrying both practical significance for the living and mystical implications for the deceased's soul.

The Jewish approach to death and mourning represents a carefully structured system that acknowledges the psychological needs of mourners while providing a framework for the soul's transition. Far from being merely consolatory measures, these practices are understood—particularly in mystical traditions—as active interventions that affect the deceased's spiritual journey. In the kabbalistic worldview presented in Ma'avar Yabok, physical actions performed by the living create corresponding spiritual effects in higher realms, directly influencing the soul's experience after death.

This appendix explores the multifaceted dimensions of Jewish mourning customs, examining both their practical implementation and their deeper mystical significance as elucidated in Ma'avar Yabok and related kabbalistic texts. While modern readers may approach these traditions from varying perspectives—historical, anthropological, psychological, or religious—understanding their mystical underpinnings provides crucial insight into how these practices were conceived and experienced by those who observed them with full conviction in their cosmic significance.

The soul's journey after death

Before examining specific mourning customs, we must first understand the Jewish mystical conception of what happens to the soul after death, as this provides the essential context for mourning practices. According to kabbalistic teachings presented in Ma'avar Yabok, the soul is not a simple, unitary entity but a complex, multi-layered construction with different components that experience different fates after death.

The soul is traditionally understood to have three primary components: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul), with some kabbalistic systems adding two additional, more transcendent levels—chayah and yechidah. Upon death, these different aspects of the soul separate and embark on distinct journeys:

The nefesh, which is most closely associated with the physical body, remains near the grave for a time. This explains the custom of visiting gravesites, as the nefesh is understood to be aware of those who come to pay respects. Ma'avar Yabok states explicitly that "the nefesh dwells near the grave" and maintains a connection to the physical remains, particularly through the indestructible luz bone (traditionally located at the base of the spine or under the skull), which serves as the physical nucleus for eventual resurrection.

The ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Tachton), a spiritual realm where it undergoes purification and spiritual development. This intermediate state allows the soul to process its earthly experiences and prepare for higher ascension.

The neshamah, the highest of the three primary soul components, ascends to the upper Garden of Eden (Gan Eden Elyon), where it experiences direct divine illumination and spiritual bliss. The neshamah's experience depends on the spiritual merit accumulated during life, particularly through Torah study and mitzvot.

This tripartite division of the soul's afterlife journey creates a complex, multilayered understanding of what happens after death, with different aspects of the deceased's soul simultaneously experiencing different states in different realms. Rather than a simple ascension to heaven or descent to punishment, the Jewish mystical tradition presents a nuanced cosmology where parts of the soul may be experiencing purification in Gehinnom (a realm of spiritual cleansing often mistranslated as "hell") while other parts reside in various levels of Gan Eden.

Importantly, these different soul components do not remain permanently separated. During sacred times like Sabbath and festivals, they temporarily reunite, and they will ultimately be fully reunited during the resurrection of the dead. This understanding informs many mourning customs, particularly the structured timeframes that align with the soul's progressive journey through these spiritual realms.

Stages of mourning and their mystical significance

Jewish mourning is structured into distinct periods, each corresponding to different phases of the soul's journey and different psychological needs of the mourners. This temporal organization reflects both practical wisdom about the grieving process and mystical insights about the soul's transition through various spiritual realms. Ma'avar Yabok provides extensive commentary on these periods, revealing their deeper significance within the kabbalistic worldview.

Aninut: before burial

The period between death and burial is called aninut (acute grief), and the mourner during this time is called an onen. This phase is characterized by a focus on practical arrangements for burial rather than formal mourning observances. The onen is exempt from positive commandments like prayer and tefillin, reflecting both the prioritization of burial arrangements and a distinct spiritual state.

In Ma'avar Yabok, this exemption is explained through kabbalistic terminology: the onen exists temporarily outside both the "masculine realm" (alma d'dechura) associated with expansion and mercy, and the "feminine realm" (alma d'nukba) associated with contraction and judgment. This liminal state reflects the cosmic disruption caused by death, where normal spiritual channels are temporarily suspended.

Mystically, aninut corresponds to the initial phase of the soul's journey, when it is in a state of shock and disorientation, having just separated from the body. The soul remains near the body during this time, which explains the tradition of not leaving the deceased alone before burial and the practice of maintaining a vigil (shemirah).

According to Ma'avar Yabok, during this period, the soul is particularly vulnerable to harmful spiritual forces and requires protection through proper rituals and the presence of the living. The exemption from mitzvot during aninut reflects not just the practical needs of the mourner but also this cosmic vulnerability, where the normal channels of divine influence are temporarily disrupted.

Shiva: seven days of mourning

Following burial, the formal mourning period of shiva (seven days) begins. This period corresponds to a significant transition in the soul's journey. According to Ma'avar Yabok, during these seven days, the soul travels back and forth between the grave and its new spiritual dwelling, unable to fully depart from its physical location until this period is complete.

The number seven carries profound cosmic significance in kabbalistic thought. It corresponds to the seven lower sefirot (divine emanations) through which divine energy flows into the world: Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), Netzach (Victory/Eternity), Hod (Splendor), Yesod (Foundation), and Malkhut (Kingdom). The seven days of shiva represent a process of cosmic reorganization where the soul, having been separated from its physical vessel, must reestablish its connection to these divine channels in a new, non-physical configuration.

Each day of shiva corresponds to one of these sefirot, creating a structured progression through which the soul ascends. This explains why the intensity of mourning gradually decreases over the seven days, mirroring the soul's progressive elevation and stabilization. The mourning practices observed during shiva are understood not merely as expressions of grief but as active interventions that assist the soul in this process of cosmic reorientation.

Ma'avar Yabok particularly emphasizes the first three days of shiva as a time of intense connection between the soul and the body. During this period, the soul "hovers over the body," experiencing the beginning stages of separation but not yet fully detached. This explains the tradition that the most intense expressions of grief are appropriate only during these first three days.

Sheloshim: thirty days

Following shiva, mourning continues in a less intense form for a total of thirty days (including the seven days of shiva). This thirty-day period, called sheloshim, corresponds to further stages in the soul's journey. According to kabbalistic teachings in Ma'avar Yabok, during these thirty days, the soul must ascend through thirty spiritual levels—ten in each of the three lower worlds of Asiyah (Action), Yetzirah (Formation), and Beriah (Creation)—before it can reach the highest world of Atzilut (Emanation).

The number thirty also corresponds to the "thirty paths of wisdom" mentioned in Sefer Yetzirah, representing complete spiritual understanding. As the soul traverses these paths, it gains increased comprehension of its life experiences and their spiritual significance.

During sheloshim, mourning practices become less restrictive, reflecting the soul's increased stability and decreased vulnerability. Mourners gradually return to normal life activities while still observing certain restrictions, mirroring the soul's gradual adaptation to its new state of existence.

Twelve months for parents

For parents only, mourning continues in its most minimal form for twelve months (traditionally reduced in practice to eleven months due to theological considerations about the status of the deceased). This extended period reflects the special relationship between parent and child, which in kabbalistic thought extends beyond physical existence into the spiritual realms.

According to Ma'avar Yabok, during this period, the soul undergoes its final purification before reaching its ultimate place in the afterlife. The text emphasizes that a child's actions during this period directly affect the parent's spiritual status. This creates a reciprocal relationship where the deceased parent may intercede for the living child in heavenly realms, while the child's righteous actions elevate the parent's soul.

The twelve-month period corresponds to the twelve months of the year and the twelve tribes of Israel, representing a complete cosmic cycle during which the soul experiences all facets of divine influence before achieving its final rest. It also parallels the maximum duration of punishment in Gehinnom, suggesting that mourning practices during this time may help mitigate or eliminate such purificatory suffering for the deceased.

Key mourning practices

Beyond the temporal structure of mourning, specific ritual practices carry profound mystical significance. These practices are not merely symbolic but are understood in the kabbalistic worldview as direct interventions that affect the soul's journey through spiritual realms.

Keriah: tearing of garments

One of the most visually striking mourning rituals is keriah, the tearing of garments. Traditionally, upon receiving news of the death of a close relative, one tears their clothing—on the right side for parents (over the heart) and on the left side for other relatives. This practice has complex mystical dimensions explored in Ma'avar Yabok.

According to kabbalistic teachings, keriah represents the cosmic tear that occurs at death, when the soul is forcibly separated from the body. The physical action of tearing garments mirrors and in some sense repairs this metaphysical rupture. The text explains that keriah helps the soul transition from the "feminine realm" (alma d'nukba, associated with physical existence) to the "masculine realm" (alma d'dechura, associated with spiritual existence).

The distinction between tearing on the right for parents versus the left for other relatives reflects the kabbalistic association of the right side with Chesed (Loving-kindness) and the left with Gevurah (Judgment). Parents, having provided unconditional love and nurture, are mourned through the side of mercy, while other relationships, being more conditional, are mourned through the side of judgment.

Furthermore, keriah is understood to have protective spiritual power, deterring harmful spiritual forces that might impede the soul's journey. By publicly acknowledging death through this dramatic action, mourners create a spiritual shield around both themselves and the deceased, preventing negative energies from exploiting the vulnerability created by death.

Sitting low and covering mirrors

During shiva, mourners traditionally sit on low stools or cushions and cover mirrors in the house of mourning. These practices, beyond their psychological significance, carry mystical implications detailed in Ma'avar Yabok.

Sitting low symbolizes the mourner's spiritual descent, paralleling the soul's journey downward before it can ascend to higher realms. In kabbalistic terms, this practice aligns the mourner with the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom), the lowest sefirah, which is associated with physical existence and often described as "dust." By literally lowering themselves, mourners create a mystical connection with the deceased, who has descended to the most physical level (the grave) before beginning spiritual ascent.

Covering mirrors reflects the kabbalistic concept of tzelem (divine image) in which humans are created. Mirrors show the physical tzelem, but death focuses attention on the spiritual tzelem that has now departed. According to Ma'avar Yabok, covering mirrors also prevents harmful spiritual forces from using reflective surfaces as gateways between worlds, protecting both the deceased's soul and the vulnerable mourners from negative influences.

Restrictions on activities and physical comfort

During mourning periods, particularly shiva, numerous restrictions apply: mourners do not wear leather shoes, engage in marital relations, study Torah (except topics related to mourning), bathe for pleasure, use perfumes or lotions, engage in business, or attend celebrations. These restrictions serve both psychological and mystical purposes.

From the mystical perspective articulated in Ma'avar Yabok, these practices align the mourner's physical experience with the soul's journey through judgment. The soul, undergoing evaluation and purification in spiritual realms, experiences a form of discomfort as it adjusts to its new existence. By voluntarily accepting physical restrictions, mourners create a corresponding reality that assists the soul's transition.

The restriction against leather shoes specifically relates to the kabbalistic concept of separating from the physical world. Leather, derived from animals, represents attachment to physical existence. Walking without leather creates greater awareness of the earth, symbolizing the soul's new awareness of its spiritual foundations after being separated from physical embodiment.

The prohibition against Torah study (except topics related to mourning) reflects the soul's initial inability to fully engage with divine wisdom in its disoriented post-death state. As Ma'avar Yabok explains, the soul must first undergo purification before it can access the higher pleasures of Torah study in the afterlife. The mourner's temporary abstention from Torah mirrors and supports this process.

Washing hands after the cemetery

The custom of washing hands after visiting a cemetery has practical hygiene considerations but also profound mystical significance elaborated in Ma'avar Yabok. This ritual washing involves pouring water over each hand three times, alternating between right and left, without blessing or drying the hands before leaving the cemetery grounds.

Kabbalistically, this practice serves multiple purposes: it removes the "spirit of impurity" (ruach hatumah) that clings to visitors from the realm of death; it creates a definitive boundary between the world of the living and the dead; and it symbolizes the soul's eventual purification through the "rivers of balsam" mentioned in rabbinic literature.

The threefold washing corresponds to the three levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, and neshamah), creating a mystical cleansing that affects all dimensions of the mourner's spiritual being. According to Ma'avar Yabok, when performed with proper intention, this washing also benefits the deceased by symbolically cleansing their soul as it moves between spiritual realms.

The practice of not passing the water vessel directly between people (instead placing it on the ground) prevents the direct transmission of death-related spiritual forces between individuals. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that spiritual influences can be conducted through objects, particularly water, which serves as a medium for transferring or dispersing spiritual forces.

Recitation of Kaddish

Perhaps the most well-known mourning practice is the recitation of Kaddish, a prayer in Aramaic that, surprisingly, makes no mention of death but instead sanctifies God's name. According to Ma'avar Yabok, Kaddish serves as a powerful mystical tool for elevating the deceased's soul through multiple spiritual realms.

When mourners recite Kaddish and the congregation responds "Amen, may His great name be blessed forever and ever," they create what kabbalists call a "crown" for the divine presence. This mystical crown facilitates the soul's ascent through various heavenly palaces. The public sanctification of God's name generates spiritual merit that directly benefits the deceased, potentially releasing them from judgment in Gehinnom and elevating them to higher levels in Gan Eden.

The Kaddish's Aramaic language is significant in kabbalistic thought. Aramaic is considered an "intermediate" language between Hebrew (the holy tongue) and other languages. This intermediacy makes it particularly suitable for a prayer that seeks to bridge worlds—connecting the realm of the living with the realm of the dead, and lower spiritual worlds with higher ones.

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that when children recite Kaddish for parents, they create a unique spiritual channel that directly influences the parent's posthumous experience. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that children are mystically connected to their parents through the "root of their soul," allowing their actions to affect their parents' spiritual status even after death.

Mourning foods and their mystical significance

The food customs associated with Jewish mourning are rich with kabbalistic symbolism explained in detail in Ma'avar Yabok. These customs are not merely comforting traditions but mystical practices with specific spiritual effects.

The meal of consolation

The first meal after a funeral, called seudat havra'ah (meal of consolation), is traditionally provided by neighbors rather than prepared by the mourners themselves. This meal typically includes round foods like eggs and lentils, bread, and wine. Each element carries mystical significance in the kabbalistic worldview.

According to Ma'avar Yabok, eggs symbolize the cyclical nature of life and death, their rounded shape representing the "wheel of existence" that continues turning despite individual mortality. More profoundly, eggs represent "reflected light" (or chozer) in kabbalistic thought, corresponding to the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) and the feminine aspect of divinity. This reflected light symbolizes how the soul, after death, receives divine illumination indirectly, as it gradually adjusts to spiritual existence.

Lentils, also round, carry additional symbolism through their association with Jacob's lentil stew, which he prepared when Abraham died (according to midrashic interpretation). Kabbalistically, lentils correspond to the divine attribute of Din (Judgment), which predominates during mourning. Their red color connects them to the sefirotic quality of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), while their circular shape suggests the continuous cycle of divine judgment and mercy.

Bread represents the divine attribute of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the central balance point of the sefirotic system. According to Ma'avar Yabok, bread at the meal of consolation creates a mystical connection to this harmonizing force, helping to reestablish cosmic balance disrupted by death.

Wine corresponds to the kabbalistic concept of the "Tree of Life" when used properly in ritual contexts. The blessing over wine during the mourner's meal creates a channel of divine life-force that benefits both the living and the deceased. The red color of wine also represents the transformation of judgment (Din) into mercy (Rachamim), a central goal of mourning rituals in kabbalistic thought.

Hard-boiled eggs and the Ninth of Av

Hard-boiled eggs are also traditionally eaten at the meal before the fast of the Ninth of Av, the day commemorating the destruction of both Temples in Jerusalem. This parallel between personal and national mourning is not coincidental in kabbalistic thought. According to Ma'avar Yabok, individual death and national destruction reflect the same cosmic principle of divine judgment manifesting in different scales.

The egg's smooth surface without mouth or opening symbolizes mourners who often find themselves speechless in their grief. Just as the egg contains life potential within a seemingly lifeless shell, death contains the potential for resurrection and renewal. The hard-boiling of eggs for mourning meals represents the "hardening" of normal life during mourning periods, a temporary state that will eventually give way to renewed vitality.

Comforting mourners and its mystical dimensions

The mitzvah of nichum avelim (comforting mourners) extends beyond its obvious psychological benefits into mystical realms. Ma'avar Yabok provides extensive guidance on both the practical and spiritual dimensions of this important practice.

According to kabbalistic teachings in the text, comforting mourners should ideally take place in the location where the person died, as the soul continues to "mourn" in this place for seven days after death. The presence of ten worthy people (a minyan) in this location brings the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), providing comfort to both the mourners and the deceased's soul.

The traditional formula for comforting mourners—"May the Omnipresent comfort you among the other mourners of Zion and Jerusalem"—creates a mystical connection between individual loss and national mourning. This formula, according to Ma'avar Yabok, activates cosmic channels that bring divine consolation not just to the individual mourners but to the entire community of Israel and ultimately to the Divine Presence itself, which "mourns" the destruction of the Temple and the dispersion of Israel.

When entering a house of mourning, visitors traditionally remain silent until the mourner speaks first. This practice reflects the kabbalistic understanding that death creates a spiritual rupture that affects the normal flow of divine energy. By allowing mourners to initiate conversation, visitors acknowledge this disrupted state and avoid imposing external speech patterns that might interfere with the mourner's spiritual process.

The mitzvah of comforting mourners is considered one of the acts of kindness (gemilut chasadim) that affects cosmic realms. According to Ma'avar Yabok, such acts transform harsh judgment (din) into mercy (rachamim), creating effects that ripple through multiple spiritual worlds. When performed with proper intention, comforting mourners not only aids the bereaved psychologically but also assists the deceased's soul in navigating post-mortem spiritual realms.

Yahrzeit observance and ongoing connections

The annual commemoration of a death date, called yahrzeit (Yiddish for "year time"), carries significant mystical importance in Ma'avar Yabok. This observance, marked by lighting a 24-hour memorial candle and reciting Kaddish, creates a spiritual connection between worlds that benefits both the living and the dead.

According to kabbalistic teachings, on the anniversary of death, the soul experiences a type of "spiritual elevation" as it ascends to higher levels in the afterlife. The yahrzeit candle provides what mystics call a "garment of light" that assists the soul in this elevation. The flame's upward motion symbolizes the soul's ascent, while its physical presence in the world of the living creates a tangible connection to the world of souls.

The text emphasizes that when children observe yahrzeit for parents, they activate the mystical principle that "a son brings merit to his father" (bara mezakeh abba). This creates a reciprocal spiritual relationship where the deceased parent may intercede for the child in heavenly realms, while the child's actions continue to elevate the parent's soul.

Beyond individual yahrzeit observances, community memorial services (Yizkor) held four times annually (on Yom Kippur, Shemini Atzeret, the last day of Passover, and Shavuot) create collective channels for soul elevation. According to Ma'avar Yabok, these communal remembrances are particularly powerful because they combine the merit of the entire congregation, creating a stronger spiritual effect than individual memorials alone.

Cemetery visits and prayers at graves

Visiting graves and praying at burial sites represents another important dimension of Jewish mourning practices with profound mystical significance elaborated in Ma'avar Yabok. These visits are not merely symbolic but create actual spiritual effects according to kabbalistic understanding.

The text explains that when visiting a grave, one should place their left hand on the tombstone while praying, creating a physical connection to the deceased that facilitates spiritual communication. Specific prayers recited at gravesites are understood to directly benefit the soul, particularly when they include charitable pledges made in the deceased's memory.

According to Ma'avar Yabok, visiting graves initiates a mystical chain reaction: the living person's presence activates the nefesh that remains near the grave, which in turn communicates with the ruach in the lower Garden of Eden, which then connects to the neshamah in the upper Garden of Eden. This creates a complete channel through which prayers and good deeds can elevate the soul to higher spiritual levels.

The custom of placing small stones on graves after a visit carries kabbalistic significance beyond its practical function of marking that someone has visited. These stones, according to mystical interpretation, create a spiritual "barrier" that protects the deceased from negative forces and symbolizes the permanence of memory against the erosion of time.

Graves of righteous individuals (tzaddikim) are considered particularly powerful spiritual locations. Ma'avar Yabok explains that the souls of the righteous can serve as intermediaries, elevating prayers offered near their burial places. When one invokes the merit of the righteous deceased through the formula "by the merit of [name]," they activate a mystical channel through which divine blessing can flow more readily to address their needs.

Gender in traditional mourning practices

While Ma'avar Yabok was written in a historical context where gender roles were strictly defined, it does address both men's and women's mourning obligations, revealing interesting mystical dimensions to gender differences in mourning practices.

In traditional Jewish practice, certain mourning obligations fell primarily to men, particularly public rituals like Kaddish recitation. However, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that women's spiritual practices—particularly their three special mitzvot of niddah (family purity), challah (separating dough), and hadlakat nerot (lighting candles)—carry tremendous mystical power that can benefit deceased souls.

The text explains that women's candle-lighting creates spiritual illumination that guides souls through the darkness between worlds. It describes a kabbalistic correspondence between the components of a lamp and the letters of the divine name (YHVH): the vessel corresponds to the lower hei, the wick to vav, the oil to yod, and the flame to the upper hei. Through this practice, women directly affect divine unification in higher realms.

Similarly, women's observance of family purity laws creates cosmic purification that extends beyond the physical realm. According to Ma'avar Yabok, these practices repair the damage from primordial sin and protect women from negative spiritual forces while creating channels for divine blessing that benefit both the living and the dead.

The text acknowledges women's traditional role in preparing the deceased for burial, particularly washing and dressing female bodies. This sacred task of tahara (purification) carries profound mystical significance, as women engaging in this mitzvah create corresponding purification for the soul in spiritual realms.

The living and the dead in cosmic harmony

Jewish mourning practices, as elucidated in Ma'avar Yabok, reveal a worldview where the boundaries between life and death, physical and spiritual realms, are permeable rather than absolute. The intricate system of mourning customs reflects a sophisticated understanding of how actions in this world create corresponding effects in higher realms, directly influencing the soul's posthumous journey.

These practices serve multiple functions simultaneously: they provide psychological support for mourners; they create communal solidarity in the face of loss; they preserve cultural memory and identity; and, according to mystical understanding, they actively assist the deceased's soul in navigating the complex transition between worlds. The temporal structure of mourning periods mirrors the soul's gradual adaptation to spiritual existence, while specific rituals create channels through which divine energy flows to both comfort the living and elevate the dead.

Perhaps most profoundly, the Jewish approach to mourning articulated in Ma'avar Yabok reveals a vision of ongoing relationship between the living and the dead. Rather than a complete separation, death initiates a transformation in how souls relate to one another. The mystical framework provides comfort by affirming that those who have died continue to exist, albeit in different form, and remain connected to the living through prayers, rituals, and shared spiritual destiny.

For the modern reader, regardless of personal belief in the mystical dimensions described in Ma'avar Yabok, understanding these teachings provides valuable insight into how traditional Jewish communities conceptualized death and mourning. It reveals that behind seemingly simple customs lie complex theological and cosmological systems that frame human mortality within a larger narrative of spiritual purpose and ultimate redemption.

The Jewish mourning practices outlined here continue to evolve in contemporary Jewish communities, with varying levels of adherence to traditional forms. Yet the underlying principles—structured time for grief, communal support, meaningful ritual action, and affirmation of ongoing spiritual connection—remain powerful resources for confronting the universal human experience of loss and bereavement. In this way, the wisdom of Ma'avar Yabok continues to offer guidance for crossing the metaphorical Jabbok River that separates life from death, accompanying souls on both sides of this profound transition.

Appendix G

Tahara (ritual washing) and burial preparations

The care of the dead in Jewish tradition represents a distinctive nexus where practical necessity meets profound spiritual significance. Within the pages of Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia of Modena presents a comprehensive framework for these practices, consistently emphasizing their dual nature as both physical actions and cosmic interventions. Central to this framework is the Chevra Kadisha, the burial society whose members perform what Jewish tradition considers the ultimate act of kindness—preparing the deceased for burial.

The Chevra Kadisha (literally "Holy Society") occupies a position of particular reverence within Jewish communal structures. Unlike many other religious functionaries, these individuals perform their sacred duties largely unseen, caring for those who can never acknowledge or reciprocate their efforts. Ma'avar Yabok elevates these societies beyond mere functional necessity, portraying them as agents of divine service whose actions create profound spiritual effects. The author refers to them with exalted language as "priests" and "emissaries of the Merciful One," terminology that connects their work to the ancient Temple service and emphasizes the sacred nature of their undertaking.

The text reveals that Aaron Berechia's visit to Mantua significantly influenced his understanding of proper burial practices. He describes being deeply impressed by the piety and customs of Mantua's burial societies, particularly regarding death rituals and charitable activities. This experience appears to have provided practical models that he then integrated with his extensive kabbalistic knowledge to create Ma'avar Yabok's comprehensive approach to burial preparations. He notes that despite feeling unworthy, he was chosen to arrange prayer services in Mantua, suggesting direct experience with their funeral customs.

Members of the Chevra Kadisha traditionally prepare themselves spiritually before engaging in their sacred work. Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes the importance of pure intentions (kavvanah) during all aspects of tahara, suggesting that those performing these rituals should understand their cosmic significance. The text implies that proper preparation involves not only practical knowledge but spiritual readiness—an awareness that one stands at the intersection between worlds, facilitating the soul's transition. This preparation might include prayer, contemplation of one's own mortality, and specific ritual practices like hand washing before beginning the tahara process.

Ma'avar Yabok describes the work of the Chevra Kadisha as constituting chesed shel emet—"true kindness" or "kindness of truth." This phrase carries particular significance in Jewish thought, as it refers specifically to kindness shown to the dead, who cannot reciprocate or even acknowledge the kindness shown to them. The term appears in Genesis 47:29 when Jacob asks Joseph to show him "kindness and truth" (chesed ve'emet) by not burying him in Egypt, and has been understood in rabbinic tradition as referring specifically to burial and care for the dead. Aaron Berechia elevates this concept further by explaining that such kindness creates cosmic effects, establishing channels for divine mercy to flow into the world and aiding the soul's journey through various spiritual realms.

The ethical foundation for the Chevra Kadisha's work extends beyond mere respect for the deceased. Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that proper treatment of the body affects the soul's experience after death. The text suggests that the soul remains aware of what happens to its physical vessel even after death, creating a profound ethical imperative for those handling the deceased. This awareness continues until the grave is sealed, underscoring the importance of treating the body with utmost dignity throughout the entire process from death to burial. This conception adds a dimension of urgency and sanctity to burial preparations that transcends mere cultural practice, establishing them as critical spiritual interventions during a vulnerable transitional period for the soul.

The text consistently emphasizes that members of the Chevra Kadisha should maintain silence during their work except when reciting prescribed prayers and verses. This silence serves both practical and mystical purposes—practically ensuring reverence and concentration, while mystically aligning with the rabbinic maxim that "the reward of the house of mourning is silence." Such silence creates a sacred atmosphere during tahara that honors the gravity of death while providing spiritual protection for both the deceased and those performing the rituals.

Initial procedures following death

Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed guidance for the immediate actions to be taken following death, each carrying both practical importance and spiritual significance. These initial procedures establish a foundation of respect and dignity that characterizes the entire process of burial preparation.

The moment of death initiates a series of carefully prescribed actions. The text instructs that ideally, the deceased's son should close the eyes, though any person present may perform this action if necessary. This practice reflects both practical dignity (as open eyes can create a disturbing appearance) and symbolic meaning, suggesting a peaceful transition into eternal sleep. The closing of the eyes also metaphorically represents the soul's shift from physical to spiritual perception, as Ma'avar Yabok explains that at death, perception transitions to allow the deceased to see departed souls and potentially the Divine Presence itself.

Following the closing of the eyes, the text prescribes straightening the limbs and positioning the body properly, with arms alongside the body rather than crossed on the chest (which would reflect non-Jewish burial customs). The body should be placed on the ground, symbolizing the biblical statement that "from dust you came, and to dust you shall return" (Genesis 3:19). The text emphasizes that the body should not be left unattended from the moment of death until burial—a practice known as shemira (guarding). This continuous watching serves multiple purposes: it shows respect for the deceased, prevents rodents or other animals from disturbing the body, and provides spiritual protection against negative forces that Ma'avar Yabok suggests might otherwise harm the soul during this vulnerable transitional period.

The face of the deceased should be covered immediately after death, though the text specifies that those present should avoid gazing upon the face even before covering it. This practice reflects the Jewish principle of maintaining the dignity of the deceased by not subjecting them to unnecessary observation. Ma'avar Yabok connects this practice to deeper spiritual concepts, suggesting that the soul's departure alters the countenance in ways that should be respected through covering.

Another significant initial action is the ritual tearing of garments (keriah) by those witnessing the death. Ma'avar Yabok compares this practice to the response when witnessing a Torah scroll burn, establishing a profound connection between the human body and sacred texts. This comparison elevates the deceased human being to the level of sacred object, reinforcing the reverence with which the body should be treated. The text provides a kabbalistic interpretation of keriah as having cosmic significance, suggesting that it helps the soul transition from the "feminine realm" (alma d'nukva, associated with physical existence) to the "masculine realm" (alma d'dechura, associated with spiritual ascent).

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that all jewelry and other objects should be removed from the body, reflecting the principle that all are equal in death regardless of wealth or status. The text explains that such adornments represent material attachments that could impede the soul's spiritual journey. Additionally, the book specifies that any blood-soaked clothing should be buried with the deceased, reflecting the mystical understanding that the soul is connected to the blood, and proper treatment of blood-soaked items affects the soul's transition.

Of particular importance is the instruction that the deceased should not be left alone until burial. Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes having ten Jews (a minyan) present at death as this creates a sacred space where the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) dwells, facilitating the soul's transition. The text explains that this requirement creates a spiritual environment described as "Mahanaim" (two camps)—where the human realm meets the angelic realm, creating a protected pathway for the soul's ascent. This principle continues through the requirement for shemira until burial.

All of these initial procedures are understood to have direct effects on the soul's experience after death. Ma'avar Yabok explains that until burial, the soul hovers near the body and remains aware of everything happening to it. This understanding creates a profound ethical imperative for those handling the deceased, as their actions directly impact the soul's experience during this transitional period. The text suggests that respectful, dignified treatment brings comfort to the soul, while neglect or improper handling causes it distress.

The Tahara process: ritual purification

The central element of burial preparation in Jewish tradition is tahara, the ritual purification of the body. Ma'avar Yabok presents this process not merely as physical cleansing but as a profound spiritual transition affecting multiple cosmic realms. The tahara ritual combines meticulous practical procedures with sophisticated kabbalistic interpretations that transform what might otherwise be seen as simple washing into a cosmic intervention facilitating the soul's journey.

The tahara process begins with practical preparations. The body is placed on a special board (the tahara board) designed specifically for this purpose, which is slightly inclined to allow water to flow down and away. The text emphasizes that all preparations should be made before bringing the body to the tahara room, ensuring that the deceased is not subjected to unnecessary delays or disturbances once the ritual begins. The room itself should be clean and prepared with all necessary items: containers of water, towels, combs, sheets for covering the body during various stages of the process, and the shrouds (tachrichim) that will eventually clothe the deceased.

Ma'avar Yabok prescribes that those performing tahara should wash their hands before beginning, symbolizing both physical cleanliness and spiritual purification. The text explicitly connects this practice to the kabbalistic concept of the ten fingers corresponding to the ten divine emanations (sefirot), suggesting that the washing of hands creates channels for divine influence to flow through the ritual actions that follow. This hand-washing represents the first of many actions during tahara that simultaneously serve practical and mystical purposes.

The actual washing process consists of two distinct phases. The first phase involves the cleaning of the body, removing any physical impurities. The text instructs that warm water should be used, and that the body should be treated with utmost respect and gentleness throughout. Those performing tahara are instructed to keep the body covered with a sheet as much as possible during this process, exposing only the portion being washed at any given time. This maintains the dignity of the deceased while also reflecting spiritual modesty. The text emphasizes that the body should never be turned face down, as this would be considered disrespectful.

During this initial cleaning, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes that specific verses from Song of Songs should be recited for different parts of the body, following a top-down order from head to feet. This practice reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the human form mirrors divine structures, with each body part corresponding to different aspects of the cosmic divine body. The text specifically recommends verses from Song of Songs 5:11-16, which poetically describe the beloved's body from head to feet:

- "His head is finest gold, his locks are wavy, black as a raven" for washing the head.
- "His eyes are like doves beside springs of water" for the eyes.
- "His cheeks are like beds of spices" for the face.
- "His lips are lilies, distilling liquid myrrh" for the mouth.
- "His hands are rods of gold, set with beryl" for the hands.

- "His legs are alabaster columns, set upon bases of gold" for the legs.

