[ii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Balak — The Zohar presents confession (vidui) as a transformative spiritual act that not only atones for sin but actually changes one's metaphysical location, moving the person from the 'left side' (associated with judgment and impurity) to the 'right side' (associated with mercy and holiness). | Cf. Mishnah Pesachim — The author adapts a halakhic concept (not needing to search every corner for chametz) into a mystical teaching about confession, suggesting that one need not recall every sin to achieve effective repentance. | Cf. Mishnah Negaim — The author uses the halakhic principle that certain body parts aren't subject to the laws of tzara'at as a metaphor for understanding which sins need to be explicitly confessed versus those that are automatically included. | Cf. Exodus 31:14 — The text recontextualizes this biblical phrase about Sabbath desecration into a mystical teaching about the cosmic consequences of sin, suggesting that transgressions create a space for destructive forces around the 'supernal ark' (possibly referring to the divine presence).

[iii]This metaphor portrays a powerful celestial entity called the 'Chief Mariner' who controls ships destined to sink in the sea. In Kabbalistic literature, this refers to Samael or similar forces who control negative spiritual entities.

[iv]The comparison of spiritual forces to dogs waiting under a table is a powerful metaphor that appears in multiple Zoharic passages, depicting how these forces eagerly await whatever falls to them from the divine realm.

מלכים שנצח אברהם היו מושלים
עליהם שרים אלו.[i] וזהו שפירשו
רבותינו ז״ל על בבל ומדי
וכו׳. והכל היה סימן לבנים וכן
הזכיר הנביא ישעיהו מלחמה
זו בפסוקים מי העיר ממזרח.
ומי שמבין דברי חכמים בנבזבזן
ומתנן שהיו לישראל בהר סיני
מרהב וס״מ עם דברי הזהר
פ׳ בלק דף קצ״ב על פסוק
ה׳ בצאתך ישמח ויגל מאד.
וכתוב בפ׳ פנחס דף רל״א מאן
דמפרש חובוי כל בי דינא בדלין
מיניה[ii] ועל דא אצטריך לבר נש
לפרשא חובין בכל שייפא ושייפא
מכל דעביד בפרט ובגין דבר
נש קריב לגרמיה לא אתדן על
פומיה ותו לא שביק למקטרגא
לאולפא עליה חובא מומא
דבבר נש יקדים ויימא ולא יהיב
דוכתא לאחרא למימר יתיה בדין
קודשא ב״ה מחיל ליה הה״ד
ומודה ועוזב ירוחם. ואפי׳
המהרהר בתשובה בעה״ז ולא
הספיק לעשותה עד דאסתלק מן
עלמא צדיקייא נחתי בגיניה גו
שאול ונטלין ליה וסלקין ליה
מתמן[iii] ואפי׳ צדיקים גמורים
נחתי תמן לשאוב משם כמה
חייבין בנזכר וזהו ועסותם
רשעים כי יהיו אפר תחת כפות
רגליכם שמתאחזים במדרגות
התחתונות של הצדיקים ועולים

All of this was a sign for the descendants, and thus the prophet Isaiah mentioned this war in the verses, “Who stirred up one from the east.” And one who understands the words of the Sages regarding the gifts and presents that Israel received at Mount Sinai from Rahab and Samael, along with the words of the Zohar in Parashat Balak page 192 on the verse “The Lord, when You went out, rejoiced greatly,” [will gain deeper insight].

It is written in Parashat Pinchas page 231: “Whoever details his sins, all courts withdraw from him. Therefore, a person must specify his sins in every limb, detailing everything he has done. Because a person is close to himself, he is not judged by his own testimony,[1] and furthermore, he does not allow the accuser to teach sin against him. The blemish in a person should be mentioned first by the person himself, not leaving room for others to speak of it. Then the Holy One, blessed be He, forgives him, as it is written, ‘He who confesses and forsakes will obtain mercy.’”

Even one who merely contemplates repentance in this world but does not manage to complete it before departing from the world—the righteous descend on his behalf into Sheol, take him, and raise him from there.[2] Even completely righteous ones descend there to draw out many sinners, as mentioned. This is the meaning of “you shall tread down the wicked, for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet”—they cling to the lower levels of the righteous and ascend from Gehenna.[3] This is also the meaning of “for You will not abandon my soul to Sheol.” These are the two paths that Rabbi Yochanan ben

[2]This reflects the legal principle that one cannot be convicted by their own admission in certain cases, but in the spiritual realm, self-accusation through confession actually protects against external accusers.

[3]This describes a mystical rescue operation where souls of the righteous can descend into Sheol (the underworld) to retrieve souls that had intended to repent but died before completing the process. This concept provides comfort regarding deathbed repentance.

[1]This explains the mystical mechanism by which sinful souls are elevated from punishment: they attach themselves to the ‘spiritual feet’ of righteous souls who can lift them to higher realms.

[i]This refers to Genesis 14, where Abraham defeated the four kings: Amraphel king of Shinar, Arioch king of Ellasar, Chedorlaomer king of Elam, and Tidal king of Goiim. The text reinterprets this historical battle as having profound mystical significance.

[ii]This is a key Zoharic principle explaining the spiritual mechanism of confession: by articulating one’s sins specifically, the celestial courts are prevented from bringing those charges against the person.

[iii]This describes the mystical rescue operation where righteous souls descend into Sheol to retrieve souls that contemplated repentance but died before completing it. This concept provides comfort about the efficacy of deathbed repentance.

מהגיהנם[i] וזהו כי לא תעזוב נפשי לשאול והם שני דרכים שאמר רבי יוחנן בן זכאי לתלמידיו שלא היה יודע באיזו דרך היו מוליכים אותו ועד״ז פירשו מה שהיה מרע״ה מסיח עם נפשו ואומר נפשי להיכן את הולכת וכו׳.[ii]

Zakkai told his disciples he did not know which one he would be led on. According to this interpretation, they explained what Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, conversed with his soul, saying, "My soul, where are you going?" etc. 85R

פרק י״ב

Chapter 12

מכל הנדרש ראינו כי צריך כל אדם לחשוב ולפרט את עוונותיו לפני מלכו[iii] ובפרט בודוי ש״מ. ולכן בחרנו להוסיף על הנוסח הנהוג איזה עונות שבהם נכשלים רוב בני אדם ובזה יתעורר כ״א כפי מה שידע בנפשו באיזה פרט הוסיף לחטוא.[iv] ואמרו שבראות האדם יצרו תאב לעבירה אחת יותר מהשאר צריך להתגבר נגד הפכו ולעשות משמרת למשמרת

From all we have learned, we see that every person must contemplate and specify their sins before their King, particularly in the deathbed confession (vidui).[1] Therefore, we have chosen to add to the standard formula certain sins in which most people stumble, thereby awakening each person according to what they know in their soul—in which particular matter they have added to their sinning. And they [the Sages] said that when a person sees their evil inclination desiring one transgression more than others, they must strengthen themselves 5R 10R

[2]The Hebrew term 'vidui shechiv mera' (abbreviated as 'vidui sh"m' in the text) specifically refers to the formal Jewish confessional prayer recited before death. This ritual confession has a fixed liturgical structure but can be adapted to address individual circumstances.

[i]This describes the mystical mechanism by which sinful souls are elevated from Gehenna: they attach themselves to the 'lower levels' of righteous souls, similar to how the priestly garment's hem had bells that would 'elevate' those who touched them.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Balak — The Zohar passage provides the mystical basis for understanding confession as a mechanism that literally transfers sins from the penitent to spiritual forces that receive them like dogs waiting for scraps. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas — This source establishes the Zoharic basis for Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on detailed confession, showing that when one confesses their own sins in detail, spiritual courts withdraw their accusations. | Cf. Genesis 14 — The text connects Abraham's historical victory over four physical kings to a spiritual conquest over four celestial princes who rule over forces of impurity, suggesting that physical events in biblical narratives have deeper mystical significance. | Cf. Isaiah 41:2 — This reference connects the prophetic text about 'one from the east' (Abraham) to the mystical understanding of his victory over forces of impurity, showing how the author integrates biblical text with kabbalistic interpretation. | Cf. Proverbs 28:13 — This verse serves as scriptural proof for the kabbalistic concept that detailed confession leads to divine forgiveness by preventing spiritual accusers from bringing charges against the person. | Cf. Malachi 3:21 — The text reinterprets this verse to describe how righteous souls help elevate sinners from Gehenna by allowing them to cling to their 'lower levels' or spiritual 'feet'. | Cf. Psalm 16:10 — This psalm verse is interpreted mystically to support the concept that righteous souls can be rescued from Sheol through the intervention of other righteous ones who descend to draw them out. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — This self-reference to the author's other work shows the intertextual nature of his writings and indicates that he had previously discussed the concept of confession with a broken heart in that work.

[iii]This emphasizes the importance of specific confession rather than general acknowledgment of sin. The metaphor of standing 'before one's King' frames confession as a formal audience with the divine, requiring detailed accountability.

[i]The author suggests that people tend to have particular sins to which they are especially prone, implying a need for personalized spiritual work rather than generic confession.

לבל יכשל בו כי אולי שולח הנה
לתקן עוות ההוא[i] ולכן יצרו
מפתהו שיהיה נכריה עבודתו
באשר אשמה הנפש ההיא. ולכן
כל אחד יפשפש במעשיו וישיבם
אל לבו ויפרט חטאיו המוזכרים
לו בינו לבין עצמו אם לא יהיה
מאותם שבין אדם לחברו וגם
שעקר התשובה היא בעודו בבחו
כמ״ש בתיקונים דף ק״י ע״ב
על פסוק מפני שיבה תקום.
והבל הביא גם הוא מבכורות
צאנו ובג״ד וישע ה׳ אל הבל
מ״מ אפי׳ חרב חדה מונחת על
צווארו של אדם אל ימנע עצמו
מן הרחמים ויש קונה עולמו
בשעה אחת כר״א בן דורדיא
והדומים לו[ii] ואפי׳ עד דכדוכה
של נפש כתיב ותאמר שובו בני
אדם. דקב״ה עושה חסד עם בניו
ונוטל אדם את בנו והאבן בידו
פי׳ אדם העליון מבין מנוחה
לבניו ונוטלם ונושא אותם גם
כשפגמו מעשיהם באבן נגף אחר
התשובה. ואמרו בשמות רבה פ׳
כ״ה על פסוק ישוב ירחמנו וגו׳.

against its opposite and create a safeguard around a safeguard[A1] so as not to stumble in it, for perhaps they were sent here to correct that particular distortion, and therefore their inclination entices them to make their service foreign, as that soul is guilty.[B] Therefore, each person should examine their deeds, return them to their heart, and specify the sins they remember between themselves and God—if they are not among those between person and fellow—even though the essence of repentance is while one still has their strength, as written in Tikkunim page 110b on the verse "Before the gray-haired you shall rise." And "Abel also brought from the firstborn of his flock," and therefore "the Lord regarded Abel," nevertheless, even if a sharp sword is placed on a person's neck, they should not withhold themselves from [seeking] mercy, and one may acquire their eternal portion in a single moment, like Rabbi Elazar ben Durdaya[2] and those similar to him, and even until the crushing point of the soul,[C] it is written, "And He said, 'Return, O children of man.'" For the Holy One, blessed be He, shows kindness to His children and "takes His son though the stone is in his hand"—meaning the Supernal Man prepares rest for His children[D] and takes them and carries them even when their deeds

[A] Or: "fence upon fence" — The phrase 'משמרת למשמרת' is a rabbinic concept referring to creating additional protective measures around a commandment. While 'a safeguard around a safeguard' captures the meaning well, 'fence upon fence' is a more common translation in academic literature when discussing this rabbinic principle of creating protective boundaries.

[B] Or: "whereby that soul bears guilt" — This phrase echoes biblical language about guilt-bearing. The alternate translation more directly reflects the ongoing state of bearing guilt rather than simply being guilty.

[A] Or: "to the very extinction of the soul" — This Talmudic phrase refers to the extreme point of spiritual or physical suffering. While 'crushing point' captures the physical metaphor, 'extinction' might better convey the sense of complete spiritual depletion intended in this mystical context.

[B] Or: "the Primordial Adam prepares rest for His children" — In Kabbalistic terminology, 'אדם העליון' often specifically refers to the 'Primordial Adam' or 'Adam Kadmon,' the first spiritual

[1] This is a reference to the rabbinic principle of creating protective boundaries ('seyag') around commandments to prevent accidental transgression. The doubling ('safeguard around a safeguard') suggests creating multiple layers of protection against one's particular weaknesses.

[2] This refers to a famous Talmudic story (Avodah Zarah 17a) about a man who spent his life pursuing sin but achieved complete repentance in a single moment before his death. Upon his sincere repentance, he died immediately, and a heavenly voice declared he had earned eternal life. This story is cited as evidence that genuine repentance is effective even at life's end.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of tikkun (repair/rectification), suggesting that each soul has specific spiritual work to accomplish in this world, related to its particular weaknesses.

[iii] Rabbi Elazar ben Durdaya is a famous example from the Talmud (Avodah Zarah 17a) of complete repentance at the end of life. After living as a notorious sinner, he achieved such profound repentance that he died in the process and a heavenly voice declared he had earned eternal life in a single moment.

הקב״ה מוצא שאנו חייבים לו
כובשו שנאמר יכבוש עונותינו.
ברם אשרי המתגבר על יצרו
בשהוא איש.[i] ובפ׳ תרומה דף
ק״נ ע״א מתבאר מה דינו של
המהרהר תשובה ולא הספיק
לעשותה כנדרש למעלה כמו כן
המהרהר הרהורי מצוה אע״ג
דלא יכיל קב״ה סליק ליה
רעותיה כאלו עביד ושם ביאר ז׳
פתחי גיהנם ומהו צואה רותחת
ואוי לישראל מחללי שבתות
דאין להם מנוחה אפי׳ בשבת
ושבועה שמשביעים לנשמה קודם
בואה לעולם התחתון היא בפ׳
תרומה ד׳ קס״א ובפ׳ בא דף
מ״א. ובפ׳ מקץ דף ר״ד פי׳
למה לא ניתן רשות לאלישע
אחר שיעשה תשובה[ii] אבל לכל
אדם לעולם ימינו פשוטה לקבל
שבים ואפילו עליו נאמר כל
מה שיאמר לך בעל הבית עשה.
ובע״ה הוא הקב״ה בעל העולם
ועשה כדבריו חוץ מצא שאם
ח״ו יאמר צא ממחיצתי כדאמרו
לאלישע אחר אל תפנה לדברים
אלו אלא תכנס ואל תירא כי
ודאי יקבלו אותך. ואל יחשוב
אדם שהשאול בית מנוס לו ח״ו
ולומר כיון דאטרדוהו לההוא
גברא מההוא עלמא לתהני
מעלמא דין דהא כתיב בקין
דהוא קינא דמסאבותא וכ״ש
ברשעי ישראל ואם לא תטיב have been damaged by a stumbling stone, after repentance. And they said in Exodus Rabbah, chapter 25, on the verse "He will return and have compassion on us," that when the Holy One, blessed be He, finds that we are indebted to Him, He suppresses it, as it is said, "He will suppress our iniquities."[A] But truly, fortunate is one who overcomes their inclination while they are still a person [alive]. And in Parashat Terumah, page 150a, it explains the status of one who contemplates repentance but does not manage to complete it, as mentioned above; similarly, one who contemplates thoughts of performing a commandment, even though they are unable to fulfill it, the Holy One, blessed be He, elevates their will as if they had done it. And there it explains the seven gates of Gehenna[1] and what "boiling excrement" is, and woe to the Sabbath-desecrating Israelites who have no rest even on the Sabbath. And the oath that is administered to the soul before it comes to the lower world is in Parashat Terumah page 161 and in Parashat Bo page 41. And in Parashat Miketz page 204, it explains why Elisha Acher was not given permission to repent, but for every person, His right hand is eternally extended to receive those who return, and even about him it was said, "Whatever the master of the house tells you to do, do it." And the master of the house is the Holy One, blessed be He, Master of the World, and do according to His words except for "go out"—for if, God forbid, He says "go out from My presence," as they said to Elisha Acher, do not turn to these words, but rather enter and do not fear, for they will certainly receive you. And a person should not think that manifestation in the process of divine emanation. This more technical term would be appropriate in an academic translation of mystical content.

40R 45R 50R 55R 60R 65R 70R

[C]Or: "He will subdue our iniquities" — The verb 'יכבוש' in this biblical context (from Micah 7:19) is commonly translated as 'subdue' in most English Bible translations, which might be more familiar to readers.

[1]In Jewish mystical literature, Gehenna (the realm of purification after death) is often described as having seven levels or gates, corresponding to increasingly severe forms of spiritual purification needed for different categories of sins.

[i]This expresses the traditional Jewish preference for timely repentance during the prime of life rather than waiting until one is weakened by age or illness, though the text acknowledges that late repentance is still valuable.

[ii]Elisha ben Abuya (known as 'Acher' or 'the Other' after his apostasy) was a Talmudic sage who abandoned Judaism. According to tradition, he was denied the opportunity to repent. The text uses this extreme case to emphasize that ordinary sinners should never despair of being accepted in repentance.

לפתח חטאת רובץ[i] כי כאשר
יצא האדם מפתח עוה״ז אל פתח
בניסתו לעה״ב אחריו מיד שם
לפתח חטאת נקבה שהיא לילית
רובץ זכר ס״מ מזדמנים לו
לגבות עונו כפי כחם כמו שהוא
מתגרה ברעה על עונו להוסיף
עון על עון כך מתגרים עליו
כחות החצונים כי יצה״ר משיאו
לעשות חטא על חטא כדי לאבדו
אבוד על אבוד ואם ימנע רשע
גמור מחטא עוד תועלת ימשוך
לו. והראיה כי אליך תשוקתו
ותשוקה זו היא ראיה שבחטא
הרשע מועיל לחצונים ומוסיף
פגם ועונש על עצמו ואפי׳ יהיה
הרשע גמור בעומק הקליפות
הרבה עם כל זה ואתה תמשל בו
לא לבד בחלק לילית אלא אפי׳
תמשול בס״מ. וזה לפי שאין
לחצונים צורת אדם רק צורות
בנחש וגמל[ii] והצורה הזאת שיש
לרשעים גמורים ואפי׳ למ״ה
הכל עשוקה אצלו מן הקדש.
ולזה יש כח לכל צורת אדם
להכלל בטוב שים עינך על דבר
זה דעהו וזכרהו: [iii]

Sheol is a refuge for them, God forbid, saying, "Since they have driven that man from that world, let him benefit from this world," for it is written about Cain that he is "the nest of impurity," and all the more so regarding the wicked of Israel. And [it is written] "If you do not improve, sin crouches at the door"—for when a person exits the doorway of this world to the doorway of their entrance to the World to Come, immediately after them, there at the doorway crouches "sin" (female), which is Lilith, and "crouching" (male), which is Samael,[1] who present themselves to collect his sin according to their power. Just as he provokes evil upon his sin to add iniquity upon iniquity, so do the external forces provoke him, for the evil inclination entices him to commit sin upon sin in order to destroy him, destruction upon destruction. But if a complete wicked person refrains from sinning further, it will bring him benefit. And the proof is [the verse] "and its desire is toward you"—and this desire is evidence that through the wicked person's sin, he benefits the external forces and adds blemish and punishment upon himself. And even if the completely wicked person is in the deep depths of the husks [kelipot], nevertheless, "you shall rule over it"—not only over the portion of Lilith, but you shall even rule over Samael. And this is because the external forces do

[1] In Kabbalistic demonology, Lilith (female) and Samael (male) are often portrayed as demonic counterparts or partners who prey on human souls. This passage creatively interprets Genesis 4:7 by identifying 'sin' (feminine in Hebrew) with Lilith and 'crouching' (masculine) with Samael.

[i] This phrase from Genesis 4:7 (God's warning to Cain) is reinterpreted in a mystical context to describe what happens at death—sin, personified as demonic entities, waits at the threshold between worlds to claim unrepentant souls.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that demonic entities (the 'external forces') lack the divine image present in humans. The specific forms of snake and camel may relate to their biblical associations with deception and burden.

[iii] Cf. Tikkun Zohar — The text references the Tikkunei Zohar (a collection of mystical commentaries on the Zohar), specifically page 110b which discusses the verse 'Before the gray-haired you shall rise' (Leviticus 19:32). In its kabbalistic interpretation, this passage connects the concept of standing before elders with rising to repentance while one still has strength, before the weakening of old age. | Cf. Genesis 4:4-5 — The reference to Abel bringing offerings from his flock and God regarding him favorably draws directly from Genesis 4:4-5. In the mystical context of this passage, it's used to demonstrate that even imperfect offerings (like deathbed repentance) can still be accepted, though not as ideal as timely repentance. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 10a — The phrase 'even if a sharp sword is placed on a person's neck, they should not withhold themselves from [seeking] mercy' is a direct reference to a Talmudic saying in Berakhot 10a. In this context, it's being applied to encourage deathbed repentance, teaching that one should never despair of divine mercy, even at the final moments of life. | Cf. Story of Rabbi Elazar ben Durdaya — The reference to Rabbi Elazar ben Durdaya alludes to the famous Talmudic story (Avodah Zarah 17a) of a man who lived a sinful life but achieved complete repentance in a single moment before his death. This story is cited here to emphasize that sincere repentance is possible even at the very not have human form, only forms like a serpent and a camel, and this form that complete wicked ones have, even the Angel of Death, is all seized by him from holiness. And therefore, every human form has the power to be included in goodness[1]—set your eye upon this matter, know it and remember it.

ועצה טובה לחולה שיתודה בעת שליטת מדת החסד בקר לאברהם[i] כי אז משמשות אותיות ראשונות מהי״ב הויות היוצאים מצירופי שם בן ד׳ אותיות כי חדש בגימטריא י״ב הויות ובכל שבוע מושפעת מאור הנכלל בג׳ הויות שהם בי״ב גבולי אלכסון ואות אחת משם הגדול מחיה את כלן וג׳ ראשונות מנוקדות בנקודת מלך והשניות של שבוע שני מהחדש מנוקדות בנקודת מלך והשלישיות בנקודת ימלוך. וג׳ של שבוע רביעית נקודות אולם שבא קמץ כאשר בא טעם כל זה בספרי המקובלים כי ימי השבוע רומזים למציאות

Good advice for the sick person is to confess during the time when the attribute of Kindness rules,[2] in the morning for Abraham, for then the first letters of the twelve Divine Names that emerge from the permutations of the four-letter Name are active. This is because the word "month" in gematria equals twelve Divine Names.[3] Each week is influenced by the light contained in three Divine Names that correspond to the twelve diagonal boundaries, and one letter from the great Name animates them all. The first three Names are punctuated with the vowel points of "melekh" (king), the second three of the second week of the month are punctuated with the vowel points of "melekh," and the third three with the vowel points of "yimlokh" (he shall reign). The three Names of the fourth week are punctuated with the vowel points of olam (world), sheva, kamatz, as explained in the end of life. | Cf. Exodus Rabbah 25 — The text explicitly references this midrash's interpretation of Micah 7:19 ('He will return and have compassion on us...He will suppress our iniquities'). The midrash teaches that God actively suppresses the record of sins rather than merely forgiving them, indicating a complete erasure of the spiritual effect of sin after true repentance. | Cf. Zohar Terumah 150a — The text directly cites this Zohar passage which discusses the spiritual value of even incomplete repentance. In kabbalistic thought, the intention or contemplation of performing a mitzvah has spiritual reality even if the physical action cannot be completed. | Cf. Story of Elisha ben Abuya (Acher) — The reference to 'Elisha Acher' (Elisha the Other) alludes to the tragic Talmudic figure of Elisha ben Abuya who became an apostate. The text uses his example as a contrast, noting that while even he was denied the ability to repent according to tradition, ordinary sinners should never despair of being accepted in repentance. | Cf. Genesis 4:7 — The quote 'If you do not improve, sin crouches at the door' comes from God's warning to Cain in Genesis 4:7. In this mystical context, it's reinterpreted to describe what happens at death—sin (personified as Lilith and Samael) waits at the threshold between worlds to claim those who die unrepentant.

[1]This statement reflects the fundamental Jewish belief in the possibility of repentance for all humans, based on the idea that all humans are created in the divine image. The text contrasts this with demonic entities that lack this divine image (described as having forms like snakes and camels) and therefore lack the capacity for redemption.

[2]The original text bases this recommendation on the kabbalistic principle that divine attributes (sefirot) influence different times of day, with the attribute of Chesed (Kindness/Mercy) being dominant in the morning hours, making it a spiritually advantageous time for confession.

[3]In Hebrew, the word 'chodesh' (month) has the numerical value of 312, which the author connects to the 12 permutations of the Divine Name (Tetragrammaton) that correspond to the 12 months of the year.

[i]The phrase "morning for Abraham" refers to the kabbalistic association of Abraham with the divine attribute of Chesed (Kindness/Mercy) and the morning hours when this attribute is dominant.

ענפי הספירות[i] מחסד ולמטה
שהם סדר זמנים המתפשטים
מהם במלכות ושם נכללים כל
שנויי פעולות הזמנים מצד
הבינה המסדרת אותם. ובכל יום
משתמשות ב׳ אותיות מהג׳ הויות
של אותו שבוע אחד ביום ואחד
בלילה כי יש בג׳ הויות שש הין
לשש לילות וג׳ יודין וג׳ווין
לו׳ ימים ואותיות אלה מאירות
כלם אהדדי בשבת בסוד ג׳
סעודות לג׳ הויות והיא שביתתן
דכתיב וישבות ביום השביעי
שהיא נקודת מלכות עצמה והיא
באמצע בבחינתה למעלה מנצח
הוד חג״ת מנה״י נה״י אינו
תלתא יומי מקמי שבתא ממעלה
למעלה. וחג״ת אינון תלתא יומי
בתר שבתא כנזכר. ובזה יבאו
כסדר ימי השבוע יום ראשון
חסד, יום שני גבורה עד יום ששי
יסוד[ii] בו לחם משנה בסוד אור
ישר וחוזר[iii] והיום הוא קיבוץ
כ״ד שעות י״ב ביום וי״ב בלילה
רומזות לענפים המתפשטים
במלכות משש קצוות שעליה
הכוללים ד׳ תקופות היום ערב
ובקר וצהרים לג׳ אבות בסוד
יחוד קב״ה ושכינתיה בדרועא
דימינא בתפלת שחרית ובדרועא
דשמאלא בתפלת מנחה ובעמודא
דאמצעיתא בערבית. ודהע״ה
אמר חצות לילה וגו׳ שאז הוא שעשוע השכינה למעלה[iv] עם books of the Kabbalists.

The days of the week symbolize the existence of the branches of the sefirot from Chesed downward, which are the order of times that extend from them into Malkhut, where all the various temporal activities are included, arranged by Binah. Each day utilizes two letters from the three Divine Names of that week—one for the day and one for the night—since the three Divine Names contain six Heys for six nights, and three Yods and three Vavs for six days. All these letters illuminate each other on the Sabbath through the mystery of the three meals corresponding to the three Divine Names. This is their rest, as it is written, "And He rested on the seventh day," which is the point of Malkhut itself. It is positioned in the middle, just as above it is positioned between Netzach-Hod-Chesed-Gevurah-Tiferet-Malkhut-Netzach-Hod-Yesod, which are the three days before the Sabbath in ascending order. And Chesed-Gevurah-Tiferet are the three days after the Sabbath, as mentioned.

Thus, the days of the week follow in order: Sunday corresponds to Chesed, Monday to Gevurah,[1] and so on until Friday, which corresponds to Yesod, containing the double portion of bread in the mystery of direct and reflected light.[2] The day is a collection of twenty-four hours—twelve in the day and twelve in the night—alluding to the branches that extend into Malkhut from the six extremities above it, encompassing the four seasons of the day: evening, morning, and noon, corresponding to the three Patriarchs in the mystery of the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence—through the right arm in the morning

[1] This correspondence between days of the week and the sefirot (divine attributes) is fundamental to kabbalistic time-keeping, influencing when certain prayers, meditations, or spiritual practices should be performed for maximum efficacy.

[2] This refers to the Jewish practice of using two loaves of bread (lechem mishneh) on Sabbath, which the text interprets as representing the kabbalistic concepts of 'or yashar' (direct light flowing from God to creation) and 'or chozer' (reflected light returning from creation to God).

[i] This reflects the fundamental kabbalistic concept that time itself is structured according to the divine attributes (sefirot), with each day channeling a specific spiritual energy.

[ii] This correlates each weekday with a specific sefirah: Sunday with Chesed (Kindness), Monday with Gevurah (Strength/Judgment), Tuesday with Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), Wednesday with Netzach (Victory/Eternity), Thursday with Hod (Splendor), and Friday with Yesod (Foundation).

[iii] The double portion of bread (lechem mishneh) used on Sabbath is interpreted as representing the mystical concepts of direct light (or yeshar) and reflected light (or chozer), which are kabbalistic terms describing the dynamic flow of divine influence down to creation and the reciprocal elevation from creation back to divinity.

[i] This references King David's practice of rising at midnight for prayer (Psalms 119:62) and explains

שרשי נשמות החיים והמתים ג״כ כדאי׳ בפ׳ לך לך דף פ״ב אבל אינו זווג אלא הארת פנים וחדוש תורה כי מלכות או מציאות ת״ת שבמלכות תכנס בחצי הלילה בג״ע של מעלה בעולם הבריאה או היצירה שהוא ג״ע תחתון או העשיה ששם מדור הנפשות שבהם חוזרים ושובנים הנשמה והרוח והנפש כל אחד כפי מדרגתו ושם תתגלה השכינה ותאיר בהם אור ושפע מה׳. וגם בעת שהצדיק נפטר מן העולם תתיחד כ״י עם הת״ת ע״י נשמתו המסתלקת למעלה וגם זה יחוד הוא לא זווג אלא נועדים לקבל באהבה כשרון מעשיה ולעולם אין שפע וברכה שורה בעליונים ואין זווג לת״ת ומלכות במקומם אלא מצד התחתונים והזמנתם אשר הוא לעתים כגון בהגיע ש״ץ לשים שלום יום ויום דאז הוא הקמת הברית הנקרא שלום[i] והוא עת רצון ודאי. ואמרו במדבר רבה פרשה י״א אפילו אדם רואה בחלומו כאלו חרב מחתכת בירכו מה יעשה ישכים לבית הכנסת ויעמוד לפני הכהנים וישמע ברכת כהנים ואין דבר רע מזיקו. וכן בחג שבועות הזווג הוא כולי יומא וכיוצא. וזהו טעם לחם הפנים ושיור פתיתין על השלחן לאחר הסעודה למי שאי אפשר לו להכין בתחלת הסעודה בכבר שלם לברכת המזון prayer, through the left arm in the afternoon prayer, and through the central column in the evening prayer.

King David said, "At midnight, etc.,"[1] for that is when the Divine Presence delights above with the root souls of the living and the dead, as stated in Parashat Lekh Lekha, page 82. However, this is not a complete union but rather an illumination of countenance and renewal of Torah, for Malkhut, or the aspect of Tiferet within Malkhut, enters at midnight into the supernal Garden of Eden in the world of Beriah, or Yetzirah, which is the lower Garden of Eden, or Asiyah, where the souls dwell. There, the Neshamah, Ruach, and Nefesh return and reside, each according to its level, and there the Divine Presence is revealed and illuminates them with light and abundance from God.

Similarly, when a righteous person departs from the world, the Community of Israel unites with Tiferet through his soul that ascends upward.[2] This too is a unification, not a complete union, but rather they meet to receive with love the excellence of her deeds. Never does abundance and blessing rest in the upper realms, nor is there a union of Tiferet and Malkhut in their place, except through the lower beings and their preparation, which occurs at specific times—for example, when the prayer leader reaches "Sim Shalom" each day, for then is the establishment of the covenant called peace, and it is certainly a time of favor.

They said in Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 11: Even if a person sees in his dream a sword cutting his thigh, what should he do? He should rise early to the synagogue, stand before the priests, and hear the Priestly Blessing,[3] and no evil thing will harm

[1] This refers to Psalm 119:62, where King David states: 'At midnight I rise to give thanks to You because of Your righteous judgments.' In kabbalistic tradition, midnight is considered a particularly potent time for prayer and Torah study.

[2] This describes the kabbalistic understanding of what happens when a righteous person dies: their ascending soul creates a channel of connection between the feminine aspect of divinity (Shekhinah/Community of Israel) and the masculine aspect (Tiferet), facilitating divine union.

[1] The text recommends the Priestly Blessing (Birkat Kohanim) as a protective remedy against negative dreams, highlighting the belief that certain ritual practices at specific times can counteract spiritual dangers.

its mystical significance as a time when the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) has special interaction with souls.

[ii] The prayer for peace (Sim Shalom) in the daily liturgy is identified as a moment of cosmic significance when the divine covenant of peace is established, creating an opportunity for union between the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity.

כמבואר בזהר פרשת יתרו. וכן סוד נביעת החלב בדדי המנקת שהתנוק הוא הגורם וטעם זה כי האור החוזר נעשה תיק וכסא ומכון שיתלבש בו אור עליון המתחדש תמיד.[i] הנה נרמז ריש מילין סוד הטיול לשכינה בחצי הלילה:[ii] him. Similarly, on the festival of Shavuot, the union continues all day, and the like. This explains the purpose of the showbread and the leaving of bread pieces on the table after the meal for one who cannot prepare a whole loaf at the beginning of the meal for the blessing after meals, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Yitro. This also explains the mystery of milk flowing in the nursing mother's breasts,[1] which is caused by the infant, the reason being that the reflected light becomes a sheath, throne, and foundation in which the ever-renewing supernal light clothes itself. Thus, we have hinted at the beginning of the words about the mystery of the Divine Presence's journey at midnight.

195R

200R

פרק י״ג

Chapter 13

עוד נעלה על ספר מה שביארו בבחינת זווג שהוא בח״ב ובת״ת ומלכות כמו שבא בספ״ר וכאשר הוסיף מדעתו הרחבה מורי הגאון מפאנו בספר העסים שלו.[iii] וזה כי במצות שעושים התחתונים נפתח להם משפע מת״ת שנשמתן נאצלת משם

I will further record what has been explained regarding the concept of union, which occurs in Chokhmah-Binah and in Tiferet-Malkhut,[A] as it appears in the Sefer [Yetzirah], and as my teacher, the Gaon of Fano, expanded from his vast knowledge in his book "HaAssis."[B] When the lower beings perform commandments, they are opened to receive an influx from Tiferet, from which their

5R

[A] Or: "in Chokhmah-Binah and in Tiferet and Malkhut" — The Hebrew abbreviations could be translated more literally by separating Tiferet and Malkhut, though the original translation better captures the paired nature of these divine attributes in the context.

[A] Or: "and as my teacher, the eminent Rabbi of Fano, added from his broad understanding in his book "HaAssis"" — This alternate provides a more conventional translation of 'Gaon' as an honorific title rather than preserving it as a transliteration, and translates 'mida'ato harechava' slightly differently.

[2] The text uses breastfeeding as a physical metaphor for a spiritual principle: just as an infant's suckling stimulates milk production, so too do human spiritual actions below stimulate divine response from above.

[i] This metaphysical explanation reveals how reflected spiritual light forms vessels that can then receive and contain new divine illumination, describing the reciprocal relationship between human spiritual activity and divine response.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Lekh Lekha — The Zohar passage explains how souls commune with the Divine Presence during the midnight hour, which supports the text's explanation of spiritual dynamics occurring at different times of day. | Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah — This midrash is cited as evidence of specific times when divine protection is available, supporting the text's broader argument about the importance of timing in spiritual activities. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Yitro — The Zohar reference provides the mystical basis for a common practice, used here as an example of how physical actions correspond to spiritual mechanics in the upper worlds. | Cf. Biblical account of Creation — The text interprets God's rest on the seventh day in kabbalistic terms, connecting it to the sefirah of Malkhut and explaining the mystical significance of the Sabbath within the divine structure.

[i] Rabbi Menachem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620) was a prominent Italian kabbalist and rabbinic authority, often referred to as 'Rama MiFano.' The author's reference to him as 'my teacher' establishes an important intellectual lineage.

וחוזר האור מן הנשמה למקורה
זה וזה דרך המלכות כטבע
הרוחניות המתרבה מאליו
והיא מתקשטת לעומת בעלה
מצרוף שני האורות יחד והן
מזדווגים במקומן באהבה
רבה ואינם צריכים לעלות
להיכל הבינה. ואיש ואשתו
בתחתונים להם דוגמא לאותיות
ו״ה מהשם[i] שאינם מתקדשים
בקדושת השם אלא בצרופם עם
י״ה ולכן בזווגם ובמצותיהם
צריכים להעלות נשמתם וכוונתם
לת״ת ומלכות שהם י״ה בערכה
להשלים השם למטה שכן אמרו
בזהר שארבעה אותיות השם
יש להם דוגמא בביתו של אדם
צדיק. ביה ובאנתתיה בבריה
ובברתיה[ii] אבל קודם יצירת
אדם וחוה לא היו ת״ת ומלכות
אלא במקום ו״ה בלבד מושפעים
ולא משפיעים ולהשלים להם
ההוי״ה היו צריכים לעלות אצל
אבא ואמא ומזווג ת״ת ומלכות
יתהוו הנשמות הקדושות. ויש
עוד טיול למעלה עם שרשי
נשמות הצדיקים החיים. וזה
בשעת נפילת אפים אחר חזרת
התפלה[iii] שקושר וחובק עצמו souls are emanated. The light then returns from the soul to its source through Malkhut, like the nature of spirituality which multiplies of itself.[1] She [Malkhut] adorns herself before her husband through the combination of these two lights together,[A] and they unite in their place with great love, without needing to ascend to the palace of Binah. 10R 15R

A husband and wife in the lower worlds are analogous to the letters Vav and Heh of the Divine Name, which are not sanctified with the holiness of the Name except when combined with Yod-Heh. Therefore, in their union and in their commandments, they need to elevate their souls and intentions toward Tiferet and Malkhut, which are like Yod-Heh in relation to them, to complete the Name below. As they say in the Zohar, the four letters of the Name have their counterpart in the household of a righteous person:[2] in him, his wife, his son, and his daughter. But before the creation of Adam and Eve, Tiferet and Malkhut were merely in the position of Vav-Heh, receiving but not giving.[B] To complete the Divine Name for them, they needed to ascend to Father and Mother [Abba and Imma], and from the union of Tiferet and Malkhut, holy souls would be formed. 20R 25R 30R

There is also another spiritual journey above with the root souls of living righteous ones. This occurs during the Nefilat Apayim [falling on one's face] after the repetition of the prayer, when one binds and 35R

[B] Or: "She [Malkhut] adorns herself to face her husband from the combination of the two lights together" — This alternate translation more literally renders 'le'umat' as 'facing' rather than 'before,' emphasizing the face-to-face positioning that is significant in kabbalistic union symbolism.

[C] Or: "Tiferet and Malkhut were only in the place of Vav-Heh, influenced but not influencing" — This translation more literally renders 'mushpa'im velo mashpi'im' as 'influenced but not influencing' rather than 'receiving but not giving,' preserving the technical kabbalistic terminology.

[1] This describes a fundamental kabbalistic principle that spiritual energy, unlike physical matter, increases rather than diminishes when shared or transmitted. This concept underlies many mystical practices.

[2] The four letters of God's name (YHVH) are understood to be reflected in the four members of a family: father (Yod), mother (first Heh), son (Vav), and daughter (final Heh). This demonstrates how kabbalah sees human relationships as mirroring divine structures.

[ii] This presents a kabbalistic understanding of marriage where human couples mirror divine processes. The letters Vav and Heh of God's name YHVH represent the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity that find expression in human relationships.

[iii] In Aramaic: 'in him, in his wife, in his son, and in his daughter.' This establishes that a righteous person's household is structured to reflect the four letters of God's name, creating a microcosm of divine reality in human family life.

[i] Nefilat Apayim (falling on one's face) refers to a prayer posture of prostration or head-bowing performed after the repetition of the Amidah prayer. In kabbalah, this physical gesture corresponds to spiritual processes of ascent and unification.

כעין חבוק כי יכוין עליית היכלות היצירה עד היכל אהבה
40 דשם סוד החבוק. וגם הוא מחבק ידיו ומשם מכוין להעלות היכלות אל היכל הרצון בסוד אברים באברים ואח״כ מכניס רוחניות כולם אל היכל קדש
45 הקדשים והיינו התעוררות נביעו דדכורא בנוקבא והיא אושידת מיין נוקבין לקבלא מיין דכורין ופיו האומר התפלה בנשמתו אושידת מיין בסוד מסירת נפשו
50 מתוך הנקבה אל הזכר באליך ה׳ נפשי אשא להיות נכלל בתוך הנשמות הנשפעות ומתחדשות מלמעלה בסוד יוסף הצדיק למעלה הממשיך למלכות מיין
55 דכורין. ובנימין צדיק לתתא לעורר מיין נוקבין.[i] ושכינה שרויה בין שני צדיקים:[ii] embraces oneself in an embrace-like manner. One should direct one's intention to the ascent of the Palaces of Formation up to the Palace of Love, where 40R the secret of embracing lies. He also embraces his hands, and from there directs his intention to elevate the Palaces to the Palace of Will, in the secret of "limbs within limbs." Afterward, he brings all the spirituality into the Holy of Holies. This is 45R the arousal of the male flow into the female, and she pours forth the feminine waters to receive the masculine waters. His mouth, which recites the prayer, pours forth waters through his soul,[1] in the secret of surrendering his soul from within the female to the 50R male,[A] as in "To You, O LORD, I lift up my soul," to be included among the souls that flow and are renewed from above. This is the secret of Joseph the Righteous above, who draws down masculine waters to Malkhut, and Benjamin the Righteous below, who 55R stirs the feminine waters.[2] And the Divine Presence rests between these two righteous ones.

פרק י״ד

אחר שבארנו מהו טיול ושעשוע בחצי הלילה לתקופה רביעית

Chapter 14

Having explained the concept of spiritual journeying and delight during midnight in the fourth season

[A] Or: "in the mystery of offering his soul from within the feminine principle to the masculine principle" — This alternate translation renders 'sod' as 'mystery' rather than 'secret' and uses 'feminine principle' and 'masculine principle' for 'nekevah' and 'zakhar,' emphasizing the metaphysical rather than physical nature of these kabbalistic concepts.

[1] This metaphor compares prayer to pouring water, reflecting the kabbalistic concept that verbal prayer creates spiritual flows that affect higher realms. The imagery connects human devotional practice to cosmic processes of divine unification.

[2] Joseph and Benjamin, sons of Jacob and Rachel in the Bible, are reinterpreted as mystical archetypes representing two directions of spiritual energy flow: downward bestowal (Joseph) and upward arousal (Benjamin). This illustrates how kabbalah transforms biblical narratives into cosmic principles.

[i] The biblical brothers Joseph and Benjamin are interpreted as mystical archetypes representing complementary spiritual functions. Joseph channels divine energy downward (masculine waters), while Benjamin stimulates the upward flow of receptive energy (feminine waters). This reflects how kabbalah reinterprets biblical figures as cosmic principles.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The author is building his explanation of spiritual unions on a foundation from the primary text of Jewish mysticism, giving his interpretation authoritative weight. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The author acknowledges the ancient source of these concepts of union while also noting how they were expanded upon by later authorities like the Gaon of Fano. | Cf. Psalms 25:1 — This biblical verse is reinterpreted in a mystical context to describe the soul's ascent during prayer, particularly during the Nefilat Apayim ritual. | Cf. Rabbi Menachem Azariah of Fano's 'Sefer HaAssis' — The author acknowledges his intellectual lineage, showing how these mystical concepts were transmitted and elaborated upon by his teacher, who was a prominent 16th-century Italian kabbalist. | Cf. Joseph and Benjamin as mystical archetypes — This transforms biblical brothers into symbolic representatives of cosmic processes, illustrating how kabbalah reinterprets biblical narratives as mystical allegories for divine processes.

לדוד רגל רביעי. נחזור לבאר
סדר זמנים ולהורות טעם שליטת
החסד בבקר. והוא כי ענפי
השעות מאירים במלכות מינה
ובה בכ״ד צרופי א״ד מכוונים
לכ״ד צרופי הוי״ה[i] בהבחן ב׳
ההין גדולה וקטנה כל אחד
לעצמה ואותיות ההויו״ת מהם
זכרים בסוד אור ישר בעלי
רחמים כגון אותיות י״ו ומהם
נקבות בסוד אור המתהפך
שהוא דין וכן בשם אדנ״י
יבחנו אל״ף יו״ד מן הזכרים
ואילך מן הנקבות וכל אות
מן האלפא ביתא מצטרפת עם
כל אחד מארבעה אותיות השם
הגדול עם ששה נקודות שהם
קמץ צירי חולם חירק שורק
שבא כי התנועות גדולות שהם
רומזים למציאות הספירות
במקומן מספיקות לעצמן
וגם לקטנות שהם מציאותן
המתפשטות במלכות המשמשות
תחתיהן[ii] אבל שבא הגם שהוא
עבד עבדים פעמים עבד משכיל
ימשול בבן כגון אם בא בראש corresponding to David, the fourth leg,[A 1] we will now return to explain the order of times and teach the reason for the dominance of Chesed 5R (Loving-kindness) in the morning. This is because the branches of the hours shine within Malkhut from within it, and within it are 24 permutations of Alef-Dalet[B] corresponding to the 24 permutations of the Divine Name (YHVH),[2] distinguishing between 10R the two Hei letters—the greater and lesser—each on its own. Of the letters of the Divine Names, some are masculine in the mystery of "direct light" possessing mercy, such as the letters Yod-Vav, while others are feminine in the mystery of "reflected light" 15R which is judgment.[3] Similarly, in the name Adonai, Alef-Yod are examined as being from the masculine, and onward from the feminine. Every letter of the alphabet combines with each of the four letters of the Great Name along with six vowel points: 20R kamatz, tzeirei, cholam, chirik, shuruk, and sheva.

The major vowels, which allude to the existence of the sefirot in their places, are sufficient unto themselves and also for the minor ones, which are their extensions manifesting in Malkhut that serve 25R beneath them. But sheva, although it is a "servant of servants," sometimes "a wise servant rules over a son," as when it appears at the beginning of a word,

[A] Or: "for the fourth time period [of the night], symbolized by David as the fourth support" — This is a kabbalistic reference to the four-part division of the night, with David representing the fourth division. The term 'regel' (leg) can also be understood as 'support' in this mystical context where David symbolizes the fourth position in a spiritual structure.

[B] Or: "permutations of [the Divine Name] Alef-Dalet" — In kabbalistic texts, 'א״ד' may specifically reference a divine name rather than just the letters. The original translation is accurate but this alternative clarifies the mystical significance.

[1] This opening refers to a previously discussed concept where the night is divided into four spiritual watches or periods, with the fourth being associated with King David. In kabbalistic tradition, David is often connected to Malkhut, the lowest sefirah that represents divine kingship.

[2] The text describes a system where the 24 possible arrangements of the letters in God's name (YHVH) correspond to 24 permutations of the letters Alef and Dalet. This represents the mystical mathematics through which kabbalists understood divine influence operating in different time periods.

[3] This reflects a fundamental kabbalistic principle that divine energy flows in two directions: a direct flow downward from God to creation (masculine, merciful) and a reflective flow upward from creation to God (feminine, associated with judgment). Even individual letters are categorized within this cosmic gender system.

[i] The text describes a complex kabbalistic correspondence between time divisions and divine names. The 24 permutations of Alef-Dalet (א״ד) are linked to the 24 permutations of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH), establishing a mystical relationship between temporal cycles and divine attributes.

[i] This passage describes the kabbalistic understanding of vowel points in relation to the sefirot (divine emanations). The 'major vowels' symbolize the sefirot in their original state, while the 'minor ones' represent their extensions that manifest in Malkhut (the lowest sefirah, representing divine kingdom in the material world).

תיבה אז לגיון לבדו הוא. וכל אותיות של אלפא ביתא היו כלי
אומנתו של שם הגדול במעשה
בראשית.[i] ויו״ד קמץ עם אל״ף
שש פעמים בשש נקודות וכן כל
שאר אותיות השם מספרם כולם
יחד תתר״ף שהם חלקי ורגעי
השעה ומלבד זה יש תתר״ף
באותיות השם לבד בלי סיוע
הנקודות. הנה ב׳ בחינות תתר״ף
וי״ב הויו״ת הם י״ב פעמים
תתר״ף לי״ב שעות מהיום.
ותשים אותיות השם תחילה
ואל״ף בסוף וההפך לי״ב שעות
והאותיות עם הכפולות הם כ״ז
כנגד כ״ז ימים שלמים שהירח
סובבת בהם הכיפה והנשאר
לה עד סוף החדש צריכים לה
לרוץ אורח אחר החמה ואותיות
אלפא ביתא כשהם עם השם
נחשבות אחד אחד עד שאפי׳
ת׳ עם י׳ שבשם שוין י״א ולא
יותר. וזה כי אותיות השם הם
נשמה ואותיות התורה הם כלי
אומנות וכל כלי אין מונים לו
אלא אחד ובדבר הזה אין הבדל
בין מחט אחד למסר הגדול.
ובזה יובן חזרת הענפים אל
מקורן. עוד יש מחלקים שם מ״ב
לשבעה חלקים וכל אחד ממנו
שש אותיות וצירפו אליהם שם
יה״ו אל כל אות יעלו ד׳ פעמים
מ״ב והם קס״ח אותיות. וחלוקם
לששה אותיות יעלו כ״ח מחנות
הלבנה סימנם כח מעשיו הגיד
וכתיב גדול אדונינו ורב כח.
ובהם נפעלים כל הגזרות והם המחדשים אור חדש במזלות

then it is a legion unto itself.[1]

All the letters of the alphabet were the instruments of the Great Name in the work of Creation. And Yod with kamatz together with Alef occurs six times with six vowel points, and likewise all the other letters of the Name; their total number together is 1,080, which are the divisions and moments of an hour. Besides this, there are 1,080 in the letters of the Name alone without the assistance of the vowel points. Thus, the two aspects of 1,080 and the 12 Divine Names equal 12 times 1,080 for the 12 hours of the day. And if you place the letters of the Name first and Alef at the end, and vice versa, for the 12 hours, the letters with the doubles total 27, corresponding to the 27 complete days in which the moon circles the dome, and what remains until the end of the month is needed for it to run its course after the sun. When the letters of the alphabet are with the Name, they are counted one by one, so that even Tav with Yod of the Name equals 11 and no more. This is because the letters of the Name are the soul, and the letters of the Torah are the instruments of craftsmanship, and every instrument is counted only as one, and in this matter there is no difference between a needle and a large saw. Through this, the return of the branches to their source will be understood.

Furthermore, some divide the 42-letter Name into seven parts, each containing six letters, and by joining the name YHV to each letter, they amount to 4 times 42, which is 168 letters.[2] When divided into groups of six letters, they yield 28 stations of the moon, symbolized by "He has declared the power of His works" (Psalms 111:6), and it is written "Great is our Lord and abundant in power" (Psalms 147:5). Through these are effected all the decrees, and they are what renew fresh light in the zodiacal signs, and according to the renewal of the light, so are renewed the generations of the soul.

[1] This uses biblical allusions (Proverbs 17:2: "A wise servant will rule over a disgraceful son") to explain the mystical properties of the Hebrew vowel point sheva, which despite its normally subordinate status can sometimes take precedence over more prominent vowels.

[2] The 42-letter divine name is one of the most powerful mystical formulas in Kabbalah, often recited in the prayer Ana B'koach. The text describes an advanced mystical calculation system that expands this name through combinations with the divine name YHV to create an even more potent spiritual formula.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic teaching that the Hebrew letters were the instruments through which God created the world, as elaborated in Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), one of the earliest kabbalistic texts.

וכפי התחדשות האור כן יתחדשו תולדות הנפש. וכתב הרמב״ן בפי׳ משנה ד׳ מפ״ג של ספר יצירה כי בעלי חיים הנולדים בשנה זו אינם דומים לבעלי חיים של שנה אחרת.[i] ע״כ אמרו אין מעשרין משנה על של חברתה ע״כ. ובודאי שכן יהיה ג״כ בצמחים ובמתכות ובכל הנבראים. וא״צ לומר במין האדם וכבר דברתי מזה בסוף מעירי שחר במספיק. עוד נ״ל שנוכל ליחס ד׳ שבועי החדש לד׳ הנהגות אבי״ע וכן ד׳ תקופות היום. והנהגת העשיה נרמז אחר חצות שעתא דפתחא דנוקבא רבא סתום פן יחריבו הקליפות העולם ח״ו[ii] כדאמרי׳ בזהר תרומה בטעם שרוח דרום שולט בתחלת הלילה. ולפי זה נייחס ג״כ ד׳ תקופות השנה לד׳ הנהגות אבי״ע פוק חזי כי יעלו הדברים על נכון אחר ההתבוננות בזה. וכן יוחלקו גם י״ב הוי״ות. והראב״ד בפי׳ משנה שניה מספר יצירה העמיק לדבר בדרוש זה בדרך אחרת על פי התכונה והקבלה ובסוף כתב וכאשר תסתכל בחשבון שרמזתי

Nachmanides wrote in his commentary on the fourth mishnah of the third chapter of Sefer Yetzirah that animals born in one year are not similar to animals born in another year. Therefore, they said one may not tithe from one year for another.[1] Certainly, this will also be the case with plants, metals, and all created things, and it goes without saying for the human species. I have already discussed this sufficiently at the end of "Me'irei Shachar." 70R 75R

It further seems to me that we can attribute the four weeks of the month to the four modes of governance of ABYA (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah),[A2] and likewise the four seasons of the day. The governance of Asiyah is alluded to after midnight, when "the gate of the great feminine is closed[B] lest the husks destroy the world, God forbid," as we find in the Zohar Terumah, explaining why the southern wind dominates at the beginning of the night. According to this, we can also attribute the four seasons of the year to the four modes of governance of ABYA—go and see, for these matters will be properly established after contemplating this. And the 12 Divine Names will also be divided in this way. 80R 85R 90R

Raavad, in his commentary on the second mishnah of Sefer Yetzirah, delved deeply into this subject in a different manner based on astronomy and Kabbalah, and concluded: "When you contemplate the calculation I have alluded to, you will be able to 95R

[A] Or: "the four worlds of Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah" — While the original translation correctly identifies the acronym, this alternate translation explicitly clarifies that these are the four cosmic worlds in kabbalistic cosmology, which might be helpful for readers less familiar with the technical term ABYA.

[B] Or: "the time when the gateway of the great feminine principle is sealed" — This alternate translation better conveys the technical kabbalistic terminology where 'nukba' refers to the feminine principle or aspect of divinity, rather than simply 'feminine' which might be misunderstood in a mundane sense.

[1] The author connects a practical halakhic ruling (the prohibition against using animals from one year to fulfill tithing obligations for another year) with mystical concepts about cosmic cycles influencing the essential nature of all created beings.

[2] This refers to the four spiritual worlds in kabbalistic cosmology: Atzilut (Emanation), Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action), which represent increasingly materialized levels of divine manifestation. The author suggests that each week of the month is influenced by a different spiritual world.

[i] The author cites Nachmanides (Ramban, 1194-1270), one of the most influential medieval Jewish scholars, who wrote a commentary on Sefer Yetzirah. The citation supports the kabbalistic concept that cosmic time cycles influence the qualities of all created beings.

[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic belief that after midnight, certain cosmic 'gates' close to protect the world from destructive spiritual forces (kelipot). This concept appears in the Zohar and became important in determining optimal times for mystical practices and prayers.

לך תוכל להבחין ממנו בכל רגע
ובכל שעה ובכל יום שתרצה
ההויה המושלת מי״ב הויות או
משם של כ״ח הויות. ובזה היו
מתגלים לראשונים העתידות
על פי סוד ה׳ בלי שיצטרכו
למלאכת החוזים בככבים
המכזבים.[i] והנה על פי דרכנו
להיות כי רוחניות הי״ב הוי״ות
אותם שהם רחמים יותר שולטים
בשש שעות ראשונות מהיום ולכן
אז ימין ה׳ רוממה וימין ה׳ עושה
חיל להתאזר ולהתגבר נגד מדת
הדין ואז הוא עת לבקש מטו על
צד החסד וגם כי יזכיר עונותיו
אין מקום למדת הדין לחלוק.
ואין לבריא וכ״ש לחולה לשלב
האצבעות של ימין בשל שמאל
כי הם כחות עליונים ימיניים
ושמאליים ואין לערבם.[ii] האמנם
טוב להסתכל ולכוין בכל שעה
באצבעות כי כל אצבע הוא
סוד שם אהיה במלוי יודין
בגמטריא אצבע.[iii] ולהיות דרוש
זה מאד מכוון להשלים אדם
עצמו ולהשתתף עם בחינת האור
המושל מדי עת בעת בתפלותיו
ומעשיו ותורתו ויחודיו וראוי
לכוין למדה וההויה שהיא
שולטת בזמנה לפי חלוף העתים
כמו שאמרו בסדר תפלות
לשחרית מנחה ערבית ומלבד זה
יכוין לספירה השולטת באותו
יום בכלל. לכן יצאנו מעט
מכונת הספר והנה נתבאר כי
טוב לחולה להתודות בשש שעות discern from it at every moment, hour, and day you wish, which Divine Name is ruling from among the 12 Names or from the 28 Names." Through this, the ancients could discern future events through the secret of God without needing the work of the stargazers who lie. 100R

According to our approach, since the spirituality of the 12 Divine Names—those that are more merciful—dominates in the first six hours of the day, "the right hand of the Lord is exalted, the right hand of the Lord does valiantly" (Psalms 118:16) to gird itself and prevail against the attribute of judgment. This is the time to seek mercy through the aspect of Chesed, and even if one mentions one's sins, there is no place for the attribute of judgment to dispute. A healthy person, and certainly a sick one, should not intertwine the fingers of the right hand with those of the left, for they are supernal powers of the right and left, and they should not be mixed. However, it is good to look at and focus intention on the fingers at all times, for each finger represents the secret of the name Ehyeh filled with Yods, which in gematria equals the word "finger." 105R 110R 115R

This exposition is very much directed toward perfecting oneself and participating with the aspect of light that rules from time to time in one's prayers, deeds, Torah study, and unifications. It is proper to direct one's intention to the attribute and Divine Name that rules in its time according to the changes of times, as they said regarding the order of prayers for morning, afternoon, and evening. Beyond this, one should focus on the sefirah that generally rules on that particular day. Therefore, we have deviated somewhat from the book's purpose, and now it has been explained that it is good for the sick to confess during the first six hours of the day.[1] Now we will 120R 125R 130R

[1] This practical instruction for when confession (vidui) should be performed for the ill connects the preceding mystical discussion to the book's central purpose of providing guidance for caring

[i] The author distinguishes between authentic Jewish mystical methods of divination based on divine names and what he considers false astrological practices. This reflects a common tension in Jewish mystical texts between accepting certain forms of cosmological influence while rejecting non-Jewish divinatory practices.

[ii] This instruction against intertwining the fingers of right and left hands reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the right side represents mercy (chesed) while the left represents judgment (din). For the sick especially, maintaining the dominance of mercy without mixing in judgment was considered essential for healing.

[iii] This is a reference to a specific kabbalistic technique where the divine name Ehyeh (אהיה) is spelled with additional Yods (a practice called 'filling' or 'milui'). When spelled this way (אלף הי יוד הי), its numerical value equals that of the Hebrew word for 'finger' (אצבע = 163).

ראשונות מהיום. ועתה נביא ראיה לזה מספר הזהר מלבד הנדרש: [i] bring proof for this from the Zohar, beyond what has already been expounded.

פרק ט״ו

Chapter 15

בפרשת בלק דף ר״ד אמר בשעתא דאתי צפרא כל אינון אסירי מלכא אשתכחו נייחין ועידן צלותא איהו עלייהו שכן אינון דתייבין בתיובתא ובעאן בעותהון קמי מלכא קדישא וכו׳ ואח״כ אמר בעא קב״ה זכותיה דההוא בר נש אי אשתכח בצלותא יאות ואי לא חשיב ליה דאיהו מאריה דתיובתא וחס עליה. בההיא שעתא קל צפרין דמקננן אשתמעו. הנה כי אם נגזר עליו חיים ורפואה. הרופא לכל בשר דלית אסוותא ביד שום ממנא אלא בידיה הוא ירפאהו ויעצימהו ואם ג״כ כבר נגזרה עליו גזרה בכח עת שליטת הויות החסד[ii] ימחו

In the portion of Balak, page 204, it states: "At the time when morning comes, all those prisoners of the King are found at rest, and it is a time of prayer for them, especially for those who return in repentance and make their requests before the Holy King, etc." 5R And later it says: "The Holy One, blessed be He, seeks the merit of that person. If he is found in prayer, it is good; and if not, He considers him as one who is a master of repentance and has mercy upon him. At that time, the sound of nesting birds 10R is heard."[1]

Behold, if life and healing have been decreed for him, the Healer of all flesh—for healing is not in the hand of any appointed official but in His hand alone—He will heal him and strengthen him. And if 15R a decree has already been issued against him, then through the power of the time when the Divine Names of Mercy rule, his sins will be erased,[2] as it for the sick and dying. The text argues that morning hours, dominated by divine mercy, are most favorable for confession.

[2]This Zoharic passage has multiple layers of meaning. Beyond its literal interpretation, it suggests that the chirping of birds at dawn represents both a favorable omen and actual spiritual assistance from the souls of the righteous who pray for the sick person.

[1]The author is explaining that even if a negative decree has already been issued against a sick

[i]Cf. Zohar, Terumah — This reference supports the author's explanation of cosmic time cycles and the shifting dominance of different spiritual forces throughout the day. The Zohar is cited as an authoritative source on the mystical significance of specific times. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — This citation strengthens the author's argument about cosmic cycles influencing all created beings. The reference to Sefer Yetzirah, one of the oldest kabbalistic texts, provides ancient authority for the concept of celestial influences affecting physical reality. | Cf. Raavad (Rabbi Abraham ben David) commentary on Sefer Yetzirah — This reference establishes a lineage of kabbalistic interpretation about divine names and their temporal governance. The author uses Raavad's work to support his own explanation of time cycles while acknowledging alternative approaches within the mystical tradition. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — This is likely a reference to another work by the same author or a prayer collection he compiled. It suggests this current text is part of a larger body of writings on similar mystical subjects, showing the interconnectedness of the author's works. | Cf. Psalms 118:16 — This biblical reference provides scriptural authority for the concept that morning hours are dominated by the attribute of Chesed (divine mercy). The verse's mention of God's 'right hand' connects directly to kabbalistic teachings about the right side representing mercy and kindness. | Cf. 42-letter Divine Name — This section connects to numerous other kabbalistic texts that discuss this important mystical name. This Name was considered one of the most powerful tools for meditation and prayer in Jewish mysticism, used particularly for spiritual ascent and transformation.

[i]This refers to the kabbalistic teaching that different hours of the day are governed by different divine attributes. Morning hours are considered to be under the influence of the divine attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness), making this time especially favorable for divine mercy and forgiveness.

עונותיו כדאמר ואי לא חשיב
ליה דאיהו מארי דתיובתא
וחס עליה. ורמז הצפרים
דקאמר[i] מלבד שיש לדרוש בהם
דברים נעלמים בסוד שכינה
דמקננת במטטרו״ן דאתקריאת
קן צפור ופעמים נשר ופעמים
יונה ע״ד הפשט נוכל להבינם
עם מ״ש הזהר בדף קצ״ו ע״ב
על פסוק גם צפור מצאה בית
אלין רוחיהון דצדיקיא דאמר
כי יש הרבה נשמות המתראים
על ג׳ חומות שבגן עדן כל אחד
כמראה צפרים המצפצפים בכל
בקר והוא צפצופא שבחא
דקב״ה וצלותא על חיי בני נשא
דהאי עלמא ובפרט ביומי ניסן
ותשרי דישראל מתעסקי במצות
ובמע״ט והם מדרגת נשמות
הדרות בחצרים. ועוד יש לפנים
מהם בבתי גוואי. עיין בפ׳
חיי שרה על פסוק אשרי תבחר
ותקרב וגו׳ ובפ׳ מקץ אמר דכל
גרדיני נמוסין מסתלקי בצפרא
וכל חד עאל לדוכתיה כד״א
הבקר אור והאנשים שולחו אלין
מאריהון דדינא המה וחמוריהם
אינון דאתו מסטרא דמסאבא.
כתוב בזהר פ׳ מקץ דף קצ״ח
מאן דלא ישגח בחוביה דחיל
מאינון ימי רע דיצה״ר והזהיר
על עונות דאדם דש בעקביו ע״ד
למה אירא בימי רע וגו׳. ונמצא
כי הוגד טעם למה עונות נעשות
בזכיות למי ששב מאהבה[ii] והוא
כי חובא דחב ב״נ יתיב קמי
קב״ה ואוליף עליה חובא ואמר
פלוני עבד לי ביום פלן. וכד תב says: "and if not, He considers him as one who is a master of repentance and has mercy upon him." 20R

The reference to birds that is mentioned, beyond the hidden matters that can be expounded about them concerning the secret of the Divine Presence that nests in Metatron, which is sometimes called "bird's nest," sometimes "eagle," and sometimes "dove"—according to the simple interpretation, we can understand them together with what the Zohar writes on page 196b on the verse "Even the sparrow has found a home." These are the souls of the righteous, for it says that there are many souls that appear on the three walls of the Garden of Eden, each like the appearance of birds chirping every morning,[1] and that chirping is praise to the Holy One, blessed be He, and prayer for the lives of people in this world, especially in the months of Nisan and Tishrei when Israel is engaged in commandments and good deeds. These are the level of souls that dwell in the courtyards. And there are yet others deeper within, in the inner chambers. See the section of Chayei Sarah on the verse "Happy is the one whom You choose and bring near," etc., and in the section of Miketz it says that all the enforcers of the law depart in the morning, and each one enters its place, as it is written: "The morning was light, and the men were sent away"—these are the masters of judgment, and "their donkeys" are those that come from the side of impurity. 25R 30R 35R 40R 45R

It is written in the Zohar, portion of Miketz, page 198: "One who does not pay attention to his sin fears those evil days of the evil inclination," and it warns about sins that a person tramples with his heels, as it is written: "Why should I fear in days of evil," etc. And we find that a reason has been given why sins are transformed into merits for one who repents out of love: Because the sin that a person commits sits before the Holy One, blessed be He, and teaches 50R 55R person, the power of morning prayers during the time when divine mercy dominates can still overturn the decree. This reinforces the book's emphasis on proper timing for deathbed confession.

[2]This passage reveals a profound mystical ecology where the souls of the righteous manifest as birds on the walls of the Garden of Eden, offering prayers for the living. This creates a reciprocal relationship between the living and the dead that is central to Ma'avar Yabok's theology.

[ii]The author engages in multiple levels of interpretation regarding the birds mentioned in the Zohar, offering both mystical and more straightforward readings. The birds simultaneously represent the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), the angel Metatron, and the souls of the righteous.
[i]This references the Talmudic teaching (Yoma 86b) that repentance motivated by love (rather than fear) transforms sins into merits. The author provides a kabbalistic explanation for this profound transformation.

מההוא חובא הא איהו בגרמיה מכריז קמי קב״ה ואמר פלוני דעבד יתי ביום פלן תב בתיובתא מני. אשתכח דחוביה גופיה אוליף עליה זכו והיינו כי נרצה עונה דעון גופיה מרצה קמי קב״ה עליה כי לקאה וגו׳ וע״ד קב״ה יהיב ליה כפלים והקב״ה מוותר חובין לבר נש. ומאי דאמרו כל האומר הקב״ה ותרן יותרון מעוהי[i] ה״מ כדלא תייבין אבל תייבין ומתחרטין ותוהין על הראשונות קב״ה שביק לון ויהיב לון אגר טב.[ii]

accusation against him, saying, "So-and-so did me on such-and-such a day." And when he repents of that sin, behold, he himself proclaims before the Holy One, blessed be He, saying, "So-and-so who did me on such-and-such a day has repented of me." Thus it is found that his sin itself teaches merit for him, and this is the meaning of "her iniquity has been pardoned," for the sin itself appeases the Holy One, blessed be He, on his behalf because it has been smitten, etc. And therefore, the Holy One, blessed be He, gives him double,[1] and the Holy One, blessed be He, forgives sins for a person. And what they said, "Whoever says the Holy One, blessed be He, is a forgoing—may his intestines be foregone," applies only when they do not repent, but when they repent and regret and are remorseful for their past deeds, the Holy One, blessed be He, forgives them and gives them a good reward.

ויקיים כל אדם ובפרט בעל תשובה וכ״ש החולה בחליו פסוק שויתי ה׳ לנגדי תמיד והוא בצייר תמיד במחשבתו שם ההוי״ה כתוב בכתב אשורית בדיו שחור בס״ת כשר[iii] ובכן ירא ויחרד מלפניו ומחשבותיו

Every person, especially one who has repented, and all the more so a sick person in their illness, should fulfill the verse "I have set the LORD always before me"[A] (Psalms 16:8). This is accomplished by constantly visualizing in one's mind the Divine Name (YHVH) written in Assyrian script with black ink, as in a valid Torah scroll. In this way, one will fear

[A] Or: "I place the LORD before me constantly" — This alternate translation emphasizes the active, ongoing nature of the practice rather than just a past action.

[1] This refers to the concept that through proper repentance, not only are sins forgiven, but they are transformed into merits, effectively doubling the spiritual benefit. This reinforces the book's emphasis on deathbed confession as spiritually beneficial rather than merely obligatory.

[ii] This is a reference to a statement in the Jerusalem Talmud (Bava Kamma 9:4) warning against the view that God simply forgives without requiring repentance. The author is carefully distinguishing between improper reliance on divine forgiveness without repentance versus the genuine transformation that occurs through sincere repentance.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Balak 204 — The Zohar text is used to establish morning as an optimal time for confession (vidui), since at dawn divine mercy predominates over judgment, making it more favorable for repentance to be accepted. | Cf. Zohar, 196b on 'Even the sparrow has found a home' — This reference connects the chirping birds mentioned in the primary text to the souls of the righteous, suggesting that when a sick person hears birds at dawn, it may represent righteous souls praying for them and offering divine protection. | Cf. Zohar, Miketz 198 — This Zoharic teaching explains the profound metaphysical mechanics of repentance, where the sin itself becomes an advocate rather than an accuser, supporting Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on proper confession before death. | Cf. Talmudic saying 'Whoever says the Holy One, blessed be He, is forgoing—may his intestines be foregone' — The author uses this Talmudic saying to contrast with his teaching, emphasizing that while God is not arbitrarily forgiving of unrepented sins, sincere repentance does indeed transform divine judgment into mercy.

[i] This describes a meditation technique where one visualizes the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) as it would appear in a kosher Torah scroll, written in the formal Assyrian script with black ink. This practice derives from Psalm 16:8 and became a central contemplative method in Jewish pietistic literature.

יכונו ע״כ מצאתי כתוב ודברים
אלו טוב שהמודה לחולה
יזכירם לו אם הוא ת״ח המבין
דבריו ויאמרם אליו קודם
שיתודה להלהיב לבו לתשובה
באמור אליו שיחשוב לתקן
פרטי העבירות אשר פגם בהם
בחייו כנזכר למעלה ואם היא
אשה תכוין לתקן בודויה פגמה
בשמירת פתחי נדותה ומצות
חלה והדלקת הנר[i] ובביטול
תורה שגרמה לבעלה או לבניה
אם נתעצלה להוליכם לבית
הספר.[ii] ה״ה נמי לשאר פריצות
אחר. וכן אם נתעצלה בהדלקת
נר שבת ולא הוסיפה מחול על
הקדש כי תוספת זה הכנה לנפש
יתירה מעולם האצילות[iv] [iii]

and tremble before Him, and one's thoughts will be properly directed. So I have found written, and it is good for the one guiding the sick person's confession to remind them of these things if they are a Torah scholar who understands such matters. He should say these things before the confession to inspire their heart to repentance, telling them to consider rectifying the particular transgressions they damaged through during their lifetime, as mentioned above. If the sick person is a woman, she should intend through her confession to rectify damage to her observance of the laws of menstrual purity, the commandment of separating challah, and the lighting of candles, as well as any neglect of Torah study she may have caused her husband or children if she was lazy about bringing them to school.[1] The same applies to other immodest behaviors. Similarly, if she was negligent in lighting Sabbath candles and did not add from the secular to the sacred,[2] for this addition prepares for the additional soul from the world of Atzilut (Emanation).[A]

[A] Or: "the extra soul from the realm of Atzilut" — This alternate translation might be more accessible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology, while still preserving the essential meaning.

[1] The text reveals a gendered division of religious responsibilities in traditional Judaism, where women were expected to ensure their sons received proper religious education, even if they themselves were exempt from formal Torah study obligations.

[2] This refers to the practice of tosefet Shabbat—extending the Sabbath by beginning it earlier than required and ending it later. This extension was considered spiritually meritorious and is here connected to receiving the 'additional soul' that Jews traditionally believe descends on the Sabbath.

[ii] These are the three primary religious obligations specifically incumbent upon women in rabbinic Judaism: niddah (menstrual purity laws), separating challah (from dough), and lighting Sabbath/holiday candles. According to rabbinic tradition, women's careful observance of these commandments has special protective power for their households.

[iii] This reflects the traditional view that while women were generally exempt from formal Torah study obligations, they bore responsibility for ensuring their sons' education and for not interfering with their husbands' study time. A woman's spiritual accounting thus included how she facilitated others' Torah study.

[iv] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of neshamah yeteirah (additional soul) that descends upon Jews during Sabbath. According to this teaching, adding time to the Sabbath by beginning it early creates a spiritual vessel for receiving this additional soul from Atzilut, the highest of the four spiritual worlds in Lurianic Kabbalah.

[v] Cf. Zohar — The passage alludes to Zoharic teachings about the neshamah yeteirah (additional soul) that descends upon Jews during Sabbath from the world of Atzilut. The text connects Sabbath candle-lighting with creating a spiritual vessel to receive this additional soul. | Cf. Ethical literature — The instruction to visualize the Divine Name reflects practices found in medieval Jewish ethical literature, where visualization of God's name was recommended as a method to maintain constant awareness of divine presence and prevent sin. | Cf. Maimonides — The differentiated approach to confession based on gender and specific life circumstances parallels Maimonides' approach to repentance, which emphasizes specificity in acknowledging particular sins rather than general confessions.

וצריך להוסיף ממדרגת החול
שהחצונים אוחזים בו לעשותו
קדש לקדשו בקדושת שבת
ונסתמו המקורות לחול ונפתחו
לשבת להזריע פנימה סוד
הנשמות הקדושות ולהפסיק
מהטיפין החצונים שהיו סוד מים
עכורים מותר המעשה שנשארו
שמרי מעשה בראשית והיו
נמשכים והולכים. וזהו אמרם
שהמזיקים נבראו ערב שבת בין
השמשות וכשראה הקב״ה כך
הקדים קדושת שבת[i] ונתייחדה
שכינה אל הזכר והזריע פנימה
כנזכר כי מזיקין אלו היו נצוצות
נזרקים מלמעלה[ii] קודם היות
השכינה פנים אל פנים עם הזכר
והדרוש רחב במקומו אצלנו.
וצריך שמירה והכנה לקבל כח
הרוחני כי הוא משפיע תמיד
והגשמים מקבלים ממנו כפי
הכנתם ובשבת בפרט כתיב
ושמרו בני ישראל את השבת
מלשון ואביו שמר[iii] ובזה עושים
ומתקנים אותו לדור אתם
והדלקת נר שבת ע״י עקרת הבית
אחר זרוז בעלה היא תקון גדול

One must add from the level of the mundane in which the external forces have a hold, to transform it into holiness by sanctifying it with the sanctity of the Sabbath.[1] Thus, the channels for the mundane are sealed, and those for the Sabbath are opened, to inseminate internally the mystery of the holy souls and to halt the external drops, which were the secret of the turbid waters, the remnant of creation,[A] which were the dregs of the work of creation that continued to flow. This is the meaning of the sages' statement that harmful spirits were created on the eve of the Sabbath at twilight, but when the Holy One, blessed be He, saw this, He advanced the sanctity of the Sabbath, and the Divine Presence united with the masculine aspect and inseminated internally, as mentioned. For these harmful spirits were sparks thrown from above before the Divine Presence was face to face with the masculine aspect, and this topic is extensively discussed in its place in our work.[B]

105R 110R 115R 120R

Protection and preparation are necessary to receive spiritual power,[2] for it is constantly emanating, and physical beings receive from it according to their preparation. Particularly regarding the Sabbath, it is written, "The children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath," using the same term as "his father kept the matter," and through this, they create and establish it to dwell with them. The lighting of the

125R

[A] Or: "the mystery of turbid waters, the excess material from the act of creation" — The kabbalistic concept of 'waters' here refers to spiritual energies or forces. 'Motar ha-ma'aseh' specifically refers to the leftover or excess energies from the creation process. This alternate translation better captures the technical kabbalistic meaning.

[B] Or: "and we have elaborated on this subject elsewhere in our work" — This idiomatic phrase indicates that the author has discussed this topic more extensively elsewhere. The alternate translation conveys this meaning more naturally in English while maintaining the author's intent to reference his more detailed treatment of the subject elsewhere.

[1] This kabbalistic concept describes the spiritual transformation of mundane reality (chol) into sacred time (kodesh) that occurs with the onset of Sabbath. According to the mystical understanding presented here, this is not merely a change in time designation but an actual metaphysical transformation of reality.

[2] The text presents a cosmology where spiritual forces constantly emanate from above, but their reception depends on proper preparation below. This reflects the kabbalistic principle of 'awakening from below' (itaruta d'letata) that triggers 'awakening from above' (itaruta d'leila).

[i] This refers to the rabbinic teaching that harmful spirits were created on the sixth day but weren't completed because God sanctified the Sabbath before their creation could be finished. This is used to explain why these spirits are particularly active at twilight on Friday.

[ii] In Lurianic Kabbalah, these 'sparks thrown from above' refer to divine sparks that fell during the cosmic 'Breaking of the Vessels' (Shevirat ha-Kelim). These scattered sparks became the source of negative spiritual forces when not properly contained.

[i] This quotes Genesis 37:11 regarding Jacob 'keeping' or 'guarding' Joseph's dream, suggesting that 'keeping' the Sabbath similarly involves active watchfulness rather than mere passive observance.

להכנת קדושת שבת עם תקון
מט״ה ש״לחן כ״סא ו״מנורה[i] היא
הנר ונקודה אמצעית קדושת
שבת שוכן בכסא דהיינו בריאה
וגבולה אלפים אמה סביב עולם
היצירה נכלל במטטרו״ן ששם
יה״וה משתמש בו הוא בחינת
אלף אמה סביב ואלף אמות
אחרים סביב הם רמז לעולם
העשיה סנדלפון ששם אדנ״י
משתמש בו א׳ סוד הנהגת היום
בחול וא׳ סוד הנהגת הלילה
ולזה אין לחלל נקודה אמצעית
קדושת שבת מתחומה ובתוס׳
שבת נמצא מקדש מדרגות החול
ג״כ. ואמרו בתקונים שהמוסיף
להוציא בסעודת שבת מוסיפין
לו נפש יתירה שהיא תוספת
רוח הקדש וכל הפוחת להוציא
גורעין לו ההוא נפש יתרה
ונשאר עני. ובדף פ״ח ע״א אמר
כי צריך בשבת כלה לטעום
מכל המאכלים ולקיים בו ענג.
וכבר מפורש סוד ענג אצלנו
במקום אחר וללבוש בגדים
נאים. וכתבו גורי האר״י שכפי
גוון המלבושים שאדם לובש
בשבת בעה״ז כך ממש יתלבש
אחר פטירתו בימי שבת תמיד.
ושלכך נראה חכם אחד לבוש
שחורים אחר פטירתו בימי
שבת והגיד כי כך לבש בעה״ז
ונענש במדה ההיא בעצמה. עוד
אמרו בזהר כי האושפיזין הם
המלאכים נערי הנשמה יתירה
דאיהי שבינתא וצוה רשב״י
בפרשת ויקהל כי תתפלל האשה
בעת הדלקתה נר של שבת על

Sabbath candle by the mistress of the house, after her husband's encouragement, is a great rectification for preparing the sanctity of the Sabbath, together with the preparation of the bed, table, chair, and lamp[1] (which is the candle). The central point of Sabbath sanctity dwells in the "chair," meaning the world of Beriah, whose boundary is two thousand cubits surrounding the world of Yetzirah, which is encompassed by Metatron, where the divine name YHVH operates through him. This is the aspect of one thousand cubits surrounding,[2] and the other thousand cubits surrounding symbolize the world of Asiyah, where Sandalphon serves as the vehicle for the divine name Adonai—one representing the mystery of daytime governance on weekdays, and the other the mystery of nighttime governance. Therefore, one must not profane the central point of Sabbath sanctity beyond its domain, and through the addition to the Sabbath, the levels of the mundane are also sanctified.

It is said in the Tikkunim that one who increases expenditure for the Sabbath meal receives an additional soul, which is an increase of the holy spirit, while one who reduces expenditure loses that additional soul and remains impoverished. On folio 88a, it states that on the Sabbath, which is like a bride, one should taste from all the foods and fulfill the obligation of delight. The mystery of "delight" is already explained elsewhere in our work, as is the obligation to wear fine garments. The disciples of the Ari wrote that according to the color of the garments a person wears on the Sabbath in this world, so will they literally be clothed after their death on Sabbath days forever. And therefore one sage was seen dressed in black after his death on Sabbath days, and he declared that this was how he dressed in this world and was punished in that very measure.[A]

Furthermore, it is stated in the Zohar that the

[A] Or: "And for this reason, a certain sage appeared after his death wearing black garments on

[1] These four items (מטה שלחן כסא ומנורה) correspond to the furnishings provided for the prophet Elisha by the Shunammite woman (2 Kings 4:10). In kabbalistic tradition, they represent the four fundamental preparations for the Sabbath, each with its own spiritual significance.

[2] The text presents a complex cosmological model where physical measurements correspond to spiritual boundaries between different worlds. The 'thousand cubits' measurement relates to the Sabbath boundary (techum Shabbat) but is given mystical significance as the demarcation between cosmic realms.

[i] These are the four items Elisha's Shunammite hostess provided for him (2 Kings 4:10), which in kabbalistic tradition represent the four fundamentals of a properly prepared Sabbath home.

חיי בעלה ובניה שיזכו לתורה
אור. ובפרשת תרומה דף קס״ז
זירז לצורך תיקון גבוה שהאיש
יעסוק בתורה לאור נר של
165 שבת כי נשי בההוא עלמא זכיין
בבנייהו ובבעלייהו וכבר נשאל
מר׳ אליעזר לרשב״י נשי בההוא
עלמא מה אינון והעלה אותן
הרבה. והמבין מה שאמרו על
170 פסוק אני ישנה שהמלכות אומר
אני שניה לחכמה[i] בסוד דו
[ii] פרצופין שהיו בה ובבינה celestial guests are the angels who attend the additional soul, which is the Divine Presence. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai instructed in Parashat Vayakhel 170R that a woman should pray at the time of lighting the Sabbath candle for the life of her husband and her sons, that they may merit the light of Torah. And in Parashat Terumah, folio 167, he urged for the sake of higher rectification that a man should en- 175R gage in Torah study by the light of the Sabbath candle, for women in that world merit [reward] through their sons and husbands. Rabbi Eliezer already asked Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai about women's status in that world,[1] and he elevated them considerably. One 180R who understands what they said about the verse "I was asleep" [knows] that the attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) says, "I am second to Wisdom," in the mystery of the dual aspects that were in her and in Binah[2] (Understanding). 185R

נתגלו בסוד ו״ד בדמות חותם

They were revealed in the secret of vav-dalet[3] in the Sabbath days, and he revealed that this was how he had dressed on the Sabbath in this world and was now punished in exactly the same manner" — This alternate translation more clearly conveys the cause-and-effect relationship between the sage's actions in life and his condition after death, specifically highlighting that his punishment corresponded precisely to his failure to honor the Sabbath with appropriate clothing.

[1]This refers to a discussion in the Zohar about whether women have independent spiritual merit in the World to Come or if their reward comes primarily through their role in enabling their male relatives' Torah study. The author notes that Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's answer elevated women's spiritual status.

[2]This refers to the complex kabbalistic concept of 'du-partzufin' (dual countenances or aspects), where divine attributes contain masculine and feminine elements within themselves. This passage specifically relates to how Malkhut (Kingdom) and Binah (Understanding) share this dual nature, creating a mystical connection between these different sefirot (divine emanations).

[3]This refers to Kabbalistic letter symbolism. The Hebrew letters vav (ו) and dalet (ד) represent masculine and feminine principles respectively in mystical teachings.

[i]This interpretation relates to the kabbalistic concept that Malkhut (Kingdom, the lowest sefirah) describes herself as 'second to Wisdom' (Chokhmah, the second highest sefirah), establishing a mystical connection between these seemingly distant divine attributes.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Terumah — The author uses this Zoharic reference to establish the spiritual importance of the Sabbath candles and their connection to Torah study, strengthening his argument about proper Sabbath observance having consequences in both this world and the next. | Cf. Zohar, Vayakhel — This reference emphasizes the spiritual power of the moment of candle lighting and the special role women play in bringing spiritual illumination to their families through this ritual act. | Cf. Song of Songs 5:2, 'I was asleep, but my heart was awake' — This mystical interpretation of Song of Songs presents Malkhut (the Shekhinah or Divine Presence) as the feminine aspect of divinity, which parallels the human feminine role in sanctifying the Sabbath through candle lighting. | Cf. Writings of the Arizal — This reference to Lurianic Kabbalah establishes the mystical principle that physical actions in this world create corresponding spiritual realities in the next world, specifically regarding how one's Sabbath garments in life determine one's spiritual 'clothing' after death. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This reference establishes the spiritual economy of Sabbath observance, where physical generosity in this world results in spiritual abundance in the form of an enhanced soul experience.

המתהפך ועוד עליית ת״ת ומלכות עד הכתר יבין סוד
ברכת הנשים בבקר שמברכות
שעשאני כר״צונו ואין לך כשרה
בנשים אלא העושה רצון בעלה
וצנועה בירכתי ביתה. וטבע
האשה היא הכנה גדולה למזג
בניה אם לטוב אם למוטב יותר
הרבה מהאיש ולכן ימכור אדם
כל מה שיש לו וישא אשה הגונה
וממשפחה כשרה כי כל טוב
אדוניה בידיה. ותחלת קלקול
הבנים ח״ו יצמח מהפקר האשה
כי עקר הצניעות תלוי בנקבה
וע״י כך יהיו הבנים צנועים.
וגם הבעל ע״י יהיה צנוע. וזהו
תחלת הקלקול בדור המבול כי
בנות יולדו להם דכשההולדה
רעה מתאוה גשמית יחוסה
לעצמה לא להקב״ה. ולילית
יש לה מבא להלביש בחותיה
הטמאות באשה פרוצה וע״י
הפריצות הנהוג בעת הזיווג
וכמו שאין שום נברא ונוצר
ונעשה מרגיש בזווג העליון כן
זווג תחתון לא יהיה בגלוי ח״ו.
עוד פריצות הדור הווה בשהזכר
או הנקבה נותנים המחשבה
באחר שלכן נקראים בני תמורה.
וכמו שהאשה ביום יוצאה פרועת
הראש בשוק ופרומה או שאר
מיני פריצות כדאמרי׳ בכתובות
למקום ההוא נדחית נפשה
בלילה בכחות ההפקר וכמה
רעה אשה רעה רחמנא לישזבן
כי מטמא׳ ברית העליון ושפחה
תירש גברתה וכן האיש אם אינו
שומר בריתו כראוי גורם פריצות לאשתו כדאמרי׳ פ״ק דסוטה form of a reversing seal, and furthermore, the ascent of Tiferet and Malkhut to Keter[1] explains the mystery of women's morning blessing, where they bless "who has made me according to His will." And there is no virtuous woman except one who fulfills her husband's will and is modest in the recesses of her home. A woman's nature is a greater influence on her children's temperament, whether for good or bad, much more than the man's influence. Therefore, a man should sell all he has to marry a suitable woman from a worthy family, for all her master's goods are in her hands.[2] The beginning of children's corruption, God forbid, stems from a woman's lack of restraint, because the essence of modesty depends on the female, and through this, the children will be modest. The husband too will become modest through her. This was the beginning of corruption in the generation of the flood, when "daughters were born to them,"[3] for when procreation stems from physical desire, its lineage is attributed to itself, not to the Holy One, blessed be He. Lilith has an entry point to clothe her impure forces in an immodest woman through the immodesty practiced during marital relations. Just as no created being senses the supernal union, so too the earthly union should not be exposed, God forbid. Another immodesty of the present generation occurs when either the male or female directs their thoughts to another during intimacy, which is why such children are called "children of substitution." Just as a woman who goes out in public with uncovered hair, unbuttoned clothing, or other forms of immodesty (as mentioned in Tractate Ketubot), her soul is pushed at night into forces of lawlessness. How evil is an evil woman—may the Merciful One save us—for she defiles the supernal covenant, and "a maidservant inherits her mistress."[4] Similarly, if a man does not properly guard his covenant, he causes immodesty in his wife, as we say in the first chapter of Sotah: Rabbi Yochanan said, "Anyone who is

190R 195R 200R 205R 210R 215R 220R 225R

[1]These are three of the ten divine emanations (sefirot) in Kabbalah. Tiferet represents masculine divine energy, Malkhut represents feminine divine energy, and Keter is the highest divine emanation, representing God's crown or supreme will.

[2]This alludes to Proverbs 31:11, describing the 'woman of valor' whose husband trusts in her management of the household.

[3]This quotes Genesis 6:1, referring to events preceding the flood when 'the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair.'

[4]This quotes Proverbs 30:23, which lists 'a handmaid that is heir to her mistress' among four things that disturb the earth. In this mystical context, it suggests that lower spiritual forces (Lilith) usurp the place of higher ones (the Shekhinah).

אר״י כל המזנה אשתו מזנה עליו וכו׳ וסיים איהו בי קרי ואיהי בי בוציני. ואם פגמה מעשיה ובפרט בדברים המיוחדים אליה תעלם על לבה בהיותה על ערש דוי בקלקול שגרמה לה ולבעלה ובפרט לבניה והכל יזכור לה החכם המודה אותה אם מדבר על אוזן שומעת: [i] promiscuous—his wife will be promiscuous against him," concluding "he [experiences] nocturnal emissions, and she [frequents] places of oil lamps [where illicit meetings occur]." If she has damaged her deeds, especially in matters particular to her, she should recall in her heart when she is on her sickbed the corruption she caused to herself, her husband, and especially her children. The wise person who guides her confession[1] should remind her of all this if he speaks to a receptive ear. 230R 235R

פרק ט״ז

Chapter 16

מה שחדשנו בנוסח הוידוי [ii] אלהי ואלהי אבותי בו׳ המובא לעיל בסדרר הוידוי [iii] [iv]

Regarding what we have innovated[2] in the wording of the confession[3] "My God and God of my fathers, etc." that was presented above in the order of confession

ויכוין החולה כי נכלל בודויו זה ג׳ ודוים נגד חטא עון

The sick person should intend that his confession includes three confessions corresponding to sin, in- 5R

[1] This refers back to the broader context of Ma'avar Yabok as a guide for deathbed practices, where a religious guide would help the dying person through proper confession (vidui). This passage specifically addresses what women should confess regarding their particular religious obligations.
[2] The author uses the first-person plural ('we have innovated') which is a common rhetorical style in rabbinic writing, often called the 'royal we' or 'authorial we.' It doesn't necessarily indicate multiple authors.
[3] This indicates that the author has made modifications to the traditional deathbed confession text, a significant liturgical innovation that would require explanation and justification.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The passage is steeped in Kabbalistic cosmology, particularly the Zoharic understanding of human sexuality as a reflection of divine unions between Tiferet (masculine) and Malkhut (feminine). The warnings about immodesty are based on the belief that human actions affect cosmic harmonies. | Cf. Genesis 6:1-2 — The author interprets the biblical story of the flood as being caused by sexual impropriety, suggesting that the daughters mentioned in Genesis 6 were born from improper desires rather than sacred intentions. | Cf. Tractate Ketubot — The author draws on rabbinic teachings about modest behavior for women to support his mystical understanding of how immodesty affects the soul and cosmic harmony. | Cf. Tractate Sotah — The quote is used to establish a principle of measure-for-measure punishment, where a man's sexual impropriety leads to his wife's unfaithfulness, reinforcing the kabbalistic idea that human behavior has corresponding effects in both physical and spiritual realms. | Cf. Proverbs 30:23 — This biblical verse is reinterpreted kabbalistically to suggest that improper behavior allows lower spiritual forces (the "maidservant" Lilith) to usurp the place of higher ones (the "mistress" Shekhinah).
[ii] The word 'vidui' (confession) refers specifically to the ritual confession prayer recited before death. This is a central practice in Jewish end-of-life ritual, designed to facilitate spiritual reconciliation and the soul's peaceful transition.
[iii] There is a typographical error in the original text with the word 'סדרר' (seder), which should be 'סדר' (order). This refers to the structured sequence of the confession prayer presented earlier in Ma'avar Yabok.
[iv] Cf. Vidui (confession) — The author is referring to modifications he made to the standard deathbed confession text that was presented earlier in the book. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This is a self-reference to an earlier section of the book where the author presented the full text of the confession prayer that is now being discussed.

ופשע[i] ולתקון אלפא ביתא רבתי בינונית וזעירא את מהם בבינה והשנית בת״ת והשלישית במלכות ולתקון ת״ת ומלכות ויסוד הנפגמים בחטא עון ופשע והוא כלל ופרט וכלל חטאתי עויתי פשעתי הוא כלל בג׳ מיני עבירות הפוגמים כנזכר ואח״כ מפרט באלפא ביתא ואח״כ כולל במלות סרתי ממצותיך וממשפטיך הטובים שהם בחינות ת״ת ויסוד ומלכות. וכבר כתבנו בכונת הודוי בהקדמתינו למעירי שחר. לבד זה נוסיף הכא כאשר הורנו הגאון מפאנו בדרושי ספר העסיס שלו כי באמרו מה נאמר לפניך עד סוף הודוי יכוין ליחד בעל הרצון המרומם מכל ברכה ותהלה נשמת כל הנשמות עלת כל העלות ברצון העליון. והרצון ברעותין שהם המחשבות הנעלמות ואולי זה יהיה בחינת מלכין קדמאין[ii] שהם בחכמת הכתר כנתבאר בספר אלימה.[iii] והרעותין בנהורין שהם סוד התקונים שהם בכתר בינת הכתר דאינון אור קדמון צא ומצוחצח ונהורין. והם הדוגמא העליונה לאור החוזר ממטה למעלה להשגת הרעותין

iquity, and transgression, and to rectify the large, medium, and small alphabets—one of them in Binah, the second in Tiferet, and the third in Malkhut—and to repair Tiferet, Malkhut, and Yesod, which are damaged by sin, iniquity, and transgression. This follows the pattern of general-specific-general:[1] "I have sinned, I have transgressed, I have rebelled" is the general statement covering the three types of transgressions that cause damage as mentioned. Then he specifies through the alphabetical confession, and afterward includes everything in the words "I have turned away from Your commandments and Your good judgments," which represent the aspects of Tiferet, Yesod, and Malkhut.

We have already written about the intention of confession in our introduction to Me'irei Shachar. Beyond this, we will add here what the Gaon of Fano[2] taught us in his discourses in his book Ha'asis: when reciting "What can we say before You" until the end of the confession, one should intend to unify the Master of Will—who is exalted beyond all blessing and praise, the Soul of all souls, the Cause of all causes[A]—with the Supreme Will. And the Will with the Desires, which are the hidden thoughts—perhaps this refers to the Primordial Kings who exist in the Wisdom of Keter,[B] as explained in the book Elimah. And the Desires with the Lights, which are the secret of the Rectifications that exist in Keter, the Understanding of Keter, which are the Primordial Light, Pure and Radiant, and the Lights. These are the supreme model for the [A] Or: "the Master of Will who is elevated above all blessing and praise, the Soul of all souls, the Prime Cause of all causes" — This alternate translation preserves the meaning while using slightly different theological terminology that might be more familiar to some readers.

[B] Or: "perhaps this corresponds to the Primordial Kings that are in the Wisdom aspect of Keter" — This alternate translation more precisely conveys the relationship between the Primordial Kings and the specific aspect of Keter being referenced.

[1] This refers to the rabbinic hermeneutical principle of 'klal u-prat u-klal' (general-specific-general), which is being applied here to the structure of confession.

[2] This refers to Rabbi Menachem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist and Talmudist who was an important transmitter of Lurianic Kabbalah in Italy.

[i] The Hebrew terms חטא (chet), עון (avon), and פשע (pesha) represent a hierarchical taxonomy of transgression in rabbinic literature: chet refers to inadvertent sins, avon to deliberate violations, and pesha to rebellious acts against God.

[ii] The 'Primordial Kings' (מלכין קדמאין) is a kabbalistic concept from Lurianic Kabbalah referring to primordial worlds that existed and were destroyed before the current creation, associated with the concept of 'breaking of the vessels' (shevirat ha-kelim).

[iii] Sefer Elimah is a major kabbalistic work by Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), one of the foremost systematizers of kabbalah before Isaac Luria.

שרש האור ישר ונהורין הם ראשי נקודות נעלמות והם שרשים לכל המאמרות ונהורין מתפשטים לעשר צחצחות הובא נקודת שמותם בתקונים. ובתוך הצחצחות מתפשט אור הספירות והספירות מתלבשים במאמרות הנפש אליהם הוא כלל המאמרות. רוח אליהם הם הספירות המתלבשים במאמרות נשמה הם הנהורין חיה הרעותין יחידה רעותה וכלם נתנו מרועה אחד בעל הרצון. ונוסח מה נאמר מורה התקשרות נשמה בנשמות למבין ומעיין בו. והאור מתפשט בספירות מכתר לתר״ך עמודי אור[i] שבו וכלם נכללים מכל א׳ מהם ומתר״ך עמודי כתר לחכמה ומחכמה לל״ב נתיבותיה[ii] ומשם לבינה ומבינה לחמשים שעריה[iii] וכל א׳ בלול מכלם ומשם לחסד ומחסד לע״ב גשרים[iv] ומשם לגבורה ומגבורה לרי״ו אורותיה[v] ומשם לת״ת ומת״ת לע׳ ענפים[vi] ומשם לנצח עד המלכות. ומשם יורד הרוחניות בכסאות ששם בחינת השרפים ובהם ד׳ דרגין ושית סמכין ומכסאות לחיות שהן שבעה היכלות ומחיות לאופנים.

reflected light ascending from below to attain the Desires, which are the root of the direct light.[A] The Lights are the heads of hidden points, and they are the roots of all utterances, and the Lights extend into the ten Radiances, the points of their names brought in Tikkunim. 40R

Within these Radiances, the light of the Sefirot extends, and the Sefirot clothe themselves in utterances. The Nefesh corresponds to the totality of utterances. The Ruach corresponds to the Sefirot clothed in utterances. The Neshamah corresponds to the Lights. The Chayah corresponds to the Desires. The Yechidah corresponds to the Will. And all of them were given by one Shepherd, the Master of Will. The formula “What can we say” indicates the connection of soul to souls for one who understands and contemplates it. 45R 50R

The light extends through the Sefirot from Keter to the 620 pillars of light[1] within it, all of which are included in each of them. From the 620 pillars of Keter to Chokhmah, and from Chokhmah to its 32 paths, and from there to Binah, and from Binah to its 50 gates, each one including all the others. From there to Chesed, and from Chesed to its 72 bridges, and from there to Gevurah, and from Gevurah to its 216 lights, and from there to Tiferet, and from Tiferet to its 70 branches, and from there to Netzach, all the way to Malkhut. 55R 60R 65R

From there, the spirituality descends into the Thrones, where the aspect of the Seraphim resides,

[A] Or: “for the returning light that ascends from below to apprehend the Desires, which form the root of the direct light” — The term ‘returning light’ (or ‘rebounding light’) might better convey the kabbalistic concept of or chozer than ‘reflected light,’ and ‘apprehend’ might better capture the mystical nature of the relationship between the lights and desires.

[1] The number 620 (תר״ך) equals the numerical value of ‘keter’ (כתר, crown) when spelled out in full, plus the value of the letter itself, representing the complete manifestation of the highest divine emanation.

[i] The Hebrew letters תר״ך (tav, reish, khaf) have the numerical value of 620, referring to the 620 pillars of light said to emanate from the divine crown (Keter).

[ii] The ‘32 paths’ refers to the 32 paths of wisdom described in Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), consisting of the ten sefirot and the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet.

[iii] The ‘50 gates of Binah (Understanding)’ is a kabbalistic concept representing the complete emanation of divine understanding, with tradition holding that Moses achieved 49 of these gates but not the 50th.

[iv] The Hebrew letters ע״ב (ayin, bet) have the numerical value of 72, referring to the 72-letter divine name derived from three verses in Exodus 14:19-21.

[v] The Hebrew letters רי״ו (reish, yod, vav) have the numerical value of 216, which is 3 times 72, possibly referring to the expansion of the 72-letter divine name.

[vi] The Hebrew letter ע׳ (ayin) has the numerical value of 70, representing the 70 branches or aspects of Tiferet, possibly corresponding to the 70 nations or 70 languages in rabbinic tradition.

ומהאופנים למדורים קדושים ומשם לגלגלים ומגלגלים לחומר פשוט גרם החמישי ומשם
70 לארבעה יסודות שמהם הורכבו כל הנבראים תחתונים ברוך שככה לו בעולמו וברא כל אלה לכבודו: [i] containing four levels and six supports.[1] From the Thrones to the Chayot, which are the seven palaces, and from the Chayot to the Ofanim. From the 70R Ofanim to the holy dwellings, and from there to the celestial spheres, and from the spheres to the simple matter of the fifth element,[2] and from there to the four elements from which all lower creatures were formed. Blessed is He who has such a universe and 75R created all these for His glory.

אח״כ יאמר רבון כל כל
75 העולמים[ii] המובא לעיל בסדר הוידוי עד סוף כל הוידוי. [iv iii]

Afterward he shall say "Master of all Worlds" [A] which was presented above in the order of confession[B3] until the end of the entire confession.[4]

[A] Or: "Afterward one should recite 'Sovereign of all the Universes'" — While 'Master of all Worlds' is accurate, 'Sovereign of all the Universes' might better convey the cosmic scope of the divine title. However, since 'Ribono shel Olam' is a standard liturgical formula, the original translation may be more recognizable to readers familiar with Jewish prayer.

[B] Or: "in the vidui liturgy" — Using the transliterated Hebrew term 'vidui' preserves the technical religious meaning that might not be fully captured by 'confession,' which has different connotations in other religious traditions.

[1] This appears to describe the structure of the angelic realm of the Seraphim as having four primary angels corresponding to the four 'camps' of angels described in Jewish mystical tradition, supported by six secondary angelic forces.

[2] In medieval Jewish philosophy and Kabbalah, the 'fifth element' or 'quintessence' (החומר החמישי) refers to the ethereal substance of which celestial bodies were thought to be composed, distinct from the four elements of the sublunary world.

[3] This confirms that Ma'avar Yabok is structured as a practical manual, with prayers presented in full in one section and then referenced when needed in other sections, allowing religious functionaries to navigate efficiently between different ritual scenarios.

[1] This instruction clarifies that even when adapting the confession for specific circumstances, the

[i] Cf. Zohar — The author draws on Zoharic concepts of how human transgressions damage the connections between divine attributes (sefirot), and how proper confession with mystical intention (kavvanah) can repair these connections. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author refers to his own previous work to indicate continuity in his teachings about proper intention during confession, suggesting this is part of a comprehensive system. | Cf. Sefer Ha'asis by Rabbi Menachem Azariah da Fano — The author acknowledges Rabbi Menachem Azariah da Fano as his teacher and source for the detailed kabbalistic system he presents, establishing his intellectual lineage and the authority behind these mystical teachings. | Cf. Sefer Elimah by Rabbi Moses Cordovero — The reference shows the author integrating Cordoverian Kabbalah into his system, particularly regarding the complex structure of the highest sefirah of Keter and its relationship to primordial cosmic structures. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author draws on this text to explain the structure of divine emanation and how human intentions during confession interact with this cosmic structure to create spiritual repair.

[ii] This appears to be a scribal error with the word 'כל' (all) repeated twice. In standard Hebrew it would be written just once as 'רבון כל העולמים'.

[i] This instruction refers to a prayer formula that was presented in full earlier in the text. Such cross-references are common in liturgical manuals like Ma'avar Yabok to avoid repetition of lengthy prayer texts.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This reference confirms that Ma'avar Yabok is structured as a practical manual, with prayers presented in full in one section and then referenced in other sections where they should be recited. | Cf. Ribono shel Olam prayer — The use of this traditional prayer formula places the deathbed confession within the established framework of Jewish penitential prayers, connecting the individual's final moments to the broader tradition of Jewish spiritual practice.

פרק י״ז

Chapter 17

קול אומר בן אדם[i] קרא הקריאה הזאת תמיד[ii iii]

A voice proclaims:[1] “Son of man, recite this reading constantly”[2]

מקומות רבו מספר מצינו בדברי חכמים כי יש לאדם הצדיק לשמוח שמחה רבה ביום מיתתו כי יודע ה׳ ימי תמימים ונחלתם לעולם תהיה ונשמת הצדיק היא מרכבה לשכינה[iv] גם אחר המות כנודע ממדרגת חנוך ואליהו מרכבת האבות. הנה אמרו בכתובות פ׳ הנושא מת מתוך שחוק סימן יפה לו. והנה טוב מאוד זה מות. ובפ׳ תרומה דף קמ״ט רשב״י פי׳ בזה. ואמרו במדרש ובגמרין וירושלמי פ״ג דע״א. בשעת סלוקן של צדיקים הקב״ה מראה להם מתן שכרן ונפשם שבעה והם ישנים. וכתב בעל העקדה בשער כ״ב שראיית מתן שכר ביום המיתה מתחייב מסמיכותו אל קבול השכר כמו

We find numerous instances in the words of our Sages where the righteous person should greatly rejoice on the day of their death,[3] for “the LORD knows the days of the blameless, and their inheritance shall be forever.” The soul of the righteous becomes a chariot for the Divine Presence[A] even after death, as is known from the levels of Enoch and Elijah, and the chariot of the Patriarchs. The Talmud states in Ketubot, chapter “He Who Marries”: “One who dies while laughing—this is a good sign for them.” And “behold, it was very good” refers to death.[4] In Parashat Terumah, page 149, Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai explains this. And they said in the Midrash, Gemara, and Jerusalem Talmud, third chapter of Avodah Zarah: “At the time when the righteous depart, the Holy One, blessed be He, shows them their reward, and their souls are satisfied as they sleep.”

The author of the Akedah wrote in Gate 22 that [A] Or: “vehicle for the Divine Presence” — While ‘chariot’ is the literal translation of ‘merkavah,’ the modern term ‘vehicle’ might better convey the functional meaning to contemporary readers—that the righteous soul serves as a means for divine manifestation.

complete concluding formula should still be recited in full, maintaining the ritual’s integrity regardless of the circumstances.

[2] This opening formula establishes divine authority for the text that follows, similar to prophetic introductions in biblical literature.

[3] This appears to be a heading for a meditation on mortality that follows in the text, marking it as something to be contemplated regularly as spiritual preparation.

[4] This striking opening sets the tone for the entire passage, establishing the counterintuitive mystical perspective that death—far from being feared—should be celebrated by the righteous as a spiritual promotion.

[1] This is a rabbinic interpretation of Genesis 1:31 that paradoxically identifies death as part of what God declared ‘very good’ in creation, suggesting it has positive spiritual value rather than being merely the result of sin.

[iii] The phrase ‘son of man’ (ben adam) echoes God’s form of address to the prophet Ezekiel throughout his book, creating a prophetic tone for this meditation.

[iv] The instruction to recite ‘constantly’ reflects the Jewish practice of regular meditation on mortality as a spiritual discipline, not out of morbidity but as preparation for a righteous life and death.

[v] Cf. Ezekiel — This opening phrase adopts prophetic language to establish the spiritual gravity of what follows, suggesting that the reading is of divine origin and importance, similar to how God addressed Ezekiel before delivering messages. | Cf. Ma’avar Yabok — This line serves as an introduction to a meditation on mortality that follows in Ma’avar Yabok, marking it as something to be recited regularly as spiritual preparation for death.

[vi] The concept of becoming a “chariot for the Divine Presence” (merkavah la-Shekhinah) is a mystical image describing how the righteous soul serves as a vehicle for divine revelation, similar to Ezekiel’s vision of the divine chariot. This status continues even after death.

שזהרורי חמה יראו בעולם קודם
זריחת השמש כן השכר להיותו
מזומן להם לכן יתחייב הראותו
ביום המיתה. והבדרשי כתב
שבסור המסכים הטבעיים אשר
שמם האל בבריאותו מחוברים
לנפשו המונעים אמיתת השגתו
ישיגו בהכרח מה שהיה נעלם
מתחלה. ולפי האמת הוראת
השכר סמוך למיתה אינו אלא
כדי שתפרד בלא צער כדכתב
הרב האלשיך בפי׳ מאמר זה.
וגרסינן בכתובות פרק הנושא
א״ר יוסי בן שאול בשעה שהצדיק
נפטר מן העולם אומרים מלאכי
השרת לפני הקב״ה רבש״ע
צדיק פלוני בא אומר להם יבא
בשלום וצדיקים יוצאים לקראתו
ואומרים לו יבא שלום ינוחו על
משכבותם. עוד שם ג׳ כתות של
מלאכי השרת יוצאות לקראתו
אחת אומרת לו בא בשלום וכו׳.
ואמרי׳ במס׳ שבת על גופן של
צדיקים הוא אומר יבא שלום
ינוחו על משכבותם ועל נשמתן
הוא אומר והיתה נפש אדוני
צרורה וגו׳. וגם נראה גדולת
הצדיקים ביום מיתתן מרבה בר
נחמני שהכריע בין הישיבה של
מעלה ולא היה כדאי הכרעתו
אלא בעת דנח נפשיה שלהיות כי
לא בשמים היא הוצרך ההכרעה
מאחד ממקבלי התורה בעודו
חי ברם היה סמוך למיתה כי אז
תוסף רוחם ומשם נראה שהספד
הוא ז׳ ימים דאז נפל פתקא
מן שמיא לכו לבתיכם לשלום.
כדאי׳ פ׳ השוכר את הפועלים.
ונראה ג״כ טוב הצפון לצדיקים
ממ״ש רבי אבהו ואני אמרתי
לריק יגעתי וריק בגימטרי״א
ש״י והיה אומר כי היה סבור

seeing one's reward at the time of death necessarily follows from its proximity to receiving the reward—just as rays of the sun appear in the world before sunrise, so too the reward, being prepared for them, must be shown on the day of death. And Bedarschi wrote that when the natural veils that God placed in his creation, which are attached to one's soul and prevent true comprehension, are removed,[1] one necessarily perceives what was previously hidden. In truth, the revelation of reward just before death is only so that the soul may depart without distress, as Rabbi Alshikh wrote in his explanation of this statement. 25R 30R

The Talmud states in Ketubot: Rabbi Yosi ben Shaul said, "When a righteous person departs from the world, the ministering angels say before the Holy One, blessed be He, 'Master of the Universe, a certain righteous person is arriving.' He says to them, 'Let him come in peace,' and the righteous go out to greet him and say to him, 'May he come in peace; they shall rest on their beds.'" It also states there that three groups of ministering angels go out to meet him; one says, "Come in peace," etc. And we say in Tractate Shabbat, regarding the bodies of the righteous, it says, "May he come in peace; they shall rest on their beds," and regarding their souls, it says, "The soul of my lord shall be bound in the bond of life," etc. 35R 40R 45R

The greatness of the righteous on the day of their death is also apparent from Rabbah bar Nachmani, who decided between the heavenly academy, and his decision was only worthy when his soul departed. Since "it is not in heaven," the decision had to come from one who had received the Torah while still alive, yet it was close to his death, for then "their spirit increases."[2] From this, it appears that the mourning period is seven days, for then a note fell from heaven: "Go to your homes in peace," as stated in the chapter "One Who Hires Workers." 50R 55R 60R

The goodness stored away for the righteous is also evident from what Rabbi Abbahu said: "And I said, 'I have labored in vain,'" where "vain" (ריק) has the [2]The text presents a Neoplatonic concept that the physical body and its sensations act as veils that obscure spiritual reality. Death removes these veils, allowing the soul to perceive divine truth directly.

[1]This refers to the Jewish mystical concept that as death approaches, the soul begins to detach from bodily limitations and can access higher spiritual knowledge, explaining why deathbed statements of the righteous are considered especially significant.

להתעדן בי״ש עולמות[i] שעתיד
65 הקב״ה להנחיל לכל צדיק אך
עתה מלבד י״ש עולמות היו
מראים לו עידון תלת עשר נהרי
אפרסמונא דכיא[ii] הנמשכים
מתוך עמודי אור שבמדת הכתר.
70 וי״ש הם בחכמה ושם בחינת
עולם התהו. שאין בו השגה כלל.
והרגיל בשותא דרבנן יבין מהו
ריק ותהו והבל שאמר כאן ר׳
אבהו. גם נראה שכר הצדיקים
75 ממה שאמרו הג׳ צדיקים אחרים
שכל אחד מהם אמר פסוק א׳
בשעת סילוקו ובהרבה מקומות
אחרים בגמרא ובמדרשים:
ובזהר פ׳ ויחי כתוב וצדיקי איתי
80 להו למחדי ביומא דמסתלקי
מן עלמא. וכי לאו יקרא עלאה
איהו דמטרוניתא אתת לאובלא
לון להיכלא למחדי בהו כל
יומא. דקב״ה לא אשתעשע אלא
85 בנשמתהון דצדיקיא ואתערותא
דרחימו דישראל לגבי קב״ה
נשמתהון דצדיקיא לתתא מתערי
לון דאינון אתיין מסטרא דמלכא
מסטרא דדכורא ואתערותא דא
90 מטא לנוקבא מסטרא דדכירא
וכו׳. ולכן יום פטירתם של
צדיקים נקרא הלולא[iii] בדחזינן
בעובדא דר׳ יצחק בפ׳ הנ״ל
כשאביו א״ל שהיו עתידים לצאת
95 לקראתו י״ב צדיקים ושהיה
ג׳ ימים שהיו מתקנים מקום
כבודו באורות עליונים. והאריך
שם להודיעו גודל הכנת מקום numerical value of 310, and he was saying that he had thought he would delight in the 310 worlds that 65R the Holy One, blessed be He, will bequeath to each righteous person. But now, beyond the 310 worlds, they were showing him the delight of the thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil that flow from the pillars of light in the attribute of Keter. And the 310 are in 70R Chokhmah, and there is the aspect of the World of Tohu,[A] which cannot be comprehended at all. One who is familiar with rabbinical discourse will understand what "vain," "void," and "futility" mean, as Rabbi Abbahu says here. 75R

The reward of the righteous is also evident from what the three other righteous individuals said, each of whom recited a verse at the time of their departure, and in many other places in the Talmud and Midrashim. 80R

In the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, it is written:
"The righteous should rejoice on the day they depart from the world.[B] Is it not a supreme honor that the Matronita (Divine Presence) comes to escort them to the palace to rejoice with them every day? For the 85R Holy One, blessed be He, delights only in the souls of the righteous, and the arousal of Israel's love toward the Holy One, blessed be He, is through the souls of the righteous below, who arouse them, for they come from the side of the King, from the masculine 90R side, and this arousal reaches the feminine from the masculine side," etc.

Therefore, the day of the righteous' departure is called a hillula (wedding celebration), as we see in the story of Rabbi Yitzchak in the aforementioned 95R passage, when his father told him that twelve righteous individuals were prepared to go out to greet him, and that for three days they had been prepar-

[A] Or: "World of Formlessness" — While 'Tohu' is the standard transliteration, 'Formlessness' better conveys the meaning of this kabbalistic concept to readers unfamiliar with Hebrew terminology, referring to the primordial state before differentiation.

[B] Or: "And the righteous have reason to rejoice on the day they depart from the world" — This translation more clearly conveys that the original Aramaic 'איתי להו' implies 'they have' or 'there is for them' a reason or cause for rejoicing, not merely that they should rejoice as a commandment.

[i] The numerical value of י״ש (310) represents the 310 worlds that each righteous person will inherit in the World to Come, a concept found in rabbinic literature. The text elevates this reward by adding the "thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil."

[ii] These "rivers of pure balsam oil" are a mystical Zoharic image for celestial channels of divine pleasure reserved for the righteous in the afterlife. They represent a higher form of spiritual delight than the 310 worlds mentioned earlier.

[iii] The term "hillula" (wedding celebration) is used in Kabbalistic literature to refer to the death anniversary of great sages, particularly Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai. This reframes death as a joyous spiritual union rather than a sorrowful separation.

רשב״י בעולם ההוא יעויין
100 משם ובסוף אמר לו דבהלולא
רבא דר׳ שמעון בן יוחאי תהא
מתקן פתוריה. הנה כי מיתת
הצדיקים היא חופה עליונה
שלהם. ואמר רשב״י בתחלת
105 אדרת האזינו[i] כי צוה שיביאו לו
רבי יצחק שהיה ערב לו להביאו
עמו אמר לרבי אלעזר בנו אימא
לרבי יצחק דיסדר מלוהי ויתיב
לגבאי זכאה חולקיה. וכמה
110 פעמים אמר. זכאה חולקי יומא
דין. הנה כי יום שמחה וחדוה
לצדיקים ועל זה נאמר יקר
בעיני ה׳ המותה לחסידיו: ועיין
מדרש רבה בפרשה ט׳ על פסוק
115 והנה טוב מאד שהפליג לדבר
בטוביות יום המות ובטוביות
היסורין. וכן אמרו בפרק ואלו
מגלחין כי הקב״ה חומד נפשות
ושמח בהן בכלה חדשה. רוכב
120 ערבות[ii] שהוא מקום שבו תתעדן
הנשמה כדמשמע מתוך דברי
ההקפות שיסדרו לפנינו בחג
הוא שש ושמח בבא אליו נפש נקי
צדיק. וכן אמר שלמה בחכמתו
125 וחוסה במותו צדיק. ואפי׳
לפי דברי הפלוסוף יוכרח
טוביות יום המות שהם חלקו
המאמרות באמרם שהם חלקי
המציאות לעצם ומקרה. וחלקו
130 המקרה לתשע קראו אותם עשרה
מאמרות. מאמר ראשון הוא
העצם. מאמר שני נקרא מאמר
האנה. והשלישי מאמר המצב.
והרביעי מאמר שיפעל וכו׳
135 ואין לנו להאריך בדברים שבדו

ing his place of honor with supernal lights. He elaborated there to inform him of the greatness of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's place in that world (see there), and in the end, he said to him, "At the great hillula of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, you shall prepare his table." Thus, the death of the righteous is their supernal wedding canopy. 100R 105R

Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai said at the beginning of the Idra Ha'azinu that he commanded them to bring Rabbi Yitzchak, who had guaranteed to bring him along. He said to his son Rabbi Elazar, "Tell Rabbi Yitzchak to arrange his affairs and sit with me; fortunate is his portion." And he said many times, "Fortunate is my portion on this day." Thus, it is a day of joy and gladness for the righteous, and of this it is said, "Precious in the eyes of the LORD is the death of His pious ones." 110R 115R

See also Midrash Rabbah, Parashah 9, on the verse "And behold, it was very good," which elaborates on the goodness of the day of death and the goodness of sufferings. Similarly, they said in the chapter "And These Shave" that the Holy One, blessed be He, desires souls and rejoices in them like a new bride. The Rider of Aravot,[1] which is the place where the soul delights, as implied in the words of the Hakafot (Circlings) that they will arrange before us on the festival, rejoices when the pure soul of a righteous person comes to Him. And so Solomon said in his wisdom, "And He spares the righteous at their death." 120R 125R

Even according to the philosopher,[2] the goodness of the day of death must be acknowledged, for they divided the statements in their saying that they are parts of existence into substance and accident. And they divided accident into nine, calling them the ten statements. The first statement is substance. The second statement is called the statement of "where." 130R 135R

[1] This divine title from Psalm 68:5 refers to God as transcending the highest heaven. The text uses this image to depict God joyfully receiving the souls of the righteous, similar to a bridegroom receiving his bride.

[1] The text incorporates Aristotelian philosophical categories (the ten statements or categories) to argue that even from a philosophical perspective, death represents the completion of human purpose rather than its negation.

[ii] This refers to the "Idra Ha'azinu" (Assembly of Ha'azinu), a mystical gathering of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his disciples recorded in the Zohar, where profound kabbalistic teachings were revealed. It is named after the Torah portion "Ha'azinu".

[iii] This is a divine title meaning "Rider of the Highest Heaven" (based on Psalm 68:5), referring to God as dwelling in the highest celestial realm called Aravot, where righteous souls experience divine delight after death.

מלבם רק נשכיל שהם אמרו במאמר האנה שהוא ראשית כל התנועות בהתחלתן וכל תנועה תורה על חסרון המתנועע כמו שהמנוחה מורה על שלימותו והגעת תכליתו הנה האדם במותו שהוא נח מהרגשותיו מורה על כי הגיע לתכליתו. ולהלהיב לב הקוראים להיות תמיד בה׳ מבטחם ובפרט ביום המיתה בחרתי להציע פה מה שהוגד לאלוף הדור מהר״רי קאר״ו וג״כ שהחכם גלא״נטי בפירוש איכה הנקרא קול בוכים רמז מנו קצת בכל מקום בפרטותו יתבאר כתר גדולת הצדיקים בעולם העליון וכה הוגד אליו: [i]

The third is the statement of "position." The fourth is the statement of "action," etc. We need not elaborate on things they invented, but we should understand that they said in the statement of "where" that it is the beginning of all movements in their commencement, and every movement indicates a deficiency in the one moving, just as rest indicates completeness and the attainment of one's purpose. Thus, a person at death, who rests from their sensations, indicates that they have reached their purpose.

To inflame the hearts of readers to always place their trust in the LORD, especially on the day of death, I have chosen to present here what was told to the leader of the generation, Rabbi Joseph Karo, and also what the sage Galanti alluded to in his commentary on Lamentations called "Kol Bochim." In each place, the details will be explained regarding the crown of greatness that the righteous possess in the supernal world, and thus it was told to him:

פרק י״ח

Chapter 18

אחר שבליל שבת שלשים לאדר שנת שי״ן [ii] נאמרלו כי ידבק בה׳ ותמיד יסדר המשניות ובזה יגדיל השם שבחו בכמות ואיכות כאשר היה באמת נאמר לו ובתר

After the Sabbath night of the thirtieth of Adar in the year 310 [1550 CE], it was told to him: "Cleave to the Lord and always arrange the Mishnayot,[1] and through this the Name will magnify His praise in quantity and quality." As was indeed told to him:

[1] This refers to the practice of regularly studying the Mishnah, the first major written collection of Jewish oral traditions. The text suggests that this specific spiritual practice leads to divine favor.

[i] Cf. Ketubot 103b — This Talmudic source is cited to support the idea that death for the righteous is not a tragedy but rather a joyous transition, as evidenced by the positive interpretation of dying with a smile. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah 149b — The Zohar provides a mystical interpretation of Genesis 1:31, suggesting that death itself is part of the divine good of creation, particularly for the righteous who transition to spiritual reward. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Avodah Zarah, Chapter 3 — This reference supports the concept that righteous souls experience divine revelation and preview their spiritual reward at the moment of death, making it a desirable transition rather than a fearful one. | Cf. Sefer HaAkedah (by Rabbi Isaac Arama), Gate 22 — This philosophical source provides a rational explanation for the mystical concept of seeing one's reward before death, framing it as a natural preview of what is about to be fully experienced. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This Zoharic passage provides the mystical basis for the concept of 'hillula' (celebration) associated with the death of righteous individuals, depicting it as a divine escort and spiritual wedding rather than a sorrowful event. | Cf. Bava Metzia 86a — This reference illustrates how the moment of death can be a time of spiritual elevation and clarity for the righteous, when they can access divine wisdom and even resolve heavenly disputes. | Cf. Psalms 116:15 — This biblical verse is cited as the fundamental scriptural basis for the entire discussion, establishing that God values and treasures the death of the righteous rather than viewing it as a tragedy. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah on Genesis 9 — This midrashic source develops the paradoxical concept that death is part of what God declared 'very good' in creation, suggesting it has positive spiritual value rather than being merely the result of sin.

[i] The Hebrew year 310 (shin) corresponds to 1550 CE. The use of the letter shin (numerical value 300) plus yod (10) indicates a date in the Jewish calendar.