The use of these verses transforms physical washing into a spiritual reconsecration of the body, connecting each part to its divine counterpart and preparing it for its return to its source. This practice also reflects the Jewish understanding of Song of Songs as an allegory for the relationship between God and Israel, suggesting that tahara prepares the body for a spiritual reunion with the divine beloved.

Following the initial cleaning, the second phase of tahara involves pouring nine measures (kavin) of water over the entire body in a continuous flow. Ma'avar Yabok explains this practice in both practical and mystical terms. Practically, it ensures complete purification; mystically, it carries profound kabbalistic significance related to divine names and attributes. The text provides gematria (numerical) interpretations connecting the nine measures to various divine names and configurations, suggesting that this pouring creates spiritual channels through which the soul can ascend. The number nine itself is significant in kabbalistic thought, often associated with the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation), which serves as a channel between higher spiritual realms and the physical world.

During this pouring of water, specific biblical verses emphasizing purification are recited, including "I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean; from all your uncleannesses and from all your idols I will cleanse you" (Ezekiel 36:25). These verses explicitly connect physical washing with spiritual purification, reinforcing the dual nature of tahara as both bodily cleansing and soul preparation. The text emphasizes that the water should flow over the entire body without interruption, symbolizing complete purification.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that the tahara process operates simultaneously on physical and metaphysical levels. Physically, it cleanses the body, showing respect for the vessel that housed a divine soul; spiritually, it purifies the nefesh (lower soul component) that remains connected to the body even after death. The text suggests that proper tahara facilitates the soul's separation from physical attachments while providing spiritual protection during its journey through various realms. In kabbalistic terms, the washing ritual is understood to remove negative spiritual forces (kelipot) that might otherwise cling to the soul, allowing it to ascend more freely.

Of particular importance is the instruction that those performing tahara should maintain specific intentions (kavvanot) throughout the process. Ma'avar Yabok explains that proper intention transforms simple physical actions into cosmic interventions affecting multiple spiritual worlds. The text describes how each aspect of tahara—from hand washing to verse recitation to water pouring—creates effects in corresponding divine realms, particularly influencing the sefirot of Chesed (Loving-kindness) and Din (Judgment). These kavvanot ensure that tahara serves not merely as physical cleaning but as a comprehensive spiritual preparation facilitating the soul's transition.

After the washing and pouring of water is complete, the body is carefully dried. The text emphasizes that this should be done gently and respectfully, maintaining the deceased's dignity throughout. Once dried, the body is ready for dressing in burial shrouds, the next stage in the preparation process.

Tachrichim: The symbolic garments of eternity

Following the tahara process, the deceased is dressed in special burial garments known as tachrichim. Ma'avar Yabok presents these simple white shrouds not merely as practical coverings but as spiritually significant garments that prepare the soul for its journey and eventual resurrection. The simplicity and uniformity of tachrichim reflect the fundamental Jewish principle that all are equal in death, regardless of social status or wealth in life.

The text describes tachrichim as typically consisting of several separate white garments: an undergarment or pants (michnasayim), a shirt (kutonet), a head covering (mitznefet), and a face covering (sovev). These garments are traditionally made of simple white linen or cotton, without pockets, knots, or embellishments. Ma'avar Yabok explains that this simplicity serves multiple purposes: it honors the deceased by preventing embarrassment for those who cannot afford elaborate burial clothes, it symbolizes purity and the removal of worldly concerns, and it mystically prepares the body for resurrection.

The white color of tachrichim carries profound symbolic significance that Ma'avar Yabok explores in detail. White represents purity, drawing on the biblical verse, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow" (Isaiah 1:18). It also symbolizes forgiveness, suggesting that the deceased has been purified of sins. The text connects this symbolism to the High Priest's white garments worn on Yom Kippur, implying that death itself serves as a form of atonement. This connection establishes an important theological framework where proper burial preparations participate in the deceased's spiritual purification.

Ma'avar Yabok presents a sophisticated kabbalistic interpretation of tachrichim, explaining that the different garments correspond to different components of the soul: the undergarments and leggings relate to the nefesh (vital soul), the shroud to the ruach (spirit), and the tallit to the neshamah (higher soul). This correspondence suggests that the dressing ritual addresses each aspect of the soul's complex structure, preparing all components for their respective journeys. The text further explains that these garments serve as spiritual vessels that continue to clothe the soul even after the physical garments decay, creating enduring spiritual protection during the soul's post-mortem journey.

The text prescribes specific verses to be recited during the dressing process, particularly from Song of Songs 4:14: "Nard and saffron, calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, myrrh and aloes, with all chief spices." This verse metaphorically describes the deceased as being prepared with spiritual fragrances for their final journey. After completing the dressing, additional verses from Isaiah 61:10 are recited: "I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for He has clothed me with the garments of salvation, He has covered me with the robe of righteousness." These verses create a parallel between the physical dressing of the body and the spiritual garments of salvation that await the soul, transforming the practical act of clothing the deceased into a cosmic preparation for eternity.

For men who were married during their lifetime, the tallit (prayer shawl) holds special significance in burial preparations. Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed instructions for how the tallit should be treated: one of its ritual fringes (tzitzit) should be cut to render it ritually invalid, symbolizing that the deceased is no longer obligated to perform commandments. However, the text emphasizes that the tallit should be positioned according to how the person wore it during life, honoring their personal religious customs even in death. According to the text, the tallit serves to protect the deceased from "forces of judgment" and brings the soul under divine protection, described metaphorically as "the wings of the Divine Presence."

Of particular interest is Ma'avar Yabok's explanation of the practice of including earth from the Land of Israel in burial preparations. The text describes a custom of placing a small amount of soil from the Holy Land under the deceased's head or sprinkling it over the body before burial. This practice carries multiple layers of significance: it connects the deceased to the sacred land even if they could not be buried there, it symbolically fulfills the wish of many diaspora Jews to be connected with Israel in death, and it mystically facilitates the soul's journey during resurrection. The text explains that bodies buried in the diaspora will need to "roll through underground passages" to reach the Land of Israel for resurrection, and including holy soil eases this process.

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that throughout the dressing process, those preparing the body should maintain an awareness of the kabbalistic correspondences between physical actions and spiritual effects. The text suggests that proper intention during this process creates channels through which divine mercy can flow, aiding the soul's journey while establishing cosmic repairs (tikkunim) in higher realms. This dual awareness—attending simultaneously to practical details and spiritual significance—characterizes the book's entire approach to burial preparations.

Special cases and gender considerations

Ma'avar Yabok recognizes that while general principles apply to all burial preparations, certain circumstances require modified approaches. The text provides detailed guidance for various special cases, ensuring that even unusual situations can be handled with proper respect and appropriate ritual adaptation. Similarly, it acknowledges gender-specific considerations in tahara practices, reflecting both practical modesty concerns and deeper mystical understandings of masculine and feminine spiritual energies.

Regarding gender, the text establishes the fundamental principle that tahara should be performed by members of the same sex as the deceased. Men prepare male bodies, women prepare female bodies. This rule serves practical modesty concerns while also reflecting kabbalistic understandings of gender complementarity in spiritual realms. The separation extends beyond the tahara itself to funeral processions, where Ma'avar Yabok warns about strict gender separation, with men and women not only walking separately but at different times. The text explains this requirement through the belief that the Angel of Death is especially powerful when men and women are mixed during funeral proceedings, suggesting that proper separation provides spiritual protection during this vulnerable time.

For women, Ma'avar Yabok includes special considerations related to their distinctive religious obligations. The text specifically emphasizes the importance of tahara for women who may have died while in a state of niddah (ritual impurity related to menstruation), suggesting that proper purification affects their soul's journey. Additionally, the book connects women's burial preparations to the three essential mitzvot particularly incumbent upon women: niddah (family purity), challah (separating dough), and hadlakat ha-ner (candle lighting). The text explains how proper burial rituals help rectify any shortcomings in these areas during life.

For those who died violently, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes specific modified practices. The text instructs that murder victims should be buried separately from other deceased, left in their clothes rather than dressed in shrouds, and wrapped with a sheet over these clothes. These modifications stem from the mystical understanding that the souls of murder victims actively seek justice against their killers and remain in a distinct spiritual state until vengeance is achieved. The text explains that murdered souls cannot find rest until justice is done, either through the murderer's death or divine judgment. Blood-soaked clothes are to be buried with the deceased rather than removed, based on the kabbalistic concept that the blood contains spiritual elements connected to the soul.

Regarding suicide, traditional Jewish practice treats this as a grave sin that affects burial procedures, though Ma'avar Yabok approaches this sensitive topic with notable compassion. While acknowledging the traditional view that suicides should be buried separately near the cemetery boundary, the text emphasizes the importance of determining whether the person acted with full awareness, suggesting that most suicides occur during states of extreme distress or mental disturbance that mitigate culpability. The text advocates for compassionate judgment, particularly for those who may have been suffering from what we would now recognize as mental illness.

For excommunicated persons (those under cherem), Ma'avar Yabok describes modified burial practices reflecting their separated status from the community. Such individuals were traditionally buried at a distance from others, with ritual stoning of their coffins paralleling the treatment of those sentenced to stoning execution in life. However, the text acknowledges the possibility of posthumous forgiveness and reconciliation, suggesting that proper burial rituals can help reintegrate the excommunicated person's soul into the community after death.

The text addresses cases where bodies are disfigured or incomplete, such as from accidents or warfare. In such situations, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that every effort should be made to gather all body parts for burial, based on the kabbalistic understanding that the soul maintains connections to all parts of the body. When parts cannot be recovered, the text recommends modified rituals acknowledging the incompleteness while still providing all possible respect and dignity. The mystical concept of the luz bone (a small indestructible bone believed to be the nucleus for resurrection) receives particular attention, with the text emphasizing its importance for eventual bodily reconstitution.

For Torah scholars, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes special honors during burial preparations. The text instructs that scholars should be dressed with their written works placed alongside them, symbolizing their continued spiritual connection to Torah learning. Additional prayers and Psalms specific to scholars are recommended, acknowledging their elevated spiritual status. The book explains that Torah scholars enjoy special divine protection during the soul's journey after death, with angels escorting them to heavenly academies where they continue their studies in higher realms.

Regarding stillborn infants or children who died young, Ma'avar Yabok displays particular compassion. The text explains that while full burial rituals are performed, with modified tahara appropriate to the child's size and age, these souls occupy a special elevated status in heaven. The book teaches that the souls of young children stand in a place "where even the completely righteous cannot ascend," and that their tears provide spiritual protection for the living. This compassionate theology offers comfort to grieving parents while providing guidance for proper ritual observance.

Finally, the text addresses the circumstances of those who die far from home or Jewish community. While emphasizing that proper Jewish burial is strongly preferred, Ma'avar Yabok acknowledges that circumstances sometimes make this impossible. In such cases, the text recommends specific prayers and intentions that can spiritually compensate for limitations in physical ritual observance. It explains that sincere prayers offered by distant family members can provide spiritual assistance to the deceased's soul even when traditional burial preparations cannot be fully performed.

The spiritual mechanics of soul transition

Throughout its detailed instructions for tahara and burial preparations, Ma'avar Yabok presents a sophisticated metaphysical framework explaining how these physical actions affect the soul's journey after death. This framework reveals the profound spiritual mechanics underlying Jewish burial practices, connecting seemingly mundane ritual actions to cosmic processes affecting multiple spiritual worlds.

Central to this framework is the understanding that the soul consists of multiple components that separate at death but maintain ongoing connections with each other and with the physical remains. Ma'avar Yabok describes a three-part structure consisting of nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul), though occasionally it references additional components like chayah and yechidah that represent higher spiritual aspects. According to the text, these components experience different journeys after death: the nefesh remains near the grave, the ruach ascends to the lower Garden of Eden, and the neshamah reaches the upper Garden of Eden. However, these soul components maintain relationships with each other, especially during sacred times like Sabbath when they can temporarily reunite.

The text explains that proper burial preparations facilitate the separation and transition of these soul components, easing what would otherwise be a traumatic process. The washing rituals specifically address the nefesh component that remains most closely connected to the physical body, providing purification that removes negative spiritual attachments (described as "external forces" or "husks") that might otherwise impede its journey. The dressing in burial shrouds creates spiritual protection for the soul components as they navigate various spiritual realms, with different garments corresponding to different soul aspects.

Ma'avar Yabok presents a detailed timeline for the soul's journey after death that directly correlates with traditional mourning periods. During the first three days after death, the soul hovers near the body, which explains the text's emphasis on maintaining proper respect and dignity during this period. For seven days (corresponding to the shiva mourning period), the soul travels between its new spiritual dwelling and the grave before being allowed to appear before the Divine Presence. Over thirty days (sheloshim), the soul must ascend through thirty spiritual levels (ten in each of the three lower worlds) before reaching the highest world of Atzilut (Emanation). This detailed timeline establishes a profound connection between mourning practices observed by the living and the actual spiritual journey experienced by the deceased's soul.

The text explains that proper burial practices create what it calls a "faithful shepherd" (ro'eh ne'eman) for the soul—a spiritual guide that assists its journey through various realms. This metaphorical shepherd consists of the mitzvot (commandments) performed by the deceased during life, combined with the proper ritual actions performed by the Chevra Kadisha and mourners. Together, these create a protective spiritual escort that guides the soul through judgment and toward its proper resting place.

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that even after the soul components have reached their respective destinations, they maintain ongoing connections with the physical remains. The text describes a spiritual essence or "vital force" (ruach chiyut) that remains in the bones even after death, creating an enduring link between the physical remains and the soul's ongoing experience. This connection explains the importance of proper burial and the text's detailed instructions for treating the body with utmost respect throughout all preparations.

Of particular metaphysical importance is the pouring of nine measures of water during tahara, which the text explains in terms of divine unifications (yichudim) between different spiritual attributes. Ma'avar Yabok provides elaborate kabbalistic interpretations connecting this ritual to the ten sefirot (divine emanations), suggesting that the flowing water creates channels between Chesed (Loving-kindness) and Din (Judgment) that help transform harsh spiritual judgment into mercy. This transformation directly benefits the soul during its judgment process after death.

The text presents burial preparations as creating cosmic repairs (tikkunim) that extend far beyond the individual soul being prepared. Proper rituals are understood to affect multiple spiritual worlds, helping to restore divine harmony disrupted by death. The washing rituals specifically create what the text calls "sweetening of judgments" (mitak ha-dinim), a kabbalistic concept referring to the transformation of divine severity into mercy. This cosmic process benefits not only the deceased but the entire world, as it helps maintain proper balance between divine attributes.

Ma'avar Yabok explicitly connects burial preparations to the ultimate resurrection of the dead, suggesting that proper treatment of the body facilitates its eventual reconstitution. The text describes how the luz bone—a small, indestructible bone believed to be located either at the base of the skull or at the bottom of the spine—serves as the nucleus for resurrection, maintaining a physical anchor for the soul's eventual return. The burial garments are similarly understood as preparation for resurrection, creating spiritual patterns that will help reconstitute the body when the time comes.

The spiritual mechanics presented in Ma'avar Yabok reveal burial preparations as far more than respectful disposition of physical remains. These rituals constitute a sophisticated spiritual technology that actively shapes the soul's posthumous experience, provides protection during its journey through various realms, facilitates its judgment and purification, and prepares it for eventual resurrection. This metaphysical framework transforms seemingly simple ritual actions—washing, pouring water, dressing in shrouds—into cosmic interventions with profound spiritual consequences extending across multiple worlds and dimensions of existence.

The enduring wisdom of Tahara

The tahara and burial preparation practices described in Ma'avar Yabok represent a remarkable integration of practical compassion and sophisticated mystical understanding. Far from being mere cultural customs, these rituals emerge from the text as a comprehensive spiritual system addressing the complex needs of both body and soul during the critical transition of death. This system reflects core Jewish values—dignity, equality, community responsibility, and hope for ultimate redemption—while providing practical guidance for those engaged in the sacred work of preparing the dead for burial.

What distinguishes Ma'avar Yabok's approach is its consistent integration of practical instructions with profound metaphysical explanations. Each physical action is presented as simultaneously addressing practical necessity and cosmic purpose, creating a seamless connection between mundane and spiritual realms. This integration transforms what might otherwise be seen as simple hygienic procedures into sacred rituals with far-reaching spiritual effects. The washing of the body becomes purification of the soul; the dressing in shrouds becomes preparation for resurrection; the careful handling of physical remains becomes protection for the departing spirit.

The text's emphasis on kavvanah (proper intention) throughout burial preparations highlights the importance of consciousness in ritual practice. According to Ma'avar Yabok, the effectiveness of these rituals depends not merely on correct physical actions but on the spiritual awareness and intention of those performing them. This principle elevates the work of the Chevra Kadisha beyond mechanical procedure to sacred service requiring both physical skill and spiritual understanding. It suggests that proper burial preparation involves a contemplative dimension—an awareness of one's role in facilitating cosmic processes that extend far beyond the visible world.

Ma'avar Yabok's detailed explanations of the soul's journey after death provide powerful comfort to the bereaved by presenting death not as an ending but as a transition. The text offers a coherent vision of continued existence, purposeful judgment, and ultimate resurrection that places individual death within a meaningful cosmic framework. The elaborate description of how proper burial preparations aid this journey transforms grief into sacred action, allowing mourners to actively participate in assisting their loved one's soul rather than feeling helpless in the face of death.

The consistent emphasis on treating all deceased with equal dignity regardless of status or circumstances reflects core Jewish ethical values. Ma'avar Yabok's instructions for simple white burial garments, its prohibition against excessive ornamentation, and its insistence on the same basic ritual procedures for all (with modifications only as specifically required) establish death as the great equalizer. This equality in death serves as a powerful reminder of human commonality transcending social distinctions, wealth disparities, and other worldly differences.

Perhaps most profoundly, the text presents tahara and burial preparations as part of an ongoing covenant relationship between the living and the dead. The careful attention given to the deceased creates spiritual benefits that flow in both directions: the deceased's soul receives assistance in its journey, while those performing these sacred duties accumulate spiritual merit. This reciprocal relationship extends beyond the immediate burial society to include the entire community, establishing care for the dead as a communal responsibility with communal benefits.

The wisdom preserved in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to tahara and burial preparations transcends its historical context, offering insights relevant to contemporary questions about dignity in death, the relationship between physical and spiritual care, and the importance of meaningful ritual in confronting mortality. Its sophisticated integration of practical compassion with metaphysical understanding continues to inspire and guide Jewish burial societies centuries after its composition, ensuring that those who have completed their earthly journey receive proper care as they transition to the next world—crossing their own spiritual Yabok River with dignity, respect, and hope for what lies beyond.

Appendix H

The Garden of Eden and Gehenna

The Jewish understanding of the afterlife represents one of the most nuanced and complex eschatological systems in world religions, distinctly different from both the Christian binary of heaven and hell and the Eastern concepts of rebirth and karma. The Jewish afterlife tradition developed gradually, with relatively sparse references in the Hebrew Bible evolving into elaborate cosmological systems by the medieval period. This evolution reached its zenith in kabbalistic works like the Zohar and later texts such as Aaron Berechia of Modena's Ma'avar Yabok (Crossing of the Jabbok), which present intricate descriptions of the soul's journey after death.

Unlike traditions that emphasize eternal punishment or reward, Jewish mystical thought conceives of the afterlife primarily as a complex process of spiritual refinement and elevation. The soul, having completed its earthly sojourn, embarks on a journey through various realms designed not merely to reward or punish, but to purify, rectify, and ultimately prepare it for higher spiritual states. This perspective reflects Judaism's characteristic emphasis on this-worldly actions and responsibilities, while still acknowledging the soul's continued existence and development after physical death.

The Garden of Eden (Gan Eden) and Gehenna (Gehinnom) constitute the two primary spiritual realms of this afterlife journey. However, contrary to simplistic heaven/hell dichotomies, these realms function as complementary stations in the soul's progress rather than permanent destinations. Gan Eden represents not merely a reward but a complex spiritual ecosystem with multiple levels, chambers, and palaces, where souls experience divine delight proportionate to their spiritual attainments. Conversely, Gehenna serves not as eternal damnation but as a temporary realm of purification where souls confront and cleanse themselves of spiritual impurities accumulated during physical existence.

The development of these concepts reflects broader trends in Jewish religious thought—an increasing preoccupation with individual spiritual destiny alongside communal covenant, a deepening interest in cosmic structures and correspondences, and a commitment to harmonizing justice with mercy in understanding divine governance. The systematic elaboration of afterlife geography in texts like Ma'avar Yabok also demonstrates the Jewish tendency to organize spiritual realities according to hierarchical structures that reflect divine attributes and cosmic principles.

What makes the Jewish mystical approach to the afterlife particularly distinctive is its integration of seemingly contradictory elements: individual judgment with universal salvation, temporal punishment with eternal spiritual progress, divine justice with divine mercy, and embodied existence with disembodied spiritual states. These tensions are not viewed as contradictions but as complementary aspects of a complex divine system designed to bring all creation, including human souls, to their ultimate perfection.

This appendix explores these afterlife realms as presented in Jewish mystical literature, with particular attention to the detailed descriptions found in Ma'avar Yabok. The cosmic geography of Gan Eden and Gehenna reveals much about how Jewish mystics understood the relationship between divine justice and mercy, the purpose of human existence, and the ultimate destiny of the soul. Through this exploration, we gain insight not only into traditional Jewish beliefs about what happens after death but also into the profound ethical and spiritual principles that inform Jewish approaches to life itself.

The Garden of Eden: cosmic geography

In Jewish mystical tradition, the Garden of Eden (Gan Eden) represents far more than the biblical paradise from which Adam and Eve were expelled. It constitutes an elaborate spiritual realm with distinct cosmic functions and a complex internal geography. According to kabbalistic works like the Zohar and Ma'avar Yabok, Gan Eden exists simultaneously on multiple planes of reality, serving as both the destination for righteous souls after death and a cosmic nexus where divine energies flow between spiritual worlds.

The foundational distinction in kabbalistic thought is between the "Lower Garden of Eden" (Gan Eden HaTachton) and the "Upper Garden of Eden" (Gan Eden HaElyon). This distinction corresponds to the broader kabbalistic framework of the four worlds: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). The Lower Garden resides within the world of Yetzirah (Formation), while the Upper Garden exists within Beriah (Creation). These placements are significant because they establish the Gardens as intermediate realms between the purely spiritual world of divine emanation (Atzilut) and the physical world of action (Asiyah).

Ma'avar Yabok elaborates on this structure by explaining that "Eden" and "Garden" actually represent distinct but interconnected elements. Eden itself (typically associated with Binah, the divine attribute of Understanding) represents the source, while the Garden (associated with Malkhut, the divine attribute of Sovereignty) represents the recipient of Eden's flow. As the text states: "The Garden of earth and heaven receives from Eden, which is the source of the springs of wisdom." This relationship mirrors the kabbalistic principle of masculine and feminine energies, with Eden providing the spiritual "seed" that flourishes in the receptive "soil" of the Garden.

The Lower Garden of Eden contains numerous chambers (heikhalot) organized in concentric circles, each corresponding to different levels of spiritual attainment and housing souls of varying degrees of merit. Ma'avar Yabok describes these chambers in detail, noting that "there are seven palaces in the Lower Garden, and similarly, seven in the Upper Garden, each more glorious than the other." The outermost chambers house souls of minimal merit, while the innermost sanctums are reserved for the most spiritually advanced. This architectural arrangement establishes a spatial hierarchy that reflects moral and spiritual distinctions, with proximity to the center indicating greater spiritual achievement.

Each chamber contains specific categories of righteous souls, organized according to their primary virtues. There are designated areas for martyrs who sanctified God's name, for scholars who devoted themselves to Torah study, for those who suffered during life but maintained their faith, for those who educated children in righteousness, and for those who transformed their communities through acts of kindness. This organization reflects the Jewish emphasis on diverse paths to righteousness, suggesting that various forms of spiritual excellence receive appropriate recognition in the afterlife.

A defining feature of the Garden's cosmic geography is the "River of Light" that flows from the Upper Garden to nourish the Lower Garden. Ma'avar Yabok describes this river as "emerging from Eden to water the garden," drawing on the biblical description in Genesis but interpreting it as a channel for divine energy rather than literal water. This river serves multiple functions: it nourishes the souls residing in the Garden, it facilitates communication between different levels of the afterlife, and it symbolizes the continuous flow of divine blessing from higher realms to lower ones.

The Garden's internal landscape features not only palaces but also fields, orchards, and mountains, each with symbolic significance. The "Field of Sacred Apples" (Chakal Tapuchin Kadishin) represents the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah), while the mountains symbolize the higher sefirot (divine attributes). These geographical features are not merely decorative but functional, serving as locations for specific spiritual activities. Souls gather in the fields to receive new teachings, ascend the mountains to perceive divine revelations, and enjoy the fruits of the orchards as a form of spiritual sustenance.

Central to the Garden's cosmic purpose is its function as a dwelling place for the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). Ma'avar Yabok states that "the Shekhinah dwells in the Garden at fixed times, especially at midnight and during sacred occasions." This indwelling transforms the Garden from merely a pleasant abode for righteous souls into a sacred space where divine revelation continues after death. The cyclical presence of the Shekhinah creates a temporal rhythm within the Garden, with souls experiencing heightened states of spiritual ecstasy during these divine visitations.

The Garden also contains a central pillar (sometimes called the "Tree of Life") that extends from the lowest realms to the highest, providing a pathway for souls to ascend to higher levels. According to Ma'avar Yabok, "righteous souls may ascend this pathway on Sabbaths and festivals," temporarily experiencing more elevated states of consciousness before returning to their designated chambers. This vertical mobility introduces a dynamic element to the Garden's structure, allowing souls to progress spiritually even after death rather than remaining static in assigned positions.

The Garden's relationship to Jerusalem represents another significant aspect of its cosmic geography. Ma'avar Yabok asserts that "the Garden of Eden is situated directly above earthly Jerusalem, and the gate of the Garden aligns with the Temple Mount." This correspondence establishes a vertical axis connecting sacred spaces across multiple worlds, suggesting that the Temple service on earth had direct effects on spiritual realms above. Consequently, even after the Temple's destruction, prayers offered at the Western Wall were believed to ascend directly to the Garden's gate.

The landscape of Gan Eden is not merely beautiful but instructive, containing what Ma'avar Yabok calls "chambers of wisdom" where souls continue their spiritual education. These chambers contain scrolls of celestial fire on which divine teachings are inscribed, allowing souls to study ever-deeper layers of Torah that were inaccessible during physical life. This educational function reflects the Jewish valuation of knowledge as a spiritual good, suggesting that intellectual growth continues in the afterlife rather than being replaced by passive bliss.

For the kabbalists, the Garden of Eden represents not just a posthumous reward but a cosmic reality that influences and is influenced by human actions. Righteous deeds in the physical world create "aromatic scents" in the Garden, while Torah study opens new "wellsprings" that nourish its landscape. This reciprocal relationship ensures that the Garden is not a static paradise but a dynamic spiritual ecosystem that responds to human spiritual achievements and contributes to the ultimate perfection of creation.

The Upper and Lower Gardens

The distinction between the Upper and Lower Gardens of Eden represents more than a spatial differentiation; it reflects a profound understanding of the soul's progressive spiritual journey through increasingly refined states of consciousness. According to Ma'avar Yabok, this division corresponds to the kabbalistic understanding of the soul's components, with the Ruach (spirit) dwelling in the Lower Garden and the Neshamah (higher soul) ascending to the Upper Garden, while the Nefesh (vital soul) remains connected to the grave.

The Lower Garden of Eden, situated in the World of Yetzirah (Formation), provides an intermediate experience that maintains some connection to embodied existence. Here, souls appear in forms resembling their earthly bodies, though composed of more refined spiritual substance. Ma'avar Yabok describes these forms as "spiritual garments woven from the light generated by their mitzvot [commandments]." These garments allow souls to recognize one another and maintain a sense of individual identity while experiencing a more elevated existence than was possible during physical life.

Activities in the Lower Garden retain analogues to earthly experience, though transformed into purely spiritual expressions. Souls "eat" by absorbing the radiance of the Divine Presence, "drink" from rivers of divine light, and "converse" through direct thought-communication rather than physical speech. According to Ma'avar Yabok, "They delight in the splendor of the Shekhinah and partake of the spiritual sustenance that flows from the supernal table." This mode of existence provides continuity with earthly life while elevating its pleasures to a spiritual plane.

Social structures within the Lower Garden reflect earthly relationships transformed by spiritual principles. Souls gather in "assemblies" (yeshivot) organized around great sages, studying together and sharing insights. Family relationships persist but are reorganized according to spiritual affinity rather than merely biological connection. Ma'avar Yabok notes that "a son who exceeded his father in righteousness may occupy a higher chamber, though he will still honor his father according to the commandment." This arrangement balances respect for familial bonds with recognition of individual spiritual achievement.

The Upper Garden of Eden, located in the World of Beriah (Creation), represents a more profound departure from embodied experience. Here, souls shed their resemblance to physical forms and exist as "pure intellectual lights," directly perceiving divine truths without the mediation of images or metaphors. Ma'avar Yabok describes this state as "cleaving to the supernal light without any intervening barrier," a level of immediate divine communion impossible even in the Lower Garden. The pleasure experienced in this realm is described as "intellectual delight," the joy of direct comprehension of divine wisdom.

The architecture of the Upper Garden reflects its more abstract nature. Instead of palaces and fields, it contains what Ma'avar Yabok calls "chambers of primordial light" and "treasuries of divine wisdom." These structures are not spatial in any conventional sense but represent different qualities of divine illumination. The text describes souls in this realm as "encircled by the splendor of the divine crown," experiencing direct exposure to divine attributes that would overwhelm souls of lesser spiritual capacity.

Communication in the Upper Garden transcends even the thought-transfer of the Lower Garden, occurring through what kabbalists call "kissing of spirits" (neshikin de-ruchin)—a complete interpenetration of consciousness whereby souls share understanding without any differentiation between transmitter and receiver. Ma'avar Yabok states that in this realm, "souls communicate through the unification of intellectual lights, each illuminating the other without diminishment." This mode of communion represents the perfection of interpersonal connection, entirely free from the misunderstandings and boundaries that characterize earthly communication.

The relationship between the Upper and Lower Gardens involves complex patterns of movement and visitation. While most souls cannot permanently ascend from the Lower to the Upper Garden until they have completed their purification, temporary ascents occur during sacred times. According to Ma'avar Yabok, "On Sabbaths and festivals, the gates between the Gardens open, allowing souls from below to ascend and glimpse higher revelations." This cyclical pattern creates a temporal rhythm in the afterlife that mirrors the Jewish calendar, suggesting that sacred time maintains its significance beyond physical existence.

Ma'avar Yabok also describes how souls in both Gardens benefit from prayers and good deeds performed by the living. When descendants study Torah or perform mitzvot in memory of the deceased, these actions create "channels of light" that convey additional spiritual sustenance to the souls in both Gardens. The text states that "when children recite Kaddish [the mourner's prayer], their words ascend like a crown upon their parents' souls, elevating them to higher chambers." This ongoing connection between the living and the dead ensures that relationships continue to evolve even across the boundary of physical death.

The ultimate purpose of both Gardens extends beyond reward for past deeds to preparation for future cosmic developments. Ma'avar Yabok explains that "souls gather in the Gardens to prepare for the World to Come and the resurrection, when they will return to their bodies in a transformed state." This perspective frames the afterlife experience not as an end but as an intermediate phase in the soul's ongoing journey toward perfect existence in both spiritual and physical dimensions. The Gardens function as training grounds where souls develop the spiritual capacities necessary for this future perfected state.

Gehenna: origin, structure, and function

Gehenna (Gehinnom) represents one of the most frequently misunderstood concepts in Jewish eschatology, often incorrectly equated with the Christian concept of Hell as a place of eternal punishment. In Jewish mystical thought, particularly as elaborated in Ma'avar Yabok, Gehenna serves primarily as a realm of spiritual purification rather than punitive suffering. Its existence reflects not divine vengeance but divine mercy, providing souls with the opportunity to cleanse themselves of impurities that would prevent their ultimate elevation.

The cosmic origin of Gehenna reveals its fundamental purpose within divine creation. According to kabbalistic teachings cited in Ma'avar Yabok, Gehenna was created on the second day of creation—the only day about which Scripture does not say "and God saw that it was good." This timing indicates that Gehenna represents a necessary but temporary aspect of creation, essential for cosmic balance but not part of creation's final perfected state. The text states that "Gehenna was formed from the divine attribute of Judgment (Din) when it operated in isolation from Mercy (Rachamim)," suggesting that it embodies a circumscribed and balanced expression of divine severity rather than unchecked punitive power.