כל דין אזכך לאתוקדא על
קדושת שמי[i] שזהו יום מיתתו
בנזכר. וכל חובך ועוייתך
ישתארון בנורא. ותסתלק
מתמן כעמר נקי. ויפקון כל
צדיקיא דבגנתא דעדן לקראתך
ויקבלון יתך בכמה שיראן וכמה
תושבחן וידברוך קדמיהון כחתן
דמהלך בראש וכולהון מלוין
יתך עד דתמטי לחופה דילך
והא. אזדמנו לך שבעה חופות
זו לפנים מזו ושבעה חופות
אחרנין זו למעלה מזו[ii] ובחופה
פנימאה ועילאה שבע נהרן
דאפרסמונא[iii] ותמן מתקנן לך
כורסייא דדהבא בשבע דרגין
וקביעין בה כמא מרגלאן ואבנין
דיקר דלית להו טימי ולעילא
מן כורסייא תליא כתרא דדהבא
וקביעין בה מרגלאן ואבנין
דיקר והא כל צדיקיא ילוון יתך
וישוררו קמך עד דתמטי לחופה
קדמאה ותמן ילבשון יתך לבושי
דיקר. וכן בכל חופה וחופה עד
שביעאה ובתר יעלון יתך לחופי

"And after all this, I will purify you to be consumed for the sanctification of My Name"[A]—this refers to the day of his death, as mentioned. "And all your sins and iniquities will remain in the fire.[B] And you will ascend from there like pure wool.[C] And all the 10R righteous ones in the Garden of Eden will come out to meet you and receive you with many songs and praises, and they will lead you before them like a groom who walks at the head,[1] and all of them will accompany you until you reach your wedding canopy. 15R Behold, seven canopies are prepared for you, one inside the other, and seven other canopies, one above the other. And in the innermost and highest canopy are seven rivers of pure balsam oil,[2] and there a golden throne is prepared for you with seven levels,[3] set with numerous pearls and precious stones that have no price. And above the throne hangs a golden crown, set with pearls and precious stones. And all the righteous will accompany you and sing before you until you reach the first canopy, and there 25R they will dress you in precious garments. And so in each canopy until the seventh. And afterward they will bring you up to the higher canopies and dress you in precious garments, until when you enter the final canopy, you will have fourteen precious garments 30R

[A] Or: "And after all this, I will refine you to be burnt as an offering for the sanctification of My Name" — The Aramaic term "לאתוקדא" literally refers to burning, and in mystical contexts often alludes to a spiritual refinement through fire. This alternate translation emphasizes the sacrificial metaphor implied in the original text.

[B] Or: "And all your debts and transgressions will be left behind in the fire" — The Aramaic terms "חובך" and "עוייתך" can be rendered more specifically as "debts" and "transgressions," highlighting the concept of spiritual accounting in kabbalistic thought.

[C] Or: "And you will depart from there like cleansed wool" — The Aramaic "תסתלק" could also be translated as "depart" rather than "ascend," and the wool metaphor refers to the whitening process of purification, which might be better captured by "cleansed" rather than simply "pure."

[2] This comparison to a groom reflects the mystical concept of death as a form of marriage between the soul and the divine, a reunion with its source that is celebrated rather than mourned.

[3] In rabbinic literature, these rivers represent the highest form of spiritual pleasure reserved for the righteous. The number seven signifies completeness or perfection in Jewish tradition.

[4] The seven levels of the throne likely correspond to the seven lower sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah, representing the soul's mastery of all spiritual attributes.

[ii] This phrase uses language reminiscent of martyrdom ("kiddush hashem"—sanctification of God's name), suggesting that the righteous death described is viewed as a sacred sacrifice.

[iii] The text describes a total of fourteen canopies arranged in two sets of seven—seven nested within each other and seven stacked vertically. This complex spatial arrangement reflects kabbalistic cosmology with its multiple nested worlds and hierarchical spiritual levels.

[iv] "Rivers of pure balsam oil" (naharei afarsimon) appear frequently in Talmudic and kabbalistic literature as a reward for the righteous in the afterlife. These are not physical rivers but spiritual channels of divine pleasure and wisdom.

עילאי וילבשון יתך לבושין דיקר
עד דכד תעייל בחופה בתראה
ישתכחו עליך י״ד לבושי דיקר
ויקומון תרי צדיקים מאינון
דמלוין יתך ויקומון חד לימינך
וחד לשמאלך בשושבינא לחתן
ויסקון יתך לבושא לכורסיא.
ובעידן דתשרי למיסק ילבשון
לבוש דיקר על י״ד לבושין
דעלך בכוונא דישתכחו עלך
ט״ו לבושין דיקר ובהא יותיבו
יתך בכורסייא. ויסבון כתרא
דתליא ויחתון יתה ברישך ותתיב
על בורסי מלכותא והני תרין
צדיקים דהוו לך שושבינין
יתיבון חד מימינך וחד משמאלך
וכל אינון צדיקייא יתיבון
סחור סחור שקלו וטרו עמך
במילי דאורייתא[i] אלין נפקין
ושאר כל צדיקייא עאלין ושקלי
וטרו עמך במילי דאורייתא
וכן עד דישלם מאה ושמנים
יומין דוגמא בהראותו את עושר
כבוד מלכותו וגו׳ ובתר כן
תעביד לכל צדיקייא דבגנתא
דעדי משתייא דאורייתא[ii] שבעת
יומין דוגמא ובמלאת הימים
וגו׳ שבעת ימים בחצר גינת
ביתן המלך[iii] דהיינו גנתא
דעדן דאיהו דוגמת שושן בחצר

upon you.[1] And two righteous ones from among those accompanying you will stand, one at your right and one at your left, like attendants for a groom, and they will bring you clothed to the throne. And at the time when you begin to ascend, they will dress you in 35R a precious garment over the fourteen garments that are upon you, with the intention that there will be fifteen precious garments upon you,[2] and with this they will seat you on the throne. And they will take the hanging crown and place it on your head, and 40R you will sit on the royal throne. And these two righteous ones who were your attendants will sit, one on your right and one on your left, and all those righteous ones will sit around in a circle and discuss matters of Torah with you.[A] These will leave, and 45R other righteous ones will enter and discuss matters of Torah with you, and so on until one hundred and eighty days are completed,[3] corresponding to 'when he showed the riches of his glorious kingdom' [Esther 1:4]. And afterward, you will make for all the righ- 50R teous in the Garden of Eden a feast of Torah for seven days, corresponding to 'and when these days were completed' [Esther 1:5]—'seven days in the court of the garden of the king's palace' [Esther 1:5], which is the Garden of Eden, which is like Shushan, in the 55R court of the garden of the king's palace. Because they are many, the court of the garden of the king's palace is needed. And throughout these seven days, you alone will expound on matters of Torah that you learned in this world and that they taught you during 60R

[A] Or: "and engage in dialectical Torah discourse with you" — The Aramaic expression "שקלו וטרו" is a technical term referring specifically to the back-and-forth dialectical reasoning of Talmudic discourse, which could be more precisely captured in this translation.

[1] In kabbalistic numerology, fourteen is twice seven, representing completeness in both spiritual and material realms. These garments symbolize spiritual accomplishments that clothe the soul.
[2] The number fifteen in Jewish mysticism represents the divine name Yah (יה), with numerical values of 10 and 5. This final garment elevates the soul to a higher level of divine connection.
[3] This specific timeframe, drawn from the Book of Esther, may symbolize a complete cycle of spiritual elevation. In gematria (Jewish numerology), 180 equals the Hebrew word "פנים" (face), possibly suggesting a direct face-to-face encounter with the divine.

[i] The Aramaic expression "shaklu ve-taru" is a technical term from Talmudic discourse referring to the give-and-take of dialectical reasoning. Its use here suggests that heavenly Torah study involves the same intellectual engagement as scholarly study on earth.
[ii] The phrase "feast of Torah" (mishtaya d'oraita) portrays Torah study as a form of spiritual sustenance and celebration, suggesting that advanced mystical knowledge is consumed and enjoyed like a royal banquet.
[i] The text draws directly from Esther 1:5, using the Persian royal garden as a metaphor for the Garden of Eden. This represents the Jewish mystical tradition of finding deeper spiritual meanings in biblical narratives.

גינת ביתן המלך משום דסגיאין
אינון אצטריך חצר גינת ביתן
המלך וכל תוך שבעה יומין
תדרוש אנת בלחודך במלין
דאורייתא דאוליפת בהאי עלמא
ודאוליפתך בהון ק״פ יומין
ובתר כן יקומון כל צדיקיא
דבגנתא דעדן וידברון יתך
קדמיהון כחתן וכולהון מלוין
יתך ומדברין בתרך וקצתהון
אדברין קמך ומכרזי קמך
ואמרו פנו מקום לברא תמימא
קדישא דמלכא עלאה[i] והבו יקר
לדיוקנא דמלכא קדישא וכולהו
מזמרין ומשבחין עד דמטו עמך
לאתר די״ג נהרי אפרסמונא ואת
טביל בקדמאה והכי מתעדי מינך
חד לבושא מאינון דאת לביש וכן
בתנייתא וכן בכולהו עד דכד את
טבילה בי״ג הא אעדיאו מינך י״ג
לבושין. ובתר כן הא נהר דינור
נגיד ונפיק[ii] ותטבול ביה ויתעדי
מינך לבושא י״ד וכד תסתלק
מינך לבושא דא הא מזמנין
לבושין דיקר חיוורין[iii] ואלבשון
יתך והא כהנא רבא זמין לאסקא
נשמתך קמי קוב״ה ומכאן ואילך
ליית רשו לגלאה דעין לא ראתה
אלהים זולתך יעשה למחכה
לו. הא רזין אלין שדרני מלכא

those one hundred and eighty days. And afterward, all the righteous in the Garden of Eden will rise and lead you before them like a groom, and all of them will accompany you and guide you after them, and some will lead before you and announce before you, saying: 'Make way for the perfect holy son of the Supernal King, and give honor to the image of the Holy King.' And all of them will sing praises until they arrive with you at the place of the thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil.[1] And you will immerse in the first, and thus one garment of those you are wearing will be removed from you, and so in the second, and so in all of them, until when you immerse in the thirteenth, thirteen garments will have been removed from you. And afterward, behold, the River of Fire flows forth,[2] and you will immerse in it, and the fourteenth garment will be removed from you. And when this garment is removed from you, behold, white precious garments are prepared, and they will clothe you. And behold, the High Priest is ready to bring your soul before the Holy One,[3] blessed be He. And from here onward, there is no permission to reveal, for 'Eye has not seen, O God, besides You, what He has prepared for those who wait for Him'[4] [Isaiah 64:3]. Behold, these mysteries the Holy King and His entire academy have sent me [to tell you]."

65R 70R 75R 80R 85R

[1] The number thirteen in Jewish tradition corresponds to the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy and represents divine compassion. Each immersion removes one garment, suggesting the stripping away of limited identity to reveal the soul's essence.

[2] This final immersion in the River of Fire represents the ultimate purification that prepares the soul for its highest possible elevation. In mystical texts, this river serves as a boundary between lower and higher spiritual realms.

[3] This likely refers to the archangel Michael, who is often portrayed in Jewish mystical literature as the heavenly High Priest who offers the souls of the righteous as sacrifices before God.

[4] This quotation from Isaiah 64:3 serves as both a scriptural validation of the vision and an acknowledgment of its limitations, suggesting that even this elaborate description falls short of the actual divine rewards that await the righteous.

[i] The soul is described as the "perfect holy son of the Supernal King," reflecting the kabbalistic concept that human souls are divine sparks or children of God returning to their source.

[ii] The "River of Fire" (nehar dinur) appears in the Book of Daniel (7:10) and features prominently in Jewish mystical literature as a purifying force through which souls and even angels must pass. It represents the ultimate spiritual purification.

[iii] The white garments represent the final state of spiritual purity after all traces of worldly existence have been removed. In kabbalistic thought, white garments symbolize the soul's restored primordial purity.

[i] קדישא וכל מתיבתא דיליה

לאודעותך בגין דתחזיק גרמך בהאי דרגא ולא תבא לידי חטא אפי׳ בהרהור. עוד נאמר לו פעם אחרת דמתיבתא דיליה לקבל מתיבתא עילאה[ii] והוסיף להודיעו שכל ישיבה שלומדים למטה יש דוגמתה למעלה בשמים. ובזה נראה ג״כ מבואר בדרושי דר׳ אילא בזהר שלח. כמה רזין אית לאפקא ממלין אלין בסוד לבושים ראשונים ושניים וחופות הצדיקים[iii] ושושבינין דלהון וכתר השמור להם בעולם הנשמות וטבילתם להחזק עוד נשמתם שתהיה להכח וחיל לקבל שכרה השמור לה לפנים מהפרגוד כי רב הוא. עוד

...to inform you so that you maintain yourself at this spiritual level[A] and not come to sin even in thought. He was further told that his academy corresponds to the supernal academy,[1] and he was informed that for every academy of learning below, there exists a corresponding one above in heaven. This is also clearly explained in the discourses of Rabbi Ila in the Zohar, Parashat Shelach. How many mysteries can be derived from these matters concerning the secret of the first and second garments, the canopies of the righteous, their attendants, and the crown reserved for them in the World of Souls![2] Their immersion strengthens their souls further, empowering them to receive their reward which is kept for them beyond the celestial curtain,[3] for it is immense. 90R 95R 100R

I further found that when Rav Chisda departed to his eternal home,[4] his son Rav Yosef went and [A] Or: "...to make known to you so that you strengthen yourself in this level" — This more literal translation captures the Aramaic expression's emphasis on self-strengthening (גרמך—'yourself') and the active nature of maintaining one's spiritual level. It might be preferable when a more direct rendering of the original idiom is desired.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic principle of correspondence between earthly and heavenly realms, where human institutions and practices have divine counterparts in the spiritual worlds.

[2] This refers to the kabbalistic realm where souls reside after death, one of several spiritual domains that souls traverse in their posthumous journey.

[1] The 'celestial curtain' (פרגוד) is a mystical concept similar to a veil that separates different spiritual realms. In rabbinic literature, it represents the barrier between divine knowledge and human comprehension.

[2] The text uses the euphemistic expression 'went to his eternal home' (הלך לבית עולמו) to refer to death, reflecting the Jewish tradition of using gentle language when discussing mortality.

[i] Cf. Book of Esther — This reference establishes a correspondence between earthly royal ceremonies and heavenly rewards, suggesting that the celestial experience of the righteous exceeds even the most lavish earthly celebrations described in scripture. | Cf. Zohar — This visionary account draws directly from Zoharic traditions about the soul's ascent through various heavenly realms after death, where the righteous soul is greeted by spiritual companions, adorned with celestial garments, and participates in heavenly Torah study. | Cf. Midrash on Proverbs 31:25 — The fourteen and fifteen garments mentioned represent layers of spiritual achievement and divine protection, with each garment symbolizing different aspects of spiritual accomplishment that the soul carries into the afterlife. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 17a — This text elaborates on the talmudic vision, providing a more detailed and sequential account of how souls transition into that exalted state through multiple stages of purification and elevation. | Cf. Isaiah 64:3 — This biblical quote serves as both a textual boundary (marking where the revelation ends) and a meditation prompt, suggesting that the described experiences are merely a glimpse of even greater divine rewards that cannot be fully articulated.

[ii] This expresses the kabbalistic concept of correspondence between earthly and heavenly academies, following the principle 'as above, so below.' The phrase uses Aramaic terminology common in the Zohar.

[iii] These terms refer to the spiritual garments and canopies that souls receive in the afterlife, with the 'first garments' typically referring to those acquired through Torah study and good deeds, while 'second garments' are additional layers of spiritual protection or elevation.

מצאתי דרב חסדא כשהלך לבית
עולמו אזל רב יוסף בריה ובת
תמן על קבריה בלילא.[i] שמע
בגו קברא חדותא רבתא
דכתות כתות דמתכנשין
ואמרין ניזיל לחדותא הלולא
דאורייתא[ii] דרב חסדא ואפי׳
מלאכי השרת מתכנשי למחדי
בהדיה. שמע דהוו אמרין
מה לחייא בהדי דילן דלעי
באורייתא בההוא עלמא.[iii] אמר
ליה ברי זיל מהכא וקאים
תלמודא דזכאה איהו מאן דאתי
ותלמודיה בידיה[iv] דהא אפי׳
מלאכי השרת לא יכלי למקרבא
ליה. זיל ואימא ליה לרבי חגי
דיגמור תלמודיה דהא ביום
פלוני ייתי הכא. אדהכי דהוה
משתעי בהדיה סלקוהו לרב
חסדא למתיבתא עלאה. קם רב
יוסף בריה וחוי לחבריה אמרו
ליה אלמלא רב יוסף את ראוי
היית לעונש. אמר להו בגין
צערא דאבא אזלית תמן ושמעית spent the night at his grave. He heard from within the grave great rejoicing as groups gathered, saying, 105R

"Let us go to the joyous celebration of Torah[1] of Rav Chisda!" Even the ministering angels gathered to rejoice with him. He heard them saying, "What business do the living have with us who study Torah in that world?"[A] He said to his son, "My son, go 110R away from here and continue your studies, for fortunate is one who arrives [in the next world] with his learning in hand,[2] for even the ministering angels cannot approach him. Go and tell Rabbi Chagai to complete his studies, for on a certain day he will come 115R here." While he was still speaking with him, they elevated Rav Chisda to the supernal academy. Rav Yosef his son arose and told his companions what happened. They said to him, "Were you not Rav Yosef, you would deserve punishment." He replied 120R to them, "Because of my grief for my father, I went there and heard all this."

And if you contemplate with your mind's eye the reason for the circuits [performed around the deceased][3] that will be presented before us, you will 125R understand something of the soul's elevation and its reward after it has been offered as a sacrifice by [A] Or: "What connection do the living have with our affairs, as we labor in Torah in that world?" — This alternative more precisely captures the Aramaic 'דלעי באורייתא' which connotes laborious effort or toil in Torah study, and clarifies the separation between the realms of the living and dead.

[3] The term 'hillula' (הלולא) literally means 'wedding celebration' and is used metaphorically to describe the joyous union between a righteous soul and the divine after death. This positive framing of death as celebration rather than tragedy is characteristic of kabbalistic thought.

[4] This reflects the rabbinic teaching that Torah learning is the only possession that accompanies a person after death. The phrase emphasizes the enduring value of spiritual accomplishments over material ones.

[1] These 'circuits' (hakafot) refer to the Jewish burial custom of circling the deceased's bier seven times before burial. The text suggests these ritual actions have mystical significance for the soul's journey after death.

[i] This recounts a narrative about Rav Yosef visiting his father's grave at night, in the tradition of numerous Talmudic and post-Talmudic stories about communication between the living and the dead. While such visits were sometimes discouraged for fear of non-Jewish necromantic practices, they were also seen as opportunities for pious connection.

[ii] The term 'hillula' (celebration) is used to describe the joyous spiritual state of a righteous person after death, conceptualizing death not as a tragedy but as a wedding-like union with the divine. This term is particularly associated with the anniversaries of deaths of great sages in Jewish mystical tradition.

[iii] This reveals the belief that Torah study continues in the afterlife, and at an even higher level than possible in the physical world. The phrase expresses the spiritual separation between the worlds of the living and the dead, despite their occasional communication.

[iv] This phrase echoes a Talmudic teaching (Pesachim 50a) that those who arrive in the next world with their learning intact receive special status. It emphasizes that intellectual and spiritual accomplishments are the only possessions that accompany a person after death.

כל האי. ואם תסתכל בעין השכל
בטעם ההקפות שיבאו לפנינו
תבין קצת משם עלוי הנשמה
ושכרה אחרי שנתקרבה קרבן
ע״י מיכאל השר הגדול[i] כי
מעצמה מתעלית ואורה יהל
כאור השמש בגבורתו עד כי
זוכה לשמש ברקיע ערבות
העליון ברוך אשר חלק מכבודו
ליראיו ואוי ואבוי למאבד
עצמו לדעת ומוציא כל ימיו
לאסוף הון לאחרים[ii] ואולי
לנושא אלמנתו. ואמרו בפ׳
תרומה דף קנ״ו על פתוריהן
דצדיקייא שאכילת הנשמות היא
דוגמת אכילת מלאכי השרת
הנזונים מכח החסד. ולכן
ירדו לאכול על שלחן אברהם
אבינו ע״ה מרכבה לחסד אל
ומעין אותו המזון אכלו ישראל
במדבר כדדרשו על פסוק לחם
אבירים אכל איש. ושם פירשו
מהו המזון הזה. עוד שם דף
קס״ו פירש מה הם הי״ש עלמין
דכסופא[iii] ועשור שלהם הוא שם
א״ל כנתבאר בשערי אורה. ושם
דף קכ״ז אמר כי ענג נשמתין
דלית להו גופא בהאי עלמא הוא

Michael, the great prince.[1] For it elevates itself, and its light shines like the brilliance of the sun in its strength, until it merits to serve in the firmament of the supernal Aravot.[2] Blessed is He who has apportioned of His glory to those who fear Him! But woe and alas to one who deliberately destroys himself and spends all his days amassing wealth for others, perhaps even for the one who will marry his widow. 135R

They said in Parashat Terumah, page 156, regarding the tables of the righteous, that the souls' consumption is similar to that of the ministering angels who are nourished by the power of Chesed (Loving-kindness). Therefore, they descended to eat at the table of our father Abraham, peace be upon him, who was a chariot for God's kindness, and from a source similar to that food, Israel ate in the wilderness, as they interpreted the verse, "Man ate the bread of the mighty." And there they explained what this food is. Furthermore, on page 166, it is explained what the 310 worlds of longing[A] are, and their tithe is the Divine name "El," as explained in Sha'arei Orah. And on page 127, it says that the delight of souls that have no body in this world comes from rivers of pure balsam oil,[3] while souls that ascend and have a body in this world draw sustenance from the illumination of the pavilion, which is Malkhut (Kingdom), and balsam corresponds to Binah (Understanding), and the discourse there is 130R 140R 145R 150R 155R

[A] Or: "310 worlds of yearning/desire" — The Aramaic 'כסופא' has connotations of yearning, shame, or desire that go beyond mere 'longing'. In kabbalistic contexts, it often refers to the soul's intense desire to return to its divine source, making this alternative potentially more precise in conveying the mystical concept.

[2] In Jewish mystical tradition, the archangel Michael serves as the heavenly high priest who offers the souls of the righteous as sacrifices before God's throne, creating a parallel between earthly death rituals and the heavenly Temple service.

[3] Aravot is the highest of the seven heavens in rabbinic cosmology, described as the dwelling place of God's glory, souls of the righteous, and the celestial Temple. The soul's ascent to this realm represents the highest possible spiritual achievement.

[4] These mystical 'rivers of balsam oil' (נהרי אפרסמונא דכיא) are described in the Talmud and expanded upon in kabbalistic literature as sources of spiritual pleasure and sustenance for righteous souls in the Garden of Eden.

[i] Michael is described as the 'great prince' who offers the souls of the righteous as sacrifices before God, similar to his role in rabbinic literature as the high priest of the heavenly Temple. This connects death rituals to Temple sacrificial service.

[ii] The text contrasts the spiritual rewards of the righteous with the fate of those who waste their lives pursuing material wealth. The phrase contains a wordplay in Hebrew between 'wealth' (הון/hon) and 'others' (אחרים/acherim), emphasizing the futility of material pursuits.

[i] The number 310 (י״ש) is significant in Kabbalah, representing the worlds reserved for the righteous in the afterlife. The term derives from Proverbs 8:21, 'To bequeath substance (יש/yesh) to those who love me,' and is connected to divine rewards.

מנהרי אפרסמונא דביא ונשמתין דסלקין ואית להו גופא בהאי עלמא ינקי מנהירו דאפריון שהוא מלכות ואפרסמון בינה והדרוש שם רחב. וכתוב בפ׳ מקץ שאחר עברת הנשמה בנהר דינור[i] שוב אין לה דין כלל. אשרי עין הזוכה לראות כל אלה:[ii] extensive. And it is written in Parashat Miketz that after the soul passes through the River of Fire,[1] it is no longer subject to judgment at all. Fortunate is the eye that merits to see all this!

פרק י״ט

Chapter 19

סדר וידוי לשכיב מרע שהנהגתי בו[iii][iv]

Order of Confession for the Terminally Ill That I Instituted[2]

מנהגן של ישראל לאסוף עשרה אנשים למען רבים יבקשו עליו רחמים ובעשר נצוצי נשמותיהם

It is the custom of Israel to gather ten men[A] so that many may pray for mercy on behalf of the sick person, and through the ten sparks of their souls, they 5R

[A] Or: "to assemble a minyan (quorum of ten men)" — Using the Hebrew term 'minyan' would be more precise in capturing the religious significance of this gathering, though it might be less accessible to readers unfamiliar with Jewish terminology.

[1] The River of Fire (נהר דינור) serves as a purifying barrier through which souls must pass after death. This passage suggests that once this purification is complete, the soul is no longer subject to judgment, having been cleansed of all earthly impurities.

[2] The title indicates that Aaron Berechia of Modena is presenting his own personal arrangement for conducting the deathbed confession ritual, rather than simply reporting traditional practices.

[i] The 'River of Fire' appears in Daniel 7:10 and features prominently in Jewish mystical literature as a purifying barrier through which souls must pass after death. It serves to cleanse impurities before souls can enter higher spiritual realms.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Shelach — The reference establishes textual authority for the idea of celestial academies mirroring earthly ones, which is central to the text's vision of afterlife rewards for Torah scholars. | Cf. Zohar, Terumah — The citation builds on earlier passages about souls' reward to explain the specific mechanism of spiritual sustenance in the afterlife, connecting it to the attribute of Chesed (Divine Loving-kindness). | Cf. Psalms 78:25 — This biblical reference serves to connect the physical nourishment of manna with the spiritual nourishment of souls in the afterlife, suggesting that both originate from the same divine source of Chesed. | Cf. Sha'arei Orah — The reference to this classic kabbalistic text provides doctrinal background for understanding the connection between the 310 worlds and the divine name 'El', establishing a framework for interpreting the soul's posthumous experience. | Cf. Hakafot ritual — The reference to 'circuits' (hakafot) that will be 'presented before us' suggests that the text will later explain this funeral ritual, indicating it has spiritual significance for the soul's elevation after death.

[iii] The author is presenting his personal method for conducting the deathbed confession ritual (vidui), indicating this is his own practice rather than simply reporting traditional methods.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author is presenting his own specific arrangement for the deathbed confession ritual, which may differ slightly from other traditional formulations while maintaining the same essential purpose. | Cf. Talmud Bavli — The author is basing his practice on the Talmudic requirement for deathbed confession, while expanding it with kabbalistic elements about the soul's journey. | Cf. Zohar — The author incorporates Zoharic concepts about the Divine Presence's attendance at deathbeds into practical ritual instructions. | Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah — The author directly quotes this midrash to establish biblical and rabbinic precedent for the practice of deathbed confession.

יסלקו ממנו כל מסטין ומעיק
כי הקדושה שורה בתוכם בסוד
ונקדשתי בתוך בני ישראל וכל
מקום שמתקבצים עשרה מישראל
לדבר שבקדושה המקום ההוא
יקרא בית הכנסת ירצה מקום
כניסת האורות מעשרה שליטים
עליונים כמו שהם נכנסים כלם
בתוך המלכות הנקראת בית
הכנסת ע״י יסוד בן מתאחדים
במקום הנועדים שם לקדש שם
שמים בכח נשמותיהם כנזכר.
ובמקום שיש שם חולה בעל
תשובה שכינה קדמא ואתיא[i] ועל
כן הקב״ה בעצמו סועד אותו
כדכתיב ה׳ יסעדנו על ערש דוי
ובזה אין שם שטן ולא פגע רע
כי כחמס דונג מפני אש יאבדו
רשעים מפני אלהים ולעורר
שפע יסודו של עולם שהוא
אשר הנחלים על בן הוידוי
של שביב מרע אומר אותו ע״י
סרסור[ii] שהחכם מקרא אותו מלה
במלה ועוד שאין חבוש מתיר
עצמו מבית האסורים.[iii] ואמרו
במדרש במדבר רבה פ׳ ח׳
על פסוק ואשמה הנפש ההיא
והתודו ר׳ נתן אומר זה בנה
אב לכל המתים שטעונין וידוי.
אין במשמע וידוי אלא בארץ
מנין אף בגלות אמרת והתודו
את עונם ואת עון אבותם וגו׳.
וכן בדניאל הוא אומר לך ה׳
הצדקה וגו׳ מפני מה כי חטאנו
לך. ויבוין המודה החולה שנעשה will remove from him all accusers and afflictions,[A] for holiness dwells among them, according to the mystery of "I will be sanctified among the children of Israel." Any place where ten Israelites gather for a sacred purpose is called a synagogue, meaning a 10R place where the lights from the ten supernal rulers enter, just as they all enter into Malkhut (which is called the synagogue) through Yesod. Similarly, they unite in the place where they gather to sanctify God's name through the power of their souls,[B] as 15R mentioned. In a place where there is a penitent sick person, the Divine Presence precedes and arrives, and therefore the Holy One, blessed be He, Himself sustains him, as it is written, "The Lord will sustain him upon his sickbed." In this situation, there is 20R neither Satan nor evil occurrence, for "as wax melts before fire, so shall the wicked perish before God." To awaken the flow from the Foundation of the world, which is the outpouring of rivers, the confession of the deathly ill person is recited through an intermediary, with the sage reciting it word by word, for a 25R prisoner cannot free himself from prison.

They said in the Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, Chapter 8, regarding the verse "And that soul shall be guilty, and they shall confess": Rabbi Nathan 30R says this establishes a precedent that all who die require confession. How do we know that confession applies not only in the Land but also in exile? As it says, "And they shall confess their iniquity and the iniquity of their fathers, etc." And so in Daniel it 35R says, "To You, O Lord, belongs righteousness, etc." Why? "Because we have sinned against You."

The sick person making confession should intend to become a channel to cleanse the blemish and darkness that was caused in the sefirot through his sins, 40R

[B] Or: "they will dispel all spiritual prosecutors and distresses from him" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the mystical concept that these are not merely physical afflictions but spiritual entities or forces that 'prosecute' the soul.

[C] Or: "through the spiritual potency of their souls" — This alternative emphasizes the mystical understanding that souls possess active spiritual power capable of affecting metaphysical realities.

[i] This Aramaic expression literally means "the Divine Presence precedes and arrives," a concept from the Zohar indicating that for a penitent, especially one who is ill, the Divine Presence hastens to arrive before being called upon—reflecting special divine favor toward those who repent.

[ii] The author introduces an important practical instruction that the deathbed confession should be facilitated by an intermediary (usually a learned person) who recites it word by word for the dying person to repeat. This reflects the Jewish belief that proper guidance is needed at this critical spiritual moment.

[iii] This phrase alludes to a Talmudic principle that "a prisoner cannot free himself from prison" (Berakhot 5b), metaphorically suggesting that someone overwhelmed by illness or the approach of death requires outside assistance for spiritual liberation.

גם הוא סניף למרק הפגם והחשך שנפגם בספירות[i] ע״י החטאים של החולה בכח תשובתו ויסורין שסובל כי הכל לטוב ואפי׳ מדת עונשין אינה אלא למרק הרע ולהחזירו למוטב ויכוונו שניהם בזה להרפות הדינים בתחלת מציאותן בכח השפעת ארוכה מכתר מצנור המיוחד לו לבינה ולהחליש הדינים בחג״ת ולבטלן בנצח הוד יסוד כמו שדרשו גורי האר״י בסוד שלשה מיני תקיעות הנעשים בראש השנה. בראשונה אחר שזרזו המודה ותקן מעשיו ומחל לכל אשר צערו מיום היותו יאמר הודוי הכתוב לעיל ואם ירצה להאריך יאמר אחריו על חטא וסדר הודוי אשר הצעתי בלילי אשמורות בסדר יום ראשון במעירי שחר[ii] שהוא מסוגל לאומרו. ושמעתי כי שלמים וכן רבים מקרין אותו אדון עולם עד תומו. ויש מקרין אותו יגדל ומפרשים לו כל אחד מי״ג עקרים אם צריך לכך והשכיב מרע יודה בפיו ובלבבו על כל אחד מהם והכל לפי ישוב דעתו של חולה וטוב מעט בכונה מהרבות בלא כונה.[iii]

through the power of his repentance and the suffering he endures. For everything is for good, and even the attribute of punishment is only to cleanse away evil and return one to good. Both (the sick person and the guide) should intend to weaken the judgments at their inception through the influence of healing from Keter through the channel designated for Binah, to weaken the judgments in Chesed-Gevurah-Tiferet, and to nullify them in Netzach-Hod-Yesod, as the disciples of the Ari explained regarding the mystery of the three types of shofar blasts made on Rosh Hashanah. 45R 50R

First, after the guide has encouraged the sick person, who has rectified his actions and forgiven all who have caused him distress from the day of his birth, he should recite the confession written above. If he wishes to elaborate, he may recite afterward the "Al Chet" prayer and the order of confession which I have set forth in the night watches in the first day order in my "Me'irei Shachar," which is particularly suitable to recite. I have heard that many complete it by reciting "Adon Olam" to its conclusion. Some recite "Yigdal" and explain to him each of the Thirteen Principles of Faith if necessary, and the sick person acknowledges each one verbally and in his heart. Everything depends on the mental state of the sick person, and a little with proper intention is better than much without intention. 55R 60R 65R

אחר הוידוי הנזכר[iv] יאמר

After the aforementioned confession, he should re-

[i] This reflects a core kabbalistic concept that human actions affect the divine realms (sefirot). The confession of the sick person is understood not merely as personal atonement but as participation in cosmic repair (tikkun), cleansing damage caused by sin in the upper worlds.

[ii] "Me'irei Shachar" (Illuminators of Dawn) was a prayer collection compiled by the author, Rabbi Aaron Berechia of Modena. He references his own work as a source for the appropriate confession formulas, indicating his role as a liturgical innovator.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, First Discourse, Siftei Tzedek section — This passage elaborates on the proper procedures for deathbed confession (vidui) that are introduced earlier in the book, providing specific instructions for the ritual leader and explaining the mystical significance of having ten men present. | Cf. Zohar — The passage incorporates several Zoharic concepts, particularly the idea that the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) 'precedes and arrives' (קדמא ואתיא) for penitents, and the notion that confession repairs damage in the upper worlds/sefirot. | Cf. Teachings of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the Ari) — The passage references the teachings of the disciples of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the Ari) regarding the mystical significance of the shofar blasts on Rosh Hashanah and applies this system to understanding how confession and suffering can repair spiritual damage in the upper worlds. | Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, Chapter 8 — This direct quotation establishes the textual basis for the requirement of deathbed confession, showing how the author grounds mystical practices in traditional rabbinic texts. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author references his own prayer compilation 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), indicating that the confession texts prescribed here are consistent with the liturgical materials he developed elsewhere.

[i] This refers to the deathbed confession (vidui) ritual that was described in previous sections. The הרבון הכתוב למעלה פרק ט״ו[i] ואם יוכל להאריך יאמר אח״כ זה:[ii]

cite the "Master of the Universe"[1] prayer written above in Chapter 16, and if he is able to continue at length,[2] he should then say this: 70R

תּוֹדִיעֵנִי אוֹרַח חַיִּים[iii] שׂוֹבַע
שְׂמָחוֹת אֶת פָּנֶיךָ נְעִימוֹת בִּימִינְךָ
נֶצַח: וְיָדַעְתָּ הַיּוֹם וַהֲשֵׁבוֹתָ אֶל
לְבָבֶךָ[iv] כִּי יְיָ הוּא הָאֱלֹהִים
בַּשָּׁמַיִם מִמַּעַל וְעַל הָאָרֶץ
מִתָּחַת אֵין עוֹד: יְיָ אֱלֹהִים אֱמֶת
וּמשֶׁה אֱמֶת וְתוֹרָתוֹ אֱמֶת:[v] ג׳
פעמים[vi] עָזְרֵנוּ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׁעֵנוּ
עַל דְּבַר כְּבוֹד שְׁמֶךָ שֶׁיִּתְקַדֵּשׁ
וְיִתְיַחֵד עַל יָדֵינוּ לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד
וַהֲצִילֵנוּ וְכַפֵּר עַל חַטֹּאתֵינוּ לְמַעַן
שְׁמֶךָ: שְׁמַע יִשְׂרָאֵל יְיָ אֱלֹהֵינוּ יְיָ

"You will make known to me the path of life; in Your presence is fullness of joy, at Your right hand are pleasures forevermore. And you shall know today and take it to heart that the LORD is God in heaven above and on earth below; there is none else. The LORD God is truth, and Moses is truth, and His Torah is truth." [Recite] three times:[3] "Help us, O God of our salvation, for the sake of the glory of Your name,[4] that it may be sanctified and unified through us[5] forever and ever, and save us and atone for our sins for Your name's sake. Hear, O Israel:[6] The LORD our God, the LORD is One. Blessed be the 75R 80R

[1]The original text uses 'ha-ribbono' (הרבון), which refers to a specific prayer beginning with the words 'Ribbono shel Olam' (Master of the Universe). This is a standard form of address to God in Jewish prayers, particularly in personal supplications.

[2]This instruction shows sensitivity to the dying person's condition, acknowledging that they might be too weak to recite lengthy prayers. The text offers a shorter alternative while providing an option for those with sufficient strength.

[3]The instruction to recite the following prayer three times reflects the Jewish liturgical practice of threefold repetition for emphasis and spiritual power. This is particularly significant in deathbed rituals where such repetitions are believed to create spiritual protection for the departing soul.

[4]This phrase reflects the kabbalistic concept that human actions can directly affect divine realms, with proper prayer 'unifying' fragmented aspects of divinity. In Ma'avar Yabok's theological framework, the deathbed confession and prayers serve not just personal salvation but cosmic repair.

[5]This reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'yichud' (unification), suggesting that proper prayer at the moment of death helps unify the divine name and attributes in higher realms, a central mystical concept in Ma'avar Yabok.

[1]The Shema prayer represents the pinnacle of Jewish deathbed ritual. Ma'avar Yabok, following kabbalistic tradition, considers its recitation to facilitate 'death by divine kiss' (mittat neshikah), the most elevated form of death where the soul departs in mystical union with God.

confession is considered essential for proper spiritual preparation for death in Jewish tradition.

[ii]This refers to Chapter 16 of the first discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, which contains the full text of the 'Ribbono' prayer (Master of the Universe) that is to be recited after the confession ritual.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 16 — The text references a prayer titled 'Ribbono' (Master of the Universe) that appears in Chapter 16 of Ma'avar Yabok. This is a standard prayer recitation instruction within the deathbed ritual sequence, directing the reader to a previously established prayer text rather than repeating it in full. | Cf. Vidui (Confession) — The text refers to 'the aforementioned confession' (ha-vidui ha-nizkar), indicating that this instruction follows a standardized confession ritual for the dying that would have been detailed earlier in the book. Vidui is central to Jewish deathbed practices and is considered essential for spiritual preparation for death.

[iv]This verse is from Psalm 16:11, traditionally recited by the dying person or by those attending them. It emphasizes divine guidance and the hope for eternal joy in God's presence after death.

[v]From Deuteronomy 4:39, this verse affirms God's absolute sovereignty and unity, a central theological affirmation for someone approaching death.

[vi]This is a traditional affirmation of faith, not directly from the Bible but a rabbinic formulation combining several concepts. It serves as a declaration of core Jewish beliefs at the moment of death.

[vii]This instruction indicates that the following prayer should be recited three times, a common practice in Jewish liturgy to emphasize importance.

אֶחָד:[i] בָּרוּךְ שֵׁם כְּבוֹד מַלְכוּתוֹ לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד:[ii iii]

name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever."[1] 85R

ופסוק שמע הוא שמירה לאדם מלפנים. ויושב בסתר עליון היא שמירה מצד ימין. ה׳ מה רבו צרי שמירה שמאל: יברכך וגו׳ עד סוף ברכת כהנים היא שמירה מאחוריו. אמנם עיקר השמירה היא בשם מ״ב שהוא מהבינה וכן הנשמה מבינה[iv] וקושרה למעלה ומעלה לשרשיו ותיבותיו שבעה והם שבעה שרפים ואותיות תבותיו ששה הם שש כנפים אשר בהם תעוף הנשמה בשמים באין שטן ואין פגע רע.[v] ברוך ה׳ צבאות אלהינו שבראנו לכבודו

The verse of Shema provides protection for a person from the front.[2] "He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High" is protection from the right side.[A] "O LORD, how many are my foes" is protection from the left. "May the LORD bless you," etc., until the end of the Priestly Blessing, provides protection from behind. However, the primary protection comes from the 42-letter Name, which derives from Binah, as does the soul, and it binds the soul upward to its roots. Its words are seven in number, representing the seven Seraphim, and the letters of its words are six, representing six wings, with which the soul flies through the heavens without Satan and without evil harm. 90R 95R

[A] Or: "And [the psalm] "He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High" provides protection from the right side" — The Hebrew text is referring specifically to Psalm 91, so making this explicit helps clarify the reference to specific psalms that provide directional protection.

[2] This response to the Shema creates a theological symmetry: the Shema affirms God's unity above, while this response acknowledges God's kingdom below, completing the cosmic circuit that helps transport the soul through spiritual realms after death.

[3] The text is presenting a comprehensive system of directional protection through specific biblical verses, with each verse guarding against spiritual dangers from a different direction, similar to the concept of the four archangels protecting different sides.

[i] The Shema, from Deuteronomy 6:4, is Judaism's central declaration of faith in God's unity. Reciting it at death was considered especially meritorious, following the example of Rabbi Akiva who recited it during his martyrdom.

[ii] This response to the Shema is recited silently during regular prayer but spoken aloud on Yom Kippur and at the moment of death, connecting the dying person to the holiest day of the year.

[iii] Cf. Deuteronomy 6:4-9 — The Shema is Judaism's central declaration of faith, traditionally recited at the moment of death. Ma'avar Yabok emphasizes its recitation as facilitating the soul's peaceful departure through mystical union with God, particularly when recited with proper kavvanah (intention). | Cf. Psalm 16:11 — This psalm verse expresses hope for divine guidance beyond death and the joy of eternal presence with God. Its placement at the beginning of this deathbed prayer establishes a positive theological framework for death as a transition to divine presence rather than an end. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 2, Chapter 35 — Elsewhere in Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 35 provides detailed instructions about proper spiritual intentions (kavvanot) at the time of death, particularly through recitation of the Shema prayer and meditation on divine names to facilitate the soul's transition. | Cf. Zohar I:88a — The Zohar, a primary source for Ma'avar Yabok, describes how the Shema creates spiritual protection during sleep (considered 'one-sixtieth of death') and actual death. This prayer reflects that kabbalistic understanding of the Shema as a protective formula during the soul's transition. | Cf. Talmud Berakhot 61b — Rabbi Akiva's recitation of the Shema during his martyrdom became the model for proper death with sanctification of the divine name. Ma'avar Yabok repeatedly references this example as the ideal approach to death, making the inclusion of the Shema here particularly significant.

[iv] This passage presents a key kabbalistic concept that both the 42-letter Divine Name and the human soul originate from the same divine source (the sefirah of Binah, 'Understanding'), explaining why this particular Name is especially effective for soul protection.

[i] The author draws a parallel between the structure of the 42-letter Name (7 words of 6 letters each) and the angelic seraphim (who have 6 wings each), suggesting that this Name enables the soul to ascend like these angels, bypassing demonic interference.

וברוך אל אלים ואלהי האלהים
ומלך עולם. ה׳ הוא האלהים ה׳
הוא האלהים. מיוחד אהי״ה אשר
אהי״ה הוא היה והוא הוה והוא
יהיה ה׳ אל אמת. ה׳ מלך ה׳
מלך ה׳ ימלוך לעולם ועד. והיה
ה׳ למלך על כל הארץ ביום
ההוא יהיה ה׳ אחד ושמו אחד.
ברוך ה׳ אלהי ישראל מהעולם
ועד העולם אמן ואמן. אח״כ
יאמר עם החולה ב׳ פסוקים
הראשונים ממזמור אשא עיני אל
ההרים והעומדים עליו יבקשו
עליו רחמים עם תשלום המזמור
וכן יעשה ג״פ ופסוק ה׳ ישמור
צאתך ובואך מסוגל לשמירה
למי שיצטרך לצאת חוצה מרשות
הקדושה ויסתכן מפני שנכנס
למקום החצונים ונכלל בזה
היוצא מביתו בלילה. והנשמה
היוצאת מן הגוף בעת השינה
וכן ביוצא ח״ל אפי׳ לדבר
מצוה וא״צ לומר הנשמה בעת
יציאתה מן העולם. על כל אלה
צריכים תפלה כי ישמרו בצאתם
ובבואם מעתה שהיא מלכות
ועד עולם. ועד בבינה עולם
העליון שעד שם הגעת הדינים
ואחיזת החצונים ומשם ולמעלה
אין דין ואין אחיזה לשום דבר
פגום חס ושלום. וה׳ ישמור את
נפשך פירשוהו ברבה פ׳ ס״ח על
שמירתה ממלאך המות. ואמרו
בזהר אם יזכה בר נש ויהיה צדיק
וידע שמא דקוב״ה מה יומרון
לי׳ בעדנא דמסתלק מעלמא.
לא תירא מפחד לילה מחץ יעוף
יומם וגו׳. עד אשגבהו כי ידע
שמי. הנה כי טוב לחולה להרגיל
עצמו גם במזמור יושב בסתר
עליון. ואח״כ יאמר י״ג מדות
דאריך שמשם ארוכה ומרפא

Blessed is the LORD of hosts, our God, who created us for His glory, and blessed is God of gods, and God of all gods, and King of the universe. The LORD, He is God; the LORD, He is God. Uniquely, "I AM THAT I AM," He was, He is, and He will be, the LORD, God of truth. The LORD reigns, the LORD has reigned, the LORD will reign forever and ever. And the LORD shall be King over all the earth; on that day the LORD will be One and His name One. Blessed is the LORD, God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting, Amen and Amen. 100R 105R 110R

Afterward, recite with the sick person the first two verses from Psalm 121, "I lift up my eyes to the mountains," and those standing nearby should pray for mercy on his behalf with the completion of the psalm.[1] Do this three times. The verse "The LORD will guard your going out and your coming in" is especially beneficial as protection for one who needs to go outside the domain of holiness and is endangered because he enters the realm of external forces. This includes one who leaves his home at night, or the soul leaving the body during sleep, or one who leaves the Holy Land even for the sake of a commandment, and needless to say, the soul at the time of its departure from the world. For all these, prayer is needed that they may be protected in their going out and coming in from now, which is Malkhut, until forever.[2] "Until" refers to Binah, the supernal world, for up to there judgments reach and external forces can take hold, but from there and above there is no judgment and no hold for anything flawed, God forbid. 115R 120R 125R 130R

"The LORD will preserve your soul" was interpreted in Rabbah, chapter 68, as preservation from the Angel of Death. And they said in the Zohar, "If a person merits and becomes righteous and knows the Name of the Holy One, blessed be He, what will be said to him at the time of his departure from the world? 'You shall not fear the terror of night, nor the arrow that flies by day,'" etc., until "I will set him on high because he knows My name." Thus, it is good for the sick person to accustom himself also 135R 140R

[1] This reflects the Jewish communal approach to healing, where the sick person recites the beginning of the psalm while the community completes it, creating a spiritual partnership in the healing process.

[2] The text interprets the phrase 'from now until forever' in kabbalistic terms, where 'now' represents Malkhut (the lowest divine attribute) and 'forever' represents Binah (a higher divine attribute), suggesting that protection spans the entire divine realm from lowest to highest.

תעלה לו והם ג׳ פסוקים.[i] מי אל
כמוך א׳. נושא עון ב׳. ועובר
על פשע ג׳. לשארית נחלתו ד׳.
לא החזיק לעד אפו ה׳. כי חפץ
חסד הוא ו׳. ישוב ירחמנו ז׳.
יכבוש עונותינו ח׳. ותשליך
במצולות ים כל חטאתם ט׳. תתן
אמת ליעקב י׳. חסד לאברהם
י״א. כאשר נשבעת לאבותינו
י״ב. מימי קדם י״ג. ועיין
מזה בתומר דבורה שהוא תמר
האחרון מע׳ תמרים אשר נטע
ושתל המקובל האלהי כמוהר״ר
משה קורדואיר״ו זצוק״ל מלבד
הדרושים המופלאים אשר דרש
על סוד י״ג מקורות רחמים
עליונים אלו בשאר התמרים
בחכמה רבה והם מסוגלים מאד
לאמרם ביום הכפורים אחר כל
אחד מהכ״ו ויעבור הנאמרים
באותו יום ובן הנהגתי בבית
הכנסת שלנו[ii] כי הם בכחם
הנאדרי שהם רחמים פשוטים
מא״א ממתיקים י״ג מדות של ז״א
שהם רחמים סתם והיום ההוא
א״ך טוב לישראל בגימטריא
אהי״ה וכוונת התפלה תהיה בכח
שם הוי״ה בנקודת אלהים ושם
הוי״ה נקוד קמץ כי כן בינה
מושפעת מכ״ע ולכן מעוררים
הכ״ו כל״ח שהם בהלל הגדול
והכ״בוד מתעלה ואם הבנים
שמחה בהלול י״ה. אח״כ יאמר עם המתודה פסוק בידך אפקיד
רוחי פדית אותי ה׳ אל אמת.
יסרני ה׳ אך במשפט אל באפך to Psalm 91, “He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High.”

Then he should recite the Thirteen Attributes of Arikh Anpin, from which healing and remedy arise for him, and they are in three verses: (1) “Who is a God like You,” (2) “Who pardons iniquity,” (3) “And passes over transgression,”[A] (4) “For the remnant of His heritage,” (5) “He does not maintain His anger forever,” (6) “For He delights in mercy,” (7) “He will again have compassion on us,” (8) “He will subdue our iniquities,” (9) “And You will cast all their sins into the depths of the sea,” (10) “You will give truth to Jacob,” (11) “Mercy to Abraham,” (12) “As You have sworn to our fathers,” (13) “From days of old.” Refer to Tomer Devorah, which is the last palm tree of the seventy palm trees that the divine Kabbalist, our teacher Rabbi Moses Cordovero, of blessed and holy memory, planted, besides the wondrous discourses which he expounded on the secret of these thirteen sources of supernal mercy in the other palm trees, with great wisdom. They are highly beneficial to recite on Yom Kippur after each of the twenty-six recitations of “And the LORD passed by” said on that day, and this is the practice I established in our synagogue. For these, in their majestic power, are simple mercies from Arikh Anpin, which sweeten the Thirteen Attributes of Zeir Anpin, which are ordinary mercies. And that day is “only good for Israel,” whose numerical value equals that of the Name Ehyeh, and the intention of the prayer should be with the power of the Name YHVH with the vowel points of Elohim, and the Name YHVH vocalized with kamatz, for thus is Binah influenced from Keter,[1] and therefore we arouse the twenty-six, thirty-eight times, which are in the Great Hallel, and the glory is elevated, and the mother of children

145R 150R 155R 160R 165R 170R 175R

[A] Or: “(1) “Who is a God like You,” (2) “Who bears iniquity,” (3) “And passes over transgression,”” — The Hebrew ‘nosa avon’ is often translated as ‘bears iniquity’ or ‘forgives iniquity’ in biblical contexts, which might be more familiar to some readers.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of divine flow, where the sefirah of Binah (Understanding) receives influence from Keter (Crown), the highest divine emanation. The vowel points mentioned are believed to channel this spiritual energy appropriately.

[i] The text distinguishes between the Thirteen Attributes revealed to Moses (Exodus 34:6-7) and these alternative Thirteen Attributes of Arikh Anpin (the kabbalistic ‘Long-Faced One,’ representing a higher level of divinity), which are drawn from verses in Micah 7:18-20.

[ii] The author reveals his role as a synagogue leader who instituted specific liturgical practices based on kabbalistic teachings, showing how Ma’avar Yabok blends theoretical mysticism with practical communal ritual leadership.

180 פן תמעיטני. בטוב תלין ותקין
ברחמים. ויכוין כי טו״ב תלי״ן
בגימטריא אבגי״תץ עם הכולל
ותקי״ץ ברחמי״ם בגימטריא
שקו״צית[i] ויכוין לכלול הארת
185 כל השם הגדול הזה בנפשו
רוחו ונשמתו שבעולם העשיה
להעלותם ובצל שדי יתלוננו.
אל נא רפא נא לי (ג״פ). ואם
ירצה להוסיף אל מלך ובפרט
190 אם הוא ת״ח מה טוב. ויאמר
תחלה אתאנו על שמך וגו׳.
וכן פסוק רפאני ה׳ וארפא
הושיעני ואושעה כי תהלתי
אתה. אל תעזבני ה׳ אלהי אל
195 תרחק ממני חושה לעזרתי ה׳
תשועתי. לישועתך קויתי ה׳.
ה׳ לישועתך קויתי. קויתי ה׳ לישועתך. ואמרו שכל פסוק
שהוא הפוך וישר כזה הוא טוב
200 לשמירה כי הוא חרב פיפיות נגד
המקטרגים.[ii] יברכך וגו׳ עד
סוף ברכת כהנים. יהיו לרצון
וגו׳. ואם ירצה החכם יכול
להוסיף סדר הודוי שהדפסנו
205 במעירי שחר שלנו בסדר יום ראשון:[iii]

rejoices in praising Yah.

Afterward, recite with the one confessing the verse “Into Your hand I commit my spirit; You have redeemed me, O LORD, God of truth.” “Chasten me, O LORD, but in justice; not in Your anger, lest You diminish me.” “You will rest in goodness and awaken with mercy.” One should have in mind that “You will rest in goodness” equals in gematria ABGITATZ with the inclusive value,[1] and “awaken with mercy” equals in gematria SHKUTZIT, and one should intend to include the illumination of this entire great Name in his nefesh, ruach, and neshamah, which are in the world of Asiyah, to elevate them,[2] and they will abide in the shadow of the Almighty. “Please God, heal me” (three times). And if one wishes to add “El Melekh,” especially if he is a Torah scholar, that is good. He should first say “We have come for the sake of Your name,” etc. And also the verse “Heal me, O LORD, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved, for You are my praise.” “Do not forsake me, O LORD, my God; do not be far from me. Hasten to help me, O LORD, my salvation.” “For Your salvation I wait, O LORD.” “O LORD, for Your salvation I wait.” “I wait, O LORD, for Your salvation.” And they said that any verse that reads the same backward and forward like this is good for protection, for it is like

180R 185R 190R 195R 200R

[2]This demonstrates gematria, the practice of finding meaning in the numerical values of Hebrew words. The text instructs the reader to meditate on these equivalences to activate the spiritual power of divine names during the healing prayer.

[3]According to Kabbalah, the human soul has three main parts (nefesh, ruach, and neshamah) that reside in different spiritual worlds. This prayer aims to elevate all three soul levels from Asiyah (the physical world) to higher divine realms through the power of the 42-letter Name.

[i]This demonstrates a classic kabbalistic technique of gematria (numerical equivalence), where the Hebrew words טוב תלין (‘You will rest in goodness’) equal the numerical value of אבגיתץ (the first word of the 42-letter Name) when adding 1 for the word itself (כולל), while תקין ברחמים (‘awaken with mercy’) equals שקוצית (another mystical name).

[ii]The text explains the mystical power of palindromic verses in Hebrew (those that can be read forward and backward), comparing them to double-edged swords that cut in both directions against spiritual accusers.

[iii]Cf. Tomer Devorah — The author references Tomer Devorah (Palm Tree of Deborah) as an authoritative source on the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy, indicating that the recitation of these attributes follows Cordovero’s kabbalistic interpretation of their mystical effects. | Cf. Psalm 121 — The text prescribes reciting the first verses of Psalm 121 (‘I lift my eyes to the mountains’) with the sick person, followed by others completing the psalm as a prayer for divine protection. This psalm was traditionally considered especially powerful for spiritual protection. | Cf. Psalm 91 — The text recommends Psalm 91 (‘He who dwells in the shelter of the Most High’) as beneficial for the sick person to recite regularly. This psalm was traditionally considered the most potent for protection against harmful spiritual forces and was specifically recited in contexts of danger and illness. | Cf. Zohar — The author cites the Zohar to establish that knowledge of divine names provides spiritual protection at the time of death, showing how Ma’avar Yabok draws its authority a double-edged sword against accusers. "May the LORD bless you," etc., until the end of the Priestly Blessing. "May the words of my mouth," etc. And if the sage wishes, he may add the order of confession that we printed in our Me'irei Shachar for the first day:[A] 205R 210R

פרק כ׳

Chapter 20

יפה תפלה לחולה בחליו. ולכן בכל עת אל ימנע עצמו מן הרחמים כפי כחו וידיעתו בפסוקי דרחמי כאותם אשר הצענו לפני רבים. ועקר גדול למתפללים בצערם ומתחננים לכוין מה שאמר דוד המלך ע״ה[i] עמו אנכי בצרה ועל זאת יתפלל כל חסיד לעת מצא לעת מצוי הנכש ולעת מצוי החשבון. ואם אינו יכול בפיו יהרהר בלבו כדאמרו על פסוק אמרו בלבבכם על משכבכם ואם תזכו להפטר ולדמות (פי׳ מלשון שתיקה)[ii] תזכו סל״ה. פי׳ להתעלות עד חסד של עתיקא קדישא הנקרא סלה.[iii] ואם יובל להרגיל עצמו לקרות סדר

Prayer is beneficial for the sick person during his illness.[1] Therefore, at all times, one should not withhold mercy from oneself according to one's strength and knowledge of verses of compassion, like those we have presented before many. A fundamental principle for those who pray in their distress and supplicate is to focus on what King David, peace be upon him, said: "I am with him in distress,"[2] and "For this shall every pious one pray at a time of finding"[3]—at the time when the soul is accessible and at the time of reckoning. If one cannot vocalize prayers, one should contemplate them in one's heart, as they said regarding the verse: "Speak in your hearts upon your beds,"[4] and if you merit to depart and be silent (interpreted from the language of silence), you will merit Selah—meaning to be elevated to the loving-kindness of the Ancient Holy One, which is called "Selah." And if one can accustom oneself to recite the 5R 10R 15R

[A] Or: "in our 'Illuminators of Dawn' prayer book in the first day's order" — Translating the name 'Me'irei Shachar' helps readers understand it refers to a prayer book compiled by the author called 'Illuminators of Dawn'.

[1] This opening sentence establishes one of Ma'avar Yabok's central themes: the spiritual efficacy of prayer during illness, a concept that will be developed throughout the work.
[2] This quote from Psalms 91:15 is foundational to Jewish theological understanding of suffering, suggesting that divine presence is especially accessible during times of distress.
[3] This phrase from Psalms 32:6 is interpreted in rabbinic tradition to refer to special times when prayer is particularly effective, including moments of illness when the soul is more receptive.
[4] This reference to Psalms 4:5 supports the idea that even silent prayer or meditation has spiritual efficacy, which would be especially relevant for those too weak to vocalize prayers.

from canonical kabbalistic texts. | Cf. 42-letter Name of God — The text emphasizes the special protective power of the 42-letter Divine Name, explaining its structure (7 words with 6 letters each) and correspondence to angelic beings (seraphim with six wings). This name is particularly associated with the sefirah of Binah and is understood to elevate the soul to its divine source.
[i] This is an abbreviation for 'alav ha-shalom' (peace be upon him), a honorific used after mentioning a deceased sage.
[ii] The author provides his own interpretation here, explaining that the word 'demot' refers to silence or stillness, not to resemblance.
[i] This explanation reveals the author's kabbalistic interpretation of the word 'Selah' that appears in Psalms, connecting it to the divine attribute of loving-kindness (Chesed) within the Atika Kadisha (Ancient Holy One), a reference to the highest divine realm in Kabbalah.

פטום הקטרת בכוונה ולפחות
הפסוקים שלפניו מויאמר ה׳ אל
משה עד לפני ה׳ לדורותיכם
זה יהיה לו סיוע גדול להקל
מעליו חליו או להקטיר נשמתו
קטרת לפני ה׳ אם כן גזר עליו
היוצר: ולפנינו בזה יבא סדר
פטום הקטרת עם קצת מהכוונה
הנאותה בו בעה״י.[i] וירגיל
ג״כ עצמו כל מי שנפל למשכב
להתודות אחר כל ג׳ תפלותיו
כמו שעושים ביום הכפורים
וא״צ לומר קודם השכיבנו וזה
עקר גדול להתודות ולקבל
עליו החולי והיסורין לכפרת
עונותיו. ונאמר למהרר״י קאר״ו
זצ״ל[ii] כי כל כך זוכה אדם
ביסורין הבאים עליו כשסובלם
בסבר פנים יפות כמו שזוכה
בעשיית המצוה. והטעם שע״י
היסורין הגוף מתחלש שהוא כח
הטומאה כי הגוף מעור הנחש
פי׳ חומריי ונוטה לרצון הנחש
השולט בעה״ז[iii] והכסיל אוכל
את בשרו[iv] דוקא לא ח״ו הנשמה.
ובזה מזדככת הנפש מטומאתה
ונשארת טהורה ונקיה ומוכנת
להתלבש מכתנות אור דשבקת
בגן עדן תחתון שהיתה לבושה
בהם אחר רדתה מהיכל לבנת
הספיר בעת אשר נשתהתה שם

order of the preparation of the incense[5] with proper intention, or at least the verses before it from "And the LORD said to Moses" until "before the LORD throughout your generations," this will be of great assistance in alleviating one's illness, or to offer one's soul as incense before the LORD if the Creator has so decreed.

Before us, the order of the preparation of the incense will be presented with some of the appropriate intentions, God willing. Anyone who has fallen ill should also accustom themselves to confess after each of their three daily prayers,[1] as is done on Yom Kippur, and there is no need to recite it before the "Hashkiveinu" prayer. This is a fundamental principle: to confess and accept upon oneself the illness and suffering as atonement for one's sins. It was said to our teacher Rabbi Joseph Karo, of blessed memory, that a person merits as much through the sufferings that come upon him when he endures them with a pleasant countenance as he merits through the performance of a commandment.

The reason is that through sufferings, the body is weakened, which is the power of impurity, for the body is from the skin of the serpent—meaning it is material and inclines toward the desire of the serpent that rules in this world, and "the fool consumes his flesh" specifically, not the soul, God forbid. Through this, the soul is purified from its impurity and remains pure and clean, ready to be clothed in garments of light that it left in the lower Garden of Eden,[2] which it wore after descending from the

[1]The Pitum HaKetoret (Preparation of the Incense) is a liturgical text describing the Temple incense offering. In Kabbalistic tradition, reciting this text is believed to have protective and healing properties.

[2]The practice of regular confession (vidui) is normally associated with Yom Kippur, but Ma'avar Yabok recommends it as a daily practice for the ill, reflecting the book's emphasis on spiritual preparation for potential death.

[1]This refers to the kabbalistic concept of spiritual garments (levushim) that the soul possesses in different realms. The 'lower Garden of Eden' refers to the first level of paradise that souls experience after death.

[i]This is an abbreviation for 'be-ezrat Hashem yitbarach' (with the help of God, blessed be He).

[ii]This refers to Rabbi Joseph Karo (1488-1575), author of the Shulchan Aruch (the authoritative code of Jewish law). The honorific 'zatzal' means 'may the memory of the righteous be a blessing.'

[iii]This is a kabbalistic concept connecting human physicality to the primordial serpent (nachash) from the Garden of Eden narrative, suggesting that material existence itself is inherently connected to impurity and temptation.

[iv]This is a quote from Ecclesiastes 4:5, 'The fool folds his hands and consumes his own flesh,' reinterpreted here in a mystical context to refer to how materialistic desires harm the body but not the soul.

בגן עדן ומזדווגים שם נפש הזכר ונפש הנקבה זמן מה ומזווגם נוצר להם כתנות אור. ועל זווג זה ראשון בג״ע אמרו בגמרא ארבעים יום קודם יצירת הולד בת קול יוצאת וכו׳. עד בואה לעה״ז. ואמרו שהם כדוגמת כתנות אור שעתיד להיות לה בעה״ז ואם זוכה לחזור שם מתלבשת עוד בהם בתוספת עילוי כי עתה הרויחה אותם ונוטלת ומתלבשת משלה באורות ההם קודם עלותה לג״ע עליון. והם דוגמת כתנות אור שהיו לאדם וחוה שם. ועל הכונה הזאת אשרי המקבל עליו דין שמים באהבה כי כאשר ייסר איש את בנו אלהינו מיסרנו. ואמרו במדבר רבה פ״ט על פסוק אחת לאחת למצא חשבון אדם נכשל בעבירה שחייבין עליה מיתה בידי שמים מת שורו אבדה תרנגולתו נשברה צלוחיתו נכשל באצבעו החשבון מתמצה. שכמו שהאב הרודה את בנו ורב תלמידו מכוין להכות ולחבוט חביטו על אותו כח היצה״ר המתעהו ולכן אמרו במדרש רבה פרק ז׳ חבוט חביטך דהיא טבא בקילטא וכתיב יסר בנך ויניחך ויתן מעדנים לנפשך כדוגמא זאת הם היסורין הבאים מאת פני השם על בשר אדם ועל עור הנחש כנזכר. ואמרו בב״ר פ׳ מ׳ על פ׳ טרף נתן ליראיו טירוף נתן ליראיו בעה״ז. אבל לעה״ב יזכור לעולם בריתו. ובפ׳ צ״ב

Palace of the Sapphire Brick,[3] when it tarried there in the Garden of Eden. There, the male soul and the female soul unite[1] for a time, and from their union, garments of light are formed for them.

Concerning this first union in the Garden of Eden, they said in the Talmud: "Forty days before the formation of the fetus, a heavenly voice proclaims,"[2] etc., until it comes to this world. And they said that these are like the garments of light that the soul will have in the future in this world. If one merits to return there, the soul is further clothed in them with additional elevation, for now it has earned them and takes and clothes itself with its own in those lights before ascending to the upper Garden of Eden. These are like the garments of light that Adam and Eve had there.

With this intention, fortunate is the one who accepts the judgment of Heaven with love, for "as a man disciplines his son, the LORD our God disciplines us."[3] They said in Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 9, on the verse "one by one to find the account":[4] If a person stumbles in a transgression for which they are liable to death by the hand of Heaven, his ox dies, his chicken is lost, his flask breaks, or he injures his finger—the account is settled. Just as a father who disciplines his son or a teacher his student intends to strike and beat his beaten one against the power of the evil inclination that leads him astray, therefore they said in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 7: "Beat your beating that is good in the basket," and it is written: "Discipline your son and he will give you rest, and give delights to your soul." Similarly, these are the sufferings that come from before the LORD upon the flesh of man and upon the skin of the serpent, as mentioned.

They said in Bereshit Rabbah, chapter 40, on the verse "He has given food to those who fear Him":

[2]Heichal Livnat HaSapir is a celestial realm mentioned in Exodus 24:10 and elaborated upon in mystical texts. In Kabbalah, it represents a high spiritual domain where souls reside before incarnation.

[3]This reflects the kabbalistic concept that souls have masculine and feminine aspects that unite before incarnation, with this union determining the nature of the garments of light that will protect the soul.

[4]This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Sotah 2a) that forty days before conception, a heavenly voice proclaims who will marry whom, connecting prenatal soul destiny with the soul's previous spiritual status.

[5]This reference to Deuteronomy 8:5 establishes the theological framework for understanding suffering as divine discipline motivated by love rather than punishment motivated by anger.

[6]This is a reference to Ecclesiastes 7:27, reinterpreted in midrashic literature to explain how seemingly minor misfortunes can serve as substitutes for more severe divine judgments.

אמר רבי אלכסנדראי אין לך אדם בלא יסורין אשריו לאדם שיסורין באים עליו. ובויקרא רבה פ׳ ל״ב אמר כי הצדיקים ביציאתם מג״ע ורואים הרשעים בגיהנם לותנים שבח והודאה להקב״ה על היסורין שהביא עליהם בעה״ז הה״ד אודך ה׳ כי אנפת בי. ומדת הגבורה נקראת מהללאל בסוד עשר דורות שמאדם עד נח[i] שרומזים לעשר ספירות שבחכמה כפי דרך דורשי רזין דאורייתא ומדת הגבורה באה במדת מהללאל כי על ידה יהלל אדם להקב״ה כשהוא מתיסר ממנה ונצול א״כ היא גורמת מהלל החסד. עוד היסורים לאדם הם צורך גבוה דכל זמן שהרשעים פוגמים והקב״ה סובל הפגם הספירות מקבלות פגם ח״ו ובפרט מקום מוצא נשמת החוטא אמנם כאשר הדינים יושפעו מהספירות למטה במלכות הספירות מתוקנות כי משפיעות הפגם והדין מהם למדת המלכות והיא נוטלת כל אותם הדינים ונפרדת למטה ופועלת על ידי החצונים הדינים הם ברשעים. והיינו וינחם ה׳ זהו היחוד בספירות העליונות. ובמה עם ויתעצב אל לבו ירצה משפיע העצבון והפגם מהרשעים אל לבו למטה במלכות לפעול אותם. ואפי׳ בצדיק אחד הגון די לקדושה והספירות העליונות סומכות עליו כי צדיק יסוד

He has given affliction to those who fear Him in this world, but in the World to Come, "He will forever remember His covenant." And in chapter 92, Rabbi Alexandri said: "There is no person without sufferings; fortunate is the person upon whom sufferings come." And in Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 32, it says that the righteous, upon their departure from the Garden of Eden, seeing the wicked in Gehenna, give praise and thanks to the Holy One, blessed be He, for the sufferings He brought upon them in this world, as it is written: "I will thank You, LORD, for You were angry with me."[1]

The attribute of Gevurah is called "Mahalalel" in the secret of the ten generations from Adam to Noah, which allude to the ten sefirot within Wisdom, according to the way of those who seek the secrets of the Torah. The attribute of Gevurah comes with the attribute of Mahalalel,[2] for through it a person praises the Holy One, blessed be He, when he is disciplined by it and saved; thus, it causes the praise of Chesed.

Furthermore, sufferings for a person serve a higher purpose, for as long as the wicked cause damage and the Holy One, blessed be He, bears the damage, the sefirot receive damage, God forbid, especially the place where the soul of the sinner originates. However, when judgments flow from the sefirot down to Malkhut, the sefirot are rectified, for they channel the damage and judgment from them to the attribute of Malkhut, which takes all those judgments, separates below, and through the external forces, applies those judgments to the wicked. This is the meaning of "and the LORD was comforted"[3]—this is the unification in the supernal sefirot. And with what? With "and He was grieved in His heart"—meaning He channeled the grief

[1]This quote from Isaiah 12:1 is interpreted to mean that the righteous will ultimately recognize divine punishment as beneficial, providing retrospective understanding of suffering's spiritual purpose.

[2]The author creates an innovative connection between the biblical figure Mahalalel (whose name contains the root 'to praise') and the sefirah of Gevurah (divine judgment/strength), suggesting that judgment ultimately leads to praise of God's mercy.

[3]The author reinterprets Genesis 6:6 through a kabbalistic lens, understanding divine emotional language as describing cosmic processes of judgment flowing through the sefirot rather than actual divine emotions.

[i]The author draws a connection between Mahalalel (one of the antediluvian patriarchs listed in Genesis) and the sefirah of Gevurah (divine strength/judgment), seeing the ten generations from Adam to Noah as corresponding to the ten sefirot.

עולם[ii] ואומר הקב״ה די לי בזה שבראתי בעולמי כלום בראתיו
אלא באדם אחד. ולכן על ידי
נח כתיב זה ינחמנו ועל ידו היה
היחוד באדם העליון ובארץ
התחתונה. ועליו נאמר וינחם
ה׳ כי עשה את האדם בארץ.
ומצד הפנים תחתונים שבמדת
מלכות שאחוזים בהם שאר בני
הדור כתיב ויתעצב אל לבו פי׳
השפיע הדינים למטה עליהם ונח
מצא חן היינו יסוד המיחד ולכן
נצטייר במדה ההיא בסוד צדיק
תמים[i] ונכנס אל התיבה וקיים
העולם. ע״כ זאת ישיב אל לבו
האדם החולה ויכוין שיהיה גופו
מזבח כפרה לצורך גבוה. [ii]

and damage from the wicked to His heart below in Malkhut to execute them.

Even with one suitable righteous person, it is sufficient for holiness, and the upper sefirot rely upon him, for "the righteous one is the foundation of the world." And the Holy One, blessed be He, says: "It is enough for Me that I created in My world; did I create it except for one person?" Therefore, concerning Noah it is written: "This one will comfort us," and through him was the unification in the supernal Man and in the lower earth. And of him it is said: "And the LORD was comforted that He had made man on the earth." And from the aspect of the lower faces in the attribute of Malkhut, to which the rest of the generation cling, it is written: "And He was grieved in His heart"—meaning He channeled judgments down upon them. "And Noah found favor"—this refers to the foundation that unifies, and therefore he was formed in that attribute in the secret of "a righteous, perfect man," and he entered the ark and sustained the world.

Therefore, the sick person should take this to heart and intend that his body be an altar of atonement for a higher purpose.

ואמרו בירושלמי דפאה
פ״ק[iii] שאפי׳ לא עשה תשובה

And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah, first chapter, that even if one did not repent

[i] This is a quote from Proverbs 10:25, 'The righteous is the foundation of the world,' which in Kabbalah is connected to the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation), representing the channel through which divine energy flows into the world.

[ii] The author interprets Noah's 'finding favor' as a reference to his connection with the sefirah of Yesod, which serves as a unifying principle, explaining why Noah is described as a 'righteous, perfect man' who could sustain the world.

[iii] Cf. Psalms 91:15 — The citation of 'I am with him in distress' (from Psalms 91:15) serves as a theological foundation for prayer during illness, suggesting that God's presence is especially near to those who suffer. | Cf. Psalms 32:6 — The phrase 'For this shall every pious one pray at a time of finding' refers to prayer at opportune moments, particularly during illness when the soul is more receptive to spiritual elevation. | Cf. Psalms 4:5 — The reference to 'Speak in your hearts upon your beds' supports the idea that even silent meditation or inner prayer has spiritual efficacy, especially for those too weak to vocalize. | Cf. Temple Incense Ritual — The recommendation to recite the passages about the Temple incense reflects the kabbalistic belief that this ritual has special power to alleviate illness and guide the soul's transition, serving as a spiritual substitute for the actual Temple service. | Cf. Bereshit Rabbah 9 — The midrashic interpretation of 'one by one to find the account' establishes the principle of measure-for-measure divine justice, where even small sufferings can substitute for major punishments. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah 32 — This reference supports the work's central thesis that suffering should be viewed positively as spiritual purification, so much so that even after death, souls recognize the value of their earthly trials. | Cf. Genesis 6:6 — The kabbalistic interpretation of 'the LORD was comforted' and 'He was grieved in His heart' transforms these phrases into a cosmic description of how divine judgment flows through the sefirot to affect the material world.

[i] The Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah (Corner of the Field), is cited to support the idea that suffering has purifying power even without formal repentance.

ומת ביסורין היסורין ממרקין
ובירושלמי דיומא פרק ז׳, אין
יום הכפורים מכפר בלא תשובה,
145 המיתה מכפרת בלא תשובה,[i] תני
יום מיתה כיום תשובה. ואמרו
חכמים שכל בריאת עולמות
המלאכים והגלגלים היה בשביל
עולם השפל ועיקר בריאת עולם
150 היה להשלים הנשמות שלמעלה
משלש עולמות ע״י רדתן על
הארץ שיהנו מטוב הגנוז להם
בשכר פעולתם ולא בתורת חסד
כבראשונה. ועוד שאר מעלות
155 הרבה להם בהשלמת פעולתן
ויכולים להתעלות למעלה
ממקום מוצאו וזהו בורא השמים
ונוטיהם[ii] וגו׳ נותן נשמה לעם
עליה וגו׳. ואמרו מיום שנברא
160 העולם נתאוה הקב״ה שיהיה לו
דירה בתחתונים שהוא ע״י נשמות
הצדיקים למטה בעה״ז. וא״כ
אשרי המשים אשם נפשו[iii] על
מה שחסר ממלאכתו אשר למענו
165 שולח פה. ואם ראשו ואבריו
ועורקיו וגידיו אשר הם שקתות

and died with sufferings, the sufferings purify him.[A] And in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Yoma, seventh chapter: "Yom Kippur does not atone without repentance, but death atones without repentance." It was taught: "The day of death is like the day of repentance." 150R

The Sages said that the entire creation of the worlds, angels, and celestial spheres was for the sake of this lower world. The primary purpose of creating the world was to perfect the souls that are above the three worlds[1] through their descent to earth, so that they might enjoy the goodness stored away for them as reward for their deeds, not merely as an act of kindness as it was originally.[2] There are many other advantages for them in completing their mission, as they can elevate themselves above their point of origin. This is the meaning of "Creator of the heavens and stretches them out...[A] giving a soul to the people upon it." 155R 160R 165R

They also said that from the day the world was created, the Holy One, blessed be He, desired to have a dwelling in the lower realms,[3] which is accomplished through the souls of the righteous below in this world. Therefore, fortunate is one who offers his soul as a guilt-offering[B] for what is lacking in his 170R

[A] Or: "the sufferings polish away [his sins]" — The Hebrew term 'ממרקין' has connotations of polishing or scouring rather than simple purification, suggesting a more active process of refinement. This alternate better captures the metallurgical metaphor implied in the original.

[B] Or: "And this is what is meant by "Creator of the heavens and their expanses..."" — This alternate translation of 'נוטיהם' as 'their expanses' rather than 'stretches them out' might better reflect the nominal form in the Hebrew, though both are acceptable translations of this biblical phrase.

[A] Or: "places his soul as a guilt-offering" — The Hebrew verb 'משים' literally means 'places' or

[1] This refers to the Kabbalistic concept that souls originate in a realm above the three worlds of Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action), and must descend through these worlds to achieve their ultimate perfection.

[2] This suggests a shift in the divine economy of reward—while initially souls might have received divine goodness as a pure gift (חסד/chesed), after descending to earth they earn it through their own actions, which has greater spiritual value.

[3] This is a central concept in Jewish mystical thought, that God desires to dwell specifically in the physical world through human service, despite (or perhaps because of) its lowliness and distance from divinity.

[i] This establishes a theological hierarchy where death has greater atoning power than even Yom Kippur, as it can provide atonement without the prerequisite of repentance.

[iii] A partial citation of Isaiah 42:5: "Thus says God the LORD, Who created the heavens and stretched them out, Who spread out the earth and its offspring, Who gives breath to the people on it and spirit to those who walk in it."

[iv] This phrase alludes to the biblical concept of "asham" (guilt offering) from Leviticus, but applies it metaphorically to one's soul and suffering. This spiritual reframing of physical suffering as a sacrificial offering is central to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to illness and death.

הגוף[iv] כבדים עליו בחליו ישים אשם נפשו [i] work, for which purpose he was sent here. And if his head, limbs, arteries, and sinews—which are the channels of the body[1]—feel heavy upon him in his illness, he should offer his soul as a guilt-offering.

וידע כי זה יהיה תקון גדול לצנורות ההשפעה מגולות עליונות וגולות תחתיות אשר קלקל ושבר בהעוותו בחטא עון ופשע בשלשה חלקי נפשו רוחו ונשמתו[ii] כי הריק מים חיים היורדים לגן אל האשפה דירה סרוחה[iii] ובזה יהיה גופו מזבח כפרה לנפשו ולתקון העולמות העליונים ויקיים בעצמו אדם כי יקריב מכם קרבן לה׳. וכפי בחינת החולי המתגבר עליו כן יפשפש במעשיו כי ודאי

And let him understand that this will be a great correction for the channels of divine influence from the supernal spheres and the lower spheres, which he damaged and broke through his perversion with sin, iniquity, and transgression[2] in the three parts of his soul, spirit, and higher soul. For he diverted the living waters that descend to the garden into a garbage heap,[3] a putrid dwelling. Through this, his body will become an altar of atonement for his soul and for the rectification of the upper worlds, and he will fulfill within himself "When a man among you brings an offering to the LORD."[A] According to the nature of the illness overtaking him,[4] so should

'puts,' and while 'offers' captures the sacrificial connotation well, 'places' more directly translates the term and maintains the physical imagery of placement present in the original.

[B]Or: "When any of you brings an offering to the LORD" — This is the opening verse of Leviticus 1:2, and this alternate translation more closely matches standard English Bible translations while preserving the same meaning.

[1]The Hebrew term 'שקתות' (shkatot) literally means 'troughs' or 'watering places,' emphasizing the body's role as a vessel for containing and directing life force, similar to how irrigation channels direct water.

[2]The Hebrew uses three distinct terms for wrongdoing (חטא, עון, פשע) which in Jewish tradition represent three levels of sin: unintentional errors, deliberate sins, and rebellious acts. This triplet appears frequently in liturgical confessions.

[3]This metaphor is central to kabbalistic understanding of sin: divine energy ('living waters') that should flow to sacred realms is misdirected through sin to unholy domains, strengthening forces of impurity.

[1]The text establishes a system where physical symptoms serve as diagnostic tools for spiritual ailments—a kind of spiritual pathology where bodily illness reveals the state of the soul.

[i]Literally "troughs of the body," referring to the channels through which vital fluids flow. In Kabbalistic thought, these correspond to the channels of divine flow in higher worlds that can become blocked or burdened through sin.

[ii]Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah — This reference to the Jerusalem Talmud provides a rabbinic foundation for the theological claim that suffering purifies sins even without formal repentance, establishing a framework where physical illness serves as spiritual atonement. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Yoma — This reference contrasts Yom Kippur's atonement (which requires repentance) with death's atonement (which can occur without repentance), suggesting that death has greater atoning power than even the holiest day of the Jewish calendar. | Cf. Isaiah 42:5 — The partial quote 'Creator of the heavens and stretches them out... giving a soul to the people upon it' comes from Isaiah 42:5, using prophetic authority to support the idea that souls are given to humanity for a divine purpose. | Cf. Isaiah 53:10 — The phrase 'offers his soul as a guilt-offering' alludes to Isaiah 53:10, which describes the suffering servant who 'makes himself an offering for guilt.' This connects personal suffering to sacrificial atonement in Temple theology.

[iii]The text references the three-part division of the soul in Kabbalah: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul). These correspond to three levels of consciousness and three types of sins.

[iv]This metaphor depicts sin as diverting divine flow ('living waters') from its proper destination (the garden, symbolizing holy realms) to impure places (garbage heap). In Kabbalistic thought, sin redirects divine energy to the 'Other Side' (sitra achra).

ימצא פגמו כפי סיבת חליו
כי מדה כנגד מדה לא בטלה.
וידוע כי דין ארבע מיתות לא
בטלו.[i] כובד ראשו יהיה יען
כי לא היה קל להשליב רצון
מלכו ואלהיו וכנגד מה שלא
הבין בשכלו מה לעשות נחת
רוח ליוצרו והכביד אזניו וחשע
עיניו מלמאום ברע ולבחור
בטוב. פיו המואס כל מאכל
כנגד שלא עשה מטעמים לקונו
ועל כי מאס בתורת ה׳ שלא
להגות בה יומם ולילה וכבר
ידענו כי חיים הם למוצאיהם
ודרשי רבותינו ז״ל למוצאיהם
בפה. לשונו הגובר עליה הליחות
גרמה שהצבור בת לשון הנחש
באמרי פיו. ושניו שלא טחנו מן
לצדיקים שהם נגד כ״ה שחקים
וכן הם ל״ב ט״ז למעלה וט״ז
למטה[ii] כמי שנצח היד אחד
נוטה למעלה לצד החסד ואחד
למטה לצד הדין והם כלולים
בעצמם מעשר ומכללות שש
ספירות אחרות שהם סוד שעור
קומה ובכוונת האכילה לשמה
ולקרבן לה׳ ובענג שבתות וימים
טובים מכינים שפע לצדיק
וצדק.[iii] והוא כי חריץ שניו
נגד יראי ה׳ ולעס לעיסות
אסורות ונהנה בלא ברכה

he examine his deeds, for he will certainly find his flaw corresponding to the cause of his illness, since the principle of measure for measure has not ceased. And it is known that the four death penalties of the court have not been abolished.[1]

The heaviness of his head is because he was not quick to fulfill the will of his King and God, and because he did not understand with his intellect how to bring satisfaction to his Creator, and he hardened his ears and closed his eyes from rejecting evil and choosing good. His mouth that now rejects all food corresponds to his failure to prepare delicacies for his Creator and because he rejected the Torah of the LORD by not meditating on it day and night. We already know that "they are life to those who find them," and our Sages of blessed memory interpreted "to those who find them" as "to those who express them with the mouth." His tongue, now overwhelmed with phlegm, caused him to join the company of the serpent's tongue with the words of his mouth. His teeth that did not grind food for the righteous,[A] which correspond to the twenty-five heavens[B]—and there are thirty-two of them, sixteen above and sixteen below, like one who triumphs with one hand extending upward toward kindness and one downward toward judgment. They are included within themselves from ten and from the entirety of six other sefirot, which are the secret of the divine structure. Through proper intention in eating for the sake of Heaven and as an offering to the LORD, and through the delight of Sabbaths and festivals, one prepares abundance

[A] Or: "that did not grind manna for the righteous" — The Hebrew 'man' (מן) specifically refers to the biblical manna, which in kabbalistic thought symbolizes spiritual sustenance. This more specific translation preserves the mystical connotation.

[B] Or: "twenty-five firmaments" — The Hebrew 'shchakim' is often translated as 'firmaments' in kabbalistic contexts, which might be more precise for this mystical discussion of cosmic structures.

[1] This refers to the Talmudic concept that although the Sanhedrin no longer carries out executions, the four biblical death penalties (stoning, burning, beheading, and strangulation) continue to occur through natural causes as divine justice.

[i] This refers to the four capital punishments of the ancient Sanhedrin court (stoning, burning, beheading, and strangulation). Though no longer carried out literally after the Temple's destruction, the Talmud states that their spiritual counterparts continue through natural causes of death.

[ii] This refers to Kabbalistic concepts of cosmic structure. The 32 teeth correspond to the 32 paths of wisdom in Sefer Yetzirah (formed by the 22 Hebrew letters and 10 sefirot), divided into upper and lower realms.

[i] In Kabbalistic terminology, 'Tzaddik' (Righteous One) refers to the sefirah of Yesod, and 'Tzedek' (Righteousness) refers to Malkhut. This describes how proper eating channels divine abundance to these lower sefirot.

לכן עתה יכהו שניו בדברים
מדים ויחרקו לצערו נגד מה
שנהנה באסור. זרועותיו שפשטו
בנשך ותרבית לקח בהרמת יד
ונמנעו מעשות בהם מצות וקפץ
ידיו מאחיו האביון עתה הם
כבדים עליו ותשש כחם כנקבה
המקבלת ואינה משפעת. לב
חורש מחשבות און והקשה עצמו
כאבן לבלתי שמוע אל התורה
והמצוה. עתה לבו כים יהמה
בסערות חמה. אבריו הפנימיים
שכל אחד לדרכו פנה. כבד
כעס הכסילים ומרה זרקה בו
טפה. מעיו נהנו מן הגזל. ריאה
ששאבה משקים אסורים. עתה
כלם תוהים ובוהים והציקתהו
רוח בטנו. שינתו לא ערבה
לו על כי לא נדד שינה מעיניו
לעסוק בתורה ותפלה עם
הצבור. ואבריו כמעט בטלים
ממלאכתם ומאכילים אותם
דברים מרים וקשים כגידים
המסעדים אותם במיחושים וקיא.
ולחמו במעיו נהפך מרורת
פתנים בקרבו ועליו תשתפך
נפשו. ומעיו רותחו ולא דמו.
גופו שמרק עצמו לדבר עברה
יוכח במכאוב על משכבו. בשרו
שנהנה מתענוגי העולם יכל
בשרו מרואי. עצמותיו שעונותיו
חקוקים עליהם שופו עצמותיו
לא רואו ועצמו חרה מני חורב.
עורו שלבש כלאים עתה הוא
ניחר מעליו. ירכותיו שהתחילו
בעבירות תחלה עתה ירופפו
וחתחתים בהן. ברכיו דשלהי
מלקום לשמוע את דבר ה׳
ולענות קדיש וקדושה וברכו
עתה ארכובותיה דא לדא נקשן.
רגליו הממהרות לרוץ לרעה ונמנעות מללכת לדברי מצוה

for the Righteous One and Righteousness.[C] The gap of his teeth opposed those who fear the LORD; he chewed forbidden foods and enjoyed them without a blessing. Therefore, now his teeth are struck with bitter things and they gnash in his pain, corresponding to what he enjoyed in a forbidden manner. 225R

His arms that were extended in usury and excessive interest, raised in defiance, and refrained from performing commandments with them, and closed his hands from his needy brother, are now heavy upon him, and their strength is weakened like a female who receives but does not influence.[1] His heart that devised iniquitous thoughts and hardened itself like stone, refusing to listen to the Torah and commandment, now roars like the sea in stormy wrath. His inner organs, each one turning to its own way—the liver, the anger of fools, and the gall bladder that cast its drop into it; his intestines that enjoyed stolen goods; the lungs that drew in forbidden drinks—now they are all confused and perplexed, and the spirit of his belly afflicts him. His sleep is not sweet to him because he did not banish sleep from his eyes to engage in Torah and prayer with the congregation. His limbs are almost idle from their work, and they are fed bitter and hard things like sinews that support them with pains and vomit. His food in his bowels is turned to venom of serpents within him, and his soul pours itself out over it. His bowels boil and are not silent. His body that cleansed itself for sinful matters is reproved with pain on his bed. His flesh that enjoyed worldly pleasures—his flesh wastes away from appearance. His bones, upon which his iniquities are engraved—his bones are crushed and not seen, and his substance is dried up from heat. His skin that wore forbidden mixtures is now scorched from upon him. His thighs that began with transgressions first now tremble, and there is terror in them. His knees that were slow to rise to hear the word of the LORD and to respond to Kaddish, Kedusha, and Barchu, now knock one against the other. His feet that hastened to run to evil and refrained from walking toward matters of commandment and from standing in 230R 235R 240R 245R 250R 255R 260R

[A] Or: "Yesod and Malkhut" — In Kabbalistic terminology, 'Tzaddik' (Righteous One) refers to the sefirah of Yesod, and 'Tzedek' (Righteousness) refers to Malkhut. This technical translation would be more appropriate for readers familiar with Kabbalah.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of masculine and feminine spiritual energies, where the masculine principle actively gives while the feminine receives. Here, illness has reversed the proper function of the arms, which should be 'masculine' in giving charity.

ומלעמוד בסוד ישרים ועדה עתה הושמו בסוד רגליו והציקתהו רוח בטנו. עד כי יעתר אל אלוה וירצהו ויחשוך נפשו מני שחת:[i][ii]

the council of the upright and the congregation, are now set in the secret of his feet, and the spirit of his belly afflicts him—until he pleads with God who will accept him,[1] and He will spare his soul from the pit.

פרק כ״א

Chapter 21

עוד יכוין לתקון עון בטול תורה ועון שיחה בטלה ושבועת שוא ושקר וקללות וחרופים ולשון הרע וכדומה בצער הצמא והחרחור המתהוה לו מכח דין אשא דגרמי. ואש המתגבר בתוכו יכוין כי הוא אש אוכלה אש אשר הקדיח בעונותיו כדברי הנביא על העושים עברות אחר שחשבו לעשותם מוציאים מחשבתם הרעה מן הכח אל הפועל המכריז ואומר תהרו חשש תלדו קש רוחכם שהיא נשמה אש תאכלכם.[iii] ע״ד ותמוגנו ביד עונינו.[iv] ואמרו בירושלמי דשבת פרק י״ד והסיר ה׳ ממך כל חולי זו שריפה

He should also direct his intention toward rectifying the sin of neglecting Torah study, engaging in idle talk, taking false or vain oaths, uttering curses and insults, speaking evil speech, and similar transgressions through the suffering of thirst and the burning sensation arising from the judgment of the fire of the bones.[2] Regarding the fire intensifying within him, he should understand that it is a consuming fire, a fire which he ignited through his sins, as the prophet says concerning those who commit transgressions: after contemplating these acts, they bring their evil thoughts from potential to actual, which proclaims and declares, "You conceive chaff, you give birth to straw, your spirit (which is the soul)—fire will consume you." As it is written, "And we melt away in the hand of our iniquities." And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Shabbat Chapter 14, on the verse

[1]The passage ends with hope for recovery through sincere prayer and divine mercy, suggesting that the detailed suffering described is ultimately restorative rather than punitive.

[2]The Hebrew term "asha d'garmi" is a technical kabbalistic term referring to the spiritual fire that consumes the bones, associated with both fever and divine judgment. It appears in several passages in the Zohar.

[i]This final phrase, drawn from Job 33:24, concludes on a note of hope, suggesting that despite the detailed suffering described, sincere prayer and repentance can still save one from the pit (spiritual destruction).

[ii]Cf. Zohar — The passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts that physical suffering corresponds to spiritual flaws and serves as atonement. The detailed correspondence between body parts and specific sins reflects the Zohar's approach to understanding illness as a spiritual process rather than merely physical. | Cf. Leviticus 1:2 — The quotation 'When a man among you brings an offering to the LORD' comes from the opening of Leviticus, establishing the concept that the suffering body becomes a sacrificial offering. This creates a theological framework where physical illness serves the same spiritual purpose as Temple sacrifices did. | Cf. Proverbs 4:22 — The phrase 'they are life to those who find them' is quoted from Proverbs, where it refers to words of Torah. The author uses the rabbinic interpretation of 'those who find them' (למוצאיהם) as 'those who express them with the mouth' to establish that verbal Torah study brings healing. | Cf. Daniel 5:6 — The phrase 'his knees knocked one against the other' (ארכובותיה דא לדא נקשן) echoes the description of Belshazzar's terror in Daniel. By using this scriptural language, the author connects the physical symptoms of illness to divine judgment, suggesting that bodily suffering reveals God's assessment of one's deeds.

[iii]This is a paraphrase of Isaiah 33:11, "You conceive chaff, you bring forth stubble, your breath is a fire that consumes you." The author uses this prophetic verse to show how sin ultimately turns against the sinner, consuming them from within.

[iv]This phrase references Psalms 64:7, "We melt away in the hand of our iniquities," emphasizing how sin itself becomes the agent of suffering rather than direct divine punishment.

ופירשו הקדחת שכל החולאים תלויים בה ופרונקא דמלאכא דמותא היא אשא דגרמי.[i] אם תסמר שערת בשרו וכדומה יכוין למיתוק קרירות הדין עליון שהגליד השפע היורד בעונותיו. ואיתא בפרשת נח דף ס״ח ע״ב כי דיני גיהנם הם אש ומים. ומלחמת ד׳ יסודותיו זה עם זה יחשב לכפרה על כי לא לחם מלחמת מצוה על אויבי נפשו כי התקוממו עליו להביא אל מסגר נפשו. בפרישתו מן היין יכוין לדחות מעליו כחות הדינים הבאים מכח יין המשכר ומדי שתייתו מים או תרופות לכבות אש הקודח בו יכוין למתק התעוררות הדינין הגוברים מהג׳ קליפות[ii] ומגדילים כח השלשה ראשי משחית. ובששותה מים יכוין לשתות מי החסד וזהו כונת השתיה שנאמרה למהר״רי קארו. ובתרופת המשלשלות יכוין לדחות כח המותרות והסיגים מעליו ומעל נשמתו לדחות אותם לנוקבא דתהומא רבא ובמצולות ים וצא יאמר להם מבאן ולהבא.[iii] ולבן אמרו כי מיתתן של צדיקים בחולי מעים מלבד פשוטן של דברים שמתים נקיים כמלאכים

"The Lord will remove from you all sickness"—this refers to burning, and they explained that fever is the root of all illnesses, and the messenger of the Angel of Death is the fire of the bones. If the hair of his flesh stands on end or similar reactions occur, he should direct his intention toward sweetening the coldness of the supernal judgment[1] that has frozen the divine flow descending to him because of his sins. And it is stated in Parshat Noah, page 68b, that the judgments of Gehenna are both fire and water. The battle of his four elements[2] against each other should be considered an atonement for not having fought the obligatory battle against the enemies of his soul who rose up against him to imprison his soul. In abstaining from wine, he should intend to repel the forces of judgment that come from the power of intoxicating wine, and whenever he drinks water or takes medicines to extinguish the burning fire within him, he should intend to sweeten the arousal of judgments that are empowered by the three husks[3] and that magnify the power of the three heads of destruction.[4] When drinking water, he should intend to drink the waters of loving-kindness, and this is the intention for drinking that was taught to Rabbi Joseph Karo. With purgative remedies, he should intend to expel the power of excess and impurities from himself and from his soul, to cast them into the great abyss and into the depths of the sea, and he should say to them, "Depart from here and onward." Therefore, they said that the death of the righteous is through intestinal illness,[5] beyond the simple ex-

[1] The concept of "sweetening judgments" (mituk ha-dinim) is a fundamental kabbalistic practice where harsh divine judgments are transformed into mercy through proper intention and spiritual action.

[2] This refers to the classical theory of four elements (earth, air, fire, water) that comprise the human body. In kabbalistic thought, illness occurs when these elements fall out of harmony, reflecting spiritual disharmony.

[3] In Lurianic Kabbalah, there are four "husks" or kelipot (negative spiritual forces), with three being entirely negative and one (kelipat nogah) being a mixture of good and evil. The author refers here to the three entirely negative husks.

[4] This likely refers to the kabbalistic concept of the three "heads" or primary manifestations of the negative spiritual forces: af (anger), chemah (wrath), and mashchit (destruction).

[1] This reflects a talmudic teaching (Bava Metzia 84b) that righteous individuals often die from intestinal diseases, which was understood as a purifying death that cleanses any minor sins.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase identifies "the fire of the bones" as the messenger or agent of the Angel of Death, explaining fever as the primary manifestation of deadly illness.

[iv] The "three husks" (shalosh kelipot) refers to the three entirely negative spiritual forces in Lurianic Kabbalah, as opposed to kelipat nogah which contains a mixture of good and evil.

[i] This phrase alludes to ritual banishment formulas used in exorcisms, suggesting that the elimination of waste from the body through purgatives should be understood as a spiritual exorcism of impure forces.

ובמיחושים וכאבים כבר אמור שיכוין לתקון עונות המחשבה והרהורים רעים ודעות כוזבות ח״ו. וכן על זה הדרך יחשוב דרכו בכל המאורעות הבאות עליו ויגול על ה׳ דרכו וה׳ הוא הטוב בעיניו יעשה. [i] planation that they die pure like angels. And regarding pains and aches, it has already been stated that he should direct his intention toward rectifying the sins of improper thoughts, evil contemplations, and false beliefs, God forbid. In this manner, he should consider his ways in all events that befall him, and commit his way unto the Lord, and the Lord will do what is good in His eyes.

אמרו במדרש רבה פ״ט תרעא דלא פתיח למצותא פתיח לאסיא וכן הכתוב אומר והיה אם שמוע וגו׳ כל המחלה וגו׳. [ii] ועל דרך זה ישמע חכם ויוסף לקח מדעתו בהרבה פרטים כפי העת והחולי והמשתרג עליו. ואמרו בזהר שבחומא אדם באבר מאבריו ישאר אותו אבר טמא. וטוב לא יהיה לרשע באבר ההוא עד יענש בו והביא זה בעל שרש ישי ועד דו פתח ועד דו טרד רחמוהי קריבין: עיין בתקון ס״ט דף קי״ו מוצא הקדחת ומוצא השחפת וסוד הגברת כל אחד מארבע ליחות על האדם: עוד מזה שם בדף ק״פ ע״ב ובתקון כ״א דף נ״ז ע״א אמר כי המתקרבים ביסורין לגבי קב״ה וסבלין כמה מכתשין דדא

They said in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 9: "A gate that is not open for fulfilling commandments is open for the physician." And thus Scripture says, "And it shall be, if you diligently hearken..." [Exodus 15:26] "all the diseases..." And in this manner, let the wise listen and increase knowledge on his own[A] in many particulars according to the time, the illness, and what afflicts him.[B] And they said in the Zohar that when a person sins with one of his limbs, that limb remains impure. And there will be no good for the wicked in that limb until he is punished through it. This was cited by the author of Shoresh Yishai: "Until he opens, and until he is driven away, his mercies are near." See in Tikkun 69, page 116, the origin of fever, the origin of consumption, and the secret of the dominance of each of the four humors over a person. More about this appears there on page 180b, and in Tikkun 21, page 57a, where it says that those who draw near to the Holy One, blessed be He, through sufferings, and endure many afflictions—this

[A] Or: "And following this approach, the wise person will listen and add understanding from his own insight" — This alternate translation better captures the idiomatic nature of the Hebrew expression, emphasizing that the wise person should not just gain knowledge but actively apply personal insight to the general principles being discussed.

[B] Or: "and what entangles him" — The Hebrew root ג-ר-ש carries the connotation of intertwining or entangling. This alternate translation more directly reflects the metaphorical image of illness as something that ensnares or entangles the person.

[ii] Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Shabbat Chapter 14 — The author uses this talmudic source to explain physical symptoms as manifestations of spiritual conditions, specifically connecting fever with divine judgment. | Cf. Zohar, Parshat Noah, 68b — The author draws a parallel between the suffering of illness (involving both burning and chills) and the purification process of Gehenna, suggesting that physical suffering can serve as atonement in this world rather than the next. | Cf. Isaiah 33:11 — The author uses this prophetic imagery to illustrate how sins ultimately consume the sinner through physical illness, establishing illness as the natural consequence of sin rather than arbitrary punishment. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's teachings to Rabbi Joseph Karo — This reference shows how Ma'avar Yabok integrates both widely known kabbalistic concepts and more specialized teachings that may have been transmitted through particular lineages. | Cf. Psalms 37:5 — The author concludes with this biblical reference to emphasize that while one should engage in spiritual reflection and rectification during illness, ultimately one must surrender to divine will.

[iii] This is a reference to Exodus 15:26, where God promises the Israelites that if they follow His commandments, He will not bring upon them the diseases He brought upon Egypt. The text interprets this as indicating that illness comes when one fails to fulfill commandments.

שזיב להו ממיתה וממלאך המות:
ואילין דעובדיהון כבעירין
דחקלא דאכלין בלא צלותין
מיתתהון תהא כבעירין ושחיט
להו מלאך המות בסכין פגים.
ושאינם נזהרים בשחיטה סכין
מלאך המות להם היא אוגרת
ומסוכסכת עולה ויורד ויש להם
במיתתם שהיה דרסה חלדה
הגרמה עקור.[i] והתשובה רטייה
לכל נגע ומחלה: ובר״מ פרשת
פנחס דף רי״ט אמר למה מהירות
הדפק מורה מיתה. ובתקון כ״א
דבר שם ג״כ מדפיקת הדפק
ואמר שהוא מאזן שמאל של הלב
וזהו רוח צפונית שהיה מנשב
בכנור של דוד. וכל העורקים
ווירידי הגוף הדופקים מן הלב
הם דופקים וזה סוד אל אשר
יהיה שמה הרוח ללכת ילכו.
וכבד שהוא סמך מם דלית ביה
רוחא דקודשא לא דפקין ערקין
דיליה. זהו מהתקונים דף ל״ז
ול״ח: ובזהר בפרשות הנזכרים
ביאר כוונת הקזת דם מזרוע ימין
ומזרוע סמאל ומווירידי הראש:
עוד שם דף רכ״ז כתוב כי ד׳
מלאכים קדושים שולטים על ד׳
יסודות האדם ומרכבה חצונית
על ד׳ מרות לבנה סומקא ירוקה
שחורה:[ii] עוד מזה בדף רל״ב
ע״ב. עוד בתקון י״ח דף ל״ו
ע״א אמר כי מן הדפק נפיק רוח
סערה דאסעיר גופיה דבר נש
והוא מפרק הרים דאינון גרמין
דגופא ומשבר סלעים דאינון
צלעות דגופא והא דפיקו סליק
בגלגלין ונחית בימא דאינון עשר
כתרין תתאין ושם פירשו כתרין

saves them from death and from the Angel of Death. But those whose deeds are like the beasts of the field, who eat without prayers, their death will be like that of beasts, and the Angel of Death slaughters them with a defective knife.[A] And those who are not careful regarding ritual slaughter—the knife of the Angel of Death for them is jagged and rough, moving up and down, and they experience in their death the invalidating factors of slaughter: pressing, covering, tearing, and uprooting. But repentance is a balm for every plague and disease.

And in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas, page 219, he explains why rapid pulse indicates impending death. And in Tikkun 21, he also speaks about the pulse, saying that it is from the left side of the heart, and this is the north wind that used to blow in David's harp. And all the arteries and veins of the body that pulse from the heart—they pulse, and this is the secret of "wherever the spirit would go, they would go" [Ezekiel 1:12]. But the liver, which is the letter samekh-mem [forming the word "support"], which has no holy spirit in it, its veins do not pulse. This is from the Tikkunim, pages 37 and 38. And in the Zohar, in the sections mentioned, he explained the intention behind bloodletting from the right arm, from the arm of Samael, and from the veins of the head. Further, on page 227, it is written that four holy angels rule over the four elements of man, and an external chariot over the four humors: white, red, green, and black. More on this in page 232b. Further, in Tikkun 18, page 36a, he says that from the pulse emerges a storm wind that stirs up a person's body, and it breaks apart mountains, which are the bones of the body, and shatters rocks, which are the ribs of the body. And behold, the pulse rises in the celestial spheres and descends into the sea, which are the ten lower crowns. And there they explained that the lower crowns are husks to the ten sefirot. And see Parashat Vayechi, page

[A] Or: "flawed knife" — The Hebrew term 'pagim' can be translated as either 'defective' or 'flawed' in this context. Both convey the mystical concept of a spiritually imperfect tool used by the Angel of Death for those who die without spiritual preparation.

[i] These terms refer to the five invalidating factors in ritual slaughter (shechita): pressing (derasah), covering (chaladah), tearing (hagramat), uprooting (ikur), and delaying (shehiyah)—though the last is not mentioned here. The author is creating a spiritual parallel between improper ritual slaughter and the spiritual defects in an unprepared person's death.

[ii] This refers to the four humors in ancient and medieval medicine: phlegm (white), blood (red), yellow bile (green), and black bile (black). The author connects these physical humors to kabbalistic concepts of four angelic forces governing the body.

תחאין דאינון קליפין לעשר ספירות. ועיין פרשת ויחי דף רכ״ז למה הזיעה טובה לחולה כדאמרו רז״ל חמשה דברים יפים לחולה עטוש וזיעה ושינה וחלום וקרי.[i] רבנן דקסראי אמרי אף הילוך מעים כדרך כל הארץ. ויש שתי מיני זיעות אחת טובה ואחת רעה ח״ו. ואמר כי אפי׳ בכל זמנא דנפיל איניש בבי מרעיה[ii]

227, why sweating is good for the sick, as our Sages of blessed memory said: "Five things are beneficial for the sick: sneezing, sweating, sleeping, dreaming, and seminal emission." The rabbis of Caesarea said: "Also the normal functioning of the bowels." And there are two types of sweat, one good and one bad, God forbid. And he said that even in every instance when a person falls ill

ולא יכיל לצלאה נשמתא אעברת וסלקא מניה עד דדיינין ליה[iii] ודוחקא בגופא אשתכח בעת שדנין אותו ונשמתיה אסהידת בכל רעיונין דבר נש דעובדוהי כתיבין בספרא. ופירוש למה הרשעים מתרפאים. והרפואה מזומנת לחולים בבקר היא בפרשת בלק דף רמ״ג. ובפרשת ויחי דף רמ״ה ע״א אמר כי אבריו של אדם מתחזקים בשעת המיתה. ומוצא כל היסורין הם משוקין דסטרא אחרא דתמן אית רצין דנקראים רודפים. ברם צדיקי וחסידי לית להו מרעין מסטרא דא[iv] כן כתוב

When a person cannot pray, his soul departs and ascends from him until they judge him, and distress is found in the body at the time they judge him. His soul testifies to all the thoughts of the person, whose deeds are written in the book. The explanation of why the wicked recover from illness, and why healing is readily available to the sick in the morning, is found in Parashat Balak, page 243. And in Parashat Vayechi, page 245a, it states that a person's limbs strengthen at the time of death. The source of all suffering comes from the channels of the Other Side, where there are runners called "pursuers." However, the righteous and pious do not suffer illnesses from this source, as written in Parashat Pekudei, page 244. The sick person is judged by the judges of the second entrance in the third palace of holiness, and all

[i] This is a medical teaching from the Talmud (Berakhot 57b) listing five phenomena considered beneficial for the sick. The author integrates this medical knowledge into a kabbalistic framework, showing how Ma'avar Yabok bridges practical medical advice with mystical understanding.

[ii] Cf. Midrash Rabbah — The quoted midrash establishes a fundamental principle that illness serves as an opportunity for spiritual reflection when one has failed to engage in positive commandments. This creates a theological framework where physical ailments are not random but serve a spiritual purpose. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas — The reference to the Ra'aya Mehemna section of the Zohar provides mystical significance to physical symptoms like rapid pulse. This reflects the text's integration of medical knowledge with kabbalistic interpretations of bodily functions. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The references to various Tikkunim sections establish the kabbalistic understanding of illness as related to cosmic imbalances in the four elements/humors that constitute the human body. This provides the metaphysical foundation for the text's approach to healing. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:12 — The biblical quote about the spirit's movement is applied to explain the mystical understanding of the pulse, creating a correspondence between the divine chariot (merkavah) and human physiology. This reflects the text's worldview where biblical verses reveal hidden truths about physical functions. | Cf. Shoresh Yishai — This reference to an earlier kabbalistic work reinforces the author's point about the relationship between sin and physical ailments. By citing this authority, the author establishes his teaching within an established tradition of kabbalistic thought regarding illness.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar describes how the soul temporarily departs from a sick person who cannot pray, ascending until judgment is rendered, creating an opportunity for celestial intervention.

[i] This important distinction shows that the righteous do not suffer from illnesses originating from the 'Other Side' (negative spiritual forces), suggesting their ailments serve different, more elevated spiritual purposes.

בפ׳ פקודי דף רמ״ד. והחולה
נדון בדייני פתח השני שבהיכל
השלישי מהקדושה[i] וכל הגזירות
הם בהיכל זה חוץ מבני חיי
ומזוני ואור מצד מזרח מהיכל
הרביעי ממונה על הרפואה.
ואין לחולה לצמצם דמי רפואתו
כי אינו מתרפא עד שיוציא
כל סך הממון שנגזר עליו[ii] אם
לא נגזר עליו רק עונש נכסים
כך כתוב בסוף פרשת האזינו:
ואמרו בתקונים דשבעין עורקין
אית בכבדא לקבלא שבעין
ממנן. ושבעים תיבות שבמזמור
יענך ה׳ ביום צרה שנוהגים
לאומרו בראש תפלת החולים
הם כנגדם שהם צירים וחבלים
דכח הקדושה: ואמרו בתקון ע׳
שכל מצוה שורה על כל אבר ויש
להם שם ידוע וכל חיילין ומחנות
התלויות ממנה כלם מתאספים
לאותו אבר ושומרים אותו
מכל חולאים רעים: והממליך
קדוש ב״ה על כל אבריו כאלו
ממליכו בכל העולם שהאדם
הוא עולם קטן[iii] ושכרו לא נתן
רשות ליגלות שלא יעבוד על
מנת לקבל פרס: ואמרו בפרשת
האזינו דאית חולאים דרפואתן
על ידי צלותין ובעותין ומילי
דחסידותא ורופא א׳ היה מרפא
יותר בפיו ממה שהיה עושה
בידיו: ועל זה סיפר נפלאות
משכר רופא כזה: אבל הרופא
האמיתי היא השכי״נה שכן היא
בגימטריא רופ״א חנ״ם:[iv] ועל
ידי מרירות היסורין והרשעים שמתמרמרים בתשובה ממתקים

decrees are issued in this palace, except for children, life, and sustenance. Light from the east side of the fourth palace is appointed over healing. A sick person should not stint on the cost of his treatment, for he will not recover until he spends the entire sum of money decreed for him, unless only a financial penalty was decreed for him, as written at the end of Parashat Ha'azinu. 140R 145R

It is stated in the Tikkunim that there are seventy veins in the liver corresponding to seventy celestial appointees. The seventy words in the psalm "May the Lord answer you in the day of trouble" (Psalm 20), which is customarily recited at the beginning of prayers for the sick, correspond to these veins, which are the contractions and pains of the power of holiness. It is stated in the 70th Tikkun that every commandment rests upon each limb, and they have a known name, and all the hosts and camps dependent upon it all gather to that limb and protect it from all evil diseases. One who crowns the Holy One, blessed be He, over all his limbs is as if he crowned Him over the entire world, for man is a microcosm, and his reward has not been permitted to be revealed so that he should not serve in order to receive a reward. 150R 155R 160R

It is stated in Parashat Ha'azinu that there are illnesses whose healing comes through prayers, supplications, and acts of piety, and one physician was healing more with his mouth than with his hands. Concerning this, wonders were told about the reward of such a physician. But the true physician is the Divine Presence, as it equals in gematria "physician without cost." Through the bitterness of suffering and the wicked who become bitter in repentance, they sweeten the name of Strength (Gevurah) and unify it above, and therefore they transform the attribute of judgment into the attribute of mercy, and sweeten the powers of Strength. All those beings that were darkened are washed in the waters of the 165R 170R 175R

[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic structure of the heavenly courts, specifically identifying which celestial tribunal handles illness cases—the judges of the second entrance in the third palace of holiness.

[iii] This unusual instruction reveals a mystical economic view of healing: recovery requires spending exactly the amount decreed in heaven, suggesting one should not be frugal with medical expenses.

[iv] This expresses the microcosm-macrocosm principle central to Jewish mysticism: that the human body parallels the entire cosmos, making spiritual sovereignty over one's body equivalent to divine sovereignty over the universe.

[i] This presents a gematria (numerical equivalence) showing that 'Shekhinah' (Divine Presence) equals 'physician without cost' (rofeh chinam), establishing the Divine Presence as the ultimate healer.

שם הגבורה[i] ומיחדים אותה למעלה ולכן הם מהפכים מדת הדין למדת רחמים וממתקים הגבורות ויתרחצו כל אותם המציאות שנחשכו במימי שלג העליון: ויתלבן השחור ויזדכך ובזה עבירות נעשו כזכיות: ובירושלמי דפאה פ״ק מוכח זה מפסוק מור ואהלות קציעות כל בגדותיך ובגדותיך יהיה מלשון בגידה. חזי במדרש רבה: אחר שהתודה החולה החכם יעשה לו התרת קללות[ii] להתיר ולהרחיק ממנו כל קשר בוגדים שנתאחזו בו ובנפשו ע״י איזה סבות כמו קללת עצמו או קללת אחרים שהם המכבידים עליו החולי וזהו ולא ידבק בידך מאומה מן החרם. כי הם המעכבים וענינם המונעים התפלה ואסותא דרחמי מלמעלה ואז ישוב ה׳ מחרון אפו כי קשר רשעים ובוגדים אינו מן המנין ובסלוק הקללה ממילא יחולו הברכות על ראשו:[iii]

supernal snow; the black becomes white and is purified, and through this, transgressions are turned into merits. In the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah, Chapter 1, this is proven from the verse: "Myrrh and aloes, cassia, all your garments," where "your garments" (begadotecha) is derived from the word for "betrayal" (begidah). See this in Midrash Rabbah.

After the sick person has confessed, the sage should perform for him the nullification of curses, to release and remove from him all bonds of traitors that have taken hold of him and his soul through various causes, such as curses upon himself or curses from others, which aggravate his illness. This is the meaning of "and nothing of the accursed thing shall cleave to your hand," for these are the hindrances and clouds that prevent prayer and the healing of mercy from above. Then "the Lord will turn from His fierce anger," for the bond of the wicked and treacherous is not counted, and with the removal of the curse, blessings will automatically rest upon his head.

פרק כ״ב

Chapter 22

יש צדיקים כשנוטים למות

There are righteous people who, when approaching

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening the judgments' (hamtakat ha-dinim), where suffering accepted with repentance transforms the divine attribute of Severity into Mercy.

[iii] This instruction reveals an important post-confession ritual rarely mentioned in other sources: the nullification of curses (hatarat klalot) performed by a sage to remove spiritual obstacles to healing.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Balak — This reference to the Zohar explains the mystical reason why healing is more readily available in the morning, which relates to the dominance of the attribute of Mercy (Chesed) during morning hours. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This reference explains the kabbalistic understanding that a person's limbs strengthen at the moment of death as the soul prepares to depart, which is relevant to deathbed rituals. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — This citation supports the claim that the righteous do not suffer from illnesses originating from the 'Other Side' (Sitra Achra), an important kabbalistic distinction regarding the spiritual source of suffering. | Cf. Parashat Ha'azinu — The reference to Parashat Ha'azinu relates to the kabbalistic understanding that healing requires expending the precise amount of resources decreed in heaven, suggesting a metaphysical economy of healing. | Cf. Psalm 20 — This psalm is specifically identified as having seventy words that correspond to seventy celestial appointees and seventy veins in the liver, explaining its efficacy when recited for the sick. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This reference explains the kabbalistic concept that commandments protect specific body parts, creating a correspondence between spiritual observance and physical health. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah — This reference provides scriptural support for the concept that sins can be transformed into merits through repentance, using a wordplay on 'garments' (begadotecha) and 'betrayal' (begidah).

נוטלים ידיהם ואמרו במדרש כי בפטירת משה רבינו עליו השלום קדש עצמו כשרפים.[i] ולכל צדיק יוצאים לקראתו שלש כתות של מלאכים אחת נגד נשמה ואומרת יבא שלום. ואחת נגד הרוח. ואחת נגד הנפש.[ii] וסדר הפסוק מכוון בזה. וממתינין אותו כנראה באדרת האזינו בפטירת רבי שמעון בן יוחאי[iii] יעויין שם באורך. מלבד כמה נשמות צדיקים דקב״ה בעי ביקרהון יותר מברתיכוהי:[iv] ובפרשת ויקהל דף ר׳ ע״ב כי המסדר תקון העליון בתפלה על הסוד שהציע שם הוא כלל גדול ביחוד השבעה היכלות להלביש בהם השכינה בסוד השבע נערות הראויות לתת לה מבית המלך העליון ובקישוט מעשה התחתונים שמתראים ומתהוים בהיכלות לבנת הספיר עצם השמים נגה זכות אהבה ששם

death, wash their hands.[1] It is said in the Midrash that when Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, was passing away, he sanctified himself like the seraphim.[A] For every righteous person, three groups of angels come forth to meet them:[1] one for the neshamah (highest soul level), saying "Let peace come"; one for the ruach (middle soul level); and one for the nefesh (vital soul). The order of this verse is precisely arranged for this purpose. They await him as seen in the Idra of Ha'azinu regarding the passing of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, which should be examined there at length. This is besides the many souls of the righteous whom the Holy One, blessed be He, desires their honor even more than His own chariots. 5R 10R 15R

In Parashat Vayakhel, page 200b, it states that one who arranges the supernal rectification in prayer according to the mystery explained there follows a great principle in unifying the seven palaces to clothe the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) within them. This relates to the mystery of the seven maidens who are fit to be given to her from the house of the supernal King,[B] and through the adornment of the 20R

[A] Or: "he sanctified himself like the burning angels" — The term 'seraphim' specifically refers to a class of angels whose name is derived from the Hebrew root meaning 'to burn.' This alternate translation makes the fiery nature of these angels more explicit, which might be helpful for readers unfamiliar with the specific angelic hierarchy.

[A] Or: "the mystical concept of the seven handmaidens designated for her from the supernal King's palace" — This alternate translation uses 'handmaidens' instead of 'maidens' and 'mystical concept' instead of 'mystery,' which might better convey the technical kabbalistic nature of this passage, referring to the seven lower sefirot that serve the Shekhinah.

[1] This ritual handwashing (netilat yadayim) before death resembles the morning handwashing ritual and symbolizes purification as the soul prepares to transition to the spiritual realm.

[2] This tripartite angelic reception reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the soul consists of three levels (nefesh, ruach, and neshamah), each requiring its own spiritual escort during the transition from physical to spiritual existence.

[i] This refers to a midrashic tradition that Moses prepared for death through a process of spiritual purification, elevating himself to the level of seraphim (fiery angels). This establishes a paradigm for how the righteous should approach death—as a sacred transition requiring preparation rather than something to be feared.

[ii] This describes the tripartite angelic reception of the soul after death, corresponding to the three traditional levels of the Jewish soul: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul). Each level receives its own angelic escort, signifying that all aspects of the human spiritual identity are preserved and honored in death.

[iii] The Idra of Ha'azinu is a famous section of the Zohar describing the death of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, the traditional author of the Zohar. His death is portrayed not as a tragedy but as his greatest mystical revelation, transforming death from an ending into a moment of supreme spiritual illumination.

[iv] This phrase, meaning 'whom the Holy One, blessed be He, desires their honor more than His own chariots,' conveys the exalted status of righteous souls. In kabbalistic thought, the divine 'chariots' refer to the angelic hosts that serve God, suggesting that the righteous dead are even more precious to God than the angels.

סוד החבוקין.[v] ורצון ששם
סוד הנשיקין דרחימותא שש
היכלות אלו בהם מתלבשת
השכינה וכלם יחד מתיחדים זה
בזה[i] היינו הרוחניות שבכל אחד
מהם מתיחד ונכלל בחברו ובכח
יחודם זה עם זה מתעלים להיכל
קדש הקדשים ששם נגמר היחוד.
והזכר כח המשפיע יורד שם
ונגמר הזווג באחדותא וחדוותא
בכח רעוא עלאה וחם ג׳ מיני
שפע כנדרש בס״פר בשער
מהות והנהגה בבאור ספירת
הבינה. וסוד עליית היכלות
אלו הוא בסוד תפלה המיושב
מראש היוצר עד גאל ישראל
ובזמן אחדות היכלות אלו זה
בזה אין בהם דין והנצוצות
נבלעים במקוריהם והם נהנים
על רוב שלום ועוברים דרך
כסא הכבוד אכתריאל י״ה ה׳
צבאות כדפירשו בסבא בסוד
מים רבים לא יוכלו לכבות את
האהבה וכן הספירות למעלה
מתעלים זה בזה עד כי מתכנסים
למקוריהם אשר בבינה קדש
הקדשים. והתפלה מעומד הוא
סוד ירידת קדושת ההיכלות
מקדש הקדשים[ii] לאהבה בברכת
אבות וגבורות הוא סוד היכל
הזכות גבורה ושם הקדושה מצד
שמאל ובקדושת השם שם יורדים
הג׳ היכלות להיכל הרצון וממנו מתפשטים י״ב גבולי אלכסון

lower beings' deeds that appear and manifest in the palaces: the Palace of the Sapphire Brick, the Palace of Heaven's Essence, the Palace of Brightness, the Palace of Merit, the Palace of Love (where the mystery of embraces is found), and the Palace of Will (where the mystery of loving kisses resides).[1] The Shekhinah clothes herself in these six palaces, and they all unite with each other—that is, the spirituality within each one unites with and becomes included in its fellow. Through the power of their unification with each other, they ascend to the Palace of the Holy of Holies, where the unification is completed. There, the masculine power of influence descends, and the union is completed in unity and joy through the power of the supernal will. These are the three types of influence as expounded in the Book [of the Pardes] in the Gate of Essence and Governance, in the explanation of the sefirah of Binah.

The mystery of the ascent of these palaces corresponds to the seated prayer from the beginning of Yotzer until Ga'al Yisrael. During the unity of these palaces with each other, there is no judgment within them, and the divine sparks are absorbed into their sources. They delight in abundant peace and pass through the Throne of Glory—Achtariel Yah, Lord of Hosts—as explained in the Sabba [section of the Zohar] concerning the verse "Many waters cannot quench love." Similarly, the sefirot above ascend into each other until they gather to their sources in Binah, the Holy of Holies.

The standing prayer (Amidah) represents the mystery of the descent of the holiness of the palaces from the Holy of Holies to the Palace of Love in the blessing of the Patriarchs.[2] The blessing of Gevurot

[1] The embraces and kisses mentioned here are metaphors for spiritual union and have no physical connotation. They represent different degrees of mystical communion between the divine masculine and feminine aspects in Kabbalah.

[1] This maps the spiritual mechanics of the Amidah prayer, explaining how each section of the prayer corresponds to interactions between different spiritual realms. This provides insight into how prayer practice prepares one for the afterlife journey described earlier.

[i] This passage names several of the seven heavenly palaces (heikhalot) that feature prominently in Jewish mystical literature. Each palace represents a different aspect of divine manifestation and corresponds to different stages in the soul's ascent in prayer and after death.

[ii] The metaphor of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) 'clothing herself' in the six palaces reflects the kabbalistic concept that divine manifestation occurs through a series of 'garments' or levels of revelation. The unification of these palaces represents the restoration of cosmic harmony.

[i] This explains that the Amidah prayer (the 'standing prayer') facilitates a downward flow of divine energy from higher spiritual realms to lower ones. In kabbalistic thought, prayer functions as a two-way channel: the earlier prayers elevate human consciousness upward, while the Amidah brings divine blessing downward.

עם הכולל שהם י״ג ברכות
אמצעיות. ובעבודה סוד ירידת
ד׳ היכלות להשפיע ולהתעלם
בהיכל נוגה. ובהודאה יורדים
מקודשים ומלאים שפע והוד
להיכל עצם השמים ושם סוד
הכריעה להורידם ולהשפיעם
למטה ושם הברכה מצד ימין
קודם גמר הזווג בשים שלום
שהוא ירידת רוחניות כלם
בהיכל לבנת הספיר ושם
יחוד ב׳ שמות הוי״ה ואדנ״ות
יסוד עלייתם בכוונת השמות
הנזכרים שם וירידתם בסוד
שמות התמורה להיות במט״ט
ששם סוד התמורה בנודע ובן
הספירות מתקדשות ממעלה
למטה ממקורותיהם אשר בעמקי
הבינה אם האצילות באור א״ס
המחיה את כלם. ואחר שהפליג
לדבר בשכר המכוין ביחוד הזה
בכל יום בתפלתו אמר שבשעת
מיתתו שכינה אומרת ינוחו על
משכבותם ויתפתחון ליה תריסר
טורי דאפרסמונא דכיא ולא יהא
מאן דימחי בידיה:[ii] [i]

(Powers) corresponds to the Palace of Merit and Strength, where holiness is from the left side. In the Kedushah (Sanctification), the three palaces descend to the Palace of Will, and from it extend the twelve diagonal boundaries, which, with the one that encompasses them, correspond to the thirteen middle blessings. In the Avodah (Service) blessing, there is the mystery of the descent of four palaces to influence and become concealed in the Palace of Brightness. In the Hodaah (Thanksgiving) blessing, they descend sanctified and full of divine influence and splendor to the Palace of Heaven's Essence. There is the mystery of bowing to bring them down and channel them below, and there is the blessing from the right side before the completion of the union in Sim Shalom (Establish Peace), which is the descent of all spiritual forces to the Palace of the Sapphire Brick. There is the unification of the two divine names YHVH and ADNY, the foundation of their ascent through the intention of the Names mentioned there, and their descent through the mystery of the Names of Exchange to be in Metatron, where the mystery of exchange is known.

60R 65R 70R 75R 80R

Similarly, the sefirot are sanctified from above to below from their sources in the depths of Binah, the Mother of Emanation, in the light of the Infinite One (Ein Sof) who gives life to them all. After expounding on the reward for one who focuses on this unification daily in their prayer, it states that at the time of their death, the Shekhinah says, "Let them rest on their beds,"[A] and twelve mountains of pure balsam

85R 90R

[A] Or: "They shall rest in their resting places" — This alternate translation avoids the potentially confusing literal 'beds' and better conveys the metaphorical meaning of the souls' eternal resting

[i] The 'twelve mountains of pure balsam oil' is a mystical metaphor from the Zohar for celestial rewards awaiting the righteous in the afterlife. The phrase 'none will protest against them' suggests unimpeded access to these divine pleasures, which are typically described as the soul's ability to perceive and enjoy divine light without limitation.

[ii] Cf. Idra of Ha'azinu — This reference strengthens the connection between the deathbed rituals described in Ma'avar Yabok and earlier kabbalistic traditions. The Idra sections of the Zohar are considered among its most esoteric and sacred parts, describing the moment of Rabbi Shimon's death as a moment of supreme spiritual illumination rather than loss. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This reference is crucial as it provides the kabbalistic foundation for the author's understanding of prayer as a cosmic process that affects higher worlds. By citing this specific Zohar passage, the author is establishing a direct connection between proper prayer practices during life and one's spiritual experience at the moment of death. | Cf. Pardes Rimmonim — The author's reference to 'the Book' in the context of the 'Gate of Essence and Governance' likely refers to Pardes Rimmonim by Moses Cordovero, one of the most important systematic works of Kabbalah. This shows the author's integration of multiple kabbalistic sources to explain the spiritual mechanics of prayer and its connection to the afterlife.

oil will open for them,[1] and there will be none who will protest against them.

עוד אמרו כי צריך האדם להשתדל בעולם הזה להכין עצמו לקבל אושפיזין קדישין שהם נשמות יתרות[i] היורדים עם השכינה בשבת לדור עם ישראל כנדרש למעלה וזהו לדורותם לדור אתם וצריך שיעשה האדם לשכינה ולאושפיזין אלו דירה נאה בלבו וכלים נאים באברים שלו ואשה נאה שהיא נשמתו השורה שכינה עליה נקראת נשמת כל חי וכתיב כי בו שבת וינפש דשכינה עילאה היא שבת על ישראל ובתתאה וינפש עליהם ונותנת להם נשמות יתרות שהם בתולות אחריה רעותיה וכמה מלאכים ממונים ומשמשים שלהם הבאים עמהם ונשמות אלו נקראים אושפיזין ואותם שהם מצד אימא עילאה שהם נקראים אפרוחים ונפשות[ii] מצד התתאה נקראים בצים וזהו הפורס סוכת שלום מאימא עילאה והזוכה מקבל אושפיזין שהם נשמות אלו בפנים מאירים

They further taught that a person must strive in this world to prepare himself to receive the holy guests[A] who are the additional souls that descend with the Divine Presence on Sabbath to dwell with Israel, as explained above. This is the meaning of "for their generations, to dwell with them" (Exodus 31:16). A person should prepare for the Divine Presence and these guests a beautiful dwelling in his heart, fine vessels in his limbs, and a beautiful wife, which is his soul[2] upon which the Divine Presence rests, called "the soul of all living beings." Scripture states, "for on it He rested and was refreshed" (Exodus 31:17), meaning that the supernal Divine Presence rests upon Israel, and in the lower realm it refreshes them and grants them additional souls, which are "the maidens who follow her, her companions" (Psalms 45:15). Many appointed angels and attendants come with them, and these souls are called "guests." Those that come from the supernal Mother[B] are called "young birds," and the souls that come from the lower realm are called "eggs," in accordance with "who spreads the tabernacle of peace" from the supernal Mother. One who merits receives these guests—these souls—with a radiant countenance in Sabbath delight in this place after death, which is the intended meaning in this eschatological context.

[A] Or: "to receive the holy ushpizin" — The term 'ushpizin' is a technical kabbalistic term specifically referring to the seven biblical guests who visit the sukkah during the festival of Sukkot. However, in this context it is being used in a broader sense for the additional souls that visit on Sabbath. Leaving the Aramaic term untranslated would preserve this technical meaning, but the translated version better communicates the meaning to readers unfamiliar with the term.

[A] Or: "from the side of Imma Ila'ah" — Keeping the Aramaic/Hebrew term 'Imma Ila'ah' would preserve the technical kabbalistic terminology, which refers specifically to the sefirah of Binah. The translation 'supernal Mother' communicates the meaning but loses some of the technical specificity.

[1] The 'mountains of pure balsam oil' (טורי דאפרסמונא דכיא) is a metaphor from the Zohar describing celestial delights awaiting the righteous in the afterlife. These are not physical pleasures but represent spiritual illumination and divine knowledge unavailable in the physical world.

[2] This metaphor of the soul as a 'beautiful wife' draws on the kabbalistic understanding of the relationship between body and soul as a marriage, reflecting the larger cosmic marriage between masculine and feminine divine attributes.

[iii] The concept of 'additional souls' (neshamot yeterot) refers to the kabbalistic belief that Jews receive an extra soul on Sabbath that departs at the end of Sabbath. Here the author extends this concept to include the souls of righteous ancestors who visit during Sabbath.

[i] The metaphor of 'young birds' and 'eggs' refers to the kabbalistic hierarchical classification of souls according to their spiritual origin and development. This terminology is drawn from the biblical commandment of sending away the mother bird before taking eggs or young birds (Deuteronomy 22:6-7), which is reinterpreted mystically.

בעונג שבת בעוה״ז כשנשמתו
ורוחו ונפשו יוצאים מן גופו
מקבלים להם גם כן בעולם
הבא בעונג ושמחה רבה וכמו
כן המקבל אורחים ברצון שלם
שהוא כאלו מקביל פני שכינה
כאשר יבא לפנינו כן תתקבל
נשמתו והנלוים עמה ביום
פטירתו שבמדה שאדם מודד
בעולם הזה מודדים לו לעולם
הבא. ועל כן מנהג הצדיקים
סמוך למיתתם לקדש ידיהם[i] כי
בזה מקדשים כל גופם כנודע
יסוד נטילת ידים שהאצבעות הם
רמז לעשרה שליטים העליונים
שהם עשר שמות שאינם נמחקים
שבכחם אדם מתחזק בהם בעולם
הזה ובעולם הבא ורומזים גם כן
לעשר מאמרות כאשר דרש רבי
שמעון בן יוחאי בפרשת תרומה
דף קנ״ו ע״ב. ואור מאמרות אלו
האירו ומאירים לארץ ולדרים.
עוד עשר האצבעות הם דוגמא
לעשר אותיות מילוי שם הוי״ה
באלפין[ii] שהוא חיות האצילות
והוא בגימטריא אד״ם וכמו
שכשנולד האדם רוחצין אותו
מסריות אמו כך בשמת. וכל
עומת שבא כן ילך: ובעוד האדם בחיים חיותו חייב לנקות גופו

world. When his soul, spirit, and vital soul depart from his body, they too will be received in the World to Come with delight and great joy. Similarly, one who receives guests with complete willingness, as if receiving the Divine Presence—as will be discussed later—so will his soul and those accompanying it[A] be received on the day of his departure, for with the measure that a person measures in this world, it is measured to him in the World to Come.[1]

Therefore, it is the custom of the righteous, as death approaches, to sanctify their hands, for in doing so they sanctify their entire body.[B] As is known, the foundation of hand-washing is that the fingers symbolize the ten supernal rulers,[C] which are the ten divine names that may not be erased. Through their power, a person is strengthened in this world and in the World to Come. They also allude to the ten utterances, as Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai expounded in Parashat Terumah, folio 156b. The light of these utterances illuminated and continues to illuminate the earth and its inhabitants. Furthermore, the ten fingers correspond to the ten letters of the expanded divine name YHVH spelled with alephs,[2] which is the life-force of Atzilut (Emanation) and has the numerical value of "Adam" (man). Just as when a person is born, he is washed from his mother's impurity, so too when he dies. As he came, so shall he depart.

While a person is alive, he is obligated to keep his body clean, for it is in the likeness of the supernal im-

[A] Or: "those attached to it" — The Hebrew 'ha-nilvim' has connotations of attachment or joining rather than merely accompanying. The alternate translation better captures the sense of spiritual connection rather than just physical proximity.

[B] Or: "for by this they sanctify their whole body" — The alternate translation is more literal and maintains the demonstrative 'by this' rather than the explanatory 'in doing so,' which might better preserve the original text's emphasis on the specific ritual act.

[C] Or: "the fingers allude to the ten supernal dominions" — The term 'shalitim' could be translated as 'dominions' rather than 'rulers,' which might better capture the kabbalistic concept of divine governing powers rather than personified entities.

[1] This is an adaptation of a well-known rabbinic principle found in the Mishnah (Sotah 1:7): 'With the measure that a person measures, it is measured to him.' The author applies this principle to hospitality and its spiritual rewards.

[1] This refers to a specific kabbalistic way of writing the Tetragrammaton where each letter is spelled out in full with alephs: יו״ד ה״א ואו״ ה״א. This spelling, known as מילוי אלפין (milui alfin), has the numerical value of 45, equivalent to אדם (Adam).

[ii] This ritual of hand-washing before death became an established practice in Jewish tradition. It symbolizes the purification of the person before meeting their Creator, just as the priests would wash their hands before performing service in the Temple.

[i] This refers to one way of spelling out the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) where each letter is expanded using the letter aleph: הא-ואו-הא-יוד, which equals 45 in gematria, the same as אדם (Adam=45).

כי הוא כדיוקן עליון כדאמרי׳ חייב אדם לרחוץ פניו בכל יום משום כבוד קונו ואם אינו עושה כן משליט עליו כחות החצונים התחתונים. כדאמרי׳ ערבוביתא דרישא מתיא לידי עוירא ערבוביתא דגופא מתיא לידי שיחני וכיבי. ערבוביתא דמאני מתיא לידי שעמומיתא. ולדעתי יתהוה לאדם חסרונות אלו[i] מכחות היוצאים מכל אחד מארבע יסודות שבעולם הזה המושפעים מהגלגלים המונעים מכח הקליפות שהם לבר ממדורי העשיה קודם הגלגלים והאדם מחובר מהם ולהיותם מגלגל הירח ולמטה הם מטונפים כדאמרי׳ על שרא דעניותא דנביל שמיה ונביל קרו ליה ואינו דר אלא במקום הטנופת. ואמרי׳ בזהר פרשת תצוה דף קמ״ה בדרוש יום הכפורים דכל מה דנחתין דרגין תתאין הכי מסאבו דלהון יתיר: [ii]

age. As our Sages taught, "A person is obligated to wash his face daily out of respect for his Creator." If he does not do so, he allows the lower external forces to gain control over him. As they said, "Disorder of the head leads to blindness; disorder of the body leads to boils and sores; disorder of garments leads to dullness of mind." In my opinion, these deficiencies arise in a person from forces emanating from each of the four elements of this world, which are influenced by the celestial spheres, which are impeded by the power of the kelipot (husks/shells) that are outside the dwelling places of Asiyah (Action), preceding the spheres. Man is composed of these elements, and being from the sphere of the moon and below, they are contaminated. As they said concerning the prince of poverty, "His name is Naval (vile), and they call him Naval, and he dwells only in a place of filth." And it is stated in the Zohar, Parashat Tetzaveh, page 145, in the discourse on the Day of Atonement, "The lower the levels descend, the greater their impurity."[1]

פרק כ״ג

Chapter 23

עוד יש לנו לדעת כי גם בכל אחד משבעה כוכבי לכת יש

We should also know that in each of the seven planets[2] there are spirits corresponding to each of

[2]This reflects the fundamental kabbalistic principle that spiritual impurity increases as one moves further from the divine source, with the material world being furthest from the source and thus containing the greatest potential for impurity.

[1]In medieval cosmology, these would be the seven 'planets' visible to the naked eye: the Moon, Mercury, Venus, the Sun, Mars, Jupiter, and Saturn.

[ii]Here the author transitions from quoting traditional sources to offering his own interpretation, marked by the phrase 'in my opinion.' This demonstrates how Ma'avar Yabok combines authoritative tradition with the author's own insights.

[iii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The text directly cites this passage from the Zohar to establish the correspondence between the ten fingers and the ten divine utterances of creation, supporting the mystical significance of hand-washing. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Tetzaveh — The text directly quotes this Zohar passage to explain how spiritual impurity increases as one descends through the spiritual worlds, supporting the author's explanation of bodily cleanliness. | Cf. Exodus 31:16-17 — The text reinterprets these biblical verses about Sabbath observance in a mystical way, suggesting that the phrase 'for their generations, to dwell with them' refers to the divine souls that visit on the Sabbath, and 'He rested and was refreshed' refers to the Divine Presence resting upon Israel. | Cf. Psalms 45:15 — The text repurposes this verse, which originally describes royal maidens accompanying a princess, to describe the additional souls that accompany the Divine Presence on Sabbath, illustrating how biblical verses are given new mystical interpretations. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Shabbat 25b — While not directly quoted, the text echoes the Talmudic concept of 'oneg Shabbat' (Sabbath delight), extending it beyond physical pleasure to include the spiritual delight of hosting divine souls, showing how the author elaborates on Talmudic concepts.

רוחות מקבילות לכל אחד מהם. וכח הארץ וכל אשר עליה נתנה ה׳ בכוכבים ומזלות לפי הנהגתם ומבטם בהם. ועל הכוכבים ומזלות שם הבורא מנהיגים מלאכים ושרים שהם נפש להם.[i] ושם בכח המנהיגים דרכי תמורות וכחות להמיר אשר למטה מהם וימירו אותם הפנים העליונים מבט הכוכבים כפי רצון הבורא וזהו מהשנא עדניא וזמניא והופך לבקר צלמות מבלי שנוי טבעו של עולם וזהו סוד אמרם הכשפים שהם מכחישים לפמליא של מעלה.[ii] ירצה שהם הפך הכחות הפשוטים והם הכחשה לפמליא בצד מהצדדים לכן אסרה אותם התורה כי אין ראוי לאדם לשנות העולם ממנהגו ומטבעו הפשוט שהוא חפץ בוראו. וזה טעם אסור הכלאים כי יבואו מן ההרכבות צמחים ויעשו פעולות נכריות יולידו שנויים ממנהגו של עולם לרע או לטוב כאשר כתב הרמב״ן בפרשת שופטים.[iii] עוד

them. The power of the earth and all that is upon it was given by God to the stars and constellations according to their conduct and their aspect to them.[A] And over the stars and constellations, the Creator appointed angels and princes who are their souls. And there, through the power of these rulers, He established ways of transformations and forces to transmute what is below them, and these supernal aspects will transform the appearance of the stars according to the Creator's will.[B] This is the meaning of "He changes the times and the seasons" and "turns deep darkness into morning" without changing the natural order of the world. This is the secret of their saying that sorceries "contradict the heavenly host."[C] That is to say, they oppose the simple forces and are a contradiction to the heavenly host in some respects. Therefore, the Torah prohibited them, because it is not proper for a person to change the world from its natural course and simple nature, which is the Creator's desire. This is the reason for the prohibition of diverse kinds,[1] for from these combinations plants will emerge and perform strange actions, causing changes in the world's natural order for bad or for good, as Ramban wrote in the portion of Shoftim. He further wrote that since the celestial princes

[A] Or: "God placed the power of the earth and everything upon it under the influence of the stars and constellations, according to their movements and their astrological aspects" — This alternate translation more clearly conveys the astrological concept being discussed, using more precise terminology that better reflects the technical nature of the Hebrew terms 'הנהגתם' (their governance/movements) and 'מבטם' (their aspect/gaze).

[B] Or: "and the supernal countenance transforms the influence of the stars according to the Creator's will" — This translation better captures the mystical concept of 'הפנים העליונים' (the supernal face/countenance), which in Kabbalah often refers to divine aspects that mediate between God and creation. Also, 'מבט הכוכבים' refers more to the stars' influence or aspect than merely their appearance.

[C] Or: "sorceries that "deny the celestial retinue"" — This alternate translation preserves the rabbinic terminology 'pamalia' (retinue/entourage) more literally, which carries connotations of a royal court, reflecting the hierarchical structure of the celestial realm as envisioned in Jewish mysticism.

[1] This refers to the biblical prohibition against mixing different species in planting, breeding animals, and wearing garments of mixed materials (kilayim).

[i] This reflects the Neoplatonic and kabbalistic concept that spiritual beings (angels) serve as the animating force or 'soul' for celestial bodies, creating a hierarchical chain of being from God through the celestial to the terrestrial realms.

[ii] This refers to a Talmudic statement (Sanhedrin 67b) that explains why sorcery is called 'keshafim'—because it contradicts (makhishim) the heavenly retinue (pamalia shel ma'alah). The author is integrating this rabbinic saying into his kabbalistic framework.

[i] This refers to Nachmanides' (Ramban's) commentary on Deuteronomy 18, where he discusses the prohibition of divination and sorcery. Ramban explains that these practices interfere with the divine order established in creation.

כתב כי להיות השרים נפשות
לכדורי הגלגלים ושרי זנב וטלה
הקרובים לארץ והם נקראים
נגידי התלי[i] יודיעו העתידות
ומהם נעשים סימנים בעופות
שבהם יודיע עתידות ולא לזמן
גדול וזהו כי עוף השמים יוליך
את הקול וגו׳ וקוסם ומנחש
יקבלו העתידות הנזכרים מן
הכוכבים ומצורותיהם שהם
שלשים ושש. ואולי מספר זה
נגד שלש מערכות מי״ב גבולים
המתראים למעלה או מן השפלים
בשרי מעלה. אבל הנבואה
תודיע חפץ ה׳ ולא יפול דבר
מכל דבריה. וללבנה בפרט
תהיה לה מבטים הרבה ומנהיגים
הרבה הן לטוב הן למוטב הנה
שכח הנוחשים והקוסמים שולט
במזלות להיות כחם מחשרים
חצונים והכל ברצון גבוה: וחטא
אדם גרם כי חל כח חצוני גם
בעולם הגלגלים[ii] וכוכבי השמים
שפגיעתם רעה מאז נתן בהם
איכותם שפיטתם[iii]

are souls to the spheres of the celestial orbs, and the princes of Scorpio and Aries are close to the 30R earth[A]—and they are called the rulers of the Dragon's Head—they make known future events.
From them, signs are made through birds by which future events are foretold, though not for a great length of time. This is the meaning of "for a bird of 35R the sky shall carry the voice, etc." And diviners and soothsayers receive the aforementioned predictions from the stars and their forms, which are thirty-six in number.[1] Perhaps this number corresponds to three orders of the twelve boundaries that appear 40R above, or from the lower entities through the supernal princes. But prophecy makes known God's desire, and none of its words will fail. The moon in particular has many aspects and many rulers, both for good and for ill. Thus, the power of diviners and 45R soothsayers prevails in the constellations because their power derives from the external princes, yet all is according to the supreme will.[2] Adam's sin caused external forces to take effect even in the world of the celestial spheres and stars of heaven, whose impact 50R became harmful from the time their qualities and judgmental nature were placed in them.

[A] Or: "and the princes of the Dragon's Tail and Aries who are close to the earth" — The Hebrew 'זנב' likely refers to Zanav (the Dragon's Tail or Cauda Draconis) rather than Scorpio. In traditional astrology, the Dragon's Tail (South Node) and Dragon's Head (North Node) are significant points where the moon's orbit intersects the ecliptic plane, and are often mentioned alongside zodiacal constellations like Aries (טלה).

[2] In ancient astrology, the sky was divided into 36 decans (ten-degree segments of the zodiac), each with its own ruler and influence. This appears to be what the author is referencing.
[3] The author emphasizes that even these astrological influences ultimately operate under divine sovereignty, maintaining the Jewish theological principle that God remains in control of creation.

[ii] The 'teli' (dragon or serpent) in Jewish mystical tradition refers to an imaginary celestial axis or the constellation Draco. Sometimes it is associated with the lunar nodes (the points where the moon's orbit intersects the ecliptic), known as the Dragon's Head and Tail in traditional astrology.
[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that Adam's sin had cosmic consequences, not just affecting the terrestrial world but even corrupting the celestial spheres. This idea appears in Lurianic Kabbalah as part of the broader concept of cosmic brokenness requiring tikkun (repair).
[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 35 — This passage continues the discussion about celestial bodies and their influence on terrestrial affairs, expanding on the kabbalistic understanding of cosmic hierarchy and how divine power flows through celestial intermediaries. | Cf. Nachmanides (Ramban) on Deuteronomy 18 — The author directly cites Ramban's commentary to substantiate his explanation of why mixing species and performing sorcery violate divine will by interfering with the natural order established by God. | Cf. Daniel 2:21 — The phrase 'He changes times and seasons' (מהשנא עדניא וזמניא) is drawn from Daniel 2:21, establishing that while God may change cosmic arrangements, humans should not attempt to do so through prohibited means. | Cf. Zohar II:171b — The concept that stars and planets have angelic 'souls' governing them reflects Zoharic cosmology, which presents a universe where every material entity has a spiritual counterpart and governor. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:20 — The citation 'for a bird of the sky shall carry the voice' directly

לכך כי אין הוראות רעות בשמים
אם לא אחר שנתעכר העולם
וזהו ארירת האדמה דלא תוסף
תת כחה הזן לך והיא מעלה
לך יתושין וצרעין שמתחלה
רצתה לעשות רצון קונה ואדם
נברא ממנה שהיה תפוח עקבו
מכהה גלגל חמה[i] להיותה אז
משוללת עכירות וכח חיצוני.
וראיה לזה כי גם עתה על ידי
צדקה וחסד מתבטלת גזרתם
באשר היה לבת רבי עקיבא
ושמואל ואבלט.[ii] ולעתיד לבא
יחזרו הדברים על קדמותן הטוב
והותר. ואפי׳ יצר הרע אשר היה
לאדם לא יהיה לו עוד: וזהו
סוד שמים החדשים וארץ החדשה
אשר הקב״ה עתיד לעשות כי לא
תהיה לא בשמים ולא בארץ כי
אם איכות רוחניות קדוש וזהו
כי נשכחו הצרות הראשונות
וגו׳. וטעם זה הוא כי הנני בורא
שמים חדשים וארץ חדשה ולא
תזכרנה הראשונות פי׳ הצרות
ולא תעלינה על לב. ועיין עוד
בפרשת תרומה איך עון אדם
הראשון גרם חסרון גם במקום
אור עליון. על כן צריך האדם
בעולם הזה לקדש עצמו ואל
יניח לכחות חצונים לשלוט

Therefore, there are no evil portents in the heavens except after the world became polluted,[A] and this is the meaning of the curse of the earth that "it shall no longer yield its strength to you" and instead it brings forth gnats and hornets. Originally, it desired to fulfill the will of its Creator, and Adam was created from it; indeed, the ball of his heel dimmed the orb of the sun,[B] because the earth was then devoid of impurity and external force. Evidence for this is that even now, through charity and kindness, their decree is nullified,[1] as happened with Rabbi Akiva's daughter and with Samuel and Ablat. In the future, things will return to their original good state and even better. Even the evil inclination that existed within man will exist no more.

This is the secret of "the new heavens and the new earth"[2] that the Holy One, blessed be He, will create in the future, for there will be nothing in the heavens or on earth except holy spiritual quality. This is the meaning of "for the former troubles are forgotten, etc." The reason for this is: "For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth, and the former things shall not be remembered"—meaning the troubles—"nor come to mind." Examine further in the portion of Terumah how the sin of the first man caused deficiency even in the place of supernal light. Therefore, a person must sanctify himself in this world and not allow external forces to control his body in any way possible.

In Tziyoni on the portion of Yitro concerning the [A] Or: "the world became turbid" — The Hebrew 'nit'aker' conveys the idea of something becoming cloudy or turbid, like clear water becoming muddy. This alternative is more literal but less immediately comprehensible in the context of cosmic corruption.

[B] Or: "the apple of his heel darkened the sphere of the sun" — The Hebrew 'tappuach' can be translated as 'apple' or 'ball' (describing a rounded protuberance), and 'galgal chamah' could be rendered as 'sphere of the sun' rather than 'orb'. This alternative preserves more of the literal meaning but might be less clear to modern readers.

[1] This reflects the rabbinic concept that tzedakah (charity) and chesed (loving-kindness) have the power to avert negative celestial decrees, including those determined by astrological influences.

[2] This is an eschatological concept drawn from Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22, describing the complete cosmic renewal that will occur in messianic times. In Kabbalistic thought, this renewal represents the universe returning to its original perfect state before Adam's sin.

references Ecclesiastes 10:20, which the author reinterprets in a mystical context to explain how birds can serve as omens or transmitters of celestial information.

[ii] This phrase refers to a rabbinic teaching that Adam's original stature and radiance were so magnificent that even his heel outshone the sun. This illustrates humanity's original perfected state before the Fall.

[iii] This refers to two separate Talmudic stories: one about Rabbi Akiva's daughter who was saved from a fatal snake bite by giving charity to a poor man, and another about Samuel and the astrologer Ablat, demonstrating that righteous deeds can change astrological fate.

בגופו בכל האפשר לו: ובציוני
בפרשת יתרו על פסוק לא תעשה
לך פסל ובפרשת אחרי מות
בסוד שעיר המשתלח שם תמצא
דברים חדשים המכוונים לדרוש
זה. עוד שם בפ׳ אחרי מות דף
ס״ו וס״ז: ועיין בזהר פרשת כי
תשא דף קפ״ח טעם הטועים שהיו
משתחוים לאור קודם זריחת
השמש לממונה שהיו קורין אותו
אלהים דמרגלאן דנהיר והיו
נשבעים בו ואמר שהוא ממונה
על הזהב ועל המרגליות אדומות
ובו היו יודעים נקודות השמש
למצא זהב ומרגליות. ואולי ד׳
בחות תחתונים הנזכרים בדברי
חכמים נתהוו מארבע יסודות
של אדם הראשון בק״ל שנה
שפירש מאשתו[i] אבל הכשופים
פרש״י שע״י מלאכי חבלה הם
נעשים: ועיין מזה בהרשב״א
תשובה תי״ג. ועיין מחלוקי כתות
אלו בר״מ פרשת כי תצא דף
רע״ו: וישראל הוזהרו בוהיה
מחנך קדוש ולא יראה בך ערות
דבר וכן אמרו המשים אוכלים
תחת המטה רוח רעה שורה
עליהם ושומר נפשו ירחק מהם
ויהיה נפשו וגופו וביתו מדור
לקדושה. ובשום פנים אל יגדיל
צפרניו מידיו ורגליו.[ii] ואל ילך
ד׳ אמות בבקר קודם רחיצת
ידיו[iii] כאשר הזהיר ס״ה מזה
פעמים רבות ועל זה נאמר
ונשמרת מכל דבר רע: ואמרו

verse "You shall not make for yourself a graven image," and in the portion of Acharei Mot regarding the secret of the scapegoat, you will find new insights relevant to this interpretation. Also see there in the portion of Acharei Mot, pages 66 and 67. And examine in the Zohar, portion of Ki Tisa, page 188, the reason for the error of those who would bow to the light before sunrise, to an appointed being whom they called "the god of shining pearls," and they would swear by it. It was said that this being was appointed over gold and red pearls, and through it they would know the sun's positions to find gold and pearls. Perhaps the four lower powers mentioned in the words of the Sages[1] originated from the four elements of Adam during the 130 years that he separated from his wife, but regarding sorcery, Rashi explained that they are performed through angels of destruction.

See more on this in Rashba's Responsa 413. Also examine the divisions of these groups in Ra'aya Mehemna, portion of Ki Tetze, page 276. Israel were warned "your camp shall be holy"[2] and "no unseemly thing shall be seen among you." Similarly, they said that one who places food under the bed, an evil spirit rests upon it, and one who guards his soul should distance himself from these things. His soul, body, and home should be a dwelling place for holiness. Under no circumstances should he let his fingernails or toenails grow long. And he should not walk four cubits in the morning before washing his hands, as the author of Sefer HaChasidim warned many times, and regarding this it is said: "You shall guard yourself from every evil thing."

They said in the portion of Terumah that the image of a person stands in his likeness and form in

[1] The author is likely referring to the four primary demonic forces or kelipot (shells) in Kabbalistic cosmology that emerged as a result of cosmic corruption after Adam's sin.

[2] The author is establishing a connection between ritual purity laws in the Torah and Kabbalistic practices for spiritual protection, suggesting that the biblical commandments serve as protection against negative spiritual forces.

[i] According to rabbinic tradition, Adam separated from Eve for 130 years after the sin of the Tree of Knowledge as a form of penance. During this time, various demonic entities were said to have been created from his nocturnal emissions.

[i] In Kabbalistic thought, fingernails are considered a physical manifestation of din (judgment) and can attract negative forces if allowed to grow too long. This instruction reflects practical Kabbalistic hygiene.

[ii] This refers to the ritual of netilat yadayim (ritual hand washing) upon awakening. According to Kabbalistic teaching, during sleep the soul partially departs the body, allowing an impure spirit (ruach ra'ah) to enter, which remains on the hands until washed away.

בפרשת תרומה כי הדיוקן של
120 אדם עומד בדמותו בצלמו
באוצר אחד ששם כל הנשמות של
העולם מתלבשים בדיוקנא. [i] a certain treasury where all the souls of the world are clothed in their image.[A]

ואולי מקום זה יקרא חצר
ונקרא עבר הנהר. ובזה נדע
125 למה בני ישראל נקראים עבריים
וזה יהיה האוצר שאומר רש״י
על מאמר עד שיכלו כל הנשמות
שבגוף. וי״מ כי גוף ירצה גוף
אדם הראשון שהיו כל הנשמות
130 תלויים בו מהם בראשו ומהם
בזרועותיו כדאמרו חז״ל. [ii] ולכן
כלם צריכים תקון קודם ביאת
הגואל. וחצר זה מבדיל בין
יצירה לעשיה כי הוית הנשמות
135 שתחלת מוצא שפעם מבינה אינם
מצטיירים עד כי יתייחדו ת״ת
ומלכות [iii] ע״י שתי כחות שהם
בהיכל לבנת הספיר ושם בכחם
הנשמה מצטיירת בצורת רמ״ח
140 אברים רוחניים. ובעת שמוכנים

This place is perhaps called a "courtyard" and is known as "beyond the river." This helps us understand why the Children of Israel are called "Hebrews" [Ivrim, from "ever" meaning "beyond"].[1] This would be the storehouse that Rashi refers to in his comment on the statement "until all the souls in the body are depleted." Some interpret that "body" here refers to the body of Adam, the first man, in whom all souls were contained[2]—some in his head, others in his arms, as our Sages taught. Therefore, all souls require rectification before the arrival of the Redeemer. 120R 125R 130R

This courtyard separates the world of Formation [Yetzirah] from the world of Action [Asiyah]. For although souls originate from Binah [Understanding], they do not take form until Tiferet [Beauty] and Malkhut [Kingdom] unite through two forces present in the Palace of the Sapphire Brick.[3] There, through 135R

[A] Or: "in a treasury where all the souls of the world don their iconic form" — The Hebrew 'mitlabshim be-diyokna' conveys the idea of souls putting on or being clothed in their image/form. This alternative captures the active nature of this process and the technical sense of 'diyokna' as an iconic representation.

[1] The text makes a linguistic connection between 'Ivrim' (Hebrews) and 'ever ha-nahar' (beyond the river), suggesting that the Jewish people's very name reflects their souls' celestial origin.

[2] I've clarified that this refers to Adam, the first human, to avoid confusion with the concept of 'Adam Kadmon' (Primordial Man) found in other kabbalistic texts.

[1] This is a reference to one of the celestial palaces described in Heikhalot literature and the Zohar. The Hebrew term 'livnat ha-sapir' comes from Exodus 24:10, describing what was under God's feet in Moses' vision.

[iii] Cf. Isaiah 65:17 — The author uses this verse to support his eschatological vision where the cosmos will be restored to its original spiritual purity, free from the corruption introduced by Adam's sin. | Cf. Genesis 3:17-18 — The author refers to the curse placed on the earth after Adam's sin, where the earth was told it would no longer yield its produce easily and would bring forth thorns and thistles. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Shabbat 156b — The author refers to the famous Talmudic story where Rabbi Akiva's daughter was predicted by astrologers to die on her wedding day, but was saved because of a charitable act she performed. | Cf. Zohar, Terumah — The author refers readers to this section of the Zohar for further explanation of how Adam's sin created a deficiency even in the highest spiritual realms. | Cf. Deuteronomy 23:15 — The author cites this verse to emphasize the importance of maintaining personal and environmental purity as part of one's spiritual practice. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Pesachim 112a — The author refers to the Talmudic warning that food placed under a bed becomes contaminated by evil spirits, using this as an example of the need for physical purity.

[iv] This refers to the rabbinic concept that all future human souls were contained within Adam's body at creation, an idea found in several midrashic sources including Genesis Rabbah.

[i] This describes the kabbalistic process of soul formation, where souls originate from Binah (Understanding) but only take form when Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) and Malkhut (Kingdom) unite, representing the balance of masculine and feminine divine energies.

הנשמות שהם מעבר הנהר עליון
לירד לעולם הזה קורא הקב״ה
לממונה אחד שברשותו מופקדים
כל הנשמות העתידים לבא
לזה העולם ומביא לפניו אותה
הנשמה מלובשת בדיוקן העולם
הזה[i] והקב״ה משביעה שתעסוק
בסוד הנאמנות עליון דכתיב
אתה הראת לדעת כי ה׳ הוא
האלהים בסוד הנאמנות ובסוד
התורה. וה׳ הוא האלהים בו
יחוד עליון ותחתון שמע ישראל
ובשכמל״ו.[ii] ע״כ צריך האדם
לנהוג כבוד ונקיות בגופו זה
לכבוד שמים[iii] בעודו בעה״ז
כי דוגמתו יזכה לו בהתלבשו
בגן עדן עליון ותחתון ולזה
יכוין בנקיות גופו ובגדיו וביתו.
ומזה נבין אסור האבל ברחיצה
כל שבעה כפי הדין. ובגיהוץ
ובתספורת כל שלשים כאשר יבא
לקמן בעה״י. ואמרו בזהר רוח
אמשיך רוח ואיתי רוח: ואמר כי
בכל אתר דבר נש אתקשר הכי
אתחזי באנפוהי. ולכן הצדיקים
נקראים פני שכינה כי השכינה
מתתקנת עמהם ליראות את פני
המלך העליון[iv] ושכינה עמהם
בסתימו ואינון באתגלייא:[v]

these forces, the soul is formed with a structure of 248 spiritual limbs.[1]

When the souls that are "beyond the upper river" are ready to descend to this world, the Holy One, blessed be He, calls upon an angel who is entrusted with all souls destined to enter this world. This angel brings before Him the soul already clothed in the likeness of this world. The Holy One then makes the soul swear to engage in the mystery of supreme faithfulness, as it is written: "You have been shown to know that the Lord is God" in the mystery of faithfulness and in the mystery of Torah. "The Lord is God" contains both the higher and lower unification: "Hear O Israel" and "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever." 140R 145R 150R

Therefore, one must treat one's body with honor and cleanliness for the sake of Heaven while in this world, because its counterpart will be merited when clothed in the upper and lower Garden of Eden. This should be one's intention in maintaining the cleanliness of one's body, garments, and home. From this we can understand the mourner's prohibition against bathing for all seven days according to the law, and against laundered garments and haircuts for all thirty days, as will be explained later, God willing. 155R 160R

And they said in the Zohar: "Spirit draws spirit and brings spirit."[2] And it states that in whatever state a person attaches himself, so it appears on his face. This is why the righteous are called "the face of 165R

[2]The number 248 corresponds to the traditional count of positive commandments in Jewish law and the number of limbs in the human body according to Talmudic anatomy. This establishes a correspondence between the spiritual and physical body.

[1]This Zoharic phrase expresses the principle that similar spiritual qualities attract each other across different realms, explaining how one's spiritual state in this world shapes one's experience in the next.

[ii]This refers to the concept that souls receive a preliminary 'garment' or form that corresponds to their future physical body before descending to earth.

[iii]This describes the two fundamental unifications in Kabbalah: the higher unification expressed in 'Shema Yisrael' (uniting YHVH with Elohim) and the lower unification expressed in 'Baruch Shem Kevod' (uniting upper and lower worlds).

[iv]The author derives an ethical principle from this mystical cosmology: one should treat one's physical body with dignity and cleanliness because it corresponds to the soul's spiritual 'garment' in the afterlife.

[i]This expresses the kabbalistic concept that the righteous become a 'chariot' or vehicle for the Divine Presence, allowing it to be manifest in the lower worlds.

[ii]Cf. Zohar — The text directly quotes the Zohar regarding how spirit draws spirit, establishing the kabbalistic principle that spiritual entities attract their counterparts across different realms. | Cf. Rashi's commentary — The author cites Rashi's interpretation of the Talmudic saying about souls being depleted from a celestial storehouse, using it to support his own cosmological framework. | Cf. Palace of the Sapphire Brick — This reference to the 'Palace of the Sapphire Brick' draws from the Divine Presence," because the Shekhinah adorns Herself with them to appear before the Supernal King—the Shekhinah is with them in concealment while they are in revelation.[1] 170R

פרק כ״ד

Chapter 24

צריך לדבר דברי תורה עם הנוטה למות אם הוא מיושב בדעתו ובר הכי[i] הוא שכן עשו לרבי אליעזר הגדול. כי תורה היא תבלין ומלח הממתקת הבשר והשבר.[ii] וכל שכן שנותנת עלוי לנשמה רוחנית וכל עוף בלתי טהור פורח ממנו כנראה מכמה מעשים דבגמרין דלא הוה מ״ה יכיל למקרב משום דלא הוה שתיק פומיה מגירסא[iii] ועוד ראיה מרשב״י מאדרת האזינו דאמר ומלין אלין הוו טמירין בלבאי וכו׳ דלא אעייל לעולם הבא בביסופא. והמת מתוך

One should discuss words of Torah with a person who is approaching death, if they are of sound mind and capable of it,[A] as was done for Rabbi Eliezer the Great. For Torah is a spice and salt that sweetens the flesh and the brokenness.[2] And all the more so, 5R it elevates the spiritual soul, and every impure bird (harmful spiritual force) flees from it, as is evident from several stories in our Gemara where the Angel of Death was unable to approach[B] because the person's mouth did not cease from study.[3] Further proof 10R comes from Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai in the Idra of Ha'azinu, who said, "These words were hidden in my heart... so that I would not enter the World to Come in shame." And one who dies amid the joy of Torah study—this is a good sign for them. It is similar to 15R

[A] Or: "worthy of it" — The Aramaic phrase 'bar hachi' can connote both capability and worthiness/appropriateness, depending on context.

[A] Or: "the Angel of Death could not come near" — This is a more literal translation of the Aramaic expression. The acronym מ״ה stands for מלאך המות (Malach HaMavet), the Angel of Death.

[2] This paradoxical statement expresses a key mystical concept: the Divine Presence operates through righteous individuals while remaining hidden, while the righteous themselves are visible in the world.

[3] The original Hebrew uses 'והשבר' (and the brokenness), which has multiple meanings—it can refer to physical fracture, emotional distress, or spiritual crisis. In the context of approaching death, all these meanings are relevant.

[1] The original uses the Aramaic expression 'דלא הוה שתיק פומיה מגירסא' which literally means 'his mouth did not remain silent from study,' a common Talmudic expression for continuous Torah learning.

Heikhalot literature and the Zohar's system of celestial palaces where divine processes occur, specifically where souls take form through the union of divine attributes. | Cf. Deuteronomy 4:35 — The biblical verse 'You have been shown to know that the Lord is God' is used to demonstrate the soul's obligation to acknowledge divine unity, which becomes part of its celestial oath before descending to earth. | Cf. Shema and Baruch Shem declarations — The reference to 'Hear O Israel' (Shema) and 'Blessed be the name...' (Baruch Shem) represents the two fundamental unifications in Jewish mystical practice, connecting upper and lower divine realms.

[iii] The phrase indicates two requirements for Torah study with the dying: mental clarity ('settled mind') and spiritual capacity ('worthy/capable of it'), showing that Torah study with the dying was not merely ritualistic but required their active participation when possible.

[iv] This metaphor comparing Torah to spice and salt has deep significance in Jewish mystical thought. Salt preserves and purifies while spices enhance—suggesting Torah both protects the soul during transition and elevates it spiritually.

[i] This reference to Talmudic stories indicates a belief that continuous Torah study could literally ward off the Angel of Death, showing the perceived protective power of Torah beyond metaphorical understanding.

שחוק של תורה סימן יפה לו. כמו שאמרו שצריך לישן מתוך דברי תורה כי אז תעלה נשמתו בהבל התורה להתדבק בעץ החיים. ותורה היא אור לנשמתו וסימן טוב לצדיק הנפטר ביום לידתו כדאמרי׳ הקב״ה משלים שנותיהם של צדיקים מיום ליום וזה לפי שביום הלידה המזל השולט אז הוא עוזר לו כמו שבו יצא למציאות העולם כדאמרו בירושלמי מסכת ר״ה פרק ראוהו ב״ד עמלק בשפן היה מעמיד בני אדם ביום גניסייא שלו לומר לא במהרה אדם נופל ביום גניסייא שלו שהוא יום הלידה כדאמרי׳ יום גניסייא של מלכים. וכן אם פניו ודעתו כלפי העם העומדים עליו לסעדו בדברי קדושה סימן יפה לו וכן אם גשמים מזלפים על מטתו מורה התעוררות הרחמים עליו. עוד הוא רמז מי יתן טהור מטמא כד״א ועסותם רשעים וגו׳ וכיון דיתייחיב על ההוא עפר מים בדין הוא טהור מטמא. ואדם הוא אפר והמים עליונים מטהרים אותו. עוד ירמוז כי יזכה להעלות נשמות רשעים מגיהנם מדי עברו שם[i] כאשר כתבנו לעיל: כתב בעל הלכות כיון שאדם נטה למות אינם רשאים ליפרד ממנו כדי שלא תצא נפשו כשהוא יחידי וימות בעגמת נפש. מפני שהנפש משתוממת בשעה שיוצאה מן הגוף ועוד שמא יתקשו אבריו ויבא לידי גנות כדאמרי׳ ד׳ צריכים שמור ובהיות רבים עמו מתחלש כח

what they said about the need to fall asleep while engaged in words of Torah, for then one's soul ascends through the breath of Torah to cleave to the Tree of Life. Torah is a light for one's soul, and it is a good sign for a righteous person to pass away on their birthday, as our Sages said, "The Holy One, blessed be He, completes the years of the righteous from day to day." This is because on the day of birth, the ruling constellation helps the person, just as it did when they came into existence in the world. As they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Rosh Hashanah, chapter "The Court Saw Him": "Amalek in Shafan would position people on his anniversary day,[A] saying, 'A person does not easily fall on his anniversary day,' which is the birthday, as we say, 'the anniversary day of kings.'" Similarly, if the dying person's face and mind are turned toward the people standing around them to support them with words of holiness, it is a good sign. And likewise, if rain drips upon their deathbed, this indicates an awakening of divine compassion for them. This also alludes to "Who can bring purity from impurity?"[1] as it is said, "And you shall trample the wicked, etc." And since water is given upon that dust, it is pure from impurity. A person is dust, and the supernal waters purify them. It further hints that they will merit to elevate the souls of the wicked from Gehenna when passing through there, as we wrote above. The author of Halakhot wrote that once a person is near death, others are not permitted to leave them, so that their soul should not depart while they are alone and die in anguish. This is because the soul is bewildered when it leaves the body, and also because their limbs might stiffen and become undignified, as our Sages said, "Four things require watching." When many people are with the dying person, the power of harmful spirits and agents of judgment is weakened, as they said, "Three do not see and are not harmed." For the coarse husks (negative forces) control the [A] Or: "Amalek son of Shafan would station people on his commemoration day" — The reference is unclear and may be to a historical figure rather than the biblical Amalek. 'Shafan' could be a person's name rather than a place.

[1] This is a quote from Job 14:4, often used in rabbinic literature to discuss spiritual transformation. Here it's connected to rain on a deathbed, suggesting that death itself can be a purifying process.

[i] This remarkable concept suggests that the righteously departed can rescue souls from Gehenna as they pass through it, indicating that the journey after death involves not just personal salvation but potentially helping others as well.

המזיקים ושלוחי הדין כדאמרי׳ ג׳ אינם רואים ואינם ניזוקים כי הקליפות הגסות שולטים בגוף וממיתים אותו. והדקות שולטין בנשמה[1] ופוגמין אותה. ותקונה במיתה לעבל הרע ההוא כמו שיבא. ובזה העומדים עליו עושים תועלת לגופו ונייחא לנשמתו. וראיה מפרקא קמא דחגיגה ממעשה דר׳ יעקב אישכ פר חיטיא יעו״ש. והמסתיר מעשיו בחייו מבני אדם יהיה נסתר מבעלי הדין במותו ואחר מותו ג״כ. [ii] body and kill it, while the subtle ones control the soul and blemish it. Its rectification in death is to process that evil,[1] as will be explained. In this way, those standing by the dying person provide benefit to their body and comfort to their soul. Evidence for this comes from the first chapter of Hagigah, from the story of Rabbi Jacob of Kfar Hittaya, see there. And one who conceals their deeds from people during their lifetime will be hidden from the agents of judgment at their death[2] and afterward as well.

55R

60R

מלבד כי שכר העושה מצות ועוסק בתורה בפרהסיא הוא ע״י כחות המלאכים המשמשים את הגן. והעובד בסתר שברו הוא ע״י הקב״ה בעצמו. דכתיב ביה מה רב טובך אשר צפנת ליראיך. וכמו שצפון מעשיו כן זוכה לטוב הצפון: ואמרו בספר הזהר כי בשעת פטירתו של אדם הנפש נשאלת מהגוף כאדם ההולך דרך רחוקה ונפרד מאוהבו שקשה בעיניו פרידתו ממנו ואם בחייו זכה להכניע יצר הרע שבו בכחו זה יכנעו הדינין והקליפות מעליו. ועליו יאמר והנה טוב מאד זה מלאך המות

Moreover, the reward of one who performs commandments and engages in Torah study publicly comes through the angelic forces that serve the Garden. But one who serves in private receives his reward directly from the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written, “How abundant is Your goodness that You have stored up for those who fear You.” And just as his deeds are hidden, so too he merits the hidden good.

The Zohar teaches that at the time of a person’s passing, the soul is requested from the body like a person traveling a distant road who separates from his beloved, finding the separation difficult. If during his lifetime he succeeded in subduing the evil inclination within him, through this power the judgments and negative forces will be subdued from upon him.

65R

70R

75R

80R

[1] The Hebrew term ‘לעבל’ (to process/digest) uses a digestive metaphor for spiritual purification, suggesting that death is a metabolic process where impurities are separated from the essential self.
[2] The concept of ‘בעלי הדין’ (agents of judgment) refers to spiritual entities that evaluate souls after death. The text suggests that privacy in religious practice during life creates spiritual protection after death.

[ii] This kabbalistic teaching distinguishes between ‘coarse husks’ that affect the body and ‘subtle husks’ that affect the soul, reflecting a sophisticated understanding of different levels of spiritual impurity and their varied effects.
[iii] Cf. Talmud, Bava Batra 116a — The author draws on this talmudic source to establish the halakhic basis for studying Torah with a dying person, showing this was not merely a spiritual practice but one rooted in rabbinic tradition. | Cf. Zohar, Idra d’Ha’azinu — The author uses this reference to demonstrate how even the greatest kabbalist, Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, was concerned with proper spiritual preparation before death, specifically through Torah study and teaching. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Rosh Hashanah — The author connects this concept to the idea that dying on one’s birthday is auspicious, suggesting a complete spiritual cycle. This further emphasizes the importance of spiritual preparation, as even astrological factors play a role in the transition. | Cf. Talmud, Hagigah 3b — This reference is used to provide evidence for the author’s claim about the importance of having people present at the time of death to provide comfort and spiritual support.

כמשל בן חשר והזונה בפרשת תרומה דף קס״ג[i] דודאי יצר הרע שהוא שטן טוב מאוד למאן דצאית פקודין דמאריה וירחם לקב״ה גם ביצר הרע בתר דתבר ליה. ואם היצר משיאו לדבר עבירה והוא להחלישו ילך לעשות דבר מצוה נגדו אשריו כי בזה מניה וביה אבא ליזיל ביה נרגא.[ii] ובהתרחקו מג׳ קליפות הגאוה ואבזריה שהם רו״ח גדולה. ורע״ש וא״ש[iii] הנה הם ג׳ חלקי העשיה דהיינו עשיה ויצירה וחלק הבריאה שבעולם ההוא כי חלק האצילות שבה היא קליפת הנוגה שיש לה מתוק בכח מלוי שם ב״ן שהיא בשבינה על ידי (מטמא) אות אחת המלוי בכל יום. והתרגום שהתורה ירדה ברוכה בו הוא רמז לקליפה זו שהיא ראש לקומת החיצונים. שכן רישיה דדהבא שהיא לשון כשדיים וארמית. ועליה נאמר כי נופת תטופנה שפתי זרה וחלק משמן חכה. אך אחר התפשטות הראש ליוני וביוצא אחריתה מרה כלענה וגו׳. וזהו אמרם יפת אלהים ליפת שפירוש יפיפותו של יפת שהוא לשון ארמי ישכון באהלי שם.[iv] שכן קליפה זו מקבלת מיתוק ורצונה בכך ולכן מלאכת האדם בעוה״ז להבדיל עצמו מהג׳ קליפות הנזכרים התחתונות ולמתק חלק

Of such a person it is said, “And behold, it was very good”—this refers to the Angel of Death, as in the parable of the prince and the prostitute in Parashat Terumah, page 163, where the evil inclination, which is Satan, is truly good for one who heeds the commandments of his Master and serves the Holy One, blessed be He, even through the evil inclination after he has broken it. And if the inclination entices him to sin, but he weakens it by performing a commandment instead, fortunate is he, for in this way “from itself comes the ax handle” [to fell the tree].

By distancing himself from the three kelipot (husks) of pride and its accessories—which are “great wind,” “earthquake,” and “fire”—these representing the three parts of Asiyah, namely Asiyah, Yetzirah, and the portion of Beriah within that world, since the Atzilut portion within it is the kelipat nogah (luminous shell), which has sweetness through the power of the filled Divine Name Ban, which is in the Shekhinah through the filling of one letter each day.[1] The Aramaic translation with which the Torah descended intertwined is an allusion to this kelipah, which is the head of the external forces’ structure. For “its head is of gold” refers to the Chaldean and Aramaic language. Of this it is said, “For the lips of a strange woman drip honey, and her palate is smoother than oil.” But after the extension of the head to Greek and similar languages, “her end is bitter as wormwood,” etc.

This is the meaning of the saying, “May God extend Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem,” which means that the beauty of Japheth, which is the Aramaic language, shall dwell in the tents of Shem. For this kelipah receives sweetening

[1] This refers to a complex kabbalistic concept about how divine names are ‘filled’ by spelling out each letter in full, creating an expanded form. The text suggests this process happens gradually, with one letter being filled each day.

[i] This refers to a parable in the Zohar (Terumah 163) where the king’s son enters a prostitute’s house to test him. Similarly, the soul is tested by the evil inclination, and when it resists temptation, the evil inclination itself becomes beneficial.

[ii] This Aramaic expression literally means ‘from itself comes the ax handle’—a metaphor suggesting that the solution to a problem comes from the problem itself. Here it means that the evil inclination is defeated using its own energy redirected toward good.

[iii] These terms refer to the manifestations that Elijah experienced at Mount Horeb: ‘great wind,’ ‘earthquake,’ and ‘fire,’ in which God was not present (1 Kings 19:11-12). Here they symbolize three levels of impure forces.

[i] This is a kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 9:27. In this reading, ‘Japheth’ represents the beauty of translation (particularly Aramaic), which can dwell in the ‘tents of Shem’ (representing Hebrew, the holy tongue) when properly purified.

העשיה זו הראשונה. וזהו שם
120 הטומאה שמסר אברהם לבני
הפילגשים. כי בראותו שהיו
נוטים אל החצונים בקש שלא
ידבקו בקליפות גסות החצונות.
אבל ידבקו אל תוכיות הטומאה
125 שעליו הוא השם. כי מלת שם
אינו מוסב על החומר אלא
על הצורה. והיא קליפה דקה
פנימית הנאכלת כמה פעמים
עם האגוז. ונקל לאחוזים
130 בקליפה רביעית זו הנקראת
נוגה להדבק אח״כ בקדושה:
ונקראים כחות אלו מתנות
שהם כלם דברים הדיוטים
מאותם שקרא אותם הרמב״ם ז״ל
135 מפורסמות שבני אדם להוטים
אחריהם. המפורסמות שהם
מאילן הדעת טוב ורע נחלקים
לארבע חלקים יש חלק שהוא
טוב במוחלט וחלק תחתון רע
140 במוחלט. ואחר חלק הראשון בא
חלק שני שיש בו מהרע אך הטוב
הוא יותר מהרע הרבה ואח״כ
בא החלק הג׳ שבו יותר חלק
הרע מהטוב. והחלק הראשון
145 ממנו זהו שם טומאה שמסר
להם[i] שבאותו שם מתעסקים
באומניות כשרים שעליהם אמר
התנא שיגיעת שניהם משכחת עון
וזהו יגיע כפיך כי תאכל כפי
150 ההכרח אשריך וטוב לך. שבזה
תזכה לטוב עץ הדעת החלק
שהוא טוב במוחלט. והביא
המשורר ראיה מהמשגל שיש בו
טוב ורע ולירא ה׳ הוא כלו
155 טוב. וזהו אשתך כגפן פוריה
וגו׳ ומעין זה היו המתנות שלקח
משה בשמים עבור ישראל שהם
טובות גשמיות שמיעדת התורה
לעושי רצונו להכנות. ולא
160 עבור שכר מצוה כי ליכא בהאי and desires it, and therefore man's task in this world 115R is to separate himself from the three lower kelipot mentioned above and to sweeten this first part of Asiyah. This is the "name of impurity" that Abraham gave to the children of his concubines. For seeing that they were inclined toward the external 120R forces, he desired that they not cleave to the coarse external husks, but rather adhere to the inner essence of impurity, which is designated by the name. For the word "name" does not refer to the substance but to the form. And it is a thin, inner husk that is 125R sometimes eaten with the nut. It is easy for those who grasp this fourth kelipah called nogah to subsequently cleave to holiness.

These powers are called "gifts," and they are all common matters of the type that Maimonides, of 130R blessed memory, called "widely accepted notions" that people eagerly pursue. These widely accepted notions, which come from the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, are divided into four parts: there is a part that is absolutely good and a lower part 135R that is absolutely evil. After the first part comes a second part that contains some evil, but the good in it far outweighs the evil. Then comes the third part, in which the evil portion exceeds the good.
The first part is this "name of impurity" that he 140R gave them,[1] through which they engage in proper occupations, concerning which the Tanna said that "the toil of both of them makes sin forgotten." This is the meaning of "When you eat the labor of your hands according to necessity, you are fortunate and 145R it is good for you." Through this you will merit the good of the Tree of Knowledge, the part that is absolutely good.

The Psalmist brought proof from sexual relations, which contains both good and evil, yet for one who 150R fears the Lord, it is entirely good. This is the meaning of "Your wife shall be as a fruitful vine," etc.
Similar to this were the gifts that Moses took in heaven for Israel, which are physical benefits that the Torah designates for those who do His will, as 155R preparation—not as reward for the commandment,

[1] The concept of Abraham giving a 'name of impurity' to his concubines' children isn't explicitly mentioned in the Bible but comes from kabbalistic tradition. It represents practical, worldly knowledge that, while not purely sacred, still has positive value when used properly.

[ii] This references the tradition that Abraham gave esoteric knowledge to the children of his concubines (Genesis 25:6). The author interprets this as knowledge of practical occupations that, while not purely sacred, still connect to divine service at their highest level.

עלמא אלא עבור מתן שכר. דמתן שכר זה נתן בהאי עלמא להכנת הטוב. ובהתרחק האדם מג׳ חלקים התחתונים שבעץ הדעת טוב ורע הנזכרים גם כן נשמתו לא תצטער בהם. ותצא בקול דממה דקה כי שם הארת פני שכינה ע״י כח אריה אשר יתראה בנגדו כנתבאר בהקדמת תקוני הזהר דף ג׳ ע״ב. ולא יאונה אליו כח כלב ח״ו שהוא דין חצוף המתהווה מזווג קליפת שור וחמור.[i][ii] for "there is no reward for commandments in this world," but rather for the giving of reward, as this giving of reward is granted in this world as preparation for the good.

When a person distances himself from the three lower parts of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil mentioned above, his soul will not suffer through them. It will depart in "a still, small voice," for there the illumination of the Divine Presence shines through the power of the lion that appears before him, as explained in the introduction to Tikkunei Zohar, page 3b. And he will not be afflicted, Heaven forbid, by the power of the dog, which is insolent judgment formed from the union of the husks of ox and donkey.

ואם לא נהנה מתענוגי העולם הזה אלא מסעודת מצוה גם כן בשרו ישכון לבטח[iii] דהואיל ולא

And if one has not enjoyed the pleasures of this world except through meals associated with religious commandments, his flesh will also dwell securely,[1] for

[1]The original uses a biblical phrase (ישכון לבטח) that has both physical and spiritual connotations. In this context, it means the body will be protected from harmful spiritual forces after death due to its purity in life.

[i]In kabbalistic symbolism, the 'dog' represents brazen judgment that results from an improper combination of spiritual forces (symbolized by ox and donkey, which the Torah forbids from being yoked together). This negative spiritual energy may manifest at death for the unprepared soul.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Terumah 163 — The passage refers to a parable in the Zohar (Terumah 163) about the prince and the prostitute, which illustrates how the evil inclination (yetzer hara) can be transformed from an adversary into something beneficial when properly subdued. | Cf. Psalm 31:20 — The quote 'How abundant is Your goodness that You have stored up for those who fear You' comes from Psalm 31:20 and is used to support the idea that those who serve God in private receive direct divine reward. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Introduction 3b — The reference to the 'power of the lion' appearing before the righteous person at death comes from Tikkunei Zohar's introduction, which discusses the four faces of the divine chariot (lion, ox, eagle, human) and their manifestation at different spiritual moments. | Cf. Genesis 9:27 — The verse 'May God extend Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem' is from Genesis 9:27, but is given a kabbalistic interpretation where Japheth represents Aramaic language (associated with translation) and Shem represents Hebrew (the holy tongue). | Cf. 1 Kings 19:11-12 — The three manifestations of 'great wind,' 'earthquake,' and 'fire' allude to the story of Elijah at Mount Horeb (1 Kings 19:11-12), where God was not in these powerful forces but in 'a still, small voice,' which the text also references regarding the soul's departure. | Cf. Proverbs 5:3-4 — The quote 'For the lips of a strange woman drip honey, and her palate is smoother than oil' is from Proverbs 5:3, and 'her end is bitter as wormwood' is from 5:4. The text applies these verses metaphorically to the allure and danger of certain types of external wisdom. | Cf. Genesis 25:6 — The reference to Abraham giving 'gifts' to the children of his concubines comes from Genesis 25:6. The text gives this a mystical interpretation, suggesting these 'gifts' were a form of knowledge related to the 'name of impurity'—practical wisdom that kept them from the worst forms of idolatry. | Cf. Ethics of the Fathers 2:2 — The phrase 'the toil of both of them makes sin forgotten' appears to reference the teaching in Pirkei Avot (Ethics of the Fathers) 2:2 that Torah study combined with work is beneficial because the exertion of both makes sin forgotten.

[iii]This phrase alludes to Psalm 16:9, "Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoices; my flesh also shall rest in confidence." In this context, it refers to the body being protected from harmful spiritual forces after death.

נטל מחלק רוח מסאבא[i] כלום
ליה ליה רשו עליהון כלל
וזכאה איהו מאן דלא מתהני
מדיליה כלום. והשומר פיו
ולשונו מכל מאכל ודבור רע
שומר מצרות נפשו. כדאמרי׳
בסוף פ׳ משפטים באיסור בשר
בחלב ואפילו לאכול אותם
בשעתא חדא או בסעודא חדא
אמר כי מתראה בפניו גדי
מקולס[ii] לגבי עליונים. וכתות
טמאים מטמאים אותו וגורם
לעורר דינים חצונים. ואם
יוליד בן באותם מ׳ יומין ממשיך
עליו נשמה מסטרא אחרא. ועל
זה בני משפחתנו צוו והוזהרו
מהחסידה זקנתי אם אמי מרת
פיורי״טה דמתקרייא בת שבע
אלמנת המנוח כמוהר״ר שלמה
יעקב רפאל ממודינ״ה.[iii] שלא
לאכול אפי׳ חלב ואח״כ בשר
אם לא כשיעור שיש בין סעודה
לסעודה. וכן נהגנו עד היום
הזה. זה כתבתי לזרז בני ביתי
והנלוים אליהם ממשפחתנו
לבל ישנו תפקידתם וכזה פסק
בעל הלבושים[iv] סימן קע״ג.
ואמר שם בס״ה כי חנניה מישאל
ועזריה צלמא דמאריהון לא
אתעדי מנהון[v] בגין דלא אתענגו

since he has taken nothing from the portion of the impure spirit, it has no power over him at all. And fortunate is he who does not benefit from that which belongs to it. One who guards his mouth and tongue from all forbidden food and evil speech guards his soul from troubles. As it is stated at the end of the chapter Mishpatim regarding the prohibition of meat and milk, even eating them in the same hour or at the same meal, it says that a kid appears roasted before the celestial beings. And groups of impure entities defile him and cause external judgments to be aroused. And if he fathers a child during those forty days, he draws upon it a soul from the Other Side.[1]

Concerning this, the members of our family were commanded and warned by my pious grandmother, my mother's mother, Lady Fiorita, who was called Bat Sheva,[2] widow of the deceased, the honorable Rabbi Shlomo Yaakov Raphael of Modena, not to eat even milk and afterward meat unless allowing the time equivalent to the interval between one meal and another.[3] And so we have practiced until this day. I have written this to encourage my household members and those attached to them from our family not to change their assigned duty. And similarly ruled the author of the Levushim in section 173.

And it is stated there in Sefer HaZohar that Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah—the image of their Master did not depart from them[4] because they did not indulge in the contamination of their vessels.

175R 180R 185R 190R 195R 200R

[2]"The Other Side" (סטרא אחרא) is a kabbalistic term for forces of impurity and evil, essentially the demonic realm opposed to divine holiness.

[3]This shows the practice of having both secular/vernacular names (Italian "Fiorita") and Hebrew names ("Bat Sheva") common among Italian Jews of this period.

[4]The text is discussing the halakhic requirement to wait between consuming dairy and meat products. Different traditions specify varying waiting periods; here the author's family follows a practice of waiting the time equivalent to between regular meals.

[1]This is a mystical concept suggesting that adherence to dietary laws preserves the divine image (tzelem) in humans. The Zohar teaches that forbidden foods damage this spiritual image.

[ii]"Ruach mesaava" (spirit of impurity) is a kabbalistic term for negative spiritual forces that gain power over a person through forbidden foods and actions.

[iii]"Gedi mekulas" refers to a roasted kid/goat, which was a forbidden idolatrous practice. The author is using this as a metaphor for how eating meat and milk together appears in the spiritual realms.

[iv]This passage provides valuable biographical information about the author's family. His maternal grandmother was named Fiorita (an Italian name), also called Bat Sheva in Hebrew, and she was the widow of Rabbi Shlomo Yaakov Raphael of Modena.

[i]"Ba'al HaLevushim" refers to Rabbi Mordechai Jaffe (1530-1612), author of a series of halakhic works collectively known as the "Levushim" (Garments).

[ii]This Aramaic phrase refers to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah (from the Book of Daniel) retain-

בגיעולי מכליהון ושים עיניך על מה שכתב ספר הזהר על פסוק כל עמל האדם לפיהו וגם הנפש לא תמלא כי ודאי בזה כל הירא וחרד לנפשו יעשה משמרת למשמרת[i] לבל יכנס בפיו שום דבר אסור ויפקח עיניו מי שוחט מי בודק ומי מנקר הבשר וכ״ש שאר אסורין המצויין ודבר זה צריך זרוז מאד כי מכשלה רבה היא. ואמרו בויקרא רבה פרשה י״ג אריסטון[ii] עתיד הקב״ה לעשות לעבדיו וכל מי שלא אכל נבלות בעולם הזה זוכה לראותו לעולם הבא הה״ד וחלב נבלה וחלב טרפה יעשה לכל מלאכה ואכול לא תאכלוהו בשביל שתאכלו ממנו לעתיד לבא ע״כ. וזוהי הסעודה של ג״ע[iii] בראו הנביאים לא מתן שכר הצדיקים כדאמרי׳ במדרש.[iv]

And set your eyes upon what the Zohar wrote on the verse "All the labor of a man is for his mouth, and the soul is never satisfied," for certainly in this matter, everyone who fears and trembles for his soul will make a safeguard around a safeguard[1] so that nothing forbidden enters his mouth. And he will keep his eyes open regarding who slaughters, who examines, and who removes the forbidden parts from the meat,[2] and all the more so regarding other common prohibitions. This matter requires great diligence, for it is a major stumbling block.

And they said in Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 13, "The Holy One, blessed be He, will make a feast (ariston)[3] for His servants in the future, and anyone who did not eat forbidden meat in this world will merit to see it in the World to Come." This is what is written: "The fat of an animal that died of itself, and the fat of one that is torn by beasts, may be used for any work; but you shall not eat it"—so that you may eat of it in the time to come. This is the feast of the Garden of Eden which the prophets created, not the reward of the righteous, as stated in the Midrash.

ובמדבר רבה פרשה י״ג אמרו שהקב״ה מיסב עם הצדיקים אלו בסעודת גן עדן דכתיב יבא דודי

And in Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 13, they said that the Holy One, blessed be He, reclines with these righteous ones at the feast in the Garden of [2]This translates the rabbinic principle of creating additional protective measures (משמרת למשמרת) to prevent violations of Torah law. I've rendered it idiomatically to capture the concept of multiple layers of protection.

[3]This refers to "nikur" (ניקור), the process of removing forbidden fats, veins and sinews from kosher meat, particularly the sciatic nerve (gid hanasheh) which is biblically prohibited.

[4]I've included the transliterated Greek-derived term "ariston" in parentheses to clarify the foreign term used in the original text.

ing the "image of their Master" (divine likeness) because they refused to eat forbidden foods in Nebuchadnezzar's palace.

[iii]"Safeguard for a safeguard" is a rabbinic principle of creating additional protective measures to prevent violations of Torah law. Here it refers to being extra cautious about food laws.

[iv]"Ariston" is a Greek-derived term meaning a banquet or feast. In rabbinic literature, it refers to the eschatological banquet that the righteous will enjoy in the World to Come.

[v]"The feast of Gan Eden (Garden of Eden)" refers to the spiritual reward awaiting the righteous after death, often depicted metaphorically as a divine banquet.

[vi]Cf. Sefer HaZohar, Parashat Mishpatim — The passage cites the Zohar's teaching that consuming meat and milk together has negative spiritual consequences, including attracting impure forces and affecting one's offspring. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah 13 — The midrash is cited to support the idea that those who observe dietary laws in this world will merit special rewards in the World to Come, specifically participation in a divine feast. | Cf. Levushim by Rabbi Mordechai Jaffe — The author cites Rabbi Jaffe's halakhic ruling to support his family's stringent practice regarding the separation of meat and milk. | Cf. Book of Daniel, story of Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah — These biblical figures are cited as examples of those who maintained their spiritual purity by refusing to consume forbidden foods at the Babylonian court.

לגנו וגו׳:[i] וכל המונע עיניו
מחטא שומר כל גופו ובהרחיק
עצמו מן ההרהור מקיים העולם
בזכותו ולא תאונה אליו רעה
דעינא ולבא תרי סרסורי
דחטאה נינהו[ii] ואם בסבת
עונותיו יבהלוהו הרהורים
רעים יחשוב בגדולת שמו הגדול
ובפרט בשם הוי״ה מלא ביודין
שהוא שם המחשבה[iii] כתוב לפניו
על קלף כשר כנ״ל. וירגיל
עצמו לקרא פעמים הרבה פסוק
אש תמיד תוקד על המזבח לא
תכבה.[iv] ועיין בתקון שלישי
מהתקונים החדשים סודו שהוא
להבריח השטן ופסוק ויאמר
ה׳ אל השטן וגו׳. ושחט אותו
על ירך המזבח וגו׳ וכדומה
להם. והסדר אשר העלינו
במעירי שחר שלנו ביום ראש
השנה[v] יפה לדעתנו להבריח כל
אויב ומתנקם ולכלות קוצים מן
הכרם וקריאת פסוקי הפרשה
עם התרגום בכל יום למתק

Eden,[1] as it is written, "Let my beloved come to his garden, etc." And whoever guards his eyes from sin[2] protects his entire body, and by distancing himself from impure thoughts, he sustains the world through his merit,[3] and no evil will befall him, for the eyes and the heart are the two agents of sin. And if, due to his transgressions, evil thoughts disturb him, he should contemplate the greatness of His great Name, particularly the Divine Name YHVH spelled fully with Yuds,[4] which is the Name of thought, written before him on kosher parchment as mentioned above. And he should accustom himself to recite many times the verse "A perpetual fire shall be kept burning on the altar; it shall not go out." And see in the third Tikkun of the new Tikkunim its secret, that it is to drive away Satan, and the verse "And the LORD said to Satan, etc." And "he shall slaughter it on the north side of the altar, etc." and similar verses. And the order which we established in our "Me'irei Shachar" on Rosh Hashanah is, in our opinion, excellent for driving away every enemy and avenger, and for removing thorns from the vineyard. And reading the weekly Torah portion with the Targum every day to sweeten

230R 235R 240R 245R 250R

[1] The original uses סעודת גן עדן, literally 'meal of the Garden of Eden,' which is a metaphorical concept in rabbinic literature depicting the ultimate spiritual reward for the righteous as dining with God in Paradise.

[2] The concept of 'guarding the eyes' (שמירת עיניים) is a significant ethical practice in Jewish tradition, referring to the conscious avoidance of looking at inappropriate sights that might lead to sinful thoughts or actions.

[3] This reflects the rabbinic concept that righteous individuals sustain the entire world through their merit (זכות), a theme expressed in the Talmudic statement that the world exists due to thirty-six hidden righteous people.

[4] This refers to a specific spelling of the Tetragrammaton in Kabbalah where each letter is expanded: י״ד ה״י ו״ו ה״י, with the total numerical value of 72. This form is associated with the world of Atzilut (Emanation) and thought purification.

[i] This references Song of Songs 5:1, which is interpreted mystically to refer to God's relationship with the righteous in the afterlife. The metaphor of God 'dining' with the righteous in Paradise is a significant rabbinic concept depicting the ultimate spiritual reward.

[ii] This is a reference to a Talmudic concept (Yerushalmi Berakhot 1:5) that the eye and the heart are 'two agents of sin'—meaning that sin typically begins with seeing something forbidden, desiring it in one's heart, and then acting upon it. This concept is foundational in Jewish ethical literature.

[iii] This refers to a kabbalistic spelling of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) where each letter is fully spelled out using the letter yud (הי-ויו-הי-יוד), giving it a numerical value of 72. In Kabbalah, this expansion is associated with the world of Atzilut (Emanation) and is considered particularly effective for purifying thought.

[iv] This verse from Leviticus 6:6 about the perpetual fire on the altar is interpreted in Kabbalah as a spiritual weapon against impure thoughts. The 'fire' represents divine energy that can purify human consciousness.

[v] The author refers to his own prayer collection called 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), particularly the Rosh Hashanah liturgy, which he claims has special efficacy for spiritual protection.

קליפת נוגה כפי סדר גורי האר״י[i], מסוגל מאד לטהרת המחשבה לע״ד. עוד דבר מסוגל לטהרה זו הוא קריאת פסוקי דזמרא עם שירת הים בקול רנה ותודה בבית הכנסת עם הקהל לא כאותם הכורתים וזומרים אותם ומבליעים שלא בנעימה כי עיניהם על דרכיהם ושמים חשך לאור ואור לחשך. ומצאתי כתוב כי שם אוריאל טוב להארת הנשמה[ii] מכל מה שנתגלה לה במרום כפי כחה שיזכור ממנו ונתגלה ע״י זה סודות נוראות וגם הוא מסוגל לטהר מחשבותיו שלא יהיו נפסלים בתפלתו הדומה לקרבן שנפסל במחשבה. וטוב לת״ח להרגיל עצמו לומר תפלה קצרה זו ובפרט קודם פטירתו:[iii]

the kelipat nogah (shining husk),[1] according to the order of the disciples of the ARI, is very beneficial for purifying one's thoughts, in my humble opinion. Another thing beneficial for this purification is reading the verses of Pesukei d'Zimra along with the Song of the Sea in a voice of joyful thanksgiving in the synagogue with the congregation—not like those who cut and prune them and swallow them unmelodiously, for their eyes are on their ways,[2] and they put darkness for light and light for darkness. And I found it written that the name Uriel is good for illuminating the soul from all that was revealed to it in the heights according to its capacity that it may remember, and through this, awesome secrets are revealed. It is also effective for purifying one's thoughts so they will not become invalidated in one's prayer, which is comparable to a sacrifice that becomes invalidated through improper thought. And it is good for a Torah scholar to accustom himself to recite this short prayer, especially before his passing:[3]

255R 260R 265R 270R

רִבּוֹן עָלְמִין[iv] דְּאַנְתְּ הוּא מָארֵי

Master of the Worlds,[A] You who are the Lord of

275R

[A] Or: "Sovereign of the Universes" — This alternative captures the cosmic scale implied in the

[1] In Lurianic Kabbalah, kelipat nogah is the intermediary 'shell' or 'husk' between the realms of holiness and impurity. Unlike purely negative husks, it contains a mixture of good and evil and can be elevated through proper spiritual actions.

[2] This is a critique of those who rush through prayers mechanically without proper devotion, focusing on their own concerns rather than on the spiritual content of the prayers.

[1] The text ends abruptly here before providing the actual prayer it references. The prayer itself would likely have been a meditation intended for recitation near death, continuing the text's theme of spiritual preparation.

[ii] This refers to the Lurianic kabbalistic practice of 'sweetening' kelipat nogah (the 'shining husk'—a neutral spiritual force that can be elevated to holiness). The disciples of Rabbi Isaac Luria (the ARI) had specific methods for this spiritual rectification.

[iii] Uriel is one of the four archangels in Jewish tradition. In Kabbalah, contemplating angelic names was believed to connect one to their spiritual energies. Uriel, whose name means 'God is my light,' is associated with illumination of the soul and intellect.

[iv] Cf. Song of Songs 5:1 — The verse 'Let my beloved come to his garden' is used to illustrate the intimate relationship between God and the righteous in the afterlife, portrayed as God dining with the righteous in the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Leviticus 6:6 — The verse about perpetual fire on the altar is interpreted as a spiritual tool against negative forces. When recited repeatedly, it is believed to drive away Satan and harmful thoughts. | Cf. Zohar — The concept of 'eyes and heart as agents of sin' derives from rabbinic teachings expanded in the Zohar, which views the body as a microcosm where each organ can either serve holiness or impurity. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The reference to the 'third Tikkun of the new Tikkunim' indicates a section of kabbalistic literature that explains mystical interpretations of biblical verses as tools against spiritual harm. | Cf. Targum (Aramaic translation) — Reading the Torah with its Aramaic translation (Targum) is prescribed as a spiritual practice to 'sweeten' negative forces, following the kabbalistic system of the ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria).

[i] This Aramaic phrase 'Ribon Almin' is a common opening in kabbalistic prayers, addressing God as sovereign over all spiritual worlds, not just the physical universe.

מַלְכִּין וְגָלֵי רָזִין[i] יְהֵא רַעֲוָא דֵּילָךְ לְסַבְּרָא מִלִּין בְּפוּמָאי לְקַיְּימָא בִּי הַאי קְרָא וְאָנֹכִי אֶהְיֶה עִם פִּיךָ דְּלָא אֵיעוֹל בְּכִסּוּפָא קֳדָמָךְ. וְתוֹרָה מְגִינָה וּמַצְלָא מִכָּל מִיתָה מְשׁוּנָּה:[iii ii] kings and revealer of mysteries, may it be Your will to place words in my mouth[1] to fulfill in me this verse: "And I will be with your mouth," so that I shall not enter into shame before You.[A] And may the Torah shield and protect me from every unusual death.[B]

פרק כ״ה

Chapter 25

הנה בעין האדם בו נרמזו כל השמות הקדושים וכל שעור הקומה והעולם בכללו על כן מאד תועיל שימת עין על פרצופו של אדם בעת פטירתו מלבד מה שכתבנו למעלה. ואמרו בתקון ו׳ דף י״ח כי אור העין רמז לת״ת ובת עין היא בית שלו. והיא מציאות המלכות שיש לה מחכמה מקור החיים בסוד יו״ד בתוך ה״א ומדת המלה צריכה שמירה

Behold, in the human eye are encoded all the holy Names,[2] the entire Divine structure,[3] and the world in its totality. Therefore, it is highly beneficial to focus one's gaze upon the face of a person at the time of their passing, beyond what we have written above. In Tikkun 6, page 18, they state that the light of the eye symbolizes Tiferet, and the pupil is its dwelling place.[A] This represents the existence of Malkhut, which receives from Chokhmah, the source of life, through the mystery of the letter Yod within the letter Hei.[B] The attribute of speech requires great

Aramaic term 'almin' which refers to multiple worlds or universes in kabbalistic thought.

[B]Or: "so that I shall not enter with embarrassment into Your presence" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the spatial metaphor of entering into God's presence, which is implied in the original Aramaic.

[C]Or: "unnatural death" — The term 'meshunah' in this context often refers specifically to deaths that are considered unnatural or premature, rather than simply unusual.

[A]Or: "And they said in the 6th Tikkun, page 18, that the light of the eye alludes to Tiferet, and the pupil is its abode" — This alternate translation is more literal and preserves the term 'alludes to' (remez) rather than 'symbolizes,' which better captures the specific technical meaning in kabbalistic interpretation. The term 'abode' might be preferable to 'dwelling place' for 'bayit shelo' in some contexts.

[B]Or: "This is the manifestation of Malkhut, which draws from Chokhmah, the fountain of life,

[2]The Aramaic phrase 'lesabra milin befumai' literally means 'to understand/explain words in my mouth,' but the context suggests the author is asking for divine inspiration in his speech, hence this slightly interpretive translation.

[3]The Hebrew uses the term 'nirmezu' (נרמזו) which implies both encoding and allusion, suggesting that the divine names are hinted at or encrypted within the physical structure of the eye.

[4]The Hebrew term 'shiur hakoma' (שעור הקומה) is a specific kabbalistic concept referring to the mystical dimensions of the divine body or structure, which was the subject of esoteric texts like Shiur Komah.

[ii]The description of God as 'revealer of mysteries' is particularly significant in a work dealing with the mysteries of death and the afterlife, acknowledging that these topics can only be discussed properly with divine assistance.

[iii]The concept of 'unusual death' (mitah meshunah) has special significance in Jewish tradition, where it is considered a divine punishment. By invoking protection from such a death, the author seeks divine favor before discussing death-related matters.

[iv]Cf. Exodus 4:12 — The prayer invokes God's promise to Moses, asking for divine assistance in speaking properly, suggesting that the author seeks eloquence and accuracy in explaining sacred matters, especially those related to death and the afterlife. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Sotah 21a — The concluding line alludes to the Talmudic teaching that Torah study provides protection from unusual or premature death, indicating the prayer's function as a protective formula before discussing matters related to death and the afterlife.

רבה מפני קרבתה אל הקליפות
וכונה זו יבא הרואה חכמים
ימותו לעורר עליהם מאורות
המתהוים מסוד שם אדנו״ת
והוי״ה משולבים שבהם ומהם כל
אורה ושפע והמבין לאשורו כי
אשר עין בעין נראה אתה ה׳ עם
מ״ש בפ׳ נשא ישמח ויגל במנהגן
של ישראל. דההוא עדן עילאה
נהיר לעדן תתאה ואלמלא עינא
טבא עילאה דאריך דאשגח
לעינא תתאה דזעיר לא יכיל
עלמא למיקם רגע חדא ובעינא
דרישא חיוורא לית גבינא על
עינא דא. פירוש כוחות דינין
דכתיב הנה לא ינום ולא יישן
שומר ישראל דלעילא וכתיב
להיות עיניך פקוחות ורמיז
לדגים ולנוני ימא דלית כסותא
על עינא ולית גבינא. ובדגים
נאמרה בהו אסיפה בצדיקים
במיתתם. והמשכיל ידע ויבין
כי בראותו חכמים ימותו הוא
מקביל ליחוד ב׳ שמות ההוי״ה
הקודמת לי״ג מדות של רחמים.
והרבה יותר ממ״ש באן יש לדרוש
בסוד הזה. וטעם ויוסף ישית ידו
על עיניך יתבונן למבין מזה וכן
למה בזרעא דיוסף לא שליט ביה protection due to its proximity to the external forces (kelipot).[A] With this intention, one who witnesses the death of sages should arouse for them illuminations that form from the mystery of the interwoven divine names Adonut and YHVH,[1] from which all light and abundance flow. 15R

One who truly understands that "eye to eye they shall see the LORD"[2] together with what is written in Parashat Nassa will rejoice in the customs of Israel. For the supernal Eden illuminates the lower Eden, and if not for the benevolent supernal eye of Arich[3] gazing upon the lower eye of Zeir, the world could not exist for even a moment.[4] And in the eye of the White Head, there is no eyelid over that eye. This means there are no forces of judgment,[5] as it is written, "Behold, the Guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps," and "that Your eyes may be open." This alludes to fish and sea creatures that have no covering over their eyes and no eyelids. Regarding fish, the term "gathering" is used,[6] just as with the righteous at their death. 20R 25R 30R

The wise person will know and understand that when witnessing the death of sages, it corresponds to the unification of the two divine names YHVH that precede the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy. There is much more to expound upon in this mystery than what is written here. The meaning of "and Joseph shall place his hand upon your eyes" will be comprehended by those who understand this, as well as 35R 40R through the secret of the Yod within the Hei" — This alternate rendering uses 'manifestation' for 'metziyut' which more precisely captures the ontological significance of the term in Kabbalah. The phrase 'fountain of life' for 'mekor hachayim' is more biblically resonant, and 'secret' might be preferred to 'mystery' for 'sod' in some kabbalistic translations.

[A] Or: "The attribute of the word requires careful guarding because of its closeness to the husks" — This alternative uses 'word' instead of 'speech' for 'milah' and 'husks' instead of 'external forces' for 'kelipot,' which might be preferred in some translations. Also, 'careful guarding' has slightly different connotations than 'great protection.'

[1] The Hebrew term 'meshulabim' (משולבים) indicates that these divine names are interwoven or combined in a specific pattern, likely referring to the kabbalistic practice of interweaving the letters of these two names.

[2] This is a reference to Isaiah 52:8, which in context describes the redemption of Jerusalem. The text reinterprets this as referring to direct mystical perception.

[3] The Hebrew 'eina tava ila'ah d'Arich' (עינא טבא עילאה דאריך) uses Aramaic terminology from the Zohar, referring to the 'good eye' of the divine aspect called Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One).

[4] The Hebrew emphasizes the utter dependence of creation on continuous divine supervision, suggesting that existence itself requires uninterrupted divine attention.

[5] The Hebrew phrase 'kochot dinin' (כוחות דינין) specifically refers to forces of divine judgment or severity in kabbalistic terminology, which are symbolized by the eyelid that can interrupt the flow of divine light.

[6] This refers to the Hebrew term 'asifah' (אסיפה) used for both fish dying and the righteous dying, creating a linguistic connection that suggests a spiritual similarity between them.

עינא בישא ובחצוני עין הרע שבו מזיק הרבה כדאמרו והסיר ה׳ ממך כל חולי ואמר רב זה עין הרע. וכן לא יעמוד אדם עם שדה חבירו וכו׳. לא מסתפי מר מעינא בישא דאמרו לר׳ יוחנן. ואמרו חכמי המחקר כי יש בני אדם המזיקים בהבטת עיניהם כאפעה ומרגלא בפיהם העין תכנים הגמל בקדרה והאדם אל הקבורה. ויש חיות הממיתים עד כמטחוי קשת ואמרו כי אלכסנדרוס מוקדון בא עם חילו למקום שהיו בו חיות הממיתים בהבטת פניהם ועשו מראות מצוחצחות ושמו אותם נגד החיות וחזר ראותן אליהן ומתו כלם וזה היה כח בלעם. אמנם נתינת עין האמור בחכמי הגמ׳ הוא כי כח העין רע אשר בת״ח פועלת לפי כוונתם ומחשבתם בחכמת האלהים כדאמרו בזהר חכימין כליהון רשימין אינון דיוקניהון בחכמה השופטת ומענשת עד כי האדם הנענש נקצץ ונשמתו נטלת ממנו. וכל מיתה הוא סילוק אור של מעלה כדכתיב סר צלם מעליהם. וע״כ מכוון הבטת פני הנפטר בעינא פקיחא ובאור נר כי יהל עליו כאשר יבא. [i]

why the evil eye has no power over the descendants of Joseph,[1] while in ordinary people, the evil eye can cause great harm, as they said, “And the LORD will remove from you all illness,” which Rav interpreted as the evil eye. 45R

Similarly, “One should not stand near his neighbor’s field, etc.” They said to Rabbi Yochanan, “Is the master not afraid of the evil eye?” The philosophical scholars said that there are people who cause harm with their gaze like vipers, and there is a saying that “the eye brings the camel into the pot[2] and a person to the grave.” There are creatures that can kill from as far as a bowshot away. They said that Alexander of Macedon came with his army to a place where there were creatures that could kill with their gaze, so they made polished mirrors and placed them before the creatures, causing their gaze to be reflected back at them, killing them all. This was the power of Balaam.[3] 50R 55R

However, the “casting of an eye” mentioned by the Talmudic sages refers to the power of the evil eye that operates in Torah scholars[4] according to their intention and thought in divine wisdom. As they said in the Zohar, “The wise are marked; their image is engraved in the wisdom that judges and punishes,” so that the person who is punished is cut down and his soul is taken from him.[5] Every death is the removal of supernal light, as it is written, “Their protection has departed from them.” Therefore, one should direct one’s gaze at the face of the departed with an open eye and with the light of a candle 60R 65R 70R

[1] The Hebrew ‘lo shalit bei eina bisha’ (לא שליט ביה עינא בישא) literally means ‘the evil eye does not rule over him,’ emphasizing complete immunity rather than mere resistance.

[2] This is a proverbial expression in Hebrew suggesting that the evil eye can cause even something as large as a camel to be reduced to something that fits in a cooking pot, emphasizing its destructive power.

[3] The text creates a parallel between the mythical creatures killed by their own reflection and Balaam’s power, suggesting that his ability to curse operated through a similar visual mechanism.

[4] This is a striking concept suggesting that Torah scholars (talmidei chachamim) possess a form of the evil eye that operates according to divine wisdom rather than malevolent intent, functioning as an instrument of divine judgment.

[5] The Hebrew uses strong terminology (‘niktzatz’—נקצץ) suggesting the person is literally cut down or severed, emphasizing the devastating power of this divinely channeled ‘evil eye’ of the sages.

[i] Cf. Tikkun 6, page 18 — The passage connects the human eye to the divine structure, explaining how the physical eye corresponds to the sefirot Tiferet and Malkhut. This creates a theological framework where gazing at a dying person has profound cosmic significance. | Cf. Parashat Nassa — The text likely refers to the Priestly Blessing in Numbers 6:24-26, which includes ‘May the LORD make His face shine upon you’ and ‘May the LORD lift up His countenance upon you,’ connecting to the theme of divine vision and watchfulness. | Cf. Guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps — This verse is used to illustrate that the divine eye is always watching, without the shining upon him, as will be explained.[A]

ולהיותה קרוב למקום
המיתה צריך שמירה והארה
כמה שאמרנו על מדת
המלכות.[i] מצאתי כתוב כי
העומד בפני חולה שנוטה למות
ואין שם אדם אחר שיודע בענין
המת לראותו בעת יציאת נשמתו
ומתי ישלים לצאת ולהעצים
עיניו ולהתעסק בו גם שהגיע
זמן תפלה אל יצא משם כדי
להתפלל. אשרי אדם מסקל
ומרים מכשול מדרך המובן
לעלות שם נשמתו[ii] בעודו בעה״ז
כי אמרו בתקונים כי בפי מה
שאדם בונה בעה״ז בהבל פיו
אם שמים חדשים בהבל הקדוש
מחדושי תורה.[iii] או להיפך חם

And being close to the place of death, it requires protection and illumination, as we have said regarding the attribute of Malkhut.[1] I found it written that one who stands before a sick person who is approaching death, and there is no one else there who understands matters concerning the dead—to observe him at the moment his soul departs, and when he will complete his departure, to close his eyes, and to attend to him—even if the time for prayer has arrived, he should not leave in order to pray.[2] Fortunate is the person who clears away and removes obstacles from the path prepared for his soul's ascent while still in this world, for they said in the Tikkunim that according to how a person builds in this world through the breath of his mouth—whether heavens anew through holy breath from Torah innovations,[3] or conversely, Heaven forbid, increasing

[A] Or: "Therefore, one intentionally gazes at the face of the deceased with a watchful eye and with the illumination of a lamp shining upon him, as will be described" — This alternative uses 'intentionally gazes' to better capture the active intention implied by 'mecaven,' and 'watchful eye' for 'eina pekicha' which preserves the specific kabbalistic terminology. 'Illumination of a lamp' has a more ritual connotation than 'light of a candle' which might be preferred in mystical contexts.

[1] Malkhut (Kingdom/Sovereignty) is the tenth and lowest of the divine emanations (sefirot) in Kabbalah, serving as the interface between the divine and human realms. The text refers to earlier discussions about Malkhut's vulnerability and need for protection.

[2] This ruling demonstrates the text's prioritization of proper care for the dying over other religious obligations, even prayer, which is normally considered of paramount importance in Jewish practice.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that Torah study has creative power, literally generating new spiritual realities. The 'breath' of Torah study is seen as having the same creative potential as God's speech in Genesis.

interruption of eyelids (representing judgment), providing a biblical foundation for the kabbalistic concept of continuous divine providence. | Cf. the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy — The text connects witnessing death to divine compassion, suggesting that at the moment of death there is a special opportunity for divine mercy to be activated through proper intention and ritual. | Cf. Joseph shall place his hand upon your eyes — This biblical verse is reinterpreted in a mystical context to suggest a special spiritual power associated with Joseph regarding protection from the evil eye, both in death rituals and for his descendants. | Cf. Alexander of Macedon — This reference illustrates the literal belief in the power of harmful vision while transitioning to a more mystical understanding of how gazes can affect spiritual reality. | Cf. Their protection has departed from them — The verse is reinterpreted to explain death as the departure of divine light or protection (tzelem/shadow), providing a mystical understanding of death as primarily a spiritual rather than physical phenomenon.

[ii] Malkhut is the lowest of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah, often associated with the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) and considered particularly vulnerable to negative spiritual forces, thus requiring special protection.

[iii] The text uses the metaphor of clearing a path for the soul's ascent, comparing spiritual preparation to the physical act of removing obstacles from a road.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that Torah study creates new spiritual realities, with the phrase 'heavens anew' alluding to Isaiah 65:17 where God promises to create 'new heavens and a new earth.'

ושלום מרבה הפתחים ופותח
90 הסלונות המקבלות טומאה
בהבל של תוהו. באותו הדרך
תעלה נשמתו בעת מותו ושם
תתלונן אח״כ[i] ומזה גם בזהר פ׳
בשלח. ותקון האדם תלוי בימים
95 להיותם צנורות עליונות נמשכות
למטה לתקון הנפש. ושכר הצפון
לצדיקים טמון ונעלם בתוך
הימים שהם צנורות הנמשכים
למלכות אם כל הנשמות[ii] וכל
100 אחד משרי הימים שעברו עליו
אם סגל בהם מצות והרבה בהם
תורת עוז מתקרבים ומתראים
ביום מיתתו כי חיים הם בחיות
אשר השפיע עליהם עם הקשוטים
105 שקשט אותם להליץ עליו זכות
כי הם מוגדלים מכח אור אשר
יהל. והוסיף עליהם מסוד
אילן עץ החיים[iii] שסלסל ורמם
אותו והשקהו ממים היוצאים
110 מבית ה׳ מתוקים והעלה על
שפת הנחל העליון כל עץ נחמד
למראה וטוב למאכל ופארות
עץ החיים התפארו והאירו עד
למרחוק ונתן בכל יום שכרו אם
115 בימי חול מצות הראויות לאותו
יום מעון הספירה ששולטת
בו.[iv] ואם בשבת נתעדן ויחד
בסוד נפשו בראוי. וכן סוכה

doorways and opening thorns that receive impurity through the breath of emptiness[1]—in that same way will his soul ascend at the time of his death, and there it will afterward dwell. And of this, too, in the Zohar, Parashat Beshalach. 90R

A person's spiritual rectification depends on days, as they are supernal channels drawn downward to rectify the soul. The reward reserved for the righteous is hidden and concealed within the days, which are channels flowing to Malkhut, mother of all souls.[2] Each of the angelic princes of the days that have passed over him—if he acquired merits in them and increased in them the Torah of strength—draw near and appear on the day of his death, for they are alive through the vitality that he bestowed upon them, along with the adornments with which he adorned them, to advocate his merit, for they are magnified by the power of light that shines forth. 95R 100R 105R

He added to them from the secret of the Tree of Life, which he exalted and tended,[3] watering it with sweet waters flowing from God's house, and raised up on the bank of the supernal river every tree delightful to the sight and good for food. The branches of the Tree of Life glorified themselves and illuminated to the distance. And he gave his reward each day: on weekdays, the commandments appropriate for that day from the dwelling of the divine attribute that rules it;[4] on Sabbath, he delighted and unified in the secret of his soul as fitting; likewise the sukkah 110R 115R

[2] The metaphor of 'thorns' (silonot) describes negative spiritual pathways created through improper speech or empty words, which then become channels for impurity to enter and affect one's soul.

[3] In Kabbalah, Malkhut is often portrayed as the feminine aspect of divinity and the 'womb' through which souls enter the world and to which they return after death.

[4] The Tree of Life metaphor here represents both Torah study and the divine structure of the sefirot. The person who engages in proper spiritual practice is described as cultivating this Tree, causing it to flourish and extend its influence.

[1] In kabbalistic tradition, each day of the week is associated with a particular divine attribute (sefirah): Sunday with Chesed (Kindness), Monday with Gevurah (Strength), Tuesday with Tiferet (Beauty), etc.

[ii] The text presents the spiritual principle of 'measure for measure' (midah k'neged midah), where the pathways created by one's actions in life become the very channels through which their soul travels after death.

[iii] Malkhut is described as 'mother of all souls' because in Kabbalah it serves as the divine attribute through which souls enter the world and to which they return after death.

[iv] The Tree of Life is a central kabbalistic metaphor representing both the structure of divine emanations and the Torah itself. Here it refers to spiritual accomplishments that nourish one's soul and create merit.

[i] In kabbalistic thought, each day of the week is associated with a particular divine attribute (sefirah): Sunday with Chesed (Kindness), Monday with Gevurah (Strength), etc., with specific mitzvot particularly appropriate to each.

ולולב בסוכות. ומצה בפסח
וכיוצא. ואם לא טוב משה אז
הימים עומדים בכסופא.[i] ואם
עין יצרו הטעתו והריק לאשפה
והגדיל חלק הרע אז טוב ממנו
הנפל[ii] וכל יום מימיו קורא עליו
אל ה׳ ויהיה בו חטא ובאשר משה
כן יעשה לו גמולו ישוב בראשו
כדכתיב הנה סערת ה׳ חמה
יוצאה וגו׳ רחמנא ליצלן.[iii]

and lulav on Sukkot, and matzah on Passover, and similar observances.

But if he did not depart well, then the days stand in shame.[1] And if the eye of his inclination deceived him, and he emptied into filth and magnified the portion of evil, then better than he is the stillborn, and every day of his days calls out to God, "Let there be sin in him." And as he departs, so shall it be done to him—his recompense shall return upon his head, as it is written: "Behold, the storm of the Lord! Fury has gone forth..." May the Merciful One protect us.[2]

ואמרו בפ׳ וארא כד בר נש
ישלים גופיה בפקודין דאורייתא
ליית לך כל יומא דלא אתיא
לאתברכא מניה. וכד אינון
מתברכאן כדין איין ואסוותא
תליין עליה מלמעלה מאן
גרים ליה אינון יומי שתא כמה
דמברכאן מלעילא ברזא דאדם
שהוא ת״ת ששם רמז השנה הנמשך

And they said in Parashat Va'era: When a person perfects himself through the commandments of the Torah,[3] there is not a day that does not come to be blessed through him. And when they [the days] are blessed, then health and healing depend upon him from above.[A] Who causes this? Those days of the year, just as they are blessed from above according to the mystery of Adam, which is Tiferet, where the year is alluded to as flowing from the Sab-

[A] Or: "And when they [the days] are blessed, then the eyes and healing descend upon him from above" — The word 'איין' could be interpreted as 'eyes' rather than 'health.' In Kabbalistic texts, divine eyes often represent providence and watchfulness. This alternate reading suggests that divine supervision and healing flow down when days are properly sanctified.

[2] The Aramaic term 'kisufa' (shame) refers to the metaphysical state of receiving without giving in return. Days that received existence but were not filled with positive actions are described as experiencing this 'shame.'

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'Rachmana litzlan' is an Aramaic prayer formula meaning 'May the Merciful One save/protect us,' typically used after mentioning something negative or frightening.

[4] The original Hebrew phrase 'ישלים גופיה בפקודין דאורייתא' uses Aramaic terminology common in the Zohar. The concept goes beyond mere observance of commandments to suggest a complete harmonization of one's physical existence ('גופיה'—his body) with the spiritual frequencies of Torah commandments.

[ii] The Aramaic term 'kisufa' (shame) is used in kabbalistic literature to describe the metaphysical state of receiving without giving, suggesting that days without spiritual accomplishment feel 'shame' at having provided opportunity that wasn't utilized.

[iii] This references Ecclesiastes 6:3-5, which suggests that a stillborn child is better off than one who lives a long but unfulfilled life.

[iv] Cf. Tikkunim (Tikunei Zohar) — The text cites the Tikkunim (a component text of the Zoharic literature) as a source for the idea that how a person builds in this world through speech determines the path their soul will take after death. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach — The text references the Zohar's commentary on the Torah portion Beshalach as supporting the concept that one's spiritual path in life determines the soul's journey after death. | Cf. Tree of Life (Etz Chaim) — The Tree of Life imagery is used metaphorically to describe how one nurtures spiritual growth through Torah study and mitzvot, with the rewards becoming apparent at the moment of death. | Cf. Hevel (breath) — The text uses the concept of 'hevel' (breath) to create a parallel between speech/breath in life and the soul's journey after death, drawing on the kabbalistic understanding that speech has creative power. | Cf. Malkhut (Kingdom) — The reference to Malkhut establishes the kabbalistic framework of the text, as Malkhut is the lowest of the divine emanations and serves as the connection point between the divine and human realms.

מן השמיטין שהוא בינה כדדרשו
ברמז עש״ן תג״ל. כך אתברכון
מתתא ברזא דאדם ועל זה נאמר
ישברו פראים צמאם. ואמרו
בזהר ריש פ׳ פקודי פירוש
פראים הם המרכבות תחתונות.
וכבר כתבנו למעלה שבכל יום
מאיר אור מחלק הוי״ה ידיעה
מי״ב צרופי השם הגדול מלבד
זה יש לכל שעה כח הוי״ה שמאיר
בו ע״כ צריך שבכל יום יעשה
תשובה ובכל שעה יהרהר לפחות
בדברי קדושה ויכוין להאיר
ההוי״ה ששולטת אז. וביון שאחד
מההויות מתחיל להאיר ע״י תקון
מעשיו מיד וקרא זה אל זה. כי
אז כלם מאירים יען לכולם יש
קשור ויחוד וחבור ורוח אחד
לכל המחיה את כלם. נמצא בזה
בכל שעה מאיר לסל העולם
בכללו. ועוד שבכל יום יש לו
מלאך וביון שנמצא לו מלאך
מליץ אחד מני אלף להגיד עליו
יושרו מיד יפדוהו מרדת שחת.
וימציאו לסטרא אחרא כופר
חלופו מניה וביה על דרך ואתן
אדם תחתיך וכו׳ וכן חס ושלום
דרך הפגם. וביום יש בו רוחניות
כל השנה שכן בה ד׳ תקופות.
חצי היום וחצי הלילה. ובין
השמשות. ואילת השחר. והשעה
כוללת כל רוחניות מהיום.
והרגע כל רוחניות של השעה.

batical cycles, which is Binah,[1] as they explained in the allusion "smoke shall rejoice." Similarly, they are blessed from below through the mystery of Adam, and concerning this it is said, "The wild donkeys quench their thirst." 140R

And they said in the Zohar at the beginning of Parashat Pekudei that "wild donkeys" refers to the lower chariots. And we have already written above that each day, light shines from a portion of a specific permutation of the divine name YHVH from the twelve permutations of the Great Name.[A] Besides this, each hour has the power of a divine name YHVH that illuminates it.[2] Therefore, one must repent each day, and in each hour at least contemplate holy matters and intend to illuminate the divine name that rules at that time. And when one of these divine names begins to shine through the rectification of one's deeds, immediately "one calls to another."[3] For then they all illuminate, since they all have connection, unification, and joining, and one spirit for all that gives life to all of them. Thus, in this way, in each hour there is illumination for the entire world collectively. 145R 150R 155R 160R

Moreover, each day a person has an angel, and when there is found for him "one interceding angel out of a thousand to declare his uprightness," immediately "He will redeem him from descending to the pit." And they will provide to the Other Side a ransom in exchange for him from his own substance,[4] according to the principle of "I will give a man in your place," etc., and likewise, God forbid, in the way of defect [sin]. 165R 170R

In a day there is the spirituality of the entire year,

[A] Or: "each day, light shines from a portion of the divine name YHVH, a specific one of the twelve permutations of the Great Name" — This alternate translation clarifies that each day corresponds to one specific permutation of the divine name out of twelve possible permutations, rather than suggesting that light comes from only 'a portion' of a permutation. This reading better aligns with kabbalistic teachings about the correspondence between days and divine name permutations.

[1] This references the kabbalistic understanding that the seven-year Sabbatical cycle (shemitah) corresponds to the sefirah of Binah (Understanding), which is the cosmic source of cycles and rhythms in time. Binah is understood as the spiritual origin of the concept of time itself.

[2] The text describes a complex system where time itself is structured by and infused with divine names. Each division of time (year, month, day, hour) is governed by a specific divine name or permutation of names, creating a cosmic calendar of spiritual energies.

[3] This phrase echoes Isaiah 6:3 describing the angels calling to one another "Holy, holy, holy." Here it suggests that divine names activate each other in a chain reaction of spiritual illumination when properly engaged by human consciousness.

[4] The phrase 'מניה וביה' (from his own substance) suggests that the spiritual exchange or ransom comes from elements within the person's own being, perhaps referring to the transformation of negative aspects into positive ones, or the redirection of certain energies.

באופן שהכל חוזר אל מקורו ולאחדות השלם. ובכל תקופה בין מהשנה בין מהיום ואולי גם כן בשעה יושלחו כל אחד ואחד מפמליא של מעלה איש איש למלאכתו אשר המה עושים. וזהו אדם נדון בכל יום וי״א בכל שעה. וי״א בכל רגע. ובארבע תקופות היום התרנגול הבר אשר שרשו ביסוד עולם. בא אליו נצוץ מכח שרשו ומניע כנפיו דוגמתו. ונותן ליוצר הכל שבח וזהו סימן כי בעת ההיא מקבלים הממשלה כל אחד ואחד על ממלכתו אשר הופקדה עליו: [i]

for in it are four seasons: midday, midnight, twilight, and dawn. And the hour includes all the spirituality of the day, and the moment all the spirituality of the hour, in such a way that everything returns to its source and to complete unity. And in each season, whether of the year or of the day, and perhaps also in the hour, each one of the heavenly host is sent forth, each to his task which they perform. And this is why "a person is judged every day," and some say every hour, and some say every moment.

And at the four seasons of the day,[1] the wild rooster, whose root is in the Foundation of the world,[A] receives a spark from the power of its root and moves its wings accordingly, giving praise to the Creator of all. This is a sign that at that time, each one receives authority over his kingdom which was entrusted to him.

פרק כ״ו

Chapter 26

ראוי לדעת כי בתורה יש ששים רבוא אותיות נגד ששים

It is important to know that in the Torah there are six hundred thousand letters[A] corresponding to the

[A] Or: "the celestial rooster, whose root is in the Foundation of the world" — While 'התרנגול הבר' literally means 'wild rooster,' in kabbalistic contexts it often refers to a celestial or archetypal entity rather than a literal wild animal. This spiritual rooster that announces the changing times is an important motif in Jewish mysticism, representing divine providence marking the transitions between cosmic time periods.

[A] Or: "600,000 letters" — While the original translation is accurate, the numerical expression

[1] The text presents a sophisticated understanding of time where each unit of time (year, day, hour, moment) contains the spiritual pattern of larger cycles within it. This fractal view of time is a key concept in kabbalistic cosmology.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Va'era — This reference establishes the concept that a person who fulfills Torah commandments creates blessing in the world, which affects the cosmic flow of divine energy. This is a foundational idea for understanding how human actions impact spiritual and physical well-being. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — This reference explains the spiritual entities called 'wild donkeys' (פראים) as lower spiritual chariots or vehicles. This helps understand how blessing flows through various levels of reality, from divine to earthly realms. | Cf. Book of Job — The phrase 'one interceding angel out of a thousand to declare his uprightness' and 'He will redeem him from descending to the pit' are direct allusions to Job 33:23-24. This biblical reference provides the foundation for the kabbalistic concept that angels serve as advocates for humans in the heavenly court, particularly when people engage in spiritual rectification. | Cf. Isaiah — The phrase 'I will give a man in your place' alludes to Isaiah 43:4, where God says 'I will give people in exchange for you.' In the mystical context of Ma'avar Yabok, this is reinterpreted to suggest a spiritual exchange where a ransom or substitute is provided to negative forces instead of the person. | Cf. Psalms — The verse 'The wild donkeys quench their thirst' is from Psalms 104:11. In its original context, it refers to God's provision for wild animals, but in the Zohar and Ma'avar Yabok, it is reinterpreted to describe how lower spiritual entities receive divine influx. | Cf. Zohar on the Cosmic Rooster — The celestial rooster (תרנגולא) appears in multiple Zohar passages as a spiritual entity that announces the changing cosmic times. This parallel helps explain how the author of Ma'avar Yabok is using this symbol to represent the spiritual mechanisms that govern the transitions between different time periods, both cosmic and daily.

רבוא שרשי נשמות של ישראל
שמתחלקים לשבעים רבוא
דיוקנאות. והגם כי הם רבים
יותר כל אחד יונק מדיוקן שלו.
ואם איש אחד מקלקל ופוגם. אז
האות שלו אותה שנשמתו יונקת
ממנו היא פגומה. וכאילו היא
חסרה בתורה ח״ו[i] ונמצא שמטיל
מום בקדשי תורתנו הקדושה
ונדחה משם עם מומו שכל אשר
בו מום לא יקרב. והמזכך עצמו
זוכה לראות עולמו בחייו. ויזהר
לבל יטמטם עצמו באכול כל
תועבה כנזכר למעלה. ועיין
בראשית חכמה פרק ט״ו משער
הקדושה פגם האכילה. ושם בפ׳
ט״ז וי״ז הפליא לדבר מקדושת
הזווג שגם הוא הכנה גדולה
לקדושה. ואין לך דבר שירמוז
בו בעה״ז דרך יחוד וזווג עליון
כמוהו. ואנו עתידים לבאר כי
המות היא מחסדי הבורא עלינו
ואמר ר״ש בן יוחאי באדרת
האזינו[ii] אסהדנא עלי דכל יומאי
דקאימנא תאיבנא למיחמי יומא
דא ולא סליק ברעותא דהא
בעטרא דא מתעטרא האי יומא.
ועיין בזה בראשית חכמה בשער
אהבה פרק ו׳ ושם פירשו למה
הצדיקים במיתתן קרויים איים.

six hundred thousand root souls of Israel,[1] which are divided into seventy myriads of forms.[A] Although there are actually many more, each one draws sustenance from its own form. If one person corrupts and damages, then the letter from which his soul draws sustenance becomes flawed. It is as if that letter is missing from the Torah, God forbid, thus casting a blemish upon the holiness of our sacred Torah, and he is rejected from there with his blemish, for "whoever has a blemish shall not approach." One who purifies himself merits to see his [spiritual] world during his lifetime.[2] He should be careful not to dull his senses by consuming abominations, as mentioned above. See Reshit Chochmah, chapter 15 of the Gate of Holiness regarding the damage caused by improper eating. And there in chapters 16 and 17, he speaks wonderfully about the sanctity of marital union, which is also a great preparation for holiness. There is nothing in this world that symbolizes the path of unification and supernal coupling as well as this. We will explain later that death is one of the Creator's kindnesses to us, and Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai said in the Idra of Ha'azinu:[B] "I testify that throughout all my days I have yearned to see this day, but it did not arise in my will, for on this day I am crowned with this crown." See more on this in Reshit Chochmah, in the Gate of Love, chapter 6, where they explain why the righteous in their death are called "islands."[3] And in chapter 9, they explain the secret of the soul's garments. The reason why

5R 10R 15R 20R 25R 30R

'600,000' might be clearer in a modern English translation, especially when dealing with specific quantities.

[B]Or: "70 myriads of soul-images" — The term 'דיוקנאות' (dyoknaot) specifically refers to spiritual images or forms of the soul in kabbalistic literature. This alternate translation preserves the mystical connotation more precisely.

[C]Or: "in the Idra Zuta (the Lesser Assembly)" — The 'Idra of Ha'azinu' refers specifically to the Idra Zuta, which appears in the Zohar portion of Ha'azinu. Using the more commonly recognized term might help readers familiar with kabbalistic literature.

[1]This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that the Torah contains 600,000 letters corresponding to the 600,000 root souls of Israel who stood at Mount Sinai (though the actual count of letters in the Torah is closer to 304,805). This concept appears in many mystical works including the Megaleh Amukot by Rabbi Nathan Nata Spira.

[2]The phrase 'to see one's world during one's lifetime' (לראות עולמו בחייו) refers to experiencing spiritual illumination or divine revelation in this world, rather than having to wait for the afterlife.

[1]This unusual metaphor of the righteous as 'islands' (איים) after death appears in rabbinic literature

[i]The Hebrew abbreviation 'ח״ו' stands for 'chas v'shalom' (God forbid), indicating the gravity of causing a flaw in the Torah through one's sins.

[ii]R"Sh refers to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, the traditional author of the Zohar. The Idra of Ha'azinu (also known as Idra Zuta or Lesser Assembly) is a section of the Zohar where Rabbi Shimon delivered his final teachings before his death.

ובפרק ט׳ פירשו סוד המלבושים לנפש אדם. וטעם למה מיכאל מקריב נשמותיהם של ישראל שם בפ׳ ראשון. ואמרו חז״ל שאליהו מקריב בבית המקדש ממש השני תמידין וכותב על עורות הקרבנות מעשיהם וזכיותיהם של ישראל וזוהי כונת ואשי ישראל ותפלתם.[i] כי לפי שקטרג עליהם עתה בא לתקן והוא כותב המצות שאדם עושה אפי׳ בקצה הארץ. והאזור שהיה לבוש אפשר כי היה מעורו של איל של עקדת יצחק כדי להזכיר זכות אבות לעולם. ובפ׳ ויקהל דף קס״ט תוכחה על הזהרת האדם לתקון מעשיו ונשמתו מיונה שירד לירכתי הספינה. ופי׳ שלשה שלוחים העומדים עליו בעת מותו. ודין הנפש והגוף והשבעה עידנין דיחלפון עלוהי ע״כ ברכי נפשי את ה׳ עד לא תיפוק מהאי עלמא. צריך ליזהר שלא לזוז הגוסס ממקומו אפי׳ אם אומר שאינו יכול להפרד שם. ואם יראים מדליקה יזיזוהו. והחי לעולם קודם להצלת המת. ואין עושין שום מעשה לגרום למת שימות במהרה כגון מפתחות בית הכנסת וכדומה. אך מסירים המונע כגון אם יש חומב עצים שם בשבונה, דלחיי שעה חיישינן דיש קונה עולמו בשעה וברגע אחד בהרהורי תשובה. ועוד יש טעם נעלם בזה. ועיין מזה בהגה״ה י״ד

Michael offers the souls of Israel is explained there in the first chapter. Our Sages taught that Elijah offers the two daily sacrifices in the actual Temple and records the deeds and merits of Israel on the hides of the sacrifices. This is the meaning of "the fire-offerings of Israel and their prayer." Because he once accused them, he now comes to rectify, and he records the commandments that a person performs even at the edge of the earth. The belt he wore was possibly from the hide of the ram of Isaac's binding, to eternally invoke the merit of the forefathers. In Parshat Vayakhel, page 169, there is a rebuke concerning the warning for man to rectify his deeds and his soul, [learning] from Jonah who descended to the depths of the ship. It explains the three messengers who stand over a person at the time of his death, the judgment of the soul and the body, and the seven periods that will pass over him. Therefore, "Bless the Lord, O my soul," before you depart from this world. One must be careful not to move a dying person from his place, even if he says he cannot separate [from his soul] there. If there is fear of fire, they may move him. The living always take precedence over saving the dead. One should not perform any action to cause the dying person to die quickly, such as [removing] synagogue keys and the like. However, one may remove obstacles, such as if there is a woodchopper in the neighborhood, for we are concerned for even momentary life,[1] as one may acquire his eternal world in a single hour or moment through thoughts of repentance.[2] There is also a hidden reason for this. See more on this in the Hagahot Yoreh Deah, section 339. One should not give food to a dying person because he cannot swallow, but one may place in his mouth water squeezed from an herb that has been crushed, as written in Sefer Hasidim. One and is elaborated in kabbalistic texts. It suggests that like islands that remain visible above water while their foundations extend deep below, the righteous remain spiritually influential in this world even after death.

[2]The Hebrew term 'חיי שעה' (momentary life) is a technical halakhic concept emphasizing that even a brief extension of life is considered valuable in Jewish law, which is why actions that might hasten death are forbidden.

[3]This reflects the rabbinic teaching that 'there are those who acquire their world in a single moment' (יש קונה עולמו בשעה אחת), emphasizing the power of sincere repentance even at the very end of life.

[i]This phrase comes from the Jewish liturgy of the Amidah prayer, asking God to accept favorably the fire-offerings of Israel and their prayers. The author interprets this as referring to Elijah recording the spiritual merits of Israel.

סי׳ של״ט.[i] ואין נותנין לגוסס
לאכול כי אינו יכול לבלוע
אבל נותנין בפיו מים שמוצצין
מן עשב אחד שכתשוהו וימיצו
המרק ממנו כמו שכתוב בספר
החסידים. ואין זועקים עליו
בשעת יציאת נשמה שתשוב נפשו
כי אינו יכול לחיות אלא מעט
ימים ואותן ימים יסבול יסורים
קשים וזהו עת למות שהוא בי״ד
עתים לרעה בקהלת.[ii] ואין
לבן ליתן לאב דברים המזיקים
לו בחליו גם כי ישאלם בגיזום
רב:[iii]

should not cry out during the departure of the soul that his soul should return, because he would only be able to live a few more days, and during those days he would suffer severe pain. This is "a time to die," which is one of the fourteen negative times mentioned in Ecclesiastes.[A] A son should not give his father things harmful to him in his illness, even if he demands them forcefully.

ובספר החסידים סי׳ רל״ז יש
תקון למי שבא לו מת בחלום
ואמר לו שילך עמו והוא הבטיח
לו על זה. ואמרו כי פעמים
בא המת לחי בחלום להשיבו
בתשובה. וטעם מנהגן של הרבה
מקומות לפתוח חלונות במקום
שיש גוסס בר מינן הוא כי השדים
וכחות מלאך המות וגם הוא

In the Sefer Hasidim, section 237, there is a remedy for someone who has been visited by a dead person in a dream who asked him to accompany him, and he promised to do so. They say that sometimes the dead come to the living in dreams to guide them to repentance.

The reason for the custom in many places to open windows where there is a dying person (God forbid[B])[1] is because demons and the forces of the [A] Or: ""a time to die" from Ecclesiastes 3:2, which is one of the fourteen times mentioned there" — Adding the biblical reference makes it clearer for readers, and not all of the times in Ecclesiastes 3 are necessarily 'negative'—they are simply appropriate times for different activities.

[A] Or: "may it not happen to us" — A more literal translation of the Aramaic phrase which serves as an apotropaic formula (warding off evil) when mentioning death or dying. This translation better preserves the distancing function of the original expression.

[1] The Hebrew expression 'bar minan' (literally 'outside from us') is an apotropaic formula used

[i] This refers to annotations or glosses on the Yoreh De'ah section of the Shulchan Aruch (the code of Jewish law), specifically section 339 which deals with laws concerning the dying.

[ii] This refers to Ecclesiastes 3:1-8, which lists fourteen pairs of contrasting times, including "a time to be born and a time to die." The author interprets these as including fourteen negative or difficult times.

[iii] Cf. Reshit Chochmah — The text explicitly cites Reshit Chochmah (Beginning of Wisdom), a major kabbalistic ethical work by Rabbi Eliyahu de Vidas (16th century). The specific reference to chapters on eating and marital union indicates the author is drawing on established kabbalistic teachings about physical practices that affect spiritual purity. | Cf. Idra of Ha'azinu — The quote from Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai comes from the Idra Zuta (Lesser Assembly), a section of the Zohar appearing in Parashat Ha'azinu that describes Rabbi Shimon's final teachings before his death. The author quotes this to support the view that death can be seen as a divine kindness rather than merely a punishment. | Cf. Sefer Hasidim — Sefer Hasidim (Book of the Pious) by Rabbi Judah the Pious (12th-13th century) is cited as a halakhic source for practical care of the dying. This reference shows how Ma'avar Yabok integrates mystical concepts with practical halakhic guidance. | Cf. Hagahot Yoreh Deah — The reference to Yoreh Deah (a section of the Shulchan Aruch dealing with laws of life and death) shows the author's commitment to grounding mystical practices in established halakhic frameworks, particularly for end-of-life care. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 3:2 — The reference to "a time to die" alludes to Ecclesiastes 3:1-8, which lists fourteen pairs of contrasting times. The author uses this biblical source to frame the concept of death as a divinely ordained appropriate time rather than merely a tragedy.

בעצמו אינו יכול לילך רק דרך
המקום הנגזר להם. ואין להם
רשות לנטות לא על ימין ולא
על שמאל. וראיה מפרק כל
הבשר שהשד היה עומד תחת
המרזב ושבר החבית שהניחו לו
על אזניו והיה זה לפי שלא ניתן
לו רשות לזוז משם. ובפ׳ ערבי
פסחים אמרי׳ כי אין הלובו
רק בצדי רשות הרבים. ולכן
כשהאדם מפחד פעמים שנכנס
למקום ששם השד. ואמרו מאי
תקנתיה לינשוף מדוכתיה תלתא
גרמידי. ולכן סכנה לסתום
חלונות ופתחים שמא נכנס בפתח
או בחלון אחד ואולי עתיד
לצאת דרך שם ואם יסתמנו
מטריח המזיק לילך בדרך אחר
ואין להתגרות בשטן במעשה
דרבי פלימו דהוה רגיל לומר
גירא בעינא דשמנא[i] ואתחזי ליה
וצעריה. ולכן ותלחץ רגל בלעם
אל הקיר לעבור במקום הנגזר
לו. ויש כחות מתחברים תשעה
תשעה יחד ולכן אמרו כי יש
תשעה עלים בענף אילן אגוזים
ראשו של זה בצד עקרו של זה
וג״כ אנשי היער מתחברים תשעה
יחד. והם הפראים. ולכן אמרו
כי בדורות הראשונים לא יאכל
אדם תרי וישתה תרי[ii] כי מתגרה
בהם ואולי זהו אחד מן הטעמים

Angel of Death, and even the Angel himself, can only travel along paths designated for them. They have no permission to deviate either to the right or to the left. Evidence for this comes from the chapter "Kol Habasar" where a demon was standing under a gutter and broke a jar that was placed on its ears, because it was not permitted to move from that spot. And in the chapter "Arvei Pesachim" they say that such beings can only travel along the sides of public domains.[A] Therefore, when a person is afraid, sometimes they enter a place where a demon is present. They taught: "What is the remedy? Let him move three cubits from his place." For this reason, it is dangerous to close windows and openings, lest a harmful entity has entered through one door or window and is meant to exit that way. If we close it, we force the harmful entity to find another path, and one should not provoke Satan, as in the case of Rabbi Pelimo who habitually said, "An arrow in Satan's eye!" until Satan appeared to him and tormented him.[B] This is also why "Balaam's donkey pressed his foot against the wall"—to pass through the place decreed for it.

There are forces that combine in groups of nine, which is why they say that there are nine leaves on a branch of a walnut tree, with the head of one next to the root of another, and likewise the forest people gather in groups of nine. These are the "wild ones."[1] Therefore they said that in earlier generations, one should not eat pairs or drink pairs, as this antagonizes these forces. Perhaps this is one of the reasons why a court should not have an even number

[B] Or: "public thoroughfares" — In Jewish law, this term refers specifically to public thoroughfares where many people travel. This translation better conveys the specific legal category being referenced.

[C] Or: "and Satan appeared to him and caused him distress" — This more literal translation of the Aramaic preserves the causal relationship implied in the original text between Rabbi Pelimo's provocative statement and Satan's appearance.

when mentioning death or illness, similar to saying 'God forbid' or 'far be it from us.'

[2] The Hebrew term 'pera'im' literally means 'wild ones' and appears to refer to a category of forest spirits or demons that gather in groups of nine. This relates to the author's explanation of mystical numerical patterns.

[i] This Aramaic phrase means 'an arrow in Satan's eye' and comes from a story in Kiddushin 81a where Rabbi Pelimo would regularly use this phrase until Satan appeared to him as a poor man and tormented him, teaching him a lesson about hubris.

[ii] This refers to the Talmudic superstition against consuming things in pairs (zugot), which was believed to make one vulnerable to harmful spiritual forces. This concept appears in Pesachim 110a-b.

שאין בית דין שקול.[i] מלבד טעם
המזכה והמחייב והמכריע. וכן
הקליפות הם עשתי עשר כי כל
מספר שלהם בלתי שקול. ומכל
מה שנאמר נבין טעם לפתיחת
החלונות שנוהגים. וי״א שהוא
לפנות מקום לנשמה שתלך לאות
נפשה[ii] על דרך וכוין פתיחן ליה
וגו׳ ששם שער עליית הנשמות.
ועוד נוכל לומר שהוא להבריח
הרוחות. ואם הוא לעת בקר
ודאי פתיחת החלונות תהיה
מכוונת מלבד האמור להשליט
מדת החסד שגוברת אז. וכן
נכון לאדם לעשות בכל יום
בבקר קודם עליית השמש לפתוח
חלונות ביתו ויכוין לעשות פתח
ומסלול לחוט של חסד שיכנס
בביתו ובחומותיו כי בזה חסד
אל יהיה בביתו כל היום וההפך
בתחלת הלילה שבו תרמוש
כל חיתו יער יסגור חלונותיו
ויכוין להבדיל בין הקדש ובין
החול עד כי יבא זמן חצות שאז
יחזרו ויתבלעו בנוקבא דתהומא
רבא.[iii] והכל הולך אחר כוונת
הלב שכפי הכוונה כך יפעל

of judges, apart from the need for one who acquits, one who condemns, and one who decides between them. Similarly, the kelipot (shells/negative forces) are eleven in number,[1] for all their numbers are uneven. 120R

From all that has been said, we can understand the reason for the custom of opening windows. Some say it is to make way for the soul to depart according to its desire, as in "and windows were opened for him," which refers to the gate for the ascent of souls. We can also say it is to drive away spirits. And if it is morning time, certainly the opening of windows is intended, besides what has been said, to empower the attribute of Loving-kindness (Chesed) which predominates at that time.[2] 125R 130R

Similarly, it is proper for a person to open the windows of his house every morning before sunrise, with the intention of creating an opening and pathway for the thread of divine kindness to enter his home[3] and its walls, for through this, God's loving-kindness will be in his house all day. Conversely, at the beginning of the night, when "all the beasts of the forest creep about,"[4] he should close his windows with the intention of separating the holy from the profane, until the time of midnight, when these forces will be reabsorbed into the great abyss.[A] Everything follows the intention of the heart,[B] for according to 135R 140R

[A] Or: "into the opening of the great deep" — This more literal translation preserves the gendered metaphor in the original kabbalistic terminology, where 'nukva' (feminine) refers to a receptive cosmic vessel that contains and neutralizes harmful forces.

[A] Or: "depends on the intention of the heart" — This translation better captures the causal relationship expressed in the original, emphasizing that the efficacy of these spiritual practices depends entirely on one's inner intention rather than merely following it.