Physically, Gehenna is located in what kabbalists call "Arka," one of the seven earths in the kabbalistic cosmography. Ma'avar Yabok places it specifically "in the northwest, in the place of darkness and shadow," symbolically distant from Jerusalem (associated with the southeast and divine light). This geographical positioning reflects Gehenna's spiritual function as the realm furthest removed from direct divine illumination, where souls experience the consequences of their estrangement from divine connection.

The structural organization of Gehenna follows a sevenfold pattern, with distinct levels or "chambers" designed to address different categories of spiritual impurity. Ma'avar Yabok details these seven departments:

1. Sheol: For those who committed sins of pride and arrogance
2. Abaddon: For those who led others astray through false teachings
3. Be'er Shachat: For those who profaned sacred matters
4. Tit HaYaven: For those who slandered and spoke maliciously
5. Tzalmavet: For those who stole from the poor or committed sexual transgressions
6. Sha'arei Mavet: For those who took pleasure in others' suffering
7. Gehinnom proper: For those who harbored hatred without cause

Each level contains specific conditions and purification processes designed to address the particular spiritual damage created by its corresponding category of sin. These conditions are not arbitrary punishments but reflect the natural consequences of the soul's own actions, allowing direct experiential recognition of the harm caused by various transgressions.

Contrary to popular misconceptions, Gehenna is administered not by demons or devils but by angels fulfilling divine functions. Ma'avar Yabok identifies Dumah ("Silence") as the principal angelic overseer of Gehenna, assisted by angels called "Masters of Judgment" who ensure that purification processes precisely match each soul's specific needs. These angels do not take pleasure in suffering but function as spiritual physicians, administering difficult but necessary treatments to heal the soul's self-inflicted wounds.

The purification process in Gehenna operates through what Ma'avar Yabok calls "fire of the soul" rather than material flame. This spiritual fire represents the soul's own recognition of its failings when exposed to divine truth—a painful but illuminating process of self-judgment. The text explains that "the soul itself becomes the fire and the fuel" as it confronts the full consequences of its actions without the defensive mechanisms that obscured these consequences during physical life. This self-generated nature of the purification process reflects the kabbalistic principle that divine judgment ultimately aims at restoration rather than destruction.

Temporally, Gehenna operates according to precise cosmic schedules that reflect divine mercy. Standard duration of purification is limited to twelve months, based on the rabbinic teaching that "the judgment of the wicked in Gehenna lasts twelve months." Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that "even the greatest sinners, except for a small minority who severed themselves entirely from divine connection, experience only temporary purification." This temporal limitation underscores the rehabilitative rather than punitive purpose of Gehenna, contrasting sharply with concepts of eternal damnation found in some other religious traditions.

The severity and duration of the purification process varies according to several factors. Souls that performed mitzvot and acts of kindness during life receive periods of respite from purification. According to Ma'avar Yabok, "Those who observed the Sabbath properly are released from Gehenna every Sabbath," while "those who performed charity with proper intention receive regular intervals of relief." These temporary reprieves reflect the principle that good deeds create genuine spiritual merit that persists even when the soul requires purification in other areas.

Gehenna also includes specific "cooling chambers" where souls recover between periods of purification. Ma'avar Yabok describes these as "places of respite where angels of mercy attend to souls and prepare them for the next stage of their purification." This alternation between intensive purification and recovery periods allows souls to integrate the lessons of each phase before proceeding to the next, preventing overwhelming experiences that might impede rather than facilitate spiritual progress.

An important feature of Gehenna described in Ma'avar Yabok is the "River of Fire" (Nehar Dinur) that all souls must cross as part of their transition to higher realms. This river, composed of "the intellectual fire generated by the debates of the heavenly academy," serves as both barrier and gateway. Souls that retain significant impurities cannot cross this river until they have undergone sufficient purification, while those who have completed their cleansing process pass through it safely, finding that its fire acts as the final purifying agent that prepares them for entry into the Garden of Eden.

The experience of purification in Gehenna is not uniform but carefully calibrated to each soul's specific needs. Ma'avar Yabok explains that "each soul encounters precisely the aspects of Gehenna necessary for its particular rectification." Some require brief, intense purification in multiple chambers, while others need prolonged but gentler processing in a single department. This individualized approach reflects the kabbalistic understanding that divine judgment operates with perfect precision, addressing exactly the areas where each soul requires correction.

Remarkably, Ma'avar Yabok describes how righteous souls occasionally enter Gehenna voluntarily—not for their own purification but to rescue others. Drawing on Talmudic and Zoharic sources, the text states that "our father Abraham stands at the entrance to Gehenna and rescues all who observed the covenant of circumcision," while other righteous individuals similarly intercede for those with whom they share spiritual connections. This redemptive activity illustrates the Jewish concept that souls remain connected in a community of responsibility even after death.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that Gehenna itself will ultimately be transformed. Citing the Zohar, it states that "in the future time, the Holy One will transform Gehenna into a garden of delight." This eschatological perspective reveals that even the realm of purification belongs to the divine plan for universal restoration rather than standing outside it. Gehenna exists not as divine creation's failure but as a temporary but necessary phase in its perfection.

The soul's journey: from death to resurrection

The soul's posthumous journey as described in Ma'avar Yabok follows a meticulously structured itinerary with distinct phases, each serving specific spiritual functions. This journey begins not at the moment of death but slightly before it, as the soul begins a gradual process of separation from the body. According to the text, "thirty days before death, certain aspects of the soul begin to withdraw during sleep," a process that intensifies as death approaches. This gradual withdrawal explains deathbed visions and premonitions experienced by many individuals, as their partially-detached souls gain access to spiritual perceptions normally blocked by full embodiment.

The actual moment of death represents what Ma'avar Yabok calls "the kiss of separation" (neshikat preidah) for most individuals, though the most righteous experience "the kiss of unity" (neshikat yichud)—a direct divine embrace that draws the soul upward without the anxiety that typically accompanies the separation process. For ordinary souls, angels assist in the separation, with the Angel of Death performing the final severance while angels of mercy stand ready to receive the departing soul. The text emphasizes that proper deathbed rituals, particularly recitation of the Shema prayer and confession (vidui), can significantly ease this transition by creating protective spiritual environments.

Immediately following death, the soul enters a state of confusion as it adjusts to disembodied existence. During this period, it remains near the body, aware of everything said and done in its presence. Ma'avar Yabok cautions that "one should speak only good things near the deceased, as the soul hears and is affected by all that is said." This initial phase typically lasts until burial, which explains the Jewish emphasis on prompt interment—not only for hygiene reasons but to allow the soul to begin its onward journey without unnecessary delay.

The first formal judgment occurs through what Jewish tradition calls Chibut HaKever (the Beating of the Grave), a process that begins immediately after burial. Ma'avar Yabok describes this as "the separation of remaining impurities that cling to the soul from its physical existence." This process affects the Nefesh (vital soul), the lowest component of the soul structure that remains most closely connected to physical existence. During Chibut HaKever, angels question the soul about its lifetime actions, particularly regarding Torah study and ethical conduct. For the righteous, this questioning is gentle and brief, while for others, it may involve more intensive processes of self-confrontation.

Following this initial purification, the soul's components begin their separate journeys. The Nefesh remains near the grave for twelve months, gradually detaching from bodily identity. The Ruach (spirit) ascends to be judged at the entrance to the Lower Garden of Eden, potentially requiring a period in Gehenna before admission. The Neshamah (higher soul), if sufficiently pure, ascends directly to the Upper Garden. Ma'avar Yabok explains that "these soul components remain connected through subtle threads of light," maintaining the soul's essential unity despite their different locations.

For souls requiring purification, the journey through Gehenna follows specific protocols. Upon entering, each soul undergoes an assessment to determine which aspects require cleansing and in which chambers this process should occur. Ma'avar Yabok describes how "angels of judgment measure the soul against the actions of its lifetime," creating a precise remediation plan. The soul then proceeds through its assigned chambers, experiencing purification tailored to address its specific spiritual blemishes. This process typically lasts a maximum of twelve months, though Sabbaths and festivals provide regular intervals of respite.

After completing purification, souls must cross the River of Fire (Nehar Dinur), which serves as both final purifier and gateway to the Garden of Eden. Ma'avar Yabok describes this crossing as "momentarily painful but ultimately healing," as the river's flames burn away any remaining impurities while leaving the essential soul intact. Once across, the soul receives new spiritual garments woven from the light of its good deeds and Torah study, with the quality and luminosity of these garments reflecting its spiritual achievements.

Upon entering the Lower Garden of Eden, the soul undergoes a period of orientation, guided by appointed angels who explain the Garden's structure and the soul's designated place within it. Ma'avar Yabok describes how "each soul is led to the chamber corresponding to its highest achievement," whether that involves Torah scholarship, acts of kindness, martyrdom, or other forms of spiritual excellence. The soul then begins to experience the Garden's delights, particularly the radiance of the Divine Presence that shines throughout this realm.

For souls with sufficient merit, the journey continues through periodic ascents to higher levels. On Sabbaths, festivals, and new moons, the gates between the Lower and Upper Gardens open, allowing worthy souls to temporarily experience more elevated states of consciousness. Ma'avar Yabok explains that "souls that have completed their purification may eventually ascend permanently to the Upper Garden," where they experience direct intellectual communion with divine wisdom rather than the more tangible spiritual pleasures of the Lower Garden.

Throughout this journey, souls maintain connections with other souls based on shared spiritual missions, familial relationships, and teacher-student bonds. Ma'avar Yabok describes heavenly academies where souls gather around great sages, continuing their study of Torah at increasingly profound levels. In these academies, "questions that remained unresolved in earthly study find their answers," and souls gain access to deeper dimensions of wisdom that were inaccessible during physical life.

The journey also includes ongoing relationships with the living. Ma'avar Yabok explains how "souls are aware of their descendants' actions and prayers," and can intercede on behalf of the living during times of need. When descendants recite Kaddish, study Torah, or perform charitable acts in memory of the deceased, these actions create "channels of light" that nourish the soul and may elevate it to higher chambers. This reciprocal relationship allows meaningful connections to continue across the boundary between life and death.

For most souls, this afterlife journey is not permanent but represents an intermediate state awaiting the ultimate resurrection. Ma'avar Yabok describes how "at the time of resurrection, souls will descend to reclaim their purified bodies," which will have been transformed into more spiritual vessels capable of containing the soul's elevated consciousness. This return to embodied existence represents not a regression but a perfection, uniting the advantages of spiritual perception with the capacity for physical action in a transformed world.

Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that this entire journey—from deathbed to resurrection—can be positively influenced by proper preparation during life. Regular Torah study, ethical conduct, charitable giving, and spiritual practices create both merit for the soul and familiarity with spiritual realities that ease the post-mortem transition. The text states that "one who has accustomed themselves to holiness during life will naturally gravitate toward holiness after death," suggesting that the afterlife journey represents a continuation and fulfillment of patterns established during physical existence rather than an entirely new beginning.

The relationship between the living and the dead

One of the most distinctive aspects of the Jewish mystical understanding of the afterlife is the ongoing, reciprocal relationship it posits between the living and the dead. Far from depicting the deceased as entirely separated from the world of the living, Ma'avar Yabok presents an intricate system of interactions through which actions in one realm directly affect experiences in the other. This interconnectedness creates a community that transcends the boundary of physical death, allowing relationships to continue evolving rather than terminating at the grave.

For the living, numerous ritual actions can benefit departed souls. Chief among these is the recitation of Kaddish, the mourner's prayer, which Ma'avar Yabok describes as "creating a crown of light that adorns the soul of the deceased and helps elevate it to higher chambers." The efficacy of Kaddish derives not merely from its words but from its public nature—it requires a minyan (quorum of ten) and thus embeds the act of remembrance within community, reflecting the Jewish emphasis on collective spiritual responsibility.

Torah study performed in memory of the deceased similarly creates what Ma'avar Yabok calls "channels of illumination" that directly nourish the soul in its posthumous state. The text explains that "when children or students study Torah and attribute their insights to their departed parent or teacher, these insights ascend to the heavenly academy and are announced as coming from the deceased's lineage." This attribution creates not only benefit for the departed soul but a continuing intellectual legacy that transcends physical mortality.

Charitable giving represents another powerful means through which the living assist the dead. Ma'avar Yabok states that "when charity is given in memory of the deceased, with explicit mention of their name, this creates merit that can reduce their time in Gehenna or elevate them to higher chambers in the Garden." The efficacy of this practice is enhanced when the recipients of charity themselves acknowledge its purpose, creating a three-way relationship between donor, recipient, and the soul being commemorated.

Prayer at gravesites establishes direct communication with departed souls. According to Ma'avar Yabok, "when one visits a grave and addresses the deceased directly, the soul is immediately notified and descends to that location to hear the prayer." This practice functions not as necromancy (forbidden in Jewish tradition) but as a means of requesting the soul's intercession before the divine throne. The text recommends specific prayers for these visits, emphasizing that they should focus on asking the deceased to advocate for the living rather than attempting to communicate with the dead for guidance or information.

The Yahrzeit (anniversary of death) observance creates what Ma'avar Yabok calls "a day of judgment and elevation for the soul." On this date, the soul undergoes an annual assessment, potentially advancing to higher levels based on a combination of its own spiritual progress and the merit generated by descendants' commemorative actions. The text recommends specific practices for Yahrzeits, including studying Mishnah chapters corresponding to the letters of the deceased's name, lighting a memorial candle, and giving additional charity.

From the perspective of the deceased, souls retain awareness of and concern for their living descendants. Ma'avar Yabok states that "souls in the Garden of Eden are regularly informed about significant events affecting their families," including births, marriages, illnesses, and achievements. This ongoing connection allows departed souls to experience continued nachat (pride and pleasure) from their descendants' positive actions, creating a multi-generational spiritual continuity.

More actively, departed souls function as what Ma'avar Yabok calls "advocates in the celestial court" (meilitzei yosher) on behalf of their descendants. The text explains that "when a person faces difficulty or danger, the souls of their ancestors immediately gather before the divine throne to plead their case." This advocacy is particularly powerful during times of communal crisis, when the collective merit of previous generations can be invoked to mitigate harsh divine judgments against the community.

Ma'avar Yabok specifically notes that righteous souls "descend from the Garden of Eden to attend family celebrations," particularly circumcisions, weddings, and significant Torah study gatherings. Though invisible to ordinary perception, these souls participate in these events and derive pleasure from witnessing the continuation of religious traditions across generations. The text cites kabbalistic sources describing a special chair (kisei shel Eliyahu) reserved for the prophet Elijah at circumcision ceremonies, which symbolizes this ongoing presence of departed souls at significant family milestones.

Dreams serve as a particular channel through which the dead may communicate with the living. Ma'avar Yabok states that "when a person dreams of a deceased relative delivering a message, this may represent genuine communication, especially if the message concerns Torah matters or ethical guidance." The text provides criteria for distinguishing authentic posthumous communications from ordinary dreams, emphasizing that genuine messages never contradict Torah teachings and typically address matters of spiritual rather than material concern.

Significantly, this reciprocal relationship extends beyond family connections to include teacher-student bonds and communal affiliations. Ma'avar Yabok explains that "the souls of great sages continue to teach and guide their students from the heavenly academy," sometimes inspiring new insights that the living scholar attributes to the influence of their departed teacher. Similarly, communities benefit from the ongoing advocacy of the righteous individuals who once lived among them, creating a form of posthumous spiritual leadership that complements living authorities.

The ultimate expression of this reciprocal relationship will occur at the resurrection, when according to Ma'avar Yabok, "souls will return to transformed bodies, bringing with them the wisdom and spiritual attainments acquired in the afterlife." This event represents not merely a restoration of previous existence but an elevation, as the accumulated spiritual achievements of both the living and the dead contribute to creating a perfected world in which physical and spiritual realms achieve full integration.

This elaborate system of continued relationship between the living and the dead reflects Judaism's characteristic emphasis on covenant, community, and intergenerational responsibility. Unlike traditions that emphasize complete separation between this world and the next, Jewish mystical thought as presented in Ma'avar Yabok portrays a cosmic order in which all souls—embodied and disembodied—participate in an ongoing project of tikkun olam (world repair) that transcends the boundaries of physical existence and death.

The afterlife as spiritual process

The Jewish mystical conception of the afterlife, as elaborated in texts like Ma'avar Yabok, presents a vision of cosmic justice and spiritual development that differs markedly from simplistic notions of eternal reward and punishment. Instead of static destinations, Gan Eden and Gehenna function as complementary phases in an ongoing process of spiritual refinement that ultimately serves the divine purpose of universal elevation and perfection.

This process-oriented understanding reflects Judaism's characteristic emphasis on covenant rather than creed, action rather than belief, and spiritual growth rather than final states. The afterlife journey described in Ma'avar Yabok accommodates the full spectrum of human spiritual conditions while affirming the ultimate value of every soul, providing pathways for purification and elevation appropriate to each individual's specific needs and capacities.

The complex structures of both Gan Eden and Gehenna reveal a cosmic order governed by principles of precise spiritual causality rather than arbitrary reward and punishment. Each soul experiences exactly the consequences of its own actions, with divine judgment operating not as external imposition but as the natural unfolding of spiritual laws built into creation itself. This understanding transforms the fearful prospect of judgment into an opportunity for recognition, rectification, and growth.

Perhaps most significantly, the reciprocal relationship between the living and the dead demonstrates that the community of Israel extends beyond the boundaries of physical existence, creating an unbroken chain of spiritual responsibility and care that spans generations and worlds. This perspective offers profound comfort to the bereaved while also enhancing the meaning of religious observance, which acquires transgenerational significance through its effects across multiple planes of existence.

For the modern reader, these elaborate afterlife cosmologies may initially seem fantastical or antiquated. However, when understood as metaphorical expressions of profound spiritual and ethical principles, they continue to offer valuable insights about human purpose, divine justice, and the ultimate meaning of existence. The vision of an afterlife that honors individual achievement while working toward universal restoration speaks to perennial human concerns about personal significance and cosmic justice.

Ma'avar Yabok's detailed expositions of Gan Eden and Gehenna ultimately serve not merely to satisfy curiosity about what happens after death but to guide and inspire religious life in the present. By understanding the cosmic significance of everyday ethical choices and spiritual practices, the individual can approach life with greater intentionality and purpose, recognizing that each action contributes to an ongoing process of personal and universal transformation that transcends the boundaries of physical existence and extends into eternity.

Appendix I

Prayer and Incense (Ketoret)

In Jewish thought, prayer occupies a unique position as both a spiritual exercise and a ritual substitute for Temple worship following the destruction of the Second Temple in 70 CE. Rabbi Aaron Berechia of Modena's Ma'avar Yabok exemplifies this substitutive theological approach, particularly in its fourth discourse, "Eter Anan HaKetoret" (The Cloud of Incense Prayer). This section develops a sophisticated framework where prayers, properly articulated, create the same metaphysical effects as the physical sacrifices and incense offerings once performed in the Jerusalem Temple.

The title "Eter Anan HaKetoret" itself encapsulates this theology, combining "eter" (prayer/supplication), "anan" (cloud), and "ketoret" (incense) to evoke the image of prayers ascending like incense smoke to the divine presence. This metaphor finds its biblical basis in Psalm 141:2, "May my prayer be set before You as incense, the lifting of my hands as the evening sacrifice," a verse frequently cited throughout the text. For Aaron Berechia, this is not merely poetic imagery but a concrete metaphysical reality—properly formulated prayers actually function as spiritual incense, creating the same cosmic effects as the Temple service.

The theological framework underpinning this substitution draws from rabbinic teachings about the purpose of prayer after the Temple's destruction. The Talmudic sages declared, "Now that we have no sacrifices, prayer stands in their place," establishing prayer as not merely a compensatory activity but a true ritual replacement. Aaron Berechia expands this concept through kabbalistic principles, explaining that speech creates tangible spiritual entities through the power of the twenty-two Hebrew letters. When arranged in the proper sequences with appropriate intention (kavvanah), these spoken words generate the same spiritual effects as physical Temple rituals. The human mouth becomes a spiritual altar, breath becomes fire, and words become offerings.

This substitutive framework is particularly evident in Aaron Berechia's approach to the Ketoret (incense offering), which he presents as possessing exceptional spiritual power even in its verbal form. The recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret formula—the Talmudic description of the Temple incense preparation—with proper intention creates, in his view, the same protective and unifying effects as the original Temple offering. This theological position leads him to argue forcefully for maintaining this recitation even in contexts like houses of mourning where certain other prayers might be modified or omitted.

The larger implications of this substitutive theology extend beyond ritual to a profound reconceptualization of religious life after the Temple's destruction. If prayer truly replicates Temple service, then every synagogue becomes a miniature Temple, every prayer leader a kind of priest, and every worshiper a participant in cosmic Temple service. Through this theological move, Aaron Berechia transforms what might be seen as spiritual diminishment (the loss of the Temple) into spiritual opportunity, where divine service becomes more accessible and democratized, available to all who pray with proper knowledge and intention rather than limited to priests in Jerusalem.

Biblical and rabbinic foundations of the Ketoret

The biblical basis for the Ketoret (incense offering) appears first in Exodus 30:1–10, where God commands Moses to construct an altar specifically for burning incense, positioned directly before the Holy of Holies. The text specifies that Aaron, as High Priest, should burn fragrant incense on this altar every morning and evening, establishing it as a perpetual offering before the Lord throughout the generations. The sacred nature of this offering is underscored by the prohibition against unauthorized incense or any other offerings on this altar, with severe consequences promised for those who would create a similar formula for personal use.

The composition of the incense is detailed in Exodus 30:34–38, which lists four primary ingredients: stacte (nataf), onycha (shechelet), galbanum (chelbenah), and pure frankincense (levonah zakah), to be blended in equal parts, salted, and purified. This biblical formula would later be expanded in rabbinic tradition to include additional spices. The text emphasizes that this mixture is "most holy to the Lord," establishing its special status among Temple offerings.

The potent spiritual power of the Ketoret is dramatically illustrated in Numbers 17:6–15, where Aaron uses the incense as a means to halt a divine plague that had broken out among the Israelites. Standing between the dead and the living with a fire pan of incense, Aaron makes atonement for the people, and the plague is checked. This biblical episode becomes a foundational text for the Ketoret's apotropaic (protective) powers, frequently cited in Ma'avar Yabok to justify the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret formula as spiritual protection against plagues and negative forces.

The rabbinic tradition significantly expanded upon these biblical foundations, most notably in the Talmudic passage that would eventually form the basis of the Pitum HaKetoret prayer. In Keritot 6a, the rabbis elaborate on the composition of the Temple incense, increasing the number of ingredients from the biblical four to eleven specific spices:

1. Balm (tzori)
2. Onycha (tziporen)
3. Galbanum (chelbenah)
4. Frankincense (levonah)

5. Myrrh (mor)
6. Cassia (ketziah)
7. Spikenard (shibolet nerd)
8. Saffron (karkom)
9. Costus (kosht)
10. Aromatic bark (kilufah)
11. Cinnamon (kinamon)

This list is supplemented with additional materials and procedures: Carshina lye for processing, Cyprus wine for soaking, salt of Sodom for preservation, and a herb called ma'aleh ashan ("smoke raiser") that caused the incense smoke to rise straight upward. The Talmud also specifies the precise quantities: 70 maneh each of the first four ingredients, 16 maneh each of the next four, 12 maneh of costus, 3 maneh of aromatic bark, and 9 maneh of cinnamon, totaling 368 maneh—one for each day of the solar year, with the extra three maneh used by the High Priest on Yom Kippur.

The rabbinic tradition further elaborated detailed rules governing the preparation and offering of the Ketoret. The Talmud specifies that the incense had to be finely ground, with the grinding accompanied by the repetition of the phrase "hadek heitev, heitev hadek" ("grind it thoroughly, thoroughly grind it") to ensure proper consistency. The mixing of the ingredients was considered a specialized craft, with the formula supposedly guarded by the Avtinas family, who were criticized for not sharing their techniques but ultimately vindicated when their secrecy was deemed necessary to prevent improper use of the sacred formula.

Following the Temple's destruction, the physical offering of incense became impossible, but its memory was preserved through the recitation of the biblical passages and Talmudic formulas describing the Ketoret. This recitation gradually became standardized in the Jewish liturgy, appearing in both the morning and afternoon prayer services. The kabbalistic tradition, drawing on these biblical and rabbinic foundations, would further develop the spiritual significance of the Ketoret, attributing to it profound cosmic effects when recited with proper intention—a development that reaches its fullest expression in works like Ma'avar Yabok.

Composition and symbolism of Temple incense

The eleven ingredients of the Temple incense enumerated in Talmudic tradition each carried symbolic significance within Jewish mystical thought, particularly as developed in kabbalistic sources and elaborated in Ma'avar Yabok. Aaron Berechia of Modena draws extensively on Zoharic interpretations that view the Ketoret components as corresponding to cosmic forces, divine attributes, and aspects of human spirituality.

The inclusion of galbanum (chelbenah) among the ingredients holds particular significance, as the Talmud notes that this substance has an unpleasant odor when burned alone. Its incorporation into the sacred incense formula prompted rabbinic commentary that the community's prayers must include sinners among the righteous, just as the sacred incense included a malodorous element among its fragrant components. Aaron Berechia expands on this theme, explaining that the galbanum represents the forces of judgment (din) that must be "sweetened" through inclusion with the forces of mercy (rachamim) represented by the more pleasant spices. This reflects a central kabbalistic concept of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) that appears frequently throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

The number eleven also carries mystical significance, as Aaron Berechia explains that these ingredients correspond to the ten sefirot (divine emanations) plus the Ein Sof (Infinite One) that transcends them. Alternatively, some kabbalistic interpretations connect the eleven spices to the eleven ingredients missing from the holy incense in the absence of the Temple (the biblical "sammim" or "spices" mentioned twice in Exodus 30:34, counting as two), symbolizing the rectification of cosmic gaps created by the Temple's destruction.

The "smoke raiser" (ma'aleh ashan) ingredient receives special attention in kabbalistic commentaries. Aaron Berechia, following earlier mystical sources, interprets this component as representing the spiritual force that elevates prayer from the lower worlds to the higher divine realms. Just as this herb caused the physical incense smoke to rise straight upward rather than spreading outward, the proper intention during prayer causes the spiritual effects of prayer to ascend directly to their divine target rather than dissipating.

The precise measurements of the incense ingredients—368 maneh corresponding to the days of the solar year plus the three extra portions for Yom Kippur—are interpreted as establishing a cosmic connection between the Temple service and the cycles of time. Aaron Berechia explains that the daily Ketoret offering maintained cosmic harmony throughout the year, while the Yom Kippur offering by the High Priest in the Holy of Holies created a special channel for atonement and spiritual purification on the holiest day.

The grinding process, with its repetition of "hadek heitev, heitev hadek," is interpreted as symbolizing the necessity of thoroughly breaking down ego and material attachment (represented by the coarse spices) before one's prayers can ascend properly to the divine realms. Aaron Berechia connects this to the kabbalistic concept that prayer requires "breaking of the vessels" of ordinary consciousness to release the divine sparks contained within.

The prohibition against honey in the incense formula (specified in Leviticus 2:11) receives extensive mystical commentary. Aaron Berechia explains that honey, though sweet, burns quickly and represents ephemeral pleasures and superficial spirituality that lacks lasting substance. Its exclusion from the Ketoret symbolizes that genuine spiritual elevation requires sustained commitment rather than momentary enthusiasm.

The salt added to the incense mixture, particularly specified as "salt of Sodom," represents the element that preserves the covenant between God and Israel. Salt's preservative quality symbolizes the eternal nature of this relationship, while its connection to Sodom represents the transformation of judgment (associated with the destroyed city) into a force for preservation and sanctification.

These symbolic interpretations of the Ketoret's composition serve multiple functions in Ma'avar Yabok. They transform what might otherwise be seen as technical ritual details into profound spiritual teachings about prayer, divine service, and cosmic harmony. They establish continuity between ancient Temple practice and contemporary prayer, suggesting that understanding these symbols allows modern worshipers to recreate the spiritual effects of the Temple service through proper prayer. And they provide a framework for understanding how the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret formula can generate the protective and unifying effects attributed to the original incense offering.

Pitum HaKetoret and its recitation

The Pitum HaKetoret prayer, based primarily on the Talmudic passage in Keritot 6a, evolved from a descriptive text about Temple practice into a central liturgical element in Jewish prayer. This transformation reflects both the need to preserve Temple knowledge for the future restoration of service and the belief that recitation of these texts creates spiritual effects similar to the original offerings. In Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia provides detailed guidance for the proper recitation of this formula, drawing on traditions from Mantua and other Italian Jewish communities while incorporating kabbalistic interpretations of its efficacy.

The standardized text of the Pitum HaKetoret begins with the Talmudic enumeration of ingredients and their quantities, followed by descriptions of the preparation process, seasonal adjustments to the formula, and rules governing its offering in the Temple. It concludes with a biblical verse (Exodus 30:7–8) about Aaron's obligation to burn incense daily. This basic formula appears in both Sephardic and Ashkenazic prayer books, though with some variations in the surrounding liturgical framework.

Aaron Berechia places special emphasis on reciting this formula with proper intention (kavvanah) and clear articulation. He writes that each word should be pronounced distinctly, with awareness of its cosmic significance. This prescription reflects the kabbalistic understanding that Hebrew letters and words are not merely symbolic but are actual vessels for divine energy, capable of effecting real change in spiritual realms when properly activated through speech.

The tradition of reciting the Pitum HaKetoret twice daily—during morning (Shacharit) and afternoon (Minchah) prayers—parallels the twice-daily offering of physical incense in the Temple. Aaron Berechia endorses this practice, noting that it creates a frame around the day, providing spiritual protection during both active (daytime) and receptive (evening) spiritual states. He further recommends that those facing particular dangers or undertaking important journeys add additional recitations of the formula as spiritual protection.

A notable feature of the Pitum HaKetoret's recitation tradition is the practice of standing during its recitation, symbolizing the service of the priests who stood while offering incense in the Temple. This physical posture is understood as part of the enactment that transforms verbal recitation into spiritual service. Some traditions, particularly among Sephardic communities, also include specific hand gestures or body movements during recitation, representing the priest's actions in the Temple.

Ma'avar Yabok presents detailed instructions from the prayer customs of Mantua, which Aaron Berechia observed during his visit and found exemplary. These include reciting particular psalms before proceeding to the Ketoret formula, biblical verses about Abraham's hospitality and Jacob's instructions to his sons, lamentations over the Temple's destruction, and passages describing God's original instructions for the sacred incense preparation. Aaron Berechia notes that certain verses should be repeated three times (versus once with proper cantillation), reflecting kabbalistic principles about establishing spiritual patterns through repetition.

The recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret is traditionally preceded by a declaration of intent: "My God, may it be Your will that my recitation of the Ketoret passage be considered as if I had actually offered the incense before You." This declaration explicitly frames the recitation as a substitutive act, transforming what might otherwise be merely educational or commemorative into an actual spiritual service. Aaron Berechia adds that this declaration should be made with full awareness of the kabbalistic teaching that properly articulated words create the same spiritual effects as physical actions in higher realms.

A distinctive feature of the Pitum HaKetoret's recitation tradition is its maintenance even in contexts where other prayers might be abbreviated or modified. Aaron Berechia argues forcefully for preserving the complete recitation of this formula in houses of mourning, despite traditions that omit certain prayers in such settings. This position, which will be explored in more detail in a later section, reflects his view of the Ketoret's unique spiritual efficacy in protecting against negative forces that might be particularly present in the context of death.

The Pitum HaKetoret's position in the prayer service is also significant. In most liturgical traditions, it appears during the preliminary sections of prayer rather than within the core Amidah prayer, reflecting its status as preparation for more direct divine communion. However, Aaron Berechia notes that its spiritual effects extend throughout the prayer service, creating a protective framework within which other prayers can safely ascend. This positioning parallels the function of the physical incense in the Temple, which created a pleasing environment that facilitated divine-human communion.

Spiritual benefits of the Ketoret in Ma'avar Yabok

Among the most striking features of Aaron Berechia's treatment of the Ketoret is his systematic enumeration of ten specific spiritual benefits attributed to its recitation. This catalog appears in the fourth discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, where he draws extensively from Zoharic and other kabbalistic sources to establish the Ketoret as possessing exceptional efficacy among prayer formulae. These ten benefits transform the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret from a mere commemorative act into a powerful spiritual technology with wide-ranging protective and elevating effects.