[1] The concept of 'kelipot' (shells or husks) is central to Lurianic Kabbalah, representing the outer layers that conceal the divine light and are associated with evil or impurity.

[2] In Kabbalistic thought, different times of day are associated with different divine attributes (sefirot). Morning is associated with Chesed (Loving-kindness), which is why opening windows at dawn has particular spiritual significance.

[3] The 'thread of kindness' (chut shel chesed) is a kabbalistic concept referring to the flow of divine mercy and blessing that can be channeled into the physical world through proper intention and action.

[4] This is a direct quote from Psalm 104:20 that is being used metaphorically to refer to harmful spiritual forces that become active at night.

[i] Jewish courts traditionally have an odd number of judges to prevent deadlock. Here the author adds a mystical dimension to this practical rule, connecting it to cosmic numerical patterns.

[ii] This expression suggests that the soul has its own desires or will regarding how it departs, reflecting the kabbalistic view that the soul retains consciousness and agency during its transition from the body.

[iii] This kabbalistic phrase refers to the 'great abyss' where negative forces are contained or neutralized. At midnight, according to mystical tradition, these forces must return to their source, making it a time particularly favorable for Torah study and prayer.

המעשה. ויתראה למעלה לא
דבר ריק הוא זה למי שגדל על
ברכי החכמים וכל המלעיג צריך
כפרה ודאי:[i][ii]

one's intention, so will the action manifest and be perceived above. 145R

This is not an empty matter for one who has grown up at the knees of the sages, and anyone who mocks this certainly requires atonement.

פרק כ״ז

Chapter 27

סוב נא לך דודי, ופוק חזי
ברעיא מהימנא[iii] פ׳ משפטים
דף קי״ז ע״ב דאמר בכלל דבריו
דאית מלאכין דאינון משמשין
לגופא ומלאכין דמשמשין
לנשמה בגוונא דאית אפרשותא
בין גופא לנשמתא[iv] הכי נמי
אית אפרשותא בין מלאכין
דגופא למלאכין דנשמתא.
ואית נשמתא לנשמתא ומלאכין
למלאכין.[v] ואלין דאינון נשמתא

Go now, my beloved,[1] and observe what is written in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Mishpatim, folio 117b, where it states among its teachings that there are angels who serve the body and angels who serve the soul. Just as there is a distinction between body and soul, so too is there a distinction between the angels of the body and the angels of the soul. And there is a soul for the soul, and angels for angels. And those that are soul to the soul are all one, and although in light they appear as a body in relation to the soul, one to another,[A] just as the soul in relation to the 5R 10R

[A] Or: "and although when illuminated by comparison they are like a body in relation to a soul,

[1] The opening phrase 'סוב נא לך דודי' is a poetic address to the reader in the style of Song of Songs, using terms of endearment common in mystical texts when inviting the reader to contemplate deeper mysteries.

[i] The author concludes with a warning against mockery of these spiritual practices, emphasizing that these are not mere superstitions but profound mystical teachings that should be treated with reverence.

[ii] Cf. Sefer Hasidim — The text references a specific remedy from Sefer Hasidim (a medieval ethical work) for someone who promised to accompany a dead person in a dream, suggesting this was considered a serious spiritual concern requiring formal remedy. | Cf. Talmud — The passage references a Talmudic story about a demon under a gutter to prove that demons can only move along designated paths, supporting the mystical reasoning behind opening windows for the dying. | Cf. Talmud — This Talmudic reference is used to support the idea that demons travel only along the sides of public domains, further developing the conceptual framework for how harmful spiritual entities move through space. | Cf. Rabbi Pelimo and Satan — This reference to Rabbi Pelimo who provoked Satan by saying 'an arrow in Satan's eye' serves as a cautionary tale against deliberately antagonizing spiritual forces. | Cf. Balaam's donkey — The biblical story of Balaam's donkey is reinterpreted through a mystical lens, suggesting that the donkey pressed against the wall specifically to follow the predetermined path decreed for spiritual entities. | Cf. Pairs (zugot) — The text references the Talmudic superstition against consuming items in pairs, contextualizing it as a way to avoid antagonizing groups of harmful spiritual forces that operate in specific numerical patterns. | Cf. Opening of windows in Daniel — The phrase 'windows were opened for him' alludes to Daniel's practice of praying with windows open toward Jerusalem, reinterpreted here as creating pathways for souls to ascend. | Cf. Psalm 104:20 — This biblical verse is used metaphorically to refer to harmful spiritual forces that become active at night, explaining why windows should be closed at this time to separate 'the holy from the profane.'

[iii] Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd) is a section of the Zohar attributed to Moses that contains mystical interpretations of the commandments.

[iv] The text establishes a parallel between the body-soul relationship and the relationship between different types of angels, suggesting that the spiritual world mirrors the structure of human existence.

[v] This describes a hierarchical structure in the spiritual world where souls have higher souls above them, just as angels have higher angels above them, creating a continuous chain of being from humans to the divine.

לנשמתא כולהו חד ואע״ג
דבאורא מתלא אינון בגופא
אצל נשמתא אלין לאלין במה
15 דנשמתא לקבל קוב״ה חשיבא
בגופא. ואית מלאכין דימינא
דתליין מקוב״ה ואלין משמאלא
דתליין בשכינתא. ואלין דתליין
מקוב״ה ושכינתיה ביחודא
20 חדא. ותתאי כולהו רשימין
למעלה. מנהון במלאכי. מנהון
בכרסייא. ומנהון בארבע חיוון
דכורסייא מנהון בככבי ומזלי.
ומנהון רשימין במדורא דקוב״ה.
25 מדברים אלו יהיה לנו ראיה
שלכל אדם יש לו מלאך מזלו
ברקיע[i] ועליה אמר רבנן מזליה
[ii] חזי.

Holy One, blessed be He, is considered like a body. And there are angels of the right that depend on the Holy One, blessed be He, and those of the left that depend on the Shekhinah. And those that depend 15R on the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Shekhinah in a single unity. And all those below are inscribed above—some among the angels, some in the Throne, some in the four Beasts of the Throne, some in the stars and constellations, and some are inscribed in 20R the dwelling place of the Holy One, blessed be He. From these words we have proof that every person has his guardian angel in the firmament,[A] concerning which our Sages said, "his mazal [fortune/guardian angel] sees."[1] 25R

עוד ידוע כי ע״י רל״א
30 שערים[iii] היוצאים מכ״ב אלפא

It is further known that through the 231 gates[2] formed from the 22 letters of the alphathese compared to those" — This alternate rendering of this difficult phrase captures the sense of hierarchical comparison being made, emphasizing that higher spiritual entities relate to lower ones in the same way souls relate to bodies.

[B]Or: "From these statements we have evidence that each person has an angelic representative of their destiny in the heavens" — This alternate translation emphasizes the concept of mazal as destiny or fortune rather than strictly as a guardian angel, which captures an additional nuance of the Hebrew term 'מזלו' that encompasses both protective and deterministic aspects.

[1]The phrase 'מזליה חזי' (his mazal sees) appears in Talmudic literature (Megillah 3a) to explain supernatural awareness. Here it is reinterpreted in a kabbalistic context to mean that each person has a celestial representative that 'sees' or knows things beyond human perception.

[1]The original phrase 'רל״א שערים' (231 gates) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to the number of possible paired combinations of the 22 Hebrew letters. This is a fundamental concept in Jewish mystical cosmology, particularly in the Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation).

[ii]This concept of a personal guardian angel or celestial representative (mazal) for each individual is central to Ma'avar Yabok's understanding of how divine providence operates during life, illness, and death.

[iii]Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — The author quotes from Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd), a section of the Zohar attributed to Moses, to establish the existence of different types of angels serving different aspects of human existence. This text serves as an authoritative source for the kabbalistic understanding of the spiritual hierarchy that governs human souls. | Cf. Zohar — The passage employs the typical style and terminology of the Zohar, particularly its discussion of spiritual hierarchies, the relationship between body and soul, and the connections between human souls and angelic beings. This reference establishes the author's understanding within the mainstream of kabbalistic thought. | Cf. Talmudic concept of mazal — The final line references the Talmudic concept that 'mazal sees' (mazlei chazi), suggesting that each person has a celestial representative or fortune that influences their life. The author integrates this earlier rabbinic concept with the more elaborate kabbalistic angelology to suggest that these traditional Jewish concepts have deeper mystical significance.

[i]The '231 gates' refers to the mathematical number of possible paired combinations of the 22 Hebrew letters (calculated as $22 \times 21 \div 2 = 231$). In Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), these combinations are understood as the channels through which divine creative energy flows into the world.

ביתא נברא כל יש. לכן החיה
העליונה נקראת ישראל.[i] ירצה
מוציאה כל היש ע״י רל״א
שערים. וכל זה נקרא מקום שכל
אומין המדות עליונים משפיעים
למלכות שהיא כלל הכל ואח״כ
נבראו הגלגלים שע״י כדוריותם
וסיבובם יתחברו ויתגלגלו
ד׳ יסודות[ii] תחתונים יחד
ומתגלגלים הויתן. וכאשר יעברו
לפני בעל השפע מקבלים כפי
הרצון העליון. ואחר קבלתם
יריצו אורם למקום אשר יושלחו
עד תקופתם להביא הצורה.
הן בריות הן פירות הן מזונות.
ואמרו כי הגלגלים הם כמנין
השמים הממונים להביא. ויש
גלגל המתגלגל פעם אחת ביום.
ויש פעם בחדש. ויש לה׳ שנים.
ויש לי׳. ויש לק׳. ויש לאלף.
ויש לכמה אלפים. יש ממזרח
למערב. ויש בהפך. וכן מצפון
לדרום ומאלכסון לאלכסון.
ובתוכם שם היכולת הגדול.
ובזה נכון הוא לבא השפע
מכל צד ברצון בעל השפעים
כלם. וכל הנשמות חקוקות
ביריעה לפני בסא הכבוד ויש קוראים אותו חשמ״ל[iii] וי״א bet, all existence was created. Thus, the supernal creature is called "Israel,"[1] meaning that it brings forth all existence through these 231 gates. All this is called "place," where all the power of the supernal attributes flows down to Malkhut (Kingdom),[A] which encompasses everything. Afterward, the celestial spheres were created, which through their spherical nature and rotation cause the four lower elements to combine and revolve together, cycling through their various forms. When they pass before the Master of Divine Flow,[2] they receive according to the supernal will. After receiving this influence, they direct their light to the place where they are sent until their appointed time to bring forth form—whether creatures, fruits, or sustenance.

It is said that the number of celestial spheres corresponds to the number of heavens appointed to bring [divine influence]. There is a sphere that rotates once a day, another once a month, another every five years, another every ten years, another every hundred years, another every thousand years, and yet another every several thousand years. Some rotate from east to west, others in the opposite direction, and likewise from north to south and from diagonal to diagonal. Within them is placed the great power, and through this arrangement, divine flow properly comes from every direction according to the will of the Master of all flows.

All souls are engraved on a curtain before the

[A] Or: "All this is called "Place" (Makom), where all the strength of the supernal qualities flows into Malkhut" — This alternate translation preserves 'Makom' as a technical term, which in kabbalah often refers to God Himself (as in 'HaMakom'), and renders 'middot' as 'qualities' rather than 'attributes', which might be more accessible to some readers.

[2] The Hebrew phrase 'החיה העליונה נקראת ישראל' refers to a kabbalistic entity, not the nation of Israel. In this context, 'Israel' functions as a cosmic archetype representing the divine creative force.
[3] The Hebrew 'בעל השפע' literally means 'master of the flow,' referring to God as the source of all divine influence that cascades down through the various spiritual levels.

[ii] The term 'the supernal creature is called Israel' refers to a kabbalistic concept where 'Israel' represents a cosmic entity responsible for bringing forth existence, not merely the historical people of Israel. This interpretation draws on the etymology of Israel (ישראל) as containing the letters that spell 'li rosh' (לי ראש, 'to me is the head'), suggesting primacy in creation.
[iii] This refers to the classical Aristotelian-medieval cosmology that posited four elements (earth, water, air, and fire) that combine in different proportions to create all physical existence. The celestial spheres' movements were believed to influence these combinations.
[i] The term 'Chashmal' appears in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1:4) and is variously translated as 'amber,' 'electrum,' or 'hashmal.' In Kabbalah, it refers to a luminous divine substance that serves as a barrier or interface between the higher and lower realms.

שהוא פרגוד.[i] וזהו עד שיכלו כל הנשמות שבגוף[ii] ובעת עלות הרצון לפניו יתׄ להביא נשמה לעולם קורא למלאך הממונה שהוא רוח והרוח בא בגלגל ומניעו. ובזה ימצא שכל פעולות המלאכים למטה יתהוו ע״י גלגל. ובזה נמצא מלאך וגלגל ורוח הכל דבר אחד מיוחדים. וכאשר יהיה האופן בתוך האופן[iii] כן יהיה מלאך בתוך מלאך וגלגל בתוך גלגל[iv]

Throne of Glory,[B] which some call Chashmal,[3] while others say it is the Pargod (celestial curtain). This is what is meant by "until all the souls in the body are exhausted."[A] When the divine will rises before the Blessed One to bring a soul into the world, He calls to the appointed angel, which is a spirit, and that spirit enters a sphere and moves it.[B] Thus we find that all the actions of angels below occur through a celestial sphere. In this way, we understand that angel, sphere, and spirit are all one unified reality. Just as there is "a wheel within a wheel,"[1] so too there is an angel within an angel and a sphere within a sphere.

[A] Or: "inscribed on a parchment before the Throne of Glory" — The Hebrew word 'yeriah' can refer to either a curtain or a parchment/scroll. The alternate translation emphasizes the idea of souls being written or recorded rather than physically engraved, which might better align with the imagery of a celestial book of souls.

[B] Or: "until all the souls in the celestial treasury called 'Guf' are depleted" — This alternate translation clarifies that 'Guf' is not referring to a physical body but to the rabbinic concept of a celestial treasury of souls. This is more explicit and helps avoid confusion for readers unfamiliar with this concept.

[C] Or: "He summons the appointed angel, which is a spiritual force, and this spirit enters into a celestial sphere and sets it in motion" — This alternate translation emphasizes the active nature of the divine summons and clarifies that 'ruach' in this context refers to a spiritual force rather than just 'spirit', which might have different connotations in English.

[1] The term 'חשמ״ל' (Chashmal) appears in Ezekiel's vision and is a complex mystical concept that has been variously interpreted. I've left it untranslated as it is a technical term with no precise English equivalent.

[2] This is a direct reference to Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah) in Ezekiel 1:16, which became central to early Jewish mysticism. The nested wheels represent the complex, hierarchical structure of the spiritual realms.

[i] The 'Pargod' (celestial curtain) is described in rabbinic literature as a metaphysical barrier behind which God's glory resides. In the Talmud (Berakhot 18b), the souls of the dead are said to be behind this curtain, able to observe events in our world.

[iii] This refers to the rabbinic concept of 'guf' (body), a celestial treasury where all souls destined to be born are stored. According to tradition, the Messiah will not come until this treasury is emptied (Yevamot 62a).

[iv] This phrase directly quotes Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Ezekiel 1:16), where wheels within wheels represent the complex, interlocking nature of divine providence and celestial mechanics.

[v] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This passage relates to Ma'avar Yabok's larger discussion of the soul's celestial origins and the mechanism by which souls descend to earth, which is relevant to understanding how the soul experiences death as a return journey through these same celestial spheres. | Cf. Zohar — The concept of the 231 gates (רל״א שערים) appears in several kabbalistic works including the Zohar, which discusses how these permutations of Hebrew letters serve as channels through which divine creative energy flows into the world. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The 231 gates (רל״א שערים) is a direct reference to Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), one of the earliest extant kabbalistic texts, which describes how God created the world through 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet and their 231 possible paired combinations. | Cf. Ezekiel — The phrase 'wheel within a wheel' (האופן בתוך האופן) is drawn from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah), which Ma'avar Yabok uses as a metaphor for the nested hierarchical structure of spiritual realms. | Cf. Talmud Bavli — The phrase 'until all the souls in the body are exhausted' refers to the Talmudic teaching that the Messiah will not come until all souls stored in the celestial treasury (called 'guf' or body) have been born into the world.

נמצא שהמלאך בגלגל ומקבל
שפע שמה ומגלגל בימים קצובים.
וכנויי הממונה אם לזכר אם
לנקבה. ובאותו גלגל ותנועה
שהיה במעי אמו מביאו לעולם
בכח כל יכול. ואותו קבול
שפע מקבלת הנשמה. וזהו
אמרם ז״ל כל אדם יש לו מזל
וכוכב למעלה[i] הקבועים בגלגלי
התכונה כל אחד כפי דרכו.
ועתה אם הנשמה הנוצרת נשפעת
בשעה שהתחיל הגלגל להתגלגל
והיא מאותן המתגלגלין פעם
אחת ביום. בו ביום ימות ואם
יתגלגל לי׳ שנים אז תהיה מיתתו.
ואם לע׳ אז יסוף ואם למאה
ק׳ שנים יחיה. עד שוב הגלגל
המחבר בתנועה ההיא. וכל
ימי חייו יתגלגל עמו הוא הרוח
היוצא ונכנס באפיו בכח הבורא.
והוא המעמיד החומר בסוד
וברוח פיו כל צבאם. כי כשאין
לו להשיב רוחו ולהוציא רוחו
הוא מת. והפירות מתקטנים בכל
דור כן הבריות מתחלשים[ii] שגם
שהגלגלים רוחניים הם מ״מ
בהתגלגלם יחלשו שכל מחובר
יש לו גבול ומתחלש עד שעתיד

Thus, the angel is in the celestial sphere,[2] receiving divine influence there and revolving in appointed times. The name of the appointed [angel] may be masculine or feminine. And in that same sphere and motion that existed when [the soul] was in its mother's womb, it brings it into the world through the power of the Almighty.[1] And the soul receives that same flow of divine influence. This is what our Sages of blessed memory meant when they said that every person has a mazal and star above,[A] fixed in the celestial spheres,[B] each according to its way. Now, if the created soul receives its divine flow at the hour when the celestial sphere begins to revolve, and it is among those that revolve once a day, then on that very day it will die. If [its sphere] revolves for ten years, then that will be the time of its death. If [it revolves] for seventy [years], then it will end then, and if for one hundred, it will live one hundred years—until the connecting sphere returns to that same motion. Throughout all the days of its life, the spirit that goes out and enters through its nostrils by the Creator's power revolves with it. And this is what sustains the physical form,[2] according to the secret of "and by the breath of His mouth all their host." For when one cannot return his breath and expel his breath, he dies. And just as fruits become smaller in each generation, so too living beings become weaker, for although the celestial spheres

[A] Or: "every person has a celestial fortune and star above" — The term 'mazal' has multiple meanings including luck, fortune, destiny, and celestial influence. While I kept the Hebrew term 'mazal' in the main translation because it's a technical term in Jewish mysticism, this alternative makes the celestial influence aspect more explicit for readers unfamiliar with the term.

[B] Or: "established in the astrological configurations" — The term 'galgalei ha-techunah' might refer more specifically to astrological configurations rather than celestial spheres in general, so this alternative might be more precise in contexts focusing on astrological correspondences.

[1] The original text doesn't explicitly state 'the angel is in' but begins with 'it is found that,' a common Hebrew rhetorical device indicating a conclusion. I've rendered it more directly in English to maintain the flow of the argument.

[2] The Hebrew phrase 'koach kol yachol' literally means 'power of all-capable,' a circumlocution for God that emphasizes divine omnipotence without using the divine name.

[3] The phrase 'b'sod' (literally 'in the secret of') is a common kabbalistic formula introducing an esoteric interpretation of a biblical verse. I've rendered it as 'according to the secret of' to maintain this technical aspect of the text.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that each human soul has a corresponding celestial entity that influences its destiny. The term 'mazal' here doesn't simply mean 'luck' as in modern Hebrew, but refers to a specific astral influence or guardian angel that governs one's spiritual and physical life cycle.

[i] This references a Talmudic concept (found in treatises like Shabbat 112b) that earlier generations were physically and spiritually greater than later ones, with both human beings and natural products gradually diminishing in size and strength throughout cosmic history.

להתפרק כמ״ש ושמים כעשן נמלחו. הנה מזה שלכל אדם יש לו מלאך מזלו וגלגלו ברקיע. ואמרו שפסוק בצלמנו כדמותנו[i] מורה על זה. [ii] are spiritual, nevertheless, in their revolutions they weaken,[C] since everything that is composite has a limit and weakens until it is destined to come apart, as it is written, "and the heavens shall be dissolved like smoke." From this we see that every person has an angel, his mazal and his sphere in the firmament. And they said that the verse "in Our image, after Our likeness" indicates this. 100R 105R שכל אדם יש לו מזל בגלגל המזלות מושפע מן המלאך המניעו והמלאך נאצל מכבוד שכינה וזהו בצלמנו כדמותנו כדכתיב ועל הכסא דמות כמראה אדם עליו מלמעלה. וכן אמרו אדם בפני שכינה כקוף בפני אדם.[iii] עוד מתבאר זה מדברי התקונים דף ע״ב ע״ב דאמר והמשכילים יזהירו אלין ד׳ יסודין דגופא יזהירו בהון ד׳ חיוון אינון מזל אריה. מזל שור.

Every person has a mazal in the celestial sphere of constellations,[1] influenced by the angel that moves it, and the angel emanates from the glory of the Divine Presence.[2] This is the meaning of "in Our image, after Our likeness," as it is written: "And upon the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it" (Ezekiel 1:26). And thus they said, "A human before the Divine Presence is like a monkey before a human." This is further explained in Tikkunei Zohar (page 72b), which states: "And the wise shall shine"—these are the four elements of the body, within which shine the four ce- 110R 115R

[A] Or: "as they cycle they grow weaker" — The Hebrew term 'hitgalgel' literally refers to rolling or cycling, so this alternative more directly captures the cyclical nature implied in the original, which might be preferable in contexts emphasizing the cosmic cycles rather than mechanical revolution.

[1] The concept of 'mazal' here goes beyond the common understanding of 'luck' to mean a specific celestial counterpart or spiritual destiny connected to each individual soul.

[2] This establishes a chain of emanation: from God's Presence to angels to celestial bodies to human souls, illustrating the kabbalistic principle that all existence flows from divine sources.

[ii] The author offers a mystical interpretation of Genesis 1:26, suggesting that what makes humans 'in God's image' includes having a corresponding celestial counterpart in the heavens. This expands the traditional understanding of divine image to include this cosmic correspondence between earthly beings and celestial forces.

[iii] Cf. Zohar — This passage draws on Zoharic cosmology, particularly from Pekudei, which discusses how celestial powers govern human lifespans and how angelic forces administer the flow of divine energy to human souls. The description of souls receiving influence through celestial spheres directly parallels Zoharic teachings about the mechanisms of divine providence. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The concept of celestial spheres and their correspondence to human lifespans echoes Sefer Yetzirah's system of cosmic correspondences between celestial bodies, time cycles, and human anatomy. The text adopts this framework to explain the predetermination of human lifespan through celestial mechanics. | Cf. Bereishit (Genesis) 1:26 — The text explicitly cites this verse to suggest that humans having a corresponding mazal and star in the heavens is part of what it means to be created in God's image. This kabbalistic interpretation extends the biblical notion of divine image to include a celestial counterpart that governs one's destiny. | Cf. Psalms 33:6 — The text quotes this verse to explain the mechanism by which divine breath sustains physical existence, drawing a parallel between cosmic creation and individual human life, suggesting that the same divine breath that creates celestial bodies also animates human bodies. | Cf. Isaiah 51:6 — This verse is cited to support the idea that even celestial entities have finite lifespans and will eventually disintegrate, reinforcing the text's argument that all composite beings, including celestial spheres, gradually weaken over cosmic time cycles.

[i] This statement compares the relative standing of humans before God to that of monkeys before humans, emphasizing the vast ontological gap between human and divine realms.

מזל נשר. מזל אדם.[iv] בפרצופא
דב״נ אשתמודעאן בהון באנפוי
דב״נ ודא הוא הכרת פניהם
120 ענתה בם. כזוהר. דא נשמתא.
ומצדיקי הרבים באברי דגופא
יהון נהרין מזלייהו ככוכבים
לעולם ועד. ואמרו עוד שם שכל
צדיק יש לו כוכב וכל כוכב
125 נקרא עולם בפני עצמו וכוכב
עם ד׳ אותיותיו בגימטריא
ב״ן[i] במספר שם מלוי החי״ן
שבמלה שהוא פי הגבורה. והוא
מושפע משם זה מכח המלכות
130 המנהלת התחתונים. ואמר
מורי כי התורה נתנה לסוף נ״ב
יום[ii] לרמז שם ב״ן שבמלכות.
ועוד שרצה הקב״ה לחוג בעצמו
ובכבודו י״ט שני של גליות כיון
135 שנתנה תורה בח״ל. וכל ספירה
נקראת עולם ומלכות בפרט
נקרא עוה״ז. ועל זה אמרו כל
צדיק יש לו עולם בפני עצמו
וזהו ומצדיקי הרבים ככוכבים.
140 ובויקרא רבה פ׳ כ״ז אמרו כל
צדיק יש לו עדן בפני עצמו
דכתיב ונחל עדניך בלשון רבים.
וכל הזוכה להלכ׳ אחת יורש
עולם חד כ״ש דזכי למתיבתא.
145 או לשנים או לסתרי תור׳. ואמר
בדף ע״ד כי ציורא דהיכל גנוז
שבג״ע מצוייר בנקודין דאינון
כוכביא דנהרין מרקיעא ובהון מצויירין נשמתין ורוחין ונפשין

lestial creatures:[3] the mazal of Lion, the mazal of Ox, the mazal of Eagle, and the mazal of Man. In the countenance of a person, they are recognized in 120R his facial features, and this is "the appearance of their faces testifies against them" (Isaiah 3:9). "Like the brightness of the firmament"—this refers to the soul. "And those who lead many to righteousness" through the limbs of the body, their mazal will shine 125R
"like the stars forever and ever" (Daniel 12:3). It is further stated there that every righteous person has a star, and each star is called a world unto itself.[1] The word "star" (כוכב) with its four letters equals 52 in gematria, corresponding to the Divine 130R Name Ban (ב״ן) when spelled out with heis, which is the mouth of Gevurah[2] (Strength). It is influenced by this name through the power of Malkhut (Kingdom) which governs the lower realms. And my teacher said that the Torah was given after 52 days 135R to allude to the name Ban (ב״ן) in Malkhut. Furthermore, the Holy One, blessed be He, wanted to celebrate in His own glory the second day of festivals in the diaspora,[3] since the Torah was given outside the Land of Israel. Each sefirah is called a world, and 140R Malkhut in particular is called "this world." Based on this, they said that every righteous person has a world unto himself, and this is the meaning of "those who lead many to righteousness [will shine] like the stars." In Vayikra Rabbah (chapter 27), they said 145R that every righteous person has his own Eden, as it is written: "And You will give them to drink of Your rivers of delights" (Psalm 36:9) in the plural form. Anyone who merits [to understand] a single halakhah inherits one world,[4] how much more so one 150R

[1]This connects human physiology to cosmic structures, following the kabbalistic principle that the human form mirrors divine patterns ('as above, so below').
[2]This suggests that the reward for righteousness includes not just personal salvation but cosmic significance—each righteous person affects an entire realm of existence.
[3]The divine name ב״ן (Ban = 52) is one of the four ways of spelling out the Tetragrammaton. It corresponds to the sefirah of Malkhut and is associated with the material world.
[4]This offers a mystical justification for the second day of festivals observed in the diaspora, suggesting it has divine significance rather than being merely a practical custom.
[1]This reflects the rabbinic teaching that Torah study has cosmic significance, with each halakhah (law) corresponding to an entire world or realm of existence.

[ii]These four mazalot correspond to the four faces of the creatures in Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah), which are foundational symbols in Jewish mysticism.
[iii]The Hebrew word for 'star' (כוכב) has the numerical value of 48. With the four letters themselves (ב,כ,ו,כ) added, the total is 52, corresponding to the divine name ב״ן (Ban).
[iv]The author calculates 52 days from the Exodus to the giving of the Torah, though the traditional count is 50 days (Shavuot). This may include the two additional days Moses added according to rabbinic tradition.

דצדיקייא וציורא דיליה בציורא
דקמץ דאיהו נצוץ רקיע. וממה
שהובא בשבת פ׳ חבית דאמרו
על גרים שגם דאינהו לא הוו
על הר סיני מזלייהו הוה[i] משם
נראה שגם קודם שנולד האדם
יש לו מזל ואולי יהיה בסוד
הדיוקן לנשמות מלשון מזל
הנוזל הנשמה כשם שהצלם קודם
להויות הגופים ודיוקן זה יברא
בעת אצילת נשמתו. ויתהוה
מגולם אויר רוחני שמג״ע עליון
כמו שדרשו על צלם הגוף
וכן אמרו בב׳ המדרגות שעם
האדם שהם כמו מלאכים יצר
טוב ורע שבעת שהנשמה תהיה
נאצלת מזווג עליון בהיכל
לבנת הספיר[ii] גם המלאכים
אלו יהיה נאצלים עמו. והם
מתאבלים ונבדלים ממנו מפני
מעשיו כי יהיו נפגמים במעשיו
להיותם נאצלים עם אצילות
נשמתו. ויצה״ר אז הוא מלאך
קדוש אמנם מרכבתו תהיה
טמאה[iii] שכן דרך כמה מלאכים
קדושים. ומרכבתו תתפשט מד׳
קליפות טמאות שהם עון משחית
אף וחמה והולך לצד שמאלו
של אדם. ויצר הטוב יהיה רוכב
במרכבה הקדושה המתפשטת
מד׳ רגלי המרכבה מהם מיכאל
גבריאל אוריאל רפאל. והולך
לצד ימיצו של אדם[iv] ולא
יתחבר עם האדם רק עד שיהיה

who merits [to enter] the heavenly academy, or [to understand] two [halakhot], or the secrets of Torah. And it states on page 74 that the image of the hidden palace in the Garden of Eden is depicted with points that are like stars shining from the firmament, and within them are depicted the souls, spirits, and vital souls of the righteous. Its form corresponds to the vowel point kamatz, which is a spark of the firmament. From what is brought in Tractate Shabbat in the chapter "The Barrel," where they said about converts that even though they themselves were not present at Mount Sinai, their mazal was there, it appears that even before a person is born, they have a mazal.[1] Perhaps this refers to the secret of the image for souls, deriving from the word mazal meaning "flowing" down to the soul, just as the image precedes the formation of bodies. This image is created at the time of the emanation of one's soul and is formed from a spiritual aerial substance from the supernal Garden of Eden, as they expounded regarding the image of the body. Similarly, they spoke of the two levels accompanying a person, which are like angels—the good and evil inclinations. When the soul is emanated from the supernal union in the Palace of the Sapphire Brick, these angels are also emanated with it. They grieve and separate from the person because of their actions, as they become blemished by the person's deeds, since they were emanated along with the emanation of their soul. The evil inclination is then a holy angel, though its chariot is impure,[2] as is the way with several holy angels. Its chariot extends from the four impure shells, which are Iniquity, Destruction, Anger, and Wrath, and it goes to the left side of the person. The good inclina-

[2]This supports the kabbalistic concept of the pre-existence of souls, suggesting that each person's spiritual destiny or 'mazal' exists before their physical birth.

[1]This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that evil is not a primary existence but a secondary one—even the evil inclination has a holy source but manifests through impure 'vehicles'.

[i]This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Shabbat 146a) that the souls of future converts were present at Sinai even if they weren't physically born yet, suggesting a pre-existence of souls.

[ii]This describes the kabbalistic concept of souls being created through a divine 'union' in the celestial Palace of the Sapphire Brick, a reference to Exodus 24:10 where the elders saw 'a pavement of sapphire' under God's throne.

[iii]This presents the paradoxical kabbalistic view that even the evil inclination was originally a holy angel, though its 'vehicle' or manifestation became impure. This reflects the concept that evil is not inherently evil in its source but becomes so through its manifestation.

[i]The right side traditionally represents mercy and goodness in Kabbalah, while the left side represents judgment and severity.

בן י״ג שנה ויום אחד.[v] והאדם
185 בכח בחירתו יהיה יכול להכריע
ולהגביר אחד מהצדדין על
חבירו. על דרך הנזכר תחיה
הויות המזל הזה ואם נעלה
הדבר יותר ירמוז למזל עליון
190 הנוזל מכתר. וממנו הויות
הנשמות. ועל ידו מושפעים
באוצר הבנים שהוא ת״ת ע״ד
מ״ש בני חיי ומזוני לאו בזכותא
דאיהו מחסד ולמטה תליין רק
195 במזלא דהיינו כתר[i] ומשם ג״כ
יוכל להיות כי יתהוה מזל פרטי
לכל אדם ברקיע וגם אחר שמת
לעולם מזלו קיים ברקיע וזהו
לא יכרת ולא ישמד שמו מלפני
200 ושם לשון אחיזת שהוא מקום
אחיזת האדם ברקיע ע״ד מ״ש
מה דלא הוה הוה מאי דהוה לא
[iii] [ii] כל שכן:

tion rides in the holy chariot that extends from the 185R four legs of the Divine Chariot, which are Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael, and it goes to the right side of the person. It does not join with the person until they reach the age of thirteen years and one day. Through the power of free choice, a person can tip 190R the balance and strengthen one side over the other. In the manner described, this mazal comes into being. If we elevate the matter further, it alludes to the supernal mazal that flows from Keter[1] (Crown). From it comes the existence of souls, and through 195R it they are channeled into the treasury of children, which is Tiferet (Beauty), as it is written: "Children, life, and sustenance do not depend on merit, which is from Chesed (Kindness) and below, but rather on mazal," meaning Keter. From there it is also pos- 200R sible that an individual mazal is formed for each person in the firmament. Even after death, one's mazal remains forever in the firmament,[2] and this is [the meaning of] "his name shall not be cut off

[2]This connects the concept of individual mazal to the highest divine emanation (Keter/Crown), suggesting that our personal destiny is ultimately rooted in the most transcendent aspect of divinity.
[3]This provides a metaphysical explanation for the continued existence of the soul after death, suggesting that one's spiritual essence or 'mazal' continues to exist in celestial realms.

[ii]This aligns with the traditional Jewish understanding that moral responsibility begins at age 13 for boys (and 12 for girls), when the good inclination fully develops to counter the evil inclination.
[iii]This quotes a Talmudic statement (Moed Katan 28a) that children, life span, and sustenance depend not on merit but on mazal. The author gives this a kabbalistic interpretation, associating mazal with Keter (Crown), the highest divine emanation.
[iv]This philosophical principle means 'that which did not exist now exists; that which already existed, all the more so [continues to exist].' It argues that if God can create something from nothing, surely He can maintain what already exists.
[v]Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 72b — This reference reinforces the author's argument that human beings have cosmic counterparts in the celestial realms, strengthening the idea that each person has a mazal or celestial influence. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:26 — By citing Ezekiel's vision of 'the likeness as the appearance of a man' above the divine throne, the author reinforces the kabbalistic principle that the human form mirrors divine patterns, which justifies the existence of celestial counterparts for human souls. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 27 — This reference supports the author's central argument about individual cosmic significance—just as each righteous person has their own Eden, they also have their own mazal or star. | Cf. Talmud Shabbat, Chapter 'The Barrel' — This reinforces the idea of pre-existence of souls and their connection to spiritual realms before physical birth, supporting the author's argument about mazal existing before birth. | Cf. Daniel 12:3 — This biblical reference provides scriptural support for the kabbalistic concept that righteous humans have celestial counterparts that shine like stars, reinforcing the connection between human virtue and cosmic significance. | Cf. Isaiah 3:9 — This reference supports the kabbalistic idea that physical appearance, particularly facial features, reflects spiritual realities—in this case, the influence of the four celestial creatures on human countenance. | Cf. Psalm 36:9 — This textual detail is used to strengthen the argument that spiritual rewards are individualized, just as mazalot (astrological influences) are individualized. | Cf. Exodus 24:10 — This reference connects the creation of souls to the divine revelation at Sinai, suggesting that the same celestial realm where the elders glimpsed God is where souls are emanated through 'supernal union.' | Cf. Talmud Moed Katan 28a — The author gives this Talmudic statement a kabbalistic interpretation by associating mazal with Keter nor destroyed from before Me." Here, "name" refers to a connection, which is the place where a person connects to the firmament, as it is said: "What did not exist now exists; what did exist, how much more so [continues to exist]." 205R

פרק כ״ח

Chapter 28

כח מזל זה יעדיף אחר שנולד האדם שמאירו בכח מעשיו וזה יהיה לדעתי אחד מהכוונות שאומרים שהאדם העוסק בתורה בכל יום בורא שמים החדשים וארץ חדשה.[i] כי מוסיף חדוש בכח מזלו עליון ותחתון אשר מציאותו קדום לו כמו שהנשמה קדמה בריאתה לגוף כנודע. ויתוסף לו עוז וחדוה אחר מות האדם כי המזל ימלא מקומו כי מדרך הקדושה להתרבות ולעולם מציאות הראשון נשאר לעד כדאמרו בכמה מציאיות שיש לנשמה מדי רדתה בעה״ז. שבכל מקום נשאר רושם מציאותה בירידה. ועד״ז תהיה בסוד עלייתה וחזרתה לאדוניה. ואמרו בתקונים כי נשמת השבטים היו מסוד המזלות. ופירשו כי מחסד ועד יסוד הם שש ומיסוד עד חסד שש אחרים ומצד המלכות נקראים ז׳ כוכבי לכת מהשכינה עד חסד. וודאי כי כח המזלות מושפע להם מהסדר זמניה עליונים. ועיין עוד מסוד המזל בתקון

The power of this mazal (celestial influence) increases after a person is born, as it is illuminated by the power of their deeds. This, in my opinion, is one of the meanings behind the saying that a person who engages in Torah study daily "creates new heavens and a new earth."[1] For such a person adds innovation to the power of their upper and lower mazal, whose existence preceded them—just as the soul's creation preceded the body, as is known. Strength and joy are added to it after a person's death, for the mazal fills their place, since it is the way of holiness to multiply, and the original existence always remains forever, as they said regarding the various states the soul experiences as it descends to this world. In each place, an impression of its existence remains during its descent. And in this manner it will be in the mystery of its ascent and return to its Master. 5R 10R 15R

They said in the Tikkunim that the souls of the tribes were from the mystery of the constellations.[2] And they explained that from Chesed to Yesod there are six,[3] and from Yesod back to Chesed there are six others, and from the perspective of Malkhut, they are called the seven planets, from the Shekhinah up to Chesed. Certainly, the power of the constellations is influenced by the arrangement of the supernal times. See more about the mystery of mazal in Tikkun 18, page 32. There are also 20R 25R

[1] This phrase refers to Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22. The author is using this biblical concept metaphorically to suggest that Torah study has creative power that transforms both the spiritual cosmos and the person studying.

[2] The Hebrew term "sod ha-mazalot" refers to the kabbalistic concept that the twelve tribes of Israel correspond to the twelve zodiac signs, with each tribe having a specific celestial correspondence and spiritual influence.

[3] This refers to the six lower sefirot (divine emanations) in the kabbalistic Tree of Life: Chesed (Kindness), Gevurah (Strength), Tiferet (Beauty), Netzach (Victory), Hod (Splendor), and Yesod (Foundation).

(Crown), suggesting that the most fundamental aspects of human existence are governed by the highest divine emanation rather than by the lower sefirot.

[i] This references Isaiah 65:17 and 66:22, where God promises to create "new heavens and a new earth." The author interprets this metaphorically to mean that Torah study has creative power, allowing humans to participate in ongoing creation through spiritual innovation.

י״ח דף ל״ב ויש ג״כ י״ב מזלות מס״א. ומלמדי לאדם דעת אמרו מלאך מזלו זה שיש לכל אדם ברקיע[ii] כנזכר בעודו חי תמיד מתפלל עליו שישמע הקב״ה תפלתו. וזהו שומע תפלה. אינו אומר שומע תפלות.[i] ומה היא התפלה עדיך כל בשר יבואו. ע״כ אין רשאין למעלה לומר שירות עד שיאמרו ישראל למטה. שכל ענין שאדם עושה מלאך מזלו מתראה באותו ענין למעלה שמכין עצמו למטה. וזהו וגם אני שמעתי את נאקת בני ישראל וגם לרבות מלאכי מזלם. ובשהיו ישראל מתגברים בקול שופר ובחצוצרות היו ברקים יוצאים מן הארון כמו שיוצאים ברקים וקולות למעלה ושוברין שרי השבעה עממין וזהו קול ה׳ שובר ארזים. וסמך לזה ממדרש רבה פ׳ במדבר דף קמ״ד ע״א א״ר אלעזר בן פדת בשם רבי יוסי בן זמרא בשעה שהיו ישראל נוסעים היו ב׳ נצוצים של אש יוצאים מתוך ב׳ בדיו של ארון כדי לפגוע שונאיהם וכו׳. שכן משה אומר כי ה׳ אלהיך הוא עובר לפניך אש אוכלה הוא ישמידם וגו׳. וכתיב אשר כגובה ארזים גבהו ואשמיד פריו ממעל ושרשיו מתחת פריו ממעל זה מלאך מזלם. ואח״כ ושרשיו מתחת.[ii] ואמרו אם

twelve constellations from the Other Side.[4]

Those who teach knowledge to humanity said that this guardian angel that every person has in the firmament,[5] as mentioned, constantly prays for them while they are alive, that the Holy One, blessed be He, should hear their prayer. This is the meaning of "[God] who hears prayer." It does not say "who hears prayers" [in the plural]. And what is the prayer? "To You all flesh shall come." Therefore, they are not permitted above to recite songs until Israel recites them below. For in every matter a person does, their guardian angel appears in that same matter above, preparing itself below. This is the meaning of "And I have also heard the groaning of the children of Israel"—"also" comes to include their guardian angels.

When Israel would intensify the sound of the shofar and trumpets, lightning would emerge from the Ark, just as lightning and sounds emerge above and break the princes of the seven nations. This is the meaning of "The voice of the Lord breaks the cedars." Support for this comes from Midrash Rabbah, Numbers, page 144a: "Rabbi Eleazar ben Pedat said in the name of Rabbi Yose ben Zimra: When Israel would journey, two sparks of fire would emerge from between the two poles of the Ark to strike their enemies, etc." For thus Moses says: "For the Lord your God is He who goes before you as a consuming fire; He will destroy them," etc. And it is written: "Though their height was like the height of cedars, yet I destroyed their fruit from above and their roots from beneath." "Their fruit from above"—this refers to their guardian angel, and afterward, "their roots from beneath."

[1] "The Other Side" (Sitra Achra) is a kabbalistic term for the realm of evil or impurity, suggesting that there are twelve negative constellations that mirror the twelve holy constellations.

[2] The concept of a personal guardian angel (mazal) combines astrological and angelological elements in Jewish mysticism, suggesting that each person has a celestial representative that advocates for them in the divine court.

[i] The concept that each person has a celestial representative or guardian angel (mazal) is found in various rabbinic sources. This represents a personalized connection between the human and divine realms, with the angel serving as both advocate and spiritual counterpart.

[ii] The author makes a grammatical observation about the liturgical phrase "shome'a tefillah" (who hears prayer) being in the singular rather than plural, and interprets this to mean that God first hears the prayer of one's guardian angel before hearing the person's own prayer.

[i] The author interprets the verse from Amos 2:9 about destroying the fruit of the Amorites from above and their roots from beneath as referring first to their celestial guardian angel (mazal) and then to their physical presence on earth, suggesting that divine judgment affects both spiritual and physical realms.

יש עליו מלאך מליץ שמלאך
מזלו של אדם מתפלל עליו
קודם שיתפלל האדם וזהו טרם
65 יקראו ואני אענה למלאך מזלו.
ובהתפלל האדם אח״כ על עצמו
כבר קדמו אחר ברחמים. נקל
לתפלתו להיות נשמעת. וזהו
עוד הם מדברים ואני אשמע.
70 וזהו שמעה ה׳ צד״ק שהוא
כח המזל אח״כ הקשיבה רנתי
האזינה תפלתי. וכן אומר צדק
לפניו יהלך ואח״כ וישם לדרך
פעמיו. וכבר נודע מדברי הזהר
75 פרשת תרומה דף קנ״א שבשעה
שישראל מסדרים בבית הכנסת
סדור שירות ותשבחות והתפלה.
שמתקבצים שלש מחנות מלאכים.
האחד הם המשבחים לקב״ה ביום
80 עם ישראל בשירי דוד. והב׳ הם
הנמצאים בכל קדושה שישראל
מקדשים למטה ושולטים על כל
המתעוררים בכל הרקיעים עבור
התפלות של ישראל. והמחנה
85 השלישי הם בתולות עליונות
שמתקנים עם השכינה ומקשטים
אותה לעלות לפני המלך ה׳
צבאות. ואלה הם מחנות
עליונים על כלם ומתקנים
90 בסוד תפלה מיושב ומעומד
כנדרש למעלה. ובזמירות אנו
מכניסים כל שירי הנבראים
הנכללים בסוד פרק שירה בכח
צורת האדם שהוא רודה על כלם
95 בזה אנו מכלילים כל מיני זמרה.
ובפרט מהנבראים תחתוני׳
בהיכל לבנת הספיר וגם פיוט
יעידון יגידון מורה על זה[i] ובזה
מכלילים ומקדשים כל חלקי
100 העשיה בתקון הקרבנות אחר י״ח
ברכות שקודם התפלה שבברכות
ההם מקדשים כל צרכי בני
אדם להיותם בכח הקדושה וכל

They said: "If there is for him an angel advocate"—for a person's guardian angel prays for them before the person prays, and this is the meaning of "Before they call, I will answer" their guardian 65R angel. And when the person afterward prays for themselves, another has already preceded them with mercy, making it easier for their prayer to be heard. This is the meaning of "While they are still speaking, I will hear." And this is the meaning of "Hear, 70R O Lord, righteousness" which is the power of the mazal, and afterward, "Give ear to my cry, listen to my prayer." Similarly, it says, "Righteousness shall go before Him," and afterward, "and shall set us in the way of His steps." 75R

It is already known from the words of the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 151, that when Israel arrange songs of praise and prayer in the synagogue, three camps of angels gather. The first are those who praise the Holy One, blessed be He, during the 80R day with Israel through the songs of David. The second are those found in every sanctification that Israel sanctify below, and they rule over all those who awaken in all the firmaments for the prayers of Israel. And the third camp are the supernal maid- 85R ens who adorn themselves with the Shekhinah and decorate her to ascend before the King, the Lord of Hosts. These are camps superior to all of them, and they are established in the mystery of the seated and standing prayer, as explained above. 90R

Through songs of praise, we incorporate all the songs of created beings included in the mystery of Perek Shirah (Chapter of Song) through the power of the human form that rules over all of them. In this way, we include all types of melody, particularly 95R from the lower created beings in the Palace of the Sapphire Brick.[1] The liturgical poem "Ye'idun Yaggidun" (They testify, they declare) indicates this, and through this we incorporate and sanctify all parts of the World of Action in the establishment 100R of the sacrifices after the eighteen blessings before the prayer. In those blessings, all the needs of human beings are sanctified to be in the power of

[1] This refers to the first of seven celestial palaces (heikhalot) in the World of Formation (Yetzirah). In kabbalah, it is associated with Exodus 24:10, "under His feet was the likeness of a pavement of sapphire stone."

[i] This refers to a liturgical poem recited during the Kedushah prayer of the Musaf service on Sabbaths and festivals, which describes how all creation testifies to God's glory. The author uses this as an example of how human prayer incorporates the songs of all created beings.

האר בע יסודות תחתונים נכללים
בחומר הראשון והוא נכלל בז׳
ככבי לכת והם באזור המזלות
והוא בגלגל החלק והוא ברקיע
ערבות והוא בשבעים שרים.
ומדור השבעים שרים מהאומות
שלא הכירו בורא עולם יהיה
ברקיע שהוא למעלה מהגלגלים
שאינו מסבב ובחלק שכנגד א״י
בו שרפי קדש ששם השכינה
ושרים החצונים נגד ח״ל ובו
צבא השמים שהם השרים ועל
זה כתיב ונמקו כל צבא השמים
וכל צבאם וגו׳ כי יסבב סיבוב
אחר הרקיע. סנדלפון יש לו
שבעה מדורין[i] כמו שיש שבעה
היכלות ליצירה ושבעה לבריאה
ושבעה ספירות מחסד ולמטה
מספרים כ״ח. וכן ללבנה למטה
כ״ח מחנות תחתונים ובמדרגות
הנקראים אישים שאמרו קצת
שמשם שכל הפועל. והם בעשר
כתות מלאכים הממונים על
התקופות והמזלות והימים
והשעות והחדשים והם מלאכי
קדושה מעופפים במציאות
ונקראים צפור כנף והם אופנים
ותחתיהם ע׳ שרים ואופנים
אלו ממונים על כתות העשייה
ומשם עולים כלם להכלל בהיכל
ראשון שביצירה שהוא לבנת
הספיר.[ii]

holiness.

All four lower elements are included in the primordial matter, which is included in the seven planets, which are in the zodiacal belt, which is in the smooth sphere, which is in the firmament of Aravot,[2] which is among the seventy princes. The dwelling of the seventy princes of the nations who did not recognize the Creator of the world will be in the firmament that is above the non-rotating spheres. In the portion opposite the Land of Israel are holy seraphim, where the Shekhinah dwells, and the external princes are opposite the Diaspora, and in it is the host of heaven, which are the princes. Concerning this, it is written: "And all the host of heaven shall dissolve and all their host shall fall," etc., for it will circle after the firmament.

Sandalphon has seven dwellings,[1] just as there are seven palaces for the World of Formation and seven for the World of Creation, and seven sefirot from Chesed downward, totaling twenty-eight. Similarly, the moon below has twenty-eight lower camps and levels called Ishim (Men/Fires),[2] which some say is the source of the Active Intellect. They are in ten groups of angels appointed over the seasons, constellations, days, hours, and months, and they are holy angels flying in existence, called "winged birds." They are Ophanim (Wheels),[3] and beneath them are seventy princes. These Ophanim are appointed over the groups of the World of Action, and from there they all ascend to be included in the first palace of the World of Formation, which is the Palace of the Sapphire Brick.

[1] Aravot is the seventh and highest heaven in rabbinic cosmology, believed to be where God's throne of glory resides. The term appears in Psalm 68:5, "Extol Him who rides on the clouds [aravot]."

[2] Sandalphon is an archangel in Jewish tradition often associated with prayer, believed to take human prayers and fashion them into crowns for God. The text describes his realm as structured in correspondence with higher spiritual worlds.

[3] Ishim is the lowest of the ten orders of angels in Jewish mysticism, closest to humanity. The term can be understood as meaning either "men" or "fires," reflecting their intermediate nature between human and angelic realms.

[4] Ophanim are a class of angels described in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1:15-21) as wheel-like beings covered with eyes. In the angelic hierarchy, they are associated with the sphere of Chokmah (Wisdom) and the movement of divine will.

[i] Sandalphon is an archangel in Jewish tradition often associated with prayer, believed to take human prayers and fashion them into crowns for God. The author describes Sandalphon's realm as having seven levels, paralleling the seven lower sefirot and the celestial palaces of higher worlds.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The text refers to this section of the Zohar to explain how three camps of angels gather when Israel prays, showing how human prayers on earth have corresponding celestial responses in higher realms. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah, Numbers — The text cites this midrash

פרק כ״ט

Chapter 29

כל הנדרש נרמז בשירי זמרה ובפרט במזמור הללו את ה׳ מן השמים וגו׳ ושם שירת החיה וכל בהמה וגו׳ מלכי ארץ וגו׳ בחורים וגו׳. ואמרו בראש פרקי שירה[i] כל העוסק בפרק שירה זה בעה״ז זוכה ללמוד ונצול מיצה״ר וכו׳. והפליגו לדבר בשבחו. ואמר ר׳ אלעזר כל האומר שירה זו בעולם הזה זוכה ואומרה לעה״ב ואני מעיד עליו שהוא בן העה״ב ונצול מכל מיני משחית וכו׳. ובפרט האומרים שירה שנמנו שם הם ס״ח[ii] כי מינים הם יהיו כללות הנבראים התחתונים השופכים שיח לפני מלכם ואחריהם כל הפרטים ימשוכו. ועיין בפירוש פרק זה למה פרט אלו ולא זולתם. ואמירת פרק שירה זה לדעתי ירצה להתבונן במהות כל מין ומין עם בחינת שירתו איזה יחוד גורם ומעין אותו היסוד יכלול בנשמתו ויכנים כל פרטי השירות בפסוקי הזמירות בהיכל לבנת הספיר[iii] ומשם

All that is required is alluded to in songs of praise,[1] particularly in the psalm "Praise the Lord from the heavens," where there is the song of the beast, all animals, kings of the earth, young men,[2] and so on. It is stated at the beginning of Perek Shirah (Chapter of Song) that whoever engages with this chapter in this world merits to study and is saved from the evil inclination, etc. They spoke at length in its praise. Rabbi Eleazar said: "Whoever recites this song in this world merits to recite it in the World to Come, and I testify about him that he is destined for the World to Come and is saved from all kinds of destructive forces, etc." In particular, those creatures enumerated there number sixty-eight, for these species represent the totality of the lower created beings who pour out their meditation before their King, and all individual creatures follow after them. See the commentary on this chapter as to why these particular creatures are specified and not others.

The recitation of this Chapter of Song, in my opinion, means to contemplate the essence of each species along with the nature of its song, what type of unification it causes,[3] and to incorporate something of that foundation into one's soul. One should bring all the particular songs into the verses of psalms in [1] The opening phrase establishes the author's view that liturgical psalms contain mystical significance beyond their plain meaning, particularly regarding cosmic harmony.

[2] This references the structure of Psalm 148, which presents a hierarchical order of creation praising God, from celestial beings to earthly creatures to human society.

[3] In Kabbalistic thought, 'unification' (יחוד) refers to the mystical harmonization of divine attributes or worlds. The author suggests each creature's song creates a specific type of cosmic harmony.

to provide scriptural support for the idea that divine power (symbolized by sparks from the Ark) can overcome enemies, paralleling how the sound of prayer and shofar can break negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text refers readers to this section for deeper understanding of the mystical concept of mazal, suggesting that this source contains further elaboration on the celestial influences that affect human souls. | Cf. Perek Shirah (Chapter of Song) — The text refers to this ancient mystical work as the source for understanding how all created beings offer praise to God, which humans can incorporate into their prayers, thereby unifying all levels of creation.

[ii] Perek Shirah (Chapter of Song) is a Jewish liturgical text that catalogs the 'songs' (Biblical verses) attributed to various animals, plants, and natural phenomena. Dating possibly to the Talmudic era, it expresses the kabbalistic idea that all creation praises God.

[iii] The text states there are 68 (ס״ח) creatures listed in Perek Shirah. This numerical value is significant in Jewish mysticism.

[i] The 'Palace of the Sapphire Brick' refers to a celestial realm in Kabbalistic cosmology, associated with Exodus 24:10 where the elders of Israel saw under God's feet 'a paved work of sapphire stone.' In Heikhalot literature, it's one of the heavenly palaces through which prayers ascend.

יעלה אותם בסוד צלמו ודמותו
הכולל כל הנבראים עליונים
ותחתונים ויכללם ביחודו בכח
30 תפלתו. וכמו שישראל למטה
צריכים שסנדלפון יקשור כתרים
לקונו[i] בתפלתן של ישראל
ומיכאל מקריב נשמותיהם[ii] וכן
הרבה פרטים מתבארים בפרקי
35 היכלות בהיכלי הקדושה שיש
מחנות רבות ואוכלוסין בלי
מספר שמעלים יחוד התחתונים
לגבהי מרומים ומל׳ הבוחר
בשירי זמרה כוללם כלם בה
40 ומתראה לפני המלך ה׳ צבאות
בכחם. כדרך זה כל ברואי
תבל תלויים בנשמת האדם שהוא
מלך עליהם בתחתונים. ועל
ידו ובכח חלקי נשמתו מעלה
45 כל שירותיהם ותושבחותיהם
לפני השכינה. וזהו שאמר אדם
הראשון לכל הנבראים בואו
נשתחוה ונכרעה נברכה לפני
ה׳ עושנו. כי בלעדו לא היה
50 להם רשות ליראות את פני המלך
ה׳ צבאות והוא היה המריק
להם שפעם. וזהו ורדו בדגת
הים ובעוף השמים וגו׳. וזה
יכוין האדם בזמירות והעושה
55 יחוד זה בעולם הזה גם כן
יזכה לעשות דוגמתו בעולם
הבא שהוא יעלה כל מלאכים
הממונים למטה ויריק עליהם
מברכות שתקבל נשמתו לפנים
60 מהפרגוד וכלם יהיו תלויים
בו והוא בתפלותיו מכליל
ההיכלות זה בזה עד היכל קדש
הקדשים ובזה מעלה המלכות
עד הבינה ובינה מתעלית למקום

the Palace of the Sapphire Brick,[4] and from there elevate them through the mystery of one's image and likeness,[5] which encompasses all created beings, both celestial and terrestrial, and include them in one's 30R unification through the power of prayer. Just as Israel below requires that Sandalphon bind crowns for his Creator through the prayers of Israel, and Michael offers up their souls, and many other details are explained in the Chapters of the Heavenly 35R Palaces regarding the sanctuaries of holiness—where there are numerous camps and countless multitudes that elevate the unification of the lower beings to the heights of heaven—so too "the One who chooses songs of praise" includes them all within it and ap- 40R pears before the King, the Lord of Hosts, through their power.

In this way, all creatures of the world depend on the human soul, which rules over them in the lower realms. Through the human being and through the 45R power of the portions of his soul, all their songs and praises are elevated before the Divine Presence. This is what Adam, the first man, said to all created beings: "Come, let us prostrate ourselves and bow, let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." For without 50R him, they would have no permission to appear before the King, the Lord of Hosts, and it was he who channeled divine abundance to them. This is the meaning of "and have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the birds of the sky, etc." 55R

This is what a person should intend through psalms. One who performs this unification in this world will also merit to do its likeness in the World to Come, where he will elevate all the angels appointed below and pour upon them from the blessings that 60R his soul receives within the divine curtain. They will all depend on him, and through his prayers, he includes the palaces one within another up to the Holy of Holies, thereby elevating Malkhut

[1] This celestial realm represents a specific stage in the ascent of prayers through the spiritual worlds. The metaphor of the 'sapphire brick' suggests both transparency (allowing divine light to shine through) and solidity (providing structure).
[2] This refers to the biblical concept (Genesis 1:26-27) that humans are created in God's image, which in mystical thought gives them unique power to unify and elevate all creation.

[i] According to the Talmud (Chagigah 13b), Sandalphon is an angel who stands behind the Divine Chariot and weaves crowns for God from the prayers of Israel.
[ii] The archangel Michael is traditionally viewed as offering the souls of the righteous as sacrifices upon the heavenly altar, particularly in Jewish apocalyptic literature.

האין העליון[iii] ומשם לנשמות הנשמות יוצר הכל ברוך הוא. ויש שירה למעלה ממלאכי חסד שהם מים העליונים[iv] מנעימי שירה ביום ומלאכי דין מזמרי שירה בלילה והשכינה מתעוררת לשיר על ידם והיינו במעשה ידיך ארנן. וישראל גורמים השירה שלימה. למלאכים כאשר יבא לקמן הנה כמה רב גובריה של אדם ילוד אשה בחסד אל גבר עליו והמשילו על כל מעשה ידיו ועל פיו יחנו ועל פיו יסעו אם משמרת ה׳ ישמור וזה בחייו וכל שכן וקל וחומר במותו יזכה לשמש במרום בראש חולה מכל אשר שת הקב״ה תחת רגליו וסבותיו ועל כן גדול עון המספר בבית הכנסת[i] שהוא מפריד וגורע הנאמנות העליון. וגרסי׳ בפרק חלק אמר ר׳ יהושע בן לוי כל האומר שירה בעולם הזה זוכה ואומרו לעולם הבא. אמר רב ששת כל המלמד תורה בעולם הזה זוכה ומלמדה לעולם הבא שנאמר וכו׳. וכן המנהג הצבור בנחת בעולם הזה. ואמרו בברכות כד הוו מפטרי רבנן מבי רבי ואמרי ליה מבי רבי חנינא הוו אמרין הכי וכו׳ וסיים רגליך ירוצו לשמוע דברי עתיק יומיא. ואולי מלאך מזלו של אדם[ii] הוא ממחנות אלו שמקבלים סיוע מתפלתן של

(Kingdom) to Binah (Understanding),[1] and Binah ascends to the place of the Supernal Nothingness, and from there to the Soul of Souls, the Creator of All, blessed is He. 65R

There is song above from the angels of Kindness, who are the upper waters that make pleasant music by day, and the angels of Judgment who sing at night. The Divine Presence is stirred to sing through them, which is the meaning of "in the works of Your hands I will rejoice." Israel causes the complete song for the angels, as will be explained later. Behold how great is the power of a human being born of woman,[1] as divine kindness prevails over him, and He gave him dominion over all the works of His hands. By his command they encamp, and by his command they journey, if he keeps the charge of the Lord. This is during his lifetime, and all the more so after his death, when he will merit to serve on high, at the head of all that the Holy One, blessed be He, has placed beneath his feet and around him. Therefore, great is the sin of one who engages in mundane conversation in the synagogue, for he separates and diminishes the supernal faithfulness. 70R 75R 80R 85R

We learn in Chapter Chelek that Rabbi Joshua ben Levi said: "Whoever recites song in this world merits to recite it in the World to Come." Rav Sheshet said: "Whoever teaches Torah in this world merits to teach it in the World to Come, as it is said, etc." Similarly, one who leads the congregation calmly in this world [merits to do so in the World to Come]. And they said in Tractate Berakhot: "When the Rabbis would take leave of Rabbi [Judah the Prince]"—and some say, "When they would take leave of Rabbi Hanina"—"they would say thus... 90R 95R

[1] In Kabbalistic cosmology, prayer elevates divine energy from Malkhut (the lowest sefirah representing this world) to Binah (a higher sefirah associated with divine understanding), facilitating cosmic harmony.

[2] This phrase emphasizes both human grandeur (having dominion over creation) and human limitation (being mortal, 'born of woman'), creating tension between humanity's exalted and finite nature.

[i] The 'Supernal Nothingness' (אין העליון) is a kabbalistic term for the highest, most ineffable aspect of divinity, beyond human comprehension and description.

[ii] The 'angels of Kindness' being 'upper waters' refers to the kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 1:7, where the division of waters symbolizes different spiritual realms and their angelic inhabitants.

[iii] The Talmud (Berakhot 5b) strongly condemns idle talk in synagogues. The author gives this a mystical dimension, suggesting it disrupts the cosmic unification of earthly and heavenly prayer.

[i] The concept of each person having a 'guardian angel' (מלאך מזלו) is found in various rabbinic sources. The author connects this to the three groups of angels that greet the righteous upon death, mentioned in the Talmud (Ketubot 104a).

ישראל ואלו יהיו גם כן הג׳ כתות
100 של מלאכי השרת הבאים לקראת
האדם במותו נגד מה שקדש
עצמו במחשבה בדבור ומעשה
להיות כי נהנו ממנו ומתורתו
ומתפלתו בחייו. ואמרו בפ׳
105 תרומה שכשמזדמנים כל המחנות
עליונות להיות חברים עם
ישראל וישראל למטה אינם
באים לסדר תפלותיהם ולשבח
להקב״ה אינם עולים למעלה
110 ואין בידם לשבח לו כראוי ונתן
טעם לזה בגין דשבחא דקב״ה
אצטריך למהוי כחדא עילא
ותתא עילאין ותתאין בשעתא
חדא וזהו ובאפס לאום מחתת
115 רזון. ובמלין עשרה מזדמנים
להיות חברים עמהם. ואמרו
בתקונים דף י״ד על פסוק שימני
כחותם הכי אמרה שכינתא אע״ג
דאנת מסתלק מעלמא דיוקנך לא
120 אעדי מני לעלם כחותם דאתדבק
ביה רשימו דמריה כחותמא כמו
שישראל משימים עליהם כחותם
עולי של הבורא בתפלה של יד
וראש ובברית מילה ושבת ויום
125 [i] טוב:

[May] your feet run to hear the words of the Ancient of Days." 100R

Perhaps a person's guardian angel is from these heavenly camps that receive assistance from the prayers of Israel. These would also be the three groups of ministering angels that come to greet a person at death, corresponding to how he sanctified 105R himself in thought, speech, and deed, for they derived pleasure from him, from his Torah, and from his prayer during his lifetime. They said in Parashat Terumah that when all the celestial camps gather to be companions with Israel, but Israel below does 110R not come to arrange their prayers and praise the Holy One, blessed be He, the angels cannot ascend above and are unable to praise Him properly. The reason given for this is "because the praise of the Holy One, blessed be He, needs to be as one, above 115R and below, higher and lower beings at the same time." This is the meaning of "without people, a nation falls." When there are ten [for a minyan], they gather to be companions with them.

And they said in Tikkunim, page 14, regarding 120R the verse "Set me as a seal," that thus said the Shekhinah: "Even though you depart from the world, your image will never depart from me, like a seal whose impression remains with its owner"[1]—like a seal—just as Israel places upon themselves the 125R exalted seal of the Creator in the tefillin of the hand and head, in the covenant of circumcision, on Sabbath, and on festivals.

[1] This beautiful metaphor from Song of Songs is reinterpreted to suggest that even after death, the soul's impression remains with God. The human-divine relationship transcends physical existence.

[i] Cf. Psalm 148 — The author uses this psalm as a foundational text for understanding how all created beings offer praise to God, establishing a cosmic hierarchy of praise that humans can participate in and elevate. | Cf. Perek Shirah — The author cites Perek Shirah as a model text for understanding how all creation praises God, and how humans can elevate these praises through proper intention and ritual practice. | Cf. Psalm 95:6 — This reference establishes humans as mediators who lead all creation in proper worship, emphasizing humanity's central role in the cosmic order. | Cf. Genesis 1:26-28 — The author interprets this dominion not as mere control but as a spiritual responsibility to elevate the praises of all creation. | Cf. Psalm 92:5 — The author connects this to the Divine Presence being stirred to sing, suggesting that divine joy and human joy are interconnected through proper worship. | Cf. Proverbs 14:28 — The author reinterprets this verse mystically to suggest that without human worship on earth, the angelic praise in heaven is incomplete. | Cf. Song of Songs 8:6 — This verse is given a mystical interpretation where the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) speaks these words, expressing how the human soul's impression remains with God even after death. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The author cites the Zohar to explain that human prayer on earth is necessary for angelic praise in heaven to be complete, establishing a cosmic dependency between realms. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Tractate Sanhedrin (Chelek) — The author uses this teaching to establish continuity between religious practices in this world and their continuation in the afterlife.

פרק ל׳

Chapter 30

יען כי האדם ונפשו יש לה מזל ברקיע[ii] עוד יש לנו לדעת שכל נפש המהללת השכינה בעוה״ז אף לאחר מיתה המלאך מהלל למעלה באותו הקול עצמו[i] שהצדיק היה רגיל בו כדי שיזכור הקב״ה זכותו לו ולדורו ולזרעו כי המלאך והמזל המגינים על האדם הם כדמותו שנאמר ויראני את יהושע הכהן הגדול. וכן ראיתי פניך כראות פני אלהים[ii] כי ראה דמות עשו כדמות מלאך שלו כן כתב הציוני בפ׳ וירא. ושלוחי הצבור בפרט וכן מי שיש לו קול ערב וכל אדם גם כן יהיה שמור ויקר דבר זה בעיניהם ופיהם תהיה תמיד נחל נובע מקור רנה ותפלה כי לא תהיה להם לעולם הפסק אפי׳ אחר מיתתם. וזהו לדעתי שתקנו מסדרי התפלות ושבחך אלהינו מפינו לא ימוש לעולם ועד וכן ולנצח נצחים קדושתך נקדיש כי אפי׳ אחר המות הצדיק משבח ומהלל לא לבד נשמתו ורוחו למעלה ברם קלוסו עולה גם כן מן העולם התחתון ע״י מלאך מזלו כנזכר על העצמות כתיב כל עצמותי תאמרנה ה׳ מי כמוך. וכן כתיב לא המתים יהללויה

Since man and his soul have a mazal in the firmament,[A] we should also know that every soul that praises the Divine Presence in this world—even after death, the angel continues to praise above with the same exact voice that the righteous person was accustomed to using, so that the Holy One, blessed be He, will remember his merit for him, for his generation, and for his descendants.[1] For the angel and the mazal that protect a person[A] are in his likeness, as it is said, “And he showed me Joshua the High Priest.” Similarly, “I have seen your face as one sees the face of God,” for he saw Esau’s likeness as the likeness of his angel, as the Tziyoni wrote in the section of Vayera. Particularly prayer leaders, as well as anyone with a pleasant voice, and indeed every person, should treasure and value this in their eyes, and their mouths should always be “a flowing stream, a source of song and prayer,” for there will never be an interruption for them, even after their death. This, in my opinion, is why the arrangers of prayers established “And Your praise, our God, shall not depart from our mouths forever and ever,” and likewise, “For all eternity we shall sanctify Your holiness,” because even after death, the righteous person continues to praise and extol—not only through his soul and spirit above, but his glorification also rises from the lower world through his guardian angel, as mentioned. Concerning the bones, it is written, “All my bones shall say: ‘LORD, who is like You?’” And it is also [A] Or: “have a celestial representative in the heavens” — This alternate translation clarifies the technical kabbalistic concept of ‘mazal’ as a representative entity rather than just a fortune or destiny. This might be more immediately comprehensible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: “and the celestial destiny that protects a person” — This alternate emphasizes the protective aspect of the mazal concept and might be preferred if focusing on the functional rather than ontological aspects of mazal.

[1] The text emphasizes the intergenerational impact of righteousness, suggesting that the merit of a righteous person continues to benefit not just themselves but their entire lineage.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that each person has a celestial counterpart or ‘mazal’ in the heavens that influences their destiny and serves as their spiritual representative in the upper worlds.

[ii] The text presents a mystical understanding that the praise offered by a righteous person during their lifetime continues after death through their celestial representative (guardian angel), preserving their unique ‘voice’ or spiritual signature.

[iii] The text reinterprets Jacob’s statement to Esau in Genesis 33:10 in a mystical way, suggesting Jacob recognized the divine aspect or angelic counterpart of Esau.

ומאן אינון רשעים שבחייהם קרויים מתים שכן ראש החצונים כמוס באוצרות הקדושה[iii] והוא עתיד לקבל מתוק והעד רישיה דעשו הקבור במערת המכפלה לרגלי יעקב[i] והנמשך אחריהם הוא גוף בלא ראש וכן כל יורדי דומה[ii] כי שם בגיהנם אין מעשה וחשבון אבל אנחנו עמו נברך יה בעה״ו ובעה״ב מעתה ועד עולם לעולם נשיר ונזמר ונאמר לפניו הללויה. ובשאדם מתפלל בכוון הלב דמותו של מעלה מנושק בחבה[iii] [iv]

written, "The dead do not praise the LORD"—and who are they? The wicked, who even during their lives are called dead. For the head of the external forces is hidden in the treasuries of holiness,[B] and it is destined to receive sweetening.[C] The evidence is Esau's head, which is buried in the Cave of Machpelah[A] at Jacob's feet. And what follows after them is a body without a head,[1] and so are all who descend to silence,[2] for there in Gehenna there is no work or reckoning. But we, His people, shall bless the LORD in this world and in the World to Come, from now and forever; we shall forever sing, make music, and say before Him: Hallelujah. And when a person prays with focused intention, his heavenly image is kissed with affection[3]

[A] Or: "the root of the negative spiritual forces is concealed within the treasuries of holiness" — This alternate more explicitly clarifies that 'external forces' refers to negative spiritual entities, and that their 'head' refers to their spiritual source or root.

[B] Or: "and it is destined to be transformed and redeemed" — This alternate expresses the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening' (mituk) in more accessible theological terms of transformation and redemption, which might be preferred for readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[C] Or: "Esau's head, which according to tradition is buried in the Cave of Machpelah" — This alternate makes it clearer that this statement refers to a rabbinic tradition rather than a biblical fact, which might be preferred for more scholarly translations.

[1] This metaphor describes the wicked who lack spiritual direction or connection to their divine source—they are like a body without a head, representing action without proper spiritual intention or guidance.

[2] This phrase ('yordei dumah') refers to those who die, particularly those who experience spiritual silence after death due to their wickedness in life.

[1] This metaphorical 'kiss' represents the divine connection established through proper prayer with

[i] This expresses the kabbalistic concept that the 'head' or highest aspect of the external forces (forces of impurity) has its root in holiness and will eventually be rectified or 'sweetened.'

[ii] This refers to a rabbinic tradition that when Esau's head was severed during his burial, it rolled into the Cave of Machpelah and came to rest at Jacob's feet, symbolizing the eventual spiritual rectification of even the negative forces.

[iii] This biblical phrase refers to those who descend to the grave or the realm of silence (Psalms 115:17), which in kabbalistic thought refers to souls that experience spiritual silence in Gehenna.

[iv] This describes the mystical concept that when a person prays with proper intention (kavvanah), their celestial image or spiritual counterpart in the upper worlds receives divine affection, represented as a 'kiss.'

[v] Cf. Zohar — This passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts about the nature of the soul after death, particularly the idea that the righteous continue to praise God even after death and that their merit continues to benefit their descendants. | Cf. Genesis 32:31 — The reference to "I have seen your face as one sees the face of God" comes from Jacob's words to Esau, which in this passage is interpreted mystically to suggest that Jacob saw Esau's angelic counterpart. | Cf. Zechariah 3:1 — The text quotes "And he showed me Joshua the High Priest" from Zechariah's vision to demonstrate that angels appear in the likeness of the humans they correspond to. | Cf. Psalms 35:10 — The quotation "All my bones shall say: 'LORD, who is like You?'" is used to show that even physical remains have a spiritual connection that continues after death. | Cf. Psalms 115:17 — The text quotes "The dead do not praise the LORD" but reinterprets it to refer specifically to the wicked, who are spiritually dead even while alive, rather than the righteous dead. | Cf. Sefer HaTziyoni — The text explicitly references the kabbalistic work Sefer HaTziyoni regarding the concept that Esau's appearance reflected his angelic counterpart.

ומתוך שנודע זה למלאך שלו
מכניס חבת שמים בלבו וזה סימן
גדול לאדם בתפלתו בעת שנכנס
חשק היחוד ואהבת שמים בלבו
וח״ו בהפך אם יד עליון נוגע
באדם נדחף כמו שנאמר כי יד
ה׳ נגעה בי. וסנדלפון בורר
התפלות כאדם שבורר כסף
וזהב ואבנים טובות ומרגליות
לתקן עטרה[i] והוא יודע לאיזה
צד העטרה יש לקבוע אותה
התפלה אם נגד הפנים כדכתיב
שפכי כמים לבך נכח פני ה׳ או
לאחורי הכבוד על דרך שנאמר
ושועתי לפניו תבא באזניו. ודאי
שכוונת שלוחי צבור בתפלתם
לזכות כל אחד מדיוקני הנשמות
שעומדים בקהל ההוא ועמם כל
כללות שבעים רבוא דיוקנאות
הנכללים בהם כל עם ה׳ כמו
שבהארות הויה אחת מוסיפים
כח וחיל לכל ההויות הקדושות
שכלם משולבות יחד ונתנו
מרועה אחד בנזכר למעלה.
וכן צורת האדם כולל כל ציור
ד׳ פני המרכבה וכל היוצר
מראש ועד סוף בפרטי אבריו
וגידיו ועורקיו ושאר מציאות
שבגופו ונפשו וכוחו ונשמתו.
על כי מנהג החכמים לנענע

And because his angel knows this, it instills love of Heaven in his heart,[4] and this is a great sign for a person during prayer when the desire for divine unification and love of Heaven enters his heart. And Heaven forbid the opposite—if the divine hand touches a person, he is pushed away, as it is said, "For the hand of the LORD has touched me." Sandalphon sifts through the prayers like a person who selects silver, gold, precious stones, and pearls to fashion a crown,[A] and he knows on which side of the crown to set each prayer—whether facing the front, as it is written, "Pour out your heart like water before the face of the LORD," or behind the Glory, as it is said, "And my cry came before Him, into His ears." Certainly, the intention of prayer leaders in their prayers is to bring merit to each of the soul-images standing in that congregation, and with them all the collective seventy thousand soul-images included among them[1]—all the people of the LORD—just as when the illuminations of one Divine Name increase the power and strength of all the holy Divine Names, which are all interwoven together and given by one Shepherd, as mentioned above. Similarly, the human form encompasses all the images of the four faces of the Divine Chariot[B] and everything formed from beginning to end in the details of his limbs, sinews, veins, and other aspects of his body, soul, strength, and spirit. This is why it is the custom of the wise to sway their bodies during Torah study and songs of praise, to fulfill "All my bones shall say..."

[A] Or: "Sandalphon refines the prayers like an artisan who sorts silver, gold, precious stones, and pearls to craft a crown" — The alternate translation emphasizes the artisanal aspect of the process with 'refines' and 'artisan,' which might better convey the meticulous, skilled nature of what Sandalphon does with prayers. The original translation accurately captures the meaning.

[B] Or: "Similarly, the human form encompasses all the patterns of the four faces of the Merkavah" — Using 'Merkavah' instead of 'Divine Chariot' preserves the technical mystical term that would be recognized by readers familiar with Jewish mysticism, though the original translation is perfectly clear.

intention (kavvanah). In kabbalistic thought, the 'kiss' represents a direct spiritual connection between the human soul and divine presence.

[2] The Hebrew term 'חבת שמים' (love of Heaven) refers specifically to a divinely inspired love for the celestial realms, which comes as a result of proper prayer and divine service.

[3] The number 'seventy thousand' (שבעים רבוא) has mystical significance, often representing the totality of Jewish souls. The term 'דיוקנאות' (soul-images) refers to the spiritual impressions or forms of human souls as they exist in higher realms.

[i] This reference to Sandalphon sorting prayers is based on Talmudic and mystical traditions that describe this angel as being responsible for taking human prayers and fashioning them into crowns for God. The metaphor of selecting precious materials highlights the idea that not all prayers are of equal quality or purpose.

עצמם בתורה ובשירי זמרה לקיים כל עצמותי תאמרנה וגו׳:[ii] ובדוגמת אבריהם בכח שלהבת נשמתם מתעוררים בשירם ובזמרם כל כלליות הנבראים ונוצרים ונעשים בכח ההויו״ת קדושות הנכלל רוחניות באותיות ונקודות התורה והתפלה והברכה ואמרו בירושלמי דסוכה פרק החליל בשם הלל הזקן אע״פ שיש לפניו כמה קלוסין חביב הוא קלוסן על ישראל יותר מהכל מ״ט נעים זמירות ישראל יושב תהלות ישראל. וכלל גדול לאדם להשתתף בסוד נפש רוח ונשמה שבו כל ברכה וקדושה ויחוד שגם היא תשתתף עם השרפים והחיות והאופנים ושאר המדרגות לשבח יוצרנו: ועל הכל בשעונה ברוך הוא וברוך שמו אחר כל ברכה ובפרט אחר י״ח ברכות בל חזרת העמידה כי אז הוא גמר היחוד במחברת השנייה ככתוב בספרי המקובלים. נ״ל שטוב לכוין ברוך הוא סוד העצמות או הרצון המתפשט מא״ס בעל הרצון הקדמון נשמה לנשמות תוך הספירות להחיותן.[i] וברוך שמו יכוין ליחד העצמות והרצון עם ספירות הכלים המקבלים הארתו ובכחו מראים פעולותיהם הם כפי הכנת המקבלים למטה

And in the pattern of their limbs, through the flame of their souls, they awaken in their song and their melody all the collective created, formed, and made beings through the power of the holy Divine Names, whose spirituality is included within the letters and 80R vowel points of the Torah, prayer, and blessing. And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sukkah, chapter "The Flute," in the name of Hillel the Elder: "Even though He has many praises before Him, the praise of Israel is more beloved to Him than all oth- 85R ers. What is the reason? 'The pleasant songs of Israel, He who dwells amid the praises of Israel.'" It is an important principle for a person to participate, through the mystery of the soul, spirit, and higher soul within him, in every blessing, sanctifica- 90R tion, and unification, so that it too may join with the seraphim, the holy beasts, the wheels, and the other ranks in praising our Creator. And above all, when one responds "Blessed is He and blessed is His Name" after every blessing, especially after the eigh- 95R teen blessings in the repetition of the Amidah, for then is the completion of the unification in the second joining,[1] as written in the books of the Kabbalists. It seems to me that it is good to direct one's intention with "Blessed is He" to the mystery of the Essence, or 100R the Will that extends from the Infinite One, Master of Primordial Will, Soul of souls within the sefirot, giving them life[A]. And with "Blessed is His Name," one should intend to unify the Essence and the Will with the sefirot of the vessels that receive His illu- 105R mination and through His power manifest their actions according to the preparation of the receivers below. The words "Blessed are You, LORD" in every instance represent the mystery of binding the se-

[A] Or: "to direct one's intention with "Blessed is He" to the mystery of the Divine Essence, or the Will that emanates from Ein Sof, Master of Primordial Will, serving as the Soul of souls within the sefirot, animating them" — This alternate uses 'Ein Sof' (the untranslated technical term) instead of 'the Infinite One' and 'animating' instead of 'giving them life,' which might better convey the technical kabbalistic concept. The original translation is quite accurate, however.

[1] The phrase 'המחברת השנייה' (the second joining) refers to a specific stage in the kabbalistic understanding of prayer, particularly during the repetition of the Amidah, when divine unifications are believed to take place at higher levels than during the silent Amidah.

[i] The Jewish practice of swaying (shuckling) during prayer and Torah study is here given a mystical interpretation. Rather than being merely a cultural custom, it is presented as a deliberate technique to engage one's entire physical being in divine service.

[ii] This passage reflects the Lurianic Kabbalistic concept of divine emanation, where Ein Sof (the Infinite) contracts and extends itself through various stages to animate the sefirot. The term 'soul of souls' suggests the idea that divine Will serves as the animating principle for all spiritual dimensions.

ומלות ברוך אתה ה׳ בכ״מ הוא
סוד קשר הספירות במאצילם
ולכן הכריעה בברוך להמשיך
השפע לספירות להכינם אל
היחוד. ואחר הכנה זו קושרם
ומיחדם למעלה וזהו זוקף בשם
ובכריעה וזקיפה יכוין בא״ס
שעל ידו הוא קשורם ויחודם
ממעלה למטה וממטה למעלה
בין בסוד השפעה בין קשר בין
יחוד. ואח״כ במלת אמן כבר
נודע כי הוא יחוד הוי״ה ואדנו״ת
יחד ששמנה אותיות אלו הם כלל
כל האצילות עליון[i] וכתר כולל
הכל למעלה הנכלל בקוצו של
יו״ד ומלכות כוללת הכל למטה:
ויסוד נקרא שר הפנים שהוא שר
שני פנים שהם הוי״ת אדנו״ת [ii]

firot to their Emanator,[2] and therefore one bows at 110R
"Blessed" to draw down the divine flow to the sefirot to prepare them for unification. After this preparation, one binds them and unifies them above, and this is "straightening at the Name." In bowing and straightening, one should direct intention to the Infi- 115R nite One, for through Him is their binding and unification from above to below and from below to above, whether in the mystery of emanation, binding, or unification. Afterward, with the word "Amen," it is already known that it represents the unification of 120R YHVH and ADNY together, for these eight letters comprise all the supernal emanation, with Keter including everything above, contained in the point of the Yod, and Malkhut including everything below. And Yesod is called the Prince of the Face, for it is 125R the prince of the two faces, which are YHVH and ADNY.[1]

בסוד חשמ״ל שהוא בגימטריא
שד״י אדנ״י[iii] אמצעי בין

In the mystery of Chashmal,[2] which has the numerical value of [the divine names] Shaddai Adonai, serv-

[1]The text describes the mystical significance of bowing during prayer as creating a channel for divine energy to flow into the sefirot (divine emanations), preparing them for unification. This reflects the kabbalistic view that human ritual actions have cosmic effects.

[2]Yesod (Foundation) is described as mediating between the divine names YHVH (representing mercy and masculinity) and ADNY (representing judgment and femininity), functioning as the connecting point between these two aspects of divinity.

[1]Chashmal (חשמ״ל) is a mysterious luminous substance mentioned in Ezekiel's vision (Ezekiel 1:4,27) that became significant in Jewish mystical tradition. In Kabbalah, it represents an intermediary spiritual force that connects different divine realms.

[i]The text assigns profound mystical significance to the common practice of responding 'Amen' in prayer. The numerical value of Amen (אמן) in Hebrew is 91, which equals the combined value of the divine names YHVH (26) and ADNY (65), representing the unification of divine mercy and judgment.

[ii]Cf. Book of Job 19:21 — The author cites Job's lament about divine affliction to illustrate the negative spiritual state of being pushed away from divine presence during prayer. | Cf. Lamentations 2:19 — This reference illustrates one type of prayer that is directed 'toward the face' of God, representing a direct, frontal approach in prayer. | Cf. Psalm 18:7 — This verse is contrasted with the previous reference to demonstrate another type of prayer that approaches God from 'behind the Glory,' suggesting a different modality of divine connection. | Cf. Psalm 35:10 — This reference explains the mystical significance of physical movement during prayer, suggesting that even one's body should participate in divine praise. | Cf. Zohar — This passage draws on Zoharic concepts of how human prayer activates and elevates all created beings across multiple spiritual worlds (Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah). | Cf. Psalm 22:4 — This verse is cited to demonstrate the unique spiritual potency of Israel's prayers compared to angelic praise, suggesting that human prayer has greater power to effect divine unification. | Cf. Ezekiel's Vision of the Divine Chariot (Ezekiel 1) — This references Ezekiel's vision of the merkavah (divine chariot) with its four-faced beings, suggesting that the human form mystically encompasses all these divine aspects. | Cf. Prayer liturgy — This references the standard congregational response during the repetition of the Amidah prayer, assigning profound mystical significance to this liturgical practice.

[i]The author is explaining that the mystical entity Chashmal has the same numerical value (gematria) as the combined divine names Shaddai and Adonai. This establishes a correspondence between this angelic substance and specific divine attributes.

השם הגדול והכינוי. ומלאך
130 מטטרו״ן שהוא בין המלאכים
כלב בגוף[iv] נקרא שר השנים
שהוא שר שני פנים אלו בעולמות
התחתונים: ולהיות כי אין בידינו
כח וחיל מפני מיעוט ידיעתנו
135 ליחד כראוי בתפלתנו ע״כ אולי
תקנו לנו שנמלך באבות העולם
מסדרי התפלות[i] באמרנו ואני
ברוב וגו׳ להזכיר לפניו יתברך
זכותם שיהיה לנו למעוז לעת
140 התפלה ונזכה ליחד ולתקן מעין
מה שהיו מתקנים הם בכח תפלתם
והקב״ה הנותן שכר על המחשבה
טובה כמעשה הוא יגמור על
ידינו כפי כוונתנו שהוא ליחד
145 ולעורר הרצון העליון מעין
מה שעשו אבותינו הקדושים
וגם הם יפתחו לנו שערי תפלה
ויכניסוה לפנים מהפרגוד ובזה
נפש ברכה תדושן ירצה הרצון
150 והתאוה שיש לאדם לברך וליחד
תשבע בדשן עליון ואלהינו
מרחם המרווה מרצונו לחוסים
בו גם הוא יורה כפי רצון
ותאות המתפלל והמיחד: וכפי
155 כוונת הצדיק במעשיו ובשבחיו
בעודו בעולם הזה כדוגמא

ing as an intermediary between the Great Name and 130R the Appellation.[3] And the angel Metatron, who is among the angels like the heart in the body,[A][ii] is called the Prince of the Two Faces,[I] as he is the prince over these two aspects in the lower worlds.

Since we lack the power and strength, due to 135R our limited knowledge, to properly unify [the divine realms] in our prayers,[A] perhaps they instituted for us to consult with the Patriarchs, the arrangers of prayers,[2] when we say "But I, in the abundance of Your kindness..." [Psalms 5:8]—to invoke their merit 140R before the Blessed One, that it might be a stronghold for us in the time of prayer. Thus we may merit to unify and rectify in a manner similar to what they would accomplish through their prayers. And the Holy One, blessed be He, who rewards good inten- 145R tion as if it were action, will complete through us according to our intention, which is to unify and awaken the Supernal Will in a manner resembling what our holy ancestors did. They too will open for us the gates of prayer and bring it within the divine 150R curtain [Pargod].[3] Through this, "the soul of blessing will be satisfied"—meaning that the desire and longing that a person has to bless and unify will be satiated with supernal abundance. And our merciful God, who satisfies those who take refuge in Him with 155R
His will, will also direct [the divine flow] according to the desire and longing of the one who prays and

[A] Or: "who is among the angels as the heart is in the body" — This slight rewording better conveys the simile that positions Metatron's function in the angelic hierarchy as analogous to the heart's central role in the body's functioning.

[B] Or: "And because we do not possess the power and strength, due to our deficient knowledge, to perform proper unifications in our prayers" — This alternate translation is more literal and retains the technical language of 'performing unifications' (ליחד), which refers specifically to the kabbalistic practice of unifying divine names and attributes through prayer.

[2] The 'Great Name' refers to the Tetragrammaton (YHVH), while 'the Appellation' refers to the divine name Adonai (Lord) used to replace the pronunciation of YHVH in prayer.

[3] In Kabbalistic tradition, Metatron is considered to have two aspects or 'faces'—one facing upward toward the divine realm and one facing downward toward the created worlds, allowing him to serve as the perfect intermediary.

[4] This refers to the Jewish tradition that the three daily prayer services were instituted by the biblical Patriarchs: Abraham (morning), Isaac (afternoon), and Jacob (evening).

[5] The Pargod is a mystical concept representing the divine veil or curtain that separates the divine presence from the lower spiritual realms. Only the most worthy prayers can penetrate this barrier.

[ii] Metatron is compared to the heart in the body—just as the heart circulates blood throughout the body, Metatron circulates divine influence throughout the angelic realms. This metaphor appears in several kabbalistic texts to explain Metatron's central role in mediating divine energy.

[iii] The author suggests that the rabbis who arranged the prayer liturgy instituted references to the Patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) so that their merit would assist our prayers in ascending to the divine realms, compensating for our own spiritual limitations.

ההיא תהיה שבח מלאך מזלו
המהלל אחר מותו. וכמו ששלוחי
צבור בוונתן לתקון קהלם עם
כל לעדת ישראל ומהבל פיהם
יתהוה מציאות חדש כמו מלאך
כלול מכל בחינות הנשמות
הקהל ההוא[ii] ע״ד ההוא יהיה
התעוררות המלאך אחר מותם.
עוד חשבתי כי טוב לשליח צבור
בקוראו בני הקהל לספר תורה
יכוין להדביק נפשותם ברוחניות
התורה עץ החיים שבתוך גן
עליון וזה בכוונת יעמוד בבוד
ר׳ פלוני בי הנשמה נקראת
כבוד כדכתיב למען יזמרך
כבוד[i] ויכוין כי נשמתו תאיר
ותתדבק למעלה בעץ החיים
כמו שגופו נאחד למטה לקרא
בתורה. ואוחז בעמוד התורה
כי עץ חיים היא למחזיקים בה
ולזה תהיה כוונת שניהם ואולי
זה יהיה מנהג האומרים לעולה
בכבוד. ובנשיקת התורה יכוין
להדביק רוחו ברוחניותה וזה
מלבד שאר כוונות רמות אשר
באו בספרי המקובלים לעולה

unifies.

According to the intention of the righteous person in his deeds and praises while in this world, so will be the praise of his guardian angel who glorifies [God] after his death. Just as the prayer leaders direct their intention toward rectifying their congregation along with the entire community of Israel, and from the breath of their mouths a new entity is formed, like an angel[A] comprising all the soul aspects of that congregation, in this manner will be the arousal of the angel after their death.

Furthermore, I thought it would be good for the prayer leader, when calling members of the congregation to the Torah,[1] to intend to attach their souls to the spirituality of the Torah, the Tree of Life within the supernal garden. This is the intention of "Let the honor of Rabbi So-and-so arise," for the soul is called "honor,"[2] as it is written: "That glory may sing praise to You" [Psalms 30:13]. He should intend that his soul will shine and cleave above to the Tree of Life, just as his body is united below to read from the Torah, grasping the pillar of the Torah, for "it is a tree of life to those who hold fast to it" [Proverbs 3:18]. This should be the intention of both [the prayer leader and the one called up], and perhaps this is the custom of those who say to the [A] Or: "and from the breath of their mouths a new existence is created, like an angel" — The term 'מציאות' (metziyut) in kabbalistic contexts often refers to a complete existence or being rather than just an entity, suggesting the profound creative power attributed to prayer in forming new spiritual realities.

[1] The author is providing a mystical interpretation of the ritual of calling people up for Torah readings (aliyot), suggesting that this physical act has profound spiritual significance in connecting souls to divine wisdom.

[2] The identification of the soul with 'kavod' (honor/glory) is significant in Kabbalah, as it connects the human soul with the divine attribute of Kavod (Glory), suggesting the soul's divine origin and nature.

[i] This presents a remarkable kabbalistic concept that the collective prayer of a congregation creates a new angelic entity composed of the spiritual aspects of all participants. This spiritual creation persists even after the individuals who formed it have died.

[ii] The author explains that when someone is called to the Torah with the phrase 'let the honor (kavod) of so-and-so arise,' this has a deeper meaning because 'kavod' (honor) is also a term for the soul, as supported by the verse from Psalms 30:13.

[i] Cf. Pirkei Heichalot — The passage draws on Heichalot literature's concept of heavenly gates and the Pargod (divine curtain) that separates the divine presence from lower realms, through which prayers must pass | Cf. Zohar III:132a — The text draws on Zoharic concepts regarding how the breath of prayer creates spiritual entities and how human intentions below influence divine unifications above | Cf. Ezekiel 1:27 — The text references Chashmal from Ezekiel's vision, which in kabbalah became understood as an intermediary spiritual substance connecting divine realms | Cf. Tikunei Zohar 19 — The passage draws on Tikunei Zohar's depiction of Metatron as mediating between spiritual realms, serving as the 'heart' connecting the upper and lower divine body

[ii] לקרות בתורה:

one who ascends [to the Torah reading] "with honor." When kissing the Torah, one should intend to attach his spirit to its spirituality, and this is in addition to other lofty intentions that appear in the books of the kabbalists for one who ascends to read the Torah. 185R

פרק ל״א

Chapter 31

ידוע כי יש י״ב שרפים ממונים על כל אחד מבתי כנסיות[i] וגם הם יהיו סיוע לכל היחודים הנעשים בהם והשמים יענו את הארץ. ואגב אפרש טעם הנלע״ד על מאי דאמור רבנן שטוב שבכל בית הכנסת יהיו בו י״ב חלונות: ובזה נתן טעם לחלוק סדרי התפלות הנמצאים בתוכנו ספרדים לועזים אשכנזים ליוואנטיני קטאלאני צרפתים והרבה בזה. והנה אין לנו אלא אלוה אחד וכלנו ליה עינינו. אך טעם השתנות זה יהיה שכל אחד מי״ב שבטי ישראל יש לו חלון אחד ברקיע כפי בחינת נשמת שבטו מצד מחנה מיכאל או גבריאל וכו׳ שד׳ מחנות אלו מתחלקים לי״ב. ג׳ בכל סטר בנודע.[ii] וגם שכל נשמות ישראל הם ממוצא אחד דכתיב כל הנשמה תהלל יה ולא כתיב כל הנשמות.[iii] מ״מ נצוצות הקדושה בירידתם למטה ממלכות משם יפרדו לי״ב. וכל שרף מעלה תפלת בני שבטו דרך חלון ומדרגה הקדושה המתווך

It is known that there are twelve seraphim appointed over each synagogue, and they also assist with all the unifications performed in them, and "the heavens shall answer the earth."[1] Incidentally, I will explain what seems to me to be the reason for what our Rabbis said, that it is good for every synagogue to have twelve windows: This also provides a reason for the division of prayer orders found among us—Sephardim, those speaking foreign languages, Ashkenazim, Levantines, Catalans, French, and many others like these. Indeed, we have but one God, and all our eyes look to Him. However, the reason for these variations is that each of the twelve tribes of Israel has one window in the firmament according to the soul-quality of its tribe from the side of the camp of Michael or Gabriel, etc., as these four camps divide into twelve, three in each direction, as is known. And although all the souls of Israel come from one source, as it is written "Let every soul (singular) praise the Lord"[2] and not "all souls" (plural), nevertheless, the sparks of holiness, in their descent below from Malkhut, separate into twelve divisions. Each seraph raises the prayers of members of its tribe through the window and holy level that serves as intermediary for its soul. For this reason, it is appropriate that there be twelve windows in the synagogue.[3] Twelve seraphim are 5R 10R 15R 20R 25R

[1] This is a biblical phrase from Hosea 2:23, recontextualized here to describe the mystical correspondence between heavenly and earthly prayer.

[2] From Psalm 150:6. The author draws a mystical insight from the grammatical form, noting that the Hebrew uses the singular 'neshamah' rather than plural 'neshamot', suggesting the essential unity of all Jewish souls.

[1] The recommendation for twelve windows in a synagogue derives from Talmudic sources (Berakhot

[ii] The concept of twelve seraphim presiding over synagogues connects physical places of worship with celestial architecture, reflecting the kabbalistic principle that earthly structures mirror heavenly ones.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic arrangement of the twelve tribes in four groups of three, corresponding to the four directions and the four camps of angels mentioned in Numbers 2.

[i] The author uses a grammatical observation about Psalm 150:6 using the singular "soul" rather than plural "souls" to support the mystical concept that all Jewish souls derive from a single source before differentiating.

לנשמתו. ועם זה הטעם נכון
שבבית הכנסת יהיו י״ב חלונות.
ממונים בכל בית הכנסת י״ב
שרפים נגד שבטי יה ולי״ב צנורי
שם ההוי״ה. ויש בכל ב״ה סוד
פני אדם הנשמות הקהל היושבים
לצד מזרח ופני אריה בסוד
היושבים לצד דרום. וכן פני
שור בסוד היושבים לצד צפון.
ופני נשר בסוד היושבים לצד
מערב. ומתחלק כל צד לשלש
בחינות נגד י״ב שרפים נגד
י״ב גבולי אלכסון ושליח צבור
השושבין ביניהם ירמוז לכללות
כלם יחד נגד בחינת הי״ג מקור
לכלם על כן אין לשנות מטבע
תפלתו שלמדוהו אבותיו כי אלו
ואלו דברי אלהים חיים[i] וכל
המשנה ידו על התחתונה.
ואמרי׳ בירושלמי שלח להו
רבי ייסא אע״פ ששלחנו לכם
סדר המועדות פי׳ בתפלות אל
תשנו מנהג אבותיכם נוחי נפש.
ואין ללמוד מקצת בני דורות
אחרונים ששינו סדר תפלתם
מלועז לספרד או איפכא[ii] דמבר
נש זעיר לא ילפין כדאמרי׳
בירושלמי מה את סבור ילפין
עובדא מינך ואפי׳ קביעות
מקום מיוחד בבית הכנסת
צריך לתפלה וזה כדי שיבואו
המלאכים והנשמות באותו ועד
כמנהגם וברבים יהיו עמו כל
שכן שאין להתפלל בב״ה אלא
סדר התפלה הנהגה שם כי כל
הבל קדוש מאחז פני כסא במקום
הראוי ומכוון לו ועם שונים appointed in each synagogue, corresponding to the tribes of the Lord and to the twelve channels of the Divine Name. In every synagogue exists the mystery of the "face of man"—the souls of the congregation sitting toward the east, and the "face of the lion"—those sitting toward the south. Similarly, the "face of the ox"—those sitting toward the north, and the "face of the eagle"—those sitting toward the west. Each side divides into three aspects, corresponding to the twelve seraphim, the twelve diagonal boundaries, and the prayer leader, the attendant among them, symbolizes the unity of them all together, corresponding to the thirteenth aspect, the source of them all. Therefore, one should not change the pattern of prayer that one's ancestors taught, for "these and these are the words of the living God," and whoever changes, the disadvantage is his.[1] As we say in the Jerusalem Talmud, Rabbi Yisa sent to them: "Even though we sent you the order of festivals," meaning regarding prayers, "do not change the custom of your ancestors of blessed memory." One should not learn from some members of recent generations who changed their prayer order from foreign to Sephardic or vice versa, for one should not learn from an insignificant person, as they say in the Jerusalem Talmud: "Do you think they will learn conduct from you?" Even a fixed special place in the synagogue is necessary for prayer, so that the angels and souls will come to that assembly according to their custom, and "with a multitude they shall be with him." All the more so, one should not pray in a synagogue except according to the prayer order practiced there, for every holy breath grasps the face of the Throne in its proper and designated place, and "with those who change, do not mix." Even regarding one's father's occupation, our Rabbis said that a son 31a), but the author provides a mystical explanation connecting these architectural features to cosmic channels.

[2]This is a play on the Talmudic expression 'kol ha-meshaneh yado al ha-tachtonah' (whoever changes, the lower hand is his), meaning they are at a disadvantage in legal disputes. Here it suggests spiritual disadvantage from changing prayer customs.

[ii]This phrase, originally from the Talmud regarding disagreements between the schools of Hillel and Shammai, is repurposed here to validate diverse prayer traditions as all having divine legitimacy, provided they maintain ancestral continuity.

[iii]This refers to historical shifts in prayer customs, particularly after the Spanish Expulsion (1492) when some communities changed their liturgical traditions. The author views such changes negatively, seeing them as breaking cosmic correspondences.

אל תתערב.[iii] ואפי׳ מאומנות
אביו אמרו רבנן שאל ישנה בנו
כל שכן סדר תפלתו בי אולי
סדר התפלה שלמד בקטנותו
מפי אבותיו ומוריו היא מוקבלת
לנצוץ נשמתו מד׳ מחנות הנזכר
דאינון תריסר משריין קדישין
דאכניש משה ליחדא רתיכא
עילאה קדישא דכתיב ויקהל
משה את כל עדת בני ישראל
לאעלאה מטרוניתא לאתחברא
באבהן ובפרשה תרומה בפרק
שלישי מספרא דצניעותא סדר
הכוונה לכל תפלה ובקשה ואמר
כי השאלות ששואלים מהקב״ה
הם בא׳ מתשעה אופנים יעויין
שם. וכתוב בתקון י׳ כי שלש
חיילות מקב״ה באות בתוך
עם ישראל בכח זמירות שירות
ותושבחות. ובתקון י״ב מוכיח
דשערי דמעה לא ננעלו[i] מפ׳
ותפתח ותראהו והנה נער בוכה
במאי אפתח ליה בדמעה וזהו
בבכי יבואו בזכות בכיה יתאספו
מהגלות: ואמר כי יש היכל
למעלה גנוז שאינו נפתח אלא
בנגון וליה ביון אלישע בשלש
נגונין שנגן. והנשמה נהנית
מהנגון לפי שהיא רגילה בנגונין
בשיר של מ״ה ושיר הגלגלים
ובהיותה בגוף ושמעת נגון נהנית
כמו שהיתה רגילה בהיותה
דבוקה ביסודה ומרוב הערבות
ראויה לשרות עליה רוח אלהים
כפי הנהגתה ויסודה הראשון
ולכן דוד דלית ליה מגרמיה

should not change from it; how much more so regarding the order of prayer, for perhaps the prayer order one learned in childhood from one's ancestors and teachers is suited to the spark of one's soul from the four aforementioned camps, which are the twelve holy encampments that Moses gathered to unify the holy supernal chariot, as it is written: "And Moses assembled all the congregation of the children of Israel"—to bring the Matronita (Divine Presence) to unite with the Patriarchs. In Parashat Terumah, in the third chapter of Safra D'Tzniuta, the order of intention for every prayer and request is explained, saying that the requests we ask of the Holy One, blessed be He, are in one of nine ways—see there. And it is written in the tenth Tikkun that three hosts from the Holy One, blessed be He, come among the people of Israel through the power of songs, hymns, and praises. The twelfth Tikkun proves that the gates of tears are not locked, from the verse: "And she opened it and saw him, and behold, the boy was crying"—with what did she open it? With tears.[1] This is the meaning of "with weeping they shall come"—by virtue of crying they will be gathered from exile.

He also said that there is a palace above that is hidden and opens only through melody, and this is what Elisha intended with the three melodies that were played. The soul derives pleasure from melody because it is accustomed to melodies in the song of MA"H[2] (the Divine Name) and the song of the celestial spheres. When in a body and hearing melody, it derives pleasure as it was accustomed when it was attached to its source. Due to the great sweetness, it is fitting for the spirit of God to rest upon it according to its conduct and original foundation. Therefore, David, who had nothing of his own,[3] needed to [1] This is a kabbalistic interpretation of Exodus 2:6, where Pharaoh's daughter opens Moses' basket. The Hebrew verb 'va-tiftach' (she opened) is connected to the concept of opening heavenly gates through tears.

[2] MA"H (מ״ה) refers to the divine name YHVH spelled out in a specific way that equals the numerical value 45. The song of MA"H describes celestial harmonies associated with this divine name.

[1] This refers to a kabbalistic concept that David represented the sefirah of Malkhut, which has no

[i] This is a creative interpretation of Proverbs 24:21, which literally means "Do not associate with those who change," typically understood as warning against rebels. Here it's applied to liturgical consistency.

[ii] This references the Talmudic teaching (Bava Metzia 59a) that while the gates of prayer may sometimes be closed, the gates of tears are never locked. The author cites Tikkunei Zohar as proving this from the biblical story of Moses' rescue.

הוצרך לעורר עצמו במיני נגון להמשיך חיים למדתו. ויש היכל אור שנפתח באור התורה. ויש היכל הנבואה שאינו נפתח אלא לחכם גבור ועשיר.[ii] ויש היכל היראה שאינו נפתח רק למי שיש לו יראה. ויש היכל שאינו נפתח אלא לעניים בעטוף בציצית ותפילין. ויש היכל צדיקים שאינו נפתח אלא להם וזהו שער צדיק חי עלמין. והנגון כשעולה עולה בו׳ מדרגות. וכן כשיורד יורד בו׳. ועליו נאמר שוקיו עמודי שש. ועשרה נימין הם סוד העשר אצבעות הבוטשים בנגון. וכן חמשה בכנור של חמש או שש. עוד בנגון נרמז שבעה ושבעה מוצקות וזהו ודוד מנגן ביד. וש״צ המנגן בתפלתו מעלה השבינה לפני המלך העליון מקושטת בשבע רעותיה[i] המובאות לה על ידי התחתונים. ובעלותה כמה מלאכים וכמה מחנות וכמה נשמות עולים עמה שהם נימין דילה.[ii] וכמה מלאכים ונשמות מאירים לפניה הנקראים עיני ה׳. וכמה מצות עולים לפניה וכמה מלאכים עולים עמה הנקראים אזני ה׳ הממונים על קבלת התפלות. עוד עמה עולים אותם הנקראים פני ה׳ מאירים בכמה גוונים ורוחין ואישים הממונים על ריח ועשן הקרבן והם בעלי החוטם. וכן עולין מארי דקלין ודבור הפה. ומארי arouse himself with various melodies to draw life to his attribute. There is a palace of light that opens with the light of Torah. There is a palace of prophecy that opens only to the wise, strong, and wealthy. There is a palace of fear that opens only to one who possesses fear. There is a palace that opens only to the poor who wrap themselves in tzitzit and tefillin. And there is a palace of the righteous that opens only to them, and this is "the gate of the righteous, the living of worlds." When melody ascends, it rises through six levels, and when it descends, it descends through six levels. Of this it is said, "His legs are pillars of marble."[1] The ten strings represent the mystery of the ten fingers that strike in melody, as well as the five on a harp of five or six strings. Additionally, melody alludes to "seven and seven spouts,"[2] and this is "and David played with his hand." The prayer leader who chants in his prayer elevates the Divine Presence before the supernal King, adorned with her seven companions brought to her by those below. As she ascends, many angels, many hosts, and many souls ascend with her, which are her strings. Many angels and souls shine before her, called "the eyes of the Lord." Many commandments ascend before her, and many angels ascend with her, called "the ears of the Lord," appointed over receiving prayers. Furthermore, those called "the face of the Lord" ascend with her, shining with many colors. Spirits and fiery beings appointed over the scent and smoke of the sacrifice, who are the masters of the nose, also ascend. Similarly, the masters of voices and speech of the mouth ascend, as do the masters of the neck called "ishim" (fiery beings), the masters of hands, the masters of the body, the masters of the covenant, and the masters of the legs—all ascend with her. When she is in her palace, all the prophets ascend there, light of its own but receives from the higher sefirot, just as the moon receives light from the sun.

[2]This is a quote from Song of Songs 5:15, which in kabbalistic interpretation refers to the divine attribute of Netzach and Hod (Victory and Splendor), the divine 'legs' that support the cosmic structure.
[3]This refers to Zechariah 4:2, describing the Temple menorah with seven lamps and seven spouts to each lamp. In kabbalistic interpretation, these represent the seven lower sefirot and their channels.

[i]These three qualities—wisdom, strength, and wealth—are traditionally associated with those worthy of prophecy, based on Jeremiah 9:22-23.
[ii]This refers to the seven handmaidens or attributes that accompany the Shekhinah (Divine Presence), often associated with the seven lower sefirot or the seven days of creation.
[iii]The metaphor of souls and angels as "strings" of the Divine Presence draws from the image of musical instruments, where each string produces a distinct sound but together create harmony.

דצואר הנקראים אישים. ומאר׳ דידין ומאר׳ דגופא. ומאר׳ דברית. ומאר׳ דרגלין כולם עולים עמה. וכשהיא בהיכלה כל הנביאים עולים שם ודופקים ואומרים אדני שפתי תפתח. עיין מזה בתקון י״ח מדף כ״ח עד דף ל״ז כי יערב ויבוסם לכל קורא בצדק ואשרי המכוין בתפלתו לתקון כזה: [i] knock, and say, "O Lord, open my lips."[3] Examine this in the eighteenth Tikkun, from page 28 to page 37, for it will be pleasant and sweet to all who call in righteousness, and fortunate is one who directs his intention in prayer toward such rectification. 140R

והבל העולה מהמתפלל מעלה ה״א העליונה לגבי יו״ד ועולה על ידי הקול שהוא וא״ו הבל היורד היא ה״א תתאה שעושה הדבור קריבות מכל ההבלים ומיחד אור ישר בחוזר וחוזר בישר עד אין תכלית. וקי״ל ודבו״ר יחד [ii] וכשאדם מוציא הבלים ודבורים בתפלתו כמה עופין פתחין גדפייהו לקבלא לון. הדא הוא דכתיב כי עוף השמים יוליך את הקול [iii] ומהם

The breath rising from one who prays elevates the upper Hei toward the Yod,[1] and ascends through the voice, which is the Vav. The descending breath is the lower Hei, which creates closeness from all the breaths and unifies direct light with reflected light,[2] and reflected with direct, without end. And we have received the tradition that voice and speech are united, and when a person emits breaths and words in prayer, many birds spread their wings to receive them. This is as it is written: "For the bird of the heavens shall carry the voice," and from these the Holy One, blessed be He, creates worlds. 145R 150R

[1] This phrase from Psalm 51:17 is incorporated into daily Jewish prayer as the opening line of the Amidah prayer. Here it's reimagined as the words spoken by prophetic souls seeking access to the divine palace.

[2] This describes kabbalistic letter mysticism where the four letters of God's name (YHVH) represent cosmic forces. Prayer reunites these forces, particularly joining the 'feminine' Hei with the 'masculine' Yod.

[3] A key kabbalistic concept describing how divine energy flows downward (direct light) and then returns upward (reflected light), creating a circuit of spiritual energy.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The passage draws heavily from Zoharic concepts about prayer, angels, and the Divine Presence. The imagery of the divine chariot with its four faces and the structure of heavenly realms all derive from the Zohar's mystical cosmology. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author explicitly cites several sections from Tikkunei Zohar to substantiate his claims about the divine hosts that come among Israel during prayer and about the gates of tears not being locked. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — The author cites the Jerusalem Talmud to support his argument about not changing ancestral prayer customs, showing how rabbinic authority backs mystical practice. | Cf. Safra D'Tzniuta — The reference to Safra D'Tzniuta in Parashat Terumah points to an esoteric text within the Zoharic corpus that discusses the order of intention for prayers, indicating advanced kabbalistic practice. | Cf. Biblical Four Living Creatures — The four faces (man, lion, ox, eagle) correspond to Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot and are mapped onto the synagogue layout, transforming ordinary space into a cosmic template. | Cf. Story of Elisha and the musician — The reference to Elisha and the three melodies alludes to the biblical story where Elisha called for a musician to help him prophesy, supporting the author's claim about music opening heavenly gates. | Cf. Psalm 24:7 — The description of prophets knocking and saying "O Lord, open my lips" echoes Psalm 24:7 "Lift up your heads, O gates" and Psalm 51:15 "O Lord, open my lips," combining these prayer motifs to describe celestial worship.

[i] The abbreviation וקי״ל stands for 'וקיימא לן' (and we have received the tradition), a rabbinical phrase indicating an accepted teaching.

[ii] This is a quote from Ecclesiastes 10:20, reinterpreted mystically to describe how prayers are carried through spiritual realms.

בורא הקב״ה עולמות. ואמרו
בתקון כ׳[iv] שבינה עולה אל
המלך בעשרה זכרונות ובעשרה
מלכיות ובעשרה שופרות שהם
ג׳ פעמים עשר ועשרה כתות
דמלאכין יתערון לגבייהו
וסלקין לגבי עשר ספירות
ונגונים סלקין מינייהו מרובעים
מסטרא דרביע בד׳ חיות וחיות
קטנות עם גדולות הם שמנה שם
הוי״ה ואדנו״ת יחד. ואמר
כי הנגון בד׳ פנים ולמה תקן
דוד בנור עם שמנה נימין. ויש
נגון העולה בו׳ ויש נגון העולה
בב׳. ויש בחמש כגון ה׳. ויש
בשש דהוא אבגי״תץ.[i] והוא
או״ו. ויש שעולה בג׳ תש״ת
תקיעה לחסד שברים עולה
בנגון הקול לתרועה. תרועה
עולה לעמוד האמצעי. ביחוד
המלך עם המלכה יתעוררו
כל מיני נגון. הה״ד[ii] הללוהו
בתקע שופר הללוהו בנבל
וכנור. ושופר הוא שבינתא:
ולכן מנהגן של ישראל לנגן
בפה בבתי כנסיותיהם בשבתות
וימים טובים זמני היחוד[iii] אך
צריך התעוררות יותר חזק בי״ט
לעורר האושפיזין שהם מקראי

They said in the twentieth Tikkun that Binah ascends to the King through ten Remembrances, ten Kingships, and ten Shofar blasts,[3] which are three times ten, and ten classes of angels are aroused toward them and ascend to the ten Sefirot. Melodies rise from them in four-fold patterns from the aspect of the four Chayot, and small Chayot with large ones correspond to the eight letters of the Divine Names YHVH and ADNY combined.[1] 155R 160R

It is said that melody has four aspects, and this is why David established the harp with eight strings. There is melody that ascends through six, and melody that ascends through two. There is melody through five, corresponding to the letter Hei, and through six, which is ABGITATZ, corresponding to Vav.[2] There is also melody that ascends through three: TASHAT—the Tekiah corresponds to Chesed,[3] Shevarim ascends in the melody of the voice to Teruah, and Teruah ascends to the central pillar. In the unification of the King with the Queen, all types of melody are awakened. This is what is meant by "Praise Him with the blast of the shofar, praise Him with lute and harp." And the shofar represents the Shekhinah. 165R 170R 175R

Therefore, it is the custom of Israel to sing vocally in their synagogues on Sabbaths and festivals, times of unification. However, stronger arousal is needed on festivals to awaken the heavenly guests,[4] who are the "holy convocations" of the supernal holiness of 180R

[1] References the three special sections of the Rosh Hashanah Musaf prayer, each containing ten biblical verses that invoke divine remembrance, sovereignty, and the shofar respectively.

[2] These two divine names (the Tetragrammaton and Adonai) together contain eight Hebrew letters, corresponding to the eight strings of David's harp and representing the complete circuit of divine energy.

[3] ABGITATZ is the first of seven groups of six letters each that form the 42-letter divine name. Here it's connected to the letter Vav (value 6), emphasizing its relationship to the six days of creation and the six directions of space.

[4] The text establishes correspondences between shofar sounds and divine attributes: the long, unbroken tekiah blast connects to Chesed (Loving-kindness), representing wholeness and divine benevolence.

[1] In Kabbalistic tradition, during festivals, spiritual 'guests' (the ushpizin) visit from higher realms. These include biblical figures and divine energies that require active invitation through song and celebration.

[iii] Refers to the twentieth section of Tikkunei Zohar, a foundational kabbalistic text consisting of seventy interpretations of the first word of the Torah.

[iv] The first word of the 42-letter divine name, a mystical sequence used in advanced kabbalistic practices and prayer intentions.

[v] Abbreviation for 'הדא הוא דכתיב' (this is what is written), a common rabbinic phrase introducing a scriptural proof text.

[i] In Kabbalah, Sabbaths and festivals are considered special times when divine masculine and feminine aspects unite, creating heightened spiritual potential.

קדש העליון שהוא קדושת השבת ולקדשם. אבל השבת הקב״ה מקדש ישראל בנזכר ולכן נאמר שמחה במועדים אך קדושת השבת מסתפק מעצמו: ומכוון הנגון בפה בכל יום טוב ובפרט ביום שבועות שהיחוד מתמיד כל היום ובשמיני חג העצרת שהוא גמר היחוד מהמועדים שעברו מיום ר״ה עד אז כנדרש אצלנו. מזה נראה כמה כח הנגון להשלמת יחוד העליון ונתבאר בתקונים במזמור הללו אל בקדשו כל כלי זמר הנזכרים בו על סדר עשר ספירות וכל הנשמה הם חכמה ובינה שבהם תהיה הגאולה לוא״ו וה״א שבשם ואמרו עוד בתקון כ״ב כי ציור נשמותיהם של ישראל חקוקה בכסא. ובעת שהיא מתעוררת למטה בתפלה הכסא מתעורר למעלה וציור הרוח חקוק במלאכים וכשהוא מתעורר למטה בתפלה המלאכים מתעוררים למעלה. והנפש היא חקוקה בד׳ פינות העולם ובזמן שתתעורר בתפלה או מצוה ד׳ פינות העולם מתעוררים עמה. עיין בסוף תקון מ״ה סוד עליית וירידת התפלה לצדיק לבינוני ולרשע והקול סליק והדבור נחית ומלאכי אלהים סלקין ונחתין ביה. עוד בר״מ פרשה כי תצא דף רמ״ג. כי בקול רנה ובקול תפלה ובקול שופר מתקשר יצר הרע תחת יצר טוב. באדרת האזינו אמרו מאן דבעי דירכין מלכא אודניה לגביה יסלסל ברישיה דמלכא היינו תקון ומיתוק הדינים הנרמזים בשערות ויפנה שערי מעל אודנוהי וישמע ליה מלכא בכל מה דבעי. ובספר

the Sabbath, and to sanctify them. But on the Sabbath, the Holy One, blessed be He, sanctifies Israel as mentioned, and therefore "rejoicing" is specified for festivals, while the sanctity of the Sabbath is self-sufficient. 185R

The melody with the mouth is particularly directed on each festival, especially on Shavuot when the unification continues throughout the day, and on Shemini Atzeret, which is the completion of the unification from the festivals that passed from Rosh Hashanah until then, as we have explained. From this, we see how powerful melody is for completing the supernal unification. This is explained in the Tikkunim regarding the psalm "Praise God in His sanctuary," where all the musical instruments mentioned correspond to the order of the ten Sefirot.[1] "All souls" refers to Chokhmah and Binah, through which will come redemption to the Vav and Hei of the Divine Name. 190R 195R 200R

They said further in the twenty-second Tikkun that the image of the souls of Israel is engraved on the Throne.[2] When it is aroused below in prayer, the Throne is aroused above. The image of the Ruach (spirit) is engraved in the angels, and when it is aroused below in prayer, the angels are aroused above. The Nefesh (vital soul) is engraved in the four corners of the world, and when it is aroused in prayer or through a commandment, the four corners of the world are aroused with it. 205R 210R

See at the end of the forty-fifth Tikkun the secret of the ascent and descent of prayer for the righteous, the intermediate, and the wicked—how the voice ascends and the speech descends, and "the angels of God ascend and descend through it." Also, in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ki Tetze, page 243, it states that through the voice of joy, the voice of prayer, and the voice of the shofar,[3] the evil inclination is bound beneath the good inclination. 215R 220R

In the Idra of Ha'azinu, they said: "One who wishes the King to incline His ear to him should arrange the King's head"—meaning to rectify and sweeten the judgments symbolized by the hairs, and [2] Psalm 150 lists multiple instruments which kabbalists interpret as corresponding to the ten divine emanations (sefirot), suggesting that different types of music activate different spiritual channels.

[3] Reflects the mystical concept that human souls have their root in the divine realm, specifically in God's Throne of Glory, creating an intrinsic connection that is activated during prayer.

[1] These three types of sacred sound create a spiritual technology that helps transform negative forces (the evil inclination) into positive ones, demonstrating how ritual sound can effect cosmic change.

clear the gates above His ears, so the King will hear him in all that he requests. 225R

In Sefer Hasidim, proof is brought in section 728 that every person has a mazal in the firmament, even though "Israel as a collective is not subject to mazal," individually they are. And while one's guardian angel is with him, no harmful entity can approach. Perhaps this refers to the defending angel, and from it emerges the voice announcing when a person's time has come for elevation, decline, death (God forbid), or escape. If even the slender grasses each have an angel from above that sings and thereby helps that grass grow, how much more so for humans, who encompass higher and lower realms. 230R 235R

They said in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 129, that there is an appointed one over the images of the righteous called "Yehodiom." We have elaborated on this subject because it is pleasant, beneficial, and good for encouraging a person. What pertains to our purpose will be explained in the next chapter, with God's help. 240R 245R

החסידים מביא ראיה בסימן תתשכ"ח שלכל אדם יש מזל ברקיע הגם שאין מזל לישראל בכלל אבל בפרט יש.[i] ובעוד מלאך מזלו אצלו אין מזיק יכול להתקרב אליו. ואולי יצדק בו שהוא המלאך מליץ וממנו יוצא הקול שמודיע הגיע זמנו של פלוני[i] לגדולה או לירידה או למות ח"ו או להמלט. ואם אפי' העשבים דקים יש לכל אחד מהם מלאך מלמעלה המשורר ובזה מגדל העשב ההוא כל שכן לאדם הכולל עליונים ותחתונים. ואמרו בזהר פרשת תרומה דף קכ"ט שממונה יש על הדיוקנאות של צדיקים הנקרא יהודיעם והארכנו בדרוש הזה להיותו ערב ומועיל וטוב לזרז האדם ומה שנוגע לכוונתנו הוא המתבאר לפנינו בפרק הבא בע"ה:[ii]

פרק ל"ב

Chapter 32

כשמגיע זמן האדם למות הוא יודע ומכיר המתים הבאים לקראתו ואם זוכה משיג גם כן בניצוץ השכינה ובכבודה

When a person's time to die approaches, he knows and recognizes the deceased who come to greet him,[1] and if he is meritorious, he may also perceive a spark of the Divine Presence and its glory.[A] For

[A] Or: "and if he merits, he also attains [perception of] a spark of the Divine Presence and

[1] This reflects the Jewish mystical belief that departed souls come to welcome and guide newly deceased souls into the afterlife.

[i] References the Talmudic concept that while the Jewish people collectively transcend astrological influence, individuals may still be affected by celestial forces.

[ii] Refers to the kabbalistic belief that celestial announcements herald major life transitions, including death, based on Talmudic statements that deaths of the righteous are proclaimed in heaven.

[iii] Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:20 — This verse is cited to demonstrate how prayers ascend through spiritual realms via angelic intermediaries, comparing them to birds that carry human utterances heavenward. | Cf. Ezekiel's vision of the Chariot — References the four celestial beings from Ezekiel's throne vision (Ezekiel 1), which in Kabbalah represent fundamental cosmic forces through which divine energy flows into creation. | Cf. Psalm 150 — This psalm is interpreted kabbalistically as describing how different musical instruments and sounds correspond to different sefirot and spiritual channels through which divine unification is achieved. | Cf. Genesis 28:12 — Alludes to Jacob's ladder vision, reinterpreted here to describe how prayer creates a bidirectional channel between human and divine realms, with angels serving as intermediaries carrying prayers up and divine influence down. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author cites specific sections of Tikkunei Zohar, a major kabbalistic text that provides systematic interpretations of Torah through the lens of the sefirot and divine names. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Shabbat 156a — References the Talmudic teaching 'ein mazal l'Yisrael' (Israel has no mazal/astrological destiny) while noting that individually, each person does have a spiritual destiny or guardian force.