The first and perhaps most emphasized benefit is protection from plague. Drawing on the biblical account in Numbers 17, where Aaron's offering of incense halted a divine plague, Aaron Berechia affirms that proper recitation of the Ketoret formula creates a spiritual barrier against epidemic disease. This protective power extends beyond physical illness to spiritual "plagues" that might affect the soul, including negative thoughts, sinful inclinations, and harmful spiritual influences. In an era when plague was a recurring and devastating reality, this protective function would have held particular resonance.

The second benefit is protection from exile. Aaron Berechia explains that exile (galut) operates at multiple levels—physical displacement from the Land of Israel, spiritual distance from God, and psychological alienation from one's true self. The Ketoret's fragrance symbolically reunites these separated elements, drawing the divine presence (Shekhinah) back from exile and helping to restore cosmic harmony. For Italian Jews living in diaspora, this spiritual counterforce to exile would have offered significant comfort.

The third benefit is blessing in one's work and material enterprises. The rising smoke of the incense symbolizes the elevation of physical activities to spiritual significance. Aaron Berechia explains that proper recitation of the Ketoret with awareness of this symbolism causes divine blessing to flow into one's material endeavors, transforming them from merely worldly pursuits into vehicles for divine service. This benefit addresses the practical concerns of his community while spiritualizing their economic activities.

The fourth benefit is protection from Gehenna (the realm of posthumous purification). The smoke and fire of the Ketoret are understood as a form of self-purification that preemptively accomplishes what Gehenna would otherwise need to achieve after death. Aaron Berechia explains that regular recitation of the Ketoret with proper intention gradually purifies the soul during life, reducing or eliminating the need for painful purification after death. This benefit connects the daily prayer practice to ultimate eschatological concerns.

The fifth benefit is nullification of negative spiritual forces, referred to variously as "chitzonim" (external forces), "sitra achra" (the other side), or "kelipot" (shells). These forces, understood in kabbalistic thought as entities that obstruct divine light and energy, are repelled by the "pleasant fragrance" of the Ketoret. Aaron Berechia specifies that the galbanum ingredient, though malodorous on its own, plays a crucial role in this function when properly integrated with the other spices—symbolizing the transformation of negative elements into positive spiritual forces.

The sixth benefit is nullification of witchcraft and harmful magical practices. While mainstream Judaism generally rejects magical practices, kabbalistic tradition acknowledges the reality of such forces while condemning their use. Aaron Berechia explains that the Ketoret, as a divinely sanctioned ritual with precise specifications, creates a spiritual field that neutralizes unauthorized attempts to manipulate cosmic forces. This benefit would have addressed contemporary anxieties about witchcraft and malevolent spiritual practices.

The seventh benefit is elimination of evil thoughts and purification of the mind. The grinding of the incense spices symbolizes the breaking down of mental constructs and attachments that obstruct clear spiritual perception. Aaron Berechia teaches that reciting the Ketoret mindfully helps to quiet mental chatter, dispel intrusive negative thoughts, and create mental space for divine inspiration. This benefit connects the ritual practice to psychological well-being and intellectual clarity.

The eighth benefit is securing a portion in both this world and the World to Come. The Ketoret's dual nature—physical substances producing spiritual effects—makes it a bridge between mundane and transcendent realms. Aaron Berechia explains that regular recitation of the formula with awareness of this symbolism helps to harmonize one's current life with one's eternal destiny, ensuring that present activities align with ultimate spiritual goals. This benefit addresses both immediate and eschatological concerns.

The ninth benefit is removal of harsh judgments (dinim) that might be decreed against an individual or community. In kabbalistic thought, divine judgment operates through specific channels that can be "sweetened" or mitigated through appropriate spiritual practices. Aaron Berechia describes the Ketoret as particularly effective in this "sweetening" process, transforming potential punishment into blessing through the unification of divine attributes that its recitation accomplishes. This benefit speaks to the fundamental human concern with navigating divine justice.

The tenth and culminating benefit is unification of divine forces (yichud). In kabbalistic thought, cosmic harmony depends on the proper relationship between different divine attributes or sefirot, particularly the "masculine" and "feminine" aspects of divinity. Aaron Berechia explains that the Ketoret's ascent represents the elevation of "feminine waters" (human prayer) that stimulates the descent of "masculine waters" (divine response), creating a cosmic unification that maintains the flow of blessing into all worlds. This highest benefit encompasses and enables all the others.

This systematic enumeration of benefits serves several functions in Ma'avar Yabok. It provides practical motivation for careful recitation of the Ketoret formula, connecting abstract kabbalistic concepts to tangible benefits that would resonate with readers. It establishes the Ketoret as a comprehensive spiritual practice addressing multiple dimensions of human concern, from physical health to cosmic harmony. And it serves as the foundation for Aaron Berechia's argument that the Pitum HaKetoret should be maintained even in contexts where other prayers might be modified or omitted, given its unique and wide-ranging spiritual efficacy.

Protective power of the Ketoret

The protective power of the Ketoret against plagues and negative spiritual forces emerges as perhaps its most emphasized benefit in Ma'avar Yabok. Aaron Berechia develops this theme extensively, drawing on biblical, rabbinic, and kabbalistic sources to establish the Ketoret as a uniquely potent spiritual shield. This emphasis likely reflects contemporary concerns with both physical epidemics and perceived spiritual dangers in 17th-century Italy.

The biblical foundation for the Ketoret's protective power appears in Numbers 17:6–15, where Aaron runs with a fire pan of incense into the midst of the congregation to halt a divine plague that had already claimed thousands of lives. Standing "between the dead and the living," Aaron offers the incense, and the plague is checked. Aaron Berechia quotes this passage repeatedly, noting that it provides explicit scriptural evidence for the incense's apotropaic (protective) powers. He emphasizes that if the physical incense could halt a divinely-sent plague, then its spiritual counterpart—the properly recited Pitum HaKetoret—should likewise provide protection against both physical and spiritual plagues.

The Talmudic tradition expands on this protective function, with passages in Shabbat 89a describing how the Angel of Death revealed the secret of the incense's protective power to Moses during his ascent to heaven. Aaron Berechia cites this as evidence that the Ketoret's efficacy against death and disease was recognized even in celestial realms. He further draws on midrashic sources that describe the cloud of incense as forming a protective barrier against harmful forces, preventing them from approaching the sanctuary where divine presence dwelled.

The Zohar, a primary source for Aaron Berechia's kabbalistic interpretations, elaborates extensively on the Ketoret's protective powers. He cites passages from Zohar Vayakhel (219a) describing the incense as creating spiritual pathways through which divine blessing can flow while blocking channels through which negative forces might enter. The Zohar connects this function to the inclusion of galbanum among the ingredients, explaining that this bitter substance specifically targets and neutralizes the "sitra achra" (the "other side" or forces of impurity). Aaron Berechia explores this concept in depth, explaining that the Ketoret's formula combines elements representing both mercy and judgment, creating a comprehensive spiritual shield that addresses multiple categories of negative influence.

The mechanism by which the Ketoret provides protection is explained through kabbalistic principles about the relationship between fragrance and spiritual essence. Aaron Berechia describes fragrance as the most spiritual of physical sensations, directly affecting the soul rather than merely the body. The pleasant fragrance of the Ketoret (with the exception of galbanum, which serves a specific function in targeting negative forces) is understood as attracting positive spiritual influences while repelling negative ones. This understanding is connected to the Zoharic concept that different types of spiritual entities are attracted or repelled by different fragrances, with divine and angelic forces drawn to the sacred incense while harmful entities flee from it.

A particularly significant aspect of the Ketoret's protective power in Ma'avar Yabok is its efficacy against the Angel of Death and forces associated with mortality. Aaron Berechia connects this to the context of the biblical incident, where Aaron stood "between the dead and the living" with the incense, suggesting that the Ketoret creates a boundary between life-affirming and death-dealing forces. This understanding takes on special significance in the context of end-of-life rituals, where Aaron Berechia argues for maintaining the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret even in houses of mourning, precisely because its protective powers are especially needed in contexts where death has created spiritual vulnerabilities.

The protective power of the Ketoret extends beyond defense against harm to active promotion of healing and restoration. Aaron Berechia describes the incense as having the capacity to repair spiritual damage, heal cosmic breaches, and restore proper flow between divine and human realms. This restorative function operates at multiple levels: healing physical illness, repairing psychological damage from negative thoughts or experiences, and addressing cosmic imbalances that might affect an entire community or the world as a whole. The comprehensive nature of this protection and healing makes the Ketoret uniquely valuable among prayer formulas.

A distinctive feature of Aaron Berechia's treatment of the Ketoret's protective power is his insistence that it functions even—perhaps especially—in contexts normally associated with spiritual impurity or danger. He explicitly argues that the Pitum HaKetoret should be recited in houses of mourning, despite traditions that omit certain prayers in such settings, precisely because its protective powers are needed to neutralize potential negative forces associated with death. This position, which will be explored in the next section, reflects his understanding of the Ketoret as not merely defensive but actively transformative, capable of converting negative spiritual conditions into positive ones.

The practical implications of this understanding are significant. Aaron Berechia recommends recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret during times of plague or epidemic, following the biblical precedent. He suggests that communities experiencing spiritual difficulties, such as conflicts or religious decline, should emphasize this prayer as a means of spiritual purification and protection. And he advises individuals facing particular challenges or transitions to incorporate additional recitations of the formula into their personal prayer practice as spiritual reinforcement. These recommendations transform the Ketoret from a historical commemoration into a living spiritual technology for addressing contemporary concerns.

Reciting Pitum HaKetoret in houses of mourning

One of the most distinctive aspects of Aaron Berechia's treatment of the Ketoret is his strong advocacy for maintaining its recitation even in houses of mourning, where certain other prayers are traditionally modified or omitted. This position places him at odds with some contemporary practices and reveals much about his understanding of the Ketoret's unique spiritual function and his approach to halakhic (legal) reasoning in matters of prayer and ritual.

The controversy centers on the general principle that certain expressions of praise and joy are considered inappropriate in houses of mourning, where the emphasis should be on consolation and reflection on mortality. Various Jewish communities developed different specific applications of this principle, with some omitting psalms of praise like Ashrei, others modifying the Kaddish prayer, and still others omitting the Pitum HaKetoret. Aaron Berechia acknowledges these practices but argues forcefully against the omission of the Ketoret formula, presenting both halakhic and kabbalistic justifications for his position.

From a halakhic perspective, Aaron Berechia argues that the Pitum HaKetoret is not primarily a prayer of praise but a technical description of Temple practices, comparable to the study of Temple-related Talmudic passages that are not omitted during mourning. He notes that the formula contains no expressions of joy or celebration, consisting instead of procedural details about ingredients and preparation methods. This categorization would exempt it from restrictions on prayers of praise in houses of mourning. He further cites the principle that practices established for health or protection reasons take precedence over mourning customs, arguing that the Ketoret's protective function against negative spiritual forces qualifies it for this exemption.

From a kabbalistic perspective, Aaron Berechia presents an even stronger case. He argues that the Ketoret is uniquely suited to houses of mourning precisely because of its protective and transformative powers. Death, in kabbalistic understanding, creates a spiritual vulnerability where negative forces might gain influence. The Ketoret's specific efficacy against such forces makes it particularly necessary in this context. He cites Zoharic passages describing the incense as having power to "eliminate plague and weaken the forces of grave judgment" affecting the deceased, suggesting that its recitation directly benefits the departed soul during its transition.

Aaron Berechia further argues that the Ketoret serves a unique function in "sweetening" the harsh judgments (dinim) associated with death. In kabbalistic thought, death represents the ultimate expression of divine judgment or restriction (din), which needs to be balanced or mitigated by divine mercy (rachamim).

The Ketoret, with its combination of ingredients representing both judgment and mercy, is uniquely suited to accomplish this "sweetening" process, transforming the spiritually dangerous condition of death into an opportunity for purification and elevation. This transformative function, he suggests, makes the Ketoret especially appropriate rather than inappropriate in houses of mourning.

The controversy reveals significant regional variations in Jewish practice that Aaron Berechia observed during his travels. He notes that in some communities, particularly in Ashkenazic (Central and Eastern European) regions, the custom was to omit the Pitum HaKetoret in houses of mourning, while in others, particularly Sephardic (Mediterranean and Middle Eastern) communities, it was maintained. He specifically praises the practice of Mantua, where the Ketoret was recited even during mourning, as representing the more authentic tradition based on kabbalistic understanding.

This disagreement reflects broader tensions between different approaches to Jewish law and custom. Aaron Berechia represents a perspective that gives substantial weight to kabbalistic considerations in determining proper practice, sometimes overriding or reinterpreting earlier customs based on mystical understandings of their cosmic significance. This approach stands in contrast to more strictly legalistic perspectives that might adhere to established customs regardless of their kabbalistic interpretation. The controversy over the Ketoret in houses of mourning thus becomes a microcosm of larger methodological debates within Jewish legal thought.

The practical implications of Aaron Berechia's position extend beyond this specific controversy. His defense of the Ketoret's recitation in houses of mourning establishes a principle that protective spiritual practices should generally be maintained even in contexts where other ritual modifications might be appropriate. This principle could be applied to other protective prayers or practices, creating a category of ritual elements that transcend contextual restrictions due to their special spiritual function. His position also implicitly challenges simplistic categories of prayers as either "joyful" or "solemn," suggesting that kabbalistic understanding reveals deeper dimensions that might not be immediately apparent from a prayer's surface content or emotional tone.

Aaron Berechia's treatment of this controversy also reveals his pastoral sensitivity alongside his mystical orientation. He recognizes that mourners are spiritually vulnerable, potentially subject to negative thoughts, emotional distress, and even harmful spiritual influences. His insistence on maintaining the Ketoret's recitation reflects concern for the mourners' spiritual welfare, providing them with a powerful protective practice during a challenging time. This pastoral dimension complements the theological and legal arguments, grounding mystical concepts in practical human needs.

Prayer as spiritual incense

At the heart of Aaron Berechia's treatment of the Ketoret lies a sophisticated kabbalistic understanding of how prayer words function as spiritual incense, creating the same metaphysical effects as the physical Temple offering. This understanding transforms what might otherwise be seen as merely commemorative recitation into a genuinely efficacious spiritual practice with concrete cosmic implications. In Ma'avar Yabok, he elaborates this concept through multiple interconnected explanations of the spiritual mechanics of prayer.

The fundamental principle underlying this understanding is that Hebrew letters and words are not merely symbolic but are actual vessels of divine creative energy. Aaron Berechia draws on kabbalistic teachings that the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet were the instruments through which God created the world, as suggested in Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early mystical text. When these letters are properly arranged in prayer, with appropriate intention (kavvanah), they activate the same creative forces that shaped existence, allowing human speech to affect cosmic reality. The words of the Pitum HaKetoret, recited with proper intention, thus become vessels for the same divine energies that operated through the physical incense in the Temple.

The efficacy of prayer words as spiritual incense depends on proper articulation and intention. Aaron Berechia emphasizes the importance of clear pronunciation, comparing the careful enunciation of prayer to the precise grinding and mixing of incense ingredients. Just as the physical incense required thorough blending to achieve its proper effect, the verbal formula requires proper integration of its components through deliberate and conscious recitation. He specifically instructs that the words of the Pitum HaKetoret should be "thoroughly ground" in one's mouth, creating a verbal parallel to the physical preparation process.

A central kabbalistic concept in this understanding is that words properly spoken create actual spiritual entities. Aaron Berechia explains that each letter uttered with proper intention generates a corresponding spiritual force or "angel" that ascends to accomplish its purpose in higher realms. The recitation of the complete Ketoret formula thus creates a complex spiritual structure analogous to the smoke cloud of the physical incense. This structure serves multiple functions: creating a channel for prayers to ascend, forming a barrier against negative forces, and establishing connections between different spiritual realms. The 11 ingredients of the Ketoret are understood as corresponding to 11 distinct spiritual forces that work together in this process.

The breath that carries prayer words receives particular attention in this kabbalistic understanding. Aaron Berechia describes breath as containing the "ruach" (spirit) of the person, making it a vehicle for soul energy. When this breath forms sacred words, it becomes a spiritual offering ascending to divine realms. He connects this concept to the biblical phrase "a pleasing aroma to the Lord," suggesting that properly formed prayer words create a spiritual fragrance that attracts divine presence and favor. This understanding transforms the metaphorical "sweetness" of prayer into a metaphysical reality, with properly articulated words actually generating spiritual "fragrances" perceptible in higher realms.

The kabbalistic understanding of prayer as incense includes detailed correspondences between physical elements of the Temple service and spiritual elements of prayer. Aaron Berechia describes the mouth as corresponding to the incense altar, the throat to the sanctuary, the lungs to the bellows that fanned the incense flames, and the heart to the fire pan that held the burning coals. This system of correspondences transforms the human body into a mobile Temple, capable of performing spiritual service anywhere. Each element of prayer is understood as activating its corresponding element in the celestial Temple, creating a parallel service in higher realms.

The concept of "ascending worlds" plays a crucial role in this understanding. Aaron Berechia explains that properly articulated prayers move through successive spiritual realms: from Asiyah (the world of physical action) through Yetzirah (formation) and Beriah (creation) to Atzilut (emanation), the highest realm accessible to human spiritual activity. This ascent parallels the rising smoke of the physical incense, which rose directly upward through the Temple to the highest point of the sanctuary. Different components of prayer affect different realms, with the Ketoret described as having particular efficacy in the realm of Yetzirah, where it can neutralize negative forces before they manifest in the physical world.

The timing of prayer receives significant attention in this kabbalistic framework. Aaron Berechia explains that different hours of the day are governed by different divine attributes, making certain prayers more effective at specific times. The morning and afternoon recitations of the Pitum HaKetoret correspond to the times when these attributes are most receptive to this particular form of spiritual service. He also notes that certain days (particularly Mondays and Thursdays, traditional days of judgment) and certain seasons (such as the Ten Days of Repentance between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur) make the Ketoret's recitation particularly important due to the spiritual conditions prevailing during these periods.

This elaborate kabbalistic understanding of prayer as spiritual incense serves multiple functions in Ma'avar Yabok. It provides theoretical justification for maintaining Temple-related prayers despite the Temple's destruction, establishing their ongoing efficacy rather than merely commemorative value. It offers practical guidance for more effective prayer, emphasizing the importance of proper intention, articulation, and awareness of cosmic correspondences. And it elevates everyday prayer practice from routine religious obligation to participation in cosmic processes, motivating greater devotion and attention to prayer details that might otherwise seem technical or archaic.

Cosmic unification through the Ketoret

The ultimate spiritual function of the Ketoret in Aaron Berechia's kabbalistic system is to create cosmic unifications (yichudim) and "sweeten" divine judgments (mituk ha-dinim). These interrelated processes represent the highest purposes of Jewish mystical practice, transforming the Ketoret from a merely protective ritual into a practice with profound cosmic significance. In Ma'avar Yabok, these concepts receive extensive treatment, revealing the author's sophisticated integration of Lurianic and Cordoverian kabbalistic systems.

The concept of unification (yichud) is fundamental to kabbalistic thought, particularly in its understanding of divine attributes. The ten sefirot or divine emanations are understood as differentiated expressions of divine energy that must remain in proper relationship for cosmic harmony to be maintained. The most fundamental of these relationships is between the "masculine" and "feminine" aspects of divinity, represented by the sefirot of Tiferet and Malkhut, or more generally by the divine names YHVH and Adonai. Human religious practices, properly performed, can facilitate the unification of these divine attributes, maintaining or restoring cosmic harmony. Aaron Berechia describes the Ketoret as uniquely effective in accomplishing these unifications, establishing it as a practice of cosmic significance.

The mechanism by which the Ketoret creates these unifications is explained through the kabbalistic concept of "feminine waters" (mayin nukvin) and "masculine waters" (mayin dukhrin). Human spiritual practice, including prayer, is understood as an ascent of "feminine waters" that stimulates the descent of "masculine waters" of divine blessing and energy. The ascending smoke of the incense, both in its physical Temple form and its spiritual prayer form, represents this ascent of feminine waters. Aaron Berechia explains that the Ketoret's specific formula, when properly recited, creates a particularly effective channel for this ascent, stimulating a corresponding descent of divine energy that unifies the cosmic realms.

The particular divine unification most associated with the Ketoret is between the sefirot of Binah (Understanding) and Malkhut (Kingdom). Aaron Berechia explains that Binah represents the source of divine judgment, while Malkhut represents its manifestation in the world. The Ketoret creates a channel between these sefirot that allows judgment to be modified or "sweetened" before reaching the world. This unification is symbolized by the combination of bitter and sweet ingredients in the incense formula, representing the integration of judgment and mercy in proper balance. The result of this unification is the transformation of potentially harmful judgment into constructive spiritual energy.

The concept of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) is closely related to these unifications. In kabbalistic thought, divine judgment (din) is not inherently negative but becomes problematic when disconnected from divine mercy (rachamim). The "sweetening" process reconnects these attributes, ensuring that judgment operates as a constructive rather than destructive force. Aaron Berechia describes the Ketoret as particularly effective in this sweetening process due to its composite nature, combining elements representing both judgment and mercy. The inclusion of galbanum, a bitter ingredient, among the sweet spices specifically serves this purpose, symbolizing the integration of judgment within a framework of mercy.

These unifications and sweetening processes operate at multiple levels. At the cosmic level, they maintain proper flow between divine realms, preventing blockages or imbalances that might manifest as suffering or disorder in the world. At the communal level, they create protection against collective hardships like plague, famine, or persecution. At the individual level, they transform personal challenges from purely negative experiences into opportunities for growth and purification. The comprehensive nature of these effects establishes the Ketoret as a practice with both universal and particular significance.

Aaron Berechia connects these cosmic functions of the Ketoret to specific elements of its composition and preparation. The eleven ingredients correspond to specific divine configurations in the highest realms. The precise measurements ensure proper balance between different spiritual forces. The "smoke raiser" ingredient that causes the incense cloud to rise straight upward represents the directed intention that guides the unification process. Even the prohibition against honey in the formula has cosmic significance, representing the exclusion of superficial sweetness that might mask rather than truly transform judgment.

The practical implications of these cosmic functions are significant. Aaron Berechia teaches that recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret with awareness of these unifications can help transform difficult personal circumstances, mitigate collective hardships, and contribute to cosmic harmony. He particularly recommends focusing on the sweetening aspect during times of apparent harsh judgment, such as illness, community difficulties, or periods traditionally associated with increased divine judgment like the Ten Days of Repentance. This practical application transforms abstract kabbalistic concepts into spiritual resources for addressing real-life challenges.

These understandings of cosmic unification and sweetening judgments provide the theoretical foundation for Aaron Berechia's insistence on maintaining the Ketoret's recitation in all contexts, including houses of mourning. If the Ketoret uniquely facilitates these crucial cosmic processes, then its omission represents not merely the loss of one prayer among many but the absence of a key mechanism for cosmic harmony. This perspective elevates what might otherwise seem like a technical ritual detail into a matter of profound spiritual significance, justifying the emphasis it receives throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

Yom Kippur Katan and prayer in Modena

The relationship between the Ketoret and communal prayer practices receives particular attention in Ma'avar Yabok, with special focus on the ritual of Yom Kippur Katan (Minor Day of Atonement) and the specific prayer customs of Modena, Aaron Berechia's community. These discussions provide concrete examples of how the theoretical kabbalistic understandings of the Ketoret were implemented in actual religious practice, revealing the integration of mystical concepts into community life.

Yom Kippur Katan was a relatively recent innovation in Jewish practice during Aaron Berechia's time, having developed in 16th-century Safed among the kabbalistic circle of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the Arizal) before spreading to other Jewish communities, particularly in Italy. This practice involved observing a minor fast day on the day before each new month (Rosh Chodesh), except when the new month fell on Shabbat or coincided with another festival. The fast was accompanied by special prayers, confession (vidui), and sometimes additional practices like charitable giving or immersion in a ritual bath (mikveh).

Aaron Berechia describes the central role of the Ketoret in Yom Kippur Katan observances, particularly during the afternoon (Minchah) service. He explains that this timing is especially significant because the waning moon symbolizes the diminishment of divine light in the world, creating a period when judgments (dinim) are most likely to manifest. The Ketoret's power to sweeten these judgments makes it particularly valuable during this period. The recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret formula with special focus on its unifying and sweetening functions was understood as preparing the spiritual atmosphere for the coming month, ensuring that it would be characterized by mercy rather than harsh judgment.

The community of Modena, where Aaron Berechia served, apparently had particularly elaborate Yom Kippur Katan observances, which he describes in detail. These included special communal recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret with specific kavvanot (mystical intentions) focusing on the unification of divine names associated with the coming month. The prayer leader would recite certain portions aloud, with the congregation responding at designated points, creating a rhythmic pattern understood as generating specific spiritual effects. These observances would be followed by confessional prayers and sometimes by communal study of texts related to the Temple and its service, further strengthening the connection to the original incense offering.

Aaron Berechia also describes a prayer society in Modena called "Me'irei Shachar" (Illuminators of Dawn), which gathered for early morning prayers with special emphasis on the purifying aspects of the Ketoret. This group, which he apparently led for about ten years, incorporated kabbalistic practices into their prayer, including specific breathing techniques, bodily movements, and kavvanot during the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret. These practices were understood as creating a particularly effective channel for the ascent of prayer, benefiting both the individuals involved and the broader community through their spiritual effects.

The customs of Mantua regarding the Ketoret receive special praise in Ma'avar Yabok. Aaron Berechia reports being impressed by their practices during his visit, particularly noting their maintenance of the Pitum HaKetoret recitation in all contexts, including houses of mourning. He describes their specific ritual sequence: reciting particular psalms before proceeding to the Ketoret formula, incorporating biblical verses about Abraham's hospitality and Jacob's instructions to his sons, including lamentations over the Temple's destruction, and concluding with detailed passages describing God's original instructions for the sacred incense preparation. This elaborate framework placed the Ketoret within a narrative context that emphasized both its historical significance and its ongoing spiritual function.

A distinctive feature of communal Ketoret practices in these Italian communities was their integration of practical halakhic concerns with kabbalistic understandings. Aaron Berechia describes how practical questions about proper recitation—such as whether to stand or sit, which verses to repeat, and what gestures might accompany the words—were resolved through reference to both legal precedents and mystical significance. This integration reflects the broader synthesis of legalistic and mystical approaches characteristic of Italian Jewish communities in this period, where kabbalistic concepts informed rather than replaced halakhic observance.

The relationship between individual and communal recitation of the Ketoret receives significant attention. Aaron Berechia explains that while individual recitation has spiritual value, communal recitation creates more powerful effects due to the combined intentions of multiple worshippers. He describes how in both Modena and Mantua, the community would recite certain portions of the Pitum HaKetoret in unison, with special focus on the lists of ingredients and their measurements, creating a collective consciousness of the formula's spiritual significance. This communal emphasis reflects the understanding that cosmic unifications and sweetening of judgments are not merely individual spiritual achievements but collective responsibilities.

The seasonal cycle of Ketoret observances also features prominently in these communal practices. Aaron Berechia describes special emphasis on the recitation during transitional periods in the Jewish calendar, such as the days between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, the days before major festivals, and the period between Passover and Shavuot. These periods were understood as times when cosmic forces were in particular flux, making the stabilizing and harmonizing functions of the Ketoret especially important. Community leaders would sometimes add additional Ketoret recitations during these periods or incorporate special study sessions focusing on its significance.

These descriptions of actual communal practices provide important context for understanding Aaron Berechia's theoretical discussions of the Ketoret. They demonstrate that the elaborate kabbalistic concepts presented in Ma'avar Yabok were not merely abstract speculations but informed concrete religious observances that shaped community life. They also reveal the extent to which kabbalistic understandings had penetrated mainstream Jewish practice in these Italian communities, with mystical concepts informing even routine liturgical decisions. This integration of theory and practice, mysticism and community life, is a distinctive feature of Ma'avar Yabok as a whole and particularly evident in its treatment of the Ketoret.

The Ketoret as microcosm

The treatment of the Ketoret in Ma'avar Yabok serves as a microcosm of the entire work's approach to Jewish spiritual practice, particularly in the context of end-of-life rituals and the soul's transition between worlds. Several key themes emerge from this exploration that illuminate Aaron Berechia's broader theological and practical framework.

First, the Ketoret exemplifies the work's fundamental premise that physical rituals from the Temple period can be effectively replaced by properly performed verbal counterparts. Just as the physical incense offering has been transformed into the recitation of the Pitum HaKetoret formula, so too have other Temple rituals been transformed into prayers, study, and contemplative practices that serve the same spiritual functions. This substitutive theology allows for the maintenance of cosmic harmony despite historical disruptions like the Temple's destruction or exile from the Land of Israel. It creates continuity between past and present religious experience while acknowledging the necessary adaptations to changed circumstances.

Second, the Ketoret demonstrates Aaron Berechia's integration of halakhic and kabbalistic approaches to religious practice. His discussions move fluidly between legal considerations about proper recitation practices and mystical explanations of the cosmic effects these practices generate. This integration reflects his view that law and mysticism are not separate domains but complementary dimensions of a unified religious system. The legal details ensure that practices are performed correctly, while mystical understandings reveal their deeper significance and motivate careful observance. This balanced approach characterizes Ma'avar Yabok as a whole, particularly in its treatment of death rituals where both practical and metaphysical concerns are equally important.

Third, the Ketoret reveals Aaron Berechia's concern with protection against negative spiritual forces, particularly in contexts involving illness, death, and transitions. The protective function attributed to the Ketoret parallels similar protective functions assigned to other prayers and practices throughout Ma'avar Yabok, such as Psalm 91 (Shir Shel Pega'im/Song of Afflictions), the recitation of divine names, and specific deathbed confessional formulas. This consistent emphasis on spiritual protection reflects an understanding of human vulnerability, particularly during major life transitions, and provides practical resources for navigating these vulnerable periods safely.

Fourth, the cosmic unifications attributed to the Ketoret reflect the work's broader concern with maintaining harmony between divine realms, particularly in contexts where this harmony might be disrupted. Death represents the ultimate expression of divine judgment (din), which must be balanced by divine mercy (rachamim) to prevent cosmic imbalance. The Ketoret's role in "sweetening judgments" parallels similar functions attributed to other practices throughout Ma'avar Yabok, creating a comprehensive system for maintaining cosmic harmony during potentially disruptive transitions. This concern with balance extends from the highest cosmic levels to the most practical details of ritual observance.

Fifth, the communal dimensions of Ketoret practice reflect the work's broader understanding of individual and collective religious responsibility. While individuals bear responsibility for their own spiritual preparation, the community provides essential support through shared ritual practices, mutual assistance, and collective generation of spiritual merit. The prayer societies and communal observances described in connection with the Ketoret exemplify this collective dimension of spiritual practice that appears throughout Ma'avar Yabok, particularly in its descriptions of proper care for the dying and deceased.

Finally, the Ketoret's function as a bridge between worlds—connecting the physical and spiritual, the mundane and sacred, the human and divine—exemplifies the central metaphor of Ma'avar Yabok itself. The work's title, referring to Jacob's crossing of the Yabok River before his transformative encounter with the angel, establishes transition between realms as its organizing principle. The Ketoret, with its ascending smoke connecting earth to heaven, serves as a perfect symbol for this transitional function. Just as the Ketoret creates channels between cosmic realms, the practices detailed throughout Ma'avar Yabok create channels for the soul's transition from this world to the next.

Aaron Berechia's treatment of the Ketoret thus provides not merely technical information about one prayer formula but a window into his entire approach to Jewish spiritual practice. The integration of practical ritual details with profound mystical significance, the balance between individual and communal responsibilities, the concern with both protection from harm and elevation to higher spiritual states, and the fundamental understanding of religious practice as creating connections between worlds—all these elements characterize both his approach to the Ketoret specifically and Ma'avar Yabok as a whole. Understanding the Ketoret's place in this system illuminates not only one specific prayer practice but an entire worldview in which seemingly mundane ritual details participate in cosmic processes of profound spiritual significance.

Appendix J

Kavvanah (Intention) and Yichudim (Unifications)

In the sacred architecture of Jewish prayer and ritual, few concepts carry as much transformative potential as kavvanah (כוונה), often translated simply as "intention." Yet this rendering fails to capture the profound depth and cosmic significance attributed to this practice, especially within the mystical dimensions of Judaism. The concept of kavvanah stands at the intersection of human consciousness and divine reality, serving as both the fulcrum and the vehicle through which finite human actions acquire infinite spiritual consequence.