כי אז בהתבטל כח גופניי אין
הראיה והשמיעה באמצעות
הכלים בעין ואזן אלא בעין
הנפש לבד[iii] והיא הראיה
והשמיעה האמיתית והנכונה
וזהו תוסף רוחם יגועון.[i] ומלאך
מזלו כאשר בארנו למעלה הוא
רואה מלאך המות כאלו מלא
עינים.[ii] וזה גרם לנו אכילת עץ
הדעת טוב ורע דכתיב ביה וכי
תאוה הוא לעינים פי׳ לראות
מ״ה שהוא מלא עינים:[iii] ואולי
בחינת היותו מלא עינים יורה
כי שט בארץ ומתהלך בה כמו
שאמר הוא עצמו משוט בארץ.
ירצה אז בקטרוגו כנהוג לו
שבני אדם בכל מקום נותנים לו
כח בעונותיהם כי מלאה הארץ
חמס ושוד. ובכל מקום יש לו
שליטה מחמת רבוי העבירות.
ועל כן הוא מלא עינים כי יש לו
צפייה בכל אדם כי אין צדיק
בארץ שלא יחטא. הנה כי בדמות
פרצופו ג״כ מקטרג לפני הקב״ה
[iv]

at that moment, as physical strength wanes,[B] sight and hearing no longer function through bodily organs like the eye and ear, but rather through the eye of the soul alone, which is the true and proper sight and hearing.[1] This is the meaning of "You take away their breath, they expire" (Psalms 104:29). And his guardian angel, as we explained above, sees the Angel of Death as though it were full of eyes. This resulted from our eating of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, about which it is written, "and that it was a delight to the eyes" (Genesis 3:6)—meaning to see that which is full of eyes.

its glory" — The term 'משיג' has connotations of intellectual or spiritual attainment rather than merely perception, suggesting a more active achievement of mystical insight.

[B] Or: "for then, as bodily power is nullified" — This more literal translation captures the stronger sense of complete nullification (התבטל) of physical faculties rather than merely their weakening.

[2] The author presents spiritual perception as superior to physical perception, a common theme in mystical texts across traditions.

[i] This passage contains an important kabbalistic concept that as the physical body weakens at death, the soul's perceptive faculties become more acute, enabling perception of spiritual realities normally hidden during life.

[ii] This is a quote from Psalm 104:29, 'You take away their breath, they expire.'

[iii] The concept of the Angel of Death being 'full of eyes' appears in rabbinic literature, particularly in the Talmud (Avodah Zarah 20b), suggesting its omniscience regarding human actions and mortality.

[iv] The Hebrew 'מ״ה' (MA"H) has a numerical value of 45 and often refers to a divine name in Kabbalah. Here it appears to connect the primordial sin with humanity's desire to perceive divine realities beyond their capacity.

[i] Cf. Talmud, Avodah Zarah 20b — The author draws on this talmudic description to explain the spiritual perceptions of the dying, connecting the Angel of Death's appearance to the primordial sin of eating from the Tree of Knowledge. | Cf. Zohar — The author is working within the Zoharic framework of understanding death as a transition where spiritual perception increases as physical faculties diminish. | Cf. Genesis 3:6 — The author makes an innovative connection between humanity's primordial desire for forbidden sight/knowledge and the dying person's ability to perceive spiritual realities, suggesting that death partially reverses the limitations imposed after Eden.

וכשאדם וחוה עמדו על הרעה שגרמו ידעו כי ערומים הם מלבושי ימיהם שהיו כתנות אור[v] כבתוב בספרא דר״מ[i] בסוד תפלין דמארי עלמא[ii] והיו בו להכנה להוליד נשמות כלן קדושות. ובכתנות עור נתערב טמא בטהור. וכל פגם שיש בו תפיסת ידי אדם קשה לתקן מה שאין כן בשאין בו. וראיה מההרים והאשרות הנעבדות והם ירדו למטה בעונם להתלבש בחצונים ובעלי תאוה המביאים תואנה לעולם אלא שהקב״ה בחסדו עשה להם כתנות עור בסוד תפלין של עור כנדרש אצלנו במקומו. ולנו לדעת כי מעולם לא עלה על דעת אבינו הראשון ועל דעת אשתו חוה שניהם יציר כפיו של הקב״ה אשר נשמתם חצובה בגבהי מרומים כדאיתא בפרשת בראשית ובפ׳ בשלח דף נ״ה ע״א וכן בהרבה מקומות. ולא מלא לבם לעבור על רצון בוראם בעשה ולא תעשה שנצטוו על האכילה ההיא אלא הוסיפו על הצווי וסברו לתקן ולקדש ש״ש בכח אכילתם הקדושה

And when Adam and Eve realized the evil they had caused, they knew they were naked, stripped of their original garments,[2] which had been "garments of light,"[A] as written in the book of Rabbi Moses in the mystery of "the tefillin of the Master of the Universe." These garments had prepared them to produce souls that were entirely holy. But in the "garments of skin,"[A] impurity became mixed with purity. Any defect involving human intervention is difficult to repair,[1] unlike those without human involvement. Evidence of this can be seen in the mountains and sacred trees that were worshipped, which descended below through their sin to clothe themselves in external forces[B] and in those with desire who bring pretexts to the world. However, the Holy One, blessed be He, in His kindness made for them garments of skin according to the mystery of tefillin made of leather, as we have explained elsewhere.

We should understand that it never occurred to our first father or to his wife Eve—both formed by the hands of the Holy One, blessed be He, whose souls were hewn from the heights of heaven, as stated in the portion of Genesis and in the portion of Beshalach page 55a, as well as in many other places—to deliberately violate their Creator's will, the positive and negative commandments they received regarding that eating. Rather, they added to the commandment,[2] thinking to rectify and sanctify God's name

[A] Or: "luminous garments" — The term 'luminous garments' might better convey the mystical radiance implied by the original Hebrew phrase, suggesting spiritual rather than physical garments.

[B] Or: "garments of hide" — 'Garments of hide' emphasizes the material, physical nature that replaced the spiritual garments, highlighting the contrast more explicitly.

[C] Or: "to become clothed in the kelipot (husks of impurity)" — Using the technical kabbalistic term 'kelipot' might better convey the mystical concept being referenced, though it would require the reader to be familiar with kabbalistic terminology.

[1] The original text plays on the double meaning of 'knowing they were naked' (Genesis 3:7), interpreting it as awareness of spiritual rather than merely physical nakedness.

[2] This statement establishes an important kabbalistic principle that human action creates deeper spiritual damage than would occur naturally, making rectification (tikkun) more difficult.

[1] This offers a sympathetic interpretation of Adam and Eve's sin as excessive zeal rather than disobedience, aligning with a rabbinic principle that adding to divine commandments can be problematic (as in the case of Eve adding 'nor touch it' to God's prohibition).

[ii] The Hebrew phrase כתנות אור (garments of light) differs by just one letter from כתנות עור (garments of skin) that appears later in the text. This wordplay is significant in kabbalistic interpretations of Adam and Eve's fall, suggesting their transformation from spiritual to physical beings.

[iii] This likely refers to an esoteric text attributed to Rabbi Moses (possibly Moses de León, traditionally considered the redactor of the Zohar, or Moses Cordovero, another important kabbalist).

[iv] The 'tefillin of the Master of the Universe' is a mystical concept referring to divine emanations. In Kabbalah, human ritual items often correspond to cosmic structures.

שכן נצטוו אכל תאכל לתקון
וסלסול נטיעות הגן בלעיסה
רוחנית להעלות הנאכל למדרגה
העליונה בכח ל״ב שנים נגד ל״ב
נתיבות חכמה העליונה[iii] ששם
היו מוצק ותקון לבריאת כל
הנבראים שכלם בחכמה נעשו
בכח כ״ב אותיות והעשרה
מאמרות שנכלל רוחניות
האותיות בעשר מאמרות שהם
במלכות האדריכל לכל. וכתב
הגאון מורי מפאנו זצ״ל[i] במאמר
חקור דין שלו כי אכל תאכל
היה מ״ע וכל האכילה האמורה
בפסוק הזה בתורה ובמ״ט
הכתוב מדבר. שאלו זכינו
היתה האכילה ההוא נחשבת לנו
כאכילת קדשים וכהנחת תפלין
כמו שהיה מצות פרו ורבו לעין
כל קודם החטא. ואמר כי כן דוד
שהוא חי בגן עדן מקיים עכשיו
המצוה הזאת בכל עת ובאכילה
הזאת הנחש הסביר להם פנים
והיו סבורים לקדש ש״ש ג״כ
למטה במקום הנהגת הטוב והרע
יחד. ודימו להגביר צד הטוב
ולבלע צד הרע שבעין ההוא
אלא שנהפכו עליהם ציריהם
וסברו לתקן וקלקלו שגבר הרע
ונחלש הטוב כי כן צפה מגיד
מראשית אחרית[ii] בצווייו ואמר
כי ביום אכלך ממנו מות תמות שגם שכוונתך תהיה להמליך ש״ש

through their holy eating. For they had been commanded "you may surely eat" in order to rectify and elevate the plantings of the garden through spiritual chewing,[3] raising what was eaten to a higher level through the power of thirty-two teeth, corresponding to the thirty-two paths of supernal wisdom, where all created beings were established and repaired, for all were made with wisdom through the power of the twenty-two letters and the ten utterances, the spirituality of the letters being included in the ten utterances, which are in Malchut, the architect of all. 50R 55R

My teacher, the sage of Fano of blessed memory, wrote in his discourse "Investigating Judgment" that "you may surely eat" was a positive commandment, and all eating mentioned in this verse in the Torah refers to mitzvot. Had we been worthy, that eating would have been considered for us like consuming sacred offerings and like putting on tefillin, just as the commandment to be fruitful and multiply was clearly visible before the sin. He said that David, who lives in the Garden of Eden,[1] now fulfills this commandment at all times. In this eating, the serpent presented a favorable appearance to them, and they thought to sanctify God's name also below, in the place where good and evil are governed together. They imagined they would strengthen the side of good and swallow up the side of evil[2] in that tree, but their circumstances were reversed. They thought to repair, but instead caused damage,[A] as evil prevailed and good was weakened. For thus the One who declares the end from the beginning foresaw in His commandments and said, "for on the day 60R 65R 70R 75R

[A] Or: "intended to rectify but instead corrupted" — The terms 'rectify' and 'corrupted' more precisely convey the kabbalistic concept of tikkun (repair/rectification) and its opposite, which is implied in the original Hebrew.

[2] The concept of 'spiritual chewing' suggests that eating in Eden was meant to be a contemplative, mystical act through which physical matter would be elevated to higher spiritual realms.
[3] This refers to the mystical tradition that King David, unlike other deceased figures, continues to live in a special section of the Garden of Eden rather than dying in the conventional sense.
[4] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening the judgments' (המתקת הדינים), the idea that harsh divine forces can be transformed into benevolence through proper spiritual action.

[i] This creates a correspondence between the 32 human teeth and the 32 paths of wisdom described in the Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early kabbalistic text.
[ii] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist and student of Rabbi Moses Cordovero. The author's reference to him as 'my teacher' suggests a direct intellectual lineage.
[i] This phrase, meaning 'He who declares the end from the beginning,' is drawn from Isaiah 46:10, referring to God's omniscience.

שם ולהגביר צד הטוב והחיים [iii]

you eat of it, you shall surely die," even though your intention will be to enthrone God's name there and to strengthen the side of good and life. 80R

ושיתוקן גם הנהגה זו על ידך
לעת עתה מעשיך לא יהיו רצויים
כי תגביר הדין למעלה והמיתה
למטה וזהו מות תמות.[i] וטעם
מצוה זו היא בטעם האיסור
והמותר שיש לנו שכל ל״ת
שבתורה הוא מפני היות שליטת
סמאל עליו והנהנה ממנו המיתה
הטבעית והרוחנית קופצת עליו
כי סוד האיסור שיש לנו הוא
מה שמתפשטים ענפיו בעולם
הגשמי הזה וכן האיסור לאדם
היה מטעם שליטת ס״מ בענפי
הדעת טוב והיינו רע המתפשט
ועושה פירות ופרי ההוא גורם
המיתה אל הגוף והנפש וחלק
הרע שבעץ הזה אינו לא תאנה
ולא רימון ולא אתרוג ולא חטה
אלא עץ ידוע הנעשה לבוש
וקליפה לשני העצים פנימיים
עץ החיים ועץ הדעת טוב.
כי שלש בחינות הם כנדרש
אצלנו במקום כבודו בשפה

And even though you intended to repair this mode of governance through your actions, at present your deeds will not be pleasing, for they will strengthen judgment above and death below—this is the meaning of "you shall surely die." The reason for this commandment is like the reason for all prohibitions and permissions that we have:[A] every negative commandment in the Torah exists because Samael has dominion over it, and one who derives benefit from it invites natural and spiritual death, for the secret of prohibition that we have is what extends its branches in this physical world. Similarly, the prohibition for Adam was because of Samael's dominion over the branches of the Tree of Knowledge of Good, meaning the evil that spreads and produces fruit—and that fruit causes death to both body and soul. The evil portion of this tree is neither a fig, nor a pomegranate, nor a citron, nor wheat, but rather a known tree that became a garment and shell for the two inner trees:[1] the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good. For there are three aspects, as we have explained in its proper place in clear language, but the Sages compared the order of allusion 85R 90R 95R 100R 105R

[B]Or: "The rationale for this commandment follows the same principle as our understanding of prohibitions and permissions" — This alternate translation captures the comparative nature of the original phrase but uses more natural English phrasing by employing 'rationale' and 'principle' rather than the more literal 'reason' and 'like the reason'.

[1]The concept of 'shells' (קליפות/kelipot) is a fundamental kabbalistic idea referring to the outer layers that conceal divine light. Here, the author is explaining how the forbidden tree functioned as an external covering for deeper spiritual realities.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Bereshit (Genesis) — The text draws on the Zoharic tradition that Adam and Eve initially possessed spiritual 'garments of light' (בתנות אור) that were transformed into physical 'garments of skin' (בתנות עור) after their sin, representing their descent from a purely spiritual to a physical existence. | Cf. Zohar, Beshalach — The author uses this reference to establish the lofty spiritual origins of Adam and Eve, emphasizing that their souls were 'hewn from the heights of heaven,' which makes their sin not one of rebellion but of misguided spiritual aspiration. | Cf. Thirty-two Paths of Wisdom — The author creates a mystical correspondence between the thirty-two human teeth and the thirty-two paths of wisdom in Kabbalistic cosmology, suggesting that Adam and Eve's eating was intended as a spiritual act to elevate creation through this correspondence. | Cf. Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano — The author cites his teacher's interpretation that transforms the conventional understanding of eating in Eden from mere permission to a positive commandment with spiritual significance, comparable to ritual acts like eating sacred offerings or wearing tefillin.

[iii]This references Genesis 2:17 where God warns Adam that eating from the forbidden tree will result in death. The Hebrew phrase "מות תמות" (mot tamut) employs a doubling construction that emphasizes the certainty of death.

ברורה אלא חכמים המשילו
סדר הרמז בספירות ובכחות
רוחניים בתאנים וכו׳. ובן אמרו
120 בתקונים דף ס״ח ע״א סחטה
ענבים ברשו אחרא ועבד יין
נסך ואתעביד אילנא דטוב ורע.
הנה כי מתחלה לא נקרא עדיין
שם רע על אותו האילן ירצה
125 ההנהגה ההיא עד אחר החטא
על דרך שכתבנו למעלה ביצר
הרע. שהיצר הרע היה תבלין
באדם ומעטרא ליה כסאסאה
לשבולתא וידיעה בחצונים
130 הגם שהיא תאוה לעינים אינה
אלא תאוה כלביות[i] כי פנימה
הוא כהפך כדכתיב כי נופת
תטופנה שפתי זרה וגו׳ ומ״ד
תאנה ליקט אותה קודם זמנה
135 כי רצה לעשות התקון ממטה
למעלה והוא לא כן צוה רק כי
יאכל תחלה מעץ הגן ואח״כ
יזכה להמתיק גם עץ הדעת טוב
ורע. ובזה היה מוכן לאכול
140 מעץ החיים כי ג׳ מיני פירות
היו בגן. א׳ פרי הגן. הב׳ עץ
הדעת טוב. הג׳ עץ החיים נגד
ג׳ הנהגות בי״ע. ואמרו בב״ר
פט״ו ומה היתה אותה תאנה ר׳
145 אבין אמר ברת שבע דאמטי ז׳
יומי אבלא לעלמא[ii] ר׳ יהושע דסכנין בשם ר׳ אלעזר אמר

in the sefirot and spiritual powers to figs, etc. And so they said in Tikkunim, page 68a, "She squeezed grapes in the domain of the Other Side and made libation wine, and it became the Tree of Good and Evil." For initially, the name "evil" was not yet called upon that tree—meaning that governance—until after the sin, as we wrote above regarding the evil inclination. For the evil inclination was a spice in man and crowned him like chaff to grain,[A] and knowledge of external forces, even though it is "a delight to the eyes," is nothing but a dog-like desire, for inwardly it is the opposite, as it is written: "For the lips of a strange woman drip honey,[B] etc." And the one who says it was a fig argues that Adam picked it before its time, for he wanted to accomplish the rectification from below to above, but this is not what was commanded—only that he should first eat from the trees of the garden, and afterward he would merit to sweeten even the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. In this way, he would have been prepared to eat from the Tree of Life, for there were three kinds of fruits in the garden: First, the fruit of the garden; second, the Tree of Knowledge of Good; and third, the Tree of Life—corresponding to the three modes of governance in Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah.[1] And they said in Bereishit Rabbah, chapter 15: "What was that fig? Rabbi Avin said: It was a seven-daughter fig that brought seven days of mourning to the world. Rabbi Joshua of Sakhnin said in the name of Rabbi Eleazar: It was a fig of tail/curse that brought a curse to the world." They

110R 115R 120R 125R 130R 135R

[A] Or: "For the evil inclination was originally meant to be a beneficial seasoning for humanity, adorning the person like the beard of grain adorns the stalk" — This expanded translation more fully conveys the agricultural metaphor where 'סאסאה' refers specifically to the bristly parts of grain. The alternate clarifies that the evil inclination was intended to have a positive function before the sin.

[B] Or: "for beneath its surface lies the opposite reality, as Scripture warns: "Though the lips of the forbidden woman drip honey" — This translation better conveys the sense of deceptive appearances versus hidden reality that is central to the author's point about forbidden knowledge, while making the biblical allusion clearer as a cautionary example.

[1] Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah represent three of the four spiritual worlds in Kabbalah (the highest being Atzilut). Each world represents a different level of divine manifestation, from the most abstract (Beriah/Creation) to the most concrete (Asiyah/Action).

[i] The term "כלביות" (kalbiyut/dog-like) is a strong metaphor comparing forbidden desires to the unrestrained nature of dogs, suggesting base animalistic impulses rather than elevated human consciousness.

[i] This Aramaic phrase means "a seven-daughter [fig] that brought seven days of mourning to the world," creating a wordplay between the seven days of mourning and the consequences of Adam's sin.

ברת אליתא דאמטיאת אליתא
לעלמא.[iii] ולא פליגי רק מר
150 ביאר פגם עונו בעולם היצירה
בז׳ היכלות שבו. ומר פירשו בז׳
מדורין דעשייה כי גבר הפגם
בכלן. פוק עיין ותבין.[i] וב׳
מיתות אלו לדעתי ירמוז עוד
155 הפגם שעשה ביצירה ובעשיה
ב׳ הנהגות התחתונות שלא היה
לו לירד שם אז. ובן אמרו
בתקון י״ט דף מ״א דאדם תניינא
דחב במחשבה ואדם תליתא חב
160 במעשה[ii] דתלת אדם אינון אדם
דבריאה דיצירה דעשיה דלאו
כל חובין שוין. ובתקון נ״ט
ביאר טעם משטמת הנחש לאדם
ובתיקון ס׳ פירש איך היה המות
165 בעץ הדעת טוב ורע והרבה מיני
עץ יש יעויין שם. ומתקון נ״ט
עד תקון ס״ט מדבר בעון אדם
ובפרט בדף קי״ג ע״א רשב״י
הודיע שם פגם עון זה לר״א בנו
170 דמטא לאתר עילאה דכל עלאין
ועל כן לא יראני האדם וחי ושם
ביאר הספירות והצחצחות ואור
קדמון. ולמעלה ממנו עילת
העילות. ובתקון ע׳ ביאר נעשה
175 אדם על אדם קדמון. ושם פי׳
כמה דרכים על פסוק נעשה
אדם וכלם כאחד טובים וישרים
למוצאי דעת ושם הודיענו עוד
כי יש שבעה היכלות שבניינם הם
180 בשבע שמות מאבגי״תץ. ובתקון
כ״א מהנוספים פי׳ ז׳ שמות
מם״ב עם ז׳ ספירות ועם שבעה
קולות: ואגב אמר בתקון ע׳
כי שכינה עליונה אינה יורדת
185 על הצדיקים אלא בשבת ויום

do not disagree; rather, one explained the blemish of his sin in the world of Yetzirah with its seven palaces, and one explained it in the seven chambers of Asiyah, for the blemish prevailed in all of them.[2] Go, examine, and understand. And these two deaths, in my opinion, further allude to the blemish he caused in Yetzirah and Asiyah, the two lower modes of governance, where he should not have descended at that time. And so they said in Tikkun 19, page 41, that the second Adam sinned in thought and the third Adam sinned in deed, for there are three Adams: the Adam of Beriah, of Yetzirah, and of Asiyah, for not all sins are equal. And in Tikkun 59, he explained the reason for the serpent's hatred toward man, and in Tikkun 60, he explained how death was in the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, and there are many kinds of trees—examine there. And from Tikkun 59 to Tikkun 69, it discusses Adam's sin, particularly on page 113a, where Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai revealed there the blemish of this sin to his son Rabbi Eleazar, that it reached the highest place of all high places, and therefore "no man shall see Me and live." And there he explained the sefirot, the radiances, and the primordial light, and above it, the Cause of all causes. And in Tikkun 70, he explained "Let Us make man" in relation to Primordial Adam. And there he interpreted several approaches to the verse "Let Us make man," and they are all good and right together for those who find knowledge. And there he further informed us that there are seven palaces whose construction consists of the seven names from ABGITATZ. And in Tikkun 21 of the additional Tikkunim, he explained the seven names of the 42-letter Name with the seven sefirot and with the seven voices. And incidentally, he said in Tikkun 70 that the supernal Shekhinah descends upon the righteous only on Sabbath and festivals, but masters of repentance draw it down upon themselves

140R 145R 150R 155R 160R 165R 170R

[1] The author is harmonizing seemingly contradictory rabbinic opinions by suggesting that Adam's sin created spiritual damage across multiple levels of reality simultaneously.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase contains a wordplay where "אליתא" (alita) can mean both "tail" and "curse," suggesting that the fig brought a curse upon the world.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase meaning "Go, examine, and understand" is a common rabbinic expression encouraging deeper contemplation beyond the surface meaning of the text.

[iv] This Aramaic phrase describes three levels of Adam who sinned in different ways: "the second Adam sinned in thought and the third Adam sinned in deed." This reflects the kabbalistic concept of Adam manifesting in different spiritual worlds.

טוב ברם בעלי תשובה מורידים
אותה עליהם בכל יום ושעה
ורגע. וכבר כתבנו למעלה טעם
לזה. ומתבאר שם חלוק שבין
190 אדם דאצילות לאדם דבריאה
יצירה ועשיה ואמר כי במשה
היה מרכבה שלמה לבדו כמו
שהיה בג׳ אבות. ואדם עילאה
הוה במשה. וזהו וירא ראשית
195 לו. וזהו מה שהיה הוא שיהיה
ואשר להיות כבר היה זה אדם
הראשון ונצוצות נשמת משה
מתפשטות בכל דור ודור בבעלי
תורה להאירם בה: [i]

every day,[1] hour, and moment. And we have already written above the reason for this. And it is explained there the difference between the Adam of Atzilut and the Adam of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, and he said that in Moses there was a complete chariot by himself,[2] just as there was in the three Patriarchs. And the supernal Adam was in Moses. This is the meaning of "he saw the first for himself," and this is the meaning of "What has been is what will be, and what has been done is what will be done"—this refers to the first Adam, and sparks of Moses' soul extend into every generation[1] among the masters of Torah to illuminate them with it. 175R 180R 185R

פרק ל״ג

Chapter 33

נחזור לדרושנו כי מדברי
המדרשים מתברר שראוי היה
אבינו הראשון לזכות גם לתקן
ולהעלות בכחו גם ההנהגה
5 התחתונה הלזו אלא שאכלה
פגה.[ii] ובכח האכילה ההיא
היה מוכן לילך מחיל אל חיל
ולהגיע בגוף ונפש אל העדן
אשר אין שם אכילה ושתיה אלא

Let us return to our discourse, for from the words of the Midrashim it becomes clear that our first father [Adam] was worthy to also rectify and elevate with his power this lower governance, but he consumed it prematurely. Through that eating, he was prepared to go from strength to strength and to reach, in body and soul, the Eden where there is no eating or drinking, but only enjoyment of the radiance of the Divine Presence. But after the sin, the melting 5R

[1]This presents the radical kabbalistic idea that those who have mastered repentance (בעלי תשובה) have a spiritual advantage over even the naturally righteous, as they can access divine illumination continuously rather than only during sacred times.

[2]The metaphor of being a 'chariot' (מרכבה/merkavah) refers to becoming a perfect vehicle for divine presence. While most individuals embody only aspects of divine attributes, Moses is described as embodying complete divine expression.

[3]This reflects the kabbalistic concept of גלגול (gilgul/reincarnation) and נצוצות (nitzutzot/sparks), suggesting that aspects of Moses' soul are distributed throughout history to spiritually elevate Torah scholars.

[i]Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text draws extensively from Tikkunei Zohar, a central kabbalistic work that offers mystical interpretations of Torah passages. The author uses these references to develop a complex mystical explanation of Adam's sin involving the different worlds of creation (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) and divine emanations (sefirot). | Cf. Bereishit Rabbah — The author cites this midrashic text to support the interpretation of the forbidden fruit as a fig, providing different rabbinic opinions about the nature of this fig and harmonizing them within a kabbalistic framework of the spiritual worlds. | Cf. Genesis 2-3 — The entire passage is a mystical interpretation of the Garden of Eden narrative, particularly focusing on the nature of the forbidden fruit, the Tree of Knowledge, and the spiritual consequences of Adam's sin across multiple spiritual worlds. | Cf. Proverbs 5:3 — The text references 'For the lips of a strange woman drip honey' to illustrate the deceptive nature of forbidden knowledge, comparing the allure of sin to the seductive appearance of evil that conceals its destructive consequences. | Cf. Deuteronomy 33:21 — The phrase 'he saw the first for himself' alludes to this verse which was originally about Moses, reinforcing the kabbalistic teaching that Moses contained elements of Adam's soul and represented a spiritual rectification of Adam's sin.

[ii]The phrase refers to eating fruit before it has ripened, used as a metaphor for Adam acting prematurely before the proper time for his spiritual elevation.

ההנאה מזיו השכינה. אבל אחר
החטא התמידה ההתכה בכל יום
ואין המזון תמורה מספקת וכ״ש
בהיותו יגע בו אלא לסעדו לחיי
שעה עד שהגיע לגויעה בסוף
ימיו לכלה הפשע ולהתם חטאת
ולהביא צדק עולמים. ובתקון
ס״ד אמרו דחטא אדם היה
תלוי בת״ת וחטא חוה בשכינתא
ונתקללה הארץ שהיה לה למחות
בידו דכתיב ה׳ בחכמה יסד
ארץ. ושם פירש טעם השתנות
טבע האדם ובתקון ס״ט פירש
כי שתי חוות היו חד מגרמא
שהחטיאו וחד מבשרא סוד
יצר הרע ויצר הטוב.[i] ואמרו
בתוספתא בפ׳ וארא שמסטרא
דאילנא דחיי כל דינין מתהפכין
לרחמי ומסטרא דעץ הדעת טוב
ורע כל רחמי מתהפכן לדינא.
וכל מיני אסורין ואכילות
אסורות היו באכילת עץ ההוא
ולזה אמרו שעבר על ע״א ג״ע
וש״ד שלכן הוצרכו ג׳ האבות
למתק ג׳ עבירות אלו ועל כן
פה שאכל נבלות לא יהיה ראוי
לאכול מעץ החיים ח״ו כי בזה
יתן חיות וקיום לחצונים וטמאים
אלא צריך לירד לעפר בגין
דיתמחי יצר הרע דבגוה. הנה כי
אבינו הראשון ירד למקום הדין
למתקו[ii] ולא עלה בידו. וחנוך
זכה לירש נשמה עליונה שהפסיד
אדם הראשון כמו שנתבאר
בזהר שיר השירים. ולבן רוחו

[of his body] continued every day, and food was not sufficient compensation, especially when he labored for it, serving only to sustain his temporal life until he reached his demise at the end of his days, to complete the transgression, to end sin, and to bring everlasting righteousness.[2]

In Tikkun 64, they said that Adam's sin was connected to Tiferet and Eve's sin to the Shekhinah, and the earth was cursed because it should have protested against him, as it is written, "The Lord founded the earth with wisdom." And there it explains the reason for the change in human nature, and in Tikkun 69 it explains that there were two Eves, one from bone who caused him to sin and one from flesh,[1] representing the mystery of the evil inclination and the good inclination.

They said in the Tosefta in Parashat Va'era that from the side of the Tree of Life, all judgments are transformed into mercy, but from the side of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, all mercy is transformed into judgment. All types of prohibitions and forbidden foods were included in the eating of that tree, which is why they said that Adam transgressed idolatry, forbidden sexual relations, and bloodshed. Therefore, the three Patriarchs were needed to sweeten these three transgressions.[2] Consequently, a mouth that has eaten forbidden foods should not be allowed to eat from the Tree of Life, God forbid, because this would give vitality and sustenance to the external forces and impure entities. Rather, one must descend to dust so that the evil inclination within will be erased.

Behold, our first father descended to the place of judgment to sweeten it, but he did not succeed.

[1] This phrase echoes Daniel 9:24, connecting Adam's death to a cosmic process of rectification that culminates in eschatological redemption.

[2] This mysterious reference to 'two Eves' reflects an esoteric kabbalistic teaching found in later mystical texts. It suggests a dualistic nature within Eve herself, representing both the impulse toward sin (from bone) and toward goodness (from flesh).

[3] The text establishes a correspondence between the three cardinal sins (idolatry, forbidden sexual relations, and bloodshed) supposedly committed through Adam's eating from the Tree of Knowledge, and the three Patriarchs who each rectified a different aspect of this sin.

[ii] This refers to an esoteric kabbalistic teaching that there were two Eves—one formed from bone who led Adam to sin, and another from flesh, symbolizing the dual nature of evil and good inclinations. This concept appears in certain Zoharic and later kabbalistic writings.

[i] The kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgment' (המתקת הדינים) refers to transforming harsh divine judgments into mercy through spiritual actions. The text suggests Adam attempted this but failed, while later figures succeeded.

שהיה לו לעמוד בג״ע של מטה
כשאר רוחות הצדיקים זכה
לעלות ולהיות מלאך שר הפנים
לקבל השפע היורד מהכסא
ולחלקו לכל שאר המלאכים
והעולמות. ועוד גופו הגשמי
נהפך ללפידי אש[i] ועלה עם
רוחו להיות מלאך ובזה ירש
מקומו של אדם הראשון שעקר
בריאת אדם היה שיהיה מקור
לכל השפע המתחלק לעליונים
ותחתונים ולהשפיע ממנו להם
עד שכלם היו רוצים להוריד
לו השפע בהשתחויתם לו והוא
הודיעם כי ראוי להמשיך מן
המקור האמיתי ולהיותו מקור
השפע בחטאו גרם מיתה לו ולכל
הנבראים גם כן. דוגמא לחטא
אדם היה חטא נח בשתייתו מהיין
כי נהפך לו לסורי הגפן נבריה
ונשתכר. ואמרו בפ׳ פקודי
בהיכל ראשון כי נכנס להיכלות
הטומאה.[ii] והושע ירא להסתכל
בהיכלות שנדבקו בהם ישראל
עד שהורשה מהקב״ה ואמר לו
לך קח לך אשת זנונים. וכן חטא
בני אהרן בהקריבם אש זרה
כנדרש בכמה מקומות מהזהר.
אך אברהם שהיה ראשון לאבות
העולם לתקון עון אדם הראשון
לכן הושלך לכבשן האש לכפר
על עון ע״א שהיה נכלל בעונו
של אדם וקיים בעצמו פסילי
אלהיהם תשרפון באש. ואח״כ
ירד למצרים ערות הארץ עומק
הקליפות ונכנס בה בשלום ויצא
בשלום והתחיל להוציא את
בלעם מפיהם נשמות הקדושות
שהיו עשוקות בעמקם. וזהו
ואברם כבד מאד במקנה וגו׳

Enoch, however, merited to inherit the supernal soul that Adam lost, as explained in the Zohar on Song of Songs. Therefore, his spirit, which should have remained in the lower Garden of Eden like other spirits of the righteous, merited to ascend and become an angel, the Prince of the Face,[3] to receive the divine flow descending from the Throne and distribute it to all other angels and worlds. Furthermore, his physical body was transformed into torches of fire and ascended with his spirit to become an angel, thereby inheriting Adam's place. For the essential purpose of Adam's creation was that he should be a source for all the divine flow distributed to the upper and lower realms, influencing them to the extent that all [the angels] wanted to direct the flow to him through their prostration before him. But Adam informed them that it was proper to draw from the true Source. By being the source of divine flow and then sinning, he caused death to himself and to all creatures as well.

An example similar to Adam's sin was Noah's sin in drinking wine, as it turned for him into a foreign vine, and he became drunk. They said in Pekudei regarding the first palace that he entered the palaces of impurity. And Hosea was afraid to look at the palaces to which Israel had clung until he was permitted by the Holy One, blessed be He, who said to him, "Go, take for yourself a wife of harlotry." Similarly, the sin of Aaron's sons in offering strange fire, as expounded in several places in the Zohar.

However, Abraham, who was the first of the Patriarchs to rectify the sin of Adam, was thrown into the fiery furnace to atone for the sin of idolatry that was included in Adam's transgression, thereby fulfilling in himself [the commandment], "Burn their idols with fire." Afterward, he descended to Egypt, the nakedness of the land, the depth of the kelipot [negative spiritual forces], entered in peace and departed in peace, and began to extract from their mouths the holy souls that were oppressed in their depths. This is the meaning of "And Abram was very rich

[1] This refers to the Jewish mystical tradition that Enoch was transformed into the angel Metatron, called 'Prince of the Face' (Sar ha-Panim) because he stands directly before God's throne. The text suggests Enoch reclaimed the exalted position that Adam was originally meant to occupy.

[ii] The transformation of Enoch's physical body into 'torches of fire' reflects the mystical tradition that Enoch was transformed into the angel Metatron, representing complete spiritual elevation without death in the ordinary sense.

[iii] The reference to Noah entering 'palaces of impurity' comes from the Zohar's interpretation of his drunkenness as a spiritual descent into negative realms, parallel to Adam's original sin.

ומשם חזר למסעיו מנגב ועד בית
אל. ויצחק נתעצם מאד מארץ
פלשתים וזהו שדרשו על פסוק
כי עצמת ממנו. וכן עשה יעקב
שגנב לבו של לבן הארמי. ירצה
תוכו ופנימיותו וחיותו שגזלו
החצונים בחטא הקדום דוגמא
לזה ד׳ נכנסו לפרדס ואחד
מהם יצא בשלום.[iii] והדרוש
הלז נתבאר אצלנו באור רחב
במקום כבודו. וריש מלין לבד
העלינו פה לבל יאשם אבינו
הראשון בתחלת מחשבתו כי חשב
להרבות כבוד עליון בגולות
עליות וגולות תחתיות וחסיד
גדול היה ועיין בפ״ב מחלק
ד׳ ביצד היה דבורו של נחש
עם חוה וטענה נצחת להענש
אדם על ידו. עוד שם פרק ט׳
מחלק ג׳ ביאר ביצד נכנס יצר
הרע באדם כי האלהים עשה
את האדם ישר. ואמרו בתקונים
וגם בפרקי היכלות כי אז ס״מ
בעט באדוניו ויצא להתרבות רעה
והוא שטן הוא יצה״ר הוא מלאך
המות או בחותיו הם. נקרא
מלא עינים[i] המתראה לנגד מזלו
של אדם בדאמרן שמתחלה היה
אחד מהשרפים בעלי שש כנפים.
ואם האדם בעה״ז מגביר הטוב
ע״י עבודתו משבר ומכתת כח
החצונים וזהו הוא ישופך ראש
אפי׳ בבחינה עליונה בחצוניותם
מלבד המתקן הדינין הקדושים
שרשי שרשם אמנם אם שומע לו
תשופנו עקב סוף המות ואחריתו
לנפול בידו לכן אמרי טוב
שבנחשים רצוץ את מוחו. וכן כל המחניף לרשע סופו נופל בידו

in livestock," etc., and from there he returned to his journeys from the Negev to Bethel. Isaac gained great strength from the land of the Philistines, which is what they expounded on the verse, "For you have become much mightier than we." Similarly, Jacob stole the heart of Laban the Aramean—meaning his inner essence and vitality that the external forces had stolen in the primordial sin. This is analogous to the four who entered the Pardes [mystical orchard], and only one of them emerged in peace.

This discourse has been explained by us at length elsewhere. We have raised just the beginning of these matters here so that our first father should not be blamed for his initial thought, for he intended to increase the glory of the Most High through the exile of the upper [worlds] and the exile of the lower [worlds], and he was a great pious one. See Chapter 2 of Part 4 on how the serpent's speech with Eve contained an irrefutable argument for Adam to be punished through it. Also, Chapter 9 of Part 3 explains how the evil inclination entered Adam, for God made man upright. They said in the Tikkunim and also in Pirkei Heikhalot that at that time, Samael rebelled against his master and turned to evil ways, and he is Satan, he is the evil inclination, he is the Angel of Death, or they are his forces. He is called "full of eyes," appearing against a person's mazal [spiritual destiny], as we have said, for initially he was one of the seraphim with six wings.

If a person in this world strengthens the good through his service, he breaks and crushes the power of the external forces, and this is [the meaning of] "He shall bruise your head," even in the higher aspect of their externality, apart from rectifying the holy judgments at their root of roots. However, if one listens to [the evil inclination], "You shall bruise his heel"—ultimately death and his end will be to fall into its hand. Therefore, they said, "The best of snakes—crush its head."[1] Similarly, whoever flatters

[1]The Hebrew phrase 'רצוץ את מוחו' (crush its head) reflects rabbinic wisdom about dealing with the evil inclination, linking to Genesis 3:15 where God tells the serpent that the human seed 'shall

[i]This refers to the famous Talmudic story (Chagigah 14b) of four sages who entered the mystical orchard (PaRDeS): Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, Acher (Elisha ben Avuya), and Rabbi Akiva, with only Rabbi Akiva emerging unharmed. The author uses this as an analogy for those who attempt to rectify Adam's sin by entering spiritual realms.

[ii]The phrase 'full of eyes' refers to the traditional depiction of certain angelic beings covered with eyes, symbolizing divine providence and awareness. Here it is applied to Samael as the Angel of Death who constantly watches humans.

טב לביש וגו׳ וכדומה. ועתה
125 שחוה ירדה אל העצב יש צער
לגדל הבנים כי צריך להעלותו
מעט מעט משפלת עמק המצב אל
מקום הקדש שהוא כצמח שתחת
האבן שצריך דוחק גדול עד
130 שיבקע האבן. כך אבן נגף דוחק
התינוק עד שיבקע הקליפה
ויתעלה מעט מעט יוצא מתחת יד
אסכרא אל תחת יד סכנה אחרת.
ואחר כך אל תחת יד מלאך
135 המות. ולזה אחרית הכל המות
וזה מחמת לבושי עור הנחש הזה
הכרוך עלינו. והנה כבר יצאנו
מכוונת דרושנו לכבוד אבינו
הראשון: [i]

the wicked will ultimately fall into his hand—"good for the wicked," etc., and the like. 125R

Now that Eve has descended into sorrow, there is pain in raising children, for one must elevate them little by little from the lowliness of their condition to the holy place. This is like a plant under a stone that needs great pressure until it breaks through the 130R stone. Similarly, a stumbling block presses upon the child until he breaks through the shell and ascends gradually, emerging from under the hand of diphtheria to under the hand of another danger,[1] and afterward to under the hand of the Angel of Death. 135R Therefore, the end of everything is death, and this is due to the garments of skin of this serpent that is wrapped around us. We have already departed from the intention of our discourse in honor of our first father. 140R

פרק ל״ד

Chapter 34

אמרו החכמים כי בשעת פטירתו
של אדם רשע המלאך הממונה על
הדין עומד כנגדו ואומר אוי על
זה הגוף שיצא מן העולם ריקם
5 מזכיות ומלא עונות. וכתבו
בתקונים דף ס״ד כי הנחש הורג

The Sages taught that at the moment of a wicked person's death, the angel appointed over judgment stands before him[2] and says: "Woe to this body that departs from the world empty of merits and full of sins." And it is written in Tikkunim, page 64, 5R that the serpent kills human beings and inevitably bruise your head.' The text develops this metaphor to explain how righteous service crushes evil spiritual forces.

[2]This poignant description of childhood development portrays each stage of growth as emerging from one danger only to face another, culminating ultimately in death. The reference to diphtheria (אסכרא) reflects ancient and medieval understanding of this often-fatal childhood disease.

[3]The text describes a spiritual process that occurs at the moment of death, when the forces of judgment evaluate the spiritual status of the departing soul.

[i]Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text cites specific sections of the Tikkunei Zohar to explain the kabbalistic understanding of Adam and Eve's sin. Tikkun 64 connects Adam's sin to the sefirah of Tiferet and Eve's to the Shekhinah, while Tikkun 69 presents the esoteric concept of two Eves representing good and evil inclinations. | Cf. Zohar on Song of Songs — The text references the Zohar on Song of Songs regarding Enoch inheriting Adam's supernal soul. This reference supports the passage's kabbalistic interpretation of how Enoch achieved angelic status by reclaiming what Adam lost through sin. | Cf. The story of the four who entered Pardes — The author compares the Patriarchs' spiritual rectifications to the famous Talmudic tale of four sages who entered the mystical orchard (Pardes), where only Rabbi Akiva emerged unharmed. This analogy suggests that entering spiritual realms to recover what was lost in Adam's sin requires special merit and protection. | Cf. Pirkei Heikhalot — The text cites Pirkei Heikhalot alongside Tikkunim regarding Samael's rebellion. This reference to the early mystical Heikhalot literature establishes a connection between medieval Kabbalah and earlier Jewish mystical traditions regarding the nature of evil spiritual forces. | Cf. Zohar Pekudei — The text cites the Zohar portion of Pekudei regarding Noah entering palaces of impurity, establishing a pattern of sin parallel to Adam's. This reference supports the passage's theme of how righteous figures after Adam either repeated or rectified aspects of the original sin.

בני אדם וגורם הדמעה עכ״פ
והורג בסם המות שלו שהוא
גיהנם ודא איהו ס״מ. ואינו זז
מן האדם עד שיכלה בעפר כי 10R
בשרו הוא מעורו ומארבעה מיני
צרעת שהם בנחש נובעים מהם
ד׳ מיני חולאים שהם מרה לבנה.
מרה אדומה מרה ירוקה מרה
שחורה. וכתוב בתקון כ׳ דף 15R
מ״ב ע״ב בר נש בהאי עלמא איהו
צרעת ממשבא דחויא. וזה הראה
הקב״ה למשה בסנה שאמר לו אל
תקרב הלם עד שיופשט מהגוף
שהלבישה אותו בת פרעה שהיא 20R
נטהרה בנגיעתה למשה ונתרפאת
מצרעתה. ומשה אז נצטרע כי
פרחה ממנו שבינה. והיה זה
דוגמת פרה אדומה המטהרת
הטמאים מצד ימין ומטמאת 25R
הטהורים מצד שמאל שלה
דמסטרה ס״מ שנפל מקדושתו.
ואחר שנתפשט מאותו הגוף
וחזר לג״ע נתלבש בגוף קדוש
שלו וזהו והנה שבה כבשרו. 30R
וכן האדם אם שב בתשובה
יורד עליו סם חיים לרפואתו.
וכתב בעל ראשית חכמה כי
הנשמה נדונת בדקדוק גמור
אחר פטירתה ומביא מעשים 35R
על זה וזהו אצלי זכר רחמיך
ה׳ וחסדיך כי מעולם המה.
ירצה כי ורחמים והחסדים הם
מתנהגים עם האדם בעולם הזה
שהוא עולם המעשה והתשובה. 40R
וכן אברהם ויעקב שהיו בע״הז
היו מרכבה לרחמים וחסדים
וזהו כי מעולם המה. ולכן ביד
החוטא לתקן מה שעוות ומעט
יסורין ימרקו לו הרבה. אבל 45R
בעולם הגמול אין הנשמה יכולה
לעלות בצרור עליון והרוח
בג״ע של מטה והנפש אינה יכולה

causes tears,[3] and kills with its deadly poison, which is Gehenna—and this is Samael. It does not leave a person until he decomposes in the dust, for his flesh comes from the serpent's skin. From the four types of leprosy that exist in the serpent flow four types of illnesses: white bile, red bile, green bile, and black bile. And it is written in Tikkun 20, page 42b: "A human being in this world is leprosy from the skin of the serpent." This is what the Holy One, blessed be He, showed Moses at the burning bush[1] when He told him, "Do not come closer," until he would be stripped of the body that Pharaoh's daughter had clothed him with—for she was purified through her contact with Moses and was healed of her leprosy. Moses then became leprous because the Divine Presence departed from him. This was similar to the red heifer that purifies the impure from its right side while making the pure impure from its left side, which is from the side of Samael who fell from his holiness. After Moses was stripped of that body and returned to the Garden of Eden, he was clothed in his holy body, and this is the meaning of "behold, it was restored like his flesh." Similarly, if a person repents, the elixir of life descends upon him for his healing.

The author of Reshit Chochmah wrote that the soul is judged with absolute precision after its departure and brings evidence for this from the verse: "Remember Your mercies, O LORD, and Your kindnesses, for they have existed from eternity." This means that mercy and kindness govern a person's existence in this world, which is the world of action and repentance. Thus, Abraham and Jacob, who lived in this world, were vehicles for mercy and kindness, and this is the meaning of "for they have existed from eternity." Therefore, it is within a sinner's power to correct what he has distorted, and a small amount of suffering will purify a great deal for him.

But in the world of recompense, the soul cannot ascend to the supernal bond, nor can the spirit ascend to the lower Garden of Eden,[2] nor can the vital soul delight in the radiance of its soul in the [1] In kabbalistic thought, the 'serpent' represents the primordial force of evil and death (often associated with the biblical serpent from the Garden of Eden), which introduced mortality to humanity.

[2] This passage offers a mystical interpretation of the burning bush narrative from Exodus 3, suggesting that Moses needed spiritual purification before approaching the divine revelation.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that the different components of the soul ascend to different spiritual realms after death, with the highest (neshamah) reaching the 'supernal bond,' the middle להתעדן בצחצחות נפשה בסוד

לבוש הראוי לה דמתחזי ולא
מתחזי עד כי יתלבנו ויצטרפו
שלשתן יחד מכל וכל כי כל אשר
בו מום לא יקרב וכל היסורים
והנגעים וכ״ש יום המיתה כלם
ודאי טהרה הם מצד האש. וטבע
האש ללבן מבית ומחוץ כפגם
שהרתיח עצמו באש היצר כן
צריך הטהרה והליבון. ולכן
התענית הוא אש מטהר לאש
היצר מצד ענוי נפשו והתכת
חלבו ודמו. ואמרו בפ׳ שמות
דף י״ג בסוד עדון הרוח בג״ע
תחתון דכמה דגופא אתהני בהאי
עלמא מקטורא דארבע יסודות
ומצטייר בהאי עלמא אוף
הכי רוחא קיימא בג״ע תתאה
בדיוקנא דהאי עלמא וחדאן
ברוחיהון דצדיקייא דעאלין
תמן ואינון רוחין מצטיירין תמן
מקטורא דארבע רוחין דקיימא
בגנתא. ואלמלא אינון ד׳ רוחין
דאינון אוירא דגנתא רוחא לא
מצטיירא בציורא כלל ולא
אתלבשא בהו בגין כך כתיב
מארבע רוחות בואי הרוח: [i]

secret of the appropriate garment that is visible yet not visible, until all three are purified and refined together completely. For "anything with a blemish shall not approach," and all sufferings and afflictions—especially the day of death—are certainly forms of purification through fire. The nature of fire is to whiten from within and without; just as one inflamed himself with the fire of desire, so does he require purification and whitening. Therefore, fasting is a purifying fire for the fire of desire,[1] as it causes affliction to one's soul and melts one's fat and blood.

And they said in Parshat Shemot, page 13, concerning the delight of the spirit in the lower Garden of Eden: "Just as the body benefits in this world from the bond of the four elements and takes form in this world, so too does the spirit exist in the lower Garden of Eden in the likeness of this world,[2] and they rejoice with the spirits of the righteous who enter there. Those spirits take form there from the bond of the four winds that exist in the garden. Were it not for those four winds, which are the air of the garden, the spirit would not take form at all and would not be clothed in them. Therefore it is written: 'From the four winds, come, O spirit.'[3]" (ruach) dwelling in the Garden of Eden, and the lowest (nefesh) remaining connected to the grave until the body decomposes.

[2]This reflects the ascetic dimension of Jewish mystical practice, where physical self-denial (particularly fasting) is understood as a means of spiritual purification and atonement.

[3]This presents a conception of the afterlife where the human spirit maintains a form resembling its earthly appearance but constituted from spiritual rather than physical elements.

[4]This is a reference to Ezekiel 37:9, from the prophet's vision of the valley of dry bones, which describes resurrection. Here it's applied to the formation of the spiritual body in the afterlife.

[i]Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This reference establishes the kabbalistic understanding of how spiritual impurity (symbolized by the serpent) affects the physical body during life and after death. The serpent represents Samael, the angel of death, who clings to the human form until complete decomposition. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This reinforces the kabbalistic concept that the physical body itself is a manifestation of spiritual impurity derived from the primordial serpent, explaining why it must decompose after death. | Cf. Exodus 3:5 — The text presents a mystical interpretation of the burning bush incident, suggesting Moses needed to be stripped of physical impurity (likened to leprosy) before approaching the divine. This creates a parallel between physical purification and spiritual elevation. | Cf. Reshit Chochmah — This kabbalistic work by Rabbi Eliyahu de Vidas is cited to establish the contrast between this world (governed by mercy) and the World to Come (governed by strict justice), explaining why repentance must occur before death. | Cf. Zohar — This Zoharic passage explains the structural correspondence between physical and spiritual bodies, describing how the spirit maintains a form in the afterlife that resembles its earthly appearance but is composed of spiritual 'elements.' | Cf. Four humors theory — The text integrates medieval medical theory of the four humors with kabbalistic concepts, connecting physical illness to spiritual impurity derived from the primordial serpent. | Cf. Ezekiel 37:9 — This biblical

פרק ל״ה

Chapter 35

כוונה נאותה[ii] לעומד בעת סלוק נשמה מאחד מצדיקים[i] ובזה מסייע לו להצילו מרעהו[iii ii]

An appropriate intention[A] for one who stands present at the departure of a soul[A] from one of the righteous, and through this assists in saving him from his adversary[B]

לנו הורו גאוני עולם כי שבירת כלים העליונים הנקראים בספרא דצניעותא מלכין קדמאין[iv] אינו רק חזרת האור והנשמה למקומה למעלה להיות הכלי קטן מהכיל רוב האור מחמת המיעוט הצפוי בתחלת המחשבה. וירידת הכלים למטה שמהם שרש הקליפות ובשברים אלו נשארו נצוצי טהרה[v] בקיתון שמן זית שנשבר. ובקפול רגלי אריך אנפין[vi] הועלה הסלת

The great scholars of the world have taught us that the breaking of the supernal vessels,[1] referred to in the Safra D'Tzniuta as "primordial kings," is merely the return of light and soul to its place above, as the vessel was too small to contain the abundance of light due to the contraction foreseen in the initial thought. The vessels descended below, becoming the root of the kelipot (negative forces), yet within these broken fragments remained sparks of purity, like a jug of olive oil that has shattered. When Arich Anpin (the Long-Faced One) folded His legs, the pure flour was elevated from these remnants, while the remnants of

[C] Or: "proper mystical meditation" — This alternate emphasizes the kabbalistic dimension of 'kavvanah' as a specific type of focused mystical consciousness rather than just a general 'intention.'

[D] Or: "for one who is present during the soul's departure" — This provides a slightly more natural English phrasing while preserving the meaning.

[E] Or: "to rescue him from his spiritual prosecutor" — This alternate more explicitly identifies the 'adversary' as a spiritual prosecutor, which better reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the forces confronting the soul at death.

[1] This translation addresses one of the most complex concepts in Lurianic Kabbalah, the 'Breaking of the Vessels' (Shevirat ha-Kelim). The passage presents a particular interpretation of this concept, emphasizing that the breaking wasn't a catastrophic failure but a necessary process for divine light to return to its source.

allusion to Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones is repurposed to explain how souls take form in the Garden of Eden, suggesting a parallel between resurrection and the soul's afterlife existence.

[i] The term 'kavvanah' (mystical intention) refers to a focused meditative state of consciousness directed toward a specific spiritual purpose. In Kabbalah, having the proper kavvanah was considered essential for efficacy of prayers and rituals.

[ii] The departure of the soul of a righteous person was considered a particularly significant spiritual moment in Jewish mystical tradition. The text implies that proper intention from those present could affect the soul's journey.

[iii] In kabbalistic thought, the soul faces various spiritual adversaries or accusers at the time of death. These may include the Angel of Death (malakh ha-mavet), negative spiritual forces (kelipot), or spiritual prosecutors (kategor).

[iv] Cf. Zohar — This passage draws on Zoharic concepts of how the righteous soul faces judgment at death, and how proper intention from the living can assist in this transition. | Cf. Earlier sections of Ma'avar Yabok — This passage continues the book's theme of providing specific spiritual tools for those present at deathbeds, emphasizing that their proper focus can actively assist the soul.

[v] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the 'Breaking of the Vessels' (Shevirat ha-Kelim), a foundational doctrine in Lurianic Kabbalah describing how the primordial vessels meant to contain divine light shattered because they were unable to contain the powerful divine light, causing sparks of divinity to be scattered and trapped in the material world.

[vi] These are the 'sparks of purity' or divine sparks that fell and became embedded in the material world after the Breaking of the Vessels. In Kabbalistic thought, one of humanity's spiritual tasks is to elevate these sparks back to their divine source through religious devotion and righteous acts.

נקייה משיריים אלו ושירי
שיריים נשארו להיות חיות
לקליפות. ובכח תפלתנו וכ״ש
בסלוק נשמותיהם של צדיקים
עם צירוף כל המצות שפעל
ועשה שם בחייו דבר יום ביומו
מדי עבור נשמות אלו דרך עולם
העשייה מעלין נצוצי טהרה
שבתוך הקליפות לעולם היצירה
וכן מיצירה לבריאה ומבריאה
לאצילות. ומרשימו של שש
קצוות עולים שלש ראשונות
עד שחוזרים האורות למקומם
וזהו סוד מיין נוקבין[i] הנעשים
ע״י נשמות הצדיקים ובפרט
מאותם המתים לכבוד השם.
ונפשות הצדיקים נעשים מיין
נוקבין לזווג ת״ת ומלכות. ות״ת
ומלכות נעשים מיין נוקבין
לזווג חכמה ובינה וכזה תהיה
כוונת מסירת נפש האדם בנפילת
אפים[ii] והמבין בה כראוי זוכה
למעלות רבות הא׳ שנעשה
כבריה חדשה שכבר נפטר הגוף
הראשון וזה גוף חדש כי נפש״י

remnants remained to give life to the kelipot.

Through the power of our prayers, and especially through the departure of the souls of the righteous—combined with all the commandments they performed and fulfilled during their lifetime, day by day—as these souls pass through the World of Action (Asiyah), they elevate the sparks of purity contained within the kelipot[1] to the World of Formation (Yetzirah), and likewise from Formation to Creation (Beriah), and from Creation to Emanation (Atzilut). From the impression of the six directions, the three highest sefirot rise until the lights return to their place. This is the secret of the feminine waters (mayin nukvin)[2] created through the souls of the righteous, particularly those who die for the sanctification of the Divine Name.

The souls of the righteous become feminine waters for the union of Tiferet and Malkhut, and Tiferet and Malkhut in turn become feminine waters for the union of Chokhmah and Binah. This same intention should be present when one surrenders their soul during prostration in prayer (nefilat apayim).[3] One who focuses properly on this gains many spiritual benefits:[4] First, one becomes like a new creation, as their first body has already departed and this is [1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'birur' (clarification or sifting), where divine sparks trapped in the material realm are elevated through religious observance. The text specifically connects this process to the death of righteous individuals, suggesting their passing creates a powerful opportunity for such elevation.

[2] I've translated 'mayin nukvin' both literally and with its technical kabbalistic meaning. This concept is central to understanding the cosmic dynamics described in the passage, where desire and arousal from below (the feminine) stimulates flow from above (the masculine).

[3] This specific prayer practice involves falling on one's face in complete submission. The passage makes the remarkable claim that proper intention during this prayer ritual can simulate the spiritual benefits of death without actually dying, creating a kind of mystical rehearsal for the soul's final ascent.

[4] The text enumerates eight specific benefits of properly performing the prostration prayer with correct mystical intention. This structured presentation of benefits follows a pattern common in ethical and mystical Jewish literature, making abstract mystical concepts more accessible through practical outcomes.

[i] Literally 'the folding of the legs of Arich Anpin.' Arich Anpin (Long-Faced One) is a Partzuf (divine persona) in Kabbalah representing the divine attribute of Keter (Crown) in its aspect of divine will and mercy. The 'folding of the legs' is a metaphorical description of how divine emanation is restricted or limited as it descends into lower spiritual worlds.

[ii] Literally 'feminine waters,' this is a kabbalistic concept referring to the spiritual arousal or desire that ascends from below (the feminine principle) to stimulate a reciprocal flow of divine abundance from above (the masculine principle). This forms part of the mystical understanding of cosmic unions between divine attributes.

[iii] A prayer practice involving prostration or bowing with the face to the ground, particularly during the Tachanun section of Jewish liturgy. In Kabbalistic understanding, this posture symbolizes complete self-nullification and surrender before God, with mystical significance for the soul's elevation.

בגי׳ מ״ת.[iii] הב׳ תוספת אומץ
ללחום נגד יצה״ר. הג׳ תוספת
השכלה בסודות התורה. הד׳
תוספת דבקות בקונו. הה׳ שעל
ידי כך הוא עושה מסילה שמורה
לו כשיפטר מן העולם. הו׳ גורם
השפעה לכנסת ישראל שאומרת
תן לי בשביל בני זה. הז׳ אין
חטא בא לידו. ואם יזדמן לו
יתיסר בעה״ז עד שיתמרק. הח׳
זוכה לעלות נשמתו תכף בלי
עכוב. עוד בנפילת אפים אנו
מעוררים זעיר ונוקביה[i] ובגידול
זעיר המרים ראשו אז מחזיר
מאור חכמה למעלה שירד אורה
בעת מעוטה וזה כדי לקבל
חלק מהאור שירד אליה מתחלה
לבד באופן שיוכלו התחתונים
ליהנות ממנה ולא יכהו עיניהם
מרוב האורות כבתחלה דמלכין
קדמאין אצטנעו מרוב האורות
ואורם ירד למטה עד גבול
האצילות ולא יותר ח״ו.
ונוקביה דזעיר בהיותה עולה
עמו וכ״ש בהיותה עטרת בעלה
מעלה מאור שירד מבינה
כשנתמעטה שהיא ג״כ ירדה
עד סוף האצילות לא למטה.
א״כ העלאת הנובלות מסורות
בידינו כי אנחנו מעוררים זעיר
ונוקביה לעומת אבא ואמא
ולדרך כוונה זו מסוגל פסוק
שמע ישראל וברוך שם כבוד
מלכותו לעולם ועד וגם שם מ״ב
שעולה ואינו יורד[ii] ומבקשי ה׳
יבינו כל. ובכוונה זו הבטיח

a new body, for "my soul" (nafshi) has the numerical value of "dead" (met). Second, one gains additional strength to battle against the evil inclination. Third, one gains additional insight into the secrets of Torah. Fourth, one experiences increased attachment to one's Creator. Fifth, through this practice, one creates a protected pathway for when they depart from the world. Sixth, one causes an influx of divine flow to the Community of Israel,[1] which says, "Give to me for the sake of this child of mine." Seventh, sin will not come into one's hand, and if it should happen, one will be disciplined in this world until purified. Eighth, one merits the immediate ascent of their soul without delay.

Furthermore, during prostration we arouse Zeir Anpin (the Small-Faced One) and His female counterpart, and when Zeir Anpin grows and raises His head, He then returns the light of Wisdom above, whose light descended during the time of diminishment. This is in order to receive only a portion of the light that initially descended to her, in a way that allows the lower realms to benefit from it without their eyes being blinded by the abundance of light as at the beginning, when the primordial kings were concealed due to the abundance of light, and their light descended below to the boundary of Atzilut but no further, God forbid. When the female aspect of Zeir Anpin ascends with Him, especially when she becomes her husband's crown, she elevates the light that descended from Binah when it was diminished, which itself had descended only to the end of Atzilut but not below.

Thus, the elevation of the fallen remnants is entrusted to our hands, for we arouse Zeir Anpin and His female counterpart toward Father and Mother. The verse "Hear, O Israel" and "Blessed

[1] In Kabbalistic symbolism, 'Knesset Yisrael' (Community of Israel) often represents the Shekhinah or divine feminine presence. The passage suggests that proper prayer creates a flow of divine energy not just for the individual but for the entire mystical body of Israel.

[i] This indicates a gematria (numerical equivalence): the Hebrew word 'nafshi' (my soul) has the same numerical value as 'met' (dead)—both equal 440. This wordplay supports the kabbalistic concept that self-nullification in prayer is a kind of spiritual death and rebirth.

[ii] Zeir Anpin (Small-Faced One) and His female counterpart (Nukvah) are Partzufim (divine personas) in Kabbalah. Zeir Anpin corresponds primarily to the sefirah of Tiferet but encompasses the six sefirot from Chesed through Yesod, while Nukvah corresponds to Malkhut. Their union represents the mystical coupling of divine attributes.

[iii] The 42-letter Divine Name is a mystical name of God formed from various combinations of Hebrew letters. The statement that it 'ascends but does not descend' refers to its unique property of spiritual elevation without subsequent descent, making it particularly powerful for mystical ascent and soul elevation.

הכתוב לעומד בשעת יציאת נשמה מצדיק. ויחי עוד לנצח לא יראה השחת וזה בשכר כי יראה חכמים ימותו:[i] [ii] be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever" are especially suited for this intention, as is the 42-letter Divine Name which ascends but does not descend[2]—and those who seek the Lord will understand all. With this intention, Scripture promises to one who stands present at the moment a righteous person's soul departs: "He shall live forever and not see destruction," and this is the reward "for he sees that the wise die."[1]

פרק ל״ו

Chapter 36

עוד כוונה למפקיד ביד אל רוחו ונשמתו טוב הדבר מאד להזכיר סמוך לפטירתו למי שזכה לשמש חכמים בחייו ג׳ פסוקים בכוונה. בשנת מות המלך עזיהו ואראה את ה׳ יושב על כסא רם ונשא ושוליו מלאים את ההיכל. שרפים עומדים ממעל לו שש כנפים שש כנפים לאחד בשתים יכסה פניו ובשתים יכסה רגליו ובשתים

Another intention for one who entrusts his spirit and soul to God's hand:[A] it is very beneficial for one who has merited to serve Torah scholars during his lifetime to recite three verses with proper intention near the time of his passing. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple. Above it stood seraphim; each one had six wings: with two he covered his face, with two he covered his feet, and with two he flew. And one cried to another and said: 'Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts;

[A] Or: "for one who deposits his spirit and soul in God's hand" — The Hebrew term 'מפקיד' derives from a root meaning 'to deposit' or 'entrust for safekeeping,' suggesting the image of the soul being given to God for safekeeping, like a valuable deposit.

[1] This describes a unique property of the 42-letter Divine Name in kabbalistic thought. Unlike other spiritual forces that may rise and fall, this Name only elevates, making it particularly powerful for the soul's ascent at death.

[2] The passage concludes with this scriptural quote from Psalm 49:11, but reinterprets it in a positive light—suggesting that witnessing the death of righteous individuals with proper mystical intention grants spiritual benefits and protection from seeing destruction.

[i] This phrase concludes the passage with a reference to Psalm 49:11, which discusses how everyone, including the wise, must face death. In the context of this mystical text, it takes on deeper significance about the spiritual elevation possible through properly attending a righteous person's death.

[ii] Cf. Safra D'Tzniuta — The passage cites this authoritative mystical text to establish its discussion of the Breaking of the Vessels, lending legitimacy to its kabbalistic interpretations by grounding them in this canonical source. | Cf. Nefilat Apayim prayer ritual — The text draws a parallel between the mystical significance of death and the ritual practice of falling on one's face in prayer, suggesting this prayer practice can simulate some of the spiritual benefits of death while still alive. | Cf. Psalm 49:11 — The passage reinterprets this verse from its original context about the universality of death to suggest that witnessing the death of the wise with proper mystical intention provides spiritual protection. | Cf. Shema prayer — The text identifies this foundational prayer as particularly suited for the mystical intention of elevating divine sparks, connecting daily liturgical practice with the cosmic process of tikkun (repair). | Cf. 42-letter Divine Name — The passage highlights this powerful divine name as having special properties for soul elevation, particularly relevant at the moment of a righteous person's death. | Cf. Lurianic Kabbalah — While not explicitly mentioned, the entire passage draws heavily on Lurianic kabbalistic concepts including the Breaking of the Vessels, divine sparks, and the structure of spiritual worlds, adapted specifically for the context of death rituals.

יעופף. וקרא זה אל זה ואמר
קדוש קדוש קדוש ה׳ צבאות
מלא כל הארץ כבודו. והם מ״ב
תיבות[iii] מן את עד כבודו ויכוין
אל לבו אם יזכוהו מן השמים
בשם א״ת[i] בללות כל האצילות
מן כתר עליון דאיהו אל״ף עד
המלכות דאיהי תי״ו ונקראת
אדנ״י ולעולם תהיה הכוונה
בעצמות המתפשט בספירות
מכח אין סוף עלת כל העלות
ובאומרו יושב על כסא רם ונשא
יכוין לכסא הכבוד[ii] הנקראים
עשר ספירות דבריאה שהם ענפי
האצילות המתפשטות במדרגות
הבריאה ונכללות ומתלבשות בה
ונקראים כסא הכבוד והמלכות
יושבת על הבריאה עם כל
כללות העשר ספירות דאצילות
הכלולים במלכות. ויען כי כסא
זה של מדרגת הבריאה מתרומם
על ב׳ מדרגות אחרות שתחתיו
והם מדרגת היצירה הנקראת
עולם המלאכים ומדרגת העשיה
דהיינו האופנים ושמים וארץ
על כן אמר ר״ם ונש״א וגם לזה
יכוין. ובאמרו ושוליו מלאים
את ההיכל יכוין אל התפשטות
הבריאה במדרגת היצירה אשר
היא היכל אל הבריאה ובהיכל

the whole earth is full of His glory!'" These verses contain forty-two words from "et" (the) to "kevodo" (His glory), and one should focus his intention, if 15 Heaven grants him merit,[2] on the name AT, which 15R encompasses all of Atzilut[1] (Emanation), from Keter Elyon (Supreme Crown), which is Aleph, to Malkhut, which is Tav and is called Adonai. Always direct your intention toward the Divine Essence that ex-20 tends through the sefirot[2] by the power of Ein Sof, 20R the Cause of all causes.

When reciting "sitting on a throne, high and lifted up," one should direct his intention toward the Throne of Glory, which refers to the ten sefirot
25 of Beriah (Creation) that are branches of Atzilut 25R extending into the levels of Beriah, included and clothed within it, and are called the Throne of Glory. Malkhut sits upon Beriah together with all the ten sefirot of Atzilut contained within Malkhut.
30 And since this throne of the Beriah level is elevated 30R above two other levels beneath it—namely, the level of Yetzirah, called the World of Angels, and the level of Asiyah, meaning the Ophanim, heaven, and earth—therefore it says "high and lifted up," and 35 one should also focus on this. 35R

When saying "and His train filled the temple," one should focus on the extension of Beriah into the level of Yetzirah, which is the chamber of Beriah. In this chamber are the angels in ten levels, and the 40 highest level consists of those angels called Seraphim 40R due to their exalted status, which is the meaning of [1] The concept of kavvanah (intention or focused concentration) is central to Jewish mystical practice. Here it implies that proper mystical meditation requires both human effort and divine assistance.

[2] Atzilut (Emanation) is the highest of four cosmic worlds in Kabbalistic cosmology, representing the realm of pure divinity. The other three worlds mentioned in the text are Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action).

[3] This references the paradoxical Kabbalistic concept that the infinite divine essence (Ein Sof) both transcends and permeates the ten sefirot (divine emanations or attributes), which serve as channels for divine energy into the created worlds.

[i] The Hebrew term "מ״ב תיבות" (42 words) refers to the forty-two words in the quoted verses from Isaiah's vision. This number has special significance in Jewish mysticism, particularly in relation to the 42-letter Name of God, which is considered one of the most powerful divine names in Kabbalah.

[ii] The "name AT" (א״ת) refers to a conceptual divine name spanning from Aleph (א) to Tav (ת), the first and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet, symbolizing the totality of divine emanation through all levels of existence.

[iii] "Throne of Glory" (כסא הכבוד) is a central concept in Jewish mysticism, representing the interface between the utterly transcendent divine essence and the created worlds. It is described here as corresponding to the world of Beriah (Creation), the second of four cosmic worlds in Kabbalistic cosmology.

זה שם המלאכים בעשרה מדרגות
והמדרגה העליונה הם אותם
המלאכים הנקראים שרפים
למעלתם וזהו אומרו שרפים
עומדים ממעל לו. וכל מדרגה
ומדרגה מעשרה מדרגות אלו
של מלאכים היא נחלקת לשבעה
כתות נגד שבעה ספירות וכנגדן
שבעה שמות של שם מ״ב[i] שש
כנפים לאחד כנגד שש אותיות
שבכל שם מאלו. באומרו פניו
יכוין אל התעלמות השרפים
בבחינת מה שבהם. ובאומרו
רגליו יכוין אל התעלמותם
בבחינת שמשפיעים. ובאומרו
יעופף יכוין אל בחינת מה
שמתנשאים לקבל מלמעלה
ומתוך כך יכוין גם הוא אל
התעופפות נפשו למעלה אל
רום המעלות תחת כסא הכבוד
בכח הכנפים אשר לה דוגמת
השרפים ונעשים לה מרוחניות
שם של מ״ב. וכאן יכוין בו
במחשבה הראשון פת״ח שב״א
פת״ח שב״א פת״ח.[ii] החלק
השני שב״א פת״ח שב״א פת״ח.
השלישי שב״א פת״ח שב״א פת״ח
פת״ח. החלק הרביעי פת״ח
שב״א פת״ח שב״א פת״ח. החלק
החמישי שב״א פת״ח שב״א פת״ח.
החלק הששי קמ״ץ שב״א קמ״ץ
חיר״ק. ויכוין לאות המתדגשת
בדגשותה והרפויה ברפה שלה.
ואח״כ יאמר הפסוק הג׳ וקרא
זה אל זה ואמר. ויכוין בקדוש

"seraphim stood above Him." Each level of these ten levels of angels is divided into seven groups[3] corresponding to the seven sefirot, and corresponding to them are seven names from the 42-letter Name, with "six wings for each one" corresponding to the six letters in each of these names. 45R

When reciting "his face," one should focus on the Seraphim's concealment with respect to their inner essence.[A] When saying "his feet," one should focus on their concealment with respect to how they channel influence downward. And when saying "he flew," one should focus on how they elevate themselves to receive from above. Through this, he should also focus on the ascent of his own soul upward to the highest heights beneath the Throne of Glory, by the power of the wings which his soul has like the Seraphim, which are formed for it from the spirituality of the 42-letter Name. 50R 55R

Here one should focus in thought on the vowelization: the first section—patach, sheva, patach, sheva, patach; the second section—sheva, patach, sheva, patach; the third section—sheva, patach, sheva, patach, patach; the fourth section—patach, sheva, patach, sheva, patach; the fifth section—sheva, patach, sheva, patach; the sixth section—kamatz, sheva, kamatz, chirik. And one should focus on pronouncing the letters with their proper emphasis, both the emphasized and the soft sounds. 60R 65R

Afterward, one recites the third verse, "And one cried to another and said," focusing on the first "Holy" as referring to the first three sefirot: Keter, Chokhmah, and Binah. With the second "Holy," focus on the second set of three sefirot: Chesed, Gevurah, and Tiferet. With the third "Holy," focus on the third set of three sefirot: Netzach, Hod, and 70R 75R

[A] Or: "on how the Seraphim conceal their innermost nature" — This alternative more clearly expresses the paradoxical kabbalistic idea that higher angels must conceal their essence to avoid overwhelming lower beings with their intensity.

[1] The text presents a complex celestial hierarchy where the angelic realms mirror the structure of the divine sefirot (emanations), creating a comprehensive cosmic system with multiple layers of correspondences.

[i] The "42-letter Name" (שם מ״ב) is one of the most powerful divine names in Kabbalah, traditionally derived from the first 42 letters of the Torah or from the prayer Ana BeKoach. It is divided into seven names of six letters each, corresponding to the seven lower sefirot and the days of the week.

[ii] These are Hebrew vowel marks (nikudot) that indicate the precise pronunciation of the divine name being contemplated. The text provides detailed instructions on the vocalization of each section of the 42-letter name, as proper pronunciation was considered essential for effective mystical practice.

ראשון אל הג׳ ספירות ראשונות כתר חכמה ובינה. ובקדוש שני יכוין אל הג׳ ספירות שניות חסד גבורה ת״ת. ובקדוש שלישי יכוין אל השלש ספירות שלישיות נצח הוד יסוד. ובמלא כל הארץ כבודו יכוין אל הספירה העשירית ואחרונה מלמעלה למטה הנקראת ארץ ומתמלאת מכולם ע״י יסוד הנקראת כל וחוזרת ומתרצית לכולם. ומי שמרגיל עצמו לומר שבח אנא בכח[i] בעת שליטת ממשלת היום בתפלתו ובעת שליטת ממשלת הלילה בשכבו על מטתו ומכוין בכל יום לשם השולט בו משמות אלו שם אחד לכל יום ובשבת שם שקו״ציות[ii] נחלק לשלשה נגד שלש שבתות שבת כלה ושבת הגדול בשחרית ושבת סתם במנחה וכמו כן בקדושה מכוין לשתף בחינת נשמתו למעלה עם קלוס שרפי הבריאה בעולם הכסא. ובחלק השני ממנה נשמתו וגם רוחו. ובחלק השלישי ממנה נשמתו ורוחו וג״כ בחינת נפשו. ודאי שכל זה תהיה הבנה לטהרו ולקדשו ויזכה להיות קרבן ריח ניחח לה׳ ומנחה טהורה ביום סלוקו לחצרות אל. והשרפים בעלי שש כנפים

Yesod. And with "the whole earth is full of His glory," focus on the tenth and final sefirah from above to below, which is called Earth, and which is filled by all the others through Yesod, which is called "all," and which returns and becomes reconciled to all of them.

One who accustoms himself to recite the praise "Ana BeKoach" during the dominion of the day in his prayer and during the domini[B]on of the night when lying on his bed, focusing each day on the name that governs that day from these names—one name for each day—and on the Sabbath, the name SHKUTZIT is divided into three parts corresponding to three Sabbaths: the Bride Sabbath and the Great Sabbath in the morning prayer, and the regular Sabbath in the afternoon prayer. Similarly, during the Kedushah prayer,[1] he should focus on uniting the aspect of his soul above with the praise of the Seraphim of Beriah in the world of the Throne. In the second part, he should focus on his soul and also his spirit. And in the third part, he should focus on his soul and his spirit, and also the aspect of his vital soul.

Surely all this will be a preparation to purify and sanctify him, and he will merit to be "a sacrifice of sweet savor unto the LORD"[2] and a pure offering on the day of his ascent to God's courts. And the Seraphim with six wings will cover him with their pinions and will bear him up on the heights of the 72-letter Name.[A] May it be God's will that we merit to live and see length of days, and may the Supernal One be praised through us and all Israel in this world

[A] Or: "during the governance of daytime... during the governance of nighttime" — This alternative more directly conveys the kabbalistic concept that different divine powers or angelic forces govern different times of the day and night cycle.

[B] Or: "will elevate him upon the high places of the 72-letter Name" — This translation more directly echoes biblical language of 'high places' (במתי) while maintaining the mystical significance of ascent through divine realms via the power of the 72-letter divine name.

[1] The Kedushah is a sanctification prayer recited during communal worship, containing the thrice-repeated word "Holy" (Kadosh) from Isaiah's vision, which is being referenced in this text as corresponding to different groups of sefirot.

[2] This biblical phrase (קרבן ריח ניחח לה׳) originally described acceptable Temple offerings. Here it is metaphorically applied to the soul's ascent after death, suggesting that a properly prepared death is itself a form of divine service comparable to Temple sacrifice.

[i] "Ana BeKoach" (אנא בכח) is a powerful prayer attributed to the 1st-century sage Rabbi Nehunya ben HaKanah. The prayer's forty-two words are arranged in seven lines of six words each, corresponding to the 42-letter divine name.

[ii] SHKUTZIT (שקו״ציות) is likely an acronym or code name for a divine name specifically associated with Sabbath prayer. The text indicates that this name is divided into three parts corresponding to different Sabbath observances.

באברתם יסוכו עליו וישאוהו
על במתי ע״ב.[iii] יהי רצון שנזכה
ונחיה ונראה לאורך ימים ומינן
עם כל ישראל יתקלס עילאה
בעה״ז ובעה״ב אכי״ר:[iv]

and in the World to Come.[B] Amen, may it be His will.

פרק ל״ז

שבח אנא בכח מועיל להעלות
הנפש מעולם העשיה והוא שם
מ״ב מקבוץ שבעה שמות כנגד
ספירות הבנין וכנגדן במעשה
בראשית עשרה מאמרות ול״ב
נתיבות שכל אות יתלבש בו כח
ורוחניות מאחד מהמאמרות או
הנתיבות ויוצא מתחלת בראשית
עד ב׳ ובהו בתמורות אלף
ביתות העולות ואינם יורדות
הכל ברזא דבינה דסלקא
לאתעטרא לעילא לעילא. ופי׳
מורי הגאון מפאנו[i] בספר העסיס
שלו כי כל שם מ״ב מקורו

Chapter 37

The prayer Ana BeKoach helps elevate the soul from the world of Asiyah (Action). It contains the 42-letter Divine Name formed from seven names corresponding to the seven sefirot of construction.[1] These also correspond to the ten utterances of creation and 5R the 32 paths of wisdom, with each letter embodying the power and spirituality from one of these utterances or paths. This Name is derived from the beginning of Genesis until the words "void and emptiness" through permutations of alphabets that ascend but 10R do not descend,[2] all according to the mystery of Binah that rises to be crowned above and beyond.[3]

My teacher, the Gaon of Fano, explained in his book HaAssis that every 42-letter Name originates

[A] Or: "may the Most High be glorified through us and all Israel in this world and in the World to Come" — This alternative captures the sense of 'יתקלס' as 'glorified' or 'exalted' rather than simply 'praised,' conveying the more transcendent quality of divine glorification being invoked.

[1] These refer to the seven lower divine emanations (Chesed through Malkhut) that constitute the active, world-building aspects of divinity in Kabbalah.
[2] This refers to specific methods of letter permutation in Kabbalah where the transformations follow an upward progression without returning downward, symbolizing spiritual ascent.
[3] This describes the mystical process whereby Binah (Understanding) is elevated to receive influence from higher divine sources, with 'above and beyond' (le'eila le'eila) being a technical phrase indicating transcendence beyond normal spiritual boundaries.

[i] "The heights of the 72-letter Name" refers to another powerful divine name in Kabbalah derived from three verses in Exodus (14:19-21), each containing 72 letters. This name represents divine mercy and is associated with ascent through celestial realms.
[ii] Cf. Isaiah 6:1-3 — This prophetic vision is used as a meditation for the dying because it represents direct encounter with divine glory. Just as Isaiah experienced divine revelation while still alive, the dying person is preparing for their own direct encounter with divine reality. | Cf. Ana BeKoach prayer — The prayer is referenced as a daily practice that prepares one for the ultimate transition at death. Its 42 words correspond to the 42-letter divine name mentioned in the text, creating a mystical link between daily spiritual practice and deathbed meditation. | Cf. Zohar on the Divine Throne — The text's detailed description of the celestial realms follows Zoharic cosmology, where the different worlds (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) are arranged hierarchically, with angels serving specific functions within each realm. | Cf. Ezekiel's Throne Vision — While not directly quoted, Ezekiel's vision informs the cosmology described here, particularly the reference to Ophanim (wheels) as celestial beings in the world of Asiyah. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The text's emphasis on the proper vocalization and pronunciation of divine names reflects Sefer Yetzirah's teaching that the universe was created through specific combinations of Hebrew letters and their sounds.
[iii] The author refers here to Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620), an important Italian kabbalist and student of Rabbi Moses Cordovero. He is often cited in Ma'avar Yabok as 'my teacher.'

מן ההוי״ה ומלוי מלואה שהם
כ״ח אותיות כמנין מנצפ״ך
במ״ק[ii] שהם בבינה. יעויין שער
האותיות בפרדס.[iii] וסלקא
לאתעטרא במלוי שם ההוי״ה
ראשון שהוא בחכמה בן עשר
אותיות וגם במקור הפשוט י׳ דוד
שהוא בכתר[i] שהם בין הכל מ״ב
כ״ח וי׳ וד׳ שהפשוט שרש לכלם
וזהו פירוש לעילא לעילא. ויש
שם מ״ב שהוא דיוקנא דמלכא
כנתבאר בתקונים והוא שם בן
ד׳ פשוט ומלא עם מלוי מלואו
שהן מ״ב אותיות וכמוהו בשם
אה״י״ה במילוי יודין או אלפין
אלא ששניהם בני מ״א אותיות
וכללות השם משלים למ״ב וכל
זה באצילות להעלות הבריאה
אליו וכן נשמת אדם שהיא מי
הבריאה תזדכך עמה ותעלה
במדרגת אצילות אלא שהראשון
שאינו להגה הוא באצילות
הנעלם להעלות פנימיות כלי
הבריאה אכתריאל י״ה ה׳
צבאות והשני משם אהי״ה הנגלה
סוד המאמרות והכנויים הנהגים
להעלות החלק החצון מכלי
הבריאה אליהם ולהיות כי
בבחינת המאמרות יבחנו הג׳
ראשונות בסוד רישא והשבעה
בסוד דרועין וגופא וירכין
לכן יש ב׳ שמות מאהי״ה המלא
ביודי״ן להעלות סוד ג׳ ראשונות והמלא באלפין להעלות שבע

from the Tetragrammaton and its full expansion, which contains 28 letters corresponding to the number of the five final letters (MaNTzaPaKh) in their full form, which reside in Binah. This is explained in Sha'ar HaOtiot in Pardes. It rises to be crowned in the first full expansion of the Tetragrammaton[4] which is in Chokhmah with ten letters, and also in the simple source, the Yod of David which is in Keter. Together these total 42: 28 plus 10 plus 4, with the simple form being the root of them all—this is the meaning of "above and beyond."

There is also a 42-letter Name that is the image of the King, as explained in Tikkunim. It consists of the simple four-letter Name plus its full expansion and the expansion of that expansion,[1] totaling 42 letters. Similarly with the Name Ehyeh in its expansion with Yods or Alephs, except that both contain 41 letters, and the entirety of the Name completes it to 42. All this exists in Atzilut to elevate Beriah to it, and likewise the human soul, which is from the waters of Beriah, is purified with it and ascends to the level of Atzilut.

The first, which is not pronounced, exists in the hidden Atzilut to elevate the inner aspect of the vessel of Beriah—Achtariel Yah YHVH Tzeva'ot. The second derives from the revealed Name Ehyeh, the secret of the utterances and the customary appellations that elevate the external part of the vessel of Beriah to them. Since in the aspect of the utterances, the first three sefirot are examined in the mystery of the head, and the seven in the mystery of arms, body, and thighs,[2] therefore there are two Names from Ehyeh: the one filled with Yods to ele-

[1] In Kabbalah, divine names are 'expanded' by spelling out each letter in full. The first expansion of YHVH, associated with Chokhmah, uses the letter Yod to spell out each component letter.

[2] This describes the technical kabbalistic method of triple expansion, where each letter is spelled out (milui), and then those spelled-out letters are themselves spelled out (milui d'milui), creating a cascading effect.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic anthropomorphic model of the sefirot, where the first three (Keter, Chokhmah, Binah) correspond to the head, while the seven lower sefirot correspond to the rest of the divine 'body.'

[i] MaNTzaPaKh refers to the five Hebrew letters that change form when appearing at the end of words (כ,פ,צ,נ,מ). The abbreviation 'beMK' likely refers to these letters in their 'full form' (milui) when spelled out completely.

[ii] This refers to Pardes Rimmonim (Orchard of Pomegranates), the systematic kabbalistic work by Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), specifically to the section called 'Gate of Letters.'

[iii] The phrase 'Yod of David' may refer to the letter Yod in King David's name, which in Kabbalah symbolizes his connection to Keter (Crown), the highest sefirah.

אחרונות ועד״ז יהיה העלאת
לבושי הנשמה בסוד שם אהי״ה
וחלופי המלואים כי רבו יהיה
עוד כפי השתנות הבחינות מדין
לרחמים וכפי המזגתם בפחות
ויתר. ואת שם מ״ב דדיוקנא
חתים בחותמא והוא אהי״ה
אשר אהי״ה שעולים מניינם מ״ב
וזהו בבריאה להעלות אליהם
רוחו של אדם עם כללות עולם
היצירה בכל בחינותיו כל א׳
מהם משבע כנדרש למעלה וכן
אהי״ה יה״ו שהוא שם המרגלא
המפורש בר״מ פ׳ יתרו בדבור
זכור את יום השבת עולה מ״ב
ובפ׳ תרומה דף קנ״ט תמצא
מדרוש זה ובהם דברים עתיקים
כשתבין בשמות המרגלא. וגם
בשמות הבריאה יש ב׳ בחינות
להעלאת הפנימיות היצירה
בסוד השם הראשון ובשני
לבושים וכן נדין ברוחו של אדם
ולבושו. ואית ציורא דחותמא
בשעוה תחלתו אבגית״ן עד
שקוצי״ת והוא ביצירה להעלות
אליה נפשו של אדם עם כללות
העשיה שנר״ן של אדם ימשכו
אחריהם סוד כל הכלליות שבכל
עולם להיות הוא מרכז כלם
והוא המעלה אותם בכח מעשיו
המאירים כל ההויו״ת הנותנים
חיות לכל עולם ועולם כאשר בא
בדברינו למעלה ושם זה יוצא
מבראשית הנזכר. ויש מוציאים
אותו מפסוק אז ישיר משה או
מן מ״ב אותיות אחרונות שבסוף
התורה. ובזה נכיר עילוי התורה
שבסופה נחתם שם זה המעלה
רוחניותה עד בינה בסוד אותיות
ומבינה לחכמה בסוד נקודות
ומחכמה לכתר בסוד טעמים.
עוד יש בה בחינת זיני״ן בסוד הצחצחות[i] ומשם ומעלה ברצוא

vate the mystery of the first three, and the one filled with Alephs to elevate the final seven. Similarly, the elevation of the soul's garments occurs through the mystery of the Name Ehyeh and variations of its expansions, which are many according to the changing aspects from judgment to mercy and according to their mixture in lesser or greater degree.

The 42-letter Name of the image is sealed with a seal, which is "Ehyeh Asher Ehyeh" whose numerical value equals 42. This exists in Beriah to elevate to them a person's spirit together with the entirety of the world of Yetzirah in all its aspects, each of them consisting of seven as required above. Similarly, "Ehyeh Yahu," which is the common Name explained in Ra'aya Mehemna in Parashat Yitro in the discussion of "Remember the Sabbath day," equals 42. In Parashat Terumah, page 159, you will find this exposition containing ancient matters when you understand the common Names.

Also in the Names of Beriah, there are two aspects for elevating the inner dimension of Yetzirah through the mystery of the first Name, and in the second, garments. Similarly, we judge concerning a person's spirit and its garment. There is an impression of the seal in wax beginning with ABGITATZ and ending with SHAKUTZIT, which exists in Yetzirah to elevate to it a person's soul together with the entirety of Asiyah. For the Nefesh-Ruach-Neshamah of a person draw after them the mystery of all the collective aspects in every world, as the person is the center of them all and elevates them through the power of his deeds, which illuminate all the Divine Names that give life to each world, as we have explained above. This Name is derived from the aforementioned beginning of Genesis. Some derive it from the verse "Then Moses sang" or from the final 42 letters at the end of the Torah.

In this we recognize the elevation of the Torah, that at its end is sealed this Name that elevates its spirituality to Binah through the mystery of letters, and from Binah to Chokhmah through the mystery of vowel points, and from Chokhmah to Keter through the mystery of cantillation marks. There is also in it the aspect of Zayin in the mystery of the Tzachtzachot (spiritual radiances), and from there upward in "running and returning."[1]

[i]The author is describing the mystical significance of Torah cantillation (ta'amim) and the letter Zayin in relation to the concept of Tzachtzachot (spiritual radiances), a technical kabbalistic term for refined divine illuminations.

ושוב:[iii] [ii]

פרק ל״ח

Chapter 38

הנה שם מ״ב אותיות בכל מקום שהוא נחלק לשבע שמות[i] ובכל אחד שש אותיות כנגד שש קצוות והשביעי סוד יום שבת שבכל שש שהיא הבינה[ii] וע״י היסוד שהוא שביעי עושה כלם נכללות משבע כי הוא המושך הבינה למטה. עוד שש אותיות שם זה הם כנגד שש כנפים אשר לשבעת השרפים שאולי ירמזו לשבעה דרגין דכורסייא או לשבעה היכלות שבם היכל היראה וכו׳ כאשר הובא בתקונים ויצדק גם כן לשבעה ספירות מחסד ולמטה וכן בשבע היכלות היצירה לבנת הספיר עצם השמים וכו׳ והיכל

Behold, the 42-letter Name in every place where it appears is divided into seven names, each containing six letters corresponding to the six directions,[2] with the seventh being the mystery of the Sabbath day that is within all six, which is Binah. Through Yesod, which is the seventh, all become included within seven, for it draws Binah downward. Furthermore, the six letters of this Name correspond to the six wings of the seven Seraphim, which perhaps allude to the seven levels of the Divine Throne, or to the seven Palaces among which is the Palace of Awe, etc., as brought in the Tikkunim. This also properly corresponds to the seven Sefirot from Chesed downward, and likewise to the seven Palaces of Yetzirah—the Palace of the Sapphire Brick, the Essence of Heaven, etc.—with [1] This fundamental kabbalistic concept describes the soul's spiritual movement—ascending to divine heights ('running') but necessarily returning to its earthly existence, maintaining a dynamic oscillation between transcendence and immanence.

[2] In Kabbalah, the 'six directions' (שש קצוות) refer to the six spatial dimensions (north, south, east, west, up, down) which correspond to the six sefirot from Chesed to Yesod, collectively called Zeir Anpin or the 'Small Face' of divinity.

[i] This phrase 'running and returning' derives from Ezekiel's vision of the heavenly creatures (Ezekiel 1:14) and became a fundamental concept in Kabbalah describing the oscillating movement of spiritual elevation and return.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The author grounds his explanation of the 42-letter divine name in Zoharic cosmology, showing how this prayer functions to elevate the soul through the spiritual worlds. | Cf. Pardes Rimmonim — The author cites Moses Cordovero's classic Kabbalistic work to explain the technical derivation of the 42-letter name, lending authority to his explanation. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author draws on Tikkunei Zohar's discussion of divine names to explain one manifestation of the 42-letter name, showing how different kabbalistic texts describe various aspects of this mystical name. | Cf. Zohar, Ra'aya Mehemna — The author cites this specific section of the Zohar to establish that the combination of divine names 'Ehyeh Yahu' equals 42 and relates to Sabbath observance, connecting the mystical name to ritual practice. | Cf. Zohar — The author provides a specific citation to the Zohar to support his exposition, indicating that readers can find additional 'ancient matters' there about the mystical names being discussed. | Cf. Ana BeKoach prayer — The author explains the mystical structure and function of this well-known kabbalistic prayer, which consists of 42 letters arranged in seven groups of six letters each, corresponding to the seven lower sefirot. | Cf. Book of Genesis — The author describes one method of deriving the 42-letter divine name from permutations of letters in the opening verses of Genesis, connecting mystical name-derivation techniques to the biblical creation account.

[iii] The 42-letter Divine Name is traditionally divided into seven groups of six letters, forming seven distinct names. The most famous version begins with the letters אבגית״ין (ABGITATZ).

[iv] This reflects the kabbalistic correspondence between the seven lower sefirot and the days of the week, with the seventh (Sabbath) corresponding to Binah (Understanding), which represents transcendence and rest.

העליון כולל כל ג׳ ראשונות
החשובות כאחד בכל מקום.
ובסוד בנפים אלו הנשמה עולה
בכל לילה למקומה ועולה עמה
גם בחינת הרוח והנפש ולא
נשאר באדם כי אם רוח החיוני
שהוא מכח הגלגלים ולכן טוב
וראוי להזכירו על מטתו[iii] כי
בכחו תתראה נשמתו ורוחו
ונפשו למעלה בסוד קדושים.
וכמו כן בשעת הפטירה אם
ישים אליו לבו רוחו ונשמתו
אליו יאסוף ויעלהו גם עלה
ויסתירהו בסתר כנפיו וידור
ברום חביון עוזו בצרור החיים
את ה׳ אלהינו[i] וישן אז ינוח לו.
אבל בעשיה שאין תחתיה עולם
אחר שיהיה ראוי להעלותו אליה
אין דורשין בה שם של מ״ב.
ונמצא מי שסדר האצילות ששה
סדרים של מ״ב. לשש קצוות
שבו להאיר מכלם למלכות
ולהעלותה אליהם תחלה הוא
פשוט. ומלא. ומלוי המלוי. כלו
ביו״דין. ואחריו על הסדר הזה
במלוי יודי״ן חוץ מן הוא״ו שהוא
באל״ף. וכמוהו במלוי אלפין
וכן בהי״ן אלא שזה האחרון
כלו לג׳ אותיות לבד. וצריך
להוסיף בו ט׳ ווי״ן של ברכת
כהנים והם ט׳ ווי״ן אשר בפסוק
והבל הביא גם הוא.[ii] שבן יסוד
ששה זה כנגדו הבל יוצא מפי
האמה וממשיך ברכת החסד כהן
עליון הכולל כל שאר הכתרים שתחתיו למלכות וביברכך עושה

the highest Palace encompassing all three supreme Sefirot, which are considered as one in every place.

Through the mystery of these wings, the soul ascends each night to its place, and with it also rise the aspects of Ruach and Nefesh, leaving in the person only the vital spirit which derives from the power of the celestial spheres. Therefore it is good and proper to invoke this Name upon one's bed, for through its power, one's Neshamah, Ruach, and Nefesh will appear above among the holy ones. Similarly, at the time of death, if one focuses their heart upon it, "He will gather his spirit and soul to Himself," raising them up and concealing them in the shelter of His wings, to dwell in the height of His hidden strength, in the bond of life with the Lord our God—and then when one sleeps, one will find rest. However, regarding the world of Asiyah, below which there is no other world worthy of being elevated to it, the 42-letter Name is not expounded. 20R 25R 30R 35R

One who arranges the six orders of the 42-letter Name in Atzilut for its six directions, to illuminate from all of them to Malkhut and elevate it to them, begins with the simple form, then the filled form, and then the filling of the filling[1]—all with Yuds. Following this comes the same order with Yuds in the filling, except for the Vav which is with Alef. Similarly with the filling of Alefs, and likewise with Heis, except that this last one is only for three letters. One must add to it the nine Vavs of the Priestly Blessing, which are the nine Vavs in the verse "And Abel also brought." For Yesod, which is sixth, corresponds to the breath that issues from the mouth of the amah[2] (channel), drawing down the blessing of Chesed—the High Priest who includes all the other crowns beneath him—to Malkhut. With "may He bless you," a line is drawn from the right; with "may 40R 45R 50R

[1]This refers to the kabbalistic practice of 'filling' divine names by spelling out each letter's name. For example, the letter Yod (י) spelled out is יוד, and 'filling of the filling' would spell out each letter in that spelled-out form, creating increasingly complex expansions of the original name.

[2]The term 'amah' (אמה) here has multiple layers of meaning, referring both to a channel through which divine influence flows and, in its esoteric sense, to the divine phallus or procreative power that channels spiritual energy to lower realms.

[i]This refers to the kabbalistic practice of reciting the 42-letter Divine Name before sleep as a protective measure and to facilitate the soul's ascent during sleep.

[ii]The phrase 'bound in the bond of life' (צרור החיים) comes from 1 Samuel 25:29 and became a common expression on Jewish tombstones, expressing the hope that the deceased's soul is preserved in eternal life with God.

[iii]This refers to Genesis 4:4, about Abel's offering. The author is noting that this verse contains nine instances of the letter Vav, which have mystical significance in relation to the Priestly Blessing.

ה קו מן ימין. וביאר קו שמאל.
ובישא קו האמצעי. ועוד יוצא
55 משם שם של כ״ב נגד כ״ב אותיות
שהיא כלולה מת״ת מאל״ף עד
ת״ו ועוד נכלל בג׳ הוי״ת
שבו שם י״ב הרומז יחוד הגמור
ולכן טוב לכוין בו בסוף כל
60 ברכה לברך בו עמו ישראל
הנכללים במלכות בשלום רב
וממנו יוצאים ע״ב צרופי הוי״ת
בני ד׳ אותיות כי נצרף שם
בן ד׳ לכ״ד צרופים וכן לכל
65 אחד מג׳ שמות הנזכרים והם
מתלבשות בע״ב שמות היוצאים
מן ויסע ויבא ויט: ואמרו בזהר
פרשת תרומה דף רל״ד כי אורים
ותומים היו שם מ״ב וע״ב ולבושי
70 כהן גדול היו בגוונא דלבושי
מיכאל ופירש בדף רכ״ט למה
נקראים בגדי שרד ובאורים
ותומים היה סוד אספקלריאה
המאירה ושאינה מאירה ובסוד
75 זה בשהיה מברך הכהן העם היה
מעורר הברכה מרחובות הנהר
כי בברכת כהנים אית בה תשעה
תקוני זעיר בסוד י״הו הבונות
תשעה בתים ונמתקים מעתיקא
80 קדישא ששם י״ג תקוני דיקנא
יקירא עילאה ואח״כ נשפעים
ממותקים למלכות ע״י יסוד
וזהו שים שלום טובה וברכה
שבסוף התפלה שהוא היחוד
85 הגמור וכל זה באור פניך שהוא
הארת הפנים העליונים בסוד שם
הוי״ה מלא ביודי״ן בגימטרי״א
ע״ב הנותן נשמה לכל ע״י אור
הכתר הנשפע בחכמה שמחיה
90 את בעליה הרי אלו ד׳ שמות
של מ״ב לגג״ת ויסוד ושם חמישי
לנצח הוא עם מלוי שם הוי״ה

He illuminate you," a line from the left; and with "may He lift up," the middle line.

From there emerges a 22-letter Name corresponding to the 22 letters which are included in Tiferet, from Alef to Tav. Additionally, the three Tetragrammatons within it comprise a 12-letter Name alluding to complete unification. Therefore it is good to have in mind at the end of every blessing to bless with it His people Israel, who are included in Malkhut, with abundant peace. From it emerge 72 permutations of the four-letter Tetragrammaton,[3] for we permute the four-letter Name into 24 combinations, and likewise for each of the three Names mentioned, and these become clothed in the 72 Names derived from "And he journeyed," "And he came," and "And he stretched out" [Exodus 14:19-21].

They said in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 234, that the Urim and Thummim were the 42-letter and 72-letter Names, and the garments of the High Priest were like the garments of Michael. It explains on page 229 why they are called "service garments," and in the Urim and Thummim was the mystery of the luminous speculum and the non-luminous speculum.[1] Through this mystery, when the priest blessed the people, he would awaken the blessing from the broadways of the River, for in the Priestly Blessing there are nine arrangements of Zeir Anpin based on the letters Yod-Hei-Vav,[2] which build nine houses, and they are sweetened from the Holy Ancient One, where there are thirteen arrangements of the precious supernal beard. Afterwards, they flow sweetened to Malkhut through Yesod. This is the meaning of "Establish peace, goodness, and blessing" at the end of the prayer, which is the complete unification. All this is "in the light of Your countenance," which is the illumination of the supernal countenance, through the mystery of the Tetragrammaton fully spelled with Yuds, numerically equivalent to 72, which gives the soul to all through the light of Keter flowing into Chokhmah, bringing life to its possessor.

[1] In Kabbalah, the divine name YHVH can be written in 24 different permutations. When each of the three divine names mentioned is permuted in 24 ways, the total becomes 72, corresponding to the 72-letter divine name derived from Exodus 14:19-21.

[2] These terms ('אספקלריאה המאירה' and 'אספקלריאה שאינה מאירה') refer to different levels of prophetic vision. Moses is said to have prophesied through the luminous speculum (clear glass), while other prophets saw through the non-luminous speculum (clouded glass).

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the three letters of YHV, when each is placed in first, second, or third position, create nine combinations that correspond to specific divine channels through which blessing flows.

ביודי״ן קס״א מלוי שם אהי״ה
ביודי״ן מ״ה מלוי שם הוי״ה
באלפין תרע״א מלוי שם א״ד
שהם מ״ב אותיות. ששי להוד
והוא שם ס״ג מלוי הוי״ה בג׳
יודי״ן ואל״ף בוא״ו קמ״ג שם
אהי״ה באלפין מ״ה תרע״א
וצרוף קמ״ג עם ס״ג ניחא משום
אל״ף שבשם ס״ג שהיא שרש לכל
האלפין שבשם מ״ה וקמ״ג. ועוד
כי קס״א הוא חסד בערך הוד
שהוא דין ושם מ״ב של אהי״ה
פשוט ומלא מלוי מלואו יפורש
אם ביודי״ן במלכות בהשואתה
למעלה ואם באלפין בהשואתה
למטה וכללות השם משלים
בשניהם ואם בההין שאותיותיו
ט״ל בלבד יצדק בבריאה וג׳
שמות אהי״ה שבתורה ישלימו.
עוד ב׳ אהי״ה במספרם עולים
מ״ב וכן אהיה שלישי מצטרף עם
יה״ו גם הם מ״ב. וסוד זה השם
הנורא של מ״ב מבואר בזהר
ובתקונים בכמה מקומות ובפרט
בתקון רביעי ושם בדף ק״ב ע״א
כתב שממנו נעשה ז׳ היכלות
כנזכר למעלה. ובדף קל״ד
מבאר באורך סודו ונקודותיו
ומוצאו ושמות היוצאים ממנו
והם כתובים בספ״ר יע״ש.
ויוצא ממדת הגבורה והן בחות
שכליות אלהיות וכבודו של
מקום מתאחד בהם ומתעלה
עד אין סוף לרוממותו כאשר
כתבנו למעלה. כמו שאמרו
באלפא ביתא של ר׳ עקיבא
על ע״ב שמות המסודרים על
סדר האל״ף בית שהם יוצאים
מלפני כסא הכבוד בכתרים של
אש ולהבה.[i] כי הם עצם אמיתי
ואותיות פורחות למעלה בעקר
המרכבה והם ממונים לעשות
כל דבר מהם. וכבר כתבנו כי
שם מ״ב מעלה את הנשמה ע״י
השרפים בעלי שש כנפים. ושמות
המרגלא אהי״ה יה״ו מעלה

These, then, are four forms of the 42-letter Name for Chesed-Gevurah-Tiferet and Yesod. The fifth form, for Netzach, consists of the filled Tetragrammaton with Yuds (161), the filled Name Ehyeh with Yuds (45), the filled Tetragrammaton with Alefs (671), and the filled Name AD, totaling 42 letters. The sixth, for Hod, consists of the Name SaG (63)—the Tetragrammaton filled with three Yuds and Alef in the Vav—plus the Name KaMaG (143), plus the Name Ehyeh filled with Alefs (45), equaling 671. The combination of 143 with 63 works well because of the Alef in the Name SaG, which is the root of all the Alefs in the Names MaH and KaMaG. Furthermore, 161 is Chesed in relation to Hod, which is Din (judgment). 95R 100R 105R

The 42-letter Name derived from Ehyeh—simple, filled, and filling of the filling—can be interpreted with Yuds in Malkhut when it is equated with the higher realms, or with Alefs when it is equated with the lower realms, with the entirety of the Name completing both interpretations. If with Heis, whose letters total only 39, it is properly associated with Beriah, and the three Ehyeh Names in the Torah complete it. Additionally, two Ehyeh Names in their numerical value equal 42, and likewise the third Ehyeh combined with YHV also equals 42. 110R 115R

The mystery of this awesome 42-letter Name is explained in the Zohar and Tikkunim in many places, particularly in the fourth Tikkun, where on page 102a it states that from it are formed the seven Palaces mentioned above. On page 134, it explains at length its mystery, its vowel points, its origin, and the names derived from it, which are written in the book—see there. It emerges from the attribute of Gevurah, and these are divine intellectual powers with which the glory of the Omnipresent unites and elevates itself infinitely in His exaltedness, as we wrote above. As they said in the Alpha-Beta of Rabbi Akiva concerning the 72 Names arranged according to the alphabet, that they issue from before the Throne of Glory with crowns of fire and flame, for they are true essence, and the letters fly upward in the foundation of the Divine Chariot, and they are appointed to accomplish everything through them. 120R 125R 130R 135R

We have already written that the 42-letter Name

[i] This describes the divine names as emanating directly from the Throne of Glory adorned with fiery crowns, emphasizing their exalted spiritual origin and power.

הרוח מעולם היצירה בכוין בהם. ובפ׳ תרומה מתבאר שם מ״ב וע״ב.[ii] ומדרגת כל אחד מהם. ואותיות הוי״ה והמלוי ומלוי המלוי שהם ג״פ מ״ב מועיל המחשבה בהם להעלות הנשמה מעולם הבריאה כנתבאר בפרטות למעלה בזה:[i] elevates the Neshamah through the Seraphim with six wings, while the commonly known Names Ehyeh and YHV elevate the Ruach from the world of Yetzirah when one focuses on them. In Parashat Terumah, the 42-letter and 72-letter Names are explained, along with the level of each. Meditation on the letters of the Tetragrammaton, its filling, and the filling of its filling[1]—which are three times 42—helps elevate the Neshamah from the world of Beriah, as explained in detail above.

פרק ל״ט

Chapter 39

בין תבין בר״מ פרשת צו[ii] ומשם יתגלה לך יחוד שמע ישראל וברוך שם כבוד מלכותו לעולם ועד בשעת מיתה. וכוונת הודוי שהוא לקרבא שם אדנ״י דאכיל ושצי בדינוהי לגבי יה״ו אהיה העולים מ״ב כנזכר.[iii] ויכוין ג״כ בשם מ״ה בלב אחד ובנפש דיליה מקבל עליו מיתה ויסורין. ובנשמתא מודה בכמה ודויי

You will understand from the Ra'aya Mehemna in Parashat Tzav, which will reveal to you the unification of "Shema Yisrael" and "Baruch Shem Kevod Malchuto Le'olam Va'ed"[2] at the time of death. And the intention of confession is to bring near the name ADNY, which consumes and destroys in its judgments, to YHV EHYEH,[3] which together equal 42 as mentioned. One should also focus on the name MA"H (45) with a single heart, and with one's soul accept death and suffering. With the neshamah, one

[1]The author describes an advanced kabbalistic meditation practice wherein one contemplates increasingly complex expansions of divine names to elevate the soul through higher spiritual worlds, with each level of expansion corresponding to a different spiritual realm.

[2]These are the first line of the central Jewish prayer affirming God's unity ("Hear O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One") and the response traditionally recited in an undertone ("Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever"). The text explains their mystical significance when recited at death.

[3]The text describes a mystical process of unifying divine names representing judgment (ADNY) with those representing mercy (YHV EHYEH), suggesting that proper confession transforms harsh judgment into compassion.

[i]The author refers to the Zohar portion of Terumah which elaborates on both the 42-letter and 72-letter Divine Names and their respective spiritual functions.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Terumah — The author uses this Zohar reference to establish the relationship between the 42-letter Name, the priestly garments, and the mystical mechanisms through which blessings flow through various levels of divinity | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author draws on these kabbalistic sources to legitimize and deepen his explanation of the 42-letter Name's mystical structure and function in spiritual elevation | Cf. Alpha-Beta of Rabbi Akiva — The author uses this reference to establish the profound divine nature of these sacred names and their direct connection to the highest spiritual realms | Cf. Exodus 14:19-21 — The author mentions this standard kabbalistic derivation to show how the 72 permutations of the Divine Name emerge from biblical text, thus rooting mystical practice in scripture | Cf. Priestly Blessing — The author analyzes the nine Vavs in this blessing as channels for divine energy from higher spiritual realms to lower ones, demonstrating how ritual action creates cosmic effects

[iii]The text begins by referring to Ra'aya Mehemna ('The Faithful Shepherd'), a section of the Zohar attributed to Moses, specifically the portion on Parashat Tzav. This serves as an authoritative source for the mystical practices described.

[iv]The text specifies that the combined numerical value of the divine names YHV and EHYEH equals 42, which is significant in Jewish mysticism as the 42-letter divine name (Shem Mem-Bet) that has special power for soul elevation.

ומתחרט בנפש מקבל עליו
מאהבה ארבע מיתות ב״ד[iv] אם
צריך להם לכפרת נפשו ולתקן
פגם שעשה בארבע אותיות
משלש שמות הכוללים הכל
שהם הוי״ה אהי״ה אדנו״ת.
וכשנשמתיה מודה בכמה ודויין.
ותב בתיובתא לגבי אהי״ה
דאחיד בתרין שמהן ה׳ ה׳
שהם אריך וזעיר הראשון זעיר
המתיחד וקורא לארוך שבו שם
קדוש שהוא שם הוי״ה ואהי״ה
משולבים שהם בחינת רישא. וזה
סוד הפרק שבין שם לשם יורה
לסוד הדעת המזווגם[i] במחשבתיה
יכיל לאפקא עליה ודוי וקבלת
מיתה בלב אחד דהוא שם מ״ה
דביה היו כורעים ומשתחוים
ואומרים ברוך שם כבוד מלכותו
לעולם ועד כבוד הוא ל״ב.[ii] בו
היה מכוין לגמור את השם ואומר
הוא אחד בלב. ויחוד שמע
ובשכמל״ו הוא לקרבא נשמתיה
מאנא לשם ה׳. ועם הארץ
דלא ידע דא והוא בבעידא
דכיא[iii] שור או שה או עז או תור
או בן יונה מיכאל דהוא כהנא
רבא[iv] אריה דאכיל קורבנייא

confesses with many confessions, and with contrition of soul, one accepts with love the four court-imposed death penalties[4] if needed for the atonement of one's soul and to rectify the blemish made in the four letters of the three names that encompass all, which are YHVH, EHYEH, and ADNUT. 15R

When one's soul confesses with many confessions and returns in repentance to EHYEH, which holds the two names H' H' representing Arich and Zeir[1]—the first being Zeir which unifies and calls to the Arich within it, which is the holy name formed by the interwoven names YHVH and EHYEH that are the aspect of the Head. This is the secret of the joint between name and name, pointing to the secret of Da'at that blends them. In one's thought, one can bring forth confession and acceptance of death with a single heart, which is the name MA"H (45), through which they would bow and prostrate and say, "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever"—where "glory" equals 32.[2] With this, one would intend to complete the Name and say "He is One" in the heart. The unification of Shema and "Blessed be the name..." is to bring one's soul as a vessel to the name of God. 20R 25R 30R

As for the unlearned person who does not know this, who is like a pure animal—an ox, sheep, goat, bull, or young dove[3]—Michael, who is the High Priest, a lion who consumes offerings, descends upon 35R

[1]This refers to stoning, burning, beheading, and strangling—the four forms of capital punishment in ancient Jewish law. The text suggests that accepting these spiritually at death provides atonement.

[2]These are kabbalistic terms referring to divine configurations: Arich Anpin (Long-Faced One) represents a higher level of divine mercy, while Zeir Anpin (Small-Faced One) represents the divine configuration that more directly interacts with creation.

[3]The Hebrew word 'kavod' (glory) has a numerical value of 32, which corresponds to the 32 paths of wisdom in Kabbalistic tradition.

[4]These are animals that were considered appropriate for Temple sacrifices in biblical law. The metaphor suggests that even an unlearned person becomes a pure offering through proper death.

[i]The four court-imposed death penalties in Jewish law were stoning, burning, beheading, and strangling. The text suggests that accepting these spiritually at death (through proper confession) provides atonement for sins.

[ii]The concept of Da'at (Knowledge) in Kabbalah represents the point where divine masculine and feminine attributes blend together. It serves as the connecting point between the higher sefirot (Keter, Chokhmah, Binah) and the lower sefirot.

[iii]The Hebrew word for 'glory' (kavod) has a numerical value of 32, which corresponds to the 32 paths of wisdom in Kabbalistic tradition, connecting this prayer to divine wisdom.

[iv]The text compares the unlearned person to a pure animal suitable for sacrifice, using sacrificial animals mentioned in the Torah. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that different souls require different paths of elevation.

[v]Michael is portrayed as the celestial High Priest who offers souls as sacrifices before God, continuing the Temple service in the spiritual realms after the earthly Temple's destruction.

נחית עליה כד תב במיתתיה
40 והוא עביד ליה עולה וקרבנא קדם ה׳. והוא מכוין בשמא מפרש שהוא שם הוי״ה במלוי מ״ה בגימטרי״א אד״ם[v] בסליקו דרוחיה. ובכל יומא אצטריך בר
45 נש לאהדרא בתיובתא ולממסר רוחיה לגביה ויפיק באחד. הדא הוא דכתיב בידך אפקיד רוחי. הי לך יחוד שעושה הצדיק בנשמתו בעת פטירתה ולזה
50 יכוונו העומדים עליו וגם הוא אם ראה אור בחייו. נעתק מספר הזהר פרשת ויחי דף רל״ה ע״א ועיין עוד מזה בדף רמ״ה ושם אמר דאית תלת נשמתין בעולם
55 ונשמת הצדיקים היא השלישית מהם דרוש נאה. רבי אליעזר שאיל שאלתא לר״ש אמר הואיל וקודשא בריך הוא גלי קמיה דבני נשא ימותון אמאי נחית
60 נשמתין לעלמא ואמא. אצטריך ליה, א״ל שאלתא דא קמי דרבנן שאילו במה ובמה ואוקמוה. אבל קוב״ה יהיב נשמתין דנחתין להאי עלמא לאשתמודעא יקריה
65 ונקיט לון לבתר. אי הכי אמאי נחתי אלא רזא דא הכי הוא. פתח ואמר שתה מים מבורך ונוזלים מתוך בארך והא אוקימנא בור אתר דלא נביע מגרמיה.[i] ואימתי
70 נבעין הני מיא בשעתא דאשתלים נשמתא בהאי עלמא כד סלקא להההוא אתר דאתקשר ביה כדין הוא שלים מתתא ומעילא מכל him when he repents at his death, and makes him an elevation offering before God. He focuses on the explicit name, which is the name YHVH spelled out to equal 45 in gematria,[4] equivalent to ADA"M, as his spirit ascends. Every day, a person needs to return in repentance and entrust his spirit to Him and depart with "Echad" (One). This is what is written: "Into Your hand I commit my spirit." This is the unification that the righteous one performs with his soul at the time of its departure, and this is what those standing around him should intend, as well as himself if he has seen the light in his lifetime.

This is copied from the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, page 235a. See more on this on page 245, where it states that there are three types of souls in the world, and the souls of the righteous are the third among them—a beautiful exposition. Rabbi Eliezer asked Rabbi Shimon: "Since the Holy One, blessed be He, knows that humans will die, why does He send souls into the world at all? What need has He for this?" He replied: "This question has been asked many times before the Rabbis, and they established [an answer]. But the Holy One, blessed be He, gives souls that descend to this world to make His glory known, and afterward takes them back. If so, why do they descend? The secret is as follows." He opened and said: "Drink water from your cistern, and flowing waters from your well." We have established that a cistern is a place that does not spring forth by itself.[1] When do these waters spring forth? At the time when the soul is completed in this world, when it ascends to that place to which it is bound, then it is complete from below and from above, from all sides. And when the soul ascends, then the desire of the female is aroused toward the male.[2] Then waters

[1] This refers to spelling out each letter of the divine name: Yod (יוד), Heh (הא), Vav (ואו), Heh (הא), which totals 45 in gematria (Hebrew numerology).

[2] This mystical interpretation distinguishes between a passive receptacle (cistern) and an active wellspring, using it as a metaphor for how the soul's completion transforms spiritual receptivity into active flow.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of divine masculine and feminine principles (often represented by the sefirot of Tiferet and Malkhut) whose unification creates cosmic harmony and divine flow.

[i] When the divine name YHVH is spelled out in a specific way (yod-heh-vav-heh), its numerical value equals 45 (MA'H), which also equals the numerical value of ADAM (man). This creates a mystical connection between the divine name and human essence.

[ii] The Zohar distinguishes between a 'cistern' (בור/bor) which does not generate its own water and must be filled, and a 'well' (באר/be'er) which has a spring. This is a metaphor for different spiritual states of receptivity versus active flow.

סטרין. וכד נשמתא סלקא כדין
איתער תיאובתא דנוקבא לגבי
דכורא. וכדין נבעין מיא מתתא
לעילא ובור אתעביד באר מיין
נביעין וכדין אתחברותא ויסודא
ותיאובתא ורעוא ויחודא אשתכח
דהא צדיקא אשלים ההוא אתר.
ואתער חביבותא וריעותא
לעילא ואתחבר בחד.[i] עוד
ראוי לדעת כוונת ירידת
הנשמות בעה״ז הוא להיותם
בעבודתם כיתדות האוחזות הכח
העליון[ii] המתלבש בספירות
להיותו מתלבש מדה במדה
להנהיג. כאלו יצוייר שאין
נשמות בעולם הרוח הקדוש היה
מסתלק והיינו רוחו ונשמתו אליו
יאסוף יגוע כל בשר יחד.[iii] ולזה
כיון שהנשמות מתלבשות בגופות
אוחזות באותו רוח שיתלבש.
בספירות העליונות ותכלית
זה יושלם יותר בתחיה כי
יזדככו הגופות ויתוקנו הנשמות
ויתקשרו הצדיקים ויעמדו על
משמרתם ותקונם ויפיים כל
אחד בקומה שלמה מכוון במדתו
ובמרכבתו[iv] ותהיה קומה
העליונה מכוונת נגד התחתונה
והתחתונה נגד העליונה. ותקון
זה היה ראוי להיות מתחלת
הבריאה אלא שגרם החטא
להיות העולם תחת הנהגת

spring from below upward, and the cistern becomes a well of flowing waters. Then connection, foundation, desire, will, and unification are found, for the righteous one has completed that place and aroused love and friendship above, and all becomes united as one. 75R

Furthermore, it is important to know that the purpose of souls descending into this world is that through their service, they act as stakes that hold the supernal power[1] that clothes itself in the sefirot, enabling it to clothe itself measure by measure to govern. If one could imagine that there were no souls in the world, the Holy Spirit would depart, and "He would gather to Himself His spirit and His breath; all flesh would perish together." Therefore, since souls clothe themselves in bodies, they grasp that spirit so that it may clothe itself in the supernal sefirot. This purpose will be fulfilled more completely in the resurrection,[2] for then bodies will be purified, souls will be rectified, the righteous will be bound together and stand at their posts and in their rectification, each one mediating with complete stature, aligned with his attribute and his chariot. The supernal structure will be aligned with the lower one, and the lower with the supernal. 80R 85R 90R 95R

This rectification should have been in place from the beginning of creation, but sin caused the world to fall under the governance of the sabbatical of judgment,[3] for they would journey first in their governance. In this, there is no wonder why, as it were, the Creator of the world had no satisfaction in His world from the day of creation until the world will 100R 105R

[1] The text presents a cosmic purpose for human souls: they serve as anchoring points for divine energy in the physical world, suggesting that human existence is necessary for the maintenance of creation itself.

[2] The Jewish belief in bodily resurrection (techiyat ha-metim) is presented here as the ultimate fulfillment of creation's purpose, when the physical and spiritual realms will be perfectly aligned.

[3] This refers to a cosmic cycle dominated by divine severity rather than mercy. In kabbalistic thought, different cosmic cycles emphasize different divine attributes.

[i] The phrase 'becoming united as one' refers to the mystical unification (yichud) of divine masculine and feminine principles, a central concept in Kabbalah that is considered the ultimate cosmic purpose.

[ii] The metaphor of souls as 'stakes' or 'pegs' holding divine power suggests that human souls serve as anchoring points for divine energy in the physical world, giving them cosmic significance beyond individual salvation.

[iii] This is an allusion to Job 34:14-15, which describes God's absolute power over life. The text uses this verse to emphasize the dependence of physical existence on divine spiritual sustenance.

[iv] The phrase 'complete stature' (komah shelemah) refers to the kabbalistic concept of Adam Kadmon (Primordial Man), the complete divine anthropomorphic structure that perfectly embodies all divine attributes.

שמיטת הדין[v] כי ראשונה יסעו בהנהגתם. ובזה אין לתמוה למה כביכו״ל לא היה לבורא עולם נחת רוח בעולמו מיום הבריאה
110 עד כי יתוקן העולם על דרך ורעם גבורותיו מי יתבונן[i] ולא היה לנשמות להתאסף לעה״ב מעט מעט ח״ו. וזהו בדמות אלהים עשה אותו וכל תקון
115 האבות והדורות יהיה באלו גלגל להנהגה נוהגת כל שיתא אלפי שני עלמא בתקונהא הראשון על כן הוצרכו היסורים והמיתה והגליות משמטת הגבורה
120 הלזו לתקן המעוות שהוא כמשל רוכב הסוס[ii] שעסקיו רעים ואינו הולך בדרך ישרה והרוכב מנהגו כפי עקשותו אך לסוף יגיע אחר הטרדא אל מקום שהיה חפצו
125 לילך מתחלה כך עצת ה׳ לעולם תעמוד בתקון העולם בכלל ובפרט:[iii] be rectified, as it says: "Who can understand the thunder of His mighty deeds?"[4] And souls would not have needed to gather to the World to Come little by little, God forbid. This is the meaning of "in the image of God He made him," and all the 110R rectification of the patriarchs and generations will be as if turning the wheel back to the governance that should have prevailed throughout the six thousand years of the world in its original rectification. Therefore, sufferings, death, and exiles were neces- 115R sary from this sabbatical of Gevurah to rectify what was distorted. This is like the parable of one riding a horse[1] whose actions are evil and does not go on the straight path; the rider manages it according to its stubbornness, but in the end, after the trouble, 120R he will reach the place he originally wanted to go. Similarly, "the counsel of the Lord stands forever," in the rectification of the world in general and in particular.

פרק מ׳

Chapter 40

[1] This is a reference to Job 26:14, suggesting that divine power and cosmic processes are ultimately beyond human comprehension.
[2] This parable illustrates divine providence working through indirect means, allowing for apparent detours while still ultimately reaching the desired destination.

[i] The 'sabbatical of judgment' refers to a cosmic cycle dominated by divine severity rather than mercy. In kabbalistic thought, different cosmic cycles emphasize different divine attributes.
[ii] This is a reference to Job 26:14, suggesting that divine power and cosmic processes are ultimately beyond human comprehension, even while the text attempts to explain them.
[iii] The parable of the rider and the stubborn horse illustrates how divine providence works through indirect means, allowing for apparent detours while still ultimately reaching the desired destination.
[iv] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna in Parashat Tzav — The author cites this text as an authoritative source for the mystical intentions required when reciting the Shema prayer at the moment of death, establishing the importance of proper ritual practices with the correct spiritual focus. | Cf. Zohar Parashat Vayechi — The author quotes this passage to explain the cosmic purpose of souls entering the physical world and how their eventual return creates a unification and flowing of divine energy in the upper realms, supporting the book's understanding of death as a completion rather than merely an ending. | Cf. Proverbs 5:15 — The author uses this verse, through its Zoharic interpretation, to explain how the soul's completion of its earthly mission transforms the divine feminine (represented by the cistern/well) from a receptive state to an active flowing state, creating cosmic unification. | Cf. Shema Yisrael — The author explains the mystical significance of reciting these prayers at the time of death, revealing how they create divine unifications in the upper worlds when recited with proper intention (kavvanah), particularly by the righteous. | Cf. Job 34:14-15 — The author uses this verse to explain the cosmic significance of human souls, suggesting that they serve as anchoring points for divine energy in the physical world, without which creation could not be sustained.

מורה מקום מהזוהר ותקונים[iv] מהרבה דרושים השייכים לכוונת הספר הלז[i] [ii]

Index of References[2] from the Zohar and Tikkunim Pertaining to the Purpose of This Book עיין בזהר פר׳ ויקהל מדף ר״י עד דף רי״ב משם תראה הממונים על הנשמה ואומרים לה יבא שלום[iii] וי״ב זיני דבוסמין[iv] המכינים לבושים שבתוכם נרשמים כל מעשים טובים שעשתה בעה״ז ורקיע ג״ע הנוטף טל תורה על נשמות לטהרם. ועמוד שבאמצע הרקיע שבו פורחין הנשמות לג״ע עליון. ולבושים שהם מרעותא וכונה. ושרש נהר היוצא מעדן ואפי׳ בג״ע תחתון. ופי׳ ג״ע. ומה הם צחצחות.[v] וענן. ועשן. ונגה. המקפים על הנשמות העולים דרך העמוד. ופי׳ מכון הר ציון וענג נשמות העולות.