The Hebrew term kavvanah derives from the root kivven (כיוון), meaning "to direct" or "to aim." In its most basic sense, kavvanah refers to the focusing of one's attention and purpose during prayer and ritual observance. The Talmud already recognizes the fundamental importance of this mental orientation, with Rabbi Simeon declaring, "Prayer without kavvanah is like a body without a soul" (Jerusalem Talmud, Berakhot 4:1). This early conception primarily emphasized the avoidance of distraction and the conscious awareness of standing before God, what later authorities would term kavvanat ha-lev (intention of the heart).

As Jewish mystical traditions developed, particularly through the medieval Hasidei Ashkenaz movement and the emergence of Kabbalah, the concept of kavvanah underwent a profound transformation. No longer merely a matter of mental focus, kavvanah became increasingly understood as a technique for influencing cosmic reality itself. The mystics of Safed in the 16th century, particularly Rabbi Isaac Luria (the Arizal) and his disciples, elaborated a complex system of kavvanot that could activate specific channels between human consciousness and divine emanations, creating effects across multiple spiritual worlds.

In Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia of Modena presents a sophisticated understanding of kavvanah that synthesizes these various historical strands. Drawing heavily on Lurianic Kabbalah while maintaining accessibility for practitioners, he portrays kavvanah as the essential mechanism through which human religious action achieves metaphysical potency. Throughout the text, we encounter references to proper kavvanah as necessary for everything from daily prayer to the most sensitive moment of the soul's transition at death. For Berechia, kavvanah is not merely an enhancement to ritual action but its very essence, the force that transmutes physical gesture and vocalized words into cosmic transformation.

The text repeatedly emphasizes that "prayer without kavvanah is like a body without a soul," echoing earlier rabbinic statements but investing them with new, kabbalistic significance. Berechia explains that without proper intention, ritual actions remain trapped in the physical world, unable to ascend to higher realms where they might effect spiritual repair (tikkun). Conversely, when performed with the appropriate kavvanah, even seemingly mundane religious actions can pierce through multiple cosmic levels, influencing divine emanations and drawing down celestial abundance.

Levels of Kavvanah

Jewish tradition recognizes multiple levels of kavvanah, forming a hierarchy of intentional states that correlate with different levels of spiritual development. At its most fundamental level, kavvanah requires simply understanding the meaning of the words one is reciting and maintaining awareness that one stands before God. This basic level, sometimes called kavvanat ha-perush (intention of the meaning), is considered essential for the fulfillment of religious obligations according to normative halakhah.

A more elevated form involves emotional engagement with the prayer content, what might be termed kavvanat ha-lev (intention of the heart). This entails not merely intellectual comprehension but also emotional resonance with the prayer's themes—experiencing awe during praise of God's greatness, genuine remorse during confessional prayers, or heartfelt gratitude during thanksgiving. Medieval pietistic movements like Hasidei Ashkenaz particularly emphasized this emotional dimension of kavvanah.

The kabbalistic tradition, however, introduced a significantly more complex level of kavvanah that transcends both intellectual understanding and emotional engagement. This mystical kavvanah, which we might call kavvanat ha-sod (intention of the mystery), involves consciousness of the cosmic correspondences and divine unifications activated through specific prayers and rituals. It requires knowledge of esoteric teachings about the structure of divine emanations (sefirot) and the mechanics of cosmic influence.

Ma'avar Yabok operates primarily at this third, mystical level of kavvanah, though it acknowledges the importance of the more basic levels as prerequisites. Throughout the text, Berechia provides detailed instructions for specific kavvanot to be employed during different prayers, rituals, and especially during deathbed practices. These kavvanot often involve visualization of divine names, contemplation of specific sefirot, and awareness of the cosmic effects being generated through particular verbal formulations.

For instance, the text instructs that when reciting the Shema prayer at the time of death, one should have kavvanah that unifies the divine masculine (represented by the Tetragrammaton) with the divine feminine (represented by the name Adonai). This unification is not merely a conceptual exercise but is understood to actually facilitate the soul's transition, creating a protective pathway through which it can ascend to higher realms.

Similarly, when reciting psalms for the sick, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes specific kavvanot directed toward activating divine mercy and "sweetening" harsh judgments. The practitioner is instructed to visualize the divine name YHVH with specific vowel points that correspond to the attribute of mercy, thereby channeling healing energy to the afflicted person.

What distinguishes these mystical kavvanot from their more basic counterparts is their explicit cosmic intention. The practitioner is not merely focusing on personal devotion or emotional connection but is consciously participating in a metaphysical process that affects the structure of divine reality itself. This represents a profound democratization of spiritual power, suggesting that properly trained individuals—not just exceptional mystics—can influence cosmic forces through disciplined application of kavvanah.

The metaphysics of intention

To understand how Ma'avar Yabok conceptualizes the efficacy of kavvanah, we must first grasp its underlying metaphysical framework. Drawing on kabbalistic cosmology, Berechia presents a universe structured as a series of nested spiritual worlds, each representing a different level of divine manifestation. These worlds—Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action)—form a continuous chain linking the infinite divine source (Ein Sof) with the finite material world.

Within this cosmic architecture, human consciousness occupies a unique position. Though physically situated in the lowest world (Asiyah), the human soul contains elements derived from all higher worlds, making it capable of interacting with and influencing these supernal realms. Prayer and ritual, when performed with proper kavvanah, serve as vehicles through which human consciousness can ascend through these worlds, effecting changes that subsequently cascade back down into physical reality.

Berechia explains this process using the kabbalistic concept of "arousal from below" (itaruta di-letata). Human religious action, when directed by proper kavvanah, creates an "arousal" or activation in the lower worlds that stimulates a corresponding "arousal from above" (itaruta di-le'eila)—a flow of divine energy and blessing from higher realms. This reciprocal dynamic establishes prayer not merely as petition but as a causal mechanism within the cosmic order.

The text frequently employs hydraulic metaphors to describe this process, likening kavvanah to the opening of channels (tzinnorot) through which divine abundance can flow. These channels connect various divine attributes (sefirot) with each other and with the lower worlds. Blockages in these channels, caused by sin or improper religious practice, impede the flow of divine blessing. Proper kavvanah serves to clear these blockages and restore cosmic circulation.

One of the most significant effects of proper kavvanah, according to Ma'avar Yabok, is the "sweetening of judgments" (mituk ha-dinim). This technical kabbalistic term refers to the transformation of divine severity (associated with the attribute of Gevurah/Din) into mercy (associated with Hesed/Rahamim). Judgment in its unmitigated form can manifest as suffering, illness, or death in the physical world. Through specific kavvanot, particularly those involving divine names associated with mercy, the practitioner can "sweeten" these judgments, tempering their severity and channeling them into constructive rather than destructive expressions.

Ma'avar Yabok provides concrete examples of this process in its instructions for prayers over the sick. The text prescribes specific kavvanot focused on the divine name YHVH with vowel points corresponding to mercy, explaining that this visualization actually draws healing energy from the attribute of Hesed to counterbalance the judgments manifesting as illness. Similarly, deathbed kavvanot are designed to "sweeten" the judgment of death itself, ensuring that the soul experiences a gentle rather than harsh transition.

Another crucial effect of kavvanah is the facilitation of divine unifications (yichudim), which we will explore in greater detail in the next section. These unifications harmonize different divine attributes, creating a balanced cosmic flow that benefits both upper and lower worlds. Proper kavvanah during prayer and ritual serves as the catalyst for these unifications, making the human practitioner an active participant in the maintenance of cosmic harmony.

Notably, Ma'avar Yabok suggests that the efficacy of kavvanah does not depend entirely on the practitioner's spiritual status. While greater purity and devotion certainly enhance its power, the text indicates that even ordinary individuals can effect significant spiritual changes through proper kavvanah. This democratization of mystical practice represents a significant development in kabbalistic thought, making advanced spiritual techniques accessible to a broader community beyond elite mystics.

Yichudim: unifying divine realms

The concept of yichudim (unifications) stands as one of the most profound and technically complex aspects of kabbalistic practice presented in Ma'avar Yabok. The term derives from the Hebrew root yachad (יחד), meaning "to unite," and refers to the mystical unification of divine attributes or emanations through properly directed human consciousness.

The theological foundation for yichudim lies in the kabbalistic understanding of divine fragmentation and restoration. According to Lurianic Kabbalah, the process of creation involved a contraction (tzimtzum) of divine light, followed by an emanation of that light into vessels that subsequently shattered (shevirat ha-kelim). This cosmic catastrophe resulted in a state of disharmony where divine attributes became separated from one another and sparks of divine light became entrapped in the material realm.

The ultimate purpose of religious life, in this view, is to participate in the restoration of cosmic harmony through the reunification of these separated divine elements. Yichudim represent the specific mystical techniques through which this reunification is accomplished, using human consciousness as the activating agent.

Ma'avar Yabok places particular emphasis on the unification of masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, typically represented by the Tetragrammaton (YHVH, associated with the masculine attribute of Tiferet) and the divine name Adonai (associated with the feminine attribute of Malkhut). This particular unification, frequently referred to as "unifying the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence" (l'yachada kudsha brich hu u-shechintei), serves as the paradigmatic model for all other yichudim.

The text provides detailed instructions for achieving this unification through specific kavvanot during prayer and ritual. For example, when reciting the Shema prayer, the practitioner is instructed to visualize the letters of YHVH and Adonai intertwining or overlapping, representing the union of these divine aspects. This visualization is to be accompanied by the conscious intention to restore divine harmony through human devotional activity.

Ma'avar Yabok also discusses more complex yichudim involving multiple divine names and attributes. For instance, the text describes yichudim that unite the divine names Ehyeh, YHVH, and Adonai, corresponding to the three primary soul components of neshamah, ruach, and nefesh. These more elaborate unifications often involve sophisticated letter permutations, vowel combinations, and visualization techniques that reflect the influence of Lurianic Kabbalah.

The practical application of yichudim extends beyond regular prayer to specific life transitions, particularly illness and death. Berechia provides detailed instructions for yichudim to be performed at the deathbed, designed to facilitate the soul's peaceful transition by creating harmonious pathways through the divine realms. These deathbed yichudim often involve visualization of the 42-letter divine name (Shem Mem-Bet) and its correspondence to various cosmic structures.

Importantly, Ma'avar Yabok presents yichudim not merely as theoretical constructs but as practical techniques with measurable effects. The text repeatedly emphasizes that proper execution of these unifications can heal the sick, comfort the dying, protect the deceased's soul, and bring blessing to the community. This practical orientation reflects the book's overall purpose as a manual for communal religious leaders responsible for caring for the ill and dying.

The concept of yichudim also carries significant theological implications regarding human agency in the cosmic order. By suggesting that human consciousness can directly influence divine configurations, Ma'avar Yabok attributes remarkable spiritual potency to human religious action. This perspective positions humans not merely as passive recipients of divine influence but as active partners in the ongoing work of cosmic restoration (tikkun olam).

Kavvanot for different times

A distinctive feature of the kavvanah system presented in Ma'avar Yabok is its temporal specificity. Different times—whether times of day, days of the week, or special occasions in the liturgical calendar—require different kavvanot. This temporal mapping reflects the kabbalistic understanding that cosmic influences fluctuate according to regular cycles, creating windows of opportunity for particular types of spiritual work.

The daily prayer cycle forms the basic framework for these temporal kavvanot. Morning prayers (shacharit) are associated with the divine attribute of Hesed (loving-kindness) and the patriarch Abraham. Practitioners are instructed to direct their kavvanah toward drawing down this attribute's benevolent influence. Afternoon prayers (minchah) correspond to Gevurah (strength/judgment) and the patriarch Isaac, requiring kavvanot focused on "sweetening" potential harshness.

Evening prayers (arvit/ma'ariv) align with Tiferet (beauty/harmony) and the patriarch Jacob, with kavvanot oriented toward balancing the day's spiritual energies.

Ma'avar Yabok explains that these correspondences are not arbitrary but reflect objective cosmic rhythms. The morning hours naturally channel the energy of divine mercy, making this time particularly favorable for prayers seeking healing or blessing. Conversely, afternoon hours intensify the attribute of judgment, requiring special kavvanot to mitigate potential severity. The text advises that confession (vidui) is most effective when performed in the morning hours when mercy predominates, though it acknowledges that deathbed confession must be performed whenever necessary, regardless of timing.

Days of the week similarly correspond to different sefirot and require specific kavvanot:

- Sunday corresponds to Hesed (loving-kindness)
- Monday corresponds to Gevurah (strength/judgment)
- Tuesday corresponds to Tiferet (beauty/harmony)
- Wednesday corresponds to Netzach (eternity/victory)
- Thursday corresponds to Hod (splendor/acknowledgment)
- Friday corresponds to Yesod (foundation/connection)
- Sabbath corresponds to Malkhut (kingdom/manifestation)

Berechia provides detailed instructions for adjusting one's kavvanot according to these daily correspondences. For example, prayers for the sick performed on Monday should include additional focus on divine names associated with mercy to counterbalance the day's natural orientation toward judgment. Conversely, prayers on Sunday can more directly access healing energies through kavvanot aligned with the day's merciful character.

Beyond daily and weekly cycles, Ma'avar Yabok also addresses special kavvanot for significant calendar occasions. The new moon (Rosh Chodesh) receives particular attention, with the text prescribing specific fasting and prayer practices with kavvanot designed to "renew" spiritual energy in conjunction with the lunar cycle. Similarly, the monthly observance of Yom Kippur Katan (Minor Day of Atonement) includes specialized kavvanot for spiritual purification.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok details specific kavvanot for moments of transition between life and death. These kavvanot must be adjusted according to the dying person's condition, the time of day, and even the specific cause of death. For instance, different kavvanot are prescribed for peaceful natural death versus violent or sudden death, with the latter requiring more intensive focus on divine names associated with mercy and protection.

This temporal mapping of kavvanot reflects a sophisticated understanding of cosmic rhythms and their interaction with human spiritual practice. By aligning one's intentions with these rhythms, the practitioner can maximize the efficacy of prayer and ritual, ensuring that human religious action harmonizes with rather than contradicts the natural flow of divine influence through time.

Divine names and their vowelization

At the technical core of the kavvanah system presented in Ma'avar Yabok lies the contemplation of divine names (shemot ha-kodesh) and their various vowelizations. These names are not merely designations but are understood as actual channels of divine energy, each corresponding to different divine attributes and cosmic functions. Proper contemplation of these names, with appropriate vowel patterns, serves as the primary mechanism through which human consciousness influences spiritual realms.

The text places particular emphasis on three divine names that form the acronym YaBOK (יב״ק):

- Ehyeh (אהיה) – associated with the highest soul level (neshamah) and the world of Beriah
- YHVH (יקוק) – associated with the middle soul level (ruach) and the world of Yetzirah
- Adonai (אדני) – associated with the lowest soul level (nefesh) and the world of Asiyah

These three names have a combined numerical value (gematria) of 112, which equals the numerical value of YaBOK. This correspondence is not coincidental but reflects the book's central metaphor of "crossing the Yabok" as a spiritual transition facilitated by proper contemplation of these divine names.

Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed instructions for visualizing these names with specific vowel points that activate different spiritual qualities. For instance, the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) can be vowelized in multiple ways, each corresponding to a different sefirah:

- With segol vowels (יֶקֶוֶק) – corresponding to Keter (Crown)
- With cholam vowels (יְקוֹוָק) – corresponding to Hokhmah (Wisdom)
- With kamatz vowels (יָקוֹוָק) – corresponding to Binah (Understanding)
- With patach vowels (יָקוֹק) – corresponding to Hesed (Loving-kindness)

The text instructs practitioners to visualize these differently vowelized divine names during different prayers and rituals, depending on which divine attribute they wish to activate. During healing prayers, for instance, one should focus on YHVH with vowels corresponding to Hesed to draw down healing energy. During deathbed rituals, vowelizations associated with mercy are emphasized to ensure gentle judgment.

Beyond these primary divine names, Ma'avar Yabok also discusses the mystical significance of the 42-letter divine name (Shem Mem-Bet), which plays a central role in deathbed and burial rituals. This name is divided into seven groups of six letters each, with each group corresponding to a different day of creation and a different divine attribute. The text provides detailed instructions for meditating on this name during the seven circuits (hakafot) performed around the deceased's bier, creating a protective spiritual envelope for the departing soul.

The technical complexity of these name-based kavvanot reflects the influence of Lurianic Kabbalah, which developed elaborate systems for manipulating divine names as a form of theurgy (ritual influence on divine realms). However, Ma'avar Yabok presents these techniques in a relatively accessible format, making them available to religious functionaries without extensive kabbalistic training.

It's important to note that these divine name contemplations were not meant to be merely mental exercises but were understood as actual manipulations of cosmic energy. The text repeatedly emphasizes that proper visualization of divine names with appropriate vowels creates tangible effects in both spiritual and physical realms. This belief in the causal efficacy of properly directed consciousness distinguishes kabbalistic kavvanah from more general concepts of devotional focus.

Sefirotic Correspondences in Prayer and Ritual

The divine emanations known as sefirot constitute the primary structural framework for kavvanah practice in Ma'avar Yabok. These ten emanations—Keter (Crown), Hokhmah (Wisdom), Binah (Understanding), Hesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength), Tiferet (Beauty), Netzach (Victory), Hod (Splendor), Yesod (Foundation), and Malkhut (Kingdom)—represent different aspects of divine manifestation and serve as the cosmic channels through which divine energy flows into creation.

Berechia provides a comprehensive system for directing one's kavvanah toward specific sefirot during different prayers and rituals. This direction is not arbitrary but corresponds to the inherent connection between particular prayers and specific divine attributes. For instance, prayers of praise generally correspond to Hesed, prayers of petition to Gevurah, and prayers of thanksgiving to Tiferet. By consciously aligning one's intention with these correspondences, the practitioner can maximize the efficacy of prayer as a means of influencing cosmic flows.

The Amidah prayer (the central standing prayer of Jewish liturgy) receives particular attention in Ma'avar Yabok's sefirotic mapping. Each of its nineteen blessings corresponds to a specific sefirah or combination of sefirot. For example, the first blessing (Avot/Patriarchs) corresponds to Hesed through its association with Abraham, while the second blessing (Gevurot/Powers) naturally aligns with Gevurah. The practitioner is instructed to visualize each blessing as activating its corresponding sefirah, creating a systematic ascent through the divine emanations over the course of the prayer.

Deathbed rituals in Ma'avar Yabok involve particularly sophisticated sefirotic kavvanot. The text instructs those attending the dying person to direct their intention toward facilitating the soul's journey through the sefirotic system, from Malkhut (the lowest emanation) through progressively higher levels. Specific verses, divine names, and visualizations are prescribed for each sefirotic level, creating a spiritual ladder for the ascending soul.

The process of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) mentioned earlier operates primarily through sefirotic manipulation. When illness or death threatens, the attribute of Gevurah (judgment) is understood to be predominant. Through proper kavvanah, the practitioner attempts to activate Hesed (loving-kindness) and channel its energy to balance and temper Gevurah's severity. This balancing is visualized as a flow of divine light from the right side of the sefirotic structure (associated with Hesed) to the left side (associated with Gevurah).

Ma'avar Yabok also addresses the kabbalistic concept of "faces" (partzu- fim)—complex configurations of sefirot that function as complete divine personae. Five primary partzufim are recognized in Lurianic Kabbalah: Arich Anpin (Long Face), Abba (Father), Imma (Mother), Zeir Anpin (Small Face), and Nukvah (Female). The text provides kavvanot for interacting with these partzufim during different rituals, particularly those involving the transition between life and death.

One of the most significant sefirotic kavvanot presented in Ma'avar Yabok involves the "thirteen rectifications of the holy beard" (yud-gimel tikkunei dikna). These thirteen channels of divine mercy, associated with the partzuf of Arich Anpin, are visualized during prayers for the sick and dying as conduits of compassionate energy capable of overriding harsh judgments. The practitioner is instructed to contemplate each of these channels in sequence, creating a comprehensive activation of divine mercy.

This sefirotic framework provides a cosmic map for directing kavvanah, allowing practitioners to target specific divine attributes and influences based on particular needs and circumstances. By understanding the correspondence between human actions and sefirotic dynamics, religious functionaries can transform seemingly simple prayers and rituals into sophisticated tools for cosmic influence.

Deathbed Kavvanot

Ma'avar Yabok devotes particular attention to kavvanot specifically designed for deathbed situations, reflecting the book's primary purpose as a manual for religious functionaries responsible for end-of-life care. These deathbed kavvanot are presented as essential tools for facilitating the soul's peaceful transition from physical to spiritual existence, protecting it from negative forces and guiding it toward divine reception.

The text emphasizes that the moment of death represents a critical spiritual juncture where proper kavvanah can dramatically influence the soul's posthumous experience. Unlike regular prayer kavvanot, which primarily affect the practitioner's own spiritual state, deathbed kavvanot are understood to directly impact another person's soul during its most vulnerable transition. This intercessory function places special responsibility on those performing these kavvanot.

Central to Ma'avar Yabok's deathbed system is the recitation of the Shema prayer with specific kavvanah. Those attending the dying person are instructed to recite "Hear, O Israel: the Lord our God, the Lord is One" while visualizing the unification of the divine names YHVH and Adonai. This unification creates what the text describes as a "pathway of light" through which the soul can ascend safely to higher realms.

Specific attention is given to the final word of the Shema—"echad" (one)—which should be extended while visualizing the soul's separation from the body and its ascent through the cosmic levels. The numerical value of "echad" (13) corresponds to the thirteen attributes of divine mercy, creating a protective envelope around the departing soul. The dying person, if conscious, is encouraged to focus their own kavvanah on surrendering their soul to God through this word, echoing Rabbi Akiva's martyrdom where he extended the word "echad" until his soul departed.

Another crucial deathbed kavvanah involves the recitation of 112 biblical verses organized according to the three divine names constituting the acronym YaBOK.

Twenty-one verses correspond to the name Ehyeh, twenty-six to the Tetragrammaton, and sixty-five to Adonai. These verses are to be recited with the kavvanah of creating a spiritual vehicle for the soul's ascent through corresponding cosmic levels.

For the final moments before death, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes the recitation of "Lekh…" ("Go forth") with the kavvanah of gently releasing the soul from its bodily attachment. This recitation is to be accompanied by visualization of the verse from Song of Songs 5:6, "My soul departed when he spoke," understood as a loving divine summons rather than a harsh expulsion.

The text also provides specific kavvanot for those situations where the dying person experiences difficulty releasing their soul. These involve visualization of the angels Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel stationed at the four sides of the deathbed, with the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) above the person's head. This angelic configuration is understood to create a protective field that facilitates the soul's departure by neutralizing negative forces that might impede its release.

After death has occurred, Ma'avar Yabok prescribes kavvanot focused on the continued protection of the soul during its initial journey. These include visualization of Psalm 91 (known as "the Song of Afflictions") as a protective shield around the deceased, and contemplation of specific divine names during the seven circuits (hakafot) performed around the bier.

Throughout these deathbed instructions, the text emphasizes that proper kavvanah directly affects the deceased's posthumous experience. Those who depart with appropriate spiritual preparation and with the assistance of properly directed kavvanot by attendants are understood to experience a gentle judgment and swift ascent to paradise. Conversely, those who die without proper kavvanah may face a more difficult transition requiring posthumous purification.

This cosmic significance attributed to deathbed kavvanot reflects Ma'avar Yabok's overall perspective on human religious consciousness as a potent force capable of influencing not only one's own spiritual state but also the metaphysical conditions of others during critical transitions.

Letter meditation: the atomistic approach

A distinctive feature of the kavvanah system presented in Ma'avar Yabok is its atomistic approach to sacred language, treating individual Hebrew letters and their combinations as discrete units of spiritual power. This approach draws on the kabbalistic understanding of Hebrew as the divine language of creation, with each letter containing unique metaphysical properties and cosmic correspondences.

Berechia instructs practitioners to meditate on the individual letters of prayers and divine names, not merely as linguistic components but as actual channels of divine energy. Each letter of the Hebrew alphabet corresponds to specific sefirot, angels, body parts, and cosmic functions. By properly contemplating these correspondences during prayer, the practitioner can activate the letter's inherent spiritual potency.

For instance, the four letters of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) correspond to four primary sefirot: Yod to Hokhmah, the first Heh to Binah, Vav to Tiferet, and the final Heh to Malkhut. When reciting this divine name (or visualizing it, as direct pronunciation is prohibited), the practitioner should contemplate each letter sequentially, visualizing its connection to its corresponding sefirah and the flow of divine energy through that connection.

Ma'avar Yabok also discusses the significance of letter permutations and combinations, particularly in relation to the 231 "gates" (sha'arim) formed by pairing each Hebrew letter with every other letter. These combinations, first described in the ancient mystical text Sefer Yetzirah, are understood as the fundamental building blocks of creation. By meditating on specific combinations during prayer, the practitioner can influence the cosmic forces they represent.

The text provides detailed instructions for contemplating the 42-letter divine name, which consists of seven groups of six letters. Each group should be visualized with awareness of its specific cosmic function and angelic correspondence. Similarly, the 72-letter divine name, derived from three verses in Exodus 14:19–21, is to be contemplated letter by letter during certain critical prayers, particularly those relating to protection from negative forces.

Beyond divine names, Ma'avar Yabok applies this atomistic approach to biblical verses used in healing and deathbed rituals. The 112 verses associated with the YaBOK acronym are to be recited with awareness of how each letter contributes to the verse's overall spiritual effect. Certain key verses should be visualized letter by letter, creating a mental image of the Hebrew text that serves as a vehicle for divine energy.

This letter-focused kavvanah reflects the influence of Abraham Abulafia's ecstatic Kabbalah, which emphasized letter permutation as a technique for achieving mystical states. However, Ma'avar Yabok adapts this approach for practical religious purposes rather than pure mystical experience, showing how letter meditation can be integrated into conventional prayer and ritual.

The text's atomistic approach also extends to the vowel points used in Hebrew text. Different vowelizations of the same letters are understood to channel different qualities of divine energy. By visualizing divine names with specific vowel patterns, the practitioner can activate particular divine attributes. For instance, the Tetragrammaton with cholam vowels channels energy from Hokhmah, while the same letters with kamatz vowels activate Binah.

This letter-based approach to kavvanah represents a distinctive feature of kabbalistic prayer practice, differentiating it from more general concepts of devotional concentration. It suggests that effective prayer depends not merely on emotional sincerity or conceptual understanding but on technical expertise in manipulating the metaphysical properties of sacred language at its most fundamental level.

The central Kavvanah: unification

Among the numerous kavvanot presented in Ma'avar Yabok, one stands as particularly fundamental: the intention to unify "the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence" (l'yachada kudsha brich hu u-shechintei). This phrase, derived from Zoharic literature, appears repeatedly throughout the text as the essential kavvanah underlying all religious practice.

This unification refers to the reconciliation of masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, typically represented by the Tetragrammaton (associated with Tiferet and the masculine principle) and Adonai (associated with Malkhut and the feminine principle). According to kabbalistic understanding, these aspects became partially separated due to cosmic fragmentation caused by human sin, particularly the destruction of the Temple. The primary spiritual task of Jewish religious life involves facilitating their reunification.

Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed instructions for achieving this unification through prayer and ritual. When reciting blessings that contain both divine names (such as "Blessed are You, YHVH our God, King of the universe"), the practitioner should visualize the integration of these names while consciously intending to unite the divine masculine and feminine. This visualization typically involves seeing the letters of the two names intertwining or overlapping, creating a unified divine presence.

The text emphasizes that this unification is not merely conceptual but has actual metaphysical consequences. When properly executed, it draws down divine abundance through the restored channel between Tiferet and Malkhut, benefiting both upper and lower worlds. Conversely, failure to maintain this kavvanah during prayer can result in what kabbalistic literature calls "cutting the shoots" (kitzutz baneti'ot)—a disruption of proper cosmic flow that strengthens the forces of judgment.

The central importance of this unifying kavvanah reflects the fundamentally theurgic nature of kabbalistic prayer. Unlike prayer traditions that emphasize petition or personal devotion, the kabbalistic approach presented in Ma'avar Yabok positions human religious consciousness as an active force in maintaining cosmic harmony. Through proper kavvanah, humans participate directly in the restoration of divine wholeness, serving as agents of cosmic repair (tikkun).

This unification kavvanah takes on special significance during transitions between life and death. At the deathbed, proper execution of this kavvanah creates a protected pathway for the soul's ascent, ensuring that it passes safely through the various cosmic levels without interference from negative forces. After death, continued application of this kavvanah through prayers for the deceased helps elevate the soul to its proper resting place.

Ma'avar Yabok connects this unification with the biblical narrative of Jacob crossing the Yabok River, which serves as the book's central metaphor. Just as Jacob's wrestling with the angel at the Yabok represented a unification of earthly and divine realms, proper kavvanah during life transitions facilitates the soul's crossing between physical and spiritual existence.

The text also relates this unification to the cosmic marriage between God and Israel, drawing on imagery from Song of Songs. The soul's departure from the body is likened to the bride's joyful reunion with her beloved, transforming death from a fearful separation into a loving homecoming. This nuptial imagery softens the potentially frightening aspects of death, presenting it instead as the fulfillment of the soul's deepest longing for divine union.

In practical terms, Ma'avar Yabok instructs religious functionaries to maintain this unifying kavvanah throughout all aspects of care for the sick and dying. Even seemingly mundane activities like washing the deceased or reciting psalms should be performed with conscious awareness of facilitating divine unification. This infusion of cosmic significance into practical care reflects the text's integration of mystical consciousness with communal religious responsibility.

Kavvanah and the Four Worlds

The kavvanah system presented in Ma'avar Yabok operates within the framework of the four kabbalistic worlds: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). These worlds represent progressively denser levels of divine manifestation, from the most sublime (Atzilut) to the most concrete (Asiyah). Human consciousness, through properly directed kavvanah, can navigate these worlds, creating effects at different cosmic levels.

Berechia explains that different prayers and rituals naturally correspond to different worlds. Simple recitation of words without kavvanah remains limited to Asiyah, the physical world of action. Basic understanding of prayer meaning elevates consciousness to Yetzirah, the world of formation associated with emotion and speech. Deeper contemplation of theological concepts accesses Beriah, the world of pure intellect and divine throne. The highest kavvanah, involving unification of divine names, can reach Atzilut, the world of pure divine emanation where the sefirot themselves reside.

The text emphasizes that effective prayer should ideally activate all four worlds simultaneously, creating a complete circuit of divine energy. This multi-level engagement requires sophisticated kavvanah that addresses the specific qualities of each world:

- For Asiyah: Proper physical actions and verbal articulation
- For Yetzirah: Emotional engagement and visualization of angelic forces
- For Beriah: Intellectual comprehension of theological concepts
- For Atzilut: Contemplation of divine names and their unifications

Ma'avar Yabok provides specific guidance for directing kavvanah toward different worlds depending on the prayer's purpose. Prayers for physical healing should emphasize Asiyah and Yetzirah, visualizing divine energy descending through angelic intermediaries into the physical body. Prayers for spiritual elevation, particularly at death, should focus on Beriah and Atzilut, facilitating the soul's ascent through higher realms.

The text also addresses the correspondence between the four worlds and the components of the human soul: nefesh (vital soul) corresponds to Asiyah, ruach (spirit) to Yetzirah, neshamah (higher soul) to Beriah, and the highest soul levels (chayah and yechidah) to Atzilut. This correspondence creates a direct link between cosmic structure and human spiritual composition, allowing properly directed kavvanah to affect specific soul components.

In deathbed contexts, Ma'avar Yabok explains that death involves the progressive separation of these soul components, with each returning to its corresponding world. The nefesh remains near the grave in Asiyah, the ruach ascends to Yetzirah, and the neshamah to Beriah, while the highest aspects may reach Atzilut. Proper kavvanah during death rituals facilitates this orderly separation and ascension, ensuring that each soul component reaches its appropriate destination.

The four-world framework also informs Ma'avar Yabok's approach to prayer texts. Biblical verses are understood to contain multiple levels of meaning corresponding to the four worlds, from literal (Asiyah) to mystical (Atzilut). When reciting these verses, the practitioner should be aware of all levels simultaneously, allowing the text to function as a channel connecting the worlds. This multi-level awareness creates what the text describes as a "complete kavvanah" that maximizes prayer's cosmic efficacy.