See the Zohar, Parshat Vayakhel from page 210 to page 212, where you will find the appointed guardians over the soul who say to it, "May peace come," and the twelve types of fragrances[1] that prepare garments in which all the good deeds performed in this world are recorded. There is also the firmament of the Garden of Eden that drips the dew of Torah upon souls to purify them, and the pillar in the center of the firmament through which souls ascend to the supernal Garden of Eden. You will learn about garments formed from desire and intention,[2] the source of the river flowing from Eden even in the lower Garden of Eden, and the explanation of the Garden of Eden itself.

You will discover what are the "tzachtzachot" (radiant lights),[3] and the cloud, smoke, and brightness that surround the souls ascending through the pillar.

[1] This section marks the beginning of a comprehensive reference guide to Zoharic and other kabbalistic sources that form the textual foundation for Ma'avar Yabok's teachings on death and the afterlife. Such indices were important in scholarly works to demonstrate the author's textual authority and to help readers trace concepts to their original sources.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, these fragrances (bosmin) are not physical scents but spiritual essences that form the soul's garments in the afterlife, composed of the good deeds performed during life.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that spiritual intentions (kavvanot) and proper desires (re'uta) create ethereal garments for the soul in the afterlife, distinct from those formed by actual deeds.

[4] I've transliterated this term while providing its meaning in parentheses because it's a technical kabbalistic term referring to particularly refined spiritual illuminations experienced by the soul in the highest realms.

[i] The term 'moreh makom' (literally 'showing the place') refers to an index or reference guide. The author is introducing a directory of relevant passages from the Zohar and Tikkunim (Tikkunei Zohar) that support the book's teachings.

[ii] The phrase 'kavannat ha-sefer halaz' refers to the purpose or intention of this book, Ma'avar Yabok. This index will point readers to the mystical sources that underpin the book's approach to death, burial rituals, and the soul's journey.

[iii] Cf. Zohar — The author is creating a reference guide to Zoharic passages relevant to death, mourning, and the afterlife to establish the textual basis for Ma'avar Yabok's teachings and show its grounding in authoritative kabbalistic literature. | Cf. Tikkunim — The author includes references to Tikkunei Zohar alongside the main Zohar text to provide comprehensive sources for the kabbalistic concepts discussed in Ma'avar Yabok, particularly those related to the soul's journey after death.

[iv] This refers to angelic beings who greet and guide the soul as it enters the afterlife. According to the Zohar, these appointed guardians welcome righteous souls with the greeting "May peace come."

[v] The "twelve types of fragrances" have mystical significance in Kabbalah, corresponding to the twelve tribes of Israel and various spiritual configurations. These fragrances are spiritual essences that form the soul's garments in the afterlife.

[vi] This term derives from Isaiah 58:11 ("וְהִשְׂבִּיעַ בְּצַחֲצָחוֹת נַפְשֶׁךָ") and in Kabbalah refers to the highest spiritual radiances or illuminations that souls experience in the afterlife.

וסוד רחיצת הנשמות בנהר דינור.[vi] וב׳ מיני צרופים לנשמות ולמה נקרא גיהנם. עוד מעבירין אותה באש כשמעלין אותה לג״ע עליון. וכמה דרושים בשכר הנשמות. ועוד נדבר מזה לפנים בס״ד. ועיין בפ׳ פקודי יחוד שעושים הנשמות [i]

There is an explanation of "the foundation of Mount Zion" and the delight of ascending souls, as well as the secret of souls being washed in the River of Fire. You will learn about the two types of purifications for souls and why it is called Gehenna. Furthermore, souls are passed through fire when they are elevated to the supernal Garden of Eden. There are many discourses on the reward of souls, and we will speak more of this further on, God willing.[1]

Examine also Parshat Pekudei regarding the unification performed by souls.

העולות בכל לילה בבטן האם העליונה[ii] בקשוטי מצוותיהם.[iii] וזה על פסוק חדשים לבקרים. וגם זה נדרש בפ׳ נח דף ס׳ ע״ב ובפ׳ ויחי דף רמ״ד ע״ב ומ״ה. ושם צריך חלוקא דרבנן[iv] לנשמות בדף ס״ו ע״ב. ועליית הנשמה למזבח העליון הובא בסתרי תורה דף פ׳. ושם דרוש על ד׳ מדרגות

[This passage] ascend each night into the womb of the Supernal Mother,[2] adorned with their commandments.[3] This is explained regarding the verse "new every morning"[4] [Lamentations 3:23]. This matter is also expounded in Parashat Noach, page 60b, and in Parashat Vayechi, pages 244b and 45. There it is stated that souls need the "scholarly garment"[5] as explained on page 66b. The ascent of the soul to the supernal altar is discussed in Sitrei Torah (Secrets of Torah) on page 80, where there is also a discourse on

[1]The phrase "בס״ד" (be-siyata di-shmaya) is an Aramaic expression meaning "with the help of Heaven," which I've rendered as "God willing" to maintain the author's reverent tone while expressing his intention to elaborate on these topics later in the book.

[2]This refers to the kabbalistic belief that during sleep, souls partially detach from the body and ascend to higher spiritual realms for renewal and instruction.

[3]In Kabbalah, the mitzvot (commandments) performed by a person create spiritual garments that clothe and protect the soul in the supernal realms.

[4]From Lamentations 3:23, this verse is interpreted kabbalistically to refer to the souls' nightly ascent and return, bringing new spiritual awareness each morning.

[5]The "scholarly garment" (chaluka d'rabbanan) is a spiritual vestment created from one's Torah study and good deeds that protects and dignifies the soul in the afterlife.

[i]The "River of Fire" appears in Daniel 7:10 and in kabbalistic literature represents a purifying process that souls undergo to cleanse them of remaining impurities before entering higher spiritual realms.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Parshat Vayakhel — The author directs readers to this specific section of the Zohar that describes the soul's reception in the afterlife, including the appointed guardians, spiritual garments, and the celestial realms through which souls pass. | Cf. Zohar, Parshat Pekudei — The text refers to a section in Parshat Pekudei that describes the unification performed by souls, likely referring to how souls participate in cosmic spiritual processes in the afterlife. | Cf. River of Fire (Nahar Dinur) — This refers to the kabbalistic concept of a celestial river of fire through which souls pass for purification before entering higher realms of the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Garden of Eden (Gan Eden) — The text distinguishes between the lower and upper Garden of Eden, reflecting the kabbalistic teaching that there are hierarchical levels of Paradise corresponding to different spiritual achievements and states.

[iii]This refers to the divine feminine aspect (Binah or Supernal Mother) in Kabbalah where souls ascend during sleep or after death for spiritual nourishment and renewal.

[iv]In Kabbalistic thought, mitzvot (commandments) performed in this world create spiritual garments or adornments that clothe the soul in the supernal realms.

[v]Literally "the rabbis' robe," this term refers to a spiritual garment formed from one's Torah study and good deeds that clothes the soul in the afterlife. The concept appears frequently in Zoharic and later kabbalistic literature.

הנשמה.[v] וסוד לבוש ג״ע עליון ותחתון. ומהו מחול דאמור רבנן[i] וכבר דברנו מזה למעלה. ובפ׳ ויקהל דף ר״ט מבאר היכל שבו רשום כל מעשים טובים שעושים הנשמות. ושם גנוזים מעשיהם. וסוד השעשוע[ii] נתבאר בדף פ״ב ע״ב. ובדף קע״ג ע״ב פ׳ תרומה. וגם מזה בפ׳ אחרי מות דף ש״ו. ובר״מ פ׳ צו דף כ״ט ע״ב מתבאר מוצא נשמה רוח ונפש דשליט בחול על אינון הנקראים עבדי ה׳ ומשם יראה כי האדם חשלם בחול הוא במדרגת עבד ובשבתות וימים טובים במדרגת בן.[iii] ועיין בר״מ פ׳ פנחס מהו נשמה יתירה.[iv] ואיך כל אדם זוכה בה כפי מדרגתו ועליית הנשמות וירידתן בע״ש בחדוה רבה מתבאר בפ׳ תרומה דף קל״ו. ובפ׳ אחרי מות דף ע׳ ע״ב מתבאר איך באים לאדם בהדרגה נפש רוח נשמה. ומזה בפ׳ ויגש דף ר״ו. ומדור כל אחד אחר המות. וסוד המדורין

the four levels of the soul,[6] and the mystery of the garments of the upper and lower Garden of Eden. [It also explains] what is meant by the "dance" mentioned by the Rabbis,[1] which we have already discussed above. In Parashat Vayakhel, page 209, it explains the palace in which all the good deeds performed by souls are recorded, and where their actions are stored. The mystery of divine delight is explained on page 82b and in Parashat Terumah, page 173b. This topic is also addressed in Parashat Acharei Mot, page 307. In Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd) on Parashat Tzav, page 29b, the origin of nefesh, ruach, and neshamah is explained, which governs on weekdays those who are called "servants of the Lord." From there it is evident that the complete person on weekdays is at the level of a servant, while on Sabbaths and festivals at the level of a son.[2] See Ra'aya Mehemna in Parashat Pinchas regarding what constitutes the additional soul,[3] and how each person merits it according to their spiritual level. The ascent and descent of souls on Sabbath eve with great joy[4] is explained in Parashat Terumah, page 136. In Parashat Acharei Mot, page 70b, it explains how nefesh, ruach, and neshamah come to a person in gradual stages. This is also dis-

[1] While traditional Jewish texts often mention three soul levels (nefesh, ruach, neshamah), some kabbalistic systems include additional levels, creating more complex structures of soul anatomy.

[2] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Ta'anit 31a) that in the future, God will form a circle (dance) for the righteous, with each pointing to God in the center, saying "This is God for whom we hoped."

[3] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that different times have different spiritual qualities. The divine relationship on weekdays is characterized by service and distance, while on sacred days it transforms into intimacy and inheritance.

[4] The concept of receiving an additional soul dimension (neshamah yeteirah) on Sabbath comes from the Talmud (Beitzah 16a) and is elaborated in kabbalistic literature as an enhanced spiritual consciousness.

[5] Kabbalah teaches that as Sabbath enters, souls ascend to higher spiritual realms and then descend with new divine light and blessings, bringing joy to both worlds.

[i] While traditional Jewish mysticism often mentions three soul levels (nefesh, ruach, neshamah), some kabbalistic systems include additional levels such as chayah and yechidah, creating a five-level structure. The reference to four levels here might indicate a variant system.

[ii] This refers to the Talmudic statement (Ta'anit 31a) that in the future world, God will make a circle (dance) for the righteous. In kabbalistic interpretation, this represents a specific spiritual realm or state.

[iii] In kabbalistic terminology, "divine delight" (sha'ashua) refers to the profound spiritual pleasure God experiences in relation to the souls of the righteous and their Torah study.

[iv] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that time affects spiritual status—on weekdays, the divine service is characterized by distance (servant-master relationship), while on Sabbaths and festivals, there is greater intimacy (parent-child relationship).

[v] The "additional soul" received on Sabbath is a concept mentioned in the Talmud (Beitzah 16a) and extensively developed in Kabbalah, representing an enhanced spiritual capacity and consciousness available during sacred time.

מג״ע תחתון. ובפ׳ בא דף ל״ו
אמרו דכל גינתא מתקרי צרור
החיים[v] דתמן מתעדנים הצדיקים
לעלמא דאתי. ופי׳ כי הכרת
הוא לנפש בלבד.[i] ופי׳ עדן
ועדנה[ii] והחלוק ביניהם. וגם
מזה בפ׳ תרומה דף קמ״ב וקמ״ג.
ובדף ק״ו מתבאר מה הם נטיעות שבג״ע [iii]

cussed in Parashat Vayigash, page 206, [which explains] the dwelling place of each after death, and the mystery of the chambers of the lower Garden of Eden. In Parashat Bo, page 36, they stated that the entire garden is called "the bundle of life,"[1] where the righteous delight in the World to Come. It explains that spiritual excision applies only to the nefesh.[2] It [also] explains [the terms] Eden and Ednah and the distinction between them. This is also discussed in Parashat Terumah, pages 142 and 143. On page 106, it explains what are the "plantings" in the Garden of Eden.

ומה הם הכרובים ששם. ואיך
מתלבשים שם הרוחין וסוד
חלוקא דרבנן.[iv] ובפ׳ וירא
ג״כ. ומוצא גיהנם תחתון וביאר

And what are the cherubim there, and how the spirits are clothed there, and the secret of the scholarly garment. This is also [explained] in Parashat Vayera. And the origin of the lower Gehenna is explained, [1]This phrase (tzeror ha-chayyim) comes from 1 Samuel 25:29 and became a central metaphor in Jewish thought for the soul's connection to its divine source after death.

[2]This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that divine punishment (karet) affects only the lower soul level (nefesh) but not the higher levels (ruach and neshamah), offering comfort about the eternal nature of the soul's higher aspects.

[i]This phrase comes from 1 Samuel 25:29: "May the soul of my lord be bound in the bundle of life." In kabbalistic thought, it refers to the highest level of spiritual existence where souls are bound to the divine source.
[ii]"Karet" (spiritual excision) is a punishment mentioned in the Torah. This statement reflects the kabbalistic view that such punishment affects only the lower soul level (nefesh) but not the higher levels (ruach and neshamah).
[iii]These terms distinguish between different aspects of paradise—Eden typically refers to the place itself, while Ednah refers to the state of spiritual pleasure or delight experienced there.
[iv]Cf. Lamentations 3:23 — The author connects the biblical verse about God's mercies being new each morning to the kabbalistic concept of souls ascending each night and returning renewed, suggesting a cosmic rhythm of spiritual rejuvenation that mirrors the biblical promise | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Noach — This reference anchors the author's discussion in the authoritative text of the Zohar, specifically citing a passage that elaborates on the soul's mystical journey during sleep | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The author cites these Zohar passages to provide textual authority for the complex concept of souls ascending while adorned with the merits of their commandment observance | Cf. חלוקא דרבנן (Scholarly Garment) — This reference to the 'scholarly garment' connects to the kabbalistic concept that souls require spiritual vestments woven from Torah study and good deeds to properly function in the supernal realms | Cf. Zohar, Sitrei Torah — The author references this more esoteric section of the Zohar to support his discussion of the soul's mystical journey and its various levels | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This reference supports the author's presentation of divine record-keeping, suggesting that all human actions have cosmic significance and are preserved in specific celestial chambers | Cf. Zohar, Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd) — This reference to a specific section of the Zohar supports the author's distinction between the 'servant' and 'son' levels of spirituality, connecting them to different soul components and time periods | Cf. נשמה יתירה (Additional Soul) — This reference connects to the rabbinic concept of receiving an additional soul dimension on Sabbath, which the Zohar elaborates upon in the cited passage, explaining how it varies according to one's spiritual level | Cf. צרור החיים (Bundle of Life) — This allusion references 1 Samuel 25:29 ('May the soul of my lord be bound in the bundle of life') which the Zohar interprets as referring to the Garden of Eden where righteous souls delight
[v]This term refers to the 'scholarly garment' or 'rabbinical robe,' a mystical concept describing the spiritual vestments that clothe the souls of Torah scholars in the afterlife. These garments are said to be formed from one's Torah study and good deeds performed in this world.

חלוקי הכרת לנפש. ומדרגה
שהיא למעלה מעדן עליון
מתבאר בפ׳ חקת דף קפ״ג.
80 וטעם בריאת האדם כיון שעתיד
למות מתבאר בפ׳ שלח דף קנ״ט
שהוא לצורך גבוה למען יקבע
דירתו בג׳ עלמין כי כן איתי
ליה לקב״ה תלת עלמין והוא
85 גניז בגוייהו יע״ש. ובדרושי
דר׳ אילא בפ׳ שלח מתבאר איך
עולים הנשמות הנזכרים בכל
שבת ור״ח וכמה חדושי תורה
המביאים עמהם. קודם עלייתם
90 מפרשים להם סתרי תורה. ושם
אמר סוד מתיבתא דרקיעא
מתיבתא דאהרן ומתיבתא דמשה
ושאר צדיקים ומתיבתא דרקיעא
ומתיבתא עילאה לעיל ומדרגת
95 הנשים בעולם ההוא. והיכל
בתיה וסרח ויוכבד ודבורה
והד׳ אמהות ומשם נראה גדולת
הצדיקים. עוד פירשו שם ממה
הם לבושי הצדיקים ומאיזה
100 אור מתהוית העטרה שעל ראשם
וחלק גוף האדם מאין הם ומוצא
הנשמה והרוח ומשם נראה עלוי
נשמות הזכרים עם הנקבות בכל שמיטה ובפ׳ בלק דף קצ״ז אמר

as well as the different types of spiritual excision (karet) for the soul. The level that is above the supernal Eden is explained in Parashat Chukat, page 183. The reason for creating humans, given that they are destined to die, is explained in Parashat Shelach, page 159: it is for a higher purpose, so that one may establish his dwelling in three worlds,[C1] for the Holy One, blessed be He, has three worlds, and He is hidden within them,[D] see there. And in the discourses of Rabbi Ila in Parashat Shelach, it is explained how the souls mentioned ascend every Sabbath and New Moon, and how many Torah innovations they bring with them. Before their ascension, the mysteries of Torah are explained to them. And there he revealed the secret of the heavenly academy, the academy of Aaron, the academy of Moses and other righteous ones, the academy of the firmament, and the supernal academy above,[2] as well as the status of women in that world. [He describes] the palace of Batya, Serach, Yocheved, Deborah, and the four Matriarchs,[3] and from there the greatness of the righteous is evident. They further explained there what the garments of the righteous are made of,[E] from which light the crown upon their heads is formed, from where the parts of the human body originate, and the source of the soul and spirit. From there, the elevation of male souls with female souls in each sabbatical cycle[4] is apparent. And in Parashat

85R 90R 95R 100R 105R

[B] Or: "so that one may fix his abode in the three realms" — The term 'fix his abode' more closely captures the permanence implied in the Hebrew 'yikba' (establish firmly), and 'realms' might be more appropriate than 'worlds' in this cosmological context.

[C] Or: "and He is concealed within their midst" — The term 'ganiz' in kabbalistic literature often carries the specific connotation of being deliberately concealed or treasured away, rather than merely hidden, and 'within their midst' captures the spatial relationship more precisely.

[D] Or: "of what substance the garments of the righteous consist" — This more literal translation preserves the emphasis on the material substance of the spiritual garments, which is an important concept in kabbalistic thought where the nature of these garments is directly related to one's deeds in this world.

[1] This presents the kabbalistic understanding that human creation, despite its mortality, serves a cosmic purpose in connecting the three spiritual worlds (usually identified as Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah). This provides a positive theological framework for understanding death as part of a larger divine plan rather than merely as punishment.

[2] The text describes a hierarchical structure of heavenly academies where souls continue their Torah study after death. This reflects the kabbalistic belief in the continuity of scholarly activity in the afterlife, with different levels corresponding to different spiritual realms.

[3] This passage is significant for highlighting the presence and status of women in the heavenly realm. Batya was Pharaoh's daughter who rescued Moses, Serach was Jacob's granddaughter who lived for centuries, Yocheved was Moses' mother, and Deborah was a prophetess and judge. Their inclusion indicates the recognition of women's spiritual accomplishments in kabbalistic thought.

[4] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'shemitot' or cosmic sabbatical cycles. The text suggests that during these cyclical transitions, both male and female souls experience elevation together,

שכל הרבנים המורים אסור והיתר בעה״ז הם במתיבתא דמט״ט. ובר״מ בפ׳ עקב כתוב כי בג״ע יש ארבעה מחיצות לינוקין לבחורים ולזקנים. ועיין ברקאנ״אטי פ׳ בראשית מדף כ״ט עד ל״א סוד עליה וירידה מהנשמות שאמרו חז״ל באורך. וסוד ג״ע וגיהנם חומרי בארץ[i] וסבתם. ופי׳ חצרמות.[ii] והעטרה שעל ראש הצדיקים. וסוד הכרת הגוף והנפש[iii] באורך.[iv]

Balak, page 197, it states that all the rabbis who rule on what is forbidden and permitted in this world are in the academy of Metatron. And in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ekev, it is written that in the Garden of Eden there are four partitions: for infants, for young men, and for elders. See also Recanati on Parashat Bereshit, from page 29 to 31, for the secret of the ascent and descent of souls, which our Sages discussed at length, and the secret of the physical Garden of Eden and Gehenna on earth and their causes. And the explanation of Chatzarmaveth. And the crown upon the heads of the righteous. And the secret of the excision of body and soul at length.

ובסוף פ׳ לך לך. והרבה חכמים המתיקו מלין בנועם דרושים אלו דרוש מהם וקבל שכר. ובסתרי תורה פ׳ וירא אמר כי יש ג״ע עליון ותחתון כנזכר. וכן גיהנם. ובפ׳ וארא הבריח התחיה. עיין במדרש הנעלם פ׳ וירא ובזהר ריש פ׳ ויחי איך הנשמה בעודה בבית הבליעה מתודה כל מה שעשה הגוף בפני שלשה אנשים המבקרים מעשיו וההכרזות מתרנגולת אוכמא דאינון ג׳ וטעם הזיעה לאברים מעט קודם המיתה.

And at the end of Parashat Lech Lecha. Many sages have sweetened words with the pleasantness of these discourses; seek them out and receive reward. In Sitrei Torah of Parashat Vayera, it states that there is an upper and lower Garden of Eden, as mentioned. And likewise Gehinnom. And in Parashat Vaera, it established the proof of resurrection. Look in the Midrash HaNe'elam of Parashat Vayera and in the Zohar at the beginning of Parashat Vayechi, how the soul, while still in the throat, confesses all that the body did before three people who examine its deeds, and the announcements from the black rooster, which are three, and the reason for the sweat of the limbs shortly before death. And the pointing to a more egalitarian view of spiritual advancement than might be expected from the period.

[i] This refers to the concept that the spiritual Garden of Eden and Gehenna have physical counterparts on earth. In kabbalistic thought, spiritual realms often have corresponding manifestations in the physical world.

[ii] Chatzarmaveth appears in Genesis 10:26 as a descendant of Shem, but in kabbalistic literature it is often interpreted mystically as 'chatzer-mavet' or 'courtyard of death,' referring to a specific region in the afterlife.

[iii] This refers to the concept of 'karet' (spiritual excision), which in kabbalistic thought involves the separation of different levels of the soul from one another, a punishment more severe than mere physical death.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayera — The text is directing readers to consult this specific section of the Zohar for a more detailed explanation of the structure of Gehenna and different types of spiritual punishment, which complements the catalog of mystical topics being compiled in Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shelach — The author cites this specific passage to establish the theological framework for understanding death not as a punishment but as a transition between cosmic realms, which is central to Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death rituals. | Cf. Discourses of Rabbi Ila in Zohar, Parashat Shelach — This reference establishes the kabbalistic understanding of what happens to scholarly souls after death, particularly their continued participation in Torah study in celestial academies, which provides theological comfort regarding the afterlife of the righteous. | Cf. Recanati on Parashat Bereshit — The author directs readers to this source for a more detailed explanation of the cosmological framework that underlies Ma'avar Yabok's approach to death and the afterlife, particularly the relationship between physical and spiritual realms.

וטעם חיי האדם שבעים שנה ואם בגבורות שמונים שנה. והצלם של אדם המתחשך ודיוקנו הנמנע ממנו שלשים יום קודם. וביאת קריבוהי ורחימוהי אליו קודם יציאת נשמתו הכל בפ׳ ויחי דף רי״ח. ובדף ר״כ סוד הצלם המסתלק בליל הושענא. ומזה בפ׳ אמור. ומהו צל הצלם ושתיהם יהיו מתייחדים. ובפ׳ חיי שרה מקיום גופות הצדיקים למטה וזוהר נשמתם למעלה. ומטטרו״ן עתיד ליפות הגוף בבי קברי ולמה פעמים קראו לנשמה ולגוף אברהם ושרה ולעת התחיה יצחק ורבקה. ובמדרש הנעלם פ׳ תולדות יצחק שם ביאר בארוכה מה היא הסעודה המזומנת לצדיקים. וסוד לויתן[i] ושלימות הגוף אחר התחיה ויהיה אז גם כן אכילה ושתיה אך בנקיות והשגת ידיעה ולעתיד לבא השגת הצדיקים תהיה יותר משל מלאכי השרת. ועיין מדרושי ג״ע וגיהנם בזהר דף רמ״ג ורמ״ד ורמ״ה ורמ״ו ורמ״ח ור״ן ורנ״א ורנ״ג ורנ״ח. ובפ׳ ויגש דף ר״ז מתבאר קשר נר״ן ומוצאן. ובפ׳ ויחי דף רמ״ה ע״א פירש איך הם ג׳ נשמתין והמשיל משל על ירידת הנשמה בעה״ז אשרי הזוכה לראות עולמו בחייו:[ii] reason for a person's life being seventy years, and if with strength, eighty years. And how a person's image darkens and his form is withheld from him thirty days before. And the arrival of his relatives and loved ones to him before the departure of his soul—all of this is in Parashat Vayechi, page 218. And on page 220, the secret of the image that departs on the night of Hoshana Rabbah. And about this in Parashat Emor. And what is the shadow of the image, and how both will be united. And in Parashat Chayei Sarah, about the preservation of the bodies of the righteous below and the radiance of their souls above. And Metatron will beautify the body in the cemetery, and why sometimes they called the soul and body Abraham and Sarah, and at the time of resurrection, Isaac and Rebecca.[1] And in Midrash HaNe'elam of Parashat Toldot Yitzchak, it explained at length what is the feast prepared for the righteous. And the secret of the Leviathan, and the perfection of the body after resurrection, and there will be then also eating and drinking, but in purity and attainment of knowledge, and in the future, the attainment of the righteous will be greater than that of the ministering angels. And see the discourses on the Garden of Eden and Gehinnom in the Zohar on pages 243, 244, 245, 246, 248, 250, 251, 253, and 258. And in Parashat Vayigash, page 207, it explains the connection of Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah and their source. And in Parashat Vayechi, page 245a, it explains how there are three souls, and it gave a parable about the descent of the soul into this world. Happy is one who merits to see his world in his lifetime.

סליק חלק ראשון ממעב״ר

The first part of Ma'avar Yabok[2] is concluded: It is

[1]This cryptic reference uses the biblical patriarchs and matriarchs as symbolic representations of different spiritual states. In kabbalistic thought, Abraham represents kindness and Sarah receptivity, while Isaac represents judgment/strength and Rebecca the channeling of that strength, suggesting a transformation in the relationship between body and soul after resurrection.

[1]The title 'Ma'avar Yabok' means 'Crossing of the Yabok' and refers to the biblical Jacob's crossing

[i]This cryptic reference to the Leviathan (mentioned alongside the feast prepared for the righteous) refers to a rabbinic tradition that the righteous will feast on the Leviathan in the World to Come, symbolizing the consumption of primordial wisdom or mystical knowledge that is currently inaccessible.

[ii]Cf. Abraham and Sarah/Isaac and Rebecca metaphor — The cryptic reference to the soul and body being called "Abraham and Sarah" before resurrection and "Isaac and Rebecca" after resurrection suggests a kabbalistic interpretation of biblical figures as representing spiritual principles. Abraham and Sarah are associated with kindness and receptivity in life, while Isaac and Rebecca represent a transformed, more elevated spiritual state after resurrection.

יב״ק:[iii] קרא שפתי צדק[iv] ופרקיו מ׳ לי?[ii] בי״א[i] ביל״או לק״י:

called “Siftei Tzedek”[1] (Lips of Righteousness) and its chapters number 40 [?31],[2] completed and perfected with the help of God.[3] of the Yabok River before his transformative encounter with an angel, symbolizing the soul's transition from this world to the next.

[2]The title ‘Siftei Tzedek’ (Lips of Righteousness) is the name of the first section of Ma'avar Yabok, which contains chapters addressing proper care for the sick and dying.

[3]There is some uncertainty in the original text about the exact number of chapters. The text mentions 40 chapters but has a question mark next to the number 31, suggesting either an editorial uncertainty or possibly indicating that while there are 40 chapters in total, only 31 have been completed in this version.

[4]The Hebrew conclusion uses traditional acronyms expressing completion with divine assistance, a common feature in Jewish religious texts to acknowledge divine help in completing scholarly work.

[i]This marks the end of the first section of Ma'avar Yabok. The abbreviation ‘מעב״ר יב״ק’ stands for the full title of the book.

[ii]This identifies the formal title of the first section as ‘Siftei Tzedek’ (Lips of Righteousness).

[iii]There appears to be some uncertainty or confusion in the text here. The author states the section has 40 chapters, but there may be a question about whether it's actually 31 chapters. The question mark in the original text suggests this ambiguity.

[iv]These are acronyms for Hebrew phrases expressing completion with divine assistance. ‘ביל״או’ likely stands for ‘ברוך יתברך לעולם אמן ואמן’ (Blessed be He forever, amen and amen), and ‘לק״י’ for ‘לכבוד קדושת יהוה’ (For the honor of the holiness of God).

Discourse 4

שפת אמת / Language of Truth

פרק א׳

Chapter 1

מאמר ב׳ שפת אמת תכון לעד יהי רצון שיהיו מעשי רצויים לפני מלכי [i]

Discourse Two: "The Lip of Truth Shall Be Established Forever." May it be Your will that my deeds be acceptable before my King.

מרגלא בפומייהו דרבנן קשישי על פי האמת והצדק המתבאר בגמרין. ובפרט במסכת ברכות ובדברי המפרשים כי יש קשר אל הנשמה עם הגוף אפי׳ אחר הסתלקה. ואפי׳ אחר ששלט הרקב בעצמות ימצא הקשר הזה בעצם הקטן שהוא כשאור שבעסה בתחית הגוף. ולהיות כי עיקר בריאת האדם היתה להיותו חויה קיימת אלא שחטא הקדום גרם ההעדר לבן ההעדר

It is a common saying in the mouths of the elder sages,[1] according to the truth and righteousness explained in the Talmud, particularly in Tractate Berakhot and in the words of the commentators, that there exists a connection between the soul and the body even after its departure. And even after decay has taken hold of the bones, this connection will remain in the small bone that serves as the leaven in the dough[A] for the resurrection of the body. Since the primary purpose of man's creation was to be an enduring entity, but the primordial sin[B] caused mortality, therefore the absence of life

[A] Or: "the small bone that is like the leaven in the dough" — A more literal translation that preserves the simile structure of the original Hebrew, though the functional translation better conveys the meaning in English.

[B] Or: "original sin" — While 'primordial sin' accurately captures the Hebrew meaning, 'original sin' might be more familiar to readers acquainted with theological concepts, though it carries some Christian connotations that aren't present in the Jewish understanding.

[1] The opening phrase 'מרגלא בפומייהו דרבנן קשישי' is a Talmudic Aramaic expression often used to introduce an established tradition or teaching.

[i] Cf. Proverbs 12:19 — The author begins this second discourse with a biblical quote that emphasizes the enduring nature of truth, establishing the theme that the teachings about death and the afterlife contained in this discourse are timeless spiritual truths. | Cf. Traditional prayer formula — The author humbly asks for divine approval of his work, positioning himself as a servant before God as the divine King. This shows the author's awareness that writing about mystical matters of death and the afterlife requires divine assistance and approval.

החיות מן הגוף אינו העדר
תכליתי אלא קצתי כי בעצם
הנזכר תשאר הקשר חזק ואמיץ
עד שיחזור הדבר אל קדמותו
שהוא סוד התחיה. והמיתה אינה 20R
מבטלת החושים כאשר חשבו
רבים וענין ר׳ אלעזר יוכיח.
וכן אמרם דובב שפתי ישנים
שפירשו ששפתותיו דובבות
בקבר. ומעשה דאחאי בר יאשיה 25R
יוכיח. ואפילו כשאינם צדיקים
מצינו דיש להם הרגשה אחר
המיתה כדאמרי׳ ביומא באבוה
דכידור שאמר לבנו שהיה בים
מונח ארישיה בקבריה: אמנם 30R
המיתה היא הפרד הקשר שיש
לחמשה דברים הקשורים בדרך
אחרת בזמן החיים והם נשמה
ורוח ונפש. ונפש המרגשת שהיא
נפש הבהמית שבאדם שיש בה 35R
חמשה חושים. וגוף האדם. אלו
חמשה חלקים נקשרים בעת
חיות האדם אלו באלו וכל אחד
משכן לחבירו כי גוף האדם
משכן ולבוש אל חמשה חושים 40R
אלו שכללם הנפש הגשמית
ונפש הגשמית הזאת משכן אל
הנפש הרוחנית והנפש משכן אל
הרוח. והרוח משכן לנשמה ועקר
תפקידתם הוא למטה יורדים אל 45R
העולם השפל שהנשמה פוקדת
הרוח והרוח הנפש והנפש הגוף
לעתים בעת עסק התורה או מצוה וכיוצא: [i]

from the body[A] is not a complete absence but only partial, for in the aforementioned bone the connection will remain strong and powerful until the matter returns to its original state, which is the secret of resurrection. Death does not nullify the senses as many have thought, and the case of Rabbi Eleazar proves this. Likewise, their statement "making the lips of the sleepers speak" which they interpreted to mean that his lips move in the grave. And the story of Achai bar Yoshiah proves this. And even when they are not righteous, we find that they have sensation after death, as we say in Tractate Yoma about Kidor's father who told his son that there was a purse placed at the head of his grave.

However, death is the separation of the connection that exists between five things that are connected in a different manner during life, and they are the neshamah (higher soul), ruach (spirit), and nefesh (vital soul), and the sensing nefesh which is the animal soul[B] in man that contains the five senses, and the human body. These five components are interconnected during a person's lifetime, one with another, and each serves as a dwelling place for its companion. For the human body is a dwelling and garment for these five senses which are encompassed by the physical so[1]ul, and this physical soul is a dwelling for the spiritual soul, and the soul is a dwelling for the spirit, and the spirit is a dwelling for the neshamah. And their primary function is below, descending to the lower world, where the neshamah visits the ruach, and the ruach visits the nefesh, and the nefesh visits the body at times,[2] during the study of Torah or the performance of commandments and the like.

[A] Or: "the withdrawal of vitality from the body" — This alternative better captures the dynamic nature of what's happening—not just absence but active withdrawal—though it's slightly less literal.

[B] Or: "animalistic soul" — The term 'animalistic soul' might better convey that this refers to the lower, instinctual aspects of human nature rather than suggesting a soul belonging to animals, though 'animal soul' is more direct.

[1] The author establishes a hierarchical model of human existence with five interconnected layers: physical body, sensing soul with the five senses, vital soul (nefesh), spirit (ruach), and higher soul (neshamah). This model is drawn from kabbalistic sources and elaborates on the more common tripartite division of the soul.

[2] This describes a 'top-down' process of spiritual activation where the higher soul levels sequentially influence the lower levels. The implication is that the higher soul components are not constantly fully present in the body but manifest more completely during spiritual activities.

[i] Cf. Tractate Berakhot — The author cites Berakhot as an authoritative Talmudic source for ואם יסתלקו מן האדם ויעלו

למעלה יהיה מפני מעוט ההכנה
וקלקול הכסא באלו נאמר
הרבה שאינם עוסקים בעבודה
שנשמתם ורוחם ונפשם מסתלקים
מהם ואדם ביקר בל ילין נמשל
כבהמות כך אלו נשארים כבהמה
ונמשכים אחר החומר וזה טעם
פגימת אזן עבד עברי בנדרש
בזהר. וכמה בני אדם שמשתנים
במעשיהם במדותיהם פעמים
כנשים פעמים כאנשים. ויש
הרבה שרוב חייהם עובדים
בני אדם כעבד וזה מורה על
פתיתות נשמתם כי הפנימי מראה
פעולותיו בחצון ולבן תקנו
לברך בכל יום שלא עשני אשה
ושלא עשני עבד כי כאשר ישוב
נשמת האדם בו ויביט בעצמו
טוב הכנתו יברך על הטובה
אשר גמלהו ה׳. ולהיות הדבר
הזה מתחדש לאדם בכל יום לבן
ברכתו בכל יום. והירא את דבר
ה׳ בשומעו הדבר הזה יחזיק
בתומו ואל ירפה ואל ישעה
בדבר שקר ולא יתלוה אליו
דבר שלא כראוי ח״ו. ויכוין

And if they [the soul components] depart from a person and ascend upward, it will be due to a lack of preparation and damage to the throne, as if to say that many who do not engage in divine service have their neshamah, ruach, and nefesh departing from them.[1] "Man abides not in honor; he is like the beasts that perish" [Psalms 49:13]—thus, these people remain like animals, drawn after material concerns. This is the reason for piercing the ear of a Hebrew slave, as expounded in the Zohar. Many people change in their actions and character traits, sometimes like women, sometimes like men. There are many whose lives are mostly spent serving other people as slaves, which indicates the deficiency of their souls,[A] for the inner state manifests in external actions. Therefore, the Sages instituted the daily blessings "who has not made me a woman" and "who has not made me a slave,"[2] for when a person's soul returns to him and he examines his own favorable condition, he blesses God for the goodness bestowed upon him. Since this matter is renewed for a person each day, the blessing is recited daily. One who fears the word of the Lord, upon hearing this, should maintain his integrity and not let go, nor turn to falsehood, nor associate with anything improper, God forbid. He should intend, through these three blessings, to nullify from himself

[A] Or: "fragmentation of their souls" — The Hebrew term 'petitut' can imply fragmentation or breaking into pieces, which might better convey the kabbalistic concept of a soul that is incomplete or broken rather than merely deficient.

[1] These are the three primary components of the soul in Kabbalistic thought. Neshamah is the highest, most divine aspect; ruach is the middle component associated with emotions and moral character; and nefesh is the most basic level connected to physical vitality. The author describes how people who neglect spiritual practices lose connection to these soul components.

[2] These are traditional Jewish morning blessings recited by men. The author is giving them a mystical interpretation related to soul qualities rather than simply addressing social status. In his view, these blessings acknowledge the spiritual state that allows full soul expression.

teachings about the connection between soul and body after death, establishing the text's rabbinic foundation. | Cf. Rabbi Eleazar — The reference to Rabbi Eleazar appears to allude to a well-known Talmudic narrative (likely from Ketubbot 103a) where Rabbi Eleazar showed awareness after death, used here to prove that consciousness continues beyond physical death. | Cf. Achai bar Yoshiah — This references a story from Shabbat 152b where Rabbi Nachman conversed with Achai bar Yoshiah in his grave, providing evidence for the author's claim about continued existence after death. | Cf. Kidor's father — This reference from Yoma 83b tells of post-mortem communication, used here to show that even non-righteous individuals maintain some form of consciousness after death. | Cf. doveiv siftei yeshenim — This phrase from Yevamot 97a describes how quoting a deceased sage's teachings causes their lips to move in the grave, supporting the text's argument for continued existence after death. | Cf. luz bone — Though not named explicitly in this passage, the 'small bone' refers to the luz bone mentioned in Bereishit Rabbah, which was believed to be the nucleus for bodily resurrection.

בג׳ ברכות הנזכרים לבטל ממנו
ומעליו כל מין עבדות וקלות
אשה ועבדות עבד ומחשבה
בלתי טהורה וכן כמה בני אדם
המרחיקים עצמם מחכמת האמת
ואינם מאמינים בה גם באלה
מראה נשמתם כי אין לה חלק
רק בשטחיות התורה ובפשטי
מאמריה. וכבר הארכתי בסוף
מעירי שחר שלי להוכיח זה
מדברי רבותינו ושם בא רמז
התורה שבע״פ ולמה אנן בתר
בני בבל גררינן ורמז ספר הזהר
ושכרו גדול מהשונה הלכות
בכל יום יעויין שם: ובסלוק
חלקים הנזכרים מהאדם יש בהם
בחינות כפי מדרגות העבודה
אמנם טבע המציאות יחייב כי
אל הראויים יתקשרו חמשה
דברים אלו למטה תמיד כפי
מה שיתמידו בעבודה הראויה.
וימצא לפעמים שישפיעו על
האדם נשמה יתירה לעתים בעת
שיהיה עוסק בתורה או עושה
איזה מצוה ואח״כ יסתלק וכן
בשבתות וימים טובים כנודע.
ויש ה׳ מיני נשמה יתירה. בחינת
שבת קדש. בחינת יום הכפור
שגם הוא שבת שבתון. בחינת
ימים טובים שהם מקראי קדש
אושפיזין עילאין בחינת חול
המועד מחמת שמירת איזה
מלאכות האסורות בו וחיוב
המצה בפסח והסוכה בחג.
ובחינת ראש חדש ובפרט בשעת המוסף והם בחינות מנפש רוח

all forms of servitude, the frivolity of women, the bondage of slaves, and impure thoughts. Similarly, there are many people who distance themselves from the wisdom of truth [Kabbalah][A] and do not believe in it; in these cases too, their souls demonstrate that they have a portion only in the superficial aspects of Torah and the plain meaning of its statements. I have already elaborated at the end of my work "Me'irei Shachar" to prove this from the words of our Rabbis, and there appears a reference to the Oral Torah and why "we follow the Babylonians," as well as a reference to the Book of Zohar and how its reward is greater than that of one who studies laws every day[1]—see there.

Regarding the departure of the aforementioned parts from a person, there are aspects of them according to the levels of service. However, the nature of reality requires that for those who are worthy, these five components remain connected below continuously,[B] according to how they persist in proper service. Sometimes, a person may receive an additional soul (neshamah yeteirah) temporarily while engaged in Torah study or performing a commandment, which later departs, as is also known to occur on Sabbaths and festivals. There are five types of additional souls: the aspect of the holy Sabbath; the aspect of Yom Kippur, which is also a complete Sabbath; the aspect of festivals, which are holy convocations and supernal guests; the aspect of the intermediate days of festivals due to the observance of certain prohibited labors and the obligation of matzah on Passover and the sukkah on Sukkot; and the aspect of the New Moon, especially during the Additional Service. These correspond to the aspects of nefesh, ruach, neshamah, chayah, and yechidah[2] mentioned in the Midrash. This is besides [A] Or: "the wisdom of Truth" — While my bracketed clarification helps modern readers, in the original context 'Chochmat ha-Emet' (Wisdom of Truth) was a well-known term for Kabbalah that might stand better without the modern clarification for a more authentic translation.

[B] Or: "these five components remain bound in the lower realms continuously" — The phrase 'lematah' (below) in kabbalistic contexts often specifically refers to the lower realms/worlds, which might provide more precise cosmological context than simply 'below'.

[1] This suggests the author's position that mystical study (Kabbalah) has greater spiritual benefit than purely legalistic study of Jewish law (halakhah). This comparative valuation of different types of Torah study reflects a common perspective among kabbalists that mystical understanding is superior to technical legal knowledge.

[2] The author is correlating the five types of additional souls received on special occasions with the five levels of soul described in Kabbalah. Chayah and yechidah are the two highest soul levels rarely discussed in detail because they are considered too lofty for ordinary comprehension, נשמה חיה ויחידה הנזכרים במדרש. וזהו מלבד הקשר שיש לשלם בעודו חי מהחמש בחינות שזכרנו שיתמידו בו תמיד אם לא יקלקל מעשיו אחר שזכה בהם במדת ימיו כנדרש בסבא פרשת משפטים ובספרי המקובלים: [i] the connection that exists for the complete person while alive through the five aspects we mentioned, which remain with him constantly if he does not corrupt his deeds after having merited them during his lifetime, as expounded in the Sabba section of Parashat Mishpatim[1] and in the books of the Kabbalists.

פרק ב׳

Chapter 2

בבחינת צורת האדם למדוני חכמי הזהר והתקונים ור״מ ופקודין וס״ת[ii] ובפרט החכם קורדואירו בספ״ר שלו בשער הנשמה.[iii] ובפרט מן הפרט הגאון מורי מפאנו זצ״ל[iv] בספר העסיס שלו ובמאמר עולם קטן שחדש.[v] ופה אביע תמצית כוונת המאירים עינינו בקצור נמרץ ואין מדרש בלא חדוש ובאור.

Regarding the nature of human form, I have been taught by the sages of the Zohar, the Tikkunim, Ra'aya Mehemna, Pekudin, and Sifra d'Tzniuta, and especially by the wise Rabbi Cordovero in his Pardes in the Gate of the Soul. Most particularly, my teacher the Gaon of Fano, of blessed memory, in his Sefer Ha-Asis and in his newly composed discourse "Olam Katan" (Microcosm). Here I will present the essence of these illuminators of our eyes in an extremely concise manner, for no typically remaining above and not fully entering the body.

[1] The 'Sabba' (Elder) is a section of the Zohar on Exodus where an elderly sage reveals profound teachings about the soul, reincarnation, and divine service. This section is considered particularly important in kabbalistic literature for its detailed exposition of soul mechanics.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim — The text references the Zohar's exposition on the symbolism of piercing a Hebrew slave's ear (Exodus 21:6), which in the Zohar represents spiritual degradation. The slave who chooses to remain in servitude rather than go free is likened to someone who rejects spiritual elevation, thus having their ear (the organ that heard 'for the children of Israel are My servants') symbolically pierced to show their rejection of divine service. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author refers to his own prayer collection called 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), where he apparently discussed the superiority of mystical interpretation over legalistic study. This self-reference demonstrates the intertextual nature of the author's works, with Ma'avar Yabok building upon ideas he developed in his earlier writings. | Cf. Zohar, Sabba of Mishpatim — The 'Sabba' (Elder) section of the Zohar's commentary on Parashat Mishpatim contains extended discussions about the nature of the soul and its components. This reference establishes the author's kabbalistic framework as directly derived from this influential section of the Zohar, which presents an elaborate model of soul structure and incarnation. | Cf. Psalms 49:13 — This biblical verse is used to support the idea that those who do not engage in spiritual service lose their higher soul components and remain at the level of animals, concerned only with material existence. The author interprets this psalm verse as describing the spiritual degradation that occurs when one's higher soul components depart.

[ii] The author cites multiple kabbalistic texts as his sources: the Zohar (the main text of Jewish mysticism), Tikkunei Zohar (a supplement to the Zohar), Ra'aya Mehemna (a section of the Zohar focusing on the mystical meaning of commandments), Pekudin (commandments section of the Zohar), and Sifra d'Tzniuta (the Book of Concealment, a key section of the Zohar).

[iii] This refers to Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), known by the acronym Ramak, and his systematic kabbalistic work Pardes Rimmonim (Orchard of Pomegranates), specifically the section dealing with the soul.

[iv] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist whom the author identifies as his personal teacher. The Hebrew abbreviation זצ״ל means 'of blessed memory,' indicating he had passed away by the time of writing.

[v] Two works by Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano: 'Sefer Ha-Asis' (Book of Juice/Essence) and 'Olam Katan' (Microcosm), the latter being identified as a new composition at the time.

צורת האדם נחלקת לג׳ חלקים.
א׳ נפש שהיא מרכבה לרוח.
ב׳ רוח מרכבה לנשמה. ג׳
נשמה ואצילות שלשתן מספירות
עליונות. נשמה מבינה. רוח
מת״ת. נפש ממלכות. והוסיף
הגאון מורי בעסיס שלו כי יש
חיה מחכמה יחידה מכתר. אשר
אין להם דוגמא למטה לרוב
העלמן. לא כן נר״ן שיש להם
לבושים. והם נשמה דבריאה.
רוח דיצירה. נפש דעשיה. ומצד
פעולות האדם יוכל להגביר
בנשמתו איזה חלק שיבחר ממנה
כגון אם יעסוק בתורה יוסיף
כח הת״ת שבנשמתו[i] ויאיר מאד
והוא יהיה העיקר ושאר חלקים
טפלים אליו. וארבע מערכות יש
לנשמה אשר תהלל יה והנגשת
אל ה׳. מערכה גדולה מעולה
מכלן היא איקונין ראשונה האדם
באדם צלם העליון מאת ה׳ היתה
זאת היא נפלאת בעיני כל בעל
בנף. שהם עשר כתות שאמרו
למעלה שמשפיעים בגלגלים
ובעולם התחתון. ונפלאת גם
כן מאופן וחיה ושרף וכוללת
בעצמה ה׳ פרצופין נפש רוח
נשמה חיה יחידה וכלן מעולם
היחוד לצדיקי ישראל וזאת לא
תחטא ולא תענש ואינה נכנסת
לגיהנם לא עליון שהוא נהר
דינור ולא תחתון שהוא גיא
צלמות[ii] אלא להצלת הזולת כי
בזכותה עתידים צדיקים שיקראו
בשמו של הקב״ה. מערכה שניה
היא החי באדם דמות עליון
שר לפני המלך והיא איקונין
שניה הכוללת שלשה דיוקנין
נפרדים קראו שמותם על שם
המדרגות המתלבשות בהם מן
המערכה גדולה שזכרנו שהם
נפש רוח נשמה כי חיה ויחידה

interpretation is without innovation and elucidation.

The human form is divided into three parts: First, Nefesh, which is a vehicle for Ruach. Second, Ruach, which is a vehicle for Neshamah. Third, Neshamah and its divine emanation—all three originate from the supernal Sefirot. Neshamah comes from Binah. Ruach from Tiferet. Nefesh from Malkhut. My teacher the Gaon added in his Asis that there is Chayah from Chokhmah and Yechidah from Keter, which have no counterpart below due to their profound concealment. This is unlike Nefesh-Ruach-Neshamah, which have "garments." These garments are: Neshamah of Beriah, Ruach of Yetzirah, and Nefesh of Asiyah. Through human actions, one can strengthen whichever aspect of the soul one chooses—for instance, if one engages in Torah study, one increases the power of Tiferet within one's soul, causing it to shine greatly and become predominant while other aspects become secondary to it.

There are four systems within the soul which praises God and approaches Him. The greatest and most superior system is the first image, "the human within the human," the supernal image from God—this is wondrous in the eyes of every winged being. These are the ten groups mentioned above that influence the celestial spheres and the lower world. It is also beyond the comprehension of Ofan, Chayah, and Seraph angels, and contains within itself five configurations: Nefesh, Ruach, Neshamah, Chayah, and Yechidah, all from the World of Unity, intended for the righteous of Israel. This level does not sin, is not punished, and does not enter Gehenna—neither the upper one which is the River of Fire, nor the lower one which is the Valley of the Shadow of Death—except to rescue others, for by its merit the righteous are destined to be called by the name of the Holy One, blessed be He.

The second system is the living aspect within the human, a supernal form, a minister before the King. This is the second image, which includes three separate configurations named after the levels that clothe themselves in them from the great system we

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that specific spiritual practices strengthen corresponding aspects of the soul. Here, Torah study is said to strengthen the Tiferet aspect, aligning with kabbalistic teachings that associate Torah with the central balancing sefirah of Tiferet.

[ii] The text distinguishes between two levels of Gehenna (the realm of post-mortem purification): an upper level called 'River of Fire' (נהר דינור) and a lower level called 'Valley of the Shadow of Death' (גיא צלמות), with different soul components experiencing different types of purification.

הם בסוד ראש ואינם צריכות
לבוש ואלה הדיוקנין מתפשטים
מבריאה יצירה עשיה. וגם ג׳
אלה מסתלקים בנפול תרדמה
על אנשים להיות להם מהלכים
בין עליונים כל אחד כפי
זכותו ואז יגבר המדמה בשתים
המערכות תחתונות שיבואו אחר
זה ויבא החלום ברוב ענין.
שלשה דיוקנין אלו הם בעלי
בחירה ונהר דינור הוא לבונם
דלא עדיפי ממטטרון דמחיוהו
שתין פולסי דנורא בפרק אין
דורשין.[i] וגבריאל בפ׳ יום
הכפורים בדרוש הגחלים שלקח
מתחת הכרוב ואליהו בפרק
הפועלים בעובדא דר׳ חייא.
ואפשר לשנים התחתונים שהם
הרוח והנפש שירדו לגיהנם
תחתון לא לעצמם זולתי אם
יקרה שיהיה להם בגדים צואים
לרוע בחירתם שהבגדים יבערו
באש והם לא יחסרו כלום. אבל
דיוקן הנשמה אינו צריך ולא
נטפל לגיהנם תחתון אם לא ירד
שם להעלות את הזולת וגם זה
לו מרוק לא מזער בשביל איזו
מחשבה גרועה וזהו הרהורי
עבירה קשים מעבירה שהיא
בגשמי והמה ברוחני.[ii] ויגעו
בדיוקן הנשמה שהקליפות מצדה
מועטות ורחוקות מן הקדש.
ובדיוקן הרוח הם מחצה על
מחצה בסוד עץ הדעת טוב ורע
אך אינם מתערבים במעשם אלא
זה לעצמו וזה לעצמו. וכאן
הוא סוד ההבדלה שיזהר אדם
שלא לערב קדש בחול[iii] אך
בדיוקן הנפש אפי׳ מיעוט הטוב
מעורב ברבוי הרע וצריך לברר

mentioned, which are Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah. This is because Chayah and Yechidah belong to the mystery of the "head" and do not require garments. These configurations extend from Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah. These three also depart when sleep falls upon people, allowing them to move among supernal beings, each according to their merit. Then the imaginative faculty predominates in the two lower systems that will be discussed next, and dreams come in abundance. 55R 60R

These three configurations possess free will, and the River of Fire purifies them, for they are not superior to Metatron, who received sixty lashes of fire as mentioned in the chapter "Ein Dorshin," nor to Gabriel, as discussed in the Yom Kippur chapter regarding the coals he took from beneath the Cherub, nor to Elijah, as mentioned in the chapter "HaPoalim" in the case of Rabbi Chiya. It is possible for the two lower ones, Ruach and Nefesh, to descend to the lower Gehenna—not for themselves, but if they happen to have soiled garments due to their poor choices, the garments will burn in the fire while they themselves remain undiminished. But the Neshamah configuration does not need to and is not brought to the lower Gehenna unless it descends there to elevate others, and even this provides it with no small purification for some inferior thought—this explains why thoughts of transgression are more severe than the transgression itself, which is physical while the thoughts are spiritual. 65R 70R 75R 80R

These [thoughts] affect the Neshamah configuration, as the kelipot (negative forces) on its side are few and distant from holiness. In the Ruach configuration, they are half and half, in the mystery of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, but they do not naturally intermingle—rather, each remains separate. This is the secret of Havdalah (separation), that a person should be careful not to mix the holy with the mundane. However, in the Nefesh configuration, even the minority of good is mixed 85R 90R

[i] This refers to a Talmudic story (Hagigah 15a) where the angel Metatron received sixty lashes of fire for sitting down in heaven (which could lead people to think there were two powers in heaven). The chapter 'Ein Dorshin' discusses limitations on teaching mystical subjects.

[ii] This refers to the Talmudic teaching that 'thoughts of sin are more severe than sin itself' (Yoma 29a) because physical sins affect the physical realm while sinful thoughts directly impact the spiritual dimension.

[iii] The concept of 'Havdalah' (separation) is expanded from its liturgical context (the ceremony marking the end of Sabbath) to a mystical principle about maintaining proper spiritual boundaries between holy and mundane.

הטוב מן הרע בכל כחנו וכל
95 אחד מהדיוקנין בלול משלשתן
אלמלא המחשבות הפגומות
ישנן גם באלה השנים עם היותם
משמשים בעצם וראשונה אחד
לדבור ואחד למעשה: [i] with the majority of evil, and we must separate the good from the evil with all our might. Each of these 95R configurations includes all three [levels], if not for the flawed thoughts that exist even in these two, despite their being used primarily—one for speech and one for action.

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

מערכה שלישית הצומח
באדם צלם תחתון עבד לפני
המלך[ii] והוא ההתפשטות בעולם
המורגש לתרי תתאי מגו תלתא
5 מן הדיוקנים הנ״ל העליון
שבשנים אלו גם הוא ראש
יחשב לתחתונים וישתנה אקונין
שלישית הלזו לאדם בפני עצמו
ולדוד בפני עצמו ולגואל בפני
10 עצמו וכן לכל דומיהם הכי
נמי לא נשתתפו בו אפי׳ רעים
אהובים. ויש בו תרין דרגין
חד רברבא הנקרא צלם באמת
דכתיב ביה אך בצלם יתהלך איש
15 וחד זעירא הנקרא צל כדכתיב
כצל ימינו עלי ארץ. הראשון
הוא דוגמא שלמה מאקונין

The third arrangement in man is the lower image, a servant before the King,[1] which is the extension into the sensory world of the two lower aspects from within the three configurations mentioned above. The higher of these two is also considered a head 5R for the lower ones. This third image varies for each individual, such that Adam has his own, David his own, and the Redeemer his own, and similarly for all others like them. Likewise, even beloved friends do not share it. 10R

It contains two levels: one greater, called the true image (tzelem), concerning which it is written, "Surely in an image walks man" (Psalms 39:7), and one lesser, called shadow (tzel),[2] as it is written, "Like a shadow are our days on earth" (1 Chronicles 29:15). 15R The first is a complete representation of the second image we mentioned earlier, while the [1] This introduces a complex kabbalistic concept describing the third level in the soul's structure. The Hebrew term 'maaracha' (arrangement) reflects the author's systematic approach to mapping the soul's components.

[2] The author distinguishes between two aspects of this soul level using biblical verses: the higher aspect called 'tzelem' (image) and the lower called 'tzel' (shadow). This reflects the kabbalistic practice of finding scriptural bases for mystical concepts.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The author cites the Zohar as the primary authority for his understanding of the soul's structure, establishing the text's kabbalistic foundation. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — Mentioned as one of the sources for the author's understanding of human spiritual anatomy, reinforcing the text's engagement with advanced kabbalistic literature. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — Referenced to establish authoritative sources for the text's teachings about soul anatomy, showing the author's deep engagement with esoteric Zoharic literature. | Cf. Pardes Rimmonim by Moses Cordovero — The author specifically references Cordovero's section on the soul, showing his reliance on the systematic Kabbalah of the Safed school as a primary influence. | Cf. Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano — The author identifies Fano as his personal teacher, establishing his own intellectual lineage within Italian Kabbalah, and cites specific works dealing with the microcosmic nature of humans. | Cf. Ein Dorshin chapter of the Talmud — The reference to Metatron receiving sixty lashes of fire connects to the Talmudic warning about the dangers of mystical speculation, suggesting limitations on even angelic beings. | Cf. Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil — Used as a metaphor for the mixed nature of the Ruach level of soul, where good and evil exist in equal measure but remain separate, requiring spiritual discernment.

[ii] The author establishes a hierarchy of soul levels, with this 'third arrangement' described as 'the vegetative in man' and 'the lower image' that serves as a servant before the King. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the soul's structure as having multiple levels that mediate between divine and physical realms.

שניה שזכרנו והתחתון גם הוא
יתחלק לשנים שהם לבושי הרוח
והנפש הנזכר באקונין שניה
בסוד חלוקא דרבנן המזומנת
לשלש הדיוקנין בכח פשוט
ששת ימי בראשית אלא שהוא
מחוסר מעשה המצוה וברכותיהן
וכוונתם להשלמתו.[i] וכלן
מסתלקים לנחתמים למיתה
בליל החותם וחוזרים עד שלשים
יום לפני הגויעה[ii] ואז העליון
לבדו שהוא דוגמא מאקונין
שניה הנ״ל הוא לבדו הולך ולא
ישוב עם נשמה עצמה דבריאה
שהיא עולה מאליה לברור את
חלקה ואין נטילתה על ידי שליח
אלא הולכת וחוזרת כפי זכותו
של אדם אך אינה מתיישבת בו
בקביעות והיא חוזרת ג״כ עם
מראה דמות כבוד ה׳ בשעת
סלוק האחרון דכתיב ביה תוסף
רוחם יגועון וכל אלו הל׳ יום
שלפני הגויעה הארת נשמה הזאת
שהיא רושם בעלמא נשארת
בדמיון לפי שהיא כעוטיה בתוך
דיוקן הרוח לבד ובכל לילה
בשהיא עולה לראות וליראות
עם הנשמה עצמה מראין לה
מקום כבודה בההוא עלמא ואין
הרוח העיקרי מלביש לגמרי
ולא מצמצם בעצמו אותו הרושם
הנשאר מן הנשמה שנסתלקה
והלבוש התחתון בשני חלקיו
אינו זז משם עד יום המות
דכתיב ביה עד שיפוח היום

lower one is further divided into two parts: the garments of the ruach and nefesh mentioned in the second image, in the secret of the "scholarly garment" (chaluka d'rabbanan) prepared for the three configurations through simple potential since the six days of creation,[1] though it lacks the fulfillment that comes through performing commandments, their blessings, and the proper intentions to complete it.

All these withdraw from those sealed for death on the night of sealing and return until thirty days before expiration.[2] At that point, only the higher one, which is a representation of the aforementioned second image, departs and does not return, along with the neshamah itself from the World of Creation (Beriah), which ascends on its own to clarify its portion. Its taking is not accomplished through a messenger; rather, it comes and goes according to a person's merit, though it does not settle within him permanently. It also returns with the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord at the time of final departure, concerning which it is written, "You take away their breath, they expire" (Psalms 104:29).

Throughout these thirty days before expiration, the illumination of this neshamah, which is merely an impression, remains as a semblance because it is like a covering within the image of the ruach alone. Each night when it ascends to see and be seen with the neshamah itself, it is shown its place of honor in that world. The essential ruach neither fully clothes nor constrains within itself that impression remaining from the departed neshamah. The lower garment, in its two parts, does not depart until the day of death, concerning which it is written, "Until the day breathes and the shadows flee" (Song of Songs 2:17). The reason is that they rule and actively func-

[1] The 'chaluka d'rabbanan' (scholarly garment) is a kabbalistic concept referring to a spiritual vestment prepared for souls but completed through the performance of commandments. This illustrates how mystical thought viewed human religious actions as completing cosmic processes begun at creation.

[2] The text provides a specific timeline for the soul's gradual departure, beginning with 'the night of sealing' (likely Yom Kippur, when tradition holds that one's fate for the year is sealed) and continuing through a thirty-day process before death.

[i] This refers to the mystical concept of 'chaluka d'rabbanan' (the scholarly garment), a spiritual vestment prepared for the soul since creation but completed through one's performance of commandments, blessings, and proper intentions. This represents how human religious actions create or complete metaphysical structures.

[ii] The text presents a specific timeline for the soul's departure, stating that certain spiritual components begin withdrawing thirty days before death. This provides a mystical explanation for changes that might be observed in a person approaching death.

ונסו הצללים והטעם כי המה
המושלים ופועלים בעצם בשני
55 חלקי הנפש החיונית שנזכר לקמן
לא כן הצלם כי אין לו קרבה
עצמית עם הכחות גופניות רק
בפרוס עליהם סוכת שלום בלבד
וגם בהסתלקו אין איש נגרע מן
60 הפעולות בחיריות והטבעיות
ומכל מחשבות אדם. ומן הצללים
יש לו בבואה ראשונה ושניה כל
ימי חייו לא כן השדים שאין להם
לבוש כי אם מעשיה שבעשיה
65 לבד. והנה השכל הפועל הוא
המלאך הממונה על ההריון הוא
שליח עליון להלביש כללות
התמונה הזאת השלישית בגוף
האדם. וכאן יודיע אליו האל ית׳
70 מהות הצורה שתחול על הטפה
המזדמנת לו באותה שעה החכם
יהיה או סכל והיא הנדונית עם
כל מה שתחתיה בל״ו בריתות
שבתורה כנגד ל״ו מנה דרבוא
75 רבוון דאינון ששים רבוא
אובלסין שהנפש החוטאת נכרתת
מהם ורזא דא מנשמת אלוה
יאבדו ואין צריך לומר צלם
תחתון זה הנזכר למעלה בעצם
80 בגיהנם תחתון לפי צורך המירוק
והיא לבדה נפש המשכלת לבעלי
המחקר. ובה כל הרהורין
ומחשבתין דהבלי עלמא[i] וזו
אינה מסתלקת בשעת השינה
85 כמו שנתבאר. ולהיות שהנשמות
הם חלק אלוה ממעל מצותן
עושות רושם בקדושה העליונה
ושוברות המזל[ii] כמו שבאו הרבה
מעשיות בזה בגמ׳. וכשעולה

tion within the two parts of the vital soul mentioned below, unlike the image (tzelem), which has no essential closeness with bodily powers, merely spreading 55R over them a canopy of peace. Even when it departs, no one is diminished in terms of willful and natural functions, nor in any human thoughts.

From the shadows, a person has a primary and secondary reflection throughout his lifetime, unlike 60R demons who have no garment except from the lowest level of the World of Action (Asiyah). The Active Intellect, which is the angel appointed over conception, is the supernal messenger that clothes this third form in its entirety within the human body. Here, 65R the blessed God informs him about the nature of the form that will descend upon the droplet prepared for him at that time—whether he will be wise or foolish. This is judged, along with everything beneath it, by the thirty-six excisions in the Torah,[1] corre- 70R sponding to thirty-six portions from the sixty myriads of souls, from which the sinning soul is cut off.
This is the secret of "from the breath of God they perish" (Job 4:9). It goes without saying that this lower image mentioned above essentially enters the 75R lower Gehinnom according to the need for purification. This alone is the intellectual soul according to the philosophers, and it contains all thoughts and contemplations of worldly vanities. This does not depart during sleep, as has been explained. 80R

Since souls are a portion of God above, their commandments leave an impression in the supernal holiness and break through astrological destiny,[2] as many accounts in the Talmud demonstrate. When the soul ascends after its departure, many souls of 85R
the righteous come to greet it, as stated in the hidden Midrash that after the passing of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, three hundred souls of the righteous came to him, and above them was Abraham who sat beside

[1] The reference to 'thirty-six excisions' relates to the 36 transgressions in Torah that incur the punishment of 'karet' (spiritual excision), where a soul is cut off from its source. The author correlates this with the structure of souls in the mystical cosmos.

[2] This expresses a fundamental kabbalistic concept that human souls are literally divine fragments and that performing commandments creates metaphysical effects in higher realms that can override astrological determinations.

[i] The text identifies this lower soul level as the seat of worldly thoughts and contemplations, positioning it as an intermediary between pure spiritual consciousness and physical existence. This follows Aristotelian concepts of the 'intellectual soul' integrated into kabbalistic thought.

[ii] This expresses the kabbalistic concept that souls are literally 'a portion of God above' and that performing commandments creates metaphysical effects in higher realms and can override astrological destiny.

הנשמה למעלה אחר פטירתה
באים לקראתה כמה נשמות של
צדיקים[i] כמ״ש במדרש הנעלם
כי אחר פטירתו של רשב״י אתו
לותיה תלת מאה נשמי דצדיקיא
ועילא מנהון א״ה דהוא יתיב
גביה והוא ממלל עמיה וכו׳:
וממעשה דמציעא פרק הפועלים
דאמר ר׳ זירא אמש נ״ל ר״י
בר׳ חנינא אמרתי לו אצל מי
אתה תקוע א״ל אצל ר׳ יוחנן
ור״י אצל מי אצל ר׳ ינאי ור׳
ינאי אצל מי וכו׳ משם התברר
כי החכמים בני ישיבה אחת וכן
התלמידים עם רבם לומדים
יחד בג״ע ויושבים איש כפי
מדרגתו וכבודו[ii] כאומרו באתר
דזקוקין דנור ובעורין דאשא
מאן מעייל בר נפחא לתמן ויש
להם קתדראות באומרם צדיקים
יושבים. נוטלים ויורדים בכח
הארה ההיא הסובבת אותם
בקתדרא מישיבה שלמעלה
להתעדן בצרור החיים ואשרי מי
שזכה לשמש אדם גדול בעוה״ז
כדאמרי׳ מעשה בתלמיד של
ר׳ אליעזר שנתחייב שריפה
למקום ואמרו הניחו לו שאדם
גדול שמש ע״כ אמרו אם דומה
הרב למלאך ה׳ צבאות תורה
יבקשו מפיהו. ובן שם במציעא
נפל פתקא מרקיעא בפומבדיתא
רבה בר נחמני נתבקש בישיבה
של מעלה ונראה ג״כ מה שאמרו
מפורש בפ׳ אלו הן הגולין גבי
ידיו רב לו הנאמר ביהודה וזו
מעלה נפלאה לנשמה ללמוד
תורה בג״ע כמו שהיתה עושה

him and conversed with him. 90R

From the incident in Bava Metzia, chapter "The Workers," where Rabbi Zeira said, "Last night Rabbi Yochanan son of Rabbi Chanina appeared to me. I asked him, 'With whom are you established?' He replied, 'With Rabbi Yochanan.' 'And Rabbi Yochanan with whom?' 'With Rabbi Yannai.' 'And Rabbi Yannai with whom?' etc." From this it becomes clear that scholars of one academy, as well as students with their teacher, study together in the Garden of Eden and sit according to their level and honor,[1] as it states, "In the place of fiery sparks and burning flames, who brings the blacksmith there?" They have chairs, as they say, "The righteous sit." They are taken and descend, through the power of that illumination that surrounds them in the chair from the academy above, to delight in the bond of life. Fortunate is one who merits to serve a great person in this world, as they said, "There was an incident with a student of Rabbi Eliezer who was condemned to burning by Heaven, and they said, 'Leave him be, for he served a great man.'" Therefore they said, "If the teacher resembles an angel of the Lord of Hosts, they should seek Torah from his mouth." Similarly, in Metzia it states that a note fell from heaven in Pumbedita: "Rabbah bar Nachmani has been summoned to the heavenly academy." This is also apparent from what is explicitly stated in the chapter "These Are the Exiles" regarding "his hands are sufficient for him" said about Judah. This is a wonderful privilege for the soul, to study Torah in the Garden of Eden as it did in this world, and fortunate is the one who merits it.

90R 95R 100R 105R 110R 115R 120R

[1] The text uses Talmudic narratives to establish that the hierarchical relationships and learning activities of Torah scholars continue in the afterlife, maintaining the same structure as earthly academies.

[i] The text presents a vivid description of the soul's journey after death, where it is greeted by souls of righteous individuals who have passed away previously. This illustrates the communal nature of the afterlife in Jewish mystical thought.

[ii] This passage establishes that the hierarchical relationships between teachers and students continue in the Garden of Eden, with souls grouped according to their earthly affiliations and continuing their Torah study. This reflects the belief that core spiritual activities continue and are perfected in the afterlife.

בעוה״ז ואשרי הזוכה אליה: [i]

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

המערכה ד׳ הדומה באדם
היא הנפש חיונית שראתה בחוש
ונתקדשה בשעה שאמרה על הים
זה אלי ואהיה לו נוה שהכסא
קרוב מהנוה ונמשיל הכסא
בעצמנו במערכה ג׳ שזכרנו
והלבוש שנדרש במערכה שניה
יותר קרוב מנוה וכסא וזה
על צד ההשאלה. אך איקונין
ראשונה אין להם יחס לא עם
היכל ולא עם כסא ולא עם לבוש
רק חלק ה׳ עמו ולברא הכסא
בשבילם שאור איקונין ראשונה
אינו מתגלה רק בהתלבשותה
בכסא לכן פני יעקב חקוקים
בכסא. וראוי לדעת כי עם
הרכבת היסודות ע״י תנועת
הגרמים השמיימים כדי שיחול
עליה צורה אנושית נראה לעינים
אז מתקדשת הנפש הזאת החיונית
ויצירתה באותה שעה מצד
מה שהיא כח בגוף לא זולת
ויוצאה לפעלה ולעבודתה על
ידי המלאך שזכרנו המהוה
אותה ומציירה בשני בחותיה
הוא הבל״א דגר״מי שהוא החום
הטבעי בסיס לנפש הצומחת אשר

The fourth arrangement in man is the vital soul that perceived with the senses and was sanctified at the moment when it declared at the sea, “This is my God,” and I will be a dwelling place for Him,[A] for the throne is closer than the dwelling, and we can compare the throne to ourselves in the third arrangement we mentioned, and the garment discussed in the second arrangement is closer than the dwelling and throne, though this is metaphorical. However, the first image has no relationship with palace, throne, or garment—it is solely “the portion of the Lord is His people,” and the throne was created for them, since the light of the first image is only revealed when clothed in the throne; therefore, Jacob’s face is engraved on the throne. It is important to understand that with the composition of elements through the movement of celestial bodies, so that a human form visible to the eyes may rest upon it, this vital soul becomes sanctified, and its formation at that moment derives from its being a power in the body, nothing else, and it emerges to its function and service through the angel we mentioned who brings it into being and forms it with its two powers. The first is the “breath of the bones,”[B] which is the natural heat that serves as the foundation for the vegetative soul, about which it is decreed whether one will be rich or poor, and this is the animal soul, whose af-

[A] Or: “and He shall be my dwelling place” — The Hebrew can be interpreted either as the soul becoming a dwelling for God or as God becoming a dwelling for the soul. The second interpretation aligns with the mystical concept of divine protection.

[B] Or: “the vapor of the bones” — The term refers to a subtle spiritual essence that remains in the bones even after death. ‘Vapor’ might better capture the ephemeral quality of this essence than ‘breath’.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The passage adopts the Zohar’s multi-layered conception of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) and its teachings about how souls continue their existence after death, particularly the concept that righteous souls gather together in heavenly academies. | Cf. Psalms 39:7 — The author cites this verse to establish the biblical basis for the kabbalistic concept of tzelem (divine image) as an aspect of human spiritual structure. | Cf. 1 Chronicles 29:15 — This verse is used to establish the concept of tzel (shadow) as the lesser aspect of the divine image in humans, emphasizing the transient nature of physical existence. | Cf. Song of Songs 2:17 — The author interprets this poetic verse in a kabbalistic context to refer to the departure of the lower aspects of the soul at death. | Cf. Job 4:9 — This verse is linked to the kabbalistic concept of kareit (spiritual excision), where a soul is cut off from its divine source. | Cf. Talmud Bava Metzia — The author uses this Talmudic story to demonstrate how souls maintain their hierarchical relationships and continue Torah study in the afterlife. | Cf. Midrash Hane’elam (Hidden Midrash) — This reference from the ‘Hidden Midrash’ (likely a section of the Zohar) is used to illustrate how righteous souls are greeted by other souls, including biblical figures, after death.

נגזר עליה עשיר או עני והיא
הנפש הבהמו״ת שעסקיה רעים
בדברים בטלים למי שנגרר
אחריהם. החכמה תעוז לחכם
למשול בה עד רדתה להיות
חיות קצת לגופות הצדיקים
אשר שוכבים בקברם שהמה
לשלמותם שאין בלבם קנאה
מתקדשים ומתטהרים בה ואין
עצמותיהם מרקיבים והב׳
עצבונ״א דבשר״א היא נפש
המרגשת דאתמר עליה גבור או
חלש והיא רוח ממללא בהבלי
עלמא ורמה קשה לה בקבר
כמחט בבשר החי עד שיתעכל
הבשר. אך צדיקים יודו לשמו
יתברך וכתיב בהו אף בשרי
ישכון לבטח כי הם ישני אדמת
עפר ערבה שנתם בלי מונע כי
אין לרימה חלק ונחלה כלל
בבשרם ועצמותיהם יחליץ ויציל
שופט צדק מהתכת הרכבתם עד
שעה אחת קודם תחיית המתים
לקיים בהם ואל עפר תשוב[i] כי
הכל היה מן העפר ואפי׳ גלגל
חמה.[ii] ועתידים צדיקים שיהיו
פניהם דומים לחמה. וישנה ג״כ
לזאת הצורה החיונית לכל אחד
מאישי המין לא ישתתף בה זולתו
אם לא על צד העבור כנדרש
בשניה ובשלישית וכל מיתה שאין
בה כרת בין בדיני אדם בין
בדיני שמים משפטם אבדן הנפש
החיונית בלבד ויש בדיני אדם
ל״ו גופי עבירות להתחייב בהם
מיתת ב״ד שמונה עשר בנסקלין fairs are concerned with worthless matters for those who are drawn after them. “Wisdom strengthens the wise” to rule over it until it descends to become some vitality for the bodies of the righteous who lie in their graves, who, in their perfection, having no jealousy in their hearts, are sanctified and purified through it, and their bones do not decay. The second power is the “distress of the flesh,”[A] which is the sensing soul, of which it is said one is either strong or weak, and it is the speaking spirit concerned with worldly vanities, and the worm is as painful to it in the grave as a needle in living flesh until the flesh decomposes. But the righteous give thanks to His blessed name, and it is written of them, “Even my flesh shall dwell securely,” for they are sleepers in the dust of the pleasant earth,[1] their sleep unimpeded, for the worm has no portion or inheritance at all in their flesh, and the righteous Judge will strengthen and save their bones from the dissolution of their composition until one hour before the resurrection of the dead, to fulfill in them “and to dust you shall return,” for everything was from dust, even the orb of the sun. And the righteous are destined to have faces resembling the sun. This vital form is also unique to each individual of the species; no one else shares in it except through the process of soul impregnation, as explained in the second and third arrangements.

Every death that does not involve spiritual excision, whether by human law or divine law, results only in the loss of the vital soul. In human law, there are thirty-six major transgressions punishable by court-imposed deat[2]h: eighteen by stoning, ten by burning, two by beheading, and six by strangulation, which correspond to the thirty-six measures of the myriad of myriads we mentioned, each according to its way.
The power of the court was effective, for all those li-

30R 35R 40R 45R 50R 55R 60R

[A] Or: “the sadness of the flesh” — This term describes the suffering or heaviness associated with physicality. ‘Sadness’ could be more appropriate as it implies an emotional quality rather than just physical pain.

[1] The author is creating a contrast between ordinary death, where decomposition is painful to the soul, and the death of the righteous, which is portrayed as a peaceful sleep without suffering.
[2] The author refers to the four methods of capital punishment in Jewish law (stoning, burning, beheading, and strangulation) and suggests that these judicial punishments had the spiritual effect of preventing the more severe divine punishment of spiritual excision (karet).

[i] A reference to Genesis 3:19, ‘for dust you are and to dust you will return.’ The author is noting that even the righteous must fulfill this decree, but only at the last moment before resurrection.
[ii] The orb or sphere of the sun. In medieval cosmology, even celestial bodies were believed to be composed of refined elements that would return to their source at the end of time.

עשר בנשרפין שתים בנהרגין
ושש בנחנקין אשר יש להם אותו
היחס עם ל״ו מנה דרבוא רבוון
שזכרנו האי כי אורחיה והאי
כי אורחיה. ויפה היה כח ב״ד
שכל חייבי כריתות שלקו וכ״ש
שהיו מומתים על ידם נפטרו
מידי כריתתן שאין הצלם שלהם
נגעל. וגם הנפש החיונית הלזו
יורדת שחת להשלמת המירוק.
והסבוב שיש בו חילוף אי אפשר
בשום פנים שיתואר זולתי לשתי
מערכות התחתונות יחד או
לאחרונה שבהם כפי חומר׳ העון
אם בסוד המאסר או באבדן
הצורה הראשונה. אלה איפה
הם ד׳ מערכות כוללות לכל
חלקי הנפש כלליהן ופרטיהן
בדקדוק וכבר יצדק בהם על
צד אחד מצדי ההשאלה אשר
יאמר לתחתונה נפש בסוד ה״א
אחרונה של שם. שניה לה רוח
והיא עצמה וא״ו נשמה על גביהן
ה״א ראשונה אך מערכה גדולה
שזכרנו ראשונה היא נשמתא
לנשמתא יו״ד שבשם. והזוכים
בארבע מערכות אלה כפי
המכוון בהם ליוצר בראשית הוא
יחידו של עולם הנרמז בקוצו
של יו״ד[i] המה הקוצרים בשדה
אשר ברכו ה׳ מחצד״י חקל״א
קדישא[ii] ודאי והמלה הנכבדת able to excision who were flogged, and certainly those executed by them, were exempted from their excision, as their image was not defiled. This vital soul also descends to the pit to complete its purification.

The cycle involving transmigration cannot possibly be attributed to any but the two lowest arrangements together, or to the last of them, according to the gravity of the sin, whether through imprisonment or the loss of the original form. These, then, are the four comprehensive arrangements for all parts of the soul, their general and specific aspects in detail, and they can rightly be described metaphorically, calling the lowest "nefesh"[1] corresponding to the final hei of the divine Name, the second "ruach" corresponding to the vav, "neshamah" above them corresponding to the first hei, but the great arrangement we mentioned first is the "soul of the soul" corresponding to the yod of the Name. Those who merit these four arrangements according to the Creator's intention—the Unique One of the universe hinted at in the point of the yod—are the reapers in the field blessed by the Lord, truly "reapers of the holy field,"[A] and this honored expression is an acronym for the entire subject:
"speaker, living, growing, inanimate," which, with the inclusive number, equals in gematria "Tzeva'ot" (Hosts), and it is said of them, "The Lord is with you," with His four letters, a full name called upon a full world, and for this reason the complete person is called a "small world," and this is what we have learned: "Whoever engages in Torah for its own sake is worthy of the entire world."[2] Happy is the people that has it so.[3]

[A] Or: "harvesters of the holy field" — While 'reapers' is accurate, 'harvesters' might better convey the kabbalistic concept of gathering divine sparks, which is likely the intended meaning here.

[1] The author is presenting the kabbalistic correspondence between the four levels of the soul and the four letters of the divine name YHVH (the Tetragrammaton), a fundamental concept in Jewish mysticism.

[2] This is a quotation from Pirkei Avot (Ethics of the Fathers) 6:1, used here to reinforce the connection between Torah study and achieving the complete soul structure that makes one a 'small world' reflecting the entire cosmos.

[3] This is a quotation from Psalms 144:15 that concludes this section on the soul's arrangement, suggesting that those who understand and cultivate the proper soul structure achieve a blessed state.

[i] This is a reference to the kabbalistic concept that the point (or crown) of the letter yod in the divine name represents the highest level of divinity—Keter or even Ein Sof (the Infinite).

[ii] This Aramaic phrase means 'reapers of the holy field' and appears in the Zohar. It refers to those who gather divine sparks or spiritual insights, often associated with the souls of the righteous or those who study mystical wisdom.

הזאת נוטריקון לכלל הדרוש
מ״דבר ח״י צ״ומח ד״ומם[i] שהם
עם הכולל בגימטריא צבא״ות
ואתמר בהו ה׳ עמכם בארבע
אותיות דיליה שם מלא נקרא
על עולם מלא ומזה הטעם יקרא
האדם השלם עול״ם קט״ן והיינו
דתנינן כל העוסק בתורה לשמה
כל העולם כלו כדאי הוא לו.
אשרי העם שככה לו:[ii]

פרק ה׳

עוד לנו לדעת כי בזולת
שנשמת האדם בכלל כלולה
מי׳ ספירות עוד היא כלולה
מד׳ יסודות עליונים כנוף
שכלול מד׳ יסודות תחתונים.
וד׳ יסודות של אצילות נודע
שהם גנת״מ[iii] ומלבוש שאמרנו
שהוא בבריאה יהיו יסודותיו
ד׳ עמודי כסא שהם לד׳
רוחות העולם אדנ״י למזרח.
אל לדרום. אלהים לצפון
ולמערב.[iv] ואופן אחד משתרבב
משם לארץ דלא ישארון תתאין

Chapter 5

We should further understand that beyond the soul of man being generally comprised of the ten sefirot,[1] it is also composed of four supernal elements, just as the body is composed of four lower elements. The four elements of Atzilut (Emanation) are known to be Chesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, and Malkhut. The garment that we mentioned exists in Beriah (Creation) has as its elements the four pillars of the Throne, which correspond to the four directions of the world: Adonai to the east, El to the south, and Elohim to the north and west. And one Ofan (angelic wheel) extends from there to earth so that the lower beings will not remain

[1] The author is establishing a complex spiritual anatomy where the soul has both a general structure (reflecting the ten sefirot) and elements corresponding to the four kabbalistic worlds, mirroring how the physical body is composed of four terrestrial elements.

[i] These are the four kingdoms of existence in kabbalistic thought: medaber (speaking/human), chai (living/animal), tzomeach (growing/vegetative), and domem (silent/mineral). The human soul contains elements corresponding to all these levels.

[ii] Cf. Zohar I, 218a — This passage draws directly on Zoharic teachings about the soul's structure and its correspondence to the divine name YHVH, with each letter representing a different soul level | Cf. Exodus 15:2 — The author connects the soul's sanctification to the revelatory moment at the splitting of the sea, when Israel declared 'This is my God'—suggesting that the vital soul has direct experiential knowledge of divinity | Cf. Ecclesiastes 7:19 — Used to support the idea that wisdom enables control over the animal soul's tendency toward material concerns | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author invokes the concept of 'olam katan' (small world) to suggest that the complete human being who has properly organized all soul levels mirrors the structure of the entire cosmos | Cf. Psalms 16:9 — Used to support the kabbalistic idea that the righteous experience bodily preservation and peaceful rest even after death

[iii] The abbreviation גנת״מ stands for גבורה, גדולה (חסד), תפארת, מלכות—the four sefirot Gevurah, Gedulah (Chesed), Tiferet, and Malkhut, which are considered the four elements of the World of Emanation.

[iv] This presents a directional correspondence of divine names with the four directions: the name Adonai with east, El with south, and Elohim with both north and west, reflecting the kabbalistic understanding of how divine forces flow into our world through these cardinal points.

בלא אשגחותא.[i] עיין בזוהר שיר
15 השירים מזה. ובמלבוש היצירה
יהיו ד׳ פני החיות. ובמלבוש
העשיה רוחניות יהיו יסודותיו
ממראה האופנים הנכללים
באופן אחד בארץ לארבעת פניו.
20 ועוד כתיב ומראיהם ומעשיהם
כאשר יהיה האופן בתוך האופן.
ומכאן יהיו יסודות הצלם שזכר
המלך החסיד והצללים שנים
שזכרם החכם בנו בשיר השירים
25 ובמלבוש הגלגלים שמהם כח
הנפש החיונית הגנוזה בבי קברי.
ואולי עליה אמרו בפ׳ אלו
מגלחין כשקם חזקיה בריה דרב
חייא מקבריה לחלוק כבוד לרב
30 הונא קם בהדיה עמודא דנורא
ואסתכן ר׳ חגי. וחלקי נפש
הזאת הבלא דגרמי ועצבונא
דבשרא[ii] יהיו יסודותיו מהגשם
החמישי אם שיהיה הוא מבחר
35 היסודות התחתונים. או מהות
גשמי נכבד מאד עומד בפני
עצמו זולתם אשר לא הוכר
מהפלוסופים. ולעולם הנשמה
כלולה מי׳ אלא שמלבד זה היו
40 גוברים ומתגלים בה ד׳ יסודות
הנזכרים על דרך שיתראו בה
ד׳ פנים אלו מאירים בה יותר
משאר העשר. וכבר אמרנו
למעלה כי אחר הפטירה תשאר
45 הנפש בעה״ז בקבר. וברוחניות
העשיה יש מקום ידוע הנקרא without divine supervision.[1] See the Zohar on Song of Songs regarding this. In the garment of Yetzirah 15R (Formation), there are the four faces of the Chayot (living creatures). And in the spiritual garment of Asiyah (Action), its elements are from the appearance of the Ofanim (wheels) that are included in one wheel on earth with its four faces. And 20R furthermore it is written, “And their appearance and their work was as it were a wheel within a wheel.” From here derive the elements of the Tzelem (divine image) mentioned by the pious king, and the two shadows mentioned by his wise son in Song of 25R Songs, and in the garment of the celestial spheres from which comes the power of the vital soul that is hidden in the graves. Perhaps regarding this they said in the chapter “These May Shave” that when Hezekiah son of Rabbi Chiyya rose from his grave 30R to pay respect to Rav Huna, a pillar of fire rose with him and Rabbi Chagai was endangered.[2] And the components of this soul—the breath of the bones and the distress of the flesh—have as their elements the fifth substance, if it is indeed the 35R choicest of the lower elements, or perhaps a most honored physical essence standing independently apart from them, which was not recognized by the philosophers.[3] And always the soul includes the ten [sefirot], but beyond this, the four elements 40R mentioned above predominate and are revealed in it, in such a way that these four aspects shine within it more than the other ten. And we have already stated above that after death, the nefesh remains in this world in the grave. And in the spirituality 45R of Asiyah, there is a known place also called “the [1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that there must be continuous connection between higher and lower worlds. The Ofan (a class of angels described in Ezekiel’s vision) serves as a conduit of divine providence, ensuring that even the lowest spiritual realms remain connected to divine guidance.

[2] This Talmudic story illustrates how even after death, great sages retain their spiritual power. The pillar of fire represents the intense spiritual energy that remained with Rabbi Hezekiah even in death, so powerful that it posed danger to the living Rabbi Chagai.

[3] The author suggests that the fifth element constituting the vital soul might not be the quintessence (ether) recognized by Aristotelian philosophy, but something entirely different that philosophers failed to identify—showing how Jewish mysticism sometimes positions itself as possessing knowledge beyond Greek philosophical traditions.

[i] Aramaic phrase meaning “so that the lower beings will not remain without divine supervision,” reflecting the kabbalistic principle that there must be continuous connection between higher and lower worlds for divine providence to operate.

[ii] These Aramaic terms refer to two components of the vital soul: “havla d’garmi” (breath/vapor of the bones) and “atzvona d’bishra” (distress/sadness of the flesh), representing how the soul animates the body’s skeletal structure and flesh respectively.

גם הוא בי קברי וחצר מות.
ושם תנוח נפש דעשיה. ולא
תשאר בקבר ממש התחתון זולתי
הנפש החיונית שהיא מהגלגלים.
והרוח דיצירה מנוחתה בג״ע של
מטה. והנשמה דבריאה שוכבת
ומנוחתה בפרגוד והוא גן עליון
לפנים מן הפרגוד האמצעי תחת
כסא הכבוד והרוחות שהיו
מספרות זו עם זו מה ששמעו
מאחורי הפרגוד דמס׳ ברכות
הם שני אחורים לפרגוד ההוא
א׳ מיצירה וא׳ מעשיה. ונשמות
הצרורות בצרור החיים אינן
מתלבשים בשום מלבוש אוירי כי
אם לעתים ידועים. כרבי בעת
שהיה אומר קידוש גם שבמתים
חפשי מן המצות אז היה כחי
לכל דבריו ולא נקרא מוציא
שם שמים לבטלה וכן ר׳ יוסי
הגלילי היה בא לביתו בכל ערב
שבת ושני תלמידים עברו ושמעו
קולו שהיה שונה בתורה. וכתוב
ביוחסין דף קל״ב ע״ב כי רבינו
יחיאל אביו של הרא״ש הר׳
יהודה בן אשר נינו העיד עליו
בצוואתו ששחק בארונו לפני
כל הקהל כששאל ממנו חברו
החכם שיקיים שבועתו שיחלקו
בעה״ב והניע ראשו ושחק.
ואמרו שבא לביתו ולבית מדרשו
אחר פטירתו כרבינו הקדוש
ע״כ. ויעקב אבינו שאמרו
עליו שלא מת נשמתו אינה
נשארת ערומה מהלבוש אפי׳
שעה אחת אלא נשמתו בצרור
החיים ובלבוש אצלה תמיד
מזומן וחופף וכל זמן שנשמתו
רוצה להתלבש בו מתלבשת
וכשישראל בצער הגלות נשמת
יעקב לובשת המלבוש כי יכול house of graves" and "the court of death." There the nefesh of Asiyah rests. Only the vital soul, which is from the celestial spheres, actually remains in the lower grave.[1] The ruach of Yetzirah rests in the lower Garden of Eden. And the neshamah of Beriah lies and rests in the Pargod (celestial curtain), which is the upper Garden beyond the middle Pargod beneath the Throne of Glory. The spirits that were conversing with each other about what they heard from behind the Pargod mentioned in Tractate Berakhot are two "backs" to that Pargod—one from Yetzirah and one from Asiyah. The souls that are bound in the bundle of life do not clothe themselves in any ethereal garment except at specific times. For example, Rabbi [Judah the Prince], when he would recite Kiddush—even though "the dead are free from the commandments"—at that time he was powerful in all his words and was not considered as one who utters the divine name in vain.[2] Similarly, Rabbi Yosi the Galilean would come to his home every Sabbath eve, and two disciples passed by and heard his voice as he was studying Torah. And it is written in Yuhasin page 132b that our teacher Yechiel, the father of the Rosh, Rabbi Yehudah ben Asher, his great-grandson, testified about him in his will that he laughed in his coffin before the entire congregation when his wise colleague asked him to fulfill his oath that they would share in the World to Come, and he nodded his head and laughed. And they said that he came to his house and study hall after his death, like our holy Rabbi [Judah the Prince]. And our father Jacob, about whom they said that he did not die—his soul does not remain naked without a garment even for a single hour. Rather, his soul is in the bundle of life, and a garment is always prepared and hovering near it. Whenever his soul wishes to clothe itself in it, it does so. And when Israel is in the distress of exile, Jacob's soul dons the garment, for it can appear like Elijah, and it seeks mercy through the power of its prayer, drawing the power of mercy to [1] The text presents a detailed cosmology of where different soul components reside after death. The lowest soul component (nefesh) associated with the World of Action (Asiyah) remains in a spiritual version of the grave, while only the animating life-force stays with the physical remains.

50R 55R 60R 65R 70R 75R 80R 85R

[2] This passage addresses the theological problem of how deceased sages could perform rituals that include divine names when the dead are generally exempt from commandments. The author explains that at these special moments, the soul temporarily regains its power to fulfill religious obligations without transgressing the prohibition against vain utterance of God's name.

להתראות באליהו ומבקשת
רחמים בכח תפלתה ממשכת
כח הרחמים לבניו ואח״כ שבה
אל צרור החיים בלי לבוש כי
א״א לנשמה להתפלל ולהמשיך
שפע לתחתונים אלא בלבוש זה.
והנשמה שהיא מאצילות תתעלה
לשרשים העליונים. ולפעמים גם
הנפש והרוח והנשמה דבריאה
ויצירה עשיה תתקשרנה זו בזו
ותעלה שם כי מאחר שהם נצוצות
מתפשטים מהאור העליון לכן
בשיהיו העולמות מתיחדים
יתיחדו הענפים בשרשים כמו
שיזדקקו ויתיחדו התיכלות
ויתעלו אל שרשם העליון בסוד
התפלה כן הדבר בנפש רוח
ונשמה כי העשיה תתיחד ביצירה
והיצירה בבריאה והבריאה
באצילות והאצילות בנקודה
העליונה. ולא הכל זוכים אל
הרוח אפי׳ דיצירה כ״ש נשמה
דבריאה. וכבר אמרנו בחלק
ראשון כי יש עוד תוספת נשמה
מאצילות לעתים בעסקו במצוה
ובשבתות וימים טובים. והזוכה
בחול לקבל נשמה מצד אצילות
מבינה יתוסף בו בשבתות וימים
טובים נשמה יתירה מצד הכתר.
כי תעלה נשמתו שתי מדרגות
אחד למדת לילה ואחד למדת
יום. ולרוב בני האדם בימי
החול הוא יונק ומתלבש בנשמה
מסטרא דיצירה ובריאה עבד
ואמה והוא במדרגת עבד דכתיב his children.[1] Afterward, it returns to the bundle of life without a garment, for it is impossible for a soul to pray and draw divine flow to those below except 90R through this garment. The soul that is from Atzilut ascends to the supernal roots. And sometimes the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah bind together and ascend there, because they are sparks extending from the supernal light. 95R Therefore, when the worlds unite, the branches unite with the roots, just as the palaces are refined and unite and ascend to their supernal root through the mystery of prayer. So it is with nefesh, ruach, and neshamah—for Asiyah unites with Yetzirah, 100R and Yetzirah with Beriah, and Beriah with Atzilut, and Atzilut with the supernal point.[2] Not everyone merits the ruach, even of Yetzirah, and certainly not the neshamah of Beriah. We have already said in the first part that there is an additional soul from 105R Atzilut at times when one is engaged in a mitzvah and on Sabbaths and festivals. One who merits on weekdays to receive a soul from the aspect of Atzilut, from Binah, will have an additional soul from the aspect of Keter added to him on Sabbaths 110R and festivals. For his soul rises two levels—one to the attribute of night and one to the attribute of day.[3] For most people on weekdays, they draw from and clothe themselves in a soul from the aspect of Yetzirah and Beriah, servant and maidservant, and 115R one is at the level of a servant, as it is written: "Six days shall you labor." But on Sabbaths, when one is clothed in an additional soul from the aspect of Atzilut, it is said of him: "you shall rest," because he is a king, a free person, and is then called 120R "son" rather than "servant" as on weekdays.[4] And we have already explained in the section "Lips of [1] This presents the mystical understanding that the biblical patriarchs, particularly Jacob, continue to intercede for their descendants during times of hardship. This concept of ancestral intercession is significant in Jewish mysticism and offers theological comfort during persecution by suggesting that the spiritual founders of the nation remain actively engaged in its welfare.

[2] This describes the process of spiritual ascension and unification where each lower world progressively unites with the one above it, ultimately connecting to the highest divine source (the "supernal point"). This mystical unification reflects the kabbalistic goal of restoring cosmic harmony through spiritual practice.

[3] The attributes of night and day likely refer to the sefirot of Malkhut (associated with night, feminine divine aspect) and Tiferet (associated with day, masculine divine aspect), suggesting that the soul's elevation on Sabbath allows it to harmonize and transcend these complementary divine forces.

[4] This passage reveals a profound mystical understanding of the Sabbath as transforming one's spiritual status and relationship with the Divine. The transition from "servant" to "son" represents a shift from the distant relationship of master-servant to the intimate connection of parent-child, reflecting the deeper union with God made possible through Sabbath observance.

ששת ימים תעבוד. אבל בשבתות
שיתלבש בתוספת נשמה מצד
125 האצילות נאמר בו תשבות מפני
שהוא מלך בן חורין ונקרא אז
בן, ובחול עבד.[i] וכבר בארנו
בחלק שפתי צדק מציאות ב׳
מלאכים שהם יצ״ט ויצה״ר
130 ומרכבתם זה רוכב בטמאה ויצר
טוב בטהורה ושניהם קדושים
מתחלת יצירתם ועליהם נאמר
כי מלאכיו יצוה לך לשמרך בכל
דרכיך:[ii]

Righteousness" the existence of two angels, which are the good inclination and the evil inclination, and their vehicles—one rides in impurity and the 125R good inclination in purity—and both are holy from the beginning of their formation, and of them it is said: "For He will command His angels concerning you to guard you in all your ways."

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

אחר שמפי סופרים וספרים
העלינו בפרקים הקודמים קצת
ממהות חלקי נשמת האדם הדרן
למאן דפתחנא ביה בפ״ק מחלק

After having drawn from the mouths of scribes and books[1] in previous chapters some understanding of the nature of the parts of the human soul, we return to what we began in the first chapter of

[1]The Hebrew phrase 'מפי סופרים וספרים' (from the mouths of scribes and books) is a formulaic expression referring to both oral and written scholarly traditions, similar to the rabbinic phrase 'מפי ספרים ומפי סופרים' (from books and from scribes).

[i]This passage presents a profound spiritual understanding of the Sabbath, where one's spiritual status is elevated from servant (weekdays) to son (Sabbath). The transformation occurs through the neshamah yeteirah (additional soul) that derives from the highest world of Atzilut, changing one's relationship with the Divine from servitude to kinship.

[ii]Cf. Zohar on Song of Songs — This reference demonstrates the author's reliance on the Zohar as an authoritative mystical source for his cosmological framework that connects the higher and lower worlds through angelic intermediaries. | Cf. Tractate Berakhot — This reference connects Talmudic narrative to the kabbalistic cosmology being described, showing how the author integrates rabbinic and mystical traditions to support his descriptions of the soul's posthumous journey. | Cf. Rabbi Judah the Prince reciting Kiddush after death — This well-known rabbinic story is used to illustrate the author's claim that souls can temporarily clothe themselves in ethereal garments at specific times to perform certain actions in the physical world. | Cf. Rabbi Yosi the Galilean returning on Sabbath eve — This story further supports the author's theological point about righteous souls being able to manifest temporarily in the physical world, particularly on spiritually significant occasions like the Sabbath. | Cf. Sefer Yuhasin — This citation from a historical source provides a more recent example of the phenomenon being discussed, showing the author's effort to demonstrate continuity of these mystical occurrences from ancient to medieval times. | Cf. Jacob did not die — The author uses this rabbinic tradition about Jacob to illustrate his highest level of soul description—one that never loses its spiritual 'clothing' and can therefore intercede for Israel during times of exile, showing the ongoing spiritual agency of the patriarchs. | Cf. Elijah's appearances — This comparison connects Jacob's spiritual status to that of Elijah, who never died but was taken up in a fiery chariot, suggesting a special category of souls that maintain continuous ability to manifest in the physical realm. | Cf. Four worlds of Kabbalah (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) — The author uses the standard kabbalistic framework of four worlds as the organizing principle for explaining the soul's composition, posthumous journey, and spiritual elevation, showing his firm grounding in this mystical tradition. | Cf. Lips of Righteousness (Siftei Tzedek) — This self-reference shows how the author builds on concepts developed earlier in his work, creating internal coherence across the different sections of Ma'avar Yabok, and helping the reader connect related discussions. | Cf. Psalm 91:11 — This biblical reference is reinterpreted through a kabbalistic lens to support the author's teaching about the dual angelic influences (good and evil inclinations) that accompany each person, showing how scriptural texts are incorporated into mystical teachings.

זה כי הנה בחיי האדם יתקשרו
נשמה רוח נפש ונפש המרגשת
שהיא הבהמית שזכרנו למעלה
שבה ה׳ חושים וגוף האדם שבו
הבלא דגרמי ועצבונא דבשרא
ומתייחדים בו מלמעלה למטה.
אמנם אחר המות שהיא החפשיות
מן העבודה במתים חפשי ועבד
חפשי מאדוניו ואין דביקות
החלקים האלה כלפי מטה אל
הגוף כמו בחייו אלא כלפי
מעלה שהנפש נקשרת ברוח ורוח
בנשמה כדדרשו בזהר פ׳ ויחי
והחלקים האלה נפרדים זה מזה
כי אחר המות משכן הנפש בעה״ז
על הקבר[i] על הדרך שבארנו
בפ׳ הקודם וכן ב׳ בחות
הנקראים הבלא דגרמי ועצבונא
דבשרא ויש אויר למעלה מבית
הקברות שהוא קבר עליון
הנקרא חצר מות והוא מדור
הנפשות ומשכן הרוח בג״ע של
מטה ורב חמאי גאון קרא מדור
הזה חדרי ג״ע[ii] והנשמה בג״ע
של מעלה כדפי׳ בזהר פ׳ הנזכר
ובמדרש הנעלם פ׳ תולדות
יצחק ויתקשרו לעתים כגון
בראש חדש ויום טוב ושבתות

this section. For behold, during a person's lifetime, 5R the neshamah, ruach, nefesh, and the sensing nefesh[1] (which is the animal soul we mentioned above, containing the five senses), as well as the physical body—which contains the breath of the bones (havla d'garmi) and the distress of the flesh 10R (atzvona d'bishrah)[A]—are all united from above to below. However, after death, which is freedom from service—"among the dead, free" and "a servant is free from his master"[2]—these components are no longer bound downward toward the body as they 15R were during life, but rather upward,[B] with the nefesh binding to the ruach, and the ruach to the neshamah, as expounded in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi.

These components separate from one another, for 20R after death, the dwelling place of the nefesh is in this world, above the grave, as we explained in the previous chapter, along with the two powers called "breath of the bones" and "distress of the flesh." There is an atmosphere above the cemetery which is 25R the upper grave called "Court of Death,"[C] which is the dwelling place of the nefeshes. The dwelling place of the ruach is in the lower Garden of Eden, and Rav Chamai Gaon called this dwelling "the chambers of the Garden of Eden." The neshamah is in the upper 30R Garden of Eden, as explained in the aforementioned section of the Zohar and in the Hidden Midrash in [A] Or: "vital essence of the skeleton and the pain sensation of the flesh" — This alternate translation uses more contemporary physiological terminology while attempting to capture the meaning of these mystical concepts. It might be preferred for readers seeking a more scientific-sounding interpretation, though it loses some of the original Aramaic mystical terminology.

[B] Or: "these components no longer maintain their downward orientation toward the body as in life, but instead are oriented upward" — This alternate translation emphasizes the directional orientation rather than the binding quality, which might better convey the spatial metaphor being used to describe the soul's reorientation after death.

[C] Or: "Courtyard of Death" — The Hebrew term חצר more precisely means 'courtyard' or 'enclosure' rather than 'court' (in the sense of a royal court or judicial body). This translation might be preferred for greater architectural precision in the spatial metaphor.

[1] These terms represent the hierarchical structure of the soul in Kabbalah. Neshamah is the highest divine aspect, ruach is the intermediate emotional aspect, nefesh is the basic vital soul, and 'sensing nefesh' refers to the animating force that enables physical sensation.

[2] These are biblical quotations: the first from Psalms 88:6 ('among the dead, free') and the second from Job 3:19 ('a servant is free from his master'), both referring to death as a form of liberation.

[i] This establishes a key concept in Ma'avar Yabok's cosmology: the nefesh (vital soul) remains near the physical grave after death, unlike the higher soul components which ascend to spiritual realms.

[ii] Rav Chamai Gaon was a prominent 9th century Babylonian scholar. His description of the ruach's dwelling place as 'chambers of the Garden of Eden' demonstrates how the author integrates earlier rabbinic opinions into his kabbalistic framework.

אך לא בקשר הקודם.[i] ואולי
בזה נבין קצת טעם למנהג שאין
עושים קשרים בתכריכי המתים
וכן באבנטו שמלבד כי מורה
בטחון התחיה כדאמרי׳ בגמרא
ובירו׳ בצוואות חכמים רבים
באופן לבישתם והעמדתם אחר
מיתתם ג״כ ירמוז כי אין קשר
לנר״נ יחד מתמיד רק עד זמן
התחיה[ii] דאז נשמתא אתוספא
אורה גו אספקלריאה דנהרא
לאתנהרא גופא לקיומא שלים
בדקא חזי. ומהקשר הזה המועט
יש עדון לגוף שעקרו הם החמשה
חושים הדבקים בעצם שתחת מוח
האדם בפנימיות הגלגולת ואינו
דבק בו אלא עצם אחד והוא
קטן כשעורה אמנם הוא עגול
קרוב אל המרובע ובו חוטי דם
כדמות קורי עכביש מסובבים
אלו באלו[iii] ובאותם הורידים
מיוסדים ה׳ חושים זהו דעת
החכם קורדואיר״ו במציאות
עצם הנזכר וכן הביא בעל צרור
המור בשם הרמב״ם ז״ל הגם
שמדברי רבים נראה שהוא עצם
לוז שבסוף שדרתו של אדם
דכרע במודים בכל ח״י חוליות
שבשדרה והעצם הזה חי לעולם
כדאמרי׳ במדרש ובקהלת רבתי
שנבקע הסדן ואש אינו יכול
לשרפו ולבן הוא חי סמוך לחי.
ובפ׳ ויקרא רבה פ׳ י״ח מעשה

Parashat Toldot Yitzchak. They reconnect at certain times, such as on the New Moon, festivals, and Sabbaths, but not with the same bond as before.

Perhaps through this we can understand somewhat the reason for the custom of not making knots in the shrouds of the dead, nor in the belt. Beyond showing confidence in the resurrection, as mentioned in the Talmud and in the Jerusalem Talmud in the testaments of many sages regarding the manner of their dressing and positioning after death, it also alludes to the fact that there is no permanent bond holding the nefesh-ruach-neshamah together, only until the time of resurrection, when "the neshamah will receive additional light through the illuminating lens[A] to illuminate the body for complete and proper existence."

From this minimal connection, there is pleasure for the body, whose essence consists of the five senses that adhere to the bone beneath the human brain in the inner part of the skull. Only one bone adheres to it, and it is small like a barley grain, yet it is round, nearly square, and contains blood vessels resembling intertwined spider webs. Within these vessels, the five senses are established. This is the view of the sage Cordovero regarding the nature of the aforementioned bone, and so too brought by the author of Tzeror HaMor in the name of the Rambam (of blessed memory), although from the words of many it appears that it is the luz bone[1] at the end of a person's spine, where one bends during the Modim prayer, among the eighteen vertebrae of the spine. This bone lives forever, as mentioned in the Midrash and in Kohelet Rabbati, that "the anvil split but the

[A] Or: "luminous speculum" — The term 'speculum' more directly translates the Latin origin of the Hebrew/Aramaic term אספקלריאה, and is often used in kabbalistic translations. This might be preferred in more technical scholarly contexts, though it's less accessible to general readers.

[1] The luz bone (עצם לוז) is described in rabbinic literature as an indestructible bone from which the body will be regenerated during resurrection. Different traditions place it either at the base of the skull or at the base of the spine.

[i] This reveals a cyclical understanding of soul unity, where the normally separated soul components partially reunite during sacred times (Sabbath, festivals, and New Moons), reflecting the kabbalistic principle that sacred time creates opportunities for spiritual reunification.

[ii] The author connects the practical custom of not tying knots in burial shrouds with the mystical concept that the soul components (nefesh-ruach-neshamah) are not permanently bound together after death until the resurrection.

[iii] This vivid anatomical description of blood vessels resembling spider webs in the luz bone shows how the author integrates quasi-scientific observations with mystical concepts regarding the physical seat of resurrection.

באדריאנוס ששאל לר׳ יהושע מהיכן הקב״ה מציץ האדם לעתיד לבא. נראה שהוא עצם הנקרא לוז. ומצאתי כי נקרא בשם זה שהוא להיותו עצומו ועקרו שרשו וממנו נתהוה האדם בעצם הטפה והוא המקבל עונג ועונש אחר מיתת האדם ושרשו הוא מעצם השמים והמקובלים קראוהו שקד ובעל הסוד כתב בספרו כי לוז של יעקב נשתנה שמו בית אל[i] ובפרקי ר׳ אליעזר כתוב רב אמר אנא הוית בברכי חים ושמענא דהוו קריין לגרמא דשדרה דאשתאר מכל גופא בתואל רמאה ומצאתי בשם חכם כי האדם מיסוד השמים מחצה שהוא מהכבד ולמעלה ומשם ולמטה מיסוד הארץ[ii] ולכן אמרו על רבינו הקדוש שלא הושיט ידו למטה מטיבורו. ומיסוד השמים נשאר עצם אחד שאינו כלה. ואמרי׳ בויקרא רבה מהיכן נברא אדם מלוז של שדרה ולעתיד טל התחיה ירד על העצם הנשאר כפי דעת כל אחד ויעשה כשאור בעיסה ויתפשט לכאן ולכאן ויתמתחו מתוכו כל האברים וכל הגידים ועור ובשר ויתגלגלו עד ארץ ישראל ושם יקבלו רוחם.[iii] ואינו נהנה רק מסעודת שבת ויש אומרים מיין הבדלה לבד ודעת אחרים שאינו נהנה כלל מאכילה ושתיה fire could not burn it,"[1] and therefore it is alive near the living. And in Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 18, there is a story about Hadrian who asked Rabbi Yehoshua: "From where will the Holy One, blessed be He, cause man to sprout in the future?" It appears that it is the bone called luz. 70R

I found that it is called by this name because it is his essence, his root and source, and from it a person is formed in the essence of the seed. It receives pleasure and punishment after a person's death, and its root is from the essence of the heavens. The Kabbalists called it "almond" (shaked), and the author of the Secret wrote in his book that Jacob's luz had its name changed to Bethel. In Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer it is written that Rav said: "I was in the coastal cities and heard that they called the bone of the spine that remains from the entire body 'the deceiver Bethuel.'" I found in the name of a sage that half of man is from the element of the heavens, from the liver upward, and from there downward is from the element of the earth. Therefore, they said of our holy Rabbi that he never extended his hand below his navel. From the element of the heavens, one bone remains that does not decay. 75R 80R 85R

It is said in Vayikra Rabbah: "From where was man created? From the luz of the spine." In the future, the dew of resurrection[A] will descend upon the remaining bone according to each one's worthiness, and it will act like leaven in dough, expanding in all directions. From within it will stretch forth all the limbs, sinews, skin, and flesh, and they will roll to the Land of Israel where they will receive their spirit. It benefits only from the Sabbath meal, and some say only from the wine of Havdalah, while others hold 90R 95R

[A] Or: "revivifying dew" — This alternative captures the active quality of the dew as something that causes revival or resurrection, rather than simply being associated with resurrection. It might be preferred for emphasizing the causal relationship.

[1] This refers to a Talmudic story (Sanhedrin 82b) where Emperor Hadrian attempted to destroy the luz bone by various means, including placing it on an anvil and striking it, but the anvil split while the bone remained intact.

[i] This references Genesis 28:19, where Jacob renamed the location Luz to Bethel after his dream of a ladder to heaven, creating a wordplay connecting the luz bone to this biblical site of divine revelation and transformation.

[ii] This division of the human body (above the liver from heaven, below from earth) reflects a cosmic anthropology where the human body mirrors larger cosmic structures, a concept found in many mystical traditions.

[iii] This refers to the rabbinic concept that during resurrection, the bodies of Jews buried outside the Land of Israel will roll through underground tunnels to reach the Holy Land, where resurrection will be completed.

ומדברי מדרש הנעלם בדף קל״ז נראה שהוא בשדרה ונקרא רמאה דלא סביל טעמא דמזונא כשאר גרמי ובן גם כן הוא התקיף משאר גרמי ובדף קט״ז ממנו מתבאר צורך התחיה ותקון הנשמה והגוף וגדולת בני התחיה כאשר נבאר לקמן בעה״י. ובין למר ובין למר חלק הנפש הנשאר בעצם הזה היינו נפש הבהמית הדבוקה בעפר ורקב העצמות וזהו שנאמר ועצמותיך יחליץ על סוד חדוש הנפש הזאת ממה שנפש הקדושה מתענגת ברוח ובנשמה בשבת ויו״ט. ואמרי׳ במדרש הנעלם דשלש כתות של מלאכי השרת הולכים בכל חדש ושבת ללוות הצדיקים בעלי נשמה קדושה ובהיות אדם רשע כתיב ונפשו עליו תאבל עד ירחמנו עושהו ויוצרו יחוננו בדין ובמשפט שלם: [i] that it does not benefit at all from eating or drinking. From the words of the Hidden Midrash on page 137, it appears that it is in the spine and is called "deceiver" because it does not tolerate the taste of food like other bones, and it is also stronger than other bones. On page 116 of the same text, the need for resurrection, rectification of the soul and body, and the greatness of those who will be resurrected are explained, as we will clarify later, God willing.

Whether according to one opinion or the other, the portion of the nefesh that remains in this bone is the animal soul that clings to the dust and decay of the bones. This is what is meant by "He will invigorate your bones"—referring to the mystery of the renewal of this soul from what the holy soul enjoys with the ruach and neshamah on Sabbaths and festivals. It is said in the Hidden Midrash that three groups of ministering angels go each month and Sabbath to accompany the righteous who possess a holy soul. But when a person is wicked, it is written: "His soul will mourn over him[1] until his Maker has mercy on him and his Creator favors him with complete justice and judgment."

פרק ז׳

Chapter 7

אמרו רבנן במס׳ ברכות קשה רמה למת כמחט בבשר החי[ii] רצונם בזה אל סוד החושים

Our Sages said in Tractate Berakhot: "The worm is as painful to the dead as a needle to the flesh of the living."[2] Their intention here relates to the secret of [1] This is a reference to Job 14:22, which is interpreted here as describing the state of a wicked person's soul after death, in contrast to the righteous whose souls are accompanied by angels.

[2] This is a direct translation of a Talmudic statement from Berakhot 18b that addresses the question of whether the dead have sensation. The author uses this to develop a kabbalistic understanding of how different soul components remain connected to the body after death.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This reference establishes the hierarchical relationship between soul components after death, showing how the lower aspects connect to the higher ones in an upward spiritual progression rather than a downward connection to the physical body. | Cf. Hidden Midrash (Midrash HaNe'elam) in Parashat Toldot Yitzchak — The text uses this reference to support its cosmological model of where different soul components reside after death, specifically placing the neshamah in the highest realm. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah, Chapter 18 — The author uses this reference to support the concept of the luz bone as the physical basis for resurrection, showing how this belief has ancient rabbinic origins. | Cf. Kohelet Rabbati — The reference reinforces the concept of the luz bone's indestructibility, which is essential to its function as the physical seed for resurrection. | Cf. Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer — This reference provides an alternative name for the luz bone ('the deceiver Bethuel'), showing the author's scholarly breadth in collecting various traditions about this concept. | Cf. Tzeror HaMor — The author uses this reference to show that Maimonides (Rambam) supported the concept of an essential bone, though there are differing views about which specific bone this is.

[ii] This refers to a Talmudic statement in Berakhot 18b which discusses the sensation of the dead, suggesting that the deceased retain some form of awareness.

השוכנים בגוף הנזכר[i] וכבר
אמרנו כי הנפש הזאת אינה
פועלת בגוף כי הוא חלק השפל
בנפשו בלתי נרגש ועליה אמר
רב להההוא ספדנא אחים לו
בהספדאי דהתם קאימנא[ii] עם
חיות שאפשר לנו לומר שגם
רשימו מנפש רוח נשמה שם
בזמן הקבורה ואולי יחד כלם
במציאותם שם עומדים עד יהא
טמון בארץ חבלם[iii] וכן כל
השבעה ימים הראשונים יש להם
עדיין התקרבות גדול עם נרתקם
דשבקו בהאי עלמא כדאמרי׳
בפ׳ ויחי. ועיין בריקאנ״טי פ׳
וישב[iv] פי׳ מאמר קשה רמה למת
וכו׳ וראיה למה שאמרנו ממרים
שלא נסתלק הבאר שהיה בזכותה
עד אחר קבורתה[v] דכתיב
ותמת ותקבר ואח״כ ולא היה
מים לעדה. וזכות הצדיקים
מועיל הרבה לעולם הזה
בשבעת ימים הראשונים אחר
פטירתם דז׳ ימים של אבלו
של מתושלח שמשה האורה
לעולם.[vi] ולהיות כי יש לגוף
חיות מה בקבר על כן מועיל
לפיס הנפטר על קברו כדאמרי׳
בגמרין ובירושלמי דיומא צריך
מפייסתיה על קבריה ומימר
סרחין עלך[vii] מלבד כי מדור

the senses dwelling in the aforementioned body. We have already stated that this soul does not function in the body, for it is the lowly part of one's soul, imperceptible, and concerning this Rav said to a certain eulogizer, "Speak passionately in my eulogy, for I will be standing there," although we could say that there remains an impression of the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah[1] at the time of burial, and perhaps all of them together in their entirety stand there until the body is hidden in the earth. Similarly, during all the first seven days, they still maintain a strong connection with their vessel that they left in this world, as stated in the portion of Vayechi.[2] See also Recanati on the portion of Vayeshev, where he explains the statement "The worm is as painful to the dead," etc.

Evidence for what we have said comes from Miriam, as the well that existed in her merit did not depart until after her burial, as it is written, "And she died and was buried," and only afterward, "And there was no water for the congregation." The merit of the righteous greatly benefits this world during the seven days following their passing, as demonstrated by the seven days of mourning for Methuselah when light continued to shine for the world. Since the body retains some vitality in the grave, it is beneficial to appease the deceased at their grave, as stated in our Gemara and in the Jerusalem Talmud of Yoma: "One must appease them at their grave and say, 'I have sinned against you.'" Moreover, the dwelling place of the soul in the Court of Death[3] is specifically in the air opposite

[1] These are the three primary levels of the soul in Kabbalah: nefesh (vital soul, lowest level), ruach (spirit, middle level), and neshamah (divine soul, highest level). The text discusses how these components gradually disconnect from the body after death.

[2] The author is referring to Zoharic commentary on the Torah portion Vayechi (Genesis 47:28-50:26), which discusses the state of the soul after death and its continued connection to the body during the first seven days.

[3] This translates 'chatzar mavet,' a kabbalistic term for the spiritual realm immediately surrounding

[i] The text references a kabbalistic concept that certain sensory capacities remain in the body after death, connected to the lowest level of the soul.

[ii] This is a quotation from the Talmud (Shabbat 153a) where Rav instructs a eulogizer to speak passionately at his funeral because he (Rav) would be present.

[iii] This phrase suggests that the soul components remain connected to the body until burial is complete, reflecting the Jewish emphasis on prompt burial.

[iv] Rabbi Menahem Recanati was a 14th-century Italian kabbalist. The reference is to his commentary on the Torah portion Vayeshev.

[v] According to rabbinic tradition, a miraculous well followed the Israelites in the desert due to Miriam's merit, and it disappeared only after her burial, not immediately upon her death.

[vi] This refers to a midrashic tradition that during the seven days of mourning for Methuselah, who died just before the Flood, God delayed the Flood and the light continued to shine.

[vii] This refers to the practice of asking forgiveness from the deceased at their grave, literally saying הנפש בחצר מות[i] הוא באויר שנגד הקבר דווקא ואיך יודיעו למתים צער החיים ומה תועיל התפלה בבית הקברות אם לא ישהה בקבר חלק חיות מה.

ואמרי׳ בזהר צדיקיא אע״ג דאתפטרו בהאי עלמא לא אסתלקו[ii] כי נשאר הרגש בגופם בקבר עם היות נשמתם בישיבה העליונה ומשה האיר ליהושע אף אחר מותו כשמש שמאיר לירח בלילה[iii] ואמרו בפ׳ שמות דאי לאו בעותא דמיתי על חיי[iv] לא יתקיימון פלגות יומא: ולהיות לנפש הבהמית הזאת ב׳ חלקים[v] חלק א׳ ימשך אחר הגוף בתאוות גשמיות והיא מרכבה ליצר הרע כדפירשו בזהר פ׳ וירא וחלק שני הוא מרכבה אל הנפש כדפי׳ והחלק שהיא מרכבה אל יצה״ר הוא סוד עכנא[vi] דמערתא הנזכר כמה פעמים בעניין הנחש שהוא מרכבה אל the grave, so how could the living inform the dead of their suffering, and what benefit would prayer at the cemetery provide if no aspect of vitality remained in the grave?

It is stated in the Zohar that even though the righteous depart from this world, they do not completely leave, for sensation remains in their bodies in the grave, even though their souls are in the heavenly academy. Moses illuminated Joshua even after his death, just as the sun illuminates the moon at night. And it is stated in the portion of Shemot that if not for the prayers of the dead on behalf of the living,[1] they would not survive half a day.

This animal soul[2] has two parts: one part is drawn after the body in physical desires and serves as a vehicle for the evil inclination,[3] as explained in the Zohar in the portion of Vayera; the second part serves as a vehicle for the [higher] soul, as explained. The part that serves as a vehicle for the evil inclination is the secret of the "snake of the cav[4]e" mentioned several times, similar to the serpent that is a vehicle for Samael, the primordial serpent.[5] a grave, where the nefesh (lowest soul component) is believed to dwell after death.

[1]This reflects the Jewish mystical belief that the righteous deceased continue to intercede for the living, which forms the basis for the tradition of visiting graves to request such intercession.

[2]This translates 'nefesh ha-behamit,' the lowest level of the soul associated with basic physical functions and desires. In kabbalistic psychology, it's divided between aspects that are drawn to physical desires and aspects that can be elevated to serve higher spiritual purposes.

[3]This translates 'merkavah l'yetzer ha-ra,' using the concept of 'merkavah' (chariot/vehicle) to describe how one part of the animal soul can become a vessel or instrument for the evil inclination.

[4]This translates 'ikhna d'me'arta,' a kabbalistic symbol for negative spiritual forces associated with death and the grave, compared here to the primordial serpent (representing Samael/Satan).

[5]Samael is the name of an important angel of death or accuser in Jewish mystical tradition, often identified with Satan and with the serpent from the Garden of Eden story.

"I have sinned against you." This practice is based on the belief that the deceased can hear and respond.

[i]"Court of Death" (Chatzar Mavet) is a kabbalistic term for the space around a grave where the lowest level of the soul (nefesh) is believed to dwell after death.

[ii]This Zoharic statement means "the righteous, even though they have departed from this world, have not [completely] left," suggesting the continued presence and influence of the righteous after death.

[iii]This is a metaphorical description of posthumous spiritual influence, comparing Moses' continued guidance of Joshua after death to how the sun's light is reflected by the moon at night.

[iv]"The prayers of the dead on behalf of the living"—this reflects the Jewish belief that the deceased can intercede on behalf of the living, which is the basis for the custom of visiting graves to ask the righteous deceased to pray for the living.

[v]The text divides the "animal soul" (nefesh ha-behamit) into two parts: one drawn to physical desires (connected to the evil inclination) and one that serves as a vehicle for the higher soul.

[vi]"Snake of the cave" is a kabbalistic symbol for a negative spiritual force associated with the grave, drawing a parallel to the primordial serpent (representing Samael/Satan) in the Garden of Eden story.

ס״מ נחש הקדמוני. ואיתא בזהר
בשעה שמת עובדיה בא הנושה
יהורם לקחת בניו[i] הלבה אשתו
גועה ובוכה בבית הקברות
וצעקה ירא אלהים כך וכך
עושים ליתומיך אמר לה וכו׳ עד
דאמרו ליה אמור לה שתלך אצל
אלישע וכן עשתה. ומזה יובן
קבורת הצדיקים במקום ידוע
בגון אצל משפחתו או צדיק אצל
צדיק וכיוצא כי יש קרוב דעת
אל הנפשות בעולם ההוא מפני
יחס הבן עם אביו בנפש רוח
נשמה וכ״ש בנפש הבהמית כי
היא נפש ירושה אל הבן מן האב
וכן הצדיקים להיותם מעלתם
שוה ונהנים זה מזה[ii] כדמיון
הנאת השכנים בעולם הגשמי
כך הנאתם אחר המות ומעשה
דהנהו רוחי דמסכתא ברכות
יוכיח[iii] ועוד נדבר בזה לקמן.
וכתוב בספר הזהר דנוקבא
דאתנסיבת לתרין דבההוא
עלמא אהדרת לקדמאה.[iv] על
דרך אין האשה כורתת ברית
אלא למי שעשאה כלי:[v] [vi]

It is stated in the Zohar that when Obadiah died, the creditor Jehoram came to take his sons [as slaves]. His wife went weeping and crying at the cemetery, and cried out, "O God-fearing man, is this what they do to your orphans?" He said to her... until they told him, "Tell her to go to Elisha," and so she did. From this we can understand the burial of the righteous in a specific place, such as near their family or a righteous person next to another righteous person, because there is a closeness of mind among souls in that world due to the relationship between son and father in nefesh, ruach, and neshamah, especially in the animal soul, for it is a soul inherited by the son from the father. Similarly, the righteous, being of equal status, derive pleasure from one another, just as neighbors benefit from each other in the physical world; such is their pleasure after death. The incident of those spirits in Tractate Berakhot proves this, and we will discuss this further below. It is written in the Zohar that a woman who married twice returns to her first husband in the World to Come, following the principle that "a woman forms a covenant only with the one who made her a vessel."[1]

60R 65R 70R 75R 80R

[1] This is a somewhat euphemistic translation of a Talmudic saying about the special bond formed through first marital relations, applied here in a mystical context to explain soul connections that persist beyond death.