This cosmic navigation through kavvanah reflects a sophisticated understanding of prayer as multi-dimensional activity. Unlike more simplistic approaches that emphasize either physical performance or emotional sincerity, Ma'avar Yabok presents prayer as a comprehensive engagement with all levels of reality simultaneously. Through proper kavvanah, the practitioner becomes a cosmic traveler, moving between worlds while remaining physically present in ritual action.

Kavvanah as Tikkun

The ultimate purpose of kavvanah in Ma'avar Yabok is tikkun—the repair or rectification of cosmic fragmentation. Drawing on Lurianic Kabbalah, the text presents human religious consciousness as a powerful tool for restoring harmony to divine realms disrupted by primordial catastrophes and subsequent human sin.

According to this framework, creation involved a contraction of divine light (tzimtzum) followed by an emanation of that light into vessels that subsequently shattered (shevirat ha-kelim). This "breaking of the vessels" scattered divine sparks throughout creation and created a state of cosmic disharmony where divine attributes became separated from one another. Human sin, particularly the sin of Adam and later collective transgressions, further exacerbated this fragmentation.

Ma'avar Yabok positions kavvanah as the primary mechanism through which this fragmentation can be healed. When religious acts are performed with proper intention, they serve to gather scattered divine sparks, reunite separated divine attributes, and restore proper flow between cosmic levels. This restorative function transforms seemingly simple religious actions into profound metaphysical interventions.

The text frequently employs the term "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) to describe this transformative process. Divine judgment, associated with the sefirah of Gevurah, becomes problematic when disconnected from the balancing influence of Hesed (loving-kindness). Through proper kavvanah, practitioners can channel the energy of Hesed to "sweeten" or transform harsh judgments into constructive spiritual influences.

This sweetening process has particular relevance in contexts of illness and death, where divine judgment manifests in its most severe form. Ma'avar Yabok provides detailed kavvanot designed to transform the judgment of illness into a purifying spiritual process and the judgment of death into a gentle transition. These kavvanot do not seek to eliminate judgment entirely (which would disrupt cosmic order) but to integrate it harmoniously with divine mercy.

Beyond individual situations, the text presents kavvanah as contributing to the broader cosmic tikkun that will ultimately lead to redemption. Each properly executed prayer or ritual with appropriate kavvanah adds to the collective repair of divine realms, bringing the world incrementally closer to complete restoration. This perspective infuses everyday religious practice with messianic significance, positioning even seemingly minor rituals as contributions to universal redemption.

The communal dimension of tikkun receives particular emphasis in Ma'avar Yabok's approach to kavvanah. While individuals can certainly effect significant spiritual repairs through proper intention, the text repeatedly emphasizes the superior power of communal kavvanah. When ten individuals (a minyan) direct their collective consciousness toward the same spiritual goal, their combined intention creates what the text describes as a "complete structure" (partzuf shalem) capable of generating more comprehensive tikkun.

This is particularly evident in the text's instructions for deathbed and burial rituals, which ideally should be performed with a minyan. The collective kavvanah of the community creates a protective spiritual envelope around the departing soul, facilitating its transition and contributing to broader cosmic repair. Here, communal religious responsibility and mystical efficacy converge, reflecting Ma'avar Yabok's integration of practical care with spiritual potency.

The tikkun dimension of kavvanah also explains the text's emphasis on technical precision in prayer and ritual. Since the goal is actual metaphysical repair rather than merely personal devotion, proper execution becomes crucial. Mispronounced words, omitted passages, or incorrect kavvanot can potentially hinder rather than facilitate cosmic restoration. This explains the meticulous detail with which Ma'avar Yabok describes proper procedure and intention for various rituals, particularly those surrounding death.

At the same time, the text acknowledges that perfect kavvanah remains an aspirational ideal rather than a consistent achievement. It offers reassurance that sincere effort, even with imperfect execution, still contributes positively to cosmic tikkun. This balanced approach combines technical rigor with pastoral sensitivity, recognizing both the objective metaphysical significance of kavvanah and the subjective limitations of human practitioners.

Practical guidance for Kavvanah

While Ma'avar Yabok primarily presents kavvanah as a sophisticated metaphysical system, it also offers practical guidance for developing and maintaining proper intention during prayer and ritual. These practical aspects make the text's mystical teachings accessible to ordinary religious functionaries rather than remaining the exclusive domain of elite kabbalists.

Berechia acknowledges that maintaining consistent kavvanah presents significant challenges, particularly during lengthy prayers or emotionally demanding situations like deathbed attendance. Rather than insisting on unrealistic standards of perpetual mystical consciousness, the text provides pragmatic strategies for managing attention and intention within normal human limitations.

One such strategy involves focusing kavvanah on key moments in prayer rather than attempting to maintain intense concentration throughout. Ma'avar Yabok identifies critical junctures—such as the first blessing of the Amidah, the recitation of the Shema, or the conclusion of kaddish—where kavvanah should be especially concentrated. By prioritizing these moments, practitioners can conserve mental energy while still activating the prayer's essential spiritual mechanisms.

The text also recommends preparatory practices to establish proper kavvanah before engaging in prayer or ritual. These include purifying oneself through ritual washing, eliminating distracting thoughts through brief meditation, and explicitly articulating one's intention to unify divine names before beginning prayer. These preliminary steps create what the text calls a "gateway of intention" (sha'ar ha-kavvanah) through which subsequent prayers can ascend effectively.

For developing visualization skills crucial to kabbalistic kavvanah, Ma'avar Yabok suggests progressive training. Beginners should start by visualizing individual Hebrew letters, gradually advancing to complete divine names, and eventually to complex unifications involving multiple names with specific vowel points. This graduated approach builds the mental capacity necessary for sophisticated kavvanah without overwhelming novice practitioners.

The text also addresses common obstacles to kavvanah, particularly intrusive thoughts (hirhur) that disturb concentration during prayer. Drawing on earlier pietistic literature, Berechia recommends specific techniques for managing such distractions, including briefly pausing prayer to regain focus, visualizing divine names as a protective shield against foreign thoughts, and channeling wandering attention back to prayer through gentle but persistent effort.

Recognizing the challenge of maintaining kavvanah during emotionally charged situations like deathbed attendance, Ma'avar Yabok provides simplified kavvanot for emergency circumstances. These condensed forms maintain the essential spiritual mechanics while requiring less mental elaboration, making them accessible even during periods of stress or time constraint.

The text emphasizes the importance of studying kabbalistic concepts regularly to internalize the cosmological framework underlying effective kavvanah. Rather than treating kavvanah as a separate mental activity added to prayer, practitioners should develop an integrated consciousness where awareness of cosmic correspondences becomes second nature. This integration allows kavvanah to flow naturally during prayer rather than requiring constant conscious effort.

For communal leaders responsible for guiding others in prayer and ritual, Ma'avar Yabok provides instructional language for teaching kavvanah without overwhelming those unfamiliar with kabbalistic concepts. The text offers simplified explanations of complex mystical ideas, making them accessible to ordinary community members while preserving their essential spiritual function.

Perhaps most significantly, Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes that developing proper kavvanah requires balancing technical knowledge with genuine devotional feeling. While mastering the mechanics of divine names and cosmic correspondences remains important, the text insists that this technical knowledge must be animated by authentic spiritual yearning. True kavvanah emerges from the integration of precise mystical technique with sincere religious sentiment, creating what the text describes as "unified service" (avodah achat).

This practical guidance reflects Ma'avar Yabok's overall approach as a manual for communal religious functionaries rather than an esoteric treatise for elite mystics. By providing accessible strategies for developing kavvanah, the text democratizes kabbalistic practice, making its spiritual potency available to a broader range of practitioners responsible for caring for the sick, dying, and deceased within the community.

Enduring significance of Kavvanah

The system of kavvanah presented in Ma'avar Yabok represents one of the most sophisticated attempts to integrate kabbalistic mysticism with practical Jewish religious life. By providing detailed instructions for directing intention during prayer and ritual, particularly in contexts of illness and death, Aaron Berechia of Modena created a manual that bridged esoteric knowledge and communal responsibility, making the cosmic power of proper intention accessible to religious functionaries beyond elite mystical circles.

The text's emphasis on kavvanah as a transformative force capable of influencing divine realms reflects a profound theological position: human consciousness, properly directed, participates actively in the maintenance and repair of cosmic order. This perspective positions religious practitioners not merely as passive recipients of divine influence but as partners in the ongoing work of creation, capable of "sweetening judgments," facilitating divine unifications, and contributing to universal tikkun.

The technical sophistication of Ma'avar Yabok's kavvanah system—with its detailed instructions for visualizing divine names, contemplating sefirotic correspondences, and navigating cosmic worlds—demonstrates the influence of Lurianic Kabbalah, particularly as transmitted through Italian kabbalistic circles. However, Berechia's innovation lies in making these complex mystical techniques practically applicable within conventional religious settings, especially the communal responsibility of caring for the sick and dying.

The text's integration of metaphysical theory with practical guidance reflects a balanced approach to spiritual practice that acknowledges both the objective cosmic significance of kavvanah and the subjective limitations of human practitioners. Rather than demanding unrealistic levels of mystical consciousness, Ma'avar Yabok provides graduated strategies for developing and maintaining kavvanah within normal human capacities, making its spiritual system accessible beyond elite mystics.

Perhaps most significantly, the kavvanah system presented in Ma'avar Yabok offers a profound response to the existential challenges of illness, suffering, and death. By positioning these experiences within a coherent cosmic framework where proper intention can transform harsh judgment into purifying mercy, the text provides both philosophical meaning and practical tools for navigating life's most difficult transitions. This integration of cosmic significance with pastoral sensitivity represents the text's most enduring contribution to Jewish spiritual tradition.

For contemporary readers, Ma'avar Yabok's kavvanah system offers valuable insights into the relationship between consciousness and religious practice. While its specific cosmological framework may not align with modern scientific understandings, its fundamental recognition of intention as a transformative force in ritual remains relevant across religious traditions. The text's sophisticated approach to directing consciousness during prayer and ritual provides a model for integrating contemplative depth with religious action, regardless of one's specific theological commitments.

The enduring significance of kavvanah as presented in Ma'avar Yabok lies in its affirmation that human intention matters—that the conscious direction of awareness during religious practice affects not only subjective experience but objective spiritual reality. This perspective offers a powerful alternative to both mechanistic approaches to ritual that emphasize external performance without internal engagement and purely psychological interpretations that reduce religious experience to subjective states without cosmic consequence.

In an age often characterized by fragmented attention and mechanical performance of religious obligations, Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on kavvanah as the animating principle of effective prayer and ritual provides a valuable corrective. Its vision of religious consciousness as a transformative force capable of influencing both personal experience and cosmic reality offers a compelling model for integrating mystical depth with practical religious life—a model that continues to inspire spiritual seekers across traditions and centuries.

Abbreviations

1. א״א — Arich Anpin (Long Face, a divine configuration in Kabbalah).
2. א״ח — Orach Chaim.
3. א״ס — Ein Sof (Infinite One, a reference to God beyond all attributes).
4. אבגית״ץ — ABGITATZ (first word of the 42-letter Divine Name).
5. אבי״ע — Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah (the four spiritual worlds).
6. אח״כ — After this.
7. אי״ה — God willing.
8. אי״ק — AI”K, a kabbalistic alphanumeric system organizing Hebrew letters.
9. אכי״ר — Amen, so may it be [God’s] will.
10. אנ״ך — Scripture (acronym for Torah, Prophets, and Writings).
11. ארי״ך — Arich Anpin (Long-Faced One, a kabbalistic term for a high divine configuration).
12. ב״ה — Beit haknesset (synagogue).
13. בא״י — In the Land of Israel.
14. בג״ע — In the Garden of Eden.
15. בי״ע — Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah.
16. בי״לאו — Acronym for a blessing formula expressing completion with divine assistance.
17. בנל״ך — Blessed is He.
18. בע״ש — On Sabbath eve.
19. בעה״י — With God’s help.
20. בר״מ — In Ra’aya Mehemna.
21. ברהמ״ז — Birkat HaMazon (Grace After Meals).
22. בשבמל״ו — Baruch Shem Kevod Malchuto Le’olam Va’ed (response to the Shema).
23. ג״ח — Acts of kindness (gemilut chasadim).
24. ג״ע — Garden of Eden.
25. ג״פ — Three times.
26. גגת״מ — Chesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, and Malkhut.
27. ׳גמ — Gemara (Talmud).
28. ד״א — Four cubits.
29. ד״ת — Words of Torah (divrei Torah).
30. דס״מ — Of Samael (angelic being associated with evil).
31. האר״י — The ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria).
32. הוי״ה — YHVH (Tetragrammaton).
33. ׳דמ — Malkhut (Kingdom), the Divine Feminine.
34. הסמ״ג — Sefer HaMitzvot HaGadol (a comprehensive medieval legal code).

35. הקב״ה — The Holy One, blessed be He.
36. הראב״ד — RABD (Rabbi Abraham ben David).
37. ו״ק — Six Extremities.
38. ואע״י — And by His help.
39. וגו׳ — Etc. (abbreviation indicating familiar text continues).
40. וכו׳ — Etc.
41. ולש״ש — For the sake of Heaven.
42. ז״א — Zeir Anpin (Small-Faced One).
43. ז״את — ZOT (a reference to Malkhut/Shekhinah, the divine feminine presence).
44. זצ״ל — Of blessed memory.
45. זצוק״ל — May the memory of the holy righteous one be a blessing.
46. ח״ב — Chokhmah-Binah.
47. ח״ו — Heaven forbid.
48. חג״ת — Chesed-Gevurah-Tiferet (Kindness-Strength-Beauty).
49. חז״ל — Our Sages of blessed memory.
50. יו״ט — Festivals/holidays.
51. יח״ב — Acronym for a blessing formula.
52. יצ״ה — Evil inclination.
53. יצ״ו — May his Rock keep him and grant him life.
54. יצ״ט — Good inclination.
55. יצה״ר — Evil inclination.
56. ירו׳ — Jerusalem Talmud.
57. כ״י — Community of Israel (Knesset Yisrael).
58. כ״ע — Keter Elyon (Supreme Crown).
59. כי״ר — May it be [Your] will.
60. כמהה״ר — The honorable Rabbi.
61. לעה״ב — In the World to Come.
62. מ״ה — Angel of Death.
63. מ״ל — Mem-Lamed (initials referring to Malkhut/Kingdom).
64. מ״ר — Midrash Rabbah.
65. מט״ט — Metatron (angelic being).
66. מטט׳ — Metatron.
67. ממ״ה — Angel of Death.
68. מרע״ה — Moses our teacher.
69. נ״ה — Netzach and Hod (Victory and Splendor).
70. נ״ש — Sabbath candles.
71. נט״י — Netilat yadayim (ritual hand-washing).
72. נר״ן — Nefesh-Ruach-Neshamah (the three main levels of the soul).
73. נר״נ — Nefesh-ruach-neshamah.
74. ס״א — Sitra Achra (the Other Side).
75. ס״מ — Samael (name of the angel of death).
76. ס״ת — Torah scroll (Sefer Torah).
77. סי׳ — Siman (section/number).
78. עה״ב — The World to Come.

79. עה״ז — This world.
80. עה״ז/עוה״ז — This world.
81. עוה״ב — The World to Come (Olam HaBa).
82. פ״ט — Chapter 9.
83. ק״ק — Holy Community.
84. ק״ש — Kriat Shema (recitation of the Shema prayer).
85. קב״ה — The Holy One, blessed be He.
86. קוב״ה — The Holy One, blessed be He.
87. קק״י — Holy communities.
88. ר״ה — Rosh Hashanah.
89. ר״ח — New moon (Rosh Chodesh).
90. ר״מ — Ra'aya Mehemna (section of the Zohar).
91. ר״ת — Initial letters, acronym.
92. ראב״י — Rabbi Eliezer ben Yaakov.
93. ריב״ל — Rabbi Joshua ben Levi.
94. רע״מ — Ra'aya Mehemna.
95. רשב״י — Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai.
96. ש״מ — Shechiv mera (deathly ill person).
97. שי״ת — The Holy One, blessed be He.
98. שכמ״לו — Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever.
99. ת״ח — Torah scholar.
100. ת״ת — Tiferet.
101. תוב״ב — May it be rebuilt and established speedily in our days.
102. תש״ת — TASHAT (sequence of shofar sounds: tekiah-shevarim-tekiah).

Glossary

1. אִישׁ לְאָהָלוֹ יִשְׂרָאֵל — To your tents, O Israel (phrase from the rebellion against the House of David in 1 Kings 12:16).
2. אִסְרוּ־חַג בַּעֲבֹתִים — Bind the festival sacrifice with cords.
3. אֵם עַל בָּנִים — Mother with children (idiom for complete destruction).
4. אֶהְיֶה אֲשֶׁר אֶהְיֶה — I AM THAT I AM.
5. אֶחֱטָם — I will hold back/restrain.
6. אֶרֶץ חַיִּים — Land of the living.
7. אַהֲבָה רַבָּה וּבְאַהֲבָה זוּטָא — Great love and lesser love (kabbalistic terms for different levels of divine love).
8. אַיֶּלֶת הַשַּׁחַר — Doe of the dawn.
9. אַכְזָב — Deceptive/unreliable.
10. אַפִּרְיוֹן — Royal pavilion.
11. אַרְצוֹת הַחַיִּים — Lands of the living.
12. אָזְלַת יָד — Power is gone.
13. אבגית"ץ — ABGITATZ (first word of the 42-letter divine name).
14. אבי אבות הטומאה — Primary source of impurity.
15. אביזרייהו — Their accessories/related matters.
16. אבני שיש טהור — Pure marble stones.
17. אגדות — Aggadot.
18. אגרא דבי טמיא שתיקותא — The reward of the house of mourning is silence.
19. אדם דאצילות — Adam of Atzilut (Adam of the World of Emanation).
20. אדם העליון — Supernal Adam.
21. אדם קדמון — Primordial Adam.
22. אדרת האזינו — Idra Ha'azinu (a section of the Zohar containing mystical teachings).
23. אהבה זוטא — Lesser love.
24. אהבה רבה — Great love.
25. אויר המחכים — Enlightening atmosphere.
26. אור גנוז — Hidden light.
27. אור האצילות — Light of Emanation.
28. אור החוזר — Reflected light.
29. אור החצון — External light.
30. אור המתהפך — Reflected light.
31. אור הקדום — Primordial Light.
32. אור השכינה — Light of the Divine Presence.

33. אור ישר וחוזר — Direct and reflected light.
34. אור מקיף — Encompassing light.
35. אור פנימי — Inner light.
36. אור קדמון — Primordial Light.
37. אור ראשון — Primordial light.
38. אורות ימיניים ושמאליים — Lights from the right and the left.
39. אורות שבאצילות — Lights of the World of Emanation.
40. אושפיזין עילאין — Supernal guests (refers to the seven biblical figures who spiritually visit the sukkah).
41. אושפיזין קדישין — Holy guests.
42. אות ברית — Sign of the covenant.
43. אותיות לפופות — Wrapped/curved letters.
44. אותיות פורחות וגוילים נשרפים — Flying letters and burning parchments.
45. אזובי קיר — Wall moss/hyssop (metaphor for ordinary people).
46. אזנים כריית לי — Ears You have opened for me.
47. אחורי זעיר לנוקביה — The back of Zeir Anpin and its feminine counterpart.
48. אחורים של אלהים — The 'back' of Elohim (a kabbalistic concept referring to external aspects of divine judgment).
49. אידרת האזינו — Idra Ha'azinu (a section of the Zohar).
50. אילן החיים — Tree of Life.
51. אילן עץ החיים — Tree of Life.
52. אילנא דחיי — Tree of Life.
53. אילנא דמותא — Tree of Death.
54. אימא עילאה — Supernal Mother (the divine emanation of Binah/Understanding).
55. אישים — Ishim (fiery beings, a category of angels).
56. אכתריאל י״ה ה׳ צבאות — Achtariel Yah YHVH Tzeva'ot (divine name).
57. אכתריאל יה ה׳ צבאות — Achtariel Yah YHVH Tzeva'ot.
58. אל אלהים — El Elohim (divine name combining mercy and judgment).
59. אלהים דמרגלאן דנהיר — The god of shining pearls.
60. אלפא ביתא רבתי בינונית וזעירא — Large, medium, and small alphabets.
61. אמא עלאה דמקננא בבורסיא — Supernal Mother who nests in the Throne.
62. אנשי החיל — Strong men.
63. אסף ההודי — Asaf the Indian.
64. אספקלריאה דנהרא — Illuminating lens.
65. אספקלריאה המאירה — Luminous speculum (clear prophetic vision).
66. אספקלריאה שאינה מאירה — Non-luminous speculum (unclear prophetic vision).
67. אצילות, בריאה, יצירה, עשיה — Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah (the four spiritual worlds).
68. אצילת נשמתו — Emanation of one's soul.
69. אקונין — Image/icon.
70. ארבע חיות גדולות — Four great celestial creatures.
71. ארבע מחנות שכינה — Four camps of the Divine Presence.
72. ארבע מיתות ב״ד — Four court-imposed death penalties.
73. ארבע מיתות בית דין — Four court-imposed death penalties.
74. ארבע פני המרכבה — Four faces of the Divine Chariot.

75. ארבע רתיכין — Four celestial chariots.
76. ארבעה אבות נזיקין — Four principal categories of damages.
77. ארבעה אנפין — Four faces.
78. ארון הברית העליונה — The supernal Ark of the Covenant.
79. ארך אנפין — Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One).
80. ארץ העליונה — Supernal earth.
81. ארקא — Arka (one of the seven earths in Jewish mysticism).
82. אש שחורה על גבי אש לבנה — Black fire upon white fire.
83. אשם נפשו — Guilt-offering of his soul.
84. אתקלס עילאה — The Supreme One is praised.
85. בְּאַשְׁמֻרוֹת — In the night watches.
86. בְּאוֹר הַחַיִּים — In the light of life.
87. בְּגֵיא צַלְמָוֶת — Valley of the shadow of death.
88. בְּהִתְעַטֵּף עָלַי נַפְשִׁי — When my soul faints within me.
89. בְּהִתְעַטֵּף עָלַי רוּחִי — When my spirit grows faint within me.
90. בְּיָדְךָ אַפְקִיד רוּחִי — Into Your hand I commit my spirit.
91. בְּיָדְךָ עִתֹּתָי — My times are in Your hand.
92. בְּנֵי עֲלִיָּה — Elevated Souls.
93. בְּרִית קוֹדֶשׁ שֶׁבִּבְשָׂרוֹ — Holy covenant in his flesh.
94. בְּרִיתִי שָׁלוֹם — My covenant of peace.
95. בִּלַּע הַמָּוֶת לָנֶצַח — He will swallow up death forever.
96. בַּסָּךְ — In the throng/procession.
97. בַּר מִינָּן — God forbid.
98. בָּמוֹתֵימוֹ — Their high places.
99. בָּמוֹתַי — My high places.
100. בור תַּחְתִּיוֹת — Lowest pit, deepest dungeon.
101. בּוֹרֵא נִיב שְׂפָתָיִם — Creating the fruit of the lips.
102. באגרא דתעניתא — At the expense of fasting (the spiritual reward of fasting).
103. באדרא — In the Idra.
104. באידרא — In the Idra.
105. באספקלריא המאירה — Illuminating lens.
106. באר מיין נביעין — Well of flowing waters (metaphor for activated divine feminine energy).
107. בארץ בוקה מבוקה ומבולקה — In a land laid waste, utterly emptied and plundered.
108. באתר דאצטריך — In the place where it is needed.
109. באתר דליכא למיחש לאנצויי — In a place where there is no concern for quarreling.
110. בבואה דבבואה — Shadow of a shadow (reflection of an image).
111. בבטן האם העליונה — In the womb of the Supernal Mother.
112. בגדולה וגבורה — In Gedulah and Gevurah.
113. בגדי הקדושה — Garments of holiness (metaphor for spiritual existence after death).
114. בגימטרי״א ב״ן — With the numerical value of 52 (BaN).
115. בגין דיתרבי ויתוסף רבות קדושה — In order that holiness may increase and be added.
116. בדביקתא ברעותא באחדוותא חדא — In attachment, in willingness, in singular unity.
117. בדרועא וירכא ימינא — On the right arm and thigh.
118. בדרועא וירכא שמאלא — On the left arm and thigh.

119. בדרועא ימינא — In the right arm (kabbalistic reference to the side of mercy).
120. בדרועא שמאלא — In the left arm (kabbalistic reference to the side of judgment).
121. בוצינין מתדלקן ונהורין נהרין — Lamps are kindled and lights shine forth.
122. בוצינין עילאין — Supernal lights.
123. בור שאון — Pit of destruction.
124. בחינת האבות — Aspect of the Patriarchs.
125. בחינת הנשמה שבו — Aspect of the neshamah within him.
126. בטישת האורות — Impact/striking of lights.
127. ביחוד שם ג׳ — On the unification of the third name.
128. ביחוד שם ה׳ — On the unification of the fifth name.
129. בילת׳ עילאה — Supernal canopy.
130. בינה בגבורה — Binah within Gevurah.
131. בינה בחכמה — Binah within Chokhmah.
132. ביסום הגבורות — Sweetening of the powers of judgment.
133. ביסום הדין — Sweetening of judgment.
134. ביסום התפלה — Sweetening through prayer.
135. ביסום מדת הדין — Sweetening the attribute of judgment.
136. בית דין עליון ובית דין תחתון — Upper court and lower court.
137. בית עילאה — Supernal house.
138. ביתא עילאה קדישא — Holy supernal house.
139. במעדנות כימה — With the chains of Orion.
140. בן גילו — One born under the same astrological sign.
141. בנוקבא דתהומא רבא — In the opening of the great abyss.
142. בני השפחות — Children of the handmaids (mystical reference to lower spiritual forces).
143. בני רשף — Sons of the flame.
144. בני תמורה — Children of substitution (offspring conceived with improper thoughts).
145. בסום הדין — Sweetening of judgment (kabbalistic concept of transforming divine severity into mercy).
146. בעל העקדה — The author of the Akedah (Rabbi Isaac Arama).
147. בעל הרצון — Master of Will.
148. בעלי בחירה — Possessors of free will.
149. בעלי הדין — Forces of judgment.
150. בעלי קרי — Masters of chance/those affected by ritual impurity.
151. בעלמא דהדיוט — In the realm of ordinary mortals.
152. בעלמא דיליה — In His own realm.
153. בפולסי דנורא — With lashes of fire.
154. בר בי רב דחד יומא — A sage of a single day.
155. בר נפלי — Son of the fallen.
156. ברא מזכי אבא — A son brings merit to his father.
157. ברית העליון — Supernal covenant.
158. ברית כרותה לשפתים — Covenant made with the lips.
159. ברתיכוהי — His chariots.
160. בת עין העליונה — Supernal pupil.
161. בתיאובתא שלימתא — With complete desire.

162. ג״ח העליונים — Celestial acts of loving-kindness.
163. ג״ע עליון ותחתון — Upper and lower Garden of Eden.
164. ג״ע של מטה — Lower Garden of Eden.
165. ג׳ אבות חג״ת — Three Patriarchs—Chesed, Gevurah, and Tiferet.
166. גַּחֲלֵי רְתָמִים — Coals of broom wood.
167. גַּלְגַּלּוֹתָי נוּר דָּלֵק — Its wheels burning fire.
168. גַּן יְחוּדֶךָ — Garden of Your unity.
169. גַּן עֵדֶן עֶלְיוֹן — Supernal Garden of Eden (the higher level of paradise in kabbalistic thought).
170. גַּן עֵדֶן תַּחְתּוֹן וְעֶלְיוֹן — Lower and upper Garden of Eden.
171. גּוֹל עַל יְהוָה — Commit to the LORD (lit. roll onto the LORD).
172. גָּלְמִי — My embryonic form.
173. גבולי אלכסון — Diagonal boundaries.
174. גבורה עליונה — Supernal Gevurah (divine attribute of Strength/Judgment).
175. גבורות העליונות — Supernal powers of severity.
176. גבורות חיצונות — External powers of severity/judgment.
177. גוזי — My deliverer/protector.
178. גולגלתא חיוורא קדישא סתימא — Holy, concealed white skull.
179. גיהנם תחתון — Lower Gehinnom.
180. גימטריא — Gematria (Hebrew numerology).
181. גינת אגוז — Ginat Egoz (a kabbalistic text on the mystical properties of Hebrew letters).
182. גירא בעינא דשטנא — An arrow in Satan's eye (a provocative phrase).
183. גלגול מחילות — Rolling through caves.
184. גלגל האדום — The red wheel (a mystical reference to Malkhut in its aspect of judgment).
185. גלגל ערבות — Sphere of Aravot.
186. גלגלי התבונה — Celestial spheres of the astronomical configuration.
187. גן עדן (ג״ע) — Garden of Eden.
188. גן עדן עליון ותחתון — Upper and lower Garden of Eden.
189. גן עדן של מטה — Lower Garden of Eden.
190. גן עדן של מעלה — Supernal Garden of Eden.
191. גן עדן תחתון — Lower Garden of Eden.
192. גנת אגוז — Garden of Nuts.
193. גנתא דארעא ודרקיעא — Garden of earth and heaven.
194. גרדיני נמוסין — Enforcers of the law.
195. גרירת עצמות — Dragging of bones.
196. ד׳ מדרגות הנשמה — Four levels of the soul.
197. ד׳ מחנות שכינה — Four camps of the Divine Presence.
198. ד׳ פני המרכבה — Four faces of the Divine Chariot.
199. דְּבִיר קָדְשֶׁךָ — Your holy sanctuary.
200. דְּבַקוּתָא דְרוּחָא בְּרוּחָא — Cleaving of spirit to spirit.
201. דִּינָא יְתִב וְסִפְרִין פְּתִיחוּ — Judgment was set and books were opened.
202. דַּק מְחֻסְפָּס — Fine flake-like substance.
203. דַּרְגִין דְּכוּרְסְיָא — Levels of the Throne.
204. דְּעָבוּ כְּאֵשׁ קוֹצִים — They were extinguished like a fire of thorns.
205. דבקות רוח החיים הפנימי — Cleaving of the inner life-breath.

206. דבקותא דנפשא בשכינתא — Cleaving of the soul to the Divine Presence.
207. דברי יחוד וטהרה וקדושה — Words of unification, purification, and sanctification.
208. דו פרצופין — Dual aspects/faces.
209. דובב שפתי ישנים — Making the lips of the sleepers speak.
210. דודין תתאין — Lower beloved ones.
211. דחשיבי למבעי רחמי לכולי דרא — They are considered worthy of seeking mercy for the entire generation.
212. דידע למחרז וידע למקדש — Who knew how to compose verse and how to craft sacred words.
213. דיהיב חלישותא בשיפוהי דרתיכא — Causes weakness in the limbs of the Divine Chariot.
214. דיוטא זעירא — Smallest dimension/lowest level.
215. דיוקן נשמתו — Image of his soul.
216. דיוקן סבא קדישא — Image of the Holy Elder.
217. דיוקנא דזעיר — Image of Zeir Anpin.
218. דיוקנא דמלכא — Image of the King.
219. דיוקנאות — Soul images.
220. דיוקני הנשמות — Soul-images.
221. דיוקנים — Configurations.
222. דיוקנין דמלין דחכמתא — Images of matters of wisdom.
223. דין אשא דגרמי — Judgment of the fire of the bones.
224. דין הגבורה — Judgment of Gevurah.
225. דין הקבר — Judgment of the grave.
226. דינא דגרמי — Causative damages.
227. דינא דקברא — Judgment of the grave.
228. דינים החיצונים — External judgments.
229. דינים החצונים — External judgments.
230. דינים קדושים — Holy judgments.
231. דיקנא חיוורא — White Beard (a divine configuration in Kabbalah).
232. דיקנא יקירא דאריך — Precious beard of Arich Anpin.
233. דכדוכה של נפש — Crushing point of the soul.
234. דכר ונוקבא — Male and female (masculine and feminine spiritual principles).
235. דמותו של מעלה — His heavenly image.
236. דמים — Bloodguilt.
237. דמשתעי בלשון חכמת הנבואה — As expressed in the language of prophetic wisdom.
238. דרגא דאצטריך לאתקנא — Level which needs to be rectified.
239. דרגין דכורסייא — Levels of the Divine Throne.
240. דרועא דשמאלא — Left arm (kabbalistic reference to Gevurah).
241. דרועא וירכא וגופא — Arm, thigh, and body (kabbalistic references to divine attributes).
242. דררא דממונא — Monetary matters/financial obligations.
243. דשכינה קדמא ואתיא — For the Divine Presence precedes and arrives.
244. ה״א העליונה — Upper Hei.
245. ה״א עילאה — Upper Hei.
246. ה״א תתאה — Lower Hei.
247. הֶבֶל הַתִּנּוֹקוֹת — The breath of schoolchildren.
248. הִסְתּוֹפֵף — To be a doorkeeper.