[i] This refers to a story in the Zohar based on 2 Kings 4:1, where the prophet Elisha helps the widow of a prophet (identified here as Obadiah) whose creditor came to take her sons as slaves.

[ii] This explains the kabbalistic rationale for burying righteous people near each other—their souls benefit from proximity in the afterlife just as people benefit from good neighbors in this world.

[iii] This likely refers to the story in Berakhot 18b about spirits conversing in the cemetery, which is cited as evidence for the continued awareness and communication of souls after death.

[iv] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar states that a woman who married twice returns to her first husband in the World to Come, reflecting kabbalistic beliefs about soul connections that transcend death.

[v] This Talmudic saying (Sanhedrin 22b) means that a woman forms a permanent spiritual bond only with her first husband. In kabbalistic thought, this reflects the idea of essential soul connections that persist beyond death.

[vi] Cf. Zohar, Vayechi — The author cites this source to establish the kabbalistic understanding that soul components remain connected to the body for seven days after death, forming a basis for the mourning practices. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Berakhot 18b — The author uses this Talmudic statement as a starting point to develop a kabbalistic understanding of post-mortem consciousness and sensation. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Shabbat 153a — The author cites this as evidence that the deceased are present at their own funerals, supporting the kabbalistic belief in continued awareness after death. | Cf. Midrash on Miriam's well — The author uses this as evidence that the merit of the righteous continues to benefit the world between their death and burial, supporting his larger argument about the gradual separation of soul components. | Cf. Zohar, Shemot — The author cites this to establish the kabbalistic belief that the deceased, particularly the righteous, continue

פרק ח׳

מכל מה שאמרנו יובן טעם
לבוש המתים שכמו שנכנסים
בקבר כן ממש מתלבש הכת
ההוא שבקבר ברוחניות הלבוש
הגשמי שמוליך עמו כי אין דבר
גשמי שאין בו כח מלמעלה. וכן
אותו כח שבמלבושים ההם ממש
מלביש הנפש הגשמית אף אם
ירקבו התכריכים וזהו טעם
רבן גמליאל שאמר שלא אהיה
כחתן בין האבלים ולא כאבל
בין החתנים.[i] וכן ענין המחצלת
הנזכר במסכת ברכות: ובפרשת
בראשית דף ל״ח ע״ב כתב רשב״י
מגו ההוא מנא דאתלבשת ביה בגן
עדן תחתון חמאת דיוקנין עילאין
לאסתכלא ביקרא דמאריהון
ובפ׳ חקת אמר משה הוה פשיט
בגדי אהרן למטה והקב״ה פשיט
למעלה יע״ש. וכן הכתוב אומר
ויתיצבו כמו לבוש ואמרו רבנן

Chapter 8

From all that we have said, the reason for the clothing of the dead can be understood: just as they enter the grave, so too does that group in the grave truly clothe itself in the spirituality of the physical garment[A1] that accompanies it, for there is no physical thing that does not have a force from above.[2] And thus, that same force in those garments truly clothes the physical soul, even if the shrouds decay. This is the reason Rabban Gamliel said, "Let me not appear as a bridegroom among mourners, nor as a mourner among bridegrooms." And this is also the matter of the mat mentioned in Tractate Berakhot.[B]

In the portion of Genesis, page 38b, Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai wrote: "Through that vessel in which it is clothed in the lower Garden of Eden, it sees supernal forms to gaze upon the glory of their Master." And in the portion of Chukat, it says: "Moses was removing Aaron's garments below, and the Holy One, blessed be He, was removing them above,"[C] see there. Similarly, Scripture says, "They

[A] Or: "that spiritual entity in the grave truly clothe itself in the spirituality of the physical garment" — The term 'הכת ההוא' in this mystical context likely refers more specifically to a spiritual entity or aspect of the soul rather than a 'group,' which could be clearer for readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology about soul components.

[B] Or: "And such is the matter of the reed mat mentioned in Tractate Berakhot" — The Hebrew term 'מחצלת' specifically refers to a reed or straw mat, which might be significant in the Talmudic context being referenced. Adding this specificity could be helpful for readers trying to locate the reference.

[C] Or: "Moses was stripping Aaron's garments below while the Holy One, blessed be He, was

[1] The original Hebrew phrase 'הכת ההוא שבקבר' (that group in the grave) seems to refer to the soul components that remain connected to the grave after death, particularly the nefesh according to kabbalistic thought.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic principle that all physical objects have spiritual counterparts or 'roots' in higher worlds. The physical garments have spiritual counterparts that remain even after the physical garments decay.

to intercede for the living after death. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Yoma — The author uses this to support the belief that the deceased remain aware of the actions of the living and can be appeased, forming a basis for cemetery prayer practices. | Cf. Zohar, Vayera — The author references this to explain the kabbalistic understanding of how the lower soul component can serve as a vehicle for either negative or positive spiritual forces. | Cf. Recanati, Commentary on Vayeshev — The author cites this commentary to add depth to his kabbalistic explanation of post-mortem sensation and awareness. | Cf. Zohar, story of Obadiah's widow — The author uses this story to demonstrate that the deceased can hear those who call to them at their graves and can even respond or provide guidance. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Sanhedrin 22b — The author uses this to explain the Zoharic teaching that a woman who married twice returns to her first husband in the afterlife, reflecting the kabbalistic concept of essential soul connections that transcend death.

[i] This is a reference to Rabban Gamliel's instructions regarding his burial shrouds, found in Tractate Ketubot 8b. He was concerned with appropriate appearance in different contexts even after death.

כסות היורדת עם האדם לשאול היא עולה עמו ק״ו מחטה וכו׳. ואפי׳ נשרף האדם הרוח מתלבש בריח מלבושיו וכן כשהתכריכין בלין הרוח מתלבש בסוד התכריכין ההם אך אם נפשטו מעליו אין לרוח במה להתלבש ובמדרש רבה פ׳ וילך אמר כי יש תכריכין ממעשה שמים וכן ארון ומטה ממעשה שמים. ולב המתעסקים יהיה לעורר המקורות העליונים ההם. לכן חנניה מישאל ועזריה הושלכו לכבשן האש בסרבלהון וגו׳. וכן פרה אדומה עורה ובשרה ופרשה ועצמותיה הכל נשרף לטהר טמאי מתים המקבלים טומאת המת גם מבחינת לבושיהם ואמרו כי יכולים המתים להתלבש בלבושים אחרים כמו שהמלאכים המושלים לעיני חוש מתלבשים צורה אנושית ואמרו כי לוקחים חלק מן שלג אשר תחת כסא הכבוד שממנו נתהוה הארץ כדוגמא זו תהיה התלבשות לבעלי העבודה. ויש מלבוש אחר כעובדא דאחאי בר יאשיה שהושם בו אז כח הדבריי. ורבינו הקדוש היה נר׳ בבגדי חמודות שהיה לובש בשבת ולא בתכריכין[i] וודאי אם באותה שעה היו מחפשים בקברו היו מוצאים עצמותיו או גופו אלא היה התלבשות stand as a garment,"[1] and the Rabbis said, "The garment that descends with a person to the grave ascends with him," which is derived a fortiori from wheat, etc.[2]

Even if a person is burned, the spirit clothes itself in the scent of his garments, and likewise when the shrouds deteriorate, the spirit clothes itself in the essence of those shrouds. But if they are stripped from him, the spirit has nothing in which to clothe itself. In Midrash Rabbah, portion of Vayelech, it states that there are shrouds made by heaven, and likewise a coffin and a bed made by heaven. The hearts of those who engage [in burial] should be to awaken those supernal sources. That is why Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah were cast into the fiery furnace in their garments, etc. Similarly, the red heifer—its hide, flesh, waste, and bones—all are burned to purify those defiled by the dead, who receive impurity from the dead also from the aspect of their garments.

They said that the dead can clothe themselves in other garments, just as angels who rule over the sense of sight clothe themselves in human form. They said that they take a portion from the snow beneath the Throne of Glory, from which the earth was formed. In this manner would be the clothing for those engaged in divine service. And there is another garment, as in the case of Achai bar Yoshiyah, in which the power of speech was then placed.[A] And our holy Rabbi [Judah the Prince] appeared in the precious garments he would wear on Sabbath, not in shrouds. Certainly, if at that time they had searched his grave, they would have found his bones or his body, but it was a clothing in the likeness of his body, stripping them above" — The verb 'פשיט' has a more forceful connotation of 'stripping' or 'peeling off' rather than simply 'removing,' which might better capture the mystical parallelism between the earthly and heavenly actions being described in this passage.

[A] Or: "And there exists another type of garment, as in the case of Achai bar Yoshiyah, who was granted the power of speech [after death]" — This alternate translation clarifies that the reference is to a post-mortem ability to speak, which is the key point of the Talmudic story being referenced, making the miraculous nature of the account more explicit.

[1] This is likely a reference to Job 38:14, which in context discusses how the earth takes form like clay under a seal and 'stands forth as a garment.' The author applies this metaphorically to spiritual garments.

[2] This refers to a Talmudic argument: if a grain of wheat buried naked sprouts clothed in many husks, surely a human buried in shrouds will be resurrected with garments (Sanhedrin 90b).

[i] This refers to a famous Talmudic account (Ketubot 103a) where Rabbi Judah the Prince (Rabbeinu HaKadosh) would appear to his household after death every Friday evening wearing Sabbath clothes to recite the Kiddush.

בדמות גופו הניכר לבני ביתו
וזה לא ימצא אלא בחסידים
שהם כבני בית למעלה וניתן
להם בקשתם וכן שמואל ודאי כי
לא זז מקברו וגם כי יש סברות
אחרות זה הנכון לדעתנו. ואולי
יורה שלהיות אז שבת היה עליו
הארת שגרם בסוד התלבשות
עולם האצילות בבריאה שהם
בגדי חמודות.[i] ולכן שנוי בגדים
הוא מן התורה ובפרט בשבת כי
צריך להפשיט מעליו הנהגות
ובגדי החול וללבוש בבגדי
מלכות ואמרי׳ בירושלמי אוי
לנו עטיפתנו בשבת היא כעטיפת
החול. ורבי שהיה ודאי מכבד
השבת בבגדים יקרים מפרי ידיו
הלבישוהו אחרי מותו ועוד
היה מתראה בבגדי חמודות
להודיע שהיה בתוקפו. והיה
פוטר בני הבית מן הקידוש ולא
כשאר מתים שהם חפשים מן
המצות.[ii] המבין סוד הקידוש
עם מה שכתבנו למעלה בסוד
מקדש השבת יבוין דברינו בטעם
אמירתו קידוש יותר מכל שאר
קדושות ואז היו עליו לבושי
דיקר מעין אותם של אדם
הראשון ובזהר שמות דף ר״ח
ביאר ממה היו לבושים אלו:
ואמרו בפרשת בא דף ל״ט כי
לבושי אדם וחוה נעשו בשם
מלא ונתקיימו ג״כ בשם מלא
ותרגום כתנות עור הוא לבושין
דיקר ואמר שלא באו ליד נמרוד
כדעת המדרש[iii] אלא כי אדם
וחוה אתקברו בהון דלא ס״ד

recognizable to his household. This is found only among the pious, who are like family members above, and their requests are granted. Likewise, Samuel certainly did not move from his grave, and although there are other opinions, this is correct in our view. 60R

Perhaps this indicates that because it was then Sabbath, he had upon him the illumination that was caused by the secret of the World of Emanation being clothed in the World of Creation, which are precious garments. Therefore, changing clothes is [a requirement] from the Torah, especially on Sabbath, for one must remove from oneself the conduct and weekday garments and clothe oneself in royal garments. They said in the Jerusalem Talmud, "Woe to us! Our wrapping on Sabbath is like our wrapping on weekdays." And Rabbi [Judah], who certainly honored the Sabbath with precious garments from the fruit of his hands, they clothed him after his death, and furthermore he would appear in precious garments to show that he was in his full power.[1] And he would exempt the members of the household from [reciting] Kiddush, unlike other dead who are free from commandments. 65R 70R 75R

One who understands the secret of Kiddush, along with what we wrote above regarding the secret of sanctifying the Sabbath,[2] will comprehend our words concerning the reason for reciting Kiddush more than all other sanctifications. And then he had upon him precious garments like those of Adam, the first man. In the Zohar, Exodus page 208, it explains what these garments were. 80R 85R

They said in the portion of Bo, page 39, that the garments of Adam and Eve were made with the full Name and were sustained also with the full Name. The translation of "garments of skin" is "precious garments." And it says that they did not come into Nimrod's possession, as the Midrash 90R

[1] The text suggests that Rabbi Judah's appearance in Sabbath garments after death was not merely customary but demonstrated his continued spiritual authority and potency in the afterlife.

[2] The author implies that Kiddush has deeper kabbalistic significance beyond its literal meaning as sanctification of the Sabbath day, connecting it to cosmic processes of divine unification.

[i] The author is offering a kabbalistic interpretation of why Rabbi Judah appeared in Sabbath garments, suggesting that on Sabbath there is a unique relationship between the higher world of Atzilut (Emanation) and Beriah (Creation) that manifests as precious garments.

[ii] This references the Talmudic principle that 'the dead are free from commandments' (במתים חפשי), while highlighting that Rabbi Judah the Prince was exceptional in continuing to fulfill the commandment of Kiddush even after death.

[iii] The author is contrasting the Zohar's view with a midrashic tradition that claimed Nimrod obtained Adam's original garments, which gave him power as a mighty hunter.

דאינון שבקו ורמו מנהון זיהרא
עילאה דיהיב לון קב״ה ולא
אתלבש בהו בר נש אחרא דאינון
לבושין דמו בגוונא עילאה וס״ד
דאינון אתלבשו בהון מגרמיהון
כתיב וילבישם. דקב״ה אלביש
לון זכאה חולקהון[i] ובקב״ה
כתיב הוד והדר לבשת והדר
עוטה אור כשלמה כיון דאתלבש
עבד מה דעבד ונוכל לומר
שבא להודיענו שלא נתגלה
אור האצילות לברוא וליהנות
לנבראים תחתונים עד שנתלבש
בבריאה כדאמרי׳ מלמד
שנתעטף הקב״ה באור וברא
את השמים[ii] ומכאן נבין גם כן
צורך הלבושים לנפש רוח נשמה.
ואמרי׳ בפרשת ויקהל דף קנ״ז
כי משה אתלבש בעננא וביה
תקריב לגבי אשא וכן אליהו
אתלבש בההיא סערה לעילא
ובאופן אחד מתראה למעלה
בין המלאכים. הנה כי על
ידי הלבושים מתראים הנשמות
למעלה: [iii]

opines, but rather Adam and Eve were buried in them, for it would not enter one's mind that they abandoned and cast away from themselves the supernal radiance that the Holy One, blessed be He, gave them. No other person clothed himself in them, for those garments resembled the supernal pattern. And it would not enter one's mind that they clothed themselves in them on their own; it is written, "And He clothed them"—the Holy One, blessed be He, clothed them. Fortunate was their portion! Regarding the Holy One, blessed be He, it is written: "You are clothed in glory and majesty," and "He wraps Himself in light as with a garment." Once He clothed Himself, He did what He did.

We can say that this comes to inform us that the light of Emanation was not revealed to create and benefit lower creations until it was clothed in Creation, as they said: "This teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, wrapped Himself in light and created the heavens." From here we also understand the need for garments for the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah [soul levels]. They said in the portion of Vayakhel, page 157, that Moses clothed himself in a cloud and through it approached the fire, and likewise Elijah clothed himself in that storm above, and in one manner appears above among the angels. In-

[i] The Aramaic phrase translates as 'the Holy One, blessed be He, clothed them—fortunate was their portion!' This emphasizes that Adam and Eve's garments were divinely created, not self-made.

[ii] This is a reference to a rabbinic teaching found in Bereishit Rabbah 3:4, describing God's creation process through the metaphor of wrapping in light.

[iii] Cf. Tractate Berakhot — The reference supports the author's argument about spiritual garments by citing a Talmudic precedent that discusses burial materials and their significance. | Cf. Zohar, Genesis 38b — This Zoharic passage is used to establish the mystical principle that souls require appropriate garments to function in different spiritual realms, supporting the author's argument about the importance of burial shrouds. | Cf. Zohar, Parshat Chukat — This reference illustrates the principle that physical actions with garments have corresponding spiritual effects in higher realms, a central concept in the author's explanation of burial shrouds. | Cf. Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah in the fiery furnace — The author uses this biblical story to demonstrate the spiritual power of garments, suggesting that their clothes had mystical protective properties that relate to the spiritual significance of burial shrouds. | Cf. Red heifer ritual — The author draws a parallel between the comprehensive burning of the red heifer (including its hide) and the significance of garments in spiritual purification, supporting the idea that clothing carries spiritual properties. | Cf. Story of Achai bar Yoshiyah — This reference supports the author's claim that righteous souls can manifest with spiritual garments after death, demonstrating that the clothing of the deceased has ongoing spiritual significance. | Cf. Rabbi Judah the Prince appearing after death — This story is central to the author's argument that righteous souls continue to manifest in appropriate spiritual garments after death, with Sabbath garments representing higher spiritual states. | Cf. Garments of Adam and Eve — This Zoharic passage is used to establish the primordial connection between divine garments and human clothing, suggesting that burial shrouds have a connection to these original divine garments. | Cf. Moses clothed in cloud and Elijah in storm — This reference concludes the author's argument by showing that even the greatest prophets required appropriate spiritual 'clothing' to navigate different spiritual realms, reinforcing the importance of proper burial garments.

deed, through garments the souls appear above.[1]

פרק ט׳

בזהר סוף פרשת ויקהל אמרו דזמין קב״ה להלביש לכל אחד מבני התחיה לבושי רקמה שאז יהיה עיקר שכר הצדיקים ממעשיהם ויבואו כלם וישתחוו לו בירושלים ויתחברו שם חיילות גדולות וירושלים תתמשך לכל הצדדים ובני התחיה יכירו זה את זה ויחזרו לירושת אבותם ולאחוזתם וילמדו תורה בארץ ישראל שתתעלה מעלה מעלה: ואמרו עוד שלהיות שנשמת האדם המדברת אינה מתה לפיכך יחלום החי מן המת שכח זה החי מתעורר לחי אבל הבהמה שמתה אין לה נשמת החכמה לפיכך לא יחלום האדם מבהמה שמתה או נשחטה ואמרו כי לא נתן רשות לנפש להגיד לאוהבו שבעה״ז גזירות של מעלה מבלי אשר לא ימצא האדם את מעשה האלהים. אמרנו כי המתים מתהנים בהיותם קבורים אצל כיוצא בהם ובבראשית רבה פרשה ע׳ למה בכה יעקב שאינה נכנסת עמו לקבורה. וכמו כן כבוד הוא לאדם להקבר בקבר שלו לכן נהגו לקנות אחוזת קרקע כנראה במשנת בב״ב וכן בגמ׳ פרק יש נוחלין על ואלעזר בן אהרן מת ויקברו אותו בגבעת פנחס בנו וכתב נ״י בדף ר״ט לא היה כבוד לאותו צדיק שיהיה נקבר בקבר שאינו שלו. וזה כי כמו שמדורו בגן עדן הוא לפי מעשיו כי הנשמה יגיע בפיה תאכל. כי מאן דאכיל דלאו דיליה בהיל לאסתכולי ביה. כן

Chapter 9

At the end of Parashat Vayakhel in the Zohar, they said that the Holy One, blessed be He, will clothe each of the resurrected with embroidered garments, for then the main reward of the righteous will come from their deeds. They will all come and bow before Him in Jerusalem, where great hosts will gather. Jerusalem will extend in all directions, and those who are resurrected will recognize one another. They will return to their ancestral inheritance and possessions, and will study Torah in the Land of Israel, which will be elevated higher and higher.

They further said that since the speaking soul of a human does not die, a living person may dream of the deceased, as this living power awakens to the living. However, when an animal dies, it lacks the soul of wisdom, therefore a person will not dream of an animal that has died or been slaughtered. They also said that a soul is not permitted to reveal heavenly decrees to its beloved in this world, lest humans discover the workings of God.

We have stated that the deceased derive benefit from being buried near others like them. In Genesis Rabbah, chapter 70, it explains why Jacob wept—because she [Rachel] would not enter the grave with him. Similarly, it is an honor for a person to be buried in his own grave. This is why the custom developed to purchase burial plots, as seen in the Mishnah of Bava Batra and in the Gemara chapter "Yesh Nochlin" regarding "Eleazar son of Aaron died, and they buried him in Gibeah of Phinehas his son." Nimukei Yosef wrote on page 209 that it would not have been honorable for that righteous man to be buried in a grave that was not his own. This is because just as one's dwelling in the Garden of Eden is according to one's deeds,[2] for "the soul eats of the labor of its hands," and "one who eats what is not his own is anxious when looking at it," so too must the body have a place purchased with money. Thus Abraham said, "Let him give it to me for the

[1] The conclusion emphasizes that spiritual garments are not merely coverings but essential vehicles that enable souls to manifest and function in higher spiritual realms, just as physical garments enable social functioning in the physical world.

[2] This reflects the Jewish concept that souls occupy different levels in the afterlife based on their merits, with the Garden of Eden having multiple sections or levels of different spiritual quality.

צריך שיהיה לגוף מקום מקנת כספו. וכן אברהם אמר בכסף מלא יתננה לי. ועוד סוד תקון העפר בעי למזבן יתיה בכסף שלים ודי למבין. וג״כ נייחא לצדיקים להיות צמודים בגן עדן שכן הובא בזהר פ׳ ויחי דר״י אמר לרבי יצחק דיבריר דוכתיה גביה כמה דהוה בהאי עלמא. ואשה הקבורה אצל בעלה ודאי נייחא רבה הוא לתרווייהו. ונ״ל שנאמרה על אשתו ראשונה היינו אותה שעמדה אצלו בפרגוד ולכן אמרו המגרש אשתו ראשונה דוקא אפילו מזבח מוריד עליו דמעות כי גורם הפרדת שפע שבעה ברכות שנתברכו בשעת חופתם במזבח העליון המקבל ממה שלמעלה ממנו ובפרט אם היו לו בנים ממנה נוכל להאמין שהיא עיקר זוגתו הראשונה שבגן עדן שעליה יוצאה הבת קול בת פלוני לפלוני והוא נקרא זווג ראשון וכתוב בספר הבהיר כי ז׳ צורות קדושות ברא הקב״ה והם צורות נחלקות שתי ידים שתי רגלים הראש והגוף הרי שש וצורה הז׳ היא הנקבה הרי שהאשה משלמת כל הז׳ צורות והקב״ה חבר בבריאת אדם כל הז׳ צורות יחד ואחרי כן הפריד השביעית ואין האיש נשלם עולתה ע״כ תקנו שבעת ימי המשתה וכן ז׳ ברכות וברכה שביעית משלמת כל שאר הברכות וחותמים בה משמח חתן עם הכלה. וכשאין פנים חדשות יכול לברך השביעית בלתי האחרות אבל לא האחרות בלתי full price." There is also a secret concerning the rectification of the dust—that one needs to purchase it with full payment,[A] and this is sufficient for those who understand. 40R

It is also restful for the righteous to be joined together in the Garden of Eden, as brought in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, where Rabbi Yochanan said to Rabbi Yitzchak that he should select a place for himself near him, just as he was in this world. And a woman buried next to her husband certainly brings great satisfaction to both of them. It seems to me that this was said specifically about one's first wife—the one who stood with him behind the heavenly curtain. That is why they said that one who divorces his first wife, specifically—even the altar sheds tears over him, for he causes the separation of the flow of the seven blessings with which they were blessed at the time of their wedding at the supernal altar, which receives from what is above it. Especially if he had children with her, we may believe that she is his essential first mate from the Garden of Eden, about whom the heavenly voice proclaims, "The daughter of so-and-so is destined for so-and-so," and this is called the first union. 45R 50R 55R 60R

It is written in Sefer HaBahir that the Holy One, blessed be He, created seven holy forms, which are divided forms: two hands, two legs, the head, and the body—these are six—and the seventh form is the female. Thus, the woman completes all seven forms. The Holy One, blessed be He, joined all seven forms together in the creation of Adam, and afterward separated the seventh. A man is not complete without her. Therefore, they instituted the seven days of the wedding feast,[1] as well as the seven blessings, with the seventh blessing completing all the other blessings. They conclude it with "Who gladdens the groom with the bride." When there are no new faces present, one can recite the seventh blessing without the others,[2] but not the others without the seventh. 65R 70R 75R

[A] Or: "a mystical principle of earth's rectification requiring its purchase with complete payment" — This alternate translation emphasizes more clearly the kabbalistic concept of 'tikkun' (rectification) that is central to the phrase, while rendering 'sod' as 'mystical principle' rather than 'secret' better conveys the nature of the teaching.

[1] The text draws a parallel between the seven wedding blessings (sheva berakhot), the seven-day wedding celebration, and the seven divine forms completed by the union of male and female, creating a cosmic significance for marriage rituals.

[2] The text refers to the halakhic principle that when there are no new guests (panim chadashot) at a sheva berakhot meal during the week following a wedding, only the final blessing ('Who gladdens

השביעית רמז לפנים חדשות של
האשה שמשלמת לאדם כל שבעה
צורות וכמו שהשבת מנוחה
לששה ימים כן האשה מנוחה
לשש צורות כי האדם זולתה
מטולטל ונד ולכן אין נפטר
האדם מפריה ורביה עד שיוליד
זכר ונקבה והם יולידו השבע
צורות ואשתו הראשונה היא
עיקר צורתו והשאר כמו הפקר
שהראשונה חתומה עמו בחשמל
כמו שרמזנו למעלה מזה וכמו
שמשלמת האדם בחייו כן משלמת
אותו במותו במקום משכן כבודו:
ובסבא דף ק״ב נתן טעם למה אין
האשה מתיישבת כראוי עם בעלה
השני ושם פירשו סוד הקטלנית
וסכנה גדולה ממי שנושא אלמנה
ומלת אלמנה אמרו שירצה אל
מנה אל תפול זאת למנה וחלק
שום אדם כשר ובפרט אם בעלה
הראשון הוא ת״ח שבמיתתו הוא
חי ושפתי תורתו דובבות בקברו
והיו לה בנים ממנו בלי ספק כי
לא תהיה לה קורת רוח עם אחר.
ובפרט אם יהיה אחרון לגבי
ראשון ושניהם מסתכנים ונראה
זה פעמים הרבה לחוש ואין
להטפל להשיא אשת ת״ח ובפרט
לע״ה כי לא יצליחו. בכלי
שנשתמש בו קדש אל ישתמש בו
חול ואין זה נאה ללבושו ולא
לבושו לו דכרעא דרב ממאניה
לא לבעי ליה: [i]

This alludes to the new presence of the woman, who completes all seven forms for man. Just as the Sabbath provides rest for the six days, so too does the woman provide rest for the six forms, because without her, man is unsettled and wandering. Therefore, a man is not released from the obligation of procreation until he begets a male and a female, who will produce the seven forms.

His first wife is his essential form, and the others are like ownerless property, for the first is sealed with him in the Chashmal (divine luminous substance),[A] as we alluded to above. Just as she completes the man in his lifetime, so does she complete him in his death, in the place of his glorious dwelling.

In Saba (the Elder's teaching), page 102, a reason is given why a woman does not settle properly with her second husband. There they explained the secret of the "killer wife" and the great danger for one who marries a widow. They said the word "almanah" (widow) implies "al manah"[B]—"let this not fall to the portion and share of any worthy person," especially if her first husband was a Torah scholar who in his death is still alive, with the lips of his Torah teachings murmuring in his grave. If she had children with him, there is no doubt that she will not find contentment with another, especially if the second husband is inferior compared to the first. Both are endangered, and this has been observed many times to be a concern. One should not take pains to arrange a marriage for the wife of a Torah scholar, especially to an ignoramus, for they will not succeed. "A vessel used for holy purposes should not be used for secular purposes."[1] This is not becoming to his

[A] Or: "bonded with him in the celestial Chashmal" — This alternate translation offers a more accessible rendering of the mystical concept while still preserving its technical nature. 'Bonded' might better capture the relationship implied by 'chatumah' in this context than 'sealed.'

[B] Or: "They interpreted the word "almanah" (widow) as a contraction of "al manah"" — This alternate translation more clearly indicates that the text is offering a folk etymology or wordplay on 'almanah' (widow), breaking it into 'al manah' to derive meaning from the component parts.

the groom with the bride') is recited. The author gives this a mystical interpretation related to the feminine presence.

[1] This is a halakhic principle being applied metaphorically to a Torah scholar's widow. The original

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The passage draws on the Zohar's eschatological vision to establish that the ultimate reward for righteous souls will include physical resurrection with special garments, collective gathering in Jerusalem, return to ancestral lands, and study of Torah in an elevated Land of Israel. | Cf. Genesis Rabbah, Chapter 70 — The midrash is cited to reinforce the concept that souls desire to be buried together with their loved ones, using the biblical example of Jacob's distress that Rachel would be buried separately from him. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat garment, nor is his garment becoming to him, for "the leg of the master should not desire his sandal."[A]

פרק י׳

Chapter 10

כתוב בהלכות קבורה מתים ששונאים זה את זה אין לקוברם סמוכים ואמרי׳ כי מעשה בת״ח צדיק[i] שנקבר אצל אחד שאינו הגון ובא הצדיק בחלום לכל בני העיר והודיע להם צערו עד כי שמו אבנים בין קבר הצדיק לקבר הרשע במחיצה כי כשהצדיקים נחים על משכבותם מגלים להם רזי עליונים ותחתונים[ii] ואם נקבר אצלם אדם שאינו שוה במעלתם ימעטו העליונים מלגלות להם סודות שבהם יהנו כאלו יאכלו כל טוב. ורשב״י שאל קודם שיתן לריב״ל ליכנס אצלו אם נראתה הקשת בימיו[iii] כי היה

It is written in the laws of burial that those who hate each other should not be buried adjacent to one another. And we say that there was a case of a righteous Torah scholar who was buried next to someone who was unworthy, and the righteous man appeared in a dream to all the townspeople and made known his distress, until they placed stones between the grave of the righteous man and the grave of the wicked one as a partition. For when the righteous rest in their graves, heavenly and earthly mysteries are revealed to them, and if someone who is not of their spiritual stature is buried next to them, the heavenly powers will diminish the revelation of secrets[A] through which they would otherwise delight as if partaking of all goodness. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai inquired, before allowing Rabbi Joshua ben Levi to enter his presence, whether the rainbow had [A] Or: "for even the rabbi's shoe would not fit his foot" — This idiomatic expression is challenging to translate literally while preserving its meaning. The alternate translation captures the intended meaning that the second husband is so incompatible with the Torah scholar's widow that even the deceased scholar's shoe wouldn't fit him—emphasizing their fundamental mismatch.

[A] Or: "the celestial beings will reduce their disclosure of mysteries" — This alternative emphasizes the active role of celestial beings rather than abstract 'powers' and may better reflect the kabbalistic worldview of the text, where specific angelic entities are thought to reveal mysteries to the righteous dead.

phrase 'kli she-nishtamesh bo kodesh al yishtamesh bo chol' is typically applied to Temple vessels, but here extends the concept of sanctity to marital relationships.

Vayechi — This Zohar reference supports the concept that souls maintain relationships in the afterlife and that proximity in burial reflects spiritual proximity in the Garden of Eden. | Cf. Sefer HaBahir — This kabbalistic text is cited to provide a mystical interpretation of male-female relationships, explaining that a woman represents the seventh of the divine forms that complete the human image. This serves to elevate the status of marriage by placing it within a cosmic, mystical framework. | Cf. Tractate Gittin — Although not explicitly named, this is a reference to the Talmudic teaching (Gittin 90b) that the altar weeps when someone divorces his first wife. The author uses this to reinforce the spiritual significance of the first marital bond as part of a divine union established in the supernal realm.

[i] The story of the righteous Torah scholar appearing in a dream is cited as proof for the prohibition against burying enemies together, demonstrating the Jewish belief that the dead retain awareness and can communicate with the living in dreams.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the souls of the righteous receive divine revelations in the afterlife. The quality of these revelations can be affected by neighboring graves, suggesting that spiritual conditions continue to matter after death.

[iii] According to Jewish mystical tradition, the rainbow's appearance indicates that the world needs divine protection from judgment. A completely righteous person in whose merit the world stands would not see a rainbow in his lifetime. Rabbi Shimon was checking Rabbi Joshua's spiritual level before sharing mystical secrets with him.

ירא פן ימעיטו לו הגדת הסודות עבור ריב״ל. ועיין בציוני פ׳ ויחי מזה: וחטוטי שכבי הוא צנור גדול[i] בדדרשו על והיה יד ה׳ בכם ובאבותיכם. וכן כתוב ביום ההוא יוציאו עצמות מלכי יהודה ושטחום לשמש וגו׳ כי היו מכוונים שלא יהיה להם מנוחה אפי׳ אחר המות ואולי גם לזה היתה כוונת חזקיה בגרירת עצמות אביו להציל נפשו מיד כף הקלע וספרו ממלכה אחת שתקנה מעצמות אויביה קוביאות. ומשניהם שהם י״ו מלמעלה וי״ו מלמטה תקנה לשחוק האי״שקקי כדי שלא יהיה להם מנוחה[ii] ואמרו על עצמות יהודה שהיו מגולגלים בארון וכמו שבעולם הזה יש סדר ההסבה כדאמרי׳ בגמרא בירושלמי מסכת תענית בזמן שהן שלש הגדול שבהן עולה ומסב בראש האמצעי וכו׳. כן יש לשמור הסדר הזה בקבורה דאמרי׳ בפ׳ בשלשה פרקים בירושלמי אמר שמואל בר רב יצחק אבות דרך הסבה הם appeared in his days,[1] for he feared that the revelation of secrets might be diminished on account of Rabbi Joshua ben Levi. See the Tziyoni commentary on Parshat Vayechi regarding this matter.

The disturbance of graves is a great sin,[A] as they interpreted the verse "And the hand of the Lord will be against you and your ancestors." Similarly, it is written, "On that day they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah and spread them before the sun," for they intended that the deceased would have no rest even after death. Perhaps this was also Hezekiah's intention in dragging his father's bones—to save his soul from the sling of divine judgment.[B][2] And they told of a certain kingdom that fashioned dice from the bones of its enemies. And from both types of bones—sixteen from above and sixteen from below—they made chess pieces[3] so that the dead would have no rest. They said about the bones of Judah that they were rolled about in a coffin.

And just as in this world there is an order of reclining, as we say in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Ta'anit: "When there are three [dining], the greatest among them goes up and reclines at the head, the middle one [reclines next to him]," and so forth, similarly this order should be preserved in burial. As we say in chapter "In Three Periods" in the Jerusalem

[A] Or: "Disturbing the dead creates a major channel [for punishment]" — The Hebrew term 'צנור גדול' literally means 'great pipe/channel' and refers to creating a pathway for divine punishment to flow down to the living. This more literal translation preserves the metaphorical imagery while still conveying the severity.

[B] Or: "the hollow of the sling" — This is a more literal translation of the term 'kaf ha-kela' which refers to the hollow part of a sling used to hold the stone. In kabbalistic literature, it describes the soul's state of being cast about without rest after death, but the more literal translation preserves the biblical imagery.

[1] In Jewish mystical tradition, a completely righteous person would not see a rainbow in his lifetime, as the rainbow symbolizes God's covenant not to destroy the world again (Genesis 9:13-16). The absence of a rainbow would indicate that the merit of the righteous person alone was sufficient to protect the world from divine judgment.

[2] The 'kaf ha-kela' (כף הקלע) is a kabbalistic concept referring to a form of punishment for the soul after death, where it is cast about without rest. This is derived from the biblical phrase in 1 Samuel 25:29.

[3] The text uses 'האי״שקקי' (ha-ishkaki), which appears to be a medieval term for chess or a similar board game. The translation reflects the apparent intent of making game pieces from human bones as a form of posthumous desecration.

[i] The term 'צנור גדול' (great pipe/channel) metaphorically refers to a grave sin that creates a channel for punishment, showing the severity with which Judaism views disturbing the dead.

[ii] This refers to the medieval practice of making chess pieces (or similar game pieces) from bones. The text presents this as a deliberate act of posthumous cruelty, preventing the deceased from finding rest even after death.

קבורים:[ii] [i]

Talmud, Samuel son of Rav Isaac said: "The Patriarchs are buried in the manner of those who recline [at a meal]."[1] 45R

כשהיה המת מוחרם היו מרחיקין קברו מאחרים ח׳ אמות[iii] שלא יגע תבוסת קבר אחד שהוא ד״א בתבוסת חבירו ומצאתי כי המת שהיה בנדויו היו סוקלין את ארונו[iv] הטעם הוא כי כאשר הנסקל נקבר ברחוק כן המנודה והמצורע והוא גם כן כך בלפי מעלה עד בא זמנו אחר י״ב חדש[v] שעדיין כח הנפש והגוף קיים. ואמרו כי רוח המצורע וכן רוחו של מת מתפשטים כי בנים הנולדים בבית המצורע יש להם בקליפתם קצת סימנים משונים וזרע פשתן שיהיה בבית אשר שם מת אם יזרע לא יצמח בזרע

When a deceased person was under excommunication, they would distance his grave from others by eight cubits, so that the burial area of one grave, which is four cubits, would not touch the burial area of another. I found that when a person died while still under excommunication, they would stone his coffin. The reason is that just as one who is sentenced to stoning is buried at a distance, so too the excommunicated person and the leper are treated similarly, and this applies in the spiritual realms as well, until the appointed time after twelve months when the power of the soul and body still remains intact. 50R 55R

They said that the spirit of a leper, and likewise the spirit of a dead person, extends outward,[2] for children born in the house of a leper have in their outer form some unusual characteristics. Similarly, 60R

[1] This refers to the arrangement of the burial caves of the biblical Patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) and their wives in the Cave of Machpelah, suggesting they were positioned according to their honor and status, similar to formal dining arrangements.

[2] The Hebrew term 'מתפשטים' (mitpashtim) implies a spreading or extending influence beyond physical boundaries, suggesting that the spiritual condition of both lepers and the dead has effects that radiate outward to their surroundings.

[i] The comparison between burial arrangements and the seating order at formal meals reflects the Jewish concept of 'kavod ha-met' (honoring the dead), treating the deceased with the same dignity as the living.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The text references an incident from the Zohar where Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai (Rashbi) inquired about Rabbi Joshua ben Levi's worthiness before allowing him into his presence. The rainbow was considered a sign that the world needed protection from divine judgment, implying that a completely righteous person in whose merit the world stood would not see a rainbow in his lifetime. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — The author cites the Jerusalem Talmud regarding the proper order of reclining at a meal, using this as a basis for the arrangement of graves. This shows the Jewish principle of honoring the dead as one would honor the living, maintaining hierarchy and respect even in burial. | Cf. Book of Jeremiah 8:1-2 — The author uses this biblical reference to demonstrate the severe punishment of denying proper rest to the dead by disturbing their bones, presenting it as evidence for the importance of proper burial and rest for the deceased. | Cf. 1 Samuel 25:29 — The author alludes to the concept of kaf ha-kela (the sling of judgment), a kabbalistic concept of punishment for the soul after death where it is cast about without rest, derived from this biblical verse. | Cf. Tziyoni commentary on Parshat Vayechi — The author specifically directs readers to this commentary for more information on the mystical implications of burial arrangements, indicating that the proper separation of graves has spiritual significance beyond mere physical considerations.

[iii] Eight cubits, approximately 12-16 feet, representing a significant distance intended to create a spiritual and physical boundary between the excommunicated and the community.

[iv] The ritual of stoning the coffin symbolically extends the punishment of stoning (one of the four capital punishments in Jewish law) to someone who died while under excommunication, suggesting the severity of their unresolved status.

[v] The twelve-month period mentioned here is significant in Jewish tradition as the standard duration of mourning and also the time traditionally understood for the soul's judgment and initial purification after death.

פשתן אחר. ומי שמנודה לשמים ח״ו אפילו יעשה מעשים הגונים לא יועילו למעלה רק ח״ו יתנו חיות לקליפות[i] כי המעשים עולים ע״י טוב השרש המושרש אל האדם באדמה העליונה והמנודה נעקר ממלכות ויסוד ובינה[ii] ח״ו. והאדם בין בחייו בין במותו יש לו ד״א קרקע שכן כתיב והארץ נתן לבני אדם כי כמו שיש לנשמה למעלה מקום אם לטוב אם למוטב כן לגוף למטה בארץ וזה יהיה ד״א קרקע הכתובים בשטרות.[iii]

flax seed that was in a house where someone died, if planted, will not sprout like other flax seeds. And one who is excommunicated by Heaven, God forbid, even if he performs proper deeds, they will not benefit him in the higher realms,[A] but rather, God forbid, they will give vitality to the negative forces (kelipot).[1] This is because deeds ascend through the goodness of the root that is implanted in a person in the supernal earth,[B] and the excommunicated person is uprooted from the divine attributes of Malkhut, Yesod, and Binah, God forbid.

A person, both in life and in death, has four cubits of ground, as it is written: "The earth He has given to the children of men" (Psalms 115:16). For just as the soul has a place above, whether for good or for ill, so too the body has a place below in the earth, and this is the four cubits of land mentioned in legal documents.[2]

ובארבע אמות יוקפל בו כל

And in four cubits,[3] the entire world is folded

[A] Or: "And one who is under divine ban, God forbid, even if he performs righteous deeds, they will not ascend to the higher worlds" — This alternate translation emphasizes the concept of divine ban rather than excommunication, which might better reflect the distinction between human and divine rejection. It also uses 'higher worlds' instead of 'higher realms' to more directly reflect the kabbalistic cosmology implied in the text.

[B] Or: "This is because deeds ascend through the goodness of the soul-root that is anchored within a person in the celestial soil" — This alternate translation clarifies that 'השרש' (the root) likely refers to the soul's spiritual root or source, and 'אדמה העליונה' (supernal earth) refers to the celestial or divine realm from which souls originate according to kabbalistic thought.

[1] I've added the transliteration 'kelipot' to preserve the kabbalistic term, which lacks a perfect English equivalent. This concept is central to understanding the text's mystical framework regarding how spiritual energy is redirected when a person is in a state of excommunication.

[2] The reference to legal documents (שטרות) alludes to traditional Jewish legal contracts that sometimes specified a person's entitlement to four cubits of land, which was considered the minimum space needed for a person. This concept was applied both practically in life and symbolically in death.

[3] The Hebrew 'amot' (cubits) is a biblical measurement approximately 18-22 inches in length. Four cubits is traditionally considered the minimum personal space allotted to each individual.

[i] In Kabbalah, 'kelipot' (shells or husks) refer to the forces of spiritual impurity. The text suggests that the good deeds of an excommunicated person paradoxically strengthen these negative forces rather than elevating holiness.

[ii] These are three of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah. The text suggests that excommunication severs a person's connection to these divine attributes, which represent divine sovereignty (Malkhut), connection/foundation (Yesod), and understanding (Binah).

[iii] Cf. Psalms 115:16 — The author uses this verse to establish a parallel between the soul's place in the spiritual realm and the body's place in the physical world, specifically the four cubits of land that a person is entitled to for burial. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Sanhedrin 47a — The Talmudic passage discusses burial practices for those under ban (cherem), including placing a stone on the coffin of an excommunicated person who died without repentance, which is likely the source for the practice mentioned in this text. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Third Discourse, Chapter 2 — This section elaborates on themes introduced earlier in the work, particularly regarding how physical burial arrangements reflect and affect the soul's status in spiritual realms.

העולם כדאמרי׳ ביעקב קפל הקב״ה כל ארץ ישראל תחתיו וכן למעלה כל צדיק יש לו מדור ועולם בפני עצמו: ועל כן צריך לקבור כל מת בפני עצמו ויהיה לפחות בין עליון לתחתון ששה טפחים שהוא שעור עולם וקומה אחת. ומנהג בהרבה מקומות. לקבור הנהרגים בר מינן לבדם להיות כי תמיד תובעים דין עד כי ישפך דם הרוצח וזה שאמר הכתוב שופך דם האדם באדם דמו ישפך פי׳ בקטרוג שעושה נגדו אותו אדם שהרג גורם שפיכת דמו ואם לא בעולם הזה בעולם הבא כי הדם הוא הנפש כאשר הובא במדרש רבה פרשה ואתחנן ממעשה באשה אחת שבנה הרג אחיו ונטלה כוס מדמו ושמו תוך ארגז אחד ולעולם תסס עד כי נהרג גם אחיו. ולכן אין מלבישים אותם תכריכין רק כורכין סדין על בגדיהם למען לא יתבייש בפני שאר מתים ולא יראו להם החוצה הבגדי נקם שנוח לו לאותו הרוח להתלבש בם ואין לו נייחא להתלבש בריח מלבושים אחרים כשאר מתים להתראות לפני המלך המשפט בדמו התוסס עליהן ובתוכן וקול דמיו צועקים אליו מן האדמה ירא ה׳ וישפוט כדאמרי׳ בדמי נבות שלעולם תבעו דין על אחאב ואיזבל במקום שפיכתם. ואמרו כי סכין שנמצא בקבר הרוגים אין ליהנות ממנו. ועושים לנהרג נחת רוח כשמזכירין אותו לומר ה׳ ינקום דמו ברם אין למסור דין על שום אדם ושבקיה לרויא דמנפשיה נפיל אם ה׳ לא אנה לידו. ויען כי תמיד מתאוה להגביר כח הדין נגד הרוצח ואין

within him, as we say regarding Jacob that the Holy One, blessed be He, folded all the Land of Israel beneath him. Similarly, in the higher realms, each righteous person has their own dwelling place and world. Therefore, it is necessary to bury each deceased person separately, and there should be at least six handbreadths[1] between the upper and lower burial places, which is the measure of a world and one complete stature. It is the custom in many places to bury those who were killed (God forbid) separately, since they continually demand justice until the blood of their murderer is spilled. This is what Scripture means when it says, "Whoever sheds the blood of man, by man shall his blood be shed"—meaning that through the accusation made against him by the person he killed, the murderer's blood is caused to be spilled, if not in this world, then in the World to Come. For blood is the soul, as brought in Midrash Rabbah, Parashat Va'etchanan, from a story about a woman whose son killed his brother. She took a cup of his blood and placed it in a chest, and it continued to bubble until her other son was also killed.

Therefore, we do not dress murder victims in burial shrouds, but rather wrap a sheet over their clothes so they will not be embarrassed before other deceased, and so that their garments of vengeance[2] will not be visible outside, as it is comfortable for that spirit to be clothed in them. The spirit finds no comfort in being clothed in the scent of other garments like other deceased, to appear before the King of Judgment with his blood bubbling upon and within them, and the voice of his blood crying out to Him from the ground: "May the Lord see and judge," as we say regarding Naboth's blood, which forever demanded justice against Ahab and Jezebel at the place of its spilling. And they said that a knife found in the grave of murder victims should not be used. We provide comfort to the murdered by mentioning them, saying, "May the Lord avenge his blood." However, one should not deliver judgment against any person; rather, "leave the drunkard alone, for he will fall on his own"[3] if

[1] A 'tefach' (handbreadth) is approximately 3-4 inches. Six handbreadths would be about 18-24 inches of separation between graves stacked vertically.

[2] The Hebrew 'bigdei nakam' (garments of vengeance) refers to the blood-stained clothes of murder victims, which are understood metaphysically as evidence that will testify against the murderer in the divine court.

[3] This is a Talmudic saying (shavkei le-ravya d'mi-nafshei nafil) advising against interfering with לנפשו נייחא עד יהרג או ימות

כי שם יחדו למשפט יקרבו או עד
שיגיע עת פקודתו שהיה לו מן
העולם כי אז נתן רשות לדומה
להכניסו במספר שוכני עפר
כדאמרי׳ במסכת חגיגה פ״א
דאמר מלאך המות לרב ביבי בר
אביי שהמתים קודם זמנם משום
ויש נספה בלא משפט רעינא
להו אנא עד דמלו לדרא והדר
משלימנא להו לדומה ופי׳ רש״י
אינו מוסרם לשומר המתים ששמו
דומה אלא מגלגלים עמו ושטין
בעולם עד שיתמלא שנותם. על
כן מנהג כשר להרחיקו משאר
מתים למען לא יעות אדם בריבו.
ועיין בחלק רביעי שני פרקים
מיוחדים לדרוש זה. ובירית
ברותה שאין העולם מתיסר
בשופכי דמים אלא נמחים מן
הארץ כל עוד שלא ישובו וזה
לפי שאין הקטיגור נעשה סניגור.
ויש מי שכתב שאדם אחד שהיה
מנודה בהסכמת הקהל אם חלה
לא ברכוהו אותו כי בברכה
נמצאו היו מתירים החרם והיה
צריך הסכמת הקהל. וטעם שהיו
נותנים אבן על ארון המוחרם
אולי יורה כי הגביר עליו כח
היצר הרע שהוא אבן נגף וצור מכשול [i]

the Lord has not delivered him into his hand.

Since the soul of the murdered always desires to strengthen the power of judgment against the murderer and finds no rest until he is killed or dies, they will approach judgment together, or until the time of his appointed end in the world arrives. Then permission is given to Dumah to include him among the dwellers of dust, as we say in Tractate Chagigah, chapter 1, where the Angel of Death said to Rav Bibi bar Abaye that those who die before their time, as it says, "There are those who perish without justice," "I tend to them until their generation is complete, and then I deliver them to Dumah." Rashi explains: "He does not deliver them to the guardian of the dead, whose name is Dumah, but rather they roll with him and wander in the world until their years are completed." Therefore, it is a proper custom to distance the murdered from other deceased so that no one will be corrupted in his dispute.

See the fourth section, two special chapters that expound on this. There is a covenant that the world is not punished by bloodshedders; rather, they are erased from the earth as long as they do not repent, because "the prosecutor does not become the defender."[1] There are those who wrote that if a person who was excommunicated by consent of the community became ill, they would not bless him, because through blessing they would be releasing the ban, which required the community's consent. The reason they would place a stone on the coffin of the excommunicated was perhaps to indicate that the power of someone who is self-destructive, as they will face natural consequences. Here it's applied to murderers who will face divine justice without human intervention.

[1] This is a principle in Jewish law that something associated with sin cannot be used for holy purposes. In this context, it explains why murderers cannot attain atonement easily—the very blood they've spilled testifies against them.

[i] Cf. Midrash Rabbah, Parashat Va'etchanan — The text cites this midrash to support the notion that the blood of murder victims continues to 'cry out' for justice. The specific story referenced about a woman collecting her murdered son's blood in a cup illustrates the Jewish belief that spilled blood maintains a metaphysical presence and demands retribution. | Cf. Genesis 9:6 — The author reinterprets this biblical verse in a mystical way, suggesting that it's not merely a legal prescription for capital punishment, but describes a metaphysical reality where the murdered person's soul actively prosecutes the murderer in the divine court. | Cf. Story of Naboth's vineyard (1 Kings 21) — This biblical reference reinforces the Jewish concept that innocent blood continues to 'cry out' for justice, even after death. The author uses this well-known biblical story to support the special burial practices for murder victims. | Cf. Tractate Chagigah, Chapter 1 — The citation from Talmudic literature provides authority for the belief that souls of those who die prematurely have a different afterlife experience than those who complete their natural lifespan, which relates to the author's discussion of murdered souls. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Fourth Section — The author refers readers to another section of his own work for further elaboration on the topic of murdered the evil inclination, which is a stumbling stone and rock of offense,[1] had prevailed over him.

וזה גרם לו בחינת עץ הרע
שממנו נעשה הארון כמו שאמרו
במדרש על פסוק בתוך עץ הגן
אמר ר׳ לוי רמז לתולדותיו
שיהיו נתונין בארונות של עץ
כמו שאדם הראשון נתחבא
מתוך אותו עץ מאימת השכינה
ומיתתו היתה כפרה לגופו ולכן
היו סוקלין ארונו כי יצר הרע
שבו היו ראוי לרצועה ורידוי
ובזה מתבזה בין החיים וכפרה
היתה היא לו וכן גרירת עצמות
שבתוכה רוח חיות מה בנדרש
למעלה בפ״ו הוא כפרה לנפש
שבזה אינה מגולגלת ומקולעת
בתוך כף הקלע אחר כי קבל
ענשה בעולם הזה כי שחה לעפר
נפשה וכמים הנגרים ארצה כן
נתנו בעפר פיה שהוא חיות מה
שבעצמות ובזה יש לה תקוה כי
יפה שעה בתשובה בעולם הזה: [i]

This was caused by the nature of the evil tree[A] from which the coffin was made, as they said in the Midrash on the verse "in the midst of the tree of the garden" (Genesis 3:8): Rabbi Levi said,[2] "It alludes to his descendants, that they would be placed in wooden coffins, just as the first man hid himself among that tree out of fear of the Divine Presence." And his death was an atonement for his body. Therefore, they would stone his coffin, for the evil inclination within him deserved the lash and subjugation, and in this way he was disgraced among the living, and it served as atonement for him. Similarly, the dragging of bones in which there remains some vital spirit,[B] as explained above in Chapter 6, is an atonement for the soul, as through this it is not made to wander and be slung within the "hollow of the sling" after it has received its punishment in this world. For "its soul has bowed down to the dust"[C] (Psalms 44:26), and like water spilled on the ground, they have placed in the dust its "mouth," which is the vitality that remains in the

160R 165R 170R 175R

[A] Or: "the aspect of the evil tree" — The Hebrew term 'bechinat' often refers to a specific aspect or quality rather than nature in general. This alternative might better capture the kabbalistic nuance of the term as referring to a specific manifestation or aspect of evil.

[B] Or: "a certain vital spirit" — The Hebrew 'mah' here could be translated more literally as 'a certain' rather than 'some,' which might better reflect the author's specificity about this spiritual essence.

[C] Or: "its soul is brought low to the dust" — This alternative might better express the passive nature implied in the Hebrew, suggesting the soul is forcibly brought low rather than voluntarily bowing.

[1] This phrase ('even negef v'tzur michshol') comes from Isaiah 8:14, where it refers to divine judgment. Here it is used metaphorically to describe the evil inclination (yetzer hara) that overcame the excommunicated person.

[2] This appears to be from Bereshit Rabbah, the classical midrashic collection on Genesis, where Rabbi Levi offers this interpretation connecting Adam's hiding among trees to human burial in wooden coffins.

souls, showing how Ma'avar Yabok was designed with internal cross-references to guide readers through related topics across different sections.

[i] Cf. Genesis 3:8 — The author draws a parallel between Adam hiding among the trees out of fear after sinning and human bodies being placed in wooden coffins after death, suggesting that coffins symbolize our mortality resulting from original sin. | Cf. Psalms 44:26 — The author uses this verse to describe the soul's state of degradation and punishment, connecting physical burial with spiritual humiliation as part of the process of atonement. | Cf. 1 Samuel 25:29 — The author inverts this concept to describe a form of punishment for souls, where instead of being bound in the 'bundle of life' with God, unrepentant souls are cast about in a 'sling,' representing spiritual torment and instability after death. | Cf. Avot 4:17 — The author concludes with this rabbinic principle to emphasize that even for someone who has been excommunicated or severely punished, genuine repentance in this world offers hope for spiritual redemption, as physical punishment can bones.[1] In this, there is hope for it, for a moment of repentance in this world is more beautiful [than all the life of the World to Come].[2] 180R

פרק י״א

מי שמת לו בנו או בתו אל ינשק אותם גם שמצינו נשיקה מהבן לאב ביוסף וכ״כ במדרש רבה פ׳ ע׳ ארבע נשיקות הן וכו׳. ובפ׳ כ״ה על פסוק גשה נא ושקה לי בני א״ל אתה נושקני בקבורה. ואין אחר נושקני בקבורה וכתוב בספר צרור המור מכאן אמרו זו נשיקת פרישות ואמר מכאן שצריך אדם לנשק את מתו על פרישתו. מ״מ בנו או בתו שאני[i] ע״ד שאמרו קצת מן החכמים שאין לאב לילך אחר בנו הבכור לקבורתו גם שאין הדין ולא המנהג כן וכן אל יניח אשתו לנשוק אותם כי מקצרים ימי בניהם ואולי כי דבקות רוח האב ואם פומא בפומא או בכל מקום שידבקו הבלם בבנם או בבתם המתים זה גורם כי נפשות הבנים שהם בבחם ומכחם מורישים להם נפש החיונית כאשר הצענו למעלה וכן הרשימו מאותם שמכבר הולידו מתדבק בכח המיתה עלמא דנוקבא[ii] ובזה מקצרים ימי בניהם או בנותיהם. וכן אין לומר למתו שמוטל לפניו שיבא ליטול אותו וכ״ש שאין לתפוס

Chapter 11

A person whose son or daughter has died should not kiss them, even though we find instances of a son kissing a father, as with Joseph. Similarly, in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 70, it states "There are four types of kisses, etc." And in chapter 25, regarding the verse "Come near and kiss me, my son," he said to him, "You are kissing me in burial, but no one else will kiss me in burial." It is written in the book Tzeror HaMor, "From here they said this is the kiss of separation," and further, "From here we learn that one should kiss their deceased at their departure." Nevertheless, a son or daughter is different, as some of the sages have said that a father should not follow his firstborn son to burial, even though this is neither the law nor the custom. Similarly, one should not allow his wife to kiss them, for this shortens the lives of their other children. Perhaps this is because the attachment of the spirit of the father and mother—whether mouth to mouth or in any place where their breath clings to their dead son or daughter—causes the souls of the children, which are from their power and strength, to bequeath to them the vital life-force, as we have explained above. Likewise, the residual spiritual impression from those they have already brought into the world attaches to the power of death, the feminine realm, and thereby shortens the days of their sons or daughters. 5R 10R 15R 20R 25R

One should also not say to their deceased lying before them, "Come and take me," and certainly one

[1] This is a difficult passage to translate literally. The author appears to be making a wordplay between 'peh' (mouth) and a spiritual 'opening' or essence within the bones that contains residual vitality after death.

[2] I've added the bracketed text to complete the rabbinic saying that is being referenced here, which is from Pirkei Avot 4:17: 'Better is one hour of repentance and good deeds in this world than all the life of the World to Come.'

serve as atonement. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Chapter 6 — The author refers back to his own earlier explanation about a spiritual essence that remains in human bones even after death, connecting this to both physical burial practices and the metaphysical state of the soul after death.

[i] The author distinguishes between different types of family relationships regarding mourning practices, suggesting that the parent-child relationship has unique spiritual considerations.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that death belongs to the feminine realm (Malkhut), which can exert a dangerous influence when living parents connect too intimately with their deceased children.

ידו בידו ולומר שיוליך אותו אחריו דתפיסת יד גורם חיבור ואמונה עם הב׳ הנתפסין ומעלין עליו כאלו הרג את עצמו[i] דניחא למיתי במיתת קרוביהם החיים וגם שאבוה דשמואל הוה בכי ואמר משום דלעגלא אתית לן אפשר דהוה בכי על צערא דבניה או משום תורה ומצות דלא הוה אפשר לבנו לקיים עוד בעה״ז ובזה הוה נפיש זכותא דידיה דאבוה. וכבר אמרנו ששומעים מה שנאמר להם[ii] וכתיב אך את דמכם לנפשותיכם אדרוש ועוד כי לעולם לא יפתח אדם פיו לשטן.[iii] ובפרט בעת ובמקום שנתן לו רשות וספרו מאשה אחת שהניח ידי בניה החיים ע״י בניה שמתו ומתו גם הם. ובתקון כ״ג א״ר אליעזר יומא חד הוה אזלינא אנא ורבי יוסי ואתא בריה דרב המנונא סבא מההוא עלמא בדיוקנא דהאי עלמא ואזדמן לי באורחא בגוונא דחמר בתרין חמרין. וראיה מכמה סבין שהיו באים לגלות סתרי תורה לר״ש בן יוחאי בזהר והרבה פעמים מצינו זה בתקונים שהיו מנשמות הצדיקים שהם במתיבתא דרקיעא ומתיבתא עילאה.[iv] כתב רבינו ירוחם בשם ר׳ יהודה החסיד שאין לחצוב קבר למת בר מינן אא״כ רוצים לקברו בו לאלתר.[v] וכבר אמרנו שלא יפתח אדם פה לשטן שכוונתם שלא יגרום אדם לשטן שיפתח פיו בקללת עצמו או אחרים כי פעמים השטן פותח פיו עמו ונוטל קללתו ומאשר should not grasp the hand of the deceased in their own hand and say that the deceased should lead them after him, for grasping hands creates a connection and bond between the two who are joined, and it is considered as if one has killed oneself, since the dead are pleased with the death of their living relatives. Also, though Samuel's father wept and said, "For you have come to us quickly," it is possible that he was weeping over his son's suffering, or because of the Torah and commandments that his son would no longer be able to fulfill in this world, and thereby the merit of the father would increase.

We have already stated that the dead hear what is said to them, and it is written, "However, I will require an accounting for your lifeblood," and furthermore, a person should never open their mouth to Satan, especially at a time and place where permission has been given to him. There is a story about a woman who placed the hands of her living children in the hands of her dead children, and they too died. In Tikkun 23, Rabbi Eliezer said, "One day I was walking with Rabbi Yosi when the son of Rav Hamnuna the Elder came from that world in the form of this world and appeared to me on the road as a donkey between two donkeys." And there is evidence from many elders who came to reveal secrets of Torah to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai in the Zohar, and we find this many times in the Tikkunim, that they were from the souls of the righteous who are in the heavenly academy and the supernal academy.

Rabbeinu Yerucham wrote in the name of Rabbi Judah the Pious that one should not dig a grave for the dead (God forbid) unless they intend to bury him in it immediately. We have already said that a person should not open their mouth to Satan, meaning that a person should not cause Satan to open his mouth with curses against oneself or others, because sometimes Satan opens his mouth along with the person, takes his curse, confirms it, and says, "So-and-so has

[i] The text considers symbolic actions with the dead as potentially equivalent to suicide, showing how seriously these prohibitions were taken.

[ii] The author affirms the belief that the deceased remain aware and can hear what the living say to them, which explains why certain statements to them are prohibited.

[iii] This is a rabbinic principle warning against speaking of potential misfortunes, as such speech might invite these misfortunes to occur.

[iv] The text describes a sophisticated cosmology where righteous souls continue their Torah study in heavenly academies and can sometimes return to reveal wisdom to the living.

[v] This prohibition against preparing graves in advance reflects concern that such actions might hasten a person's death, demonstrating how physical actions were believed to have metaphysical consequences.

אותה ואומר פלוני כן דן דינו
70 הוא בעצמו והודאת בעל דין
כמאה עדים וגם שבב״ד של
מטה אין אדם משים עצמו רשע,
ב״ד של מעלה שאני כדאמר
בהקדמת הזהר שאמר דומה נגד
75 דוד טרונייא אית לי עליה דאמר
חי ה׳ כי בן מות הוא. ואמרו כי
קודם דינו של אדם הוא מודה על
כל חטאיו ודן דיניה כי האל לא
יעות משפט וכשבעל כנפים מגיד
80 וממשיך אליו הדבר והקללה
שקלל אדם עצמו אז כתיב ואל
תאמר לפני המלאך כי שגגה היא
וכן אמרו כי המשבר כליו בחמתו
מקריב קרבן לשטן ח״ו אשרי
85 הסותם פי שטן במעשיו לבל יהיה
לו פה לקטרג. ואמרו דורשי
רשומות כי ביטול הקליפות הוא
חיזוק שרשיהן ולכן בשבת שעת
המנחה מתגלה מצח הרצון שהם
90 שרשי הדינין שהומתקו למטה
אז בעת שליטתם בסוד הנהגת
שבת וסוספיתא דדהבא למטה
מטה כבר נשקע מע״ש בנוקבא
דתהומא רבה והאי ארעא חציפא
95 דכל טובא דעלמא מתבלי בה
ותדיק ותסיף כלא והיא מאכלו
של נחש עקלתון. על כן בלילה
דביה כלבין נבחין כי נתרים
ממאסרם וחמורים משלשוליהון
100 ומתפשטים להנהיג בתחתונים
הדינין שקבלה המלכות בתפלת
המנחה ובו תרמוש כל חיתו יער
שהם בחות התחתונים למטה
מעולם של סנדלפון לא יפתח
105 אדם פי הארץ אם לא יסתום
הגולל מיד פן ח״ו באות נפשה
תשאף רוח על ידי הפרא הלמוד
מדבר. ובשם ר״י החסיד כתבו
שטוב לקבור תרנגול הנקרא גבר
110 בקבר ריקם אולי בזה מחליש
ומטמין כח הדין המושפע מצד
מלאך גבריאל הנקרא גבר לבל
יעיר חמתו. ועוד כראות באות
הטומאה קבר פתוח בלילה
115 מוצאים מקום לקטרג ופעמים יש
נספה בלא משפט. כאמרם הות

thus judged himself," and the admission of a litigant is like a hundred witnesses. And although in the 70R earthly court a person cannot incriminate himself, the heavenly court is different, as it says in the introduction to the Zohar that Dumah said against David, "I have a complaint against him, for he said,
'As the Lord lives, he is worthy of death.'" And they 75R said that before a person's judgment, he confesses all his sins and judges himself, for God does not pervert justice. And when the winged being reveals and extends to him the matter and the curse with which a person cursed himself, then it is written, "Do not say 80R before the angel that it was an error." Similarly, they said that one who breaks his vessels in anger offers a sacrifice to Satan (God forbid). Blessed is the one who stops Satan's mouth through his actions so that Satan will have no opening to accuse. 85R

The interpreters of allusions have said that nullifying the external forces strengthens their roots. Therefore, on the Sabbath at the time of the afternoon prayer, the forehead of divine will is revealed—these are the roots of judgments that 90R have been sweetened below. Then, at the time of their dominion, according to the mystery of Sabbath governance, the dregs of gold far below have already sunk from Sabbath eve into the opening of the great abyss. This is the insolent earth in which all 95R the goodness of the world wears away, is crushed, and comes to an end, and it is the food of the twisted serpent. Therefore, at night when dogs bark, for they are released from their confinement and donkeys from their chains, and the powers of 100R judgment received by Malkhut during the afternoon prayer spread to govern the lower realms, when "all the beasts of the forest creep about"—these are the lower powers beneath the world of Sandalphon—a person should not open the mouth of the earth if 105R he does not immediately seal the grave, lest, God forbid, through the opening, its soul draws in the spirit by means of the wild beast that learns to speak.

In the name of Rabbi Judah the Pious, they 110R wrote that it is good to bury a rooster, called "gever" (man), in an empty grave, perhaps to weaken and conceal the power of judgment that flows from the angel Gabriel, who is called "gever," so that his wrath will not be aroused. Furthermore, when the 115R forces of impurity see an open grave at night, they כשגגה היוצאת.[i] ברם לעולם דין אמת וכל דרכיו משפט:[ii] find an opportunity to accuse, and sometimes "there is one who is swept away without justice," as they said, "It was like an inadvertent sin that proceeds from the ruler." Nevertheless, true judgment is eternal, and all His ways are just. 120R

פרק י״ב

Chapter 12

ממה שאנו רואים כמה פעמים בני אדם בריאים והם מתים מיתה פתאומית[iii] זה מורה דבקותו יתברך עמנו ע״י הנשמה ולכן מסלקה כל זמן שרוצה. וילבש האדם חרדה במיתת בניו בחשבו כי בכנפיו נמצאו דם נפשות האביונים נקיים[iv] ועונו גרם שנעשקו בירידתם[v] על כי תיקלא לא קיימא באשלמותא[vi] ומכרעת

From what we observe, when healthy people sometimes die suddenly, this demonstrates God's attachment to us through the soul,[A 1] which He withdraws whenever He wishes. A person should be struck with trembling at the death of his children, considering 5R that on his wings may be found the blood of innocent needy souls, and that his sin caused them to be wronged in their descent to earth because the scale was not perfectly balanced[B 2] and tipped toward guilt—especially on weekdays if it is not the 10R

[A] Or: "by means of the divine soul implanted within us" — This alternate translation emphasizes the kabbalistic understanding that the soul is a divine element placed within humans, not merely a component of human existence.

[B] Or: "the cosmic scales did not maintain perfect equilibrium" — This alternative captures more of the kabbalistic cosmological implications of the metaphor, emphasizing the divine scales that weigh judgment and mercy rather than mundane scales.

[1] The Hebrew term 'דבקותו' (devekuto) has stronger connotations than mere 'attachment'—it implies an intimate divine connection or cleaving to the human soul.

[2] This is a translation of 'תיקלא לא קיימא באשלמותא,' a kabbalistic expression referring to cosmic scales of judgment and mercy being out of balance.

[i] This alludes to Ecclesiastes 10:5, referring to errors that proceed from rulers, here applied to premature deaths caused by improper actions around burial.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 50:1 — Referenced to show a biblical precedent of kissing the dead, though specifically a son kissing a father rather than parent kissing child, which the text prohibits. | Cf. Genesis 27:26 — Cited to show a father (Isaac) being kissed by his son (Jacob), supporting the pattern that children may kiss parents but not vice versa. | Cf. Sefer Tzeror HaMor — Used to establish the concept of a 'kiss of separation' or farewell to the deceased, while still maintaining the prohibition for parents kissing their deceased children. | Cf. Genesis 9:5 — Used to warn against actions that might endanger one's life, including symbolic gestures with the dead that might 'invite death'. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 23 — Cited to demonstrate that souls from the afterlife can manifest in this world, explaining why certain precautions around the dead are necessary. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:5 — Used to explain how death can sometimes occur prematurely or unjustly when negative spiritual forces gain an opportunity through improper burial practices. | Cf. Psalm 145:17 — Concluding statement affirming divine justice despite the seemingly harsh spiritual dangers described, providing theological context for the prohibitions.

[iii] This refers to sudden death without warning or apparent illness, which the author interprets as a direct divine act rather than a natural occurrence. This reflects the theological perspective that even seemingly random deaths are purposeful expressions of God's will.

[iv] This metaphorical expression draws on biblical imagery (Jeremiah 2:34) where blood on one's garments symbolizes guilt for the deaths of innocents. Here it suggests parental responsibility for the spiritual welfare of their children's souls.

[v] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that souls are 'sent down' to earth for incarnation, and that the spiritual condition of the parents affects the quality of the soul's descent and embodiment.

[vi] Literally 'the scale does not stand in perfection,' a kabbalistic metaphor for the balance of cosmic forces of judgment and mercy being disrupted, causing judgment to predominate.

לצד החובה ובפרט בחול אם אינו ליל טבילה[i] כדדרשו בזהר על פסוק ואין ברגלים חוטא דמבעי ליה לאיניש לאנפא לקדושא דמריה ליל שבת ולמימר פסוקי דאתערותא כגון רוח ה׳ אלהים וגו׳ עם מה שכתוב בזהר פ׳ ויקרא. ואמרו כי הורדת דמעות על אדם כשר מציל בניו של אדם ממות[ii] כי בזהר פ׳ אחרי מות דף רנ״ז כתיב כל המצטער על אבודיהון דצדיקייא או אחית דמעין עליהו קב״ה אכריז עליה וסר עונך וחטאתך תכופר ולא עוד אלא דלא ימותון בנוהי בחיוהי. והורדת הדמעה גורם מיתוק הדינים[iii] כדאמרי׳ במדרש איכה על מאמר שאמר הקב״ה למטטרו״ן אם אי אתה מניח לי וכו׳ אבנס למקום שאין לך רשות ליכנס וגו׳ וכן הפסוק אומר ויקרא ה׳ אלהים צבאות ביום ההוא לבכי ולמספד שהכל היה למתוק הדין בהורדת טיפי רוגז חוצה. ובזהר בפ׳ שמות דף י״ט ע״ב אמרו בעשרה כתרי מלכא אית תרין דמעין[iv] והן שתי מדות [v]

night of ritual immersion, as they interpreted in the Zohar regarding the verse "he who hastens with his feet sins," meaning that one should prepare for the sanctification of his Master on Sabbath eve and recite verses of spiritual awakening,[1] such as "The spirit of the Lord God..." along with what is written in the Zohar, Parashat Vayikra. 15R

They said that shedding tears for a worthy person saves one's children from death, for in the Zohar, Parashat Acharei Mot, page 257, it is written: "Whoever grieves over the loss of the righteous or sheds tears for them—the Holy One, blessed be He, proclaims about him: 'Your iniquity is taken away, and your sin is atoned for,' and moreover, his children will not die during his lifetime." The shedding of tears causes the sweetening of judgments,[A] as stated in Midrash Eichah regarding the passage where the Holy One, blessed be He, said to Metatron: "If you do not permit Me... I will enter a place where you have no permission to enter," etc. Similarly, the verse states: "And the Lord God of hosts called on that day for weeping and mourning"—all of this was to sweeten judgment by releasing drops of wrath outward.[2] And in the Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 19b, they said: "Among the ten crowns of the King there are two tears, which are two attributes [of judgment]." 20R 25R 30R 35R

[A] Or: "tempering of the divine severity" — This alternate translation might be clearer for readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology, as 'sweetening' in English doesn't immediately convey the concept of transforming harsh judgment into mercy.

[1] The term 'דאתערותא' (de-it'aruta) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to 'awakening from below'—human-initiated spiritual activity that stimulates divine response.

[2] The Hebrew 'הורדת טיפי רוגז חוצה' is a technical kabbalistic concept describing how tears externalize divine judgment, preventing it from manifesting in more harmful ways.

[i] This refers to the prohibition against marital relations on regular weekdays unless it is the wife's night for ritual immersion after her menstrual period. The author suggests that conception at inappropriate times creates spiritual imbalances.

[ii] This presents a theological principle that sincere grief expressed for the righteous creates protective merit that shields one's children from death—establishing a mystical cause-and-effect relationship between emotional expression and divine protection.

[iii] A fundamental kabbalistic concept meaning 'sweetening of judgments,' where harsh divine judgments are transformed into mercy through specific spiritual practices—in this case, through genuine tears of grief.

[iv] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) containing two 'tears' that represent attributes of judgment. The shedding of human tears is believed to affect these cosmic 'tears' of judgment.

[v] Cf. Zohar, Acharei Mot — The text is using this reference to explain the spiritual benefit of mourning properly for the righteous. It establishes a theological principle that genuine grief ex-

דין שהדין בא משתיהן כד״א
שתים הנה קוראותיך וכשהקב״ה
זוכר את בניו הוא מוריד אותם
לים הגדול שהוא ים החכמה
להמתיקן והופך מדת הדין
למדת רחמים ומרחם עליהם
וא״ר יהודה נקראים שתי דמעות
שמהן באים דמעות מהן בא
הדין.[i] מצאתי יש בנ״א שכל
הנקרא על שמו יחיו ויהיו בניו
קיימים ויעמידו תולדות כדכתיב
כן יעמוד זרעכם ושמכם. ויש כל
אלו להם להפך דכתיב והנחתם
שמכם לשבועה לבחירי וכתיב
ולא שם לו על פני חוץ וכתיב
אשר שם שמות בארץ אל תקרי
שמות אלא שמות לשון שממון
שגורם השם ההוא.[ii] ולכן אמרו
דלא מסקינן בשמייהו של רשעים
כיון שהיה בית יד לטומאה וכל
הכלים צריך להגעיל ידותיהן
כמותן ולכן טוב ליזהר מזה
וכיוצא בזה בתרי הויא חזקה
כדאיפסקא ביבמות הלכתא
כרבי במקום סכנה.[iii] ואמרו
ג״כ כי יש נשים שאין לישא

The judgment comes from both of these [tears], as it is said, "These two things have befallen you" (Isaiah 51:19).[A] When the Holy One, blessed be He, remembers His children, He lowers these [tears] into the great sea, which is the sea of Wisdom, to sweeten them, and transforms the attribute of Judgment into the attribute of Mercy, and has compassion upon them. And Rabbi Yehudah said: They are called two tears because from them come tears, and from them comes judgment.[1]

I have found that there are people whose namesakes will live, whose children will endure, and who will establish generations, as it is written, "So shall your seed and your name endure" (Isaiah 66:22). And there are those for whom the opposite is true, as it is written, "And you shall leave your name as a curse unto My chosen ones" (Isaiah 65:15), and it is written, "He has no name on the face of the earth" (Job 18:17), and it is written, "Who has set desolations in the earth" (Psalms 46:9)—do not read "shamot" (desolations) but "shemot" (names),[B] meaning desolation caused by that name. Therefore, they said that we do not use the names of the wicked, since such a name was a handle for impurity, and all vessels require purification of their handles as well. Therefore, it is good to be [A] Or: "as the verse states, "These two things have happened to you" (Isaiah 51:19)" — This alternative translation uses more common English phrasing and may be clearer for readers unfamiliar with biblical language.

[B] Or: "do not read it as "shamot" (desolations) but as "shemot" (names)" — This alternative more clearly conveys the rabbinic wordplay between two similar Hebrew words that differ only in vocalization.

[1] The Hebrew uses a play on words connecting 'tears' (דמעות/dema'ot) with 'judgment' (דין/din), suggesting an etymological or spiritual connection that isn't fully captured in translation.

pressed for others creates spiritual merit that offers protection to one's own family members. | Cf. Midrash Eichah — This reference establishes the concept that tears have cosmic power to mitigate divine judgment. The dialogue between God and Metatron illustrates the principle that expressions of grief create channels for divine mercy to flow into realms otherwise dominated by judgment. | Cf. Zohar, Vayikra — This reference connects to practices for sanctifying the Sabbath through recitation of awakening verses. The author uses this to explain that improper preparation for sacred times can contribute to spiritual imbalances that might affect one's children. | Cf. Zohar, Shemot 19b — This reference explains the kabbalistic concept of divine tears as attributes of judgment that can be sweetened through human tears of compassion. It establishes a mystical correspondence between human emotional expression and cosmic processes.

[i] The text establishes a kabbalistic connection between tears and divine judgment, suggesting that the same celestial source produces both emotional response (tears) and cosmic justice (judgment).

[ii] The author employs the rabbinic interpretive technique of 'al tikrei' (read not X but Y) to connect the Hebrew words 'shemot' (names) and 'shamot' (desolations), suggesting that certain names can bring spiritual desolation.

[iii] This reference to Talmudic law (from Yevamot) establishes that in matters of potential spiritual danger, like harmful names, one should follow the stricter opinion.

אותן כי לא יצליחו שלהיותן
מעלמא דנוקבא שרגליה יורדות
מות[i] ביון שמתחילות להטות
עצמן לצד חוצה אין לך מזיק
גדול מהן ואמרו כמה רעה אשה
רעה שהיא מר ממות וגם אם אינה
רעה במעשיה אם הורע מזלה
חוטא ילכד בה ולכן יש דין
קטלנית באשה ולא באיש[ii] ועיין
בסבא וכבר אמרו בית תינוק
ואשה אם אין נחש יש סימן. אשה
טובה בחיק ירא אלהים תנתן
להניח ברכה אל ביתו כי היא
מוכנת לקבלה להיותה כלי.
ואמרו כי מי שהוא עצרן וקפדן
לא ירויחו אחרים בממונו שאין
פרוטתו מתברכת כי נותן בעין
רעה. וכבר העמידנו בזה המלך
החכם באומרו אל תלחם את
לחם רע עין וגו׳ פתך אכלת
תקיאנה. ושמת סכין בלועך אם
בעל נפש אתה. שלהיותו מצד
כח הדינים המגלדים ועוצרים
השפע שעליהם כתוב לפני קרתו
מי יעמוד המקבל ממנו מטה
אשורו מני דרך ועוזב מקור מים
חיים לחצוב לו בורות נשברים
כי אולי אם ישא אל אלוה פניו
ומתכא דרחמנא יאכל צנור
נשמתו יהיה יותר מוכן לקבל
בעין יפה. ובזהר פ׳ שמות דף ג׳
ר׳ חייא פתח אל תלחם את לחם
רע עין ואל תתאו למטעמותיו
אל תלחם את לחם רע עין בגין

cautious about this, and similarly in other cases, two occurrences establish a presumption, as was ruled in Yevamot: "The law follows Rabbi [Yehudah HaNasi] in cases of danger."[1]

They also said that there are women whom one should not marry because they will not bring success, for being from the feminine realm whose "feet descend to death" (Proverbs 5:5), once they begin to incline themselves toward the external side, there is no greater harmful entity than they. And they said, "How evil is an evil woman, for she is more bitter than death" (Ecclesiastes 7:26). Even if she is not evil in her deeds, if her destiny (mazal) is bad, "the sinner will be caught by her" (Ecclesiastes 7:26). Therefore, the law of the "deadly wife" (katlanit) applies to a woman but not to a man. See the Sabba [section of the Zohar], and they have already said, "A house, a child, and a woman—if there is no snake, there is a sign."[2]

A good woman will be given into the bosom of one who fears God, to bring blessing to his house, for she is prepared to receive it, being a vessel [for divine blessing]. And they said that one who is miserly and particular[A] will not benefit others with his wealth, for his coin is not blessed, as he gives with an evil eye. The wise king has already taught us this, saying, "Do not eat the bread of one who has an evil eye, etc." (Proverbs 23:6), "The morsel you have eaten, you will vomit up" (Proverbs 23:8), "And put a knife to your throat if you are a person of appetite" (Proverbs 23:2). Because he is influenced by congealing judgmental forces that restrict the flow, concerning which it is written, "Who can stand before His cold?" (Psalms 147:17). One who receives from him

[A] Or: "who is stingy and irritable" — This alternative better captures the emotional quality implied in the original Hebrew terms, which describe not just frugality but a negative personality trait.

[1] The Hebrew term for 'danger' (סכנה/sakanah) in this context specifically refers to spiritual or metaphysical danger, not merely physical harm.

[2] This cryptic Talmudic saying suggests that if no immediate negative force (snake) is visible in these three domains, it's a sign that something is amiss. The underlying concept is that some spiritual resistance is normal and its complete absence may indicate hidden problems.

[i] This phrase from Proverbs 5:5 originally refers to the 'strange woman' or forbidden relations, but is reinterpreted here in kabbalistic terms to suggest that the feminine aspect (Malkhut) has an intrinsic connection to death when it turns toward external forces rather than divine influence.

[ii] The term 'katlanit' refers to a woman whose husbands tend to die. The author explains this halakhic concept through kabbalistic terms, suggesting it stems from the feminine realm's inherent connection to death.

דנחמא או הנאה דההוא בר נש
דהוי רע עין לאו איהו כדאי
למיכל ולאתהני מניה דאי כד
נחתו ישראל למצרים לא יטעמון
נחמא דמצראי לא אשתבקו
בגלותא ולא יעיקון לון מצראי
א״ל ר׳ יצחק והא גזרה אתגזר
א״ל כלא איהו כדקא יאות דהא
לא אתגזר דהא לא כתיב כי גר
יהיה זרעך בארץ מצרים אלא
בארץ לא להם ואפי׳ בארעא
אחרא. א״ר יצחק מאן דאיהו
בעל נפש דמכליה יתיר משאר
בני נשא או מאן דהוא אזיל
בתר מעוי אי אערא בהו רע עין
יכוס גרמיה ולא יכול מנחמא
דיליה דלית נחמא בישא בעלמא
בר מההוא רע עין. מה כתיב
כי לא יוכלון המצרים לאכול
את העברים לחם כי תועבה
היא למצרים הא לך רע עין.
ובערובין פ׳ כיצד משתתפין
אמרו שכל המצפה לשלחן חבירו
אפי׳ יהיה טוב עין העולם חושך
בעדו אולי ירצו כי לעולם לא
יקבל שפעו רק ע״י הנהגת החול
ימי חשך שהוא עולם מטטרו״ן
הנקרא בשר ודם וחייו אינם חיים
מעולם הכסא המחייה הכל רק
מעולם המות שהוא מעץ הדעת
טוב מטטרו״ן ורע ס״מ.[i] וישראל
בהיותם במצרים היו אוכלים
לחם העצבים בחנם. ובהיותם
תחת הנהגת משה רבינו עליו
השלום שהיה ממטיר להם לחם
מן השמים היו מתאוים למזון
גופניי הבא מכחות הנקראים
חנם. ואם תהיה כוונתו ללמוד
תורה אם ימות יחיה ולילה ביום
יאיר לו לעה״ב ועליו יאמר
אדם כי ימות באה״ל: ואפי׳ מי
שיש לו אב עצרן וקמצן בממונו

turns aside from the path and abandons the source of living waters to dig broken cisterns, for perhaps if he would lift his face to God and eat from the Merciful One's table,[1] the channel of his soul would be more prepared to receive with a generous eye.

And in the Zohar, Parshat Shemot, page 3, Rabbi Chiya began, "Do not eat the bread of one who has an evil eye, and do not desire his delicacies" (Proverbs 23:6). "Do not eat the bread of one who has an evil eye"—because the bread or benefit from a person who has an evil eye is not worthy to be eaten or enjoyed. For if when Israel descended to Egypt they had not tasted the bread of the Egyptians, they would not have remained in exile, and the Egyptians would not have oppressed them. Rabbi Yitzchak said to him: But a decree had been issued! He replied: Everything is as it should be, for it was not decreed specifically about Egypt, as it is not written, "Your seed shall be strangers in the land of Egypt," but rather "in a land that is not theirs" (Genesis 15:13), even in another land.

Rabbi Yitzchak said: One who is a person of appetite who eats more than other people, or one who follows his stomach—if he encounters an evil-eyed person, he should restrain himself and not eat of his bread, for there is no more evil bread in the world than that of one with an evil eye. What is written? "For the Egyptians could not eat bread with the Hebrews, for that is an abomination to the Egyptians" (Genesis 43:32). Behold, this is an evil eye.

And in Eruvin, chapter "How do they join [in an eruv]," they said that anyone who depends on his friend's table, even if [the friend] has a good eye, the world is dark for him. Perhaps they meant that he will never receive his divine flow except through the governance of the weekdays, days of darkness, which is the world of Metatron, who is called "flesh and blood," and his life is not life from the world of the Throne, which gives life to all, but rather from the world of death, which comes from the Tree of Knowledge—good is Metatron and evil is Samael.

And Israel, when they were in Egypt, were eating

[1] The original phrase 'מתכא דרחמנא' (mitka d'rachmana) is an Aramaic expression that literally means 'the table of the Merciful One,' referring to divine sustenance rather than human charity.

[i] This passage presents an unusual kabbalistic interpretation of the Tree of Knowledge, identifying its 'good' aspect with the angel Metatron and its 'evil' aspect with Samael. This formulation connects the mundane act of eating to cosmic spiritual forces.

יאכל פתו לבדו ולא ישמור ויצפה לארוחותיו הצרים ומה שאמרו במדבר רבה פ׳ ח׳ על פסוק בניך כשתילי זיתים סביב לשלחנך שלבניך יעמוד זכותך שמשלחנך יזכו בניך למעלות גדולות. אך שם במה הכתוב מדבר ביראא שמים דוקא שנותן בעין יפה דכתיב הנה כי כן יבורך גבר יראה׳ באברהם ושרה כי טוב עין הוא יבורך ופורתא מדידיה מסעיד סעיד והברכה שרויה במעים כאיוב שוותרן בממונו היה ולבן כל מי שהיה נוטל פרוטה ממנו מתברך. ואמר פתך אכלת לומר ודאי שכיון שבאת לעולם בא בכרך עמך כאשר נגזר בשעה שהובאה טיפתך לפני הפותח את ידו ומשביע לכל חי ברצון. וא״כ השפע שהיה לבא לך ממקום אחר אתה משעבד עצמך שיורק לך ע״י הרע עין הזה ולא יבוסם ולא יערב לך כי שולט בו צד הרע והורק לאשפה ועל כן אמר במקום אחר תחת שלש רגזה ארץ ואחד מהם ונבל כי ישבע לחם והנבל שהוא כלבי מצד בחינת הכלב שמזונותיו מועטים שלכן איחר הקב״ה מזונו במעיו ג׳ ימים להיותו דין חצוף המתהוה מזווג שור וחמור יחד ע״כ הנבל הזה כשמשפיע לאחרים נבלה ידבר והוא מלשון ידבר עמים תחתינו וע״כ רגזה ארץ החיים שממנה תצא לחם ומזון לכל חי שעל כן מברכים המוציא לחם מן הארץ ועל הארץ ועל המזון יען כי שפחה תירש גברתה כי נות בית תחלק שלל בעין יפה. וכתב הרמב״ן בפ׳ תולדות יצחק כי המתברכים מפי ה׳ לא יאונה להם עוני וחסרון וזה על דרך

the "bread of sorrow" for free. And when they were under the leadership of Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, who would rain down bread from heaven for them, they longed for physical nourishment that comes from forces called "free." And if his intention is to study Torah, even if he dies, he will live, and night will shine like day for him in the World to Come, and of him it will be said, "A man who dies in a tent" (Numbers 19:14). 140R 145R

Even one who has a miserly and stingy father regarding his wealth should eat his own bread alone and not wait and watch for his father's meager meals. And that which they said in Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 8, on the verse "Your children like olive plants around your table" (Psalms 128:3)—that your merit will stand for your children, and from your table your children will merit great heights—that verse speaks specifically of one who fears Heaven and gives with a generous eye, as it is written, "Behold, thus shall the man who fears the Lord be blessed" (Psalms 128:4), like Abraham and Sarah,[1] for "he who is generous shall be blessed" (Proverbs 22:9), and a little from his own sustains [others], and blessing dwells in the intestines, like Job, who was generous with his wealth, and therefore anyone who took a coin from him was blessed. 150R 155R 160R 165R

And it says, "The morsel you have eaten" to tell you with certainty that when you came into the world, your loaf came with you, as was decreed at the time your drop [of semen] was brought before "He who opens His hand and satisfies the desire of every living thing" (Psalms 145:16). And thus, the divine flow that was to come to you from another place—you enslave yourself so that it comes to you through this evil-eyed person, and it will not be pleasant or agreeable to you, for the evil side controls it, and it is poured out to the refuse. Therefore, it says elsewhere, "For three things the earth trembles," and one of them is "a contemptible person who is sated with food" (Proverbs 30:21-22). 170R 175R

The contemptible one is like a dog in the aspect of the dog whose sustenance is meager, which is why the Holy One, blessed be He, delayed its food 180R

[1] The text assumes familiarity with Abraham and Sarah's legendary hospitality and generosity, traits that made them paradigms of 'good eye' in rabbinic literature.

שאמרו ברפואה.[i] in its intestines for three days,[A] it being a brazen judgment that comes from the forbidden union of an ox and a donkey together. Therefore, when this contemptible one influences others, he speaks contemptible things,[B] which is from the language of "He will subdue the peoples under us" (Psalms 47:4). Therefore, the land of the living trembles, from which bread and nourishment come forth for all living things, which is why we bless "Who brings forth bread from the earth" and "for the land and for the sustenance." This is because "a maidservant inherits her mistress" (Proverbs 30:23), for "the women of the house divide the spoil" with a generous eye (Judges 5:30).

And Ramban wrote in the section on the generations of Isaac that those who are blessed by the mouth of the Lord will not suffer poverty and lack, and this is in the way they spoke of healing.[1]

ושפחה עינה רעה בשל אחרים וחוטפת וקומצת ואומרת שלי שלי ושלך שלי. וכמו שער בנפשה השפע שקבלה להריק לך שנעשתה מצע תחתיה ואכול ושתה תאמר לך ולבה בל עמך

And a maidservant has an evil eye regarding what belongs to others, snatching and hoarding and saying, "What is mine is mine, and what is yours is mine." Just as she has limited in her mind the abundance she received to pour out to you, having made herself a cushion beneath it, saying to you, "Eat and drink,"

[A] Or: "whose food is sparse, which is why the Holy One, blessed be He, made its digestion take three days" — This alternative more clearly conveys the traditional belief about dogs' digestive processes, which the author is using as a metaphor.

[B] Or: "he speaks vile things" — This alternative may better capture the strength of the Hebrew expression, which suggests not just contempt but actual vileness or disgrace in speech.

[1] This enigmatic ending refers to the rabbinic concept that spiritual principles apply in similar ways to both financial prosperity and physical healing—both depend on divine blessing and proper spiritual channels.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Shemot 3b — The passage cites this Zohar text to establish the spiritual danger of accepting food from someone with an evil eye, connecting it to Israel's experience in Egypt. This reference is essential for understanding the author's warning about the metaphysical consequences of receiving sustenance from negative sources. | Cf. Zohar, section called 'Sabba' (The Elder) — The text refers readers to the Sabba section of the Zohar for more details on the spiritual dangers of certain women. This section contains kabbalistic teachings about the feminine aspects of creation and their potential connections to negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Proverbs 23:6-8 — This biblical passage serves as the foundation for the author's warnings about accepting sustenance from people with negative spiritual qualities. The author interprets this verse as having mystical significance beyond its plain meaning. | Cf. Eruvin (Talmudic tractate) — The citation from Eruvin supports the author's position on spiritual independence, suggesting that one who depends on others' tables experiences spiritual darkness even if the provider has positive intentions. | Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 8 — This reference is used to qualify when parental merit transfers to children—specifically when the parent gives generously and fears Heaven. The author uses this to contrast with the earlier warnings about miserly providers. | Cf. Genesis 15:13 — This reference is used in the Zohar citation to make a technical point about the nature of the Egyptian exile decree, suggesting that the specific location was not predetermined but resulted from Israel's actions in eating Egyptian bread.

כמו שאמרו על שלשים וחמשה
שרים שמצד שמאל[i] שמקמצין
מהשפע הניתן להם ונותנים
195 אותו בעין רעה וא״כ למה תשגה
בני בזרה ותחבק חק נכריה כי
שחת דברך הנעימים הנהגותך
שאם היו באים לך שלא על
יד צר עין זה שמחמת פחיתות
200 נפשך וקוצר אמונתך בה׳ עיניך
תלויות לו מוכנים היו לבא לך
מדרכי הנועם העליון ברוב טוב
ושפע ואתה שחת אותם ולהיות
כי משפיל צמר נשמתו לקבל
205 מהנהגת מטטרו״ן ימי החול
ששם כחות החנם גם יחודיו
ומעשיו הטובים לא יעוררו
אפי׳ בשבתות וימים טובים רק
עד מקום קבלת נשמתו וזהו
210 ושחת דבריך הנעימים שלא
יגיעו עד הנועם העליון שהיא
בינה דמקננא בכורסייא יען כי
בבחינת עבד אתה למטטרו״ן
ולהיות בה׳ מבטחך הודעתיך
215 היום אני. ואמרו במדרש כל
ימי עני באמונה הם רעים דוגמת
הנחש כי ירא שיחסר לו עפר
למאכלו וטוב לב ומאמין בקונו
כי יזמין לו פרנסתו משתה
220 תמיד כי גם ה׳ יתן אליו הטוב
מרחובות הנהר כרוחב לבו
באמונתו. ושר העולם אמר לא
ראיתי צדיק נעזב וזרעו מבקש
לחם ואי צורבא דרבנן מעני
225 אהדורא אפתחא לא מהדר. ועל

but her heart is not with you. This is like what they said about the thirty-five ministers from the left side who withhold from the abundance given to them and distribute it with an evil eye. So why, my son, do you 210R go astray with a strange woman and embrace the bosom of a foreigner? For you have corrupted your pleasant words and your conduct. If they had come to you not through this grudging person—because of your diminished spirit and your lack of faith in God, 215R your eyes being dependent on him—they would have been prepared to come to you through the ways of supreme pleasantness with abundant goodness and prosperity. But you have corrupted them.

Because one who lowers the wool of his soul[A] to 220R receive from the governance of Metatron during the weekdays, where the forces of gratuitous gifts[B] reside, even his unifications and good deeds will not awaken, even on Sabbaths and festivals, beyond the place of his soul's reception. This is the meaning 225R of "you have corrupted your pleasant words"—that they will not reach the supreme pleasantness, which is Binah nesting in the Throne,[C] since you are in the aspect of a servant to Metatron. But if your trust is in the Lord, I am informing you today. 230R

They said in the Midrash: "All the days of the poor who has faith are evil," like the serpent who fears he will lack earth for his food. But one who is good of heart and has faith in his Creator, who will provide his sustenance, will always feast, for God 235R will also give him goodness from the expanses of the river, according to the breadth of his heart in his faith. And the Prince of the World said: "I have not seen a righteous person abandoned, nor his offspring seeking bread." And if a Torah scholar becomes poor, 240R

[A] Or: "one who debases the essence of his soul" — The phrase 'צמר נשמתו' (wool of his soul) is likely a metaphorical expression. While 'wool' (צמר) is the literal translation, it might be referring to the essence or substance of the soul. The alternate translation captures the metaphorical meaning better, though the original is more literal.

[B] Or: "forces of mundane provision" — The term 'כחות החנם' is difficult to translate precisely. While 'חנם' often means 'free' or 'gratuitous,' in this context it might refer to mundane or worldly provisions, contrasted with divine abundance. The alternate translation captures this contextual meaning.

[C] Or: "Binah (Understanding) that nests in the Divine Throne" — The alternate translation adds explanatory information that 'Binah' refers to 'Understanding,' which is helpful for readers unfamiliar with Kabbalistic terminology. Both translations are accurate, but the alternate provides more context.

[i] In Kabbalistic literature, especially the Zohar, the 'left side' represents the side of judgment, restriction, and withholding, while the 'right side' represents mercy and giving. These thirty-five ministers are spiritual forces that distribute divine influence with restriction rather than abundance.

הרוב ממרחק תביא לחמה כי בצל החכמה בצל הכסף. ואמרו רבנן כי צרי עין אפי׳ עופות השמים מכירים אותם שהמלאכים
230 אשר בעולם העשיה ששם ה׳ משטרם בארץ הנקרא עוף המעופפים על הארץ משפיעים לו גם הם בעין רעה שהכל כפי המקבל וכלי ריקן מברכה אינו
235 מחזיק.[i] ואין טוב לכל אדם רק לצפות מחיתו ומחית בניו מאת אבינו מן השמים שלכן אמרו על ר׳ פנחס בן יאיר מיום שעמד על דעתו לא נהנה מסעודת
240 אביו.[ii] וכ״ש אם הבן בלבו יבין ובאזניו ישמע דהאי גברא לא בעי בר שטוב לו לשית לבו ופני צאנו הבנים בניו והבנות בנותיו לעדרים עליונים אשר בהם די
245 חלב עז ותעצומות ללחם ביתו וחיים לנערותיו ואז לא ייראו לביתו משלג וממרחק יביא לחמו והאשת חיל תתן טרף לביתו וחוק לנערותיו ותאמץ זרועותיו
250 ועז והדר יהיה לבושו ותורת חסד על לשונו להודות תמיד לנותן לחם לכל בשר ועיניו יצפו לו כי לעולם חסדו בברכת אשר לא עשאני עבד[iii] ובזה יקומו
255 בניו ויאשרוהו מלכות בנותיו ופילגשיו ויהללוהו כי איש בזה ירא ה׳ הוא יתהלל ומאוצר של חסד יוסיפו לו על פרי ידיו ויהללוהו בשערים מעשיו.
260 וכל הפותח פתחו לחבירו חייב בכבודו יותר מאביו ואמו כדאמרי׳ בשמות רבה פ״ד. ולא תהא עדות גדולה מראיה ואין חכם כבעל הנסיון:[iv] he does not go back to the doorway begging. Generally, "from afar she brings her bread," for "in the shadow of wisdom is the shadow of money."

The Rabbis said that even the birds of heaven recognize those who are grudging, for the angels who 245R are in the World of Asiyah, where God established their dominion on earth—called "birds flying over the earth"—they too bestow upon such a person with an evil eye, for everything is according to the receiver, and an empty vessel cannot contain bless- 250R
ing. It is not good for any person except to expect his livelihood and the livelihood of his children from our Father in Heaven. Therefore, they said of Rabbi Pinchas ben Yair that from the day he gained understanding, he did not benefit from his father's meal. 255R

All the more so if the son understands in his heart and hears with his ears that this man does not desire a son, it is good for him to set his heart and direct his flock—his sons and his daughters—to the celestial flocks in which there is sufficient potent milk and 260R strength for the bread of his household and life for his maidens. Then "he will not fear for his household from snow," and "from afar he will bring his bread." The woman of valor will "provide food for her household and a portion for her maidens," she 265R will strengthen his arms, and "strength and dignity will be his clothing." The Torah of kindness will be on his tongue to always thank the One who gives bread to all flesh, and his eyes will look to Him, "for His kindness is eternal," like the blessing "who has 270R not made me a slave." In this way, "his children will rise up and call him blessed," his daughters will be queens, and his concubines will praise him, for such a man who fears the Lord shall be praised. From the treasury of kindness, they will increase the fruit 275R of his hands, and "his deeds will praise him in the gates."

Anyone who opens his door to his friend is obligated to honor him more than his father and mother,

[i] This is based on a Talmudic teaching that empty vessels can hold blessing, while full ones cannot. Here it's used ironically—those who are spiritually 'empty' through their stinginess cannot receive divine blessing.

[ii] Rabbi Pinchas ben Yair was known for his extreme piety and self-sufficiency. This story about him refusing to eat at his father's table from the time he gained maturity illustrates the ideal of independence from human providers and complete reliance on God.

[iii] This references one of the morning blessings in Jewish liturgy, 'Blessed are You...who has not made me a slave.' The author connects this blessing to the concept of being free from dependence on human masters, suggesting that true freedom comes from reliance on God alone.

[iv] Cf. Zohar — The text is drawing on Kabbalistic cosmology from the Zohar to explain how spiri-as they said in Exodus Rabbah, chapter 84. And there is no greater testimony than eyewitness, and no one is wiser than one who has experience. 280R

פרק י״ג

Chapter 13

יש הרבה דברים שבנים של אדם מתים עליהם ות״ח היודע זה ואינו נזהר עתיד ליתן את הדין. ואין לקלל בניו ובנותיו כי ברית כרותה לשפתים וכמו שברית כרותה לשפתי ברכת הורים להיות עודפת על ברכת האחרים להיות נפש הבנים עלולים תחתם כן ח״ו קללתם אפי׳ על חנם היא באה כמו שאמרו על קללת חכם.[i] וגם על זה ירחיק הבן מאביו ומאמו אם אי אפשר לו בענין אחר פן יבולע לו ולמשפחתו. ומי שאין מתקיימין לו בנים יכול אחר לפדותו וליתן כופר נפשו

There are many things that cause a person's children to die, and a Torah scholar who knows this and is not careful will have to give an account in the future.[A] One should not curse one's sons and daughters, for there is a covenant made with the lips.[B] Just as there is a covenant made with parental blessings to be more effective than the blessings of others—since children's souls are susceptible to their parents' influence[1]—so too, God forbid, their curses, even if uttered without justification, will take effect, as they say regarding a sage's curse. For this reason, a son should distance himself from his father and mother if he cannot manage the situation differently, lest harm befall him and his family. One whose children do not survive may have another person redeem him and offer a ransom for his soul, and he should be called the 5R 10R 15R

[A] Or: "and a Torah scholar who knows this but fails to take precautions will ultimately be held accountable" — This alternative provides a slightly clearer rendering of the concept of future divine judgment while maintaining the serious tone of the warning.

[B] Or: "words have binding power" — This is a more idiomatic English expression of the rabbinic concept that spoken words have inherent power to actualize what they express, though it loses the specific covenant metaphor.

[1] The original phrase 'להיות נפש הבנים עלולים תחתם' literally means 'the souls of children are liable/susceptible under them'—expressing the kabbalistic concept that children's souls are spiritually connected to and influenced by their parents.

tual forces distribute divine abundance. The 'left side' in Kabbalah generally represents the side of judgment and restriction, contrasted with the 'right side' of mercy and giving. This reference helps establish the author's argument that those who are stingy mirror negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Proverbs 31 — The author weaves together verses from Proverbs 31 to describe the ideal of self-sufficiency through divine providence. By invoking the biblical archetype of the woman of valor, the text suggests that proper faith in God leads to the same kind of industriousness, provision, and dignity described in Proverbs 31. | Cf. Psalm 136 — By incorporating this liturgical refrain from Psalm 136, the author emphasizes that gratitude to God for sustenance should be constant and ritualized, similar to the way this refrain is used in Jewish prayer. It reinforces the theme that trusting in divine providence should be accompanied by regular thanksgiving. | Cf. Mishlei (Proverbs) 7:5-27 — The author uses this biblical imagery metaphorically—the 'strange woman' represents dependence on human generosity rather than divine providence. Just as Proverbs warns against literal sexual impropriety, this text warns against the spiritual impropriety of placing one's trust in stingy human providers rather than in God. | Cf. Kabbalistic cosmology — The author uses Kabbalistic concepts to explain how one's spiritual focus affects material provision. By mentioning that even good deeds won't reach beyond 'the place of his soul's reception' if one is focused on Metatron (associated with worldly affairs) rather than higher divine attributes, the text establishes a cosmological framework for understanding the spiritual consequences of improper dependency.

[i] This refers to the Talmudic teaching that a sage's curse, even if conditional or unintentional, can have profound effects (see Makkot 11a, Sanhedrin 90b).

ויקרא בנו של אחר[i] אולי ירחמו
עליו מן השמים שיכול להיות
שנגזר מיתת ערירי על האב
ומי יודע אם בכופר זה ינצל
בנו. מנהגנו שלא לחלוץ האבל
מנעליו עד שיגיע לביתו גם שכפי
הדין כשנסתם הגולל חל עליו
האבלות. וכתב בספר החסידים
כי אדם אחד היה נוהג בעצמו
כשהיה אדם אבל היה הוא חוזר
לביתו עמו בלא מנעלים כדי
להצטער עם האבל. ויום שמת
בו אירע בתשעה באב[ii] ונתקבצו
כל הקהלות לאותה העיר והלכו
הכל לקבורתו יחפים ובזה הוכר
שהיה חסד זה רצוי לפניו ית׳.
ואמרו שאע״פ שהצדיקים יודעין
שחלקן טוב לעה״ב מצטערים מן
המיתה ומאימת מ״ה כדאמר רב
סעוריה לאחוהי רבא כד היה
מתנמנם פירש גוסס לימא מר
למ״ה דלא לצערן[iii] ואמרו שם
מאן ספין ומאן חשוב קמיה כי לא
ישא פני כל ואפי׳ כלבים בוכים
מאימתו וזהו שנאמר במצרים
הגם שהיתה מלאה מחבלים
ולכל בני ישראל לא יחרץ כלב
לשונו והכלב חוזר לאחריו
כשרואה מ״ה כי אין השדים
רשאים לעבור אלא בדרך הנגזר
להם כנזכר למעלה. ואם ידוחה
הכלב לפניו וימות באשר יבא
לקמן יהיה כפרה לאדם ההוא
וסמך קצת גם אוחבה הרגתי son of the other person; perhaps Heaven will have mercy on him, as it may be that childless death was decreed upon the father,[1] and who knows if through this ransom his son will be saved. 20R

Our custom is not to remove mourners' shoes until they reach home, even though according to the law, mourning begins when the grave is sealed. It is written in Sefer Hasidim that a certain man, when someone was in mourning, would accompany him 25R home barefoot to share in the mourner's distress. On the day he died, which happened to be the Ninth of Av, all the communities gathered in that city and everyone went to his burial barefoot, and by this it was recognized that this act of kindness was pleasing 30R before the Blessed One.

They say that even though the righteous know that their portion in the World to Come is good, they still fear death and dread the Angel of Death. As Rav Se'oriah said to his brother Rava when he was 35R dozing off (meaning in a coma),[2] "Let the master tell the Angel of Death not to torment us." And they said there, "Who is important enough before him? For he shows no favoritism." Even dogs cry out of fear of him, as it says regarding Egypt—though it was full 40R of destructive forces—"but against all the children of Israel, no dog shall sharpen its tongue." A dog turns back when it sees the Angel of Death, for demons are not permitted to cross except by the path decreed for them, as mentioned above. And if a dog is pushed 45R before him and dies, as will be explained later, it will be an atonement for that person. There is some support for this in the verse, "I killed Ochah and revived her."

The righteous also fear the Beating of the 50R

[1] The Hebrew term 'ערירי' (ariri) specifically refers to the biblical concept of dying without children to carry on one's lineage, considered a severe divine punishment in ancient Near Eastern cultures.
[2] I've added an explanatory note that 'מתנמנם' (dozing off) in this context refers to a dying person in a coma-like state, not ordinary sleep, based on the context of speaking to the Angel of Death.

[i] This practice of symbolic adoption and redemption was a folk remedy for families who had lost multiple children, designed to confuse or appease the destructive forces believed to be targeting the family.
[ii] The Ninth of Av is the major Jewish fast day commemorating the destruction of both Temples and other tragedies. That this pious man died on this day and that people naturally came barefoot (as is customary on this fast) is interpreted as divine approval of his practice.
[iii] מ״ה is an abbreviation for מלאך המות (Angel of Death). This story shows that even great sages feared the pain of death and sought to negotiate with the Angel of Death through intermediaries.

ואותה החייתי.[i] והצדיקים מתייראים גם מחיבוט הקבר ואפי׳ יונקי שדים אין נצולין ממנו[ii] כי זוהמת הנחש לנערה ולהוציא כלי למעשהו צריך חביטה. (ולכן כתיב ונפש אויבך יקלענה בתוך כף הקלע ולזה תועיל גרירת העצמות כאשר כתבנו. ומי שפוגם אות ברית קדש ח״ו נדון בחבוט הקבר כמ״ש בתקונים מאן דלא נטיר ברית מילה איתדן בחיבוט הקבר בההוא עפר ואלה הם הגופא דלהון אינון לון קבר ודוחקין להון בכל יומא ומלאכא דלהון. ובעפר של המילה מצילו מחבוט הקבר ובדם מילה מציל אותו משחיטת מ״ה אשרי המרגיל עצמו במילת הבנים לש״ש ואמר כי ערלת ממזר בעפר היא תקון לנחש[iii]). וכן כח הדין כדאמרי׳ בערבה חביט חביט ולא בריך וכתוב בחקור דין שבגרעיני הערבה ימצא בתוכם כדמות נחש בלא ראש[iv] ובזה אותו הגוף מתוקן לחיות בטל אורות של התחיה בגבול חדש

Grave,[A] and even nursing infants are not spared from it, for the serpent's defilement must be shaken off, and to prepare a vessel for its purpose requires beating. (Therefore it is written, "The soul of your enemy will be slung in the hollow of a sling," and for this, dragging the bones is beneficial, as we have written. And one who damages the sign of the holy covenant, God forbid, is judged with the Beating of the Grave, as written in Tikkunim: "He who does not guard the covenant of circumcision is judged with the Beating of the Grave in that dust, and these are the ones whose bodies become their graves and oppress them every day, along with their angel. The dust of circumcision saves one from the Beating of the Grave,[1] and the blood of circumcision saves one from slaughter by the Angel of Death. Fortunate is one who accustoms himself to circumcising boys for the sake of Heaven. And it was said that the foreskin of a bastard buried in dust is a remedy for the serpent.") 55R 60R 65R 70R

So too is the power of judgment, as they say regarding the willow: "Beat, beat, but do not bless."[2] And it is written in Chakur Din that within willow seeds one finds something resembling a headless snake, and through this, the body is prepared to live in the dew-light of resurrection in a new realm, like pure wool.[3] Among angels too 75R

[A] Or: "Chibut HaKever (the Torment of the Grave)" — Using the original Hebrew term with an English explanation might be preferable for this mystical concept that doesn't have a standard English equivalent and is a specific technical term in Jewish eschatology.

[1] The text refers to the Jewish practice of burying the foreskin after circumcision, suggesting it has protective spiritual power. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that ritual objects retain spiritual energy after their use.

[2] This refers to the ritual of beating willow branches (aravah) during the Hoshana Rabbah prayers, where traditionally the branches are beaten without a blessing, unlike other ritual objects used during Sukkot.

[3] The image of 'עמר נקי' (pure wool) alludes to Daniel 7:9 describing the Ancient of Days whose 'raiment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like pure wool,' symbolizing divine purity.

[i] The reference is unclear but appears to be from a rabbinic source describing how God kills and brings life, possibly a homiletical interpretation of Deuteronomy 32:39, "I kill and I make alive."

[ii] This statement, that even nursing infants must undergo the "Beating of the Grave," addresses the theological problem of why innocent children suffer. The mystical answer provided is that all souls, even those of infants, carry the primordial impurity from the serpent in Eden that must be purified.

[iii] The text presents a curious folk remedy suggesting that burying the foreskin of a mamzer (child born of a forbidden relationship) in dust can somehow remedy or neutralize the power of the primordial serpent. This likely reflects folk practices that existed alongside more formal kabbalistic teachings.

[iv] This observation about willow seeds resembling headless snakes represents the kabbalistic principle of finding spiritual correspondences in the natural world, suggesting that the physical properties of objects reflect their spiritual functions.

כעמר נקי. וג״כ במלאכים יש ביניהם צער והם שמחים
80 כשהנפש שוה להם. ומלאכי חבלה דומים לרשעים כדאמרי׳ הרשעים הן הן המזיקים מלבד כי באשתם יצתו כי הם מביאים עצים לגיהנם ירצה שחטאיהם
85 הם סבה להרבות מלאכי חבלה וקודחי אש לגיהנם וע״י חמום עבירותיהם העמיק הרחיב מדורתם אש ועצים הרבה. ואין מפוח הנופח יותר בגי הנום כמי
90 שכועס שכל מיני גיהנם שולטים בו ומטמא גופו ונפשו כי בזה שמחים בצאתם ששים בבואם במדורות גיהנם כל מלאכי חבלה. ועל הכועס נאמר טורף
95 נפשו באפו[i] כי האדם עושה נפשו טריפה ומשליכה ממנו בכעסו וגם שעושה תקונים ומצות רבות נאבדים ממנו לגמרי כי הולכת אותה הנפש ובאה אחרת במקומה
100 וצריך לחזור ולתקן כמתחלה. והמקובל האר״י זצוק״ל היה נזהר ומזהיר לתלמידיו על זה מאד ואפי׳ יהיה הכעס על דבר מצוה היה מונע לתלמידיו
105 ממנו. ואמרו כי שם אהי״ה במלואו עולה קנ״א כמנין כעס והכוללל[ii] ושם זה יכוין בשעת הטבילה לטהר פגם הכעס שכן עולה במנין מקו״ה. ומצאתי
110 כי טוב לבעל תשובה לטבול י״ד טבילות למתוק י״ד עתים

there is distress, and they rejoice when a soul equals them.

Angels of destruction resemble the wicked, as they say, "The wicked are themselves the destructive forces," besides the fact that "with their fire they ignite"—meaning their sins cause an increase in angels of destruction and those who kindle fire in Gehenna, and through the heat of their transgressions, they deepen and widen their pyre with much fire and wood. 80R 85R

There is no bellows that blows more in Gehenna than one who becomes angry,[A] for all types of Gehenna rule over him and defile his body and soul. All angels of destruction rejoice at his departure and are glad at his entry into the chambers of Gehenna. About the angry person it is said, "He tears his soul in his anger,"[1] for a person makes his soul damaged and casts it away in his anger. Even if he performs many rectifications and commandments, they are completely lost to him because that soul departs and another comes in its place, and he must start the rectification process anew. The kabbalist, the ARI of blessed memory, was very careful about this and strongly warned his disciples, and even if the anger was about a matter of a commandment, he would prevent his disciples from it. 90R 95R 100R

They said that the divine name Ehyeh in its full spelling equals 151, the same numerical value as "anger" plus one, and one should focus on this name during immersion to purify the blemish of anger, as it equals the numerical value of "mikveh." I found that it is good for a penitent to immerse fourteen times to sweeten the fourteen times[2] [of judgment], and he should further intend in the first immersion to 105R 110R

[A] Or: "No bellows fans the flames of Gehenna more than a person's anger" — This alternative captures the metaphorical meaning more vividly while maintaining the comparison between anger and a bellows inflaming Gehenna.

[1] The original phrase 'טורף נפשו באפו' is from Job 18:4, though with a kabbalistic interpretation that anger literally damages and displaces one's soul.

[2] The original 'למתוק י״ד עתים' refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening' harsh judgments, transforming them from severity to mercy. The fourteen times likely refers to the fourteen aspects of divine judgment in kabbalistic thought.

[i] A play on Job 18:4, which is interpreted here to mean that anger literally tears one's soul and renders it 'treif' (non-kosher/damaged), requiring its replacement with a new soul.

[ii] The divine name Ehyeh (אהיה) in its 'full' spelling (אלף הי יוד הי) has the numerical value 151, which equals the numerical value of the Hebrew word for anger (כעס = 150) plus 1 (the kollel, or inclusive number). This gematria (numerical equivalence) creates a mystical connection between the divine name and the purification from anger.

ועוד יכוין בטבילה ראשונה להסיר הזוהמא וביי״ג להמשיך עליו האורת תלת עשר מכילן
115 דרחמי על כן טוב לומר פסוקי מי אל כמוך נושא עון ועובר על פשע. ישוב ירחמנו יכבוש עונותינו. תתן אמת ליעקב חסד לאברהם. ויוסיף מדה אי בכל
120 טבילה. עוד בשהאדם בועס אסור להסתכל בו כי עם ראיית עינים מלאך רע עומד וממהר לנקום על צערו ועוד קשה לשכחה. ועיין פי תצוה דף קמ״ב
125 גודל פגם הבועס וכן להסתכל בפני האשה בשעה שדמיה מצויים בה ואמרו שיתראה במבט עיניה אז כדמות נחש וכבר אמרנו בגמרא מסכנת העובר באמצע
130 בי נשים טמאות[i] ואמרו דיפתח באל ויסיים באל. אל מוציאם ממצרים וגו׳ כי לא נחש ביעקב וגו׳ או יפתח בלא ויסיים בלא וה׳ רגלי חסידיו ישמור:[ii]

remove impurity, and in the thirteenth to draw upon himself the illumination of the Thirteen Attributes of Mercy.[A] Therefore, it is good to recite verses like "Who is a God like You, who pardons iniquity and passes over transgression," "He will again have compassion upon us, He will subdue our iniquities," "Give truth to Jacob, kindness to Abraham," and add one attribute in each immersion. 115R

Furthermore, when someone is angry, it is forbidden to look at them, for with the sight of the eyes, an evil angel stands ready to take revenge for his distress, and it also causes forgetfulness. See Parashat Tetzaveh, page 142, on the great blemish of one who becomes angry, and likewise looking at a woman when her blood flows, for they say that in her gaze at such times there appears the likeness of a serpent. We have already mentioned in the Talmud the danger to one who passes between two ritually impure women, and they say one should begin with "El" and end with "El" [divine name]:[1] "El [God] who brings them out of Egypt, etc." "For there is no enchantment in Jacob, etc." Or begin with "Lo" and end with "Lo" [negation]: "And the LORD will guard the feet of His faithful ones."" 120R 125R 130R 135R

[A] Or: "to channel upon himself the divine light of the Thirteen Attributes of Compassion" — This alternative uses terminology that may be more familiar to readers of mystical texts in English, with 'channel' capturing the kabbalistic concept of drawing down divine energy and 'compassion' being another common translation for 'rachamim'.

[1] The text is recommending specific biblical verses that begin and end with the divine name 'El' as protective formulas against the danger mentioned. This reflects the Jewish mystical practice of using divine names for protection.

[i] The text refers to a Talmudic warning (Pesachim 111a) about the danger to one who passes between two menstruating women, reflecting beliefs about ritual impurity having potentially harmful physical effects.

[ii] Cf. Sefer Hasidim — The text cites Sefer Hasidim as a source for the pious practice of walking barefoot with mourners, showing how this mystical work draws on earlier Jewish ethical traditions to support its arguments about proper behavior toward the dead and mourners. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The reference to 'Tikkunim' regarding punishment for one who damages the covenant of circumcision shows how Ma'avar Yabok integrates Zoharic kabbalistic teachings into its framework of understanding posthumous judgment and purification. | Cf. Teachings of the ARI (Rabbi Isaac Luria) — The citation of the ARI's teachings about anger shows how Ma'avar Yabok incorporates Lurianic Kabbalah, particularly regarding the damage anger causes to the soul and the importance of avoiding it even in seemingly justified circumstances. | Cf. Talmudic references to the Angel of Death — The anecdote about Rav Se'oriah speaking to his brother Rava about the Angel of Death draws on Talmudic material to support the text's claims about how even the righteous fear death and the universality of the Angel of Death's power. | Cf. Exodus 11:7 — The reference to dogs not sharpening their tongues against the Israelites in Egypt is from Exodus 11:7, used here to develop the mystical understanding that animals, particularly dogs, can sense the Angel of Death and naturally fear it.

פרק י״ד

Chapter 14

בחרתי להציע לפני תלמידי תלמידיהון דרבנן כוונת בקור חולים מלבד מ״ש בחלק א׳ בזה. וטעם המיתה. וצדוק הדין. וההספד. והלוית המת. וקבורתו. וההבראה. ושאר כמה דברים הנוהגים בישראל בתנחומי אבלים מדברי חכמים אשר הם כמסמרות נטועים כי מלאכת שמים היא ולא יהיה מדרש זה בלא חדוש על דברי חכמים מלמדי לאדם דעת.

I have chosen to present before students of the disciples of our rabbis the deeper meaning of visiting the sick, beyond what I have already written in Part One. And the reason for death. And the justification of divine judgment. And the eulogy. And the funeral procession. And burial. And the meal of consolation. And several other practices observed in Israel in comforting mourners, from the words of our Sages, which are like planted nails, for this is the work of Heaven. This exposition will not be without innovation regarding the words of the Sages who teach humanity knowledge.

רמז ביקור חולים הוא כי האדם המבקר החולה מיקל חליו כנראה מתלמידו של ר״ע ואם הוא בן גילו כפרש״י שנולד במזלו צערו אשר יצטער עליו[i] יהיה לחולה הצלה פורתא בנכוי אחד מששים בחליו שלפחות ישפוך שיחו בכאבו בתפלתו עליו אחר שביקר אותו. ונקט לשון בקור ולא לשון ראיה והליכה והקבלה להורות לאדם דעת שילמד לחולה שיפשפש ויבקר מעשיו[ii] כי בסור הסבה יסור המסובב. ובזה יפה כחו להפוך אחד מששים כלליות שהם מגבורה ולמטה עד מלכות[iii] שיהא מלאך מליץ עליו ואפי׳ א׳ מאלף באותו מלאך לפעמים די וכ״ש אחד מששים וגם אם נאמר ששים הוא מורגל בפי רבנן שתין רהוטי וכו׳ שתין תכלי וכו׳ וכדומה הרבה. ברם

The hint about visiting the sick is that the person who visits the ill lightens their suffering, as we see from the student of Rabbi Akiva. And if the visitor is a "son of his age" (born under the same astrological sign), as Rashi explains, the distress that he feels on behalf of the sick person provides some small salvation, reducing one-sixtieth of the illness—at the very least because he pours out his heart in painful prayer after visiting.

The text uses the term "bikur" (examination) rather than terms for seeing, going, or receiving, to teach that one should instruct the sick person to examine and inspect their deeds,[1] for when the cause is removed, the effect will be removed. Through this, the visitor has the power to transform one-sixtieth of the totality [of judgment], which extends from Gevurah down to Malkhut,[2] so that an angel will advocate for the sick person. Sometimes even one part in a thousand of that angel's intervention is sufficient, and certainly one part in sixty. Even if we say that "sixty" is simply a common expression among the rabbis—"sixty runners," "sixty vessels,"

[1] The original text makes a wordplay on the Hebrew term 'bikur' (visiting), connecting it to 'examination.' I've attempted to preserve this conceptual connection though the wordplay is lost in English.

[2] This passage employs kabbalistic terminology to describe how visiting the sick affects the divine attributes. Gevurah represents divine judgment, while Malkhut represents the divine presence in the physical world. The visitation is seen as transforming the judgment into mercy.

[i] The concept of 'ben gilo' (one born under the same astrological sign) refers to the belief that people born under the same constellation share a spiritual connection. The text suggests this connection makes visitation more effective in healing.

[ii] The term 'bikur' (visiting) is connected to the same Hebrew root as 'examination.' The author is making a linguistic connection to suggest that proper visitation of the sick should include encouraging self-examination of deeds.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that visiting the sick transforms a portion of the divine judgment (extending from Gevurah to Malkhut in the sefirotic system) into mercy.

מדברי הגמרא נראה דהכא ששים דוקא דאמר וליעיילו ששים וכו׳. וכבר דברנו מזה למעלה בחלק ראשון פרק ב׳. ומדת החסד אינה נכנסת במנין הזה[i] כי על ידה מושפעת הרפואה מארי״ך ולעולם הוא לו למגן. ואחר הביקור חוזר להיות רופא חולים דהיינו מרכבה לת״ת מצד הכתר ששם ארוכה[ii] ורמז ביקור חולים לתקון גבוה [iii] and many similar phrases—nevertheless, from the Talmud it appears that here "sixty" is precise, as it states "and let sixty enter..." We have already discussed this above in Part One, Chapter 2.

The attribute of Chesed (Loving-kindness) is not included in this calculation because through it healing flows from Arich Anpin, and it always serves as a shield.[1] After the visitation, one becomes a "healer of the sick," meaning a vehicle for Tiferet from the perspective of Keter,[2] where healing resides. Thus, visiting the sick alludes to supernal rectification.