249. הֵיכָל הַנֹּגַהּ — Palace of Brightness.
250. הַגִּתִּית — The Gittith.
251. הַגּוֹאֵל — The Redeemer.
252. הַחֲפֵצִים לְיִרְאָה אֶת שְׁמֶךָ — Who desire to fear Your name.
253. הַמַּלְאָךְ הַגּוֹאֵל — The Angel, the Redeemer.
254. הַשֹּׁמְרִים הַבְלֵי־שָׁוְא — Those who regard vain idols.
255. הָעֲרָעָר — The destitute/stripped bare.
256. האורים ותומים — Urim and Thummim.
257. האין העליון — The Supernal Nothingness.
258. האין סוף — The Ein Sof (Infinite One).
259. הבינה — Binah (Understanding).
260. הבל פה — Breath of the mouth.
261. הבל שיש בו חטא — Vanity that leads to sin.
262. הבל״א דגר״מי — Breath of the bones.
263. הבלא דגרמי — Vapor of the bones.
264. הגשימו — Materialized [God].
265. הוי״ה אהי״ה אדנו״ת — YHVH, Ehyeh, Adonut (Divine Names).
266. הוי״ה אחד ושמו אחד — The Lord is One and His Name is One.
267. הוי״ה בארבע גדפין אדנ״י — The Tetragrammaton with the four wings of Adonai.
268. הוי״ה ואדנ״ות — YHVH and ADNY (divine names).
269. הוי״ה ואדנ״י — YHVH and ADNY.
270. הוי״ה ואדנו״ת — YHVH and ADNY (divine names).
271. הוי״ה נקודה חולם — The divine name YHVH with the cholam vowel pointing.
272. הויה אהיה אדנות — YHVH, Ehyeh, Adonut (three divine names).
273. הויה ואדנות משולבים — YHVH and ADNY interwoven (combination of two divine names).
274. הויה חירק — YHVH with the chirik vowel point.
275. הויה נקודה סגול — The divine name YHVH with segol vowel points.
276. הויה נקודה שו״א — Divine name YHVH with sheva vowel pointing.
277. הויה קדושה — Holy existence.
278. הויות החסד — Divine Names of Mercy.
279. הויות הקדושות — Holy Divine Names.
280. הויות וכנוים — The Tetragrammaton and divine epithets.
281. הזלזלים — Tendrils (metaphorically referring to negative forces).
282. החום הטבעי — Natural heat.
283. החכמה סתימא עילאה — The supernal hidden Wisdom.
284. היחוד והברכה והקדושה — Unification, blessing, and holiness.
285. היחוד עליון — Supernal unification.
286. היכל אהבה — Palace of Love.
287. היכל החיצונים — Palace of the external forces.
288. היכל הרצון — Chamber of Will.
289. היכל לבנת הספיר — Palace of the Sapphire Brick.
290. היכל קדש הקדשים — Chamber of the Holy of Holies.
291. היכל שני של ההמורות — Second chamber of the Exchanges.
292. היכלות היצירה — Chambers of Formation.

293. היכלות התמורה — Palaces of exchange.
294. היכלות עליונות שבבריאה — Upper Palaces of the World of Creation.
295. היכלות רבתי והיכלות זוטרתי — Greater Palaces and Lesser Palaces (ancient mystical texts).
296. היכלות שביצירה — Palaces of the World of Formation.
297. היכלי הקדושה — Palaces of Holiness.
298. היכלי התמורות — Palaces of Exchange.
299. היסוד — Yesod (Foundation, the divine attribute of cosmic unity).
300. הכסאות עליונות — Supernal Thrones.
301. הכרת — Spiritual excision.
302. הכתר — Keter (Crown).
303. הלולא דאורייתא — Celebration of Torah.
304. המאציל העליון — The Supreme Emanator.
305. המבסם דיני גהינם — Sweetening the judgments of Gehenna.
306. המזבח יצרו — Sacrifices his evil inclination.
307. המזל עליון — The supreme destiny/mazal.
308. המחשבה העליונה — The supernal thought.
309. המחשבה התחתונה — The lower thought.
310. המיימינים והמשמאילים — Those on the right and those on the left.
311. המלאך והמזל והמשרת של היום — The angel, zodiac sign, and celestial minister of the day.
312. המלך הקדוש והמלך המשפט — The Holy King and the King of Judgment.
313. המלכין קדמאין — Primordial kings.
314. המענה ומסגף עצמו — One who afflicts and mortifies himself.
315. המפקיד נשמתו — One who entrusts/deposits their soul.
316. המרגלא — The mystical formula.
317. המשחיתים זרעם — Those who destroy their seed (reference to masturbation or spilling seed).
318. המתקת הדינים — Sweetening of judgments.
319. המתקת הדינין — Sweetening of judgments.
320. הנהגת הרחמים — Governance of Mercy.
321. הסלונות — Thorns (spiritual pathways that conduct impurity).
322. העדר קצתי — Partial absence.
323. העדר תכליתי — Complete absence.
324. העובר על מדותיו — One who overcomes his natural tendencies.
325. העשי״ן והלאוי״ן שבסמ״ג — The positive and negative commandments in the Semag.
326. הפנים העליונים — Supernal aspects/divine countenance.
327. הפראים — The wild ones (referring to certain spiritual entities).
328. הצדיק עליון — The Supernal Righteous One.
329. הצינורות עליונים — Supernal channels.
330. הציצו — Gazed improperly.
331. הקומה השלמה העליונה — The complete supernal structure (kabbalistic reference to the divine emanations).
332. הקליפה — Kelipah (negative spiritual shell/force).
333. הקליפות — Kelipot (negative forces/shells).
334. הקליר — Kallir.
335. הרהורין ומחשבתין דהבלי עלמא — Thoughts and contemplations of worldly vanities.

336. הרוחות פורחים — The spirits fly away (referring to harmful spiritual entities that scatter when mourners pause).
337. הרצון הקדמון — Primordial Will.
338. השושבין — The attendant (literally 'groomsman', mystically representing one who facilitates divine unions).
339. השכבה — Hashkavah (prayer for the repose of the soul).
340. השכל הפועל — Active Intellect.
341. השעשוע — Divine delight.
342. השרשת הגבורות — Embedding of the powers of judgment.
343. השתלשלות — Emanation/chain of transmission.
344. התבודדות — Hitbodedut (spiritual seclusion/isolation).
345. התעוררות התחתונים — Awakening from below.
346. התעוררות תחתון — Awakening from below.
347. התפשטות ווין — Extension of Vavs.
348. התרנגול הבר — The wild/celestial rooster.
349. התרת נדרים — Annulment of vows.
350. התרת קללות — Annulment of curses.
351. ו׳ קצוות — Six extremities.
352. וְאַנְוֵהוּ — And I will glorify Him.
353. וְהֶתָּחוֹלֵל — Wait patiently/be brought forth in birth pangs.
354. וְיִדְגּוּ לָרֹב — May they proliferate abundantly like fish.
355. וְעַל רֹאשִׁי שְׁכִינַת אֵל — And the Divine Presence above my head.
356. וְתָסֵךְ עָלֵימוֹ — And You will shelter them.
357. וידוי — Confession.
358. וַיִּנָּחֶם יְהוָה — And the LORD relented.
359. וַיָּרֶם קֶרֶן — He has raised up a horn.
360. וַתִּתְעַטֵּף — Is overwhelmed/enveloped.
361. ואתגלימו כדיוקנא דהוו בהאי עלמא — And they appear in the same form they had in this world.
362. ובנ״ה — And in Netzach and Hod.
363. והנה טוב מאד זה מות — 'And behold, it was very good'—this refers to death (rabbinic interpretation of Genesis 1:31).
364. וים עליון ישים כמרקחה — And will make the upper sea churn like a boiling pot.
365. וכפר — Make atonement.
366. ז׳ הבלים — Seven breaths/emanations.
367. ז׳ עיני ה׳ — Seven eyes of the Lord.
368. ז׳ צורות קדושות — Seven holy forms.
369. ז׳ שמות של אנא בכח — Seven names from the Ana Bekoach prayer.
370. זְבֶל קָדְשֶׁךָ — Your holy habitation.
371. זְרוֹעוֹת וְיַרְכִּין מִסִּטְרָא דִּקְדֻשָּׁה — Arms and thighs of the side of holiness.
372. זִבְחֵי צֶדֶק — Sacrifices of righteousness.
373. זווג הספירות — Union of the sefirot.
374. זווג העליון — Supernal union.
375. זווג תחתון — Earthly union.
376. זווגא דמטרוניתא — Union of the Divine Feminine.
377. זווגא דמלכא ומטרוניתא — Union of the King and Queen.

378. זווגא עילאה — Supernal union.
379. זיעת החיות — Sweat of the living creatures (mystical reference to the intense divine energy of angelic beings).
380. זכוכית לבנה — Clear glass.
381. זעיר אנפין — Zeir Anpin (the Lesser Countenance, a divine configuration).
382. זקוקין דנור ובעורין דאשא — Fiery sparks and burning flames.
383. זקן עליון — Supernal beard.
384. זרועות וירכין מסטרא דקדושה — Arms and thighs of the side of holiness.
385. זרקא — Zarka (a cantillation mark symbolizing ascent).
386. ח״ר ד״ל — Contends with and subdues.
387. חֶבְלֵי שְׁאוֹל — Cords of Sheol.
388. חֲדָלִי — My cessation/passing.
389. חֶזְיוֹן מַאֲמָרוֹ — Vision of His word.
390. חַבְלֵי מָשִׁיחַ — Birth pangs of the Messiah.
391. חָטָאתִי עָוִיתִי פָּשַׁעְתִּי — I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have rebelled.
392. חֹנֶה מַלְאַךְ־יְיָ — The angel of the LORD encamps.
393. חבוט הקבר — Chibut HaKever (Beating of the Grave).
394. חביבין יסורין — Sufferings are beloved (a rabbinic concept that afflictions have spiritual value).
395. חגר על סומא — A lame person upon a blind one.
396. חוט של חסד — Thread of divine kindness.
397. חוטמא עילאה — Chotma Ila'ah (Supernal Nose).
398. חומות ירושלים — Walls of Jerusalem.
399. חופות הצדיקים — Canopies of the righteous.
400. חותם המתהפך — Reversing seal.
401. חטא עון ופשע — Transgression, iniquity, and willful sin.
402. חיבוט הקבר — Chibut HaKever (Beating of the Grave).
403. חיה ויחידה — Chayah and yechidah (the fourth and fifth levels of the soul).
404. חיות דכורסייא — Beasts of the Throne (the four angelic beings supporting the Divine Throne).
405. חיות האצילות — Life-force of Atzilut (Emanation).
406. חיות הקדש — Holy Chayot.
407. חיזו דשכינתא — Vision of the Divine Presence.
408. חייתא עילאה קדישא — Holy supernal life-force.
409. חכמה תתאה — Lower Wisdom.
410. חכמת החבלה — Wisdom of Kabbalah (literally 'wisdom of the cable/bond').
411. חלב האם — Milk of the Mother (a kabbalistic term for the divine attribute of Binah/Understanding).
412. חלוץ עצמות — Resurrection of the bones.
413. חלוקא דרבנן — Chaluka D'Rabbanan (Scholarly Garment).
414. חליצות — Strengthening/revitalization.
415. חמה עזה — Intense judgment.
416. חמצו והשאור שבעסתו — His leaven and the sourdough in his dough.
417. חמרא דימא — Donkey of the sea (possibly referring to a sea creature or metaphorically to someone with limited understanding).
418. חמש גבורות שבבינה — Five powers of Binah.

419. חניקא כריכא בצואריה דשד — A noose wrapped around the neck of the demon.
420. חסד ואמת — Loving kindness and truth.
421. חסד שבגבורה — Kindness within strength.
422. חפיפת הביצים — Rubbing of eggs.
423. חצר מות — Court of Death.
424. חצרמות — Chatzarmaveth.
425. חקירה — Philosophical investigation.
426. חרב פיפיות — Double-edged sword (lit. 'sword of mouths').
427. חרכים — Lattices.
428. חרם דאשא דגרמי — Burning fire of the bones.
429. חשמל — Chashmal (divine luminous substance).
430. חתן עם כלתו — The bridegroom with his bride (mystical reference to divine unification).
431. ט׳ קבין — Nine kav.
432. טַל אוֹרוֹת — Dew of light.
433. טוֹב הַצָּפוּן — Hidden goodness.
434. טומאת אהל — Tent impurity.
435. טיול ושעשוע — Spiritual journeying and delight.
436. טל אורות עליונים — Supernal dew of lights.
437. טל התחיה — Dew of resurrection.
438. טל תחיית המתים — Dew of resurrection.
439. טפת הזכר וטפת הנקבה — Drop of the male and drop of the female.
440. י״ב אחד — The twelve [tribes] of 'One'.
441. י״ג מדות דאריך — Thirteen Attributes of Arikh Anpin.
442. י״ג מדות עליונות — Thirteen Supernal Attributes (of divine mercy).
443. י״ג שערים — Thirteen gates.
444. י״ג תקוני דיקנא דאריך — Thirteen rectifications of the beard of Arich Anpin.
445. י״ג תקוני דיקני — Thirteen rectifications of the beard.
446. יְכַהֵן — Adorns himself (with priestly connotations).
447. יְשׁוּעוֹת פָּנָיו — Salvation of His face/countenance.
448. יִחוּדְךָ — Your unity.
449. יִצְרִי — My inclination (particularly the evil inclination).
450. יְיַחֵד לְבָבֵנוּ — May our heart be unified.
451. יֵצֶר טוֹב עַל יֵצֶר הָרָע — Good inclination over evil inclination.
452. יַחֲלִין — Strengthen/invigorate.
453. יַעֲרֹף — Drop/drip.
454. יוֹרְדֵי בוֹר — Those who descend to the grave.
455. יאכ״ו — YAKH'U.
456. יגר שהדותא — Heap of witness.
457. ידו״ד אדנ״י — YHVH-ADNY.
458. יה״ו שבשם — The letters yod-hei-vav of the divine Name.
459. יהא שמיה רבא בעלמא די ברא כרעותיה — May His great Name be magnified in the world that He created according to His will.
460. יו״ד ה״א שבשם — The letters yod-hei of the divine Name.
461. יו״ד שבשם הקדוש — The letter yod of the holy Name.

462. יוֹנַת אִלֶּם רְחוֹקִים — A Silent Dove of Distant Places.
463. יובלא — Jubilee.
464. יומא דהלולא דעילאי — Wedding day of the supernal ones.
465. יורדי דומה — Those who descend to silence.
466. יזקוף עשר אצבעותיו — Raise his ten fingers.
467. יחוד ארבע אותיות השם — Unification of the four letters of the Divine Name.
468. יחוד הקדושה — Unification of holiness.
469. יחוד קב״ה ושכינתיה — Unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence.
470. יחוד קוב״ה ושכינתיה — Unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence.
471. יחוד קודשא בריך הוא ושכינתיה — Unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence.
472. יחוד שם שמים — Unification of the Divine Name.
473. יחוד תרין דודין עילאין — Unification of the two supernal beloveds.
474. יחוד תתחתון — Lower unification.
475. יחודא דקב״ה ושכינתיה — Unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence.
476. יחודי אהב״ה — Unifications of love.
477. יחודים ותקונים — Unifications and rectifications.
478. ייחודים — Unifications.
479. יין המשומר — Preserved wine (metaphor for spiritual reward in the World to Come).
480. יכוון — Should intend/focus intention.
481. יכוין — Direct one's intention/focus (kavvanah).
482. יכין לבעז — Jachin to Boaz (pillars of Solomon's Temple, representing cosmic balance).
483. ימי רע דיצה״ר — Evil days of the evil inclination.
484. ימין ושמאל — Right and Left (representing Mercy and Judgment).
485. ימינא עלאה — Supernal right.
486. יסורי אהבה — Afflictions of love.
487. יסורין ממרקין — Sufferings purify.
488. יסורין של אהבה — Afflictions of love.
489. יצרא דעבירה דאתלבן כתלגא חיוורא — Evil inclination that has been whitened like snow.
490. ירח מנחה מנוחה — Offers a pleasing sacrifice of rest.
491. ירכין עילאין — Supernal thighs.
492. יְשִׁיבָה הָעֶלְיוֹנָה — Supernal academy.
493. ישוב אל יי — Return to the LORD.
494. ישר הפוך ישר — Forward, reverse, forward.
495. ישראל זוטא — Lesser Israel.
496. יתקלס עילאה — The Most High will be praised.
497. י״ג מדות הרחמים — Thirteen Attributes of Mercy.
498. כְּבַלַּע — Being swallowed up/covered.
499. כִּסֵּא דִּין — Throne of judgment.
500. כִּסֵּא רַחֲמִים — Throne of mercy.
501. כַּפָּרָה — Atonement.
502. כָּרְסַיֵּהּ שְׁבִיבִין דִּי נוּר — His throne was fiery flames.
503. כָּרֵת — Spiritual excision.
504. כֹּפֶר — Ransom.

505. כּוֹס־יְשׁוּעוֹת — Cup of salvation.
506. כגירא בעיניה דשטנא — Like an arrow in Satan's eye (idiom for unnecessarily provoking evil forces).
507. כד אחשכת נהורא ואתדבקת בחויא — When the light darkens and cleaves to the serpent.
508. כוונה נאותה — Appropriate intention/kavvanah.
509. כוונות היחודים — Unification intentions.
510. כוונות עליונות — Higher intentions (kavvanot; mystical meditations).
511. כוונת הזווג — Intention for marital union.
512. כוונת היחוד — Intention of unification.
513. כוונתם — Their spiritual intentions/kavvanot.
514. כוז"ו במוכס"ז כוז"ו — KuZu BeMuKhSaZ KuZu (letter substitution of the Tetragrammaton).
515. כוין/לכוין — To focus, to direct one's intention (kavvanah).
516. כורסיה שביבין דנור — His throne of fiery flames.
517. כורסיין — Thrones.
518. כח הדין — Power of judgment.
519. כח החצונים — Power of the external forces.
520. כח הטומאה שלצד צפון — Power of impurity from the northern side.
521. כח הימין — Power of the right (associated with mercy and kindness in Kabbalah).
522. כח הצפוני — Power of the northern one.
523. כח חצוני — External force/power.
524. כחות הדינים — Forces of judgment.
525. כחות החיצונים — External forces (negative spiritual entities).
526. כחות החסדים — Forces of loving-kindness.
527. כחות החצונים — External forces (negative spiritual entities).
528. כחות הקטגוריא — Accusatory forces/powers of prosecution.
529. כחות משפיעים — Forces that bestow.
530. כחות קדושים מקבלים — Holy forces that receive.
531. כחות שנתלבשו בדין — Forces clothed in judgment.
532. כליותי — My kidneys (metaphorically: innermost thoughts and feelings).
533. כללות החסד שבמלכות אצילות — Totality of Chesed within Malkhut of Atzilut.
534. כמסוס נוסס — Like a melting standard (a banner or flag dissolving).
535. כמשחל ביניתא מחלבא — Like drawing a fish from milk.
536. כנסת ישראל — Congregation of Israel.
537. כנפי מצוה — Wings of a commandment.
538. כסאסא ליה לשבולתא — Like chaff adorns grain.
539. כעתר — Like a pitchfork (which turns things over, metaphor for transformative prayer).
540. כף הקלע — Hollow of a sling (form of spiritual punishment).
541. כפרת נפשו — Atonement of his soul.
542. כרוזא קרי ופס ידא כתבא — The herald proclaims and the writing hand writes.
543. כשאור שבעסה — As the leaven in the dough.
544. כתנות אור — Garments of light.
545. כתנות עור — Garments of skin (representing physical limitation).
546. כתר הרחמים — Crown of Mercy (highest divine attribute).
547. כתרי מלכא — Crowns of the King.

548. ל״ב נתיבות חכמה העליונה — Thirty-two paths of supernal wisdom.

549. לְהִשְׁתַּטֵּחַ — To prostrate oneself (specifically at a grave, a practice of visiting and praying at the graves of the righteous).

550. לְמַדְחֵפֹּת — To overthrow him.

551. לִפְדוּתְךָ סָבָרִית — For Your redemption I hope.

552. לִקְנֵי הַיָּמִין — At the end of the right hand.

553. לְתַקֵּן עוֹלָם בְּמַלְכוּת שַׁדַּי — To perfect the world under the kingdom of the Almighty.

554. לִוְיָתָן — Leviathan.

555. לִפְנִים מִשּׁוּרַת הַדִּין — Beyond the strict measure of judgment.

556. לִשְׁאוֹל — To Sheol (the grave/netherworld).

557. לַאו הַנִּתָּק לַעֲשֵׂה — Negative commandment remedied by a positive action.

558. לַעֲנָה וְרֹאשׁ — Wormwood and gall (bitter substances symbolizing suffering).

559. לָעוֹלָם הַבָּא — The World to Come.

560. לֹבֶן הָעֶלְיוֹן — Supernal Whiteness.

561. לט — Ladanum (aromatic resin).

562. לאתפוסי אדרא — To be a representative of the community.

563. לב נשבר ונדכה — Broken and contrite heart.

564. לבוש נשמתו — Garment of his soul.

565. לבוש עור הנחש — Garment of the serpent's skin.

566. לבושי הנשמות — Garments of souls.

567. לבושים ראשונים ושניים — First and second garments.

568. לבנון — Lebanon.

569. לברזיליה — To her mighty one (referring to Barzillai from the Bible).

570. להט החרב המתהפכת — Flame of the revolving sword.

571. להכניע החצוני — To subdue the external forces.

572. להפריח רוחות — To drive away spirits.

573. לובן העליון — Supernal whiteness.

574. לוז — Luz.

575. לזכות בהם את הרבים — To bring merit to the many.

576. ליחדא קב״ה עם שכינתיה — To unify the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence.

577. ליל החותם — Night of sealing.

578. למנצח בנגינותי — To the Chief Musician with my stringed instruments.

579. למען יופיע עליו מהודו — So that His splendor may shine upon him.

580. למתק כחות הדין — To sweeten the forces of judgment.

581. לעורר הזווג — To awaken the union.

582. לעת מצוא — At a favorable time.

583. לצד עלאה — Toward the supernal side.

584. לקשר מדת לילה ביום — To connect the attribute of night with day.

585. לשם יחוד ה׳ — For the sake of divine unification.

586. מ״ב שמהן — 42 divine names.

587. מ״ט מדרגות הטומאה — Forty-nine levels of impurity.

588. מ״ט שערי בינה — 49 gates of Understanding.

589. מ״ט שערי טהרה — Forty-nine gates of purity.

590. מְנַחֵם — Comforter.

591. מְעוֹן קָדְשֶׁךָ — Your holy dwelling place.
592. מְקוֹר חַיִּים — Fountain of life.
593. מְשִׁיחוֹ — His anointed one.
594. מְשׁוּבָתִי — My backsliding/apostasy.
595. מְתִיבָתֵי עִלָּאֵי — Supernal academies.
596. מְתִיבָתָא דִּרְקִיעָא — Heavenly academy.
597. מְתִיבוֹת — Heavenly academies.
598. מִגְדְּלוֹת מֻרְקָחִים — Towers of perfumes/aromatic preparations.
599. מִטָּתוֹ שֶׁלִּשְׁלֹמֹה — Solomon's bed.
600. מִימִינוֹ מִיכָאֵל מִשְּׂמֹאלוֹ וְגַבְרִיאֵל מִלְּפָנָיו רְפָאֵל מֵאֲחוֹרָיו נוֹרִיאֵל וְעַל רֹאשׁוֹ שְׁכִינַת אֵל — Michael on his right, Gabriel on his left, Raphael before him, Noriel behind him, and the Divine Presence above his head.
601. מִכְתָּם — Miktam.
602. מִמְּתֵי מֶחֱלָד — From men of the world/age.
603. מִפַּחַד בַּלֵּילוֹת — Because of fear in the nights.
604. מִצְחָא עִלָּאָה — Supernal Forehead.
605. מַזָּלִי — My fortune/destiny.
606. מַלְאֲכֵי חֶסֶד — Angels of loving-kindness.
607. מַלְאֲכֵי חֶסֶד — Angels of loving-kindness.
608. מַלְאֲכֵי רַחֲמִים — Angels of mercy.
609. מַלְכִּי צֶדֶק — Melchizedek.
610. מַעֲלָם — Their unfaithfulness/trespass.
611. מַעְיְנֵי הַיְשׁוּעָה — Wells of salvation.
612. מַצְדִּיקֵי הָרַבִּים — Those who turn many to righteousness.
613. מַרְפֵּא בִּכְנָפֶיהָ — Healing in His wings.
614. מַשְׂכִּיל — Maskil.
615. מָארֵי מְתִיבָתָן — Masters of the academies (heavenly yeshivot).
616. מָעוֹג — Mocking feast, mockery.
617. מָרוֹם — From on high.
618. מֹטוֹת עֻלָּם — Bars of their yoke (the wooden crosspieces of an animal's yoke).
619. מאור המלכות — Light of Malkhut (Kingdom).
620. מאורי אור — Luminaries of light.
621. מאורי האש — Luminaries of fire.
622. מאן דתקיף ליה עלמא טובא — One whom the world greatly oppresses.
623. מארי דברית — Masters of the covenant.
624. מארי דיבבא — Wailing-masters (masters of wailing).
625. מארי דיללה — Howling-masters (masters of howling).
626. מארי דצוארי — Masters of the neck.
627. מארי דקלין — Masters of voices.
628. מארי תריסין — Shield-bearers (masters of shields).
629. מאריך אנפין — Arich Anpin (Long Face).
630. מבסם הנהגת הדין — Sweetening the governance of judgment.
631. מגו עקו ותבירא דלבא — From distress and brokenness of heart.
632. מגלגלים חובה על ידי חייב — Brings about guilt through the guilty.

633. מדא ועטופא דמצוה ודקדושה — Garment and wrapping of commandment and holiness.
634. מדה״ד הקשה — Harsh judgment (the severe aspect of divine judgment).
635. מדה״ד הרפה — Mild judgment (the lenient aspect of divine judgment).
636. מדורות שבגיהנם — Chambers of Gehenna.
637. מדורי העשיה — Dwelling places of Asiyah (Action).
638. מדורין בסוד העשיה רוחניותי — Dwellings of the spiritual realm of Asiyah.
639. מדות העליונות — Supernal attributes.
640. מדרש הנעלם — Midrash HaNe'elam (Hidden Midrash).
641. מדת הוד — Attribute of Hod.
642. מדת החסד — Attribute of Loving-kindness.
643. מדת המלכות — Attribute of Malkhut.
644. מדת הרחמים — Attribute of mercy.
645. מהלאל — Mahalalel.
646. מוֹפֵת — Wonder, portent, sign.
647. מוֹרֶה — Early rain.
648. מוּסַר שְׁלוֹמֵנוּ — Chastisement for our peace.
649. מוחא סתימא — Mocha Stima (Concealed Brain).
650. מוחין דלגאו — Inner minds/consciousness.
651. מוצא נשמה רוח ונפש — Origin of neshamah, ruach, and nefesh.
652. מותנא תניינא — Secondary death.
653. מזבח העליון — Supernal altar.
654. מזהרא עילאה — Supernal radiance (divine light that clothes purified souls).
655. מזלא עילאה — Supernal mazal (celestial influence).
656. מזלו של אדם — A person's mazal (spiritual destiny/fortune).
657. מזליה שברקיע — Celestial guardian angel/spiritual source in the firmament.
658. מחבלא דנבל שמיה — The destroyer whose name is Naval (vile).
659. מחוי במחוג — Makes indications with a compass.
660. מחזור המאור הקטן — Cycle of the lesser luminary (monthly cycle of the moon).
661. מחיצתו — His partition (in the afterlife).
662. מחנות ומרכבות עליונות — Celestial camps and chariots.
663. מחצד״י חקל״א קדישא — Reapers of the holy field.
664. מחצדי חקלא עילאה — Reapers of the supernal field.
665. מטטרו״ן שר הפנים — Metatron, Prince of the Presence.
666. מטטרון שר הפנים — Metatron, Prince of the Divine Presence.
667. מטל חלקו — The dew of his portion.
668. מיין דכורין — Masculine waters.
669. מיין נוקבין — Feminine waters.
670. מילוי שם הוי״ה באלפין — Expanded divine name YHVH spelled with alephs.
671. מיעוט הירח — Diminishment of the moon.
672. מירוק הזוהמא — Purification of spiritual defilement.
673. מיתוק הדינים — Sweetening of judgments.
674. מיתוק לדינין — Sweetening of judgments.
675. מיתת נשיקה — Death by divine kiss.
676. מיתתה על פי ה׳ — Death by the mouth of the Lord.

677. מכון הר ציון — Foundation of Mount Zion.
678. מכח החצוני — From external forces.
679. מלאך מזלו — Guardian angel.
680. מלאכי חבלה — Angels of destruction.
681. מלה — Word (referring to the Divine Feminine/Malkhut).
682. מלכא סבא — Ancient King.
683. מלכות אדנ״י — Malkhut/Adnut (Kingdom, the lowest divine sefirah associated with the divine name Adonai).
684. מלכות אם כל הנשמות — Malkhut, mother of all souls.
685. מלכות ש״ן ב״ת — Malkhut which is Shin Bat (Kingdom as Daughter).
686. מלכות שמים — Kingdom of Heaven (Malkhut).
687. מלכות ת״ת בינה — Malkhut, Tiferet, and Binah (three divine sefirot/emanations).
688. ממונה דקאים לסטר דרום — The appointed angel who stands to the south.
689. ממצדיקי הרבים — Those who bring merit to the many.
690. מנהג ותיקין — Custom of the pious elders (a category of custom with special halakhic weight).
691. מנהרי אפרסמונא דכיא — Rivers of pure balsam oil.
692. מנוחה לעצם של התחיה — Rest for the bone of resurrection.
693. מנוחות שאננות — Tranquil resting places.
694. מניה וביה אבא ליזיל ביה נרגא — From itself comes the ax handle [to fell the tree].
695. מנעימותא עילאה — Supernal pleasantness.
696. מס׳ שמחות — Masechet Semachot.
697. מסטין — Prosecutor/accuser.
698. מסטרא דנוקבא — From the feminine aspect (associated with judgment in Kabbalah).
699. מסטרא דשמאלא — From the left side (the side of judgment in Kabbalistic thought).
700. מסיומא דגופא — Conclusion of the body.
701. מסכת שמחות — Tractate Semachot (a rabbinic text on mourning practices).
702. מעבר י״בק — Crossing of the Yabok.
703. מעבר יבק — Crossing of the Yabok.
704. מעבר יב״ק — Crossing of the Jabbok.
705. מעילה — Misappropriation of sacred property.
706. מעילות — Misappropriation of sacred property.
707. מעירי שחר — Illuminators of Dawn.
708. מעכב עבידתא דקב״ה מלמעבד — Impedes the work of the Holy One, blessed be He, from being accomplished.
709. מעלמא דאתגליא — From the revealed world.
710. מעלמא דאתכסיא — From the concealed world.
711. מעלמא דנוקבא — From the feminine realm.
712. מעמד ומושב — Standing and sitting ceremony.
713. מעמדות ומושבות — Standings and sittings (ceremonial practices during mourning).
714. מעשה מרכבה — Work of the Chariot (esoteric mystical studies based on Ezekiel's vision).
715. מפי גבורה — From the mouth of Power (divine source).
716. מצח הרצון — Forehead of Will (kabbalistic reference to divine intention).
717. מקדש י״ה — Sanctuary of Yah (referring to the biblical canon).
718. מקום — Place.

719. מקור מעין העליון — Source of the supernal spring.
720. מקטרגים — Accusers (spiritual prosecutors who bring attention to a person's sins).
721. מקצין בנטיעות — Cutting the plantings (severing divine unity).
722. מראות נגעים — Appearances of afflictions.
723. מרבות — Aravot (the highest of the seven heavens).
724. מרהב — Rahab.
725. מרכבה ליצר הרע — Vehicle for the evil inclination.
726. מרכבה למלוים עליונים — Vehicle for the supernal escorts (mystical concept where humans below mirror and channel heavenly forces).
727. מרכבה לשכינה — Chariot for the Divine Presence.
728. מרכבה מרקדה — Dancing chariot (mystical reference to divine manifestation).
729. מרכבותיה — Its chariots (vehicles for divine influence).
730. מרכבת האבות — The chariot of the Patriarchs.
731. מרשו״ת לרשו״ת — From domain to domain.
732. משיח בן דוד — Messiah son of David.
733. משיח בן יוסף — Messiah son of Joseph.
734. משיחת״א קדישא דאורייתא — Holy anointing of the Torah.
735. משכיות האורה — Chambers of light.
736. משלחת מלאכי רעים — Company of evil angels.
737. משם של מ״ב — From the 42-letter Name.
738. מת מצוה — Unattended corpse that requires immediate burial.
739. מתחרה עם יצרו — Contends with his evil inclination.
740. מתיבתא דיליה לקבל מתיבתא עילאה — His academy corresponds to the supernal academy.
741. מתיבתא דרקיעא — Heavenly academy.
742. מתיבתאן עילאין — Heavenly academies.
743. מתמתקים כחות הדין — The forces of judgment are sweetened.
744. נְהַר דִּי נוּר — River of fire.
745. נְכֹאת — Gum (aromatic substance).
746. נְפוּגוֹתַי — I am numb, benumbed, grown cold.
747. נְשִׁיקָה — Divine kiss.
748. נְשָׁמָה — Neshamah (highest level of soul).
749. נְשָׁמוֹת שֶׁנִּתְאַחֲדוּ — Souls that have united.
750. נִבְזֶה בְּעֵינָיו נִמְאָס — In whose eyes a contemptible person is despised.
751. נִשְׁבַּע לְהָרַע וְלֹא יָמֵר — Swears to his own detriment and does not change.
752. נִשְׁמָתִי — My neshamah (higher soul).
753. נִשְׁמָתוֹ — His neshamah (higher soul).
754. נָכִים — Attackers, smiters.
755. נַחֲלֵי דְאֲפַרְסְמוֹנָא דַכְיָא — Rivers of pure balsam oil.
756. נַחֲלַת גּוֹיִם — Inheritance of the nations.
757. נַחַל עֲדָנָיו — Stream of His delights.
758. נַפְשֵׁנוּ כְּצִפּוֹר נִמְלְטָה — Our soul has escaped like a bird.
759. נַפְשׁוֹ — His nefesh (vital soul).
760. נָטָף וּשְׁחֵלֶת וְחֶלְבְּנָה — Stacte, onycha, and galbanum.
761. נֹגְשֶׂיךָ — Your taskmasters.

762. נִפְּשׁ עֲלִיָּתוֹ — Breath of his ascension.
763. נאצלות — Emanate.
764. נביעו דדכורא — Masculine flow.
765. נגידי התלי — Rulers of the Dragon's Head.
766. נהירו דעתיקא — Light of the Ancient One.
767. נהר דינור — River of Fire.
768. נהרי דאפרסמונא דכיא — Rivers of pure balsam oil.
769. נוֹעַם יְדִידוּתֶיךָ — Pleasantness of Your beloved presence.
770. נובלות חכמה — Fallen fruit of wisdom.
771. נובלת החכמה — Fallen fruit of wisdom.
772. נובלת חכמה של מעלה — Fallen fruit of supernal wisdom.
773. נוה אפריון — Pavilion of royalty.
774. נוקבא דתהומא רבה — Great abyss (where negative forces are banished).
775. נוקביה דזעיר — Feminine aspect of Zeir Anpin.
776. נותר — Notar.
777. נחל עדניך — River of Your delights.
778. נחלה בלא מצרים — Inheritance without boundaries.
779. נחש עקלתון — Twisted serpent (a reference to the primordial serpent).
780. ניצוץ השכינה — Spark of the Divine Presence.
781. ניצוצות נשמת — Soul-sparks (mystical concept of divine soul fragments).
782. נעוץ סופם בתחלתם — Their end is wedged in their beginning.
783. נפילת אפים — Nefilat Apayim (falling on one's face).
784. נפש הבהמית — Animal soul.
785. נפש החיונית — Vital life-force.
786. נפש המרגשת — Sensing nefesh.
787. נפש העולם — World-Soul.
788. נפש יתירה — Additional soul.
789. נפש רוח ונשמה — Soul, spirit, and higher soul (the three levels of the soul in Kabbalah).
790. נפש רוח נשמה חיה יחידה — The five levels of the soul (Nefesh, Ruach, Neshamah, Chayah, Yechidah).
791. נפשא ורוחא ונשמתא — Nefesh, ruach, and neshamah.
792. נפשה — Nefesh (vital soul, the lowest level of the soul).
793. נפשו רוחו ונשמתו — His soul, spirit, and higher soul (the three primary levels of the soul in Kabbalah).
794. נפשי — My nefesh (vital soul).
795. נצוץ נשמת — Spark of the soul.
796. נצוצות הקדושה — Sparks of holiness.
797. נצוצות נשמותם — Sparks of their souls.
798. נצוצי נשמותיהם — Sparks of their souls.
799. נצח הוד יסוד — Netzach, Hod, and Yesod (Victory, Splendor, and Foundation).
800. נקודה סתומה — Hidden point.
801. נקודה תחתונה — Lower point.
802. נקודת ציון — Point of Zion.
803. נרתק של קדושה — Vessel of holiness.

804. נרתקן — Their sheath/vessel.
805. נשיבו רוחא דחיי — Breathing of the spirit of life.
806. נשיקות — Kisses (mystical union of spirits).
807. נשיקין דרוחא ברוחא — Kisses of spirit with spirit.
808. נשך ותרבית — Interest and excessive profit.
809. נשמה יתירה — Additional soul (received on Sabbaths and festivals).
810. נשמה ממושכנת — Pledged soul (referring to the soul's reluctant descent into the physical world).
811. נשמה רוח נפש — Neshamah, ruach, nefesh (the three components of the soul).
812. נשמות ישראל ממחצב א׳ — Souls of Israel from one source.
813. נשמות יתרות — Additional souls.
814. נשמת האצילות — Nishmat ha-Atzilut (Soul of Emanation).
815. נשמתא לנשמתא — Soul of the soul.
816. נשמתו ורוחו ונפשו — His neshamah, ruach, and nefesh (soul components).
817. נשמתו של עולם — Soul of the World.
818. נשמתי — My neshamah (highest level of soul).
819. ס״מ ולילית — Samael and Lilith (names of negative spiritual entities in Jewish mysticism).
820. סְפִירָן — Sefirot (divine emanations).
821. סִטְרָא אָחֳרָא — The Other Side.
822. סֶלָה — Selah.
823. סדר המעמדות — Order of Ma'amadot.
824. סדר הקומה השלימה — Order of the complete divine structure.
825. סוֹד יְיָ — The secret counsel of the LORD.
826. סוד הנר — The mystery of the lamp.
827. סוד העפר — Mystery of earth.
828. סוד הקטלנית — Secret of the 'killer wife'.
829. סוד השערות — Mystery of the hairs.
830. סוד נקודה האמצעית — The secret of the central point.
831. סוכת דוד הנופלת — The fallen booth of David.
832. סטר גבורה — Side of Gevurah (the divine attribute of Strength/Judgment in Kabbalah).
833. סטרא אחרא — Sitra Achra (the Other Side).
834. סטרא בישא — Evil side.
835. סטרא דמסאבא — Side of impurity.
836. סטרא דמסאבותא — Side of impurity.
837. סלה — Selah (musical direction or pause for reflection).
838. סמאל — Samael (angelic figure associated with accusation and death).
839. סנדלפון — Sandalfon.
840. סעודי דמהימנותא קדישא — Meals of holy faith.
841. ספיחי ספיחים — Aftergrowths of aftergrowths.
842. ספירה — Divine emanation.
843. ספירות הבנין — Sefirot of construction.
844. ספירות העליונות — Higher sefirot (divine emanations).
845. ספר יצירה — Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation).
846. ספר פרדס — Sefer Pardes (Book of Pardes).

847. ספרא דצניעותא — Safra D'Tzniuta (Book of Concealment).
848. סתימא דכל סתימין — Most Hidden of all Hidden Ones.
849. סתרי תורה — Secrets of Torah (mystical teachings).
850. ס״מ — Samael.
851. ע״א ג״ע וש״ד — Idolatry, forbidden sexual relations, and bloodshed.
852. ע״ב גשרי החסד — Seventy-two bridges of kindness.
853. ע״ב שמות — 72 divine names.
854. ע״דן נ״הר ג״ן — Eden, River, Garden (kabbalistic reference to spiritual dimensions of Sabbath meals).
855. עֲמִידָתָם — Their rising/resurrection.
856. עֲרָבוֹת — Aravot.
857. עִמְקֵי סוֹדֶךָ — The depths of Your mysteries.
858. עֵמֶק הַבָּכָא — Valley of Baca.
859. עַיִן טוֹבָה — Good eye.
860. עַל מוּת — Unto death.
861. עַלְמִין דְּחֶבסוּפָא וְרָצוֹן — Worlds of longing and favor.
862. עַשְׁתְּרֹת צֹאנֶךָ — Offspring of your flock.
863. עַתִּיק יוֹמִין — Ancient of Days.
864. עַתִּיקָא קַדִּישָׁא — Holy Ancient One.
865. עָזִּי וְזִמְרָת יָהּ — My strength and song is the LORD.
866. עָרַב — Be a guarantor/surety.
867. עָשְׁשָׁה בְכַעַס עֵינִי — My eye is wasted from grief.
868. עָזִּי וְזִמְרָת יָהּ — My strength and song is the LORD.
869. עבירה לשמה — A transgression for the sake of Heaven.
870. עגלה ערופה — Heifer whose neck is broken.
871. עדן ועדנה — Eden and Ednah.
872. עדן עילאה — Eden Ila'ah (Upper Eden).
873. עדן תתאה — Eden Tata'ah (Lower Eden).
874. עובדא דינוקא — Story of the child (a narrative in the Zohar).
875. עולם האופנים — World of the Ophanim (Wheels, a category of angels).
876. עולם האצילות — World of Atzilut/Emanation (the highest of four kabbalistic worlds).
877. עולם הבריאה — World of Creation.
878. עולם הזכר — Olam ha-Zachar (Masculine World).
879. עולם היצירה — World of Yetzirah/Formation (the second-lowest of four kabbalistic worlds).
880. עולם הכסא — World of the Throne (Beriah, the third of four kabbalistic worlds).
881. עולם הנקבה — Olam ha-Nekevah (Feminine World).
882. עולם הנקביי — Feminine world.
883. עולם הנקודות — World of Points.
884. עולם הנשמות — World of Souls.
885. עולם העשיה — World of Action (Asiyah).
886. עולם השכל — World of intellect (the spiritual realm after death).
887. עולם התהו׳ — World of Chaos.
888. עולם התמורה והכליון — World of exchange and destruction.
889. עולם שכלו שבת — A world that is entirely Sabbath.

890. עולמות — Worlds.
891. עולמתא שפירתא דלית לה עיינין — A beautiful maiden without eyes.
892. עוף בלתי טהור — Impure bird (metaphor for harmful spiritual forces).
893. עטרין — Crowns (divine emanations).
894. עילאי ותתאי — Upper and lower realms.
895. עילת העילות — Cause of all causes.
896. עין יצרו — Eye of his inclination.
897. עינא אחרא דפגעא — Harmful "evil eye".
898. עינא פקיחא — Watchful Eye (a kabbalistic term for divine providence).
899. עינין דמתלהטן — Flaming Eyes (a kabbalistic reference to divine judgment).
900. עיר וקדיש — City and holy one.
901. עכנא דמערתא — Snake of the cave.
902. עלמא דדכורא — Masculine realm.
903. עלמא סתימא — Concealed realm.
904. עלמין דכסופא — Worlds of divine delight.
905. עלת העלות — Cause of all Causes (a kabbalistic term for God).
906. עמוד האמצעי — Central pillar.
907. עמודא דאמציעתא — Central column.
908. עמודא דאמצעיתא — Central column (the middle sefirot in the kabbalistic tree, especially Tiferet).
909. עמודא דנורא — Amuda D'Nura (Pillar of Fire).
910. עמודים סמכין דעלמא — Pillars supporting the world.
911. עץ הדעת טוב ורע — Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.
912. עצבונ״א דבשר״א — Distress of the flesh.
913. עצבונא דבישרא — Sadness/pain of the flesh.
914. עצבונא דבשרא — Distress of the flesh.
915. ערי הרכב — Cities of the chariots (metaphor for celestial realms).
916. ערקתא דמסאנא — Strap of the sandal (reference to the chalitzah ritual of transferring rights).
917. עש״ן תג״ל — Smoke shall rejoice.
918. עשייה רוחניות — Spiritual realm of Asiyah (the lowest of four kabbalistic worlds).
919. עשר כתרין תתאין — Ten lower crowns.
920. עשר נצוצות — Ten sparks.
921. עשר ספירות — Ten sefirot.
922. עשר ספירן — Ten sefirot (divine emanations).
923. עשרה שליטים העליונים — Ten supernal rulers.
924. עתיק יומיא — Ancient of Days.
925. עתיקא דעתיקין — Ancient of Ancients (divine configuration).
926. עתיקא קדישא — Holy Ancient One.
927. עתר ענן הקטרת — Cloud of Incense Prayer.
928. פְּלֵטַת גּוֹלַת אֲרִיאֵל — Remnant of the exiled Ariel.
929. פְּקֻדָּתֵךְ — Your overseers.
930. פֶּן־אִישַׁן הַמָּוֶת — Lest I sleep the sleep of death.
931. פַּמִּילְיָאי עִלָּאי — Heavenly/upper hosts.
932. פַּמִּילְיָאי תַּתָּאי — Earthly/lower hosts.

933. פָּדִיתָ אוֹתִי יְיָ אֵל אֱמֶת — You have redeemed me, O LORD, God of truth.
934. פגול — Pigul.
935. פורענות המת — Punishment of the dead.
936. פחד יצחק — Pachad Yitzchak (Fear of Isaac, a kabbalistic reference to the divine attribute of Gevurah/Judgment).
937. פטום הקטרת — Preparation of the Incense.
938. פליטת הגלגל — Escape of the wheel.
939. פלפול — Sharp discourse/dialectical reasoning.
940. פמליא של מעלה — Heavenly host/celestial retinue.
941. פן אדם שבמרכבה — Human face of the divine chariot.
942. פני אריה — Face of the lion.
943. פני מטרונה — Face of the Matronita (Divine Feminine).
944. פנים המנהגים — Governing faces.
945. פנימיות הספירות — Inner aspects of the Sefirot.
946. פסוקי היחוד — Verses of unification.
947. פקדונא דמריה — Deposit from her Master.
948. פקח — Open (with kabbalistic numerical significance).
949. פרגוד — The heavenly curtain (separating divine realms).
950. פרונקא דמלאכא דמותא — Messenger of the Angel of Death.
951. פרקי היכלות — Chapters of the Heavenly Palaces (mystical text).
952. פשיטת הלבוש החומר — Removal of the material garment (metaphor for death).
953. פשעים — Transgressions.
954. צְבָאִי — My appointed time/service.
955. צְרוֹר הַחַיִּים — The bond of life.
956. צדוק הַדִּין — Justification of Divine Judgment.
957. צִיִּים — Desert dwellers.
958. צַחְצָחוֹת — Clear radiance (a term from Isaiah 58:11 referring to divine satisfaction).
959. צד״ק וצדק״ה — Tzedek and Tzedakah (divine aspects of justice and charity).
960. צדוק הדין — Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment).
961. צדיק וצדק — Righteous One and Righteousness (Yesod and Malkhut in Kabbalah).
962. צדיק חי עלמא — Righteous One, Life of the World.
963. צדיק חי עלמין — The Righteous One, Life of the Worlds (the sefirah of Yesod).
964. צדיק יסוד עולם — The righteous person, foundation of the world (a reference to the sefirah of Yesod).
965. צדיק עילאה — Supernal Righteous One.
966. צדק אימא תתאה — Tzedek, the lower Mother.
967. צדק ושלום — Righteousness and peace.
968. צוּר מָעוֹן — Rock of habitation.
969. צואה רותחת — Boiling excrement (a metaphorical description of a level in Gehenna).
970. צוותה על המתים — Commandment regarding the dead.
971. צחצחות — Spiritual radiances.
972. צידוק הדין — Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment).
973. צינורות הקדושה — Channels of holiness.
974. ציפרא קדישא — Holy bird.

975. ציקי קדירה — Residue of the pot.
976. צירופי אלהים — Permutations of Elohim.
977. צלם העליון — Supernal image/divine image.
978. צלם של מעלה — Supernal image (divine form in which humans are created).
979. צלם תחתון — Lower image.
980. צלמות — Tzalmavet (shadow of death).
981. צנור הנעלם — Hidden channel (mystical pathway between divine emanations).
982. צנורות ההשפעה — Channels of divine influence.
983. צנורות עליונות — Supernal channels.
984. צנורות של מעלה — Supernal channels.
985. צפרין דמקננן — Nesting birds.
986. צרופי הוי״ה — Permutations of the Divine Name YHVH.
987. צרופים — Tzerufim (letter combinations).
988. צרור החיים — Bond of life.
989. צרור עליון — Supernal bond (the highest level where souls are bound to divine life).
990. צרורא דחיי — Bond of Life.
991. צרעת — Leprosy (metaphorically representing spiritual impurity).
992. קְטֹרֶת הַסַּמִּים — Incense of spices.
993. קְטוֹרֶת — Incense.
994. קְטֹרֶת הַסַּמִּים — Aromatic incense.
995. קֵץ הַחַיִּים — End of days.
996. קֶטֶב יָשׁוּד צָהֳרָיִם — Destruction that ravages at noon.
997. קֶרִי — Chance/happenstance.
998. קֶרֶן יִשְׁעִי — Horn of my salvation.
999. קָרְבָּן עוֹלָה וְיוֹרֵד — Sliding-scale offering.
1000. קבר התהום — Grave of the abyss.
1001. קבר עליון — Celestial grave.
1002. קדמונו של עולם — The Ancient One of the world.
1003. קו האמצעי — Middle pillar.
1004. קו השוה — Alignment of cosmic forces.
1005. קומת הקדושה — Divine structure.
1006. קוצו של יו״ד — Point of the Yod (smallest element of the divine name).
1007. קושט הכלה — Adorning the bride.
1008. קטגורא — Accusation/prosecution (in the heavenly court).
1009. קטרוג החצונים — Accusations of the external forces.
1010. קליפה הנקרא נגה — Kelipah called Nogah.
1011. קליפין — Husks/shells (negative spiritual forces that conceal divine light).
1012. קליפת החמור — The donkey's shell (negative force).
1013. קליפת נוגה — Kelipat Nogah (translucent shell).
1014. קנין סודר — Kinyan sudar (acquisition through a garment).
1015. קרבן תענית — Sacrifice of Fasting.
1016. קרי כתיב — Keri-ketiv (read but written differently).
1017. קריינא דאגרתא איהו ליהוי פרונקא — The bearer of the letter should be its deliverer.
1018. קרן ופירות — Principal and fruits.

1019. קרקע ערבות — Ground of Aravot (mystical celestial realm).
1020. קשה רימה למת — The worm is painful to the dead.
1021. קשוטי התחתונים — Adornments of those below.
1022. קשוטיה — Its adornments (spiritual embellishments).
1023. קשוטים — Kishutim (spiritual adornments).
1024. ר״מ פרשת בהר סיני — Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Behar Sinai.
1025. רְפָאִים — Shades/spirits of the dead.
1026. רֵאשִׁית חָכְמָה יִרְאַת יְיָ — The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom.
1027. רֵיחַ נִיחוֹחַ — Pleasing fragrance.
1028. רַמ״ח אֵבָרִים וְשַׁסַ״ה גִּידִים — 248 limbs and 365 sinews.
1029. רְקַמְתָּנִי — I was woven together.
1030. ראשי המשחית — Heads of the destroyer.
1031. רבנן סבוראי — Rabbanan Savorai (post-Talmudic sages).
1032. רוּחוֹ — His ruach (spirit).
1033. רוח הטומאה מצד הנחש — The spirit of impurity from the serpent.
1034. רוח משפט — Spirit of judgment.
1035. רוח נשברה — Broken spirit.
1036. רוח פסקונית — Decisive spirit.
1037. רוחא דמסאבא — Spirit of impurity.
1038. רוחו של עולם — World-Spirit.
1039. רוחות פורחות — Flying spirits (a category of harmful spiritual entities).
1040. רוחי — My ruach (spirit, middle level of soul).
1041. רוכב ערבות — Rider of Aravot (highest heaven).
1042. רומחי הגבורה — Spears of Gevurah (Strength/Judgment).
1043. רזי התורה הקדומה — Mysteries of the primordial Torah.
1044. רזין דאורייתא — Secrets of the Torah.
1045. רחובות הנהר — The expanses of the river.
1046. רחיצה הגדולה — The great washing ritual.
1047. רחל — Rachel (representing the lower aspect of the Divine Feminine).
1048. ריעין ודודין — Companions and lovers.
1049. רישא איוורא — White Head.
1050. רישא דא״א — Reisha d'Arich Anpin (Head of the Long Face).
1051. רישא חיוורא — White Head.
1052. רישא עילאה חיוורא — Reisha Ila'ah Chivra (Supernal White Head).
1053. ריתחא — Divine anger/time of judgment.
1054. רל״א שערים — 231 gates.
1055. רמ״ח אברי הקומה העליונה — 248 limbs of the supernal structure.
1056. רמ״ח כחות זכרים ברמ״ח נקבות — 248 masculine powers with 248 feminine powers.
1057. רעוא עילאה — Supreme will.
1058. רעוא עלאה — Supernal will.
1059. רעותא דלבא — Desire/will of the heart.
1060. רעותא עילאה — Supernal will.
1061. רעותין — Desires (divine will-forces).
1062. רעיא מהימנא — Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd, a section of the Zohar).

1063. רעיה תמה — Perfect shepherd (feminine).
1064. רעים דלא מתפרשן לעלמין — Friends who never separate.
1065. רצוא ושוב — Running and returning (mystical concept of spiritual oscillation).
1066. רקיע ערבות העליון — Firmament of the supernal Aravot.
1067. רתיכא עילאה קדישא — Holy supernal chariot.
1068. שְׁאוֹר שֶׁבָּעִיסָה — Leaven in the dough.
1069. שְׁגַר אֶלָּפֶיךָ — Increase of your cattle.
1070. שְׁכִינָתֶךָ — Your Divine Presence.
1071. שְׁלֹשׁ עֶשְׂרֵה מִדּוֹתֶיךָ — Your Thirteen Attributes [of Mercy].
1072. שְׂרָפִים — Seraphim.
1073. שִׁיר שֶׁל פְּגָעִים — Song of Afflictions/Demons.
1074. שֶׁבַע כִּתּוֹת שֶׁל צַדִּיקִים וַחֲסִידִים — Seven classes of righteous and pious ones.
1075. שֶׁמֶשׁ צְדָקָה — Sun of Righteousness.
1076. שַׁחַת — The pit.
1077. שַׁלְהֶבֶתְיָה — Divine flame/flame of the LORD.
1078. שַׁעֲרֵי חֶסֶד — Gates of loving-kindness.
1079. שַׁעֲרֵי יְרוּשָׁלַיִם — Gates of Jerusalem.
1080. שַׁעֲרֵי מָוֶת — Gates of death.
1081. שַׂרְעַפַּי — My anxious thoughts.
1082. שַׂרְעַפָּי — My anxious thoughts.
1083. שָׁלוֹם מְנוּחָתִי — My peaceful rest.
1084. שִׂטְנֵי נַפְשִׁי — Adversaries of my soul.
1085. שׁוֹכְנֵי עָפָר — Dwellers in the dust.
1086. שאול — Sheol.
1087. שאור שבעיסה — Leaven in the dough.
1088. שאיבת מוחא לכלא — Death draws everything to itself.
1089. שבולת הזקן — Flowing locks of the beard.
1090. שבילי דנהרדיעה — Pathways of Nehardea.
1091. שבירת כלים — Breaking of the Vessels.
1092. שבע קצוות — Seven extremities.
1093. שבעה הבלים — Seven breaths/emanations.
1094. שבעים שרים — Seventy celestial princes.
1095. שבקית ופטרית — I abandoned and dismissed.
1096. שוברות המזל — Break through astrological destiny.
1097. שודא דמחצדא חקלא — Casting the harvested field.
1098. שולמית — Shulamite (metaphor for the soul).
1099. שומרי הבית — Keepers of the house.
1100. שושבין המיחד — The unifying Attendant.
1101. שושבינא דמטרוניתא — Attendant of the Divine Presence (Matronita).
1102. שחת טמא — Impure destruction.
1103. שיפין — Limbs (both physical and mystical/cosmic).
1104. שיר של מ״ה — Song of MA”H (refers to a divine name with numerical value 45).
1105. שית דרגין — Six levels/gradations.
1106. שיתין פולסי דנורא — Sixty lashes of fire.

1107. שכיבת שוכני קבר — Discourse of those who dwell in the grave.
1108. שכינה דמקננת במטטרו״ן — Divine Presence that nests in Metatron.
1109. שכינה עילאה — Supernal Divine Presence.
1110. שכינת אל — Divine Presence of God.
1111. שכינתא תתאה — Lower Divine Presence.
1112. שכל היולי — Potential intellect.
1113. שכל נאצל — Emanated intellect.
1114. שלוחי הדין — Agents of judgment (spiritual entities that execute divine judgment).
1115. שלש ראשונות — The three highest sefirot.
1116. שם א׳ מז׳ שמות של מ״ב — First of the seven names of the 42-letter divine Name.
1117. שם אדנות — The divine name Adnut.
1118. שם אהיה — The divine name Ehyeh (I Am/I Will Be).
1119. שם ב״ן — Divine Name Ban.
1120. שם ב׳ מז׳ שמות של מ״ב — The second of the seven names of the 42-letter Divine Name.
1121. שם בן ד׳ — The four-letter Name (Tetragrammaton).
1122. שם ד׳ משם מ״ב — The fourth name of the 42-letter Divine Name.
1123. שם ההוי״ה — The Tetragrammaton (the four-letter divine name YHVH).
1124. שם הו״ה אהיה — Divine names YHVH and Ehyeh.
1125. שם הוי״ה מלא ביודין — Divine Name YHVH spelled fully with Yuds.
1126. שם הויה — The divine name YHVH (the Tetragrammaton).
1127. שם מילוי ההי״ן — Divine Name spelled with heis.
1128. שם ע״ב — 72-letter Name.
1129. שמא גרים — The name is causative.
1130. שמיטת הדין — Sabbatical of judgment (cosmic cycle of divine severity).
1131. שני ערלה — Years of orlah (first three years when a tree's fruit is forbidden).
1132. שעור קומה — Divine structure (literally 'measurement of stature').
1133. שעיר המשתלח לעזאזל — Scapegoat sent to Azazel.
1134. שפחה בישא — Evil maidservant.
1135. שפחה חרופה — Betrothed maidservant.
1136. שפע בינה — Influx of Binah (Understanding).
1137. שפתי תורתו דובבות בקברו — The lips of his Torah teachings murmuring in his grave.
1138. שקד — Almond-shaped essence (the luz bone).
1139. שקתות הגוף — Channels of the body.
1140. שר הקבר — Guardian of the grave.
1141. שר השנים — Prince of the Two Faces.
1142. שרי הימים — Angelic princes of the days.
1143. שרפי קדש — Holy seraphim (angelic beings created through righteous deeds).
1144. שרפים והחיות והאופנים — Seraphim, holy beasts, and wheels.
1145. שש קצוות — Six extremities (the six lower divine attributes).
1146. שתי שולחנות — Two tables.
1147. תְּגַלְגַּל מִדּוֹתֶיךָ — Roll forth Your attributes.
1148. תְּהֹמוֹת הָאָרֶץ — Depths of the earth.
1149. תְּהוֹם רֹבֶצֶת — The deep that lies beneath.
1150. תְּהוֹם־אֶל־תְּהוֹם — Deep calls to deep.

1151. תְּשׁוּבָה שְׁלֵמָה — Complete repentance.
1152. תְּפִלַּת חִן פְּלוּלִי — Graceful judicial prayer/prayer offered with grace.
1153. תִּקּוּנֵי דִיקְנָא יְקִירָא עַלְאָה — Aspects of the precious supernal beard.
1154. תְּשְׁתּוֹחָחִי — Are you cast down.
1155. תֶּהֱמִי — Are you disquieted/moan.
1156. תַּחְתִּיּוֹת הָאָרֶץ — Depths of the earth.
1157. תַּנָּאִים וְהָאֲמוֹרָאִים — Tannaim and Amoraim (the rabbinic sages of the Mishnaic and Talmudic periods).
1158. תַּתִּיר צְרוּרָה — Release the bound.
1159. תּוֹרַת הָאָדָם — Instruction/law of humanity.
1160. תבוסת קבר — Burial area.
1161. תּוֹרָה לִשְׁמָהּ — Torah study for its own sake.
1162. תושיה — Substance/wisdom.
1163. תיאובתא דנוקבא לגבי דכורא — Desire of the female for the male (kabbalistic concept of divine unification).
1164. תיבה עליונה — Supernal ark.
1165. תיקון העליונים — Rectification of the upper realms.
1166. תיקלא לא קיימא באשלמותא — The scale is not perfectly balanced.
1167. תכשיטין דכלה — Bride's ornaments.
1168. תלייה לשם עם הנשמה — Connection between the name and the soul.
1169. תלת סטרין יסודי עלמא — Three aspects of the world's elements.
1170. תלת עשר מכילן דרחמי — Thirteen Attributes of Mercy.
1171. תלת עשר נהרי אפרסמונא דכיא — Thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil.
1172. תלת עשר נהרי דאפרסמון — Thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil (mystical celestial realm).
1173. תלת עשר נהרי דאפרסמונא — Thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil.
1174. תלתא מוחין — Three aspects of the mind/consciousness.
1175. תפארת (ת״ת) — Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the central divine emanation.
1176. תפארת ומלכות — Tiferet and Malkhut.
1177. תפלין דמארי עלמא — Tefillin of the Master of the Universe.
1178. תפלין של אור — Tefillin of light.
1179. תקון הדינים — Rectification of judgments.
1180. תקון הנפש — Rectification of the soul.
1181. תקון הששי — The sixth rectification.
1182. תקון נשמתו — Rectification of the soul.
1183. תקון ס״ד — Tikkun 64.
1184. תקון עליון — Supernal rectification.
1185. תקון שבינה — Rectification of the Divine Presence.
1186. תקונה העליון — Supernal rectification.
1187. תקוני אריך — Rectifications of Arich (configurations of the 'Long-Faced One', a divine aspect in Kabbalah).
1188. תקוני דודין ורעין — Rectifications of lovers and friends.
1189. תקוני דזעיר — Rectifications of Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced One).
1190. תקוני דיקנא דזעיר — Rectifications of the beard of Zeir Anpin.
1191. תקוני דיקנא יקירא עילאה — Arrangements of the precious supernal beard.
1192. תקוני דיקנא עילאה — Rectifications of the supernal beard.

1193. תקוני דמטרוניתא — Rectification of the Divine Feminine (Matronita).

1194. תקוני הזהר — Tikkunei Zohar.

1195. תקוני התשובה — Rectifications of Repentance.

1196. תקוני זעיר — Rectifications of Zeir Anpin (configurations of the divine countenance).

1197. תקוני נפשות — Rectifications of souls.

1198. תקוני שכינה — Rectifications of the Divine Presence (Shekhinah).

1199. תקוניה — Its rectifications (spiritual repairs).

1200. תקונים החדשים — New Tikkunim (kabbalistic rectifications).

1201. תרייקא — Theriac (medicinal compound used as antidote).

1202. תרין דרועין דמלכא — Two arms of the King.

1203. תרין נביאי קשוט — Two prophets of truth.

1204. תרין קשרין תתאין — Two lower knots (kabbalistic term for spiritual connections in lower realms).

1205. תרנגולת אוכמא — Black rooster.

1206. תרעא דלא פתיח למצותא פתיח לאסיא — A gate that is not open for commandments is open for the physician.

1207. תשובה מעליא — Superior repentance.

1208. תשומת יד — Deposit.

1209. ת״ת עם בינה — Tiferet with Binah.