כי לזה תהיה כוונת עובד האמתי כאשר למדונו רבותינו בכל חותמי הברכות שאמרו שצריך להיות הפתיחה מעין החתימה וכן סמוך לחתימה יהיה מעין הברכה. כלל גדול למדונו בזה כי אחר שסדרנו סדר הברכה אם היא ברכת שבח והודאה או ברכות המצות או שאלת צרכים או ברכות הנהנין הכל יהיה לתכלית שיבורך שמו הגדול בהשפעת שפע הברכה כאשה כי יתרבה החלב ע״י

For this should be the intention of the true worshiper, as our Rabbis taught us regarding all conclusions of blessings, saying that the opening must reflect the conclusion, and similarly, near the conclusion should reflect the essence of the blessing. They taught us a great principle in this:[3] after we have arranged the order of the blessing—whether it is a blessing of praise and thanksgiving, blessings over commandments, requests for needs, or blessings over enjoyments—everything should be for the purpose that His great name be blessed through the flow of blessing, like a woman whose milk increases through the infant nursing from the mother's breasts. This,

[1] Arich Anpin ('Long Face') is a complex kabbalistic concept referring to a high divine configuration associated with mercy. The author suggests that the attribute of Chesed connects directly to this higher source of healing.

[2] This describes the mystical transformation of the visitor. By visiting properly, they become a conduit (merkavah/vehicle) for divine healing energy flowing from Keter (the highest divine attribute) through Tiferet (the central balancing attribute).

[3] The author is establishing a kabbalistic principle that proper prayer and blessing creates a reciprocal relationship between human action and divine response, much like the relationship between nursing and milk production.

[i] The author explains that Chesed (Loving-kindness) is not included in the calculation of sixty because it operates on a different principle—it functions as a shield rather than needing to be transformed from judgment.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic mechanism of healing: the visitor becomes a vehicle (merkavah) for Tiferet (central divine attribute) which connects to Keter (the highest attribute) where the source of healing resides.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part One, Chapter 2 — The author refers to a previous discussion of the same topic in Part One of Ma'avar Yabok, indicating that this is an expansion of his earlier treatment of visiting the sick. This shows the book's organizational structure and the author's systematic approach to these topics. | Cf. Talmudic discussion of visiting the sick — The author mentions the Talmudic discussion about 'let sixty enter' which appears to be a reference to a specific Talmudic passage about visiting the sick. The number sixty is being emphasized as having particular significance beyond just being a conventional number. | Cf. Rashi's commentary on 'ben gilo' (son of his age/astrological sign) — The author cites Rashi's interpretation of 'ben gilo' as referring to someone born under the same astrological sign, which creates a special connection that makes visiting the sick more effective when done by such a person.

התינוק היונק משדי האם[i] וזוהי
לדעתי כוונה נאותה בכל חתימת ופתיחת ברכות מלבד כוונת
שם י״ב[ii] שצריך לכוין בחתימה
והוא מוקבל מאד למה שכתבנו
למעלה כוונת העונה ברוך הוא
וברוך שמו פוק עיין על זה הדרך
יכוין בבקרו החולה שבג״ח הזה
פוקד ומבקר חולים שהם תפארת
ומלכות שהם חולים באומרו
כי חולת אהבה אני[iii] והוא
מחזקם ומפקדם בבקרו אותם
דהיינו אומרו סמכוני באשישות
רפדוני בתפוחים. והם בגדולה
וגבורה תרין אשישות ובנ״ה תרין
תפוחים כמו שפי׳ בתקונים.
וכן האדם בהיותו עוסק במצוה
זו גורם להשפיע משם החוזק
והכח כמו שהוא מחזיק החולה
בבקור ומיקל מעליו כח הרעה
חולה בנזכר. ורפואת חולים
הוא כי בהיות האדם כבד
בחליו מודה באותו חולי היות
כח החצוני שולט עליו הנאמר
באיוב הנו בידך וכל חולי
שבעולם הוא רוח הטומאה
המתלבש בדין על האדם.[iv] ובזה
יורד הפגם מלמעלה ומתקדש
משכן הקדש מהחשך אשר החשיך
שם במקום אחיזת נשמתו וזהו
כוונת ואתה צדיק על כל הבא
עלינו: ולהיות החולי כח רע
הניתן עליו להחליאו זהו שאמרה נאמנים לשולחיהם שאותו הדין

in my opinion, is an appropriate intention for all conclusions and openings of blessings, besides the intention of the twelve-letter Name that one must focus on during the conclusion, which corresponds well to what we wrote above regarding the intention of one who responds "Blessed is He and blessed is His name"—go and examine this.[1]

In this way, one should focus when visiting the sick that through this act of kindness he is attending to and visiting the "patients" who are Tiferet and Malkhut, which are "sick," as it says, "For I am sick with love." He strengthens and attends to them by visiting them, as it states, "Sustain me with raisin cakes, refresh me with apples." These are found in Gedulah and Gevurah (the two "raisin cakes") and in Netzach and Hod (the two "apples"), as explained in the Tikkunim. Similarly, when a person engages in this commandment, he causes strength and power to flow from there, just as he strengthens the sick person with his visit and alleviates the force of evil illness, as mentioned.

The healing of the sick occurs because when a person is weighed down by illness, he acknowledges in that illness that an external force rules over him, as stated regarding Job, "Behold, he is in your hand."
Every illness in the world is a spirit of impurity clothed in judgment upon the person.[2] Through this, the spiritual blemish descends from above, and the holy dwelling place is sanctified from the darkness that darkened the place where his soul is attached. This is the meaning of "You are righteous concerning all that comes upon us."

The illness being an evil force given to make one sick is why it is said that they are "faithful to those

[1] The phrase 'פוק עיין' is a Talmudic expression literally meaning 'go out and see/examine,' used to direct the reader to investigate a matter further.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic worldview that physical ailments are manifestations of spiritual realities, specifically the result of divine judgment (din) taking physical form through the channels of spiritual impurity.

[i] The author uses a nursing mother as a metaphor for how blessings function—just as an infant's nursing increases the mother's milk production, our prayers and blessings increase divine flow in the spiritual realms.

[ii] This refers to the twelve-letter Divine Name, a mystical concept in Kabbalah used in prayer and meditation.

[iii] The author interprets illness in kabbalistic terms, suggesting that the divine attributes of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) and Malkhut (Kingdom) are in a state of metaphysical 'illness' or separation that requires healing through human actions.

[iv] The text presents a mystical understanding of disease as the manifestation of spiritual impurity clothed in divine judgment, rather than merely natural physical processes.

נתקע בו עד יקבל מאריה חובא
דידיה והיינו ממש שאותה נשמה
במקומה העליון נשפט עליה דין
ומחיין לה בפולסי דנורא וזה
גורם הקדחת לגוף ואם מכח
הדין המגליד הקשה אז גורם
השחפת בגוף. ומיחושים יורו
פגם מה בחלק נשמתו אשר יכאב
האבר ההוא ולכן אמרו כל
מיחוש ולא מיחוש ראש כי בראש
עקר משכן הנשמה ומורה גודל
עונו וכן באיבת הלב מסוכן. כי
מורה שהפגם הוא בתוכיותה של
הנפש ששם משכנה ולכן אמרו
כל כאב ולא כאב לב. אך עקר
המלקות העליון הוא באש ולכן
האי אישתא צמירתא פרונקא
דמלאכא דמותא היא[i] ורוב
המתים הקדחת מכלה אותם: לכן
אמרו בפרשת בשלח דף קס״ד
דכל אורחוי דש״מ בתסקופא
אינון דא בעינא ודא לא בעינא
מכח החצוני השולט בו ובנשמתו
ובהיות האדם בא לבקר אותו
ומיצר עליו ומבקש עליו רחמים
מושך על אותה נשמה שפע מצד
הכתר והיינו רופא חולים כי
מרפא הנשמה ומיחד ת״ת עם
בינה ששם מציאות נפש רוח
ונשמה מלובשים בדין ובחולי.
ובבקרו ובשומו עליו עינו לטוב
גורם גילוי הספירות העליונות
על החולה שהיא השכינה למעלה
מראשותיו ובבקש עליו רחמים
בתוך חולי עמו ישראל מייחד
ומיקל חליו. ובקור חולים הוא
מצד מדת החסד. ואם מתעסק
ברפואתו עולה עד אריך אנפין
שמשם מושך ארוכה ומרפא ולכן

who send them"—that judgment is embedded in him until he receives from his Master the debt that is his. This literally means that the soul in its supernal place is judged, and it is struck with lashes of fire,[1] which causes fever in the body. If it comes from the hardened, severe judgment, then it causes consumption in the body. Physical ailments indicate some blemish in the part of his soul corresponding to the painful limb. Therefore, they said, "Any pain but not head pain," because the head is the primary dwelling place of the soul and indicates the magnitude of one's sin. Similarly, heart pain is dangerous because it shows that the blemish is in the innermost part of the soul, where it dwells. Therefore, they said, "Any pain but not heart pain." However, the primary heavenly punishment is through fire, which is why this intense fever is the messenger of the Angel of Death, and most deaths are caused by fever consuming them.

Therefore, they said in Parshat Beshalach, page 164, that all the ways of the Angel of Death are with affliction—"I want this, I don't want that"—due to the external force ruling over him and his soul. When a person comes to visit him, feels distress for him, and seeks mercy for him, he draws divine flow from the aspect of Keter to that soul. This is the meaning of "healer of the sick," for he heals the soul and unifies Tiferet with Binah, where the existence of Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah are clothed in judgment and illness. By visiting and setting his eye upon him for good, he causes the revelation of the supernal Sefirot upon the sick person,[2] which is the Divine Presence above his head. By seeking mercy for him among the sick of Israel, he creates unity and alleviates his illness. Visiting the sick comes from the attribute of Chesed (Loving-kindness). If one actively engages in healing him, it ascends all the way to Arich Anpin, from where he draws healing and remedy. Therefore, the charity of supporting the sick

95R 100R 105R 110R 115R 120R 125R 130R

[1] The phrase 'פולסי דנורא' (lashes of fire) appears in rabbinic literature as a form of heavenly punishment that has consequences in the physical world, connecting spiritual judgment to physical suffering.

[2] The text presents visiting the sick as creating a connection between the human and divine realms, specifically causing the divine presence (Shekhinah) to dwell above the sick person's head, bringing healing energy.

[i] The concept that fever is the 'messenger of the Angel of Death' reflects the traditional Jewish understanding that fevers were particularly dangerous forms of illness, seen as direct manifestations of divine judgment.

צדקת פרנסת החולים קודמת לכל שאר צדקה [i] takes precedence over all other forms of charity.

כי ממשיך מכתר נשמה לכל
135 הספירות. ישתדל החולה לקיים
המצות שבכחו ואונו[ii] כי אז
נשקלים כל עונותיו. כתב
הרב רבי יצחק דמן עכו
מעשה היה ברב רבינו יוסף
140 גיקטי"ליא[iii] שחלה עד קרוב
למיתה ונים ולא נים תיר
ולא תיר[iv] ראה ב' אנשים
שוקלין עונותיו וזכיותיו
במאזנים[v] שוקלים שוה בשוה
145 מיד נתעורר ונתחזק ושאל
התפלין ושם אותם ומיד התחיל

For it draws down a soul from Keter to all the sefirot.[1] The sick person should strive to fulfill the commandments within his strength and vigor,[A] for then all his sins are weighed. Rabbi Isaac of Acre wrote that there was an incident with Rabbi Joseph Gikatilla, who became ill to the point of near death. While in a state of semi-consciousness, neither fully asleep nor fully awake,[B] he saw two men weighing his sins and merits on scales that were balanced equally. Immediately, he awoke and strengthened himself,[2] asked for his tefillin, put them on, and at once began to recover, rising from death to life,[3] because he tipped the scales in favor of his

135R

140R

145R

[A] Or: "according to his ability and energy" — This alternative is more colloquial and may be more immediately comprehensible to modern readers, though it loses some of the biblical resonance of the original terms.

[B] Or: "in a twilight state between sleep and wakefulness" — This more poetic rendering captures the liminal nature of the state while being more concise, though it's less literal.

[1] This kabbalistic concept describes the flow of divine energy from Keter (the highest sefirah) through the system of divine emanations. The text suggests that proper care for the sick facilitates this cosmic process.

[2] The narrative demonstrates the kabbalistic principle that physical actions (putting on tefillin) have direct metaphysical effects (tipping the scales of judgment).

[3] This phrase uses resurrection imagery to describe recovery from illness, reflecting the Jewish theological understanding of healing as a form of resurrection on a small scale.

[i] Cf. Song of Songs 2:5 — The verse 'Sustain me with raisin cakes, refresh me with apples' is interpreted kabbalistically as referring to the divine emanations (sefirot) and how they provide spiritual sustenance. The author maps these foods to specific divine attributes: raisin cakes to Gedulah and Gevurah, and apples to Netzach and Hod. | Cf. Song of Songs 2:5 — The phrase 'For I am sick with love' is interpreted as referring to the divine attributes of Tiferet and Malkhut being in a state of 'illness' or separation that requires 'healing' through human acts of kindness like visiting the sick. | Cf. Job 2:6 — The reference to Job ('Behold, he is in your hand') connects physical illness to spiritual causes, specifically the permission given to external forces to afflict a person, while maintaining that this ultimately serves divine purposes. | Cf. Zohar, Beshalach 164 — The Zohar passage describes how the Angel of Death operates with affliction and capriciousness ('I want this, I don't want that'), explaining the seemingly random nature of illness as actually being the work of external spiritual forces. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The reference to 'Tikkunim' refers to Tikkunei Zohar, a major kabbalistic text that explores the correspondences between biblical verses, divine names, and the sefirot (divine emanations). The text is cited as the source for the interpretation of the raisin cakes and apples as specific divine attributes.

[ii] The text emphasizes that the sick person should fulfill commandments to the extent of their ability, showing Ma'avar Yabok's emphasis on continued religious practice even during illness.

[iii] Rabbi Joseph Gikatilla (c. 1248-c. 1325) was a prominent Spanish kabbalist, known for works such as Sha'arei Orah (Gates of Light), a systematic presentation of kabbalistic symbolism.

[iv] This Aramaic expression describes a state between sleep and wakefulness, semi-consciousness. The redundant phrasing ('asleep yet not asleep, awake yet not awake') emphasizes the liminal nature of this state, considered particularly receptive to spiritual communications.

[v] The image of weighing sins and merits on scales appears throughout rabbinic literature and reflects the belief that divine judgment involves a precise accounting of one's actions.

להרפא ועלה ממות לחיים
כי הכריע כף הזכיות. וישית
החולה לב לחלומותיו ובפרט
אם הוא ת״ח שכמה פעמים
מראים לו להודיעו את אשר נגזר
עליו ובמה יזכה ארחו.[i] ע״ד
שאמרו במדרש שיר השירים
כל חלאים שאתה מביא עלי
בשביל להאהבני לך על פסוק
כי חולת אהבה אני.[ii] וזה דבר
מאומת וידוע אצל קצת אנשי
המעלה.[iii] אמרי׳ במדרש קהלת
בשם ר׳ יהושע בן לוי שכל
החולים בחזקת סכנה הם. וכן
אמרו בגמרין עלה למטה וכו׳.
עוד שם דף ע״ד ע״ב המסורה
הזאת תהיה בידך כל העושה
מצוה סמוך למיתתו[iv] דומה שלא
היתה צדקתו חסירה כי אם אותה
מצוה והשלימה וכל העובר
עבירה סמוך למיתתו דומה
שלא היתה מדת רשעתו חסירה
אלא אותה עבירה והשלימה
אלו ואלו הולכין ושלמין אלו
שלמין במדת צדקן ואלו שלמין
במדת רשען רחמנא ליצלן.

merits.[A] The sick person should pay attention to his dreams,[1] especially if he is a Torah scholar, for many times things are shown to him to inform him of what has been decreed upon him and how he might merit his path. This follows what they said in the Midrash on Song of Songs regarding the verse "For I am lovesick"—"All illnesses that You bring upon me are to make me beloved to You."[B2] This is a verified and known matter among some people of stature.[3] It is said in the Midrash on Ecclesiastes in the name of Rabbi Joshua ben Levi that all sick people are presumed to be in danger. And so they said in our Gemara, "If one takes to his bed, etc." Further, on page 74b, "Keep this tradition: Anyone who performs a mitzvah near his death,[4] it is as if his righteousness was lacking only that mitzvah, which he has now completed. And anyone who commits a transgression near his death, it is as if his wickedness was lacking only that transgression, which he has now completed. Both go forth complete—these complete in their measure of righteousness, and those complete in their measure of wickedness, God forbid." Therefore, a person greatly needs strengthening to purify his deeds and thoughts near his death. All of Israel are guarantors for one another,[C] to be a substantial support for [A] Or: "the scale of merits outweighed [the scale of sins]" — This alternative is more literal to the Hebrew construction, which focuses on the scale itself rather than the person's action, though both convey the same meaning.

150R 155R 160R 165R 170R

[B] Or: "to increase my love for You" — This alternative interpretation is found in some commentaries, suggesting that illness increases the sufferer's love for God rather than God's love for the person, though the former interpretation is more common in mystical texts.

[C] Or: "All Jews are responsible for one another" — This more contemporary phrasing may be clearer to modern readers, though 'guarantors' more precisely captures the legal concept behind the Hebrew term.

[1] The text presents dreams as a channel for divine communication, especially for Torah scholars, reflecting the kabbalistic understanding that dreams can reveal decrees from the heavenly court.

[2] This mystical interpretation of suffering frames illness not as punishment but as divine love, transforming the experience of the sick person from mere suffering to spiritual refinement.

[3] This phrase suggests that the mystical understanding of illness is part of an esoteric tradition known primarily to spiritual elites with experiential knowledge.

[4] The emphasis on actions near death reflects the book's focus on proper spiritual preparation for the transition between worlds, with final actions having special significance.

[i] This phrase uses biblical language to refer to how one might merit or purify one's path/way of life, echoing Psalm 119:9: 'How can a young man keep his way pure?'

[ii] This quote from Song of Songs 2:5 is interpreted mystically to suggest that physical illness can be an expression of divine love, transforming suffering into a sign of spiritual elevation.

[iii] The phrase 'people of stature' refers to individuals of spiritual distinction who have access to higher forms of knowledge, implying an esoteric tradition known to spiritual elites.

[iv] This teaching emphasizes the spiritual significance of one's final actions, suggesting that the end of life has special weight in determining one's ultimate spiritual status.

על כן מאד צריך חזוק לאדם
לטהר מעשיו ורעיונותיו סמוך
למיתתו. וכל ישראל ערבים
זה לזה[i] להיות לחבירו מסייע
שיש בו ממש ובזה יזכה כי
יחלו פניו רבים ונשמתו תהיה
נתונה באוצר. וכל שאינו מבקר
החולה אמרו במדרש תהלים
מזמור מ״א שגורם להוסיף
לו אחד מששים מחליו[ii] וזה
לדעתי יהיה דוקא בבן גילו.
וכשהחולה מצטער מחליו לימד
רבי חנינא שירגיל עצמו לומר
האל הנאמן[iii] בדאיתא במדרש
שיר השירים רבה דף י״ג ע״ב
דקוב״ה דאיהו רחום טב לא
לחסר טיבותיה מיניה לעלם: [iv]

one's fellow, and through this he will merit that many will entreat on his behalf and his soul will be placed in the treasury.[1] Regarding one who does not visit the sick, they said in the Midrash on Psalms, chapter 41, that he causes one-sixtieth of the illness to be added to the sick person, though in my opinion this applies specifically to someone born under the same astrological sign.[2] And when the sick person suffers from his illness, Rabbi Hanina taught that he should accustom himself to say "The Faithful God,"[3] as is stated in the Midrash Shir HaShirim Rabbah, page 13b: "For the Holy One, blessed be He, who is merciful and good, will never withhold His goodness from him forever."

פרק ט״ו

Chapter 15

ראיתי מי שנוהג בשהנפטר
סמוך למיתתו מסלקים
מלפניו וגם מחדרו קרוביו
הבוכים[v] ואומרים שמצערים
אותו בזה נראה לי סמך למנהג
הלועזים ממה שמצינו במדרש

I have seen that some people have the custom, when someone is near death, to remove from before him and from his room his weeping relatives, saying that they cause him distress. It seems to me that there is support for this custom of non-Jews from what we find in the Midrash HaNe'elam, page 98, that Rabbi

[1] This metaphor of divine treasury refers to the afterlife destination of righteous souls, suggesting that proper community support for the sick helps secure this favorable outcome.

[2] The term 'ben gilo' refers to astrological connection, suggesting that spiritual influences are particularly potent between people with similar celestial configurations.

[3] This practice of repeating divine epithets during illness reflects the kabbalistic belief that divine names connect the person to specific aspects of divine energy that can facilitate healing.

[i] This principle of mutual responsibility ('All Israel are guarantors for one another') appears in various rabbinic texts and forms the theological basis for communal obligations, particularly regarding the care of the sick and dying.

[ii] The fraction 'one-sixtieth' appears frequently in rabbinic literature to represent a minimal but significant amount. Here it suggests that avoiding visitation has real consequences for the sick person.

[iii] This divine epithet ('The Faithful God') comes from Deuteronomy 7:9 and is recommended as a spiritual practice for the sick, reflecting the belief that divine names have healing properties when invoked with proper intention.

[iv] Cf. Midrash Shir HaShirim Rabbah — This reference frames suffering as spiritually beneficial rather than merely punitive, a core theological concept in Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Midrash Kohelet — This establishes the halakhic principle that justifies breaking Shabbat and other commandments to care for the sick. | Cf. Talmudic teaching about final actions — This emphasizes the spiritual importance of final actions, which is why Ma'avar Yabok places such importance on proper preparation for death. | Cf. Midrash Tehillim on Psalm 41 — This frames visiting the sick not merely as a social kindness but as having actual impact on the sick person's condition, reinforcing the mystical efficacy of proper visitation.

[v] The author is discussing a custom to remove crying relatives from the presence of a dying person. He notes this seems like a non-Jewish custom (מנהג הלועזים) but then finds support for it in Jewish mystical literature.

הנעלם דף צ״ח כי ר׳ אליעזר הגדול אמר לבנו שהיה רואה כי במהרה יסתלק מן העולם ואמר לו זיל ואימא לאמך דתסתלק תפלגי באתר עילא ובתר דאסתלק מן עלמא ואתי הכא למחמי לון לא תבכי דאינון קריבין עלאין ולא תתאין ודעתא דבר נש לא ידע בהו. מנהגן של ישראל להדליק נרות בפני הגוסס וטעם לזה נודע כי מדברי חכמים שסגולת הנר הוא להבריח המזיקים ואפי׳ בלילה עת שליטתן כדאמרי׳ אבוקה כשנים ולכן בעור החמץ והמחמצת שהם ס״מ ולילית שמהם יצר הרע וכחותיו הוא בכח אור נר כי יחל עליהם כי נר אור רשעים ידעך ונגלל בנוקבא דתהומא רבא חשך מפני אור וכל שכן שתועיל ביום לשבר מלתעות עול ולהניס אותם החוצה כי שלהבת הנר רומזו ליחוד עליון שלכן אמר הכתוב נר ה׳ נשמת אדם. וממנו נראה הנפש בגוף על ידי רביעית דם שבלב שבו שורה נפש החיונית[i] וכן מתראה כנר קשור רוח בנפש ונשמה ברוח כי כמו שהנפש הוא התעוררות תחתון המתדבק בגוף כן אור תחתון מהנר שהוא כגוון תכלת שחור מתדבקת בפתילה ונעשה כסא לאור עליון הלבן השורה על אותו אור שחור כמו שהנפש נעשית כסא לשרות עליו רוח ממרום אור לבן ומלובן וכמו שבנר כשמתקנים ב׳ אורות אליו מתראה עליהם אור סתום שאין לו גוון כלל ונראה לעין כל מכל הגוונים ולא נדע מאי דשרי על ההוא אור לבן. על דרך זה הנשמה הסתומה העליונה מתראית ומוצאה מנוח על הרוח והנפש והיא נעשית כסא לגבי אור עליון שעליה נשמת הנשמות ועין מזה

Eliezer the Great said to his son, when he saw that he would soon depart from the world: “Go and tell your mother to remove herself to a higher place, and after I depart from the world and come here to see them, do not weep, for neither those above nor those below, nor human understanding, knows about them.” 10R

It is the custom of Israel to light candles before a dying person. The reason for this is known from the words of the Sages, that the special property of a candle is to drive away harmful spirits, even at night when they rule, as they said, “A torch is equivalent to two people.” Therefore, in burning chametz and leaven, which represent Samael and Lilith, from whom come the evil inclination and its powers, it is done with the power of candlelight that shines upon them, for “the lamp of the wicked will be extinguished” and darkness is rolled into the great abyss before light. How much more effective it is during the day to break the jaws of wickedness and drive them outside, for the flame of the candle alludes to the supernal unification. That is why Scripture says, “The soul of man is the lamp of the Lord.” 15R 20R 25R

Through this, the soul becomes visible in the body by means of the quarter-measure of blood in the heart, where the vital soul resides. Similarly, the spirit appears as a flame bound to the soul, and the higher soul to the spirit. Just as the soul is a lower arousal that attaches to the body, so too the lower light of the candle, which is like a blue-black color, attaches to the wick and becomes a throne for the upper white light that rests upon that black light. Similarly, the soul becomes a throne for the spirit from on high, a white and purified light. And just as in a candle, when two lights are prepared for it, a concealed light appears above them that has no color at all and appears to every eye as containing all colors, though we do not know what rests upon that white light. In this way, the concealed, supernal soul appears and finds rest upon the spirit and the soul, and it becomes a throne for the supernal light above it, the soul of souls. See this in Parashat Lech Lecha and in many other places. This is an allusion to the three names interwoven together: Ehyeh, YHVH, and Adonut, whose numerical value is Yabok, representing the secret of soul, spirit, and higher soul. The three lights mentioned appear in the three colors of 30R 35R 40R 45R 50R

[i] This reflects the rabbinic understanding that the vital soul (nefesh chiyunit) resides in the blood, specifically in the heart, based on Leviticus 17:11, ‘For the life of the flesh is in the blood.’

פרשת לך לך ובהרבה מקומות
אחרים וזהו רמז לשלש שמות
המשולבים יחד אהי״ה הוי״ה
אדנו״ת מספרם יב״ק בסוד
נפש רוח נשמה[i] ושלש מאורות
הנזכר מתראים בג׳ גווני העין
ונכללים כלם במלכות הנקראת
אישון ובת עין ומזה נוכל למצא
טעם למנהג הדלקת האבוקות
למתים שהוא יחוד ושמירה
אליהם ואמרי׳ בגמרא שעשויה
לכבוד ירצה להאיר וליחד
עליהם הל״ב נתיבות בגי׳ כבו״ד
המסלקות כל חיצוני ומחיות
הכל. עוד יורה כי מסתלקים
מנפש הנפטר המדרגות המאירים
בחול ובהנהגת מטטרון עץ הדעת
טוב ורע הנקרא מאורי האש
כשהם במקום זוהמת הצפרנים
רמז להשפעות המתראות בעולם
הזה[ii] שהוא עולם הכליון בסוד
התכלית שתמיד שורף הפתילה
והשמן או השעוה. והנה הוא
מוכן לקבל ולהאיר נשמתו
מסוד הנהגת השבת הנקראים
מאורי אור. עוד יורה כי בזה
מתייחדים מאורי האש במאורי
אור שסלוק צדיק זה מייחד
עולם היצירה שבו מאורי האש
עם עולם הבריאה שבו מאורי
חור[iii] ובזה מתעלה הכבוד
העליון וזהו נר של מתים העשוי
לכבוד על דרך ובהיכלו כלו
אומר כבוד. למען יזמרך כבוד
ועיין בפרשת בראשית חלוק
שבין מאורי האור למאורי האש
וטעם לזה אנו מברכים בכל מ״ש
ויוה״כ בורא מאורי האש ובזה ובשאר צרכיו הנעשים לנפטר

the eye, and they are all included in Malchut, which is called the pupil and the daughter of the eye.

From this we can find a reason to praise the custom of lighting torches for the dead, which serves as unification and protection for them. They say in the Gemara that it is made for honor, meaning to illuminate and unify upon them the 32 paths, which has the numerical value of "honor" (kavod), which remove all external forces and give life to all. This further indicates that the levels that illuminate during weekdays under the governance of Metatron—the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, called "the luminaries of fire" when they are in the place of the impurity of the fingernails—are departing from the soul of the deceased, alluding to the influences that appear in this world, which is the world of destruction, in the secret of purpose, which constantly burns the wick and the oil or wax.

And behold, the deceased is prepared to receive and illuminate his soul from the secret of Sabbath governance, called "the luminaries of light." This further indicates that through this, the luminaries of fire unite with the luminaries of light, for the departure of this righteous person unifies the World of Formation, which contains the luminaries of fire, with the World of Creation, which contains the luminaries of light, and through this the supernal honor is elevated. This is the candle for the dead made for honor, as in the verse "In His temple, all proclaim glory." That "glory may sing praises to You." See in Parashat Bereshit the distinction between the luminaries of light and the luminaries of fire, and the reason why we bless "Who creates the luminaries of fire" on every Saturday night and Yom Kippur. Through this and other needs performed for the deceased, as will be explained, we arouse mercy for him through action, speech, and thoughts of the heart.

From here, the discerning person can find a praiseworthy reason for the custom of lighting

55R 60R 65R 70R 75R 80R 85R 90R

[i] This is a key passage explaining the mystical significance of the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok.' The numerical value of these three divine names equals the value of Yabok (יב״ק = 112), and these correspond to the three levels of the soul involved in the death transition.

[ii] The author uses the kabbalistic concept of 'impurity of the fingernails' (zohama of the nails) as a symbol for the physical, mundane influences that must be shed at death. In kabbalah, the fingernails represent the outermost extension of the body where impurity can collect.

[iii] The author presents a complex kabbalistic understanding where the death of a righteous person creates a unification between different spiritual worlds—specifically the World of Formation (Yetzirah) and the World of Creation (Beriah). This reflects the belief that human death has cosmic significance.

כמו שיבא מעוררים רחמים עליו
בעובדא ומלולא ובהרהורא
דלבא. ומכאן יוכל המשכיל
למצא טעם לשבח למנהג הנר
שמדליקים על המתים במקומו
בשבעת הימים כי בה אית נייחא
לנשמתא ודאי וכן בכל י״ב
חדש בבתי כנסיות שהוא זמן
שכלה גופו בקרקע ונשמתו
נדונת אז ועולה ויורדת בנדרש
בזהר פרשת חיי שרה. ועם הנר
שמדליקין על הגוסס מצרפים
להביט בפניו כדי להאיר לו
מבת עין העליונה בסוד גווני
האור על דרך עיני ה׳ אלהיך
בה למתקה ולבסמה ולכן גם
בשעת התפלה עת יחוד מלכות
שהיא עיקר ההנהגה אלינו
וצריכים אנו ליחדה עם גג״ת
גווני העין העליונים בסוד ש״ן
בי״ת צריך שיתן עיניו למטה
ובזה יהיה מלכות לב העולם
למעלה כמשל אבן הקאלאמי״טה
השואבת ובזה מאירים ארץ חפץ
דלית לה מגרמה כלום וכן כתיב
והיו עיני ולבי שם כל הימים.
עוד נ״ר דלו״ק בגימטריא
השכינ״ה[i] שהיא מוכנת לקבל
אור עליון והיא העששית שכל
הגוונים מתראים מתוכה ואחר
קבלת האור תקרא נר ה׳ וכן נר
מצוה כי מצוה הוא שם בן ארבע
כנודע וג׳ מאורות שבנר כנזכר
הם מצד הגבורה כי השכינה
היא דולקת לפני הת״ת מצד
הגבורה וזהו תחלת ההתעוררות
אל היחוד בסוד שמאלו תחת
לראשי:[ii]

a candle for the dead in their place during the seven days of mourning, for it certainly provides comfort to the soul. Similarly, throughout the twelve months in synagogues, which is the time when the body has decomposed in the ground and the soul is being judged, ascending and descending, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Chayei Sarah. With the candle that we light for the dying person, we combine looking at his face to illuminate him from the supernal pupil of the eye, in the secret of the colors of light, as in "The eyes of the Lord your God are upon it," to sweeten and perfume it. Therefore, also during prayer, the time of unification of Malchut, which is the main governance for us, we need to unify it with the colors of the supernal eye in the secret of Shin and Bet, one must direct one's eyes downward, and through this, Malchut will be the heart of the world above, like the example of the lodestone that attracts, and through this we illuminate the Land of Desire, which has nothing of its own, as it is written, "And My eyes and My heart shall be there all the days."

Furthermore, "lamp" (ner) "kindled" (daluk) in gematria equals "the Divine Presence" (HaShechinah), which is prepared to receive supernal light, and it is the lantern through which all colors appear, and after receiving the light, it is called "the lamp of the Lord" and also "the lamp of commandment," for "commandment" is a four-letter name, as is known. And the three lights in the lamp, as mentioned, are from the side of Gevurah, for the Divine Presence burns before Tiferet from the side of Gevurah, and this is the beginning of arousal to unification, in the secret of "His left hand is under my head."

95R 100R 105R 110R 115R 120R 125R

[i] The author uses gematria (Hebrew numerology) to show that 'ner daluk' (kindled lamp) has the same numerical value as 'HaShechinah' (the Divine Presence), reinforcing the connection between physical candles and spiritual illumination.

[ii] Cf. Midrash HaNe'elam — This reference establishes an authoritative basis for a seemingly non-Jewish custom by rooting it in kabbalistic literature, suggesting that the author is seeking to integrate or validate various customs within a Jewish mystical framework. | Cf. נשמת נר ה אדם — This reference connects the physical practice of lighting candles with the metaphysical understanding of the human soul as God's light in the world, creating a symbolic correspondence between ritual action and spiritual reality. | Cf. מאורי אור and מאורי האש — The author is using these liturgical concepts to elaborate a complex kabbalistic interpretation where physical candles facilitate the unification of different spiritual worlds and the elevation of the soul through various levels of divine illumination. | Cf. רבינית דם שבלב — This reference connects the physiological

פרק ט״ז

Chapter 16

ברוך אשר לו נתכנו עלילות והכתיב בתורתו כי ביום אכלך ממנו מות תמות כי טעם המיתה היא רחמנות ותקון והיא מלשון תמימות ודא בגין דיתמחי יצר הרע דבגויה כדפירשו בזהר על פסוק ופגריכם אתם יפלו במדבר הזה. וזהו והנה טוב מאד זה מות[i] כי אברי האדם ביום ברוא אלהים אדם על הארץ הם רמז לדברים רוחניים: והאדם הוא צל העליונים ואפילו הרמת ידו מתראה למעלה שכל אבריו ועורקיו וגידיו בפרט וצורתו בכלל נרמזים למעלה בדאיתא בר״מ פרשת בהר סיני ובתוכם האלהות נסתר ונגלה בנראה מר׳ אלעזר בר׳ שמעון וממעשה דר׳ דכל בי שמשי הוה אתי לביתיה.[ii] וסטרא דמסאבותא הוא המגשים הרוחני. נמצא כי הסתרת נפש האדם בגוף כהסתרת מדה אחת במה שלמטה ממנה בספירות העליונות.

Blessed is He to whom all designs are attributed,[1] who wrote in His Torah: "For on the day you eat of it, you shall surely die." The purpose of death is mercy and rectification,[2] and it derives from the word "completeness," for it is meant to erase the evil inclination within, as explained in the Zohar on the verse "And your carcasses shall fall in this wilderness." This is the meaning of "And behold, it was very good"—this refers to death. For a person's limbs, on the day God created man upon the earth, are symbolic of spiritual matters. 5R 10R

Man is a shadow of the supernal beings, and even the raising of his hand is reflected above, as all his limbs, veins, and sinews individually, and his form as a whole, are represented above, as stated in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Behar Sinai. The Divine presence is both concealed and revealed within them, as evident from Rabbi Eleazar, son of Rabbi Shimon, and from the account of Rabbi [Judah the Prince], who would come to his home every Sabbath eve after his death. The side of impurity is what materializes the spiritual. Thus, the concealment of a person's soul within the body is like the concealment of one divine attribute within what is below it[3] in the su- 15R 20R

[1] The opening phrase 'ברוך אשר לו נתכנו עלילות' echoes 1 Samuel 2:3 from Hannah's prayer, which praises God as the one who weighs or measures all actions. The author begins with this praise of divine providence to establish that even death is part of God's purposeful design.

[2] This central theological claim of the passage presents death not as punishment but as divine mercy ('רחמנות') and rectification ('תקון'). This positive view of death stands in contrast to how it is often understood, framing it instead as part of the divine plan for human perfection.

[3] This passage articulates a fundamental kabbalistic principle of correspondence between human and divine structures. Just as divine emanations (sefirot) are 'clothed' or concealed within lower emanations, the human soul is 'clothed' within the body, establishing a microcosm-macrocosm relationship.

understanding of life (blood in the heart) with mystical concepts about the soul's residence in the body, showing how the author integrates medical and spiritual understandings of human existence. | Cf. אה״ה הוי״ה אדנו״ת — This reference establishes a direct connection between the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' and these divine names, suggesting that the transition of death is a journey through these three levels of soul, facilitated by divine presence represented by these names. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Chayei Sarah — This reference grounds the custom of lighting memorial candles for twelve months in authoritative mystical literature, showing how ritual practice corresponds to the soul's journey after death as described in the Zohar.

[i] This refers to a rabbinic interpretation of Genesis 1:31, where "very good" is interpreted as referring to death. In Genesis Rabbah 9:5, Rabbi Meir's Torah scroll reportedly had the phrase "behold, it was very good" followed by "behold, death was good"—indicating that death serves a positive purpose in the divine plan.

[ii] The text references two Talmudic accounts where the divine presence was revealed through deceased sages. The first refers to Rabbi Eleazar, son of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, whose body did not decay after death (Bava Metzia 84b). The second refers to Rabbi Judah the Prince, who would return to his home every Sabbath eve after his death, as recounted in Ketubbot 103a.

ועל זה נאמר וייצר ה׳ אלהים
את האדם ויפח בי שני שמות
אלו הם נרתק זה לזה ונשמת
האדם מאירה בתוכו כאור
המזהיר בספיר. וכאשר עצב
רוח קדשו הוזקק למיתה דשם
סטרא דמסאבותא ונטמן בעפר
כי נחש עפר לחמו והטומאה
מתמעטת ויצר הרע נגדע. ועם
היות המות מסטרא דרע מאחר
שבה יתבטל הרע הנה היא הטוב
על הדרך מי יתן טהור מטמא לא
אחד. והמיתה הנאמרת בתורה
אם לא יחטא אדם יהיה פי׳ אדם
כי ימות באהל והשאר המיתות
הנזכרות בה במיתת המלכין
קדמאין דאינון עולמות שעלו
במחשבה[i] שהיא חכמה להבראות
ומרוב האור אצטנעו ורמזו סוד
עמוק זה בפ׳ ואלה המלכים אשר
מלכו בארץ אדום ופי׳ באידרא
ובספרא דצניעותא לאו דמיתו
אלא דאצטנעו ונתעלו למעלה
אל מקורם. וזהו בונה עולמות
ומחריבן כי עולמות רוצה
לומר סדר זמנים שהוא מחסד
ולמטה. ומחריבן ירצה מסתיר
אותם בסיבתן העליונה. ומורי
מפאנו זצ״ל הביא בדרושיו
מה היתה המיתה הזאת קודם
החטא[ii] יעויין שם וגורי האר״י
זצו״קל בהקדמותיהם הראשונות
דברו מזה על אזן שומעת. ועיין

pernal emanations. 25R

Regarding this, it is written: "And the LORD God formed man... and breathed," for these two divine names are sheaths for each other, and a person's soul illuminates within him like light shining through sapphire. When His holy spirit was grieved, 30R death became necessary, for there lies the side of impurity, and it is buried in dust, for "dust is the serpent's food." Thus impurity is diminished and the evil inclination is cut off. Although death comes from the side of evil, since through it evil is nullified, 35R it is good, in accordance with "Who can bring purity from impurity? Is it not the One?"

The death mentioned in the Torah, had man not sinned, would be interpreted as "when a man dies in a tent," while the other deaths mentioned 40R refer to the "death of the primordial kings"—those worlds that arose in thought, which is Wisdom, to be created, but due to the overwhelming light, they were concealed. This profound secret is alluded to in the passage "These are the kings who reigned 45R in the land of Edom," and is explained in the Idra and Safra D'Tzniuta that they did not actually die but were concealed and elevated back to their source.[A] This is the meaning of "He builds worlds and destroys them"[1]—"worlds" referring to the 50R order of times, which extends from Chesed (Loving-kindness) downward, and "destroys them" meaning He conceals them in their supernal cause.

My teacher from Fano, of blessed memory,[B] elaborated in his discourses on what this death was before 55R the sin—see there—and the disciples of the ARI, may the memory of the holy righteous one be a blessing,

[A] Or: "in the Idra and Safra D'Tzniuta that they did not die but rather were concealed and elevated upward to their source" — This translation better captures the nuance of 'לאו דמיתו אלא דאצטנעו' by emphasizing the contrast with 'rather' and follows the Hebrew word order more closely.

[B] Or: "And my teacher from Fano, of blessed memory" — Adding the conjunction 'And' preserves the flow from the previous sentence in the original Hebrew, which begins with 'ו' (and).

[1] This refers to a rabbinic statement in Genesis Rabbah 3:7 and 9:2 that God created and destroyed multiple worlds before creating ours. The kabbalistic interpretation provided here reframes 'destruction' as 'concealment,' suggesting these worlds were not eliminated but rather reabsorbed into their divine source.

[i] This refers to a kabbalistic concept that interprets Genesis 36:31-39 (the kings who ruled in Edom) as referring to primordial worlds that existed and were 'shattered' before our current world. These are known as the 'broken vessels' or 'shattered kings' in Lurianic Kabbalah.

[ii] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist and philosopher who wrote extensively on the nature of the universe according to Lurianic Kabbalah. The 'death before sin' he discusses likely refers to the spiritual transformation that would have occurred had humans not sinned.

עוד בתקונים תקון ס״ו על איזה
אדם נאמר אדם כי ימות באהל.
ובזה נבין אומרו יתברך ועתה
פן ישלח ידו ולקח גם מעץ
החיים ואכל וחי לעולם והפך זה
דבר על יד נביאו ובחרת בחיים
אלא אם יחיה בעודו ביצר הרע
ודאי ימות מיתה נפשית ועתה
במותו יחיה כי נחית לעפרא
בגין דיתמחי יצר הרע דבגויה
ולזה גורש מגן עדן שלא יאכל
מעץ החיים וכל מדותיו יתברך
אפי׳ הנראים לכתחלה דין הם
רחמים על ברואיו כי חפץ חסד
הוא ועיין מזה פרשת פקודי דף
רמ״ב ובזה יצא לנו טעם לשבח
על גלותינו. עיין בר״מ ויערב
לך ומשם מתבאר למעיין בו למה
הוצרכנו למשניות ובברייתות
בעת הזה ועיין פרשת פקודי דף
רנ״ז מסוד המשנה והברייתא:
ומצאתי להראב״ד בפי׳ משנה
ג׳ מפ״ד מספר יצירה כיצד
המליך אות ב׳ בחיים וקשר לו
כתר וצר בו שבתאי בעולם ויום
ראשון בשנה ועין ימין בנפש
ואמר כי שבתאי הוא ממונה על
החרבן לפי שאינו חפץ בענייני
הגוף ולכן מחריבן ואינו משגיח
בקישוטן אלא על השכלים
הפשוטים ועל השגת הש״י ועל
השגת השביעית והוא ממונה על
החלאים והמות ובית הסוהר
והדלות והקלון והחרפה מזה
העולם דוקא ועל כל עבוב.
ובסוף כתב ולהיותו ממונה על spoke of this in their early teachings for the attentive ear.[A] See also Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 66, regarding which "man" is referred to in "when a man dies in a tent." With this, we can understand God's statement, "And now, lest he put forth his hand and take also from the Tree of Life, and eat, and live forever," which seems contrary to what He said through His prophet, "And you shall choose life." However, if one lives while still possessed of the evil inclination, he will certainly suffer a spiritual death,[1] whereas in his physical death, he shall live, for he descends to the dust so that the evil inclination within him may be erased. This is why he was expelled from the Garden of Eden, so he would not eat from the Tree of Life. All of God's attributes, even those that initially appear as judgment, are merciful toward His creations, for He desires kindness. Examine this in Parashat Pekudei, page 242, and from this we derive a reason to praise our exile. See Ra'aya Mehemna, and it will be pleasant for you, and from there it becomes clear to the student why we needed the Mishnah and Baraita in this time. See also Parashat Pekudei, page 257, on the secret of the Mishnah and Baraita.

60R 65R 70R 75R 80R

I found in RABD's commentary on Mishnah 3, Chapter 4, of Sefer Yetzirah: "How did He enthrone the letter Bet with life, bound a crown to it, and through it formed Saturn in the universe, Sunday in the year, and the right eye in the person?" He states that Saturn is appointed over destruction[2] because it has no interest in bodily matters, and therefore destroys them and does not supervise their adornment, but rather oversees the simple intellects, the perception of God, and the perception of the seventh [attribute]. It is appointed over illnesses, death, imprisonment, poverty, disgrace, and shame specifically in this world, and over all delays. At the end,

85R 90R

[A] Or: "and the disciples of the ARI, may the memory of the holy righteous one be a blessing, discussed this in their introductory works for those with discerning ears" — This alternative more directly translates 'הקדמותיהם' as introductory works rather than 'early teachings', and 'אזן שומעת' might be better rendered as 'discerning ears' to capture the idiom of selective revelation to those capable of understanding.

[1] This passage resolves the apparent contradiction between God preventing access to the Tree of Life (Genesis 3:22) and the commandment to 'choose life' (Deuteronomy 30:19). The author argues that eternal physical life with the evil inclination would result in spiritual death, while physical death enables spiritual purification and true life.

[2] This section integrates astrological concepts with Jewish mysticism, attributing to Saturn (שבתאי) dominion over destruction, illness, death, imprisonment, and poverty, but also over wisdom, knowledge, and Sabbath-observance. This reflects medieval Jewish astrological thought that viewed celestial bodies as channels for divine influence rather than independent powers.

החכמות והדעת הוא ממונה
על שומרי שבת ולפיכך הם
בצרה בזה העולם[i] ע״כ. ואם
קבלה נקבל והאריך בפרטי
ממשלותיו יע״ש בדף ע״ט ופ׳.
וגם הבוטריל האריך בשבח
רוכב שבתאי ואיקלים שלו בשם
הרב ר׳ ברוך מקובל גדול בספר
הנקרא חשן משפט. עוד בזהר
דף רנ״ח גם כן נתן טעם לשבח
גלות וגם בפרשת תצוה דף ק״צ
יש משל ונמשל נאה על זה ולמה
לא היתה גאולה שלימה בבית
שני: [ii]

he wrote that because it is appointed over wisdom and knowledge, it is also appointed over Sabbath-observers, and therefore they are in distress in this world. If this is a received tradition, we accept it. He elaborated on the details of its dominions—see there on pages 79 and 80. Butril also elaborated in praise of the rider of Saturn and its climates, citing Rabbi Baruch, a great Kabbalist, in the book called Choshen Mishpat. Additionally, in the Zohar, page 258, a reason is given to praise exile, and in Parashat Tetzaveh, page 190, there is a beautiful parable and its interpretation on this topic, and on why there was not a complete redemption in the Second Temple period.

ובזה נדע למה שבר משה רבינו
ע״ה הלוחות שהיה בדי לבטל
החירות ממ״ה ומגלות[iii] כטעם
מניעת עץ החיים מאדם הראשון
ולא נבנה בית המקדש בימי משה

Through this we can understand why Moses our teacher, peace be upon him, broke the tablets—it was to nullify freedom from the Angel of Death and from exile,[1] similar to the reason for preventing the first man from accessing the Tree of Life. The [1]The author presents the breaking of the tablets as a spiritually necessary act, arguing that possessing the intact tablets would have granted Israel a premature immortality and freedom from exile that would have prevented their spiritual development. This interpretation transforms Moses' seemingly destructive act into one of profound spiritual protection.

[i]This presents a mystical explanation for why Sabbath observers might experience worldly difficulties—their spiritual connection to Saturn, which governs both wisdom and worldly suffering. This paradox—that spiritual elevation may coincide with material hardship—is a recurring theme in Jewish mystical thought.

[ii]Cf. Zohar — The author cites the Zohar's interpretation of the verse in Numbers to support his theological claim that death serves a positive spiritual purpose as a means of erasing the evil inclination from within the person. | Cf. Genesis 1:31 — The author draws on a rabbinic interpretation that "very good" refers to death, suggesting that death, despite its apparent negativity, serves a positive purpose in the divine plan. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna (Zohar) — The author cites this text to support the kabbalistic concept that the human form mirrors spiritual realities, with each part of the body corresponding to divine attributes. | Cf. Genesis 36:31 — The author refers to the kabbalistic interpretation of this passage as describing primordial spiritual worlds that existed and were 'destroyed' before our current world order, using it to explain the concept of death before sin. | Cf. Idra and Safra D'Tzniuta — The author cites these authoritative kabbalistic texts to explain that the 'death' of primordial worlds was not actual destruction but a process of concealment and elevation back to their divine source. | Cf. Genesis 3:22-24 — The author interprets this as a merciful act, preventing humans from living eternally with the evil inclination, which would result in spiritual death. Physical death thus becomes a means to spiritual purification and true life. | Cf. Deuteronomy 30:19 — The author contrasts this with God's prevention of Adam accessing the Tree of Life, resolving the apparent contradiction by explaining that true life comes through death that eliminates the evil inclination. | Cf. Job 14:4 — The author uses this verse to support his paradoxical claim that death, though associated with impurity, becomes a source of purification by eliminating the evil inclination. | Cf. Numbers 19:14 — The author suggests this verse would have been the meaning of death had Adam not sinned—death as a spiritual transition rather than punishment, possibly alluding to the rabbinic interpretation that connects this verse to Torah study.

[iii]This phrase suggests that the tablets would have conferred a kind of immortality or freedom from exile upon Israel, which Moses deliberately prevented by breaking them. This reflects a kabbalistic understanding that physical objects can embody spiritual properties with real-world effects.

כדי שתשפכנה אבני קדש וכפר
אדמתו עמו ואם כן בשבירׄ
115 לוחות סר עוננו וחטאתנו תכופר
וזה שנאמר בשבירת הלוחות
והלוחות מעשה אלהים המה
כי זה טעם שבירתם ולכן משה
הביאם עמו שלכאורה נראה
120 כיון ששמע מהקב״ה לך רד כי
שחת עמך למה ירד עם הלוחות
בידו היה לו להניחם שם ולא
להביאם למטה אז היה יכול
לומר תדון כפנויה עד יכופר
125 עון ישראל.[i] ברם ידע כי זה
היה תקונם בנזבר. עוד היינו
יכולים לומר בזה כי לא חשב
עון ישראל כ״כ גדול ולפחות
היה סובר שאחר שעשו העגל היו
130 מתחרטים מהעון על דרך שאמרו
הרשעים מלאים חרטות ע״כ
הביא הלוחות בחשבו כי תוקף
אורם יבריחו המזיקים ורוחות
הטומאה שהכניסו ישראל ביניהם
135 אך כאשר ראה העגל ומחולות
שהיו שמחים לאיד אז ויחר אף
משה והכבידו הלוחות על ידיו
שהאורות שהיו בהם נסתלקו
אל נרתקן ואז מה שמתחלה
140 היו שניהם על ידו אחת דכתיב
ושני הלוחות בידו בעת שבירתן
כתיב וישלך מידיו שהחזיק
בהם בשתי ידיו כי מתחלה היו
נושאים את נושאיהם[ii] וכשהגיעו
145 לעשרה טפחים התחתונים שהם
רשות הרבים והקליפות[iii] שגירו

Temple was not built in Moses' time so that the holy stones would be scattered and "He will atone for His land and His people." Thus, through the 115R breaking of the tablets, our iniquity departed and our sin was atoned for. This is alluded to in the description of the breaking of the tablets: "And the tablets were the work of God"—this explains the reason for their breaking. Therefore, Moses brought 120R them with him, for at first glance it seems puzzling: since he heard from the Holy One, blessed be He, "Go down, for your people have become corrupt," why did he descend with the tablets in his hand? He should have left them there and not brought them 125R down. Then he could have argued, "Judge them as an unmarried woman until Israel's sin is atoned for."[1] However, he knew that this [breaking] would be their rectification, as mentioned.

We could further suggest that he did not consider 130R
Israel's sin to be so great, and at the very least he thought that after they made the golden calf, they would regret their sin, as they say, "The wicked are full of regrets." Therefore, he brought the tablets, thinking that the power of their light would drive 135R away the destructive forces and spirits of impurity that Israel had brought among themselves. But when he saw the calf and the dancing, that they were rejoicing in wickedness, "Moses' anger burned," and the tablets became heavy in his hands because the 140R lights that were in them withdrew into their sheaths. And so what had initially been both [tablets] in one hand, as it is written, "and the two tablets in his hand," at the time of their breaking it says, "and he cast them from his hands," meaning he was holding 145R them with both hands. For initially, they carried

[1] This uses a legal analogy from Jewish marriage law, suggesting Moses could have argued for leniency in judgment based on Israel's not-yet-fully-consummated relationship with God. The author is exploring alternative paths Moses might have taken.

[i] This uses an analogy from Jewish marriage law: a woman who is betrothed (but not yet fully married) receives different legal treatment than a married woman. The author suggests Moses could have argued for lighter judgment for Israel by claiming they were not yet fully 'married' to God through receiving the tablets.

[ii] This refers to the rabbinic tradition that the tablets miraculously carried those who carried them, meaning they had no physical weight due to their divine nature. When Israel sinned, this miraculous property was lost.

[iii] This combines a halakhic concept (the bottom ten handbreadths constituting public domain in Jewish law) with a kabbalistic concept (this public domain being associated with negative spiritual forces called 'kelipot'). The author creates a correspondence between physical and metaphysical boundaries.

ישראל בהם האור חמק עבר מהם
כי קצר המצע מהשתרע[i] הקדושה
עם הטומאה והכבידו על ידי
משה ועל כרחו הוצרך להניח
אותם ונשברו ע״ד אותיות
פורחות וגוילים נשרפים. אך
לפי דרכנו יאות יותר הדרך
הראשון ששברן לטובת ישראל
וזה אשר שברת ישר כחך
ששברת:[ii] ועל פי הדברים
האלה לא נכנס משה בארץ שלא
יכופר עון ישראל בחרבן כי
לא היו האויבים יכולים לשלוט
במעשי ידיו ולא לעקור ישראל
מהארץ כי רצונו היה לנטעם
שם וזהו תביאמו ותטעמו וגו׳
הנה חרבן בית המקדש בטעם
שבירת הלוחות וכן הגליות
והמיתה היה רב טוב לבית
ישראל: ובטל שהקב״ה עתיד
להחיות את המתים צדיקי ישראל
שהוא מאור שירד מאריך אנפין
בסוד מלכין קדמאי[iii] בדרוש
עולם התהו׳ עולם הנקודות
לגורי האר״י מטל זה יתהוו בני
התחיה אחר שחלק הבשר שהוא
מחלק נחש הקדום שבשר הוא
ש״בר[iv] ישוב לעפרו כי נחש עפר לחמו יצורף ויתוקן הויה וחבור

their bearers,[1] but when they reached the bottom ten handbreadths, which is the public domain and the realm of the negative forces that Israel had provoked, the light slipped away from them, for "the bed is too short to stretch out on"—holiness cannot coexist with impurity. They became heavy in Moses' hands, and he was forced to put them down, and they broke in the manner of "flying letters and burning parchments." But according to our approach, the first explanation is more fitting—that he broke them for Israel's benefit. This is [the meaning of] "which you broke"—it was right that you broke them.

Based on these matters, Moses did not enter the land so that Israel's sin would not be atoned for through the destruction[2] [of the Temple], for enemies would not have been able to control his handiwork nor uproot Israel from the land, as his desire was to plant them there. This is [the meaning of] "You will bring them and plant them..." Thus, the destruction of the Temple served the same purpose as the breaking of the tablets, and likewise the exiles and death were for the great good of the House of Israel.

And through the dew with which the Holy One, blessed be He, will revive the dead,[3] the righteous of Israel—which is from the light that descends from Arich Anpin, in the mystery of the Primordial Kings, in the discourse on the World of Chaos and the World of Points according to the disciples of the ARI—through this dew the resurrected ones will come into [1] This refers to the rabbinic tradition that the tablets were miraculously weightless and even helped carry those who carried them. The loss of this miraculous property symbolizes the withdrawal of divine presence following Israel's sin.

[2] This presents a striking kabbalistic interpretation of Moses not entering the Promised Land—not as punishment, but as divine strategy. The author suggests that Moses' presence would have made the Temple indestructible, preventing the necessary atonement that would later come through destruction and exile.

[3] This refers to the rabbinic concept that resurrection will occur through a special divine dew. The author integrates this traditional concept with Lurianic kabbalistic terminology about cosmic restoration.

[i] A reference to Isaiah 28:20, "For the bed is too short to stretch out on." This biblical phrase is applied metaphorically to suggest the incompatibility of divine holiness and impurity coexisting in the same space.

[ii] This refers to the rabbinic interpretation of God's words to Moses in Exodus 34:1. According to tradition, God told Moses "well done" (yasher koach) for breaking the tablets, confirming it was the right action.

[iii] This refers to complex Lurianic kabbalistic concepts about primordial divine light that existed before creation. The 'Primordial Kings' represent sefirot (divine emanations) of the World of Chaos that shattered because they could not contain the divine light—a process that will be rectified in the resurrection.

[iv] The author engages in wordplay, breaking apart the Hebrew word for flesh (basar) to interpret it as 'broken thing' (sh-bar), associating meat consumption with brokenness and the primordial fall.

ד׳ יסודות זכים וקיימים: ומזה נדע מנהג הוותיקים הפורשים מאכילת בשר ימי השבוע שהוא שליטת החול ועיין מזה בר״מ פרשת לך לך דף פ״ט ע״ב. וכתב הברבנילו שהבשר מוליד באדם דם זדוני ואכזרי. ומפני זה תמצא שהחיות והעופות הטורפות האוכלות הבשר הם אכזריות ורעות אבל אותן המתפרנסות מעשב השדה אין בהם אכזריות ולא רשע.[i] ולכן יעד הנביא שבזמן הגאולה העתידה אריה כבקר יאכל תבן וביאר הסיבה באומרו לא ירעו ולא ישחיתו וכן בעל העקדה בשער מ״א אמר כי אכילת הבעלי חיים הם זבחי ריב וקנטור לאיש השלם כמו שאמר החכם טוב פת חריבה וגו׳ ואולי נאמר שלכן לאדם הראשון השלם בבריאתו לא הותר לו אכילת בעלי חיים. וכן אמרו חכמינו ז״ל על פסוק אשר יצוד ציד חיה או עוף. מכאן שלא יאכל אדם בשר אלא בהזמנה זאת. ודור דיעה שמקור נשמתם היה מהבינה לא הותר להם רק אכילת בשר שלמים ואכילת הכהנים מבשר קדשי קדשים ואכילת הבעלים השלמים היה תקון לאכילת בשר תאוה בזמן שבהמ״ק קיים ועתה יהיה אכילת שבתות וי״ט וסעודות מצוה תקון לזה שגם בשפלנו זכר לנו למען חסדו הגדול. ובשר הוא מצד מדת הדין ואותיותיו מורות זה.[ii] וכן אמרו בפנים חשוכות being. After the portion of flesh, which is from the portion of the primordial serpent—for flesh (basar) is a broken thing (sh-bar)—returns to its dust, because "dust is the serpent's food," a new formation will be refined and established, a combination of the four pure and enduring elements.

From this we can understand the practice of the pious ones who abstain from eating meat during the weekdays,[1] which is the domain of the mundane. See more about this in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Lech Lecha, page 89b. Barbanilo wrote that meat produces malicious and cruel blood in a person.[2] Because of this, you will find that the predatory beasts and birds that eat meat are cruel and evil, while those that sustain themselves from the grass of the field have neither cruelty nor wickedness in them. Therefore, the prophet foretold that in the time of the future redemption, "the lion, like the ox, will eat straw," and he explained the reason by saying, "they will not harm nor destroy." Similarly, the author of the Akedah in Gate 41 said that eating animals is a sacrifice of strife and provocation for the perfect person, as the sage said, "Better is a dry crust [with peace, than a house full of feasting with strife]." Perhaps we can say that this is why the first man, who was perfect in his creation, was not permitted to eat animals. Our sages of blessed memory also said regarding the verse "when he hunts game, an animal or a bird"—from here [we learn] that a person should eat meat only with this preparation. The generation of knowledge, whose soul source was from Binah, was permitted only to eat the meat of peace offerings and the priests' eating of the meat of holy of holies. The eating by the owners of peace offerings served as a rectification for the eating of meat of desire during the time when the Temple existed. And now, eating on Sabbaths, festivals, and meals associated with mitzvot serves as a rectification for this, for even in

[1] The author connects ascetic dietary practices (limiting meat consumption to Sabbaths and festivals) with kabbalistic cosmology, suggesting that such restraint aligns one with divine rhythms and helps rectify creation through participating in the distinction between holy and mundane time.

[2] This reflects medieval medical theory in which food was believed to directly influence not just physical health but moral character. The consumption of meat was thought to produce 'hot blood' associated with aggression and cruelty.

[i] The author presents a medieval scientific understanding that an animal's diet affects its temperament and, by extension, affects the temperament of humans who consume that animal. This combines scientific, ethical, and spiritual concerns about meat consumption.

[ii] The author suggests that the very Hebrew letters that form the word 'basar' (flesh/meat) indi-

נתן השלו לישראל ברם המברך
215 על מזונו כראוי וכפי כוונת לבו
ממתק הדין והדם נעשה לו חלב
וזריז דלא עבד איסורא ונשכר
דאכיל בשרא ותבא כמים בקרבו
וכשמן בעצמותיו ויאכל וחדי
220 וכל שכביצה ביצה טובה הימנו
לחיי דברייתא חוץ מבשרא: [i] our lowliness, He has remembered us for the sake of His great kindness. Meat comes from the side of the 215R attribute of judgment, and its letters indicate this.

They also said that the quail was given to Israel with a dark countenance.[1] However, one who blesses his food properly and according to the intention of his heart sweetens the judgment, and the blood becomes 220R milk for him.[2] One who is diligent and does not commit a transgression is rewarded when he eats meat—
"it enters like water into his innards and like oil into his bones." He eats and rejoices, and even an egg is better than meat for the life of creatures, except for 225R meat itself.[3]

פרק י״ז

התחיה היא שלמות גדול לנפש
ג״כ כי הנשמות וכל שכן הגופות
אינם עתה באותו השלמות שיהיו
אחר התחיה וכמו שמקוים החיים

Chapter 17

Resurrection is also a great perfection for the soul, for souls, and all the more so bodies, are not now in the same state of perfection that they will be after the resurrection.[A] Just as the living await re-

[A] Or: "souls—and certainly bodies—are not now in the same state of perfection they will attain

[1] This refers to the biblical episode where God sent quail to the complaining Israelites in the wilderness (Numbers 11), which led to a plague. The author interprets this as divine displeasure with the Israelites' meat craving.

[2] This metaphorical transformation suggests that proper spiritual intention can transform even potentially problematic foods (meat, associated with blood and judgment) into spiritually beneficial nourishment (milk, associated with nurturing and kindness).

[3] This somewhat paradoxical statement appears to suggest that while eggs are generally healthier than meat for most creatures, for human consumption specifically, properly blessed meat with correct intention can still be spiritually beneficial.

cate its connection to divine judgment. This reflects the kabbalistic practice of finding spiritual significance in the letters and structure of Hebrew words.

[i] Cf. Exodus 32 — The text interprets Moses' breaking of the tablets as a deliberate act of mercy that protected Israel from the consequences of possessing the tablets while in a state of sin. This interpretation transforms what appears to be an act of anger into a spiritually protective measure. | Cf. Genesis 3:22-24 — The author draws a parallel between God preventing Adam from eating from the Tree of Life (which would have granted immortality in a fallen state) and Moses breaking the tablets, suggesting both were acts of mercy preventing a worse spiritual outcome. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:43 — The phrase 'וכפר אדמתו עמו' (He will atone for His land and His people) is used to support the idea that the destruction of the Temple and breaking of the tablets serve an atoning function. | Cf. Deuteronomy 34:1-12 — The author offers a kabbalistic interpretation of why Moses couldn't enter the land, suggesting it was so that his divine handiwork couldn't be destroyed by enemies, which would have prevented the necessary spiritual atonement through exile and destruction. | Cf. Exodus 15:17 — The phrase 'תביאמו ותטעמו' (You will bring them and plant them) is used to demonstrate Moses' desire to permanently establish Israel in the land, which the author suggests would have prevented necessary future spiritual correction through exile. | Cf. Isaiah 11:6-9 — The text uses this prophetic vision to support its ascetic approach to meat consumption, suggesting that dietary restraint reflects messianic ideals where violence and predation are eliminated. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna (Zohar) — The author references this kabbalistic text to support the practice of abstaining from meat on weekdays, suggesting it provides deeper mystical reasons for dietary restraint. | Cf. Proverbs 17:1 — The partial quote 'טוב פת חריבה' (Better is a dry crust) is used to support the spiritual value of simple vegetarian food over meat which is associated with violence and spiritual judgment.

הגאולה לתועלת המשך השלמות לאדם. כן המתים נשמתם מקוה התחיה לתועלת ימשך אליהם מהשלמות שאחר התחיה. ומהות טל תחיית המתים יהיה טל מאיכות הנשמה וזהו בוונות הרעיפו שמים ממעל ושחקים יזלו צדק וגו׳ כי יזלו שחקים ע״י מלאכים הנקראים רוחות טל אחר מלבד הטל ממהות הנשמה והצדק שעשו בעה״ז כנגד הנפש. והטעם כי המיתה אל הגוף יצדק בקצת אל הנשמה שהיא נשמת הגוף המת שהמלכות בה יצדק המיתה ומיתה בנוקבא אחידת ובסטרא דנוקבא איהי.[i] אמנם ממנה ולמעלה הם החיים ומה שיתייחס למעלה חיים לא חיים גשמיים ולא מיתה ממש אלא יקרא היסוד חי והת״ת עץ החיים והבינה ארץ החיים והחכמה מקור החיים והכתר ג״כ. הכל בסוד אותו האור שנקרא חיים שהוא רב שפע. וא״ס מתנוצץ באור ידוע באותם הספיר דבר שאין הנשמות צופות בו עתה כלל מפני שהם בחלק המיתה ומיתתם הוא בסוד דאצטנעו דפי׳ בפ׳ הקודם והצנע זה הוא ג״כ אל הנשמות שהם גנוזות תחת כסא הכבוד שאין שם מקומם העצמי כי מקום הראוי ומיוחד להם הוא היות אותם החיים העליונים נשפעים

demption for the benefit of continued perfection for mankind, so too do the souls of the dead await resurrection for the benefit of the perfection that will extend to them after resurrection. The essence of the dew of resurrection will be dew from the quality of the soul,[1] and this is the meaning of "Let the heavens drop down from above, and let the skies pour down righteousness," etc., for the skies will pour forth through angels called spirits of dew, beyond the dew from the essence of the soul and the righteousness they performed in this world corresponding to the nefesh (vital soul). The reason is that death, which properly applies to the body, applies partially to the soul, which is the soul of the dead body, for in the attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) death is fitting, as "death adheres to the feminine aspect and is of the feminine side." However, from Malkhut upward are the realms of life, and what is attributed to the higher realms is life—not physical life, nor literal death—rather, Yesod (Foundation) is called "living," Tiferet (Beauty) is "the Tree of Life," Binah (Understanding) is "the Land of the Living," Chokhmah (Wisdom) is "the Source of Life," and Keter (Crown) as well. All of this pertains to the mystery of that light called "life," which is abundant effluence. The Infinite One (Ein Sof) radiates with a specific light in those sapphire [emanations], something that souls cannot perceive at all now because they are in the realm of death, and their death is in the mystery of concealment as explained in the previous chapter.[A] This concealment also applies to souls that are hidden beneath the Throne of Glory, for that is not their essential place. Their proper and designated place is to have those supernal life-forces after resurrection" — This alternate translation maintains the emphasis on both souls and bodies while using 'certainly' rather than 'all the more so' for a slightly more modern phrasing. It also simplifies the sentence structure slightly.

[A] Or: "because they exist in the domain of death, and their death state is through the mystery of 'concealment' (itztane'u) as we explained in the previous chapter" — This alternate translation preserves the technical kabbalistic term 'itztane'u' (concealment) while also clarifying that this concept was previously explained by the author. The term 'domain' might better capture the spatial metaphor implied in 'chelek' (portion/realm).

[1] The metaphor of 'dew' for resurrection appears in Isaiah 26:19: 'Your dead shall live, their corpses shall rise. O dwellers in the dust, awake and sing for joy! For your dew is a dew of light.' This biblical imagery is given kabbalistic interpretation here.

[i] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar states that 'death adheres to the feminine aspect and is of the feminine side,' reflecting the kabbalistic teaching that death is associated with Malkhut, the feminine divine attribute, while the higher sefirot are associated with life.

אליהם והיינו ט״ל סוד יו״ד
ה״א וא״ו[i] שעתיד הקדוש ברוך
הוא להשפיע בה״א אחרונה
להחיות בו את המתים. ואמרו
בריש האדרא[ii] דעל זה איתער
מרישא דאריך ואחר שה״א
אחרונה תהיה מאותם החיים.
אז היא תשפיע. מהחיות ההוא
לכל אותם הבחינות שאין אותם
החיים נמצאים בהם אשר עתה
על צד ההשאלה יקראו מתים.
ועל סוד ההתפשטות החיים
האלה יאמר מחיה מתים את״ה
כי באשר את״ה תסתלק ותתקשר
בסוד י״הו בינה בן י״ה יה״ו
ושם החכמה שהיא שם מ״ה בסוד
אדם מיד המלכות הנקראת אתה
היא מחיה כל אותם הבחינות
שיצדק בהם המיתה עתה והתחיה
אח״כ ופתיחת מקור זה הוא
מחכמה וכתר וזהו מחיה מתים
ברחמים רבים. הנה כי המיתה
היא הכנה וצורך אל התחיה.
ואפי׳ השינה אמרו בעלי המחקר
שהיא מנוחה אל הנפש. ופירש
החכם קורדואירו זצ״ל[iii] כי
בהיות האדם ישן במטתו הנפש
והרוח והנשמה מקבלים החיות
מהבינה דוגמא למה שעתיד
להיות אחר המות וזהו אמרם
במדרש רבה פרשת ס״ו רוח flowing to them, which is the mystery of ט״ל (dew, numerically 39),[1] the secret of Yod-Hei-Vav that the Holy One, blessed be He, will in the future pour into the final Hei to revive the dead with it. And they said at the beginning of the Idra that this is aroused from the head of Arich (the Long-Faced One), and after the final Hei becomes part of those life-forces, then it will channel that vitality to all those aspects in which those life-forces are not found, which are now metaphorically called "dead." Concerning the mystery of the expansion of these life-forces, we say "You revive the dead" (אַתָּה מְחַיֶּה מֵתִים), for when אַתָּה (You) ascends and becomes bound in the mystery of י״הו[2]—Binah, son of Yah, YHV—and the name of Chokhmah, which is the name מ״ה (45) in the mystery of Adam, then immediately Malkhut, which is called אַתָּה (You), revives all those aspects to which death now applies and resurrection afterward. The opening of this source is from Chokhmah and Keter, and this is the meaning of "You revive the dead with great mercy." Thus death is a preparation and necessity for resurrection. Even regarding sleep, the philosophers said that it is rest for the soul. And Rabbi Cordovero, of blessed memory, explained that when a person sleeps in their bed, the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah (soul, spirit, and higher soul) receive vitality from Binah, prefiguring what will happen after death.[3] This is what they meant in Midrash Rabbah, Parashah 66: "The spirit ascends and descends; when a person sleeps, the soul ascends and draws down life from above." For sleep is [1] Hebrew letters have numerical values (gematria). The word for 'dew' (טל) equals 39 (ט=9, ל=30), which matches the numerical value of certain letters of the divine name when spelled out fully. This wordplay creates a mystical connection between dew and divine power.

40R 45R 50R 55R 60R 65R

[2] The passage analyzes the prayer phrase 'You revive the dead' (אַתָּה מְחַיֶּה מֵתִים) by interpreting the word 'You' (אַתָּה) as representing Malkhut (the lowest divine emanation) which ascends through the higher emanations during resurrection, creating a flow of divine vitality down to the dead.

[3] The parallel between sleep and death is fundamental to this passage. Sleep is presented as a miniature version of death, where the soul temporarily leaves the body to ascend to higher realms, much as it will do permanently at death. This creates a natural bridge between everyday experience and afterlife theology.

[i] The Hebrew word for 'dew' (טל) has the numerical value of 39, which the author connects to the letters of the divine name (יו״ד ה״א וא״ו) that total the same value. This kabbalistic wordplay links the concept of resurrection to divine names.

[ii] 'Rosh ha-Idra' refers to the beginning of the Idra Rabba (Great Assembly), a significant section of the Zohar that describes the mystical assembly of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his disciples where profound kabbalistic teachings were revealed.

[iii] This refers to Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), known by the acronym Ramak, who was one of the most influential kabbalists of Safed. His systematic presentation of Kabbalah, particularly in his work 'Pardes Rimmonim,' greatly influenced subsequent kabbalistic thought.

היא עולה ויורדת הנשמה בשעה
שאדם ישן היא עולה ושואבת
לו חיים מלמעלה. כי השינה
היא אחד מס׳ במיתה[i] כי הם
ו׳ מדרגות חצונות והאחרונה
שבהם הוא שינה ויש שינה גדולה
של שבעים שנה שכל אחד משש
מדרגות אלו כלול משבעה ונוכל
ליחס מדרגות אלו בחצונים והם
בקוף בפני אדם[ii] גם בדין החזק
הקדוש לכן שינה קטנה היא
חלק אחרון של מיתה והשינה
גדולה היא השבעה חלקים בלבד
מאותו חלק הששי. ויש שינה
שאינה בכלל המיתה והוא שתין
נשמי בשינת הסוס. וזה כשאינו
בחלק העשירי ממש שבמיתה
אלא ששים חלקים קטנים זה
יורה שאינו שקוע בשינה קרוב
אל המיתה אלא מתרחק ממנה
ולא יכנס בשביעי מחלק המיתה
אלא ובשביעית יצא לחפשי
חנם. ואי אפשר לעמוד ג׳ ימים
בלא שינה כי ביום ראשון חסד
אפשר להתקיים. ושני ת״ת אמנם
בגבורה שלישי ששם חוזק השינה
אי אפשר לעמוד ולכן בחוזק
הקליפה הג׳ בהכרח יוגבר עליו
השינה. וכבר אמרנו כי בעת
השילה הנשמה והרוח והנפש
יעלו למעלה לתת דין וחשבון
ממה שעשה ביום ולא ישאר בגוף
אלא נפש הבהמית שבה הכחות גשמיות הדוחה והמעכל והזן

one-sixtieth of death, as there are six external levels, the last of which is sleep.[1] There is also a great sleep of seventy years, with each of the six levels containing seven [aspects]. We can compare these levels to external forces, which are like an ape before a human, even in holy strong judgment. Therefore, a small sleep is the final portion of death, and the great sleep consists of just the seven parts of that sixth portion. There is also a sleep that is not included in death, which is sixty breaths like the sleep of a horse. This is when one is not in precisely the tenth part of death, but rather sixty small parts, indicating that one is not sunk in sleep close to death but is distancing from it, not entering the seventh part of death but rather "in the seventh he shall go free without payment." It is impossible to go three days without sleep, for on the first day, which corresponds to Chesed (Loving-kindness), one can endure. And the second day corresponds to Tiferet (Beauty), but on the third day, which corresponds to Gevurah (Strength) where the power of sleep is strongest, it is impossible to endure. Therefore, with the strength of the third kelipah (shell/husk), sleep will necessarily overpower him.[A] We have already said that during sleep, the neshamah, ruach, and nefesh ascend to give an accounting of what one did during the day, and only the animal soul remains in the body, which contains the physical forces of expulsion, digestion, nourishment, and the like.

70R 75R 80R 85R 90R 95R

[A] Or: "due to the power of the third kelipah, sleep will inevitably overcome the person" — This alternate translation avoids the masculine pronoun in favor of the gender-neutral 'person' and uses 'inevitably' for 'behekhrach' (necessarily/inevitably) which may flow better in contemporary English.

[1] The author develops an elaborate system relating sleep to death, suggesting there are six levels or gradations of death-like states, with ordinary sleep being the lowest or least intense form. This allows for a nuanced understanding of consciousness as existing on a spectrum between full wakefulness and death.

[i] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Berakhot 57b) that sleep is one-sixtieth of death. The author expands this concept into an elaborate system relating different levels of sleep to different aspects of death and the divine emanations.

[ii] This Talmudic expression comparing something inferior to 'an ape before a human' is used here to describe how the external forces (negative spiritual entities) that govern sleep are merely imperfect reflections of the holy forces that govern life and death.

וכיוצא.[i]

ולבד יש בו כח להתעורר משנתו
כי כאשר בועטים בחיות המועט
שהוא כסא אל הנפש והרוח
והנשמה יתעורר ויאיר כפתילה
הדולקת שכשאינה מאירה
בועטים בה ודולקת להיותה
כסא אל השלהבת[ii] ותקון גדול
תקן הקב״ה לאדם בשינה ומה
גם אל הזכאי שבה זוכה להכנס
בהיכל המלך כאשר אמרנו
למעלה. הנה השינה מנוחה אל
הנפש כי נפש רוח נשמה מנוחתם
בסוד המלאכים שנהנים מזיו
השכינה והגוף אבן מעמסה בלתי
צריך אל המזון אם לא מפני
הנפש[iii] ודבר זה מובהר בעצמו
שהרי אם יחנטו הגוף המת
בשמן אפרסמון והמירה וכיוצא
מדברים השומרים מהעפוש
לאיתעפש כלל וישמור כחו בו

And furthermore, it possesses the power to awaken from sleep, for when one stimulates the small vitality 100R that serves as a throne for the soul (nefesh), spirit (ruach), and higher soul (neshamah),[1] it awakens and illuminates like a burning wick[2] that, when it dims, can be prodded to light again because it serves as a throne for the flame. The Holy One, blessed 105R be He, established this great remedy for mankind through sleep, especially for the righteous who, through sleep, merit entry into the palace of the King, as we explained above. Thus, sleep is rest for the soul, for the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah find 110R their repose in the mystery of the angels[3] who enjoy the radiance of the Divine Presence, while the body is a burdensome stone with no need for nourishment except for the sake of the soul. This matter is self-evident, for if a dead body were to be embalmed 115R with balsam oil, myrrh, and similar substances that prevent decay, it would not decompose at all and would retain its strength, yet a living person, even

[1] The Hebrew terms ‘nefesh,’ ‘ruach,’ and ‘neshamah’ represent the three primary levels of the soul in Jewish mysticism, arranged hierarchically from the most physical (nefesh) to the most spiritual (neshamah).

[2] The analogy of a dimming wick being prodded back to life illustrates the kabbalistic understanding of consciousness as a form of divine light that can be rekindled through physical stimulation.

[3] The phrase ‘in the mystery of the angels’ (בסוד המלאכים) suggests that during sleep, the soul participates in angelic existence, temporarily returning to its spiritual source.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The passage draws heavily on Zoharic cosmology regarding the structure of the soul, the concept of death as concealment, and the relationship between the divine emanations (sefirot) and the human soul. The discussion of death adhering to the feminine aspect (Malkhut) and the soul’s journey during sleep is particularly Zoharic in nature. | Cf. Isaiah 45:8 — This biblical verse is repurposed to describe the mechanism of resurrection, with the ‘righteousness’ that rains down being interpreted as the divine life-force that will resurrect the dead. | Cf. Shemoneh Esreh (Amidah prayer) — The text analyzes the phrase ‘You revive the dead’ (אַתָּה מְחַיֵּה מֵתִים) from the second blessing of the Amidah, offering a kabbalistic interpretation of how the divine name embedded in this phrase (אַתָּה/You) operates in the resurrection process. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Berakhot 57b — The text expands upon the Talmudic statement that sleep is one-sixtieth of death, developing an elaborate kabbalistic framework that connects this proportion to the structure of the sefirot and the levels of the soul. | Cf. Moses Cordovero’s works — The author cites Rabbi Moses Cordovero (Ramak) regarding the soul’s activities during sleep, showing how the author builds upon earlier kabbalistic interpretations to develop his understanding of sleep as a prefiguration of death and resurrection. | Cf. Exodus 21:2 — The text applies this verse about Hebrew servants being freed in the seventh year to its mystical discussion of sleep and death, suggesting that the soul is liberated from certain spiritual constraints in the seventh aspect of sleep.

[ii] The metaphor of the wick as a ‘throne’ for the flame parallels kabbalistic concepts of the physical body serving as a vessel or throne for the divine soul, reflecting the hierarchical relationship between the material and spiritual realms.

[iii] This passage presents an unusual view that food primarily nourishes the soul rather than the body, contradicting the apparent physical reality that bodies need sustenance. The author uses the example of embalmed corpses to argue that the body itself doesn’t inherently need nourishment—it is only the presence of the soul that creates this need.

והחי גם אם יחנטו אותו לא יעמוד מפני זה ימים רבים בלא אכילה וטעם זה לפי שהאכילה מזון הנפש לא מזון הגוף כאשר יתבאר בפרק הבא בע״ה: [i] if similarly treated, would not survive many days without eating. The reason for this is that eating nourishes the soul, not the body, as will be explained in the next chapter, God willing.

פרק י״ח

Chapter 18

הנה אחר שהקב״ה גרש הנפש הזאת ממקום גבוה לעמוד בגוף הזה אינה יכולה ליהנות ממאכלה שהוא השפע עליון. ובצמחים ודברים התחתונים הרי הוא נהנה בקצת מזיו השכינה הכמוס בתוכם וזהו צדיק אוכל לשובע נפשו [ii] והמצוה הראשונה שנצטווה אדם הראשון הוא אכול תאכל. ובזה נבין טעם ענג שבתות וימים טובים באכילה כי הוא תקון ומזון גם לנפש יתירה שכמו שנהנית מענג עליון כך נהנית מענג תחתון שכל מאורעי הגוף הנפש מרגשת ולכן היה הלל אומר לגמול חסד עם העניה הזאת [iii] וכתיב יודע צדיק נפש בהמתו [iv] ומפני דבקות הנפש עם הנפש עליונה ועם הרוח ועם הנשמה מגיע מענג הגוף ענג לנשמה יתירה ובזה מעוררים לה הענג מלמעלה ממש ולזה צריך

After the Holy One, blessed be He, exiled this soul from its lofty place[1] to dwell in this body, it cannot enjoy its true nourishment, which is divine influx. However, through plants and earthly things, the soul does derive some pleasure from the divine radiance hidden within them.[2] This is the meaning of "the righteous eats to satisfy his soul," and the first commandment given to Adam was "you shall surely eat." This helps us understand the purpose of delighting in Sabbaths and festivals through food, for it serves as both nourishment and rectification for the additional soul.[3] Just as this additional soul enjoys supernal delight, it also derives pleasure from earthly delights, since the soul senses all bodily experiences. This is why Hillel would say, "Let me perform kindness for this poor one," and Scripture states, "A righteous person knows the soul of his animal." Because of the soul's connection to the higher soul, the spirit, and the divine soul, physical pleasure elevates to become spiritual delight for the additional soul, thereby evoking genuine delight from above. Therefore, one should focus during every [1] The Hebrew term 'גרש' (expel/exile) evokes the biblical expulsion from Eden, suggesting that the soul's descent into the body is a form of spiritual exile.

[2] The concept of divine sparks concealed in physical matter is central to Lurianic Kabbalah, suggesting that all creation contains fragments of divinity that can be 'liberated' through proper spiritual intention.

[3] In Jewish mystical tradition, the 'neshamah yeteirah' (additional soul) is believed to enter a person on the Sabbath and depart at its conclusion, providing enhanced spiritual perception and pleasure.

[i] Cf. Zohar III:130b — The text reflects the Zoharic concept that during sleep, the soul partially departs from the body to receive spiritual sustenance, just as mentioned here where the soul enters the 'palace of the King' | Cf. Genesis 28:12 — The text alludes to the biblical imagery of ascent to heavenly realms, suggesting that sleep, like Jacob's dream, provides access to divine realms

[ii] A reference to Proverbs 13:25, which the author interprets mystically to suggest that the righteous person derives spiritual nourishment from physical food by accessing the divine spark hidden within it.

[iii] A reference to a saying attributed to Hillel, who would refer to his body as "this poor one" when attending to his physical needs. This illustrates the kabbalistic view that the soul is exiled in the body and requires compassionate care.

[iv] A quotation from Proverbs 12:10, which literally refers to a righteous person caring for his animal, but is interpreted here kabbalistically to mean understanding and properly attending to one's own animal soul or physical nature.

לכוין בכל ענג שבת ואכילת מצה אל סוד ענג ממש[i] שמשם כל מתיקות מצד הדין והבינה הנמתקת[ii] וכל מיני שמנונית מצד החכמה ולזה אמר אכלו משמנים ושתו ממתקים. ויקנה צרכי שבת ביום ששי ולא ביום חמישי ובכל מה שיקנה יאמר לכבוד שבת[iii] ואמרו כי הזיעה שאדם מזיע בצרכי שבת בה הקב״ה מוחק כל עונותיו כמו הדמעות: וראוי לענג השבת בכל מיני בשמים כפי מסת ידו שהבשמים יש להם רמז למעלה עד הכתר ורומזים בכל הספירות והקטורת יוכיח והלחם רומז למלכות מיוחדת עם ת״ת שהוא לחם. ויין רמזו בבינה ששם סוד יין המשומר ותבשיל במלכות שבה סוד התבשיל עם המציאות התחתון שהם ציקי קדירה סוד בשכמל״ו[iv] ומהתחתונים נעשה למעלה תבשילין ומטעמים כאשר אהב ומיני פירות הם מהת״ת שהם פירות האילן. ופירות האדמה הם ממלכות וכל אלו הם תקוני הענג וכל שתיית יין של מצוה הוא משקה

Sabbath pleasure[1] and while eating matzah on the mystery of true delight,[2] the source of all sweetness from the aspect of judgment and sweetened understanding,[3] and all types of richness from the aspect of wisdom. This is why Scripture says, "Eat rich foods and drink sweet drinks." 25R

One should purchase Sabbath necessities on Friday, not Thursday, and for everything purchased, one should say "in honor of the Sabbath." They say that the sweat a person produces while preparing for the Sabbath erases all his sins, like tears do. It is proper to enhance the Sabbath with all types of spices according to one's means, for spices allude to the highest realms, up to Keter, and symbolize all the sefirot, as the incense offering demonstrates. Bread symbolizes Malkhut unified with Tiferet,[4] which is bread. Wine alludes to Binah, where the mystery of preserved wine[5] resides, and cooked dishes relate to Malkhut, which contains the secret of cooking combined with lower reality—the residue of the pot symbolizing "Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever." From these earthly elements, dishes and delicacies that He loves are prepared above. Fruits correspond to Tiferet, as they are fruits of the tree, while earth-grown produce corresponds to Malkhut. All these constitute the elements of delight, and every ritual drinking of wine irrigates the supernal channels with gladdening wine, 30R 35R 40R 45R 50R

[1] The Hebrew 'לכוין' (to focus/direct intention) refers to the kabbalistic practice of kavvanah—conscious, directed intention that transforms physical actions into spiritual catalysts.

[2] The term 'סוד' (mystery/secret) in kabbalistic texts often indicates an esoteric interpretation, suggesting that 'delight' has hidden mystical dimensions beyond its simple meaning.

[3] The Hebrew 'הנמתקת' (sweetened) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to the transformation of divine judgment into mercy through mystical unifications.

[4] This unification represents the mystical marriage of masculine and feminine divine attributes, a central concept in Kabbalah that brings harmony to all worlds and enables divine flow to reach creation.

[5] The 'wine preserved in its grapes since creation' is a Talmudic concept (Berakhot 34b) referring to special delights reserved for the righteous in the World to Come, reinterpreted in Kabbalah as divine wisdom stored in Binah.

[i] The word 'ענג' (delight) is significant in kabbalistic thought, particularly regarding Sabbath observance. It forms an acronym for 'Eden Nahar Gan' (Eden, River, Garden), representing the highest spiritual realms and pleasures.

[ii] Refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening the judgments,' where the divine attribute of judgment (Din) is tempered through its union with Understanding (Binah), transforming severity into mercy.

[iii] This phrase should be pronounced when purchasing Sabbath necessities to elevate the mundane act of shopping into a sacred preparation for the Sabbath.

[iv] A complex mystical analogy comparing the residue left in cooking pots to the phrase 'Blessed be the name of His glorious kingdom forever and ever' (Baruch Shem Kevod Malchuto L'olam Va'ed), which is recited quietly during the Shema prayer as it mediates between higher and lower realms.

הצינורות עליונים מין המשמח כמו שהוא משקה אבריו ועורקיו ולזה תהיה כוונתו. הנה כי האכילה היא מזון הנפש בסוד הרוחניות שבהם. ובסוד הברכות שמברכים ובפרט לפניהם וגם לאחריהם מוסיף אור לדבר הנאכל שכל ברכה היא בסוד אור מקיף שהוא למעלה מאור פנימי ואור החצון[i] שבכל הויה קדושה וזהו אמרם כדי שיתברך המזון במעיו[ii] ואמר הכתוב איזו היא אכילה שיהיה בה שביעת הנפש כשהיא בברכה וזהו ואכלת ושבעת וברכת את ה׳ אלהיך. וישראל במדבר לא נצרכו לגדולי קרקע שיש בשפע ההוא תערובת אל הגשמיות והעוביות והמותר והפרש אלא המן היה כלו מזון הנפש והגוף לא היה נהנה מזה ולכן פחותי הנפש שביניהם אמרו בלחם הקלוקל שהיו רוצים מזון הגוף.[iii] ולכן כדי שיהא אדם נזון גם במאכל עליון כמלאכים נתן לו מנוחת הנפש שהיא השינה שאז הנפש רוח ונשמה עולים ומשיגים בדברים עליונים ונזונים מזיו עליון וחם טועמים טעם מיתה והנפש שבה למנוחתה כענין הפטירה אל האדם שאז הנפש שבה אל מנוחתה ולכן צדיקים just as it moistens one's limbs and veins—this should be one's intention.

Indeed, eating nourishes the soul through the spiritual essence within food. Through the mystery of blessings recited before and after eating, light is added to the consumed food, for every blessing operates through the mystery of encompassing light,[1] which transcends both inner light and external light present in all holy existence. This is why they said, "So that the food may be blessed within his intestines," and Scripture asks, "What kind of eating satisfies the soul?" When it is accompanied by blessing: "You shall eat and be satisfied, and bless the Lord your God." The Israelites in the wilderness did not need produce grown from the earth, which contains mixtures of physicality, grossness, excess, and waste; rather, the manna was purely soul nourishment,[2] and the body derived no benefit from it. This is why those of lesser spiritual stature among them complained about the "miserable bread," as they desired bodily nourishment.

Therefore, so that a person might also be nourished by heavenly food like the angels,[3] he was given rest for the soul, which is sleep. During sleep, the soul, spirit, and higher soul ascend and apprehend supernal matters, nourished by divine radiance. They taste death, and the soul returns to its resting place, similar to when a person passes away and the soul returns to its rest. This is why superior righteous ones like Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his companions could remain for three

[1] The distinction between different types of divine light (encompassing, inner, and external) is particularly important in Lurianic Kabbalah, describing how divine influence interacts with creation at various levels.

[2] The manna is described in rabbinic literature as completely absorbed by the body without waste, symbolizing its purely spiritual nature. This contrasts with ordinary food, which leaves physical residue.

[3] In Jewish mystical thought, angels are understood to draw sustenance directly from divine radiance rather than physical food, representing a more refined form of nourishment that humans can experience temporarily during sleep or spiritual elevation.

[i] References Lurianic kabbalistic concepts distinguishing between three types of divine light: encompassing light (or makif) which surrounds from outside, inner light (pnimi) which penetrates and fills, and external light (chitzon) which relates to the outer aspects of creation.

[ii] A Talmudic concept (Berakhot 35a) suggesting that the blessing over food transforms it spiritually, affecting how it nourishes both body and soul.

[iii] Refers to the Israelites' complaint about the manna in Numbers 11:6, calling it 'miserable bread' despite its spiritual nature. The author interprets this as a preference for physical over spiritual nourishment.

העליונים כרשב״י וחביריו[i] היו
עומדים שלשה ושבעה ימים
ולילות בלי שינה ובלי אכילה
מפני שהיו נהנים מזיו השכינה
וכן ענין מרע״ה מ׳ יום ואליהו ג״כ ולכן השינה באדם הוא חלק
מהמיתה ועניינו ממש במיתה
והגוף מת[ii] והנפש שבה למנוחתה
ומבואר בזהר עליית הנשמה
בלילה בין הכחות עליונים וממה
שהארכנו בזה הכל הוא הוראה
גדולה על עניין התחייה אחר
המיתה. ומבקשי ה׳ יבינו כל.[iii] or seven days and nights without sleep or food, because they were nourished by the radiance of the Divine Presence. Similarly, Moses our teacher did so for forty days, as did Elijah. Thus, human sleep is a portion of death, its nature precisely like death—the body dies while the soul returns to its resting place. The Zohar explains the soul's ascent at night[1] among supernal powers, and all we have elaborated on this subject provides great insight into the resurrection after death. Those who seek the Lord will understand it all.

פרק י״ט

עתה יתבאר למה תקנו שיתאבל
אדם על מתו שבעה ימים וכן
עשה יוסף לאביו ובירו׳ פ״ק
דכתובות והביאו הרמב״ם פ״ק
מהלכות אבל וכן הרמב״ן בתורת
האדם כי משה רבינו תקן ז׳ ימי
אבילות וז׳ ימי המשתה[iv] ואולי
זה יהיה טעם האבלות יען כי

Chapter 19

Now I will explain why they instituted that a person should mourn for his deceased for seven days, as Joseph did for his father. In the Jerusalem Talmud, first chapter of Ketubot—cited by Maimonides in the first chapter of the Laws of Mourning and by Nachmanides in Torat Ha'Adam—it states that Moses our teacher instituted the seven days of mourning and the seven days of wedding festivities. Perhaps [1]The Zohar (especially I:83a, III:119b) elaborates on the soul's journey during sleep, describing how it gives testimony about the day's deeds and receives new insights that may be remembered as dreams.

[i]Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his companions are frequently mentioned in kabbalistic literature, particularly the Zohar, as exemplars of mystics who achieved transcendent states where physical needs were temporarily suspended during intense spiritual experiences.

[ii]The comparison between sleep and death appears in various rabbinic sources, including the Talmud, which calls sleep 'one-sixtieth of death' (Berakhot 57b). The author deepens this connection by explaining the soul's journey during sleep.

[iii]Cf. Zohar — The author draws on the Zohar's mystical understanding of the soul's journey, presenting sleep as a form of death where the soul temporarily returns to higher realms. | Cf. Proverbs 13:25 — The author interprets this verse mystically to suggest that physical eating has a spiritual dimension where the hidden divine spark in food nourishes the soul. | Cf. Genesis 2:16 — The author frames eating as not merely a physical necessity but a divine commandment with spiritual significance from the very beginning of creation. | Cf. Proverbs 12:10 — The author reinterprets this verse about animal care to suggest that the righteous person understands the needs of his own animal/physical soul and attends to it properly. | Cf. Nehemiah 8:10 — The author uses this verse to establish a connection between physical pleasure in eating and spiritual delight, linking the concepts of richness and sweetness to divine attributes. | Cf. Deuteronomy 8:10 — The author uses this verse to demonstrate that proper eating includes blessing, which spiritually elevates the physical act of consumption. | Cf. Talmudic saying of Hillel — The author cites Hillel's personification of his body/soul as a 'poor one' deserving kindness to illustrate the proper relationship between spiritual consciousness and physical needs. | Cf. Numbers 21:5 — The author uses this biblical episode to contrast those of higher spiritual development who appreciate purely spiritual nourishment with those who crave physical sustenance.

[iv]This refers to the rabbinic tradition that Moses instituted both seven days of mourning and seven days of wedding celebration, establishing a balance between joy and sorrow in Jewish lifecycle observances.

הגוף במיתתו נפסק ממנו השפע
משבע קצוות[i] וקיומם וזהו סוד
ימי שנותינו בהם שבעים שנה[ii] כי
עד שם הוא סדר זמנים ופעמים
מתעלה עד בינה אם הבנים
שהוא גבורה עליונה[iii] דאיהי
רחמי ודינין מתערין מינה
והיא הנותנת חיים לסדר זמנים
שכללם כלולים בתורה הנקראת
חדרי בינה ובדעת העליון
המכריע בין חכמה ובינה וי״א
שהוא שער החמשים חדרים אלו
ימלאון והיא מעוברת מסדר
זמנים אלו. ולכן עבור היותר
גדול שבאדם הוא י״ב חדשים
בסוד ו׳ קצוות נוטים לחסד
ושש לדין הם י״ב בסוד חדשי
השנה שהם י״ב שש קצוות מימין
ושש קצוות משמאל ונקשרים של
ימין בשמאל ושל שמאל בימין
ולכן שש חדשי החורף יוצאים
מסוכות שבו נדונים על המים
והולכים נגד פסח שהוא הימין
ונכללים בו ולכן הם רחמים
יותר מימות הקיץ שבהם דין
המצרים מפני שהם יוצאים

the reason for mourning is[A] because at death, the body is disconnected from the flow of the seven lower 10R sefirot[B] and their sustaining power. This is the secret of "the days of our years are seventy years," for this represents the order of time, though sometimes one ascends to Binah, "mother of children," which is the supernal Gevurah, from which both mercy and 15R judgments emanate. She gives life to the order of time, which is contained within the Torah, called "the chambers of Binah,"[C] and in the supernal Da'at that mediates between Chokhmah and Binah. Some say this is the fiftieth gate, and these chambers are 20R filled, and she is pregnant with these orders of time.

Therefore, the maximum gestation period for a human is twelve months,[1] corresponding to the six extremities inclining toward Chesed and six toward judgment, totaling twelve, which corresponds to the 25R twelve months of the year: six extremities on the right and six on the left, with those of the right binding to the left, and those of the left to the right. Thus, the six winter months emerge from Sukkot,[2] when we are judged concerning water, 30R and they progress toward Passover, which is on the right, and are included within it. This is why they contain more mercy than the summer months, which include the judgment of the "distress between

[A] Or: "this would be the mystical rationale for mourning" — This alternate translation emphasizes that the author is providing a kabbalistic interpretation rather than a simple practical explanation, which better reflects the speculative nature of the text's approach ('perhaps' and 'this would be').

[B] Or: "at death, the body is cut off from the divine influx from the seven extremities" — This alternate translation uses 'divine influx' instead of 'flow' to better capture the concept of shefa (divine emanation or abundance) and 'extremities' as a more literal rendering of 'ketzavot'. This might be preferable for readers more familiar with other kabbalistic terminology.

[C] Or: "the inner chambers of Understanding" — This alternate translation makes the text more accessible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology by translating 'Binah' as 'Understanding' while maintaining the metaphor of inner chambers or rooms of wisdom.

[1] This reflects the rabbinic position that human gestation can extend to 12 months, which differs from the modern medical understanding but was an accepted belief in traditional Jewish texts.

[2] The author presents a kabbalistic interpretation of the Jewish festival calendar, where the flow of divine energy follows a pattern from Sukkot (fall) to Passover (spring) and back, with each festival representing different divine attributes (sefirot).

[i] The 'seven extremities' (sheva ketzavot) refers to the six lower sefirot (Chesed through Yesod) plus Malkhut, which together form the divine channels through which life-sustaining energy flows to humans. In kabbalistic thought, death occurs when this flow is interrupted.

[ii] This quotes Psalm 90:10, connecting the typical human lifespan to the kabbalistic structure of the seven lower sefirot, each corresponding to ten years of life.

[iii] This describes Binah (Understanding) as 'mother of children,' a common kabbalistic term for this sefirah that generates the lower attributes. It is associated with Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) but contains aspects of mercy as well.

מפסח שהוא הימין והולכים נגד
סוכות שהוא השמאל ונכללים
בו וכל זה מתראה בבטן האם
העליונה בינה. על כן האדם החי
שמונים שנה עולה עד הגבורות
עליונות ומושפע מהם וזהו ואם
בגבורות שמונים שנה[i] ומשם
ולמעלה הוא ודאי קרוב למיתה
מן החיים כדאמרי׳ בגיטין אבל
אם הגיע למאה חוזר חלילה על
דרך נעוץ סופן בתחלתן[ii] ועל
זה אמרו כיון דאפלג אפלג
אבל עיקר סדר זמנים למטה
במקומן שמשם משפיעים למטה
הם שבעים ולכן האבילות הוא
שבעת ימים שהוא היקף אחד
קטן נגד ההיקף הגדול מז׳
שביעיות ודי זה במדת פורענות
המעוטה. וג׳ ימים הראשונים
צריך התעוררות רחמים כיון
שגופו קיים ולא נבקע בריסו
להוציא ממנו הרפש וטיט וכחות
הטומאה שנתעבר מהם מקשקשים
ומפעמים אותו כצירים בבטן
המלאה כאשר ידרש לפנינו
בגזרת עירין והוא עיקר חיבוט
הקבר[iii] ומירוק הזוהמא[iv] ע״ד
חביט ולא בריך[v] שהם ו׳ עונות

the straits” (the Three Weeks), because they emerge from Passover, which is on the right, and progress toward Sukkot, which is on the left, and are included within it. All of this appears in the womb of the supernal Mother, Binah. 35R

Therefore, a person who lives eighty years rises to the level of the supernal Gevurot and receives their influence. This is the meaning of “and if by strength, eighty years.” Beyond this age, one is certainly closer to death than to life, as stated in Gittin. 40R

However, if one reaches one hundred, the cycle begins again, based on the principle that “their end is wedged in their beginning.” Hence they said, “once one has gone beyond the midpoint, he has gone beyond.” But the primary order of time below, in their place from which they influence downward, is seventy years. Therefore, the mourning period is seven days, a small cycle corresponding to the large cycle of seven sets of seven,[1] and this is sufficient for the measure of minimal retribution. 45R 50R

During the first three days, an arousal of mercy is needed, since the body is still intact and the abdomen has not split open to expel the mud, filth, and forces of impurity with which it became pregnant.[A] These forces rattle and pulse within it like labor pains[2] in a full womb, as will be explained later by divine decree. This is the essence of the “beating of the grave” and the purification 55R 60R

[A] Or: “forces of ritual impurity that impregnated it” — This alternate translation shifts the agency in the metaphor, suggesting that impurity forces actively impregnated the body rather than the body becoming pregnant with them. This might better capture the original meaning of the Hebrew verb ‘nitaber’ in this context.

[1] The author draws a parallel between the seven days of mourning and the seventy years of human life, viewing both as complete cycles of seven (either days or decades), reflecting the kabbalistic principle that microcosm mirrors macrocosm.

[2] The text employs birth imagery to describe the post-mortem process, suggesting that death and the subsequent physical decay involve a kind of ‘spiritual labor’ that eventually delivers the soul from its material attachments.

[i] Another quote from Psalm 90:10, which the author interprets kabbalistically to mean that those who live to eighty years have spiritually accessed the level of Gevurah (the sefirah of Strength/Judgment).

[ii] This phrase comes from Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation), an early kabbalistic text. It refers to the cyclical nature of existence, where endings connect back to beginnings.

[iii] Chibut HaKever (the Beating of the Grave) refers to a post-mortem purification process in Jewish mystical tradition where the soul experiences discomfort as it separates from physical attachments.

[iv] This refers to the purification of spiritual impurity (zohama) that attached to humanity after Adam’s sin. Death and the subsequent processes are seen as means to cleanse this metaphysical contamination.

[v] This Aramaic phrase meaning ‘beat but do not bless’ refers to the ritual of beating willow branches on Hoshanah Rabbah without reciting a blessing. The author draws a parallel to the soul’s purification process after death.

נגד הו׳ שבעות שפגם בהם כי
בראשון עדיין נער הוא מיצר
טוב או כנגד שלשה בתי דינים
עליונים שכנגדם היו בעזרה
שלשה בתי דינין כדתנן במתני׳
ולכן הם ג׳ ימים לקטן ולגדול
ששם הוא. והם ע״ב שעות לג׳
ימים. עוד למרק פגם נפש
רוח ונשמה בבי״ע[i] לכן ג׳
לבכי לעורר עליו הרחמים
בכח הדמעות בנדרש למעלה.
ובירו׳ פרק אלו מגלחין תני
בר קפרא עד ג׳ ימים תקפו
של אבל למה שצורת הפנים
ניכרת ואולי כי בזה ימצאו
המקטרגים מקום לקטרג נגדו
כמאמר הכתוב הכרת פניהם
ענתה בם ואמרו בויקרא רבה
פי״ח ר׳ יהושע דסכנין בשם
ר׳ לוי כל תלתא יומין נפשא
טייסא על גופא[ii] סברא דאיהו
חזרא לה וביון דהיא חמאה
ליה דאשתני זיוהון דאפוהי היא
אזלת לה. ז׳ להספד בהגהוהי
עליו כדאמרו רז״ל שנפשו
פוקדת לגופו ומתאבלת עליו
כל ז׳ דכתיב ויבא אברהם שהיא
הנשמה לספוד לשרה שהיא
הגוף[iii] ולבכותה וחוזרת מביתו
לקברו ואין לה רשות ללכת לפני
השכינה עד ז׳ ימים וההספד
הוא זכרון חסדי המת כ״כ ר״ח
בפירושיו כנראה במועד קטן
מהספד דר׳ פדת וסדר הספד אב of defilement,[A] in the manner of "beat but do not bless." These correspond to the six time periods, against the six sets of seven in which one has damaged, for at first one is still a youth with a good inclination. Or they correspond to the three supernal courts of judgment, paralleled by the three courts in the Temple courtyard, as taught in the Mishnah. Therefore, there are three days of mourning for both minor and adult, where it applies, comprising seventy-two hours over three days. Additionally, to purify the blemish of Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah in the worlds of Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, there are three days for weeping, to arouse mercy through the power of tears, as explained above. 65R 70R 75R

In the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "Eilu Megalchin," Bar Kappara taught that for three days the intensity of mourning corresponds to the recognizable facial features of the deceased. Perhaps this is because during this time accusers can find grounds to prosecute against the deceased, as Scripture states, "The expression of their faces testifies against them." In Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 18, Rabbi Joshua of Sakhnin said in the name of Rabbi Levi: "For three days, the soul hovers over the body, thinking it will return to it.[1] But when it sees that the radiance of the face has changed, it departs." 80R 85R 90R

Seven days are for eulogizing, as our Sages said, for the soul visits the body and mourns it for all seven days, as it is written: "And Abraham came"—which refers to the Neshamah—"to mourn for Sarah"—which refers to the body—"and to weep for her." The soul returns from its home to the 95R

[A] Or: "the primary process of chibut ha-kever (grave-beating) and the scouring away of spiritual contamination" — This alternate translation retains the Hebrew term 'chibut ha-kever' which has specific connotations in Jewish mystical literature that aren't fully captured by the English translation. It also more vividly conveys the intensive purification process with 'scouring away' rather than the more passive 'purification'.

[1] This reflects the Jewish mystical belief that the soul remains near the body for three days after death, gradually accepting the reality of its separation from physical existence.

[i] An acronym for the three lower spiritual worlds in Kabbalah: Beriah (Creation), Yetzirah (Formation), and Asiyah (Action). The text suggests that the three days of mourning correspond to purification in these three realms.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase means 'the soul hovers over the body,' describing the initial stage after death when the soul is still attached to its physical vessel before fully departing.

[iii] This is a kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 23:2, where Abraham's mourning for Sarah is read allegorically as the soul (neshamah) mourning for the body.

בית דין וכמו שלמעלה בגן עדן
מכריזין מעשיו כאשר הבטיח מי
שהגיד למהרר״י קארו בדוגמא
זו עושים למטה ובזה מעוררים
אורות מעשיו בשמים ובארץ.
ואין להספיד אלא כפי כבודו של
אדם כדאמרי׳ במועד קטן ועיין
מזה בזהר פ׳ ויחי דף רל״ב ע״ב.
וההספד למת הוא תועלת גדול׳
כי ע״י הדמעות יופתחו למת
שערי דמעה העליונים שערים
המסולקים מן הדין כאמרם כל
השערים ננעלו ושערי דמעה
לא ננעלו[i] אמנם צריך שתהיה
כוונת הבכי לתועלת הנפש
ולא לתועלת החומר כדרך
הנשים הקלות ודוד המלך ע״ה
יוכיח שאמר אני הולך אליו.
ובענין אבשלום שהיה חוטא
בכה בני אבשלום עד שהצילו
מז׳ מדורות שבגיהנם[ii] ואף
אם היה צדיק שבצדיקים צריך
להספידו וכ״ש שבזה יתעוררו
הרחמים עליו ועל הדור כלו
ויגרמו שישתלשל ממנו במותו
צדיק כמותו לתועלת העולם
ולתועלת הדור כדכתיב ונר ה׳
טרם יכבה[iii] וכן אמרו יום שמת
פלוני נולד פלוני ועוד כי צדקת
הצדיק תועיל לזרעו אף אם אינם
צדיקים ובלבד שלא יהיו רשעים
גמורים עיין מזה בריקאנ״טי פ׳ וירא. ובזהר פ׳ פקודי דף רמ״ז grave,[1] but it has no permission to appear before the Divine Presence until seven days have passed. The eulogy is a remembrance of the deceased's acts of kindness, as Rabbeinu Chananel explains in his commentaries, as evident from the account in Moed Katan regarding the eulogy of Rabbi Pedat and the order of eulogy for the head of the court. Just as in the Garden of Eden they proclaim one's deeds,[2] as promised by the one who revealed to Rabbi Joseph Karo, similarly they do below, thereby arousing the lights of one's deeds in heaven and on earth. 100R 105R

One should only eulogize according to the honor appropriate for the person, as stated in Moed Katan, and see also the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, page 232b. The eulogy benefits the deceased greatly, for through the tears, the gates of tears above are opened for the deceased—gates that are removed from judgment, as they said, "All gates are locked, but the gates of tears are not locked." However, the intention of the weeping must be for the benefit of the soul, not for the physical body, as is the manner of frivolous women. King David proves this point, for he said, "I will go to him." Regarding Absalom, who was sinful, David cried, "My son Absalom," until he saved him from the seven chambers of Gehenna.[3] Even if the deceased was the most righteous of the righteous, one must eulogize him, and certainly by doing so, mercy will be aroused for him and for the entire generation. This will cause another righteous person like him to be brought forth at his death for the benefit of the world and the generation, as it is written, "And the lamp of the Lord had not yet gone out," and as they said, "On the day that so-and-so died, so-and-so was 110R 115R 120R 125R

[1] The text describes a Jewish mystical belief that during the seven days of mourning, the soul moves between different states: its new spiritual dwelling, the grave site, and eventually presenting itself before the Divine Presence.

[2] This refers to the mystical belief that when a soul arrives in the Garden of Eden, its earthly deeds are publicly announced, corresponding to the eulogy given below in this world.

[3] This illustrates the Jewish mystical belief in the redemptive power of tears and mourning—that sincere grief expressed by the living can actually alter the deceased's spiritual fate in the afterlife.

[i] This refers to the Talmudic teaching (Bava Metzia 59a) that while the gates of prayer may sometimes be closed, the gates of tears are never locked, meaning sincere tears always reach God.

[ii] According to Jewish mystical tradition, Gehenna (the realm of spiritual purification after death) consists of seven chambers or levels, each corresponding to different categories of sins requiring purification.

[iii] This quotes 1 Samuel 3:3, which the author interprets mystically to mean that when one righteous person departs, divine providence ensures that another arises to maintain spiritual light in the world.

130 תמצא כוונת הדמעות הנשפכות
על הצדיקים ועליית הנשמות
בהיכל ראשון מהקדושה. ועיין
בפ׳ ר׳ אליעזר דאורג חיוב
הבכי והספד על אדם כשר
135 ועונש המתעצל בהספדו ובפ׳
אלו מגלחין חכם שמת הכל
קרוביו וכו׳ וכן במס׳ כלה פרק
בן עזאי ובפ״ק דמגילה ובפ״ק
דברכות. ואסיפת הצדיקים בעון
140 בני הדור הוא בסוף פ׳ חלק
ובקמא פ׳ הכונס ובמציעא פ׳
השוכר את הפועלים ובסוטה פ׳
היה נוטל ובבתרא פ׳ המוכר
את הספינה ובפ׳ אלו מגלחין
145 ובפ״ק דברכות. ומצוואת רבי
מי שנטפל בי בחיי ימפל בי
במותי בפי דעת מדרש רבה בפ׳
צו הובא בירו׳ דכלאים ובפ׳
הנושא בגמרא וביפה תואר בפ׳
150 י״א משם ג״כ נראה נחת רוח שיש
למת בהספדו: [i]

born."[1] Additionally, the righteousness of the righteous benefits his descendants, even if they are not righteous, provided they are not completely wicked. See Recanati on Parashat Vayera regarding this. 130R

In the Zohar, Parashat Pekudei, page 247, you will find the significance of tears shed for the righteous and the ascent of souls in the first chamber of holiness. See also the chapter on Rabbi Eliezer the Weaver regarding the obligation to weep and eulogize a worthy person and the punishment for one who neglects his eulogy, and in the chapter "Eilu Megalchin" that when a sage dies, all are considered his relatives, etc., and similarly in Tractate Kallah, chapter Ben Azzai, and in the first chapter of Megillah, and in the first chapter of Berakhot. The gathering of the righteous due to the sin of the generation is discussed at the end of the chapter "Chelek," and in Bava Kamma, chapter "HaKones," and in Bava Metzia, chapter "HaSocher et HaPoalim," and in Sotah, chapter "Hayah Notel," and in Bava Batra, chapter "HaMocher et HaSefinah," and in the chapter "Eilu Megalchin," and in the first chapter of Berakhot. From Rabbi Yehudah HaNasi's testament: "Whoever attended to me in my life should attend to me in my death," according to the Midrash Rabbah in Parashat Tzav, cited in the Jerusalem Talmud of Kilayim and in the chapter "HaNosseh" in the Gemara, and in Yefeh Toar in chapter 11. From there too, it is 135R 140R 145R 150R 155R

[1] This reflects the Talmudic concept that there is cosmic balance in the world, with the sun of one righteous person setting as another rises, ensuring continuity of spiritual leadership across generations.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, 232b — The Zohar passage cited reinforces the author's point about eulogies, explaining how they create cosmic reverberations that assist the deceased's soul in its journey and elevate it in the supernal worlds. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei, 247 — The Zohar explains the mystical function of tears shed during mourning, describing how they create channels between this world and supernal realms, allowing the deceased's soul to ascend through the 'first chamber of holiness.' | Cf. Psalm 90:10 — The author interprets this verse kabbalistically, connecting the seventy-year lifespan to the seven lower sefirot (each representing ten years) and the eighty-year lifespan to accessing the level of Gevurah (spiritual strength/judgment). | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) — The author uses this concept from Sefer Yetzirah to explain why reaching one hundred years represents a return to the beginning of the cycle, illustrating the kabbalistic understanding of life as a circular rather than linear journey. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Ketubot, Chapter 1 — The author cites this as the authoritative source for the seven-day mourning period, showing how this practice has divine origins through Moses and establishing a balance between joy and sorrow in Jewish lifecycle events. | Cf. Vayikra Rabbah, Chapter 18 — The author uses this source to explain why the first three days of mourning are particularly intense—because during this time the soul is still closely connected to the body, hoping to return to it, creating a period of spiritual instability and need for mercy. | Cf. 1 Samuel 3:3 — The author interprets this verse metaphorically to suggest that God ensures continuity of spiritual light in the world by causing new righteous souls to be born as others depart, maintaining divine illumination through human vessels.

apparent that the deceased derives satisfaction from his eulogy.

פרק כ׳

Chapter 20

הנה זאת חקרנוה כן היא שכל עסקי החי עם המת צריך כוונה גדולה שדבר זה היאך יתייחס למעלה כתבו רז״ל כי הוא קשה מאוד להיותו רמז לסוד הספירות המתעלמות ומסתלקות לנרתקן למעלה מעלה.[i] וכמה צריך לתקנם להרחיצם מכל חלאת עון להלבישם לבנים לבוני הספירות באור המעשה הטוב להתעלות בסוד אחד לקשרם למעלה ולשאת אותם על הכתף סוד עילוי הספירות אחת אל אחת עד שיתעלו למעלה מהכתף לסוד רישא עילאה סוד ההעלם שאין השגה בו. ובקבורה יכוין לסוד ויקבור אותו בגי ומתרגמינן בתליסר מכילי דרחמי שהן נובעות בכתר בבחינותיו הפונות למטה לרחם אל התחתונים ולכן י״ג מדות שהם בדיקנא יקירא דאריך יקראו תקונים[ii] פי׳ שרשי הנמצאים במפורש אצלנו בקונטרס מיוחד לדרוש הלז ומסוד עלית הכתף יעלה הנקבר אל העדן העליון חכמה

Behold, we have investigated this matter and determined that all interactions between the living and the dead require great intention, for how these matters relate to the supernal realms is, as our Sages of blessed memory wrote, extremely difficult to comprehend, as they allude to the mystery of the divine emanations (sefirot) that conceal themselves and ascend to their sheaths above.[A] How necessary it is to rectify them, to cleanse them from all filth of sin, to clothe them in white garments that build the sefirot through the light of good deeds, to elevate them in a unified mystery, to bind them above, and to bear them upon the shoulder—the secret of elevating the sefirot[1] one to another—until they ascend above the shoulder to the mystery of the Supernal Head, the mystery of concealment that cannot be grasped.[B]

In burial, one should focus on the secret of "and he buried him in the valley,"[2] which we translate as "through the thirteen attributes of mercy" that flow from the Crown (Keter) in its aspects that face downward to show compassion to those below. Therefore, the thirteen attributes that are in the precious beard of Arich Anpin are called "rectifications," meaning the roots of all existence, as we have explained in our special treatise on this teaching. From the secret of the elevation of the shoulder, the buried one ascends to the supernal Eden, the Wisdom within [A] Or: "to their supernal vessels" — The term 'nartikan' (נרתקן) literally means 'their sheaths' or 'their vessels,' referring to the containers or coverings of the divine light. 'Supernal vessels' might better convey the mystical concept of divine containment vessels in the upper worlds.

[B] Or: "the mystery of the Supreme Head, the mystery of that which is hidden beyond comprehension" — This alternate translation might better convey the ultimate transcendence and incomprehensibility of the highest divine level (Keter) in kabbalistic thought.

[1] The Hebrew uses metaphorical language of physically carrying the sefirot 'on the shoulder,' which represents the process of elevating divine emanations through specific spiritual intentions during burial rituals.

[2] This is a reference to Deuteronomy 34:6 describing Moses' burial, which the text interprets kabbalistically to refer to the thirteen attributes of mercy.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the divine emanations (sefirot) withdraw into their concealed, higher state at the time of death, requiring specific rituals to help them properly realign.

[ii] In Kabbalah, the 'precious beard of Arich Anpin' refers to the thirteen attributes of mercy configured in the highest divine countenance, which are called 'tikkunim' (rectifications) because they represent the primordial channels through which divine compassion flows into creation.

שבכתר וצריך התישבות הדעת
בזה מאד וכמו שכמה פעמים
30 יסתרו המדות ויתעלמו גם
הגוף יסתתר ויתעלם בקבר.
ולזה אחרית הכל המות עד כי
יבולע ויתוקן העולם בכללו.
והצדיק במותו נכנס ליהנות
35 בסוד ארבע מאות כסף[i] והיינו
ד׳ אותיות סתומות עליונות
שסודם נעלם למעלה עד הכתר
ועובר ונמשך למטה אל הסוחר
שהוא יסוד והצדיקים נהנים
40 מאותם ד׳ מאות אורות שהם
מאריך אנפין ע״י גלוים ביסוד
שהוא הסוחר המחזר ומסבב
בעיירות ולזה נתן אברהם ד׳
מאות שקל בסף הגשמיים כדי
45 לזכות לד׳ מאה עלמין דכסופא.
ואחר שבעת ימי ההספד תקנו ל׳
יום לגיהוץ ולתספורת שקודם
שתהיה הנשמה מגוהצת ומסולקת
מכחות חומריות ומכתמיה
50 אפי׳ יהיו מעטים צריך לפחות
שלשים יום. ועוד רמז שלשים
יום יהיו בסוד השלשים שנה
הנאמרים במראה יחזקאל שהם
שלשים מדרגות עשר בעולם
55 העשיה ומשם לעשר שבעולם
היצירה ומשם לעשר שבבריאה
שלשים מעלות אלו צריך שתעלה
הנשמה קודם שתזכה להיות
צרורה בצרור החיים את ה׳

Crown, and this requires deep contemplation. Just as the divine attributes are sometimes concealed, so too the body is hidden and concealed in the grave. 30R
Therefore, death is the end of all things until the world is perfected in its entirety.

The righteous person, at death, enters to enjoy the mystery of "four hundred shekels of silver," referring to the four supernal sealed letters whose secret is 35R concealed above, reaching to the Crown, and flowing downward to "the merchant," which is Foundation (Yesod). The righteous enjoy those four hundred lights that emanate from Arich Anpin[A] through their revelation in Foundation, which is the merchant who 40R circulates and traverses the towns. This is why Abraham gave four hundred physical shekels of silver, in order to merit the four hundred worlds of delight.

After the seven days of mourning, they established thirty days for laundering and haircutting,[1] because before the soul becomes cleansed and freed from material forces and stains, even minor ones, at least thirty days are required. There is also an allusion that these thirty days correspond to the "thirty years" mentioned in Ezekiel's vision, which 50R represent thirty levels: ten in the World of Action (Asiyah), ten in the World of Formation (Yetzirah), and ten in the World of Creation (Beriah). The soul must ascend through these thirty levels before it merits to be bound in the bundle of life[B] with 55R the Lord God in the World of Emanation (Atzilut). This requires great merit according to its ascent and clothing, as it is said: "The garments of the unlearned are impure for the Pharisees,[2] and the

[A] Or: "four hundred lights that originate in the Long Countenance" — While 'Arich Anpin' is a technical kabbalistic term that is often left untranslated, 'the Long Countenance' is its literal meaning and might help readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology better understand the concept.

[B] Or: "until it merits to be gathered into the bond of eternal life" — The phrase 'tzror hachayyim' (צרור החיים) is traditionally translated as 'bundle of life,' but 'bond of eternal life' might better convey the meaning of eternal connection and preservation of the soul in its divine source.

[1] This refers to the traditional mourning period called shloshim (thirty days), during which mourners refrain from laundering clothes and cutting hair. The text provides mystical reasons for these specific prohibitions.

[2] This is a reference to a Talmudic concept (Chagigah 18b) which the author uses metaphorically to explain how souls must be properly 'clothed' or prepared to ascend through various spiritual levels.

[i] This is a kabbalistic interpretation of Abraham's purchase of the Cave of Machpelah for 400 shekels of silver (Genesis 23:16), suggesting that this physical transaction had a spiritual parallel, creating merit that allows righteous souls to enjoy divine illumination after death.

אלהים באצילות[i] וצריך זכות רב כפי עלייתה והתלבשותה ע״ד בגדי ע״ה מדרם לפרושים ובגדי פרושים וכו׳ ואמרו טבל לקל לא טבל לחמור וטבילת קדשים צריכה כוונה.[ii] משא״כ טבילה לחולין. ועיין מסוד שלשים שנה הנזכר בר״מ פ׳ פנחס ואמרו בתקונים כי ל׳ שנה דיחזקאל הם רמז לשלשה חיות התחתונים שהם נצח הוד יסוד והיו על מטטרו״ן הנקרא נהר כבר שהוא נהר דינור מצד הגבורה. והוא רכב לעמודא דאמצעיתא ואיהו רכב אש וסוסי אש. ולפי זה טעם הל׳ יום יהיה להמתיק בחינות הדינים שבל׳ מעלות אלו כי עד שם מגיע קטרוג החצונים לבר במדורין. והמתקתם בסוד גלויים במלכות שמשם מוצא הדינין[iii] ובה בחינת הימים כנודע. אבל עולה ל״ג רמז שבאבלותו על המת מכוין להמתיק ל׳ בחות אלו במלכות ובזה יומתקו שלשה שרשיהם למעלה במקורן. ובתשלום מחזור קטן של הלבנה משם ולהלאה יחלש הדין על הנפטר. ולמעלה כתבנו טעם אחר בזה. על כן אין להתאבל לגדול שבישראל יותר מל׳ יום, מי לנו גדול ממשה שלא בכו אותו אלא ל׳ יום[iv] ואחרי כן כתיב ויתמו ימי בכי אבל משה. וחכמים garments of the Pharisees..." And they said: "One who has immersed for a minor impurity has not immersed for a major impurity," and "immersion for sacred things requires intention," unlike immersion for mundane matters.

Examine the secret of the "thirty years" mentioned in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas. In the Tikkunim, they said that the "thirty years" of Ezekiel allude to the three lower living creatures, which are Netzach, Hod, and Yesod, and they were upon Metatron, who is called "the river Chebar," which is the River of Fire from the side of Gevurah. He is the chariot for the central column, and he is a chariot of fire and horses of fire. According to this, the purpose of the thirty days is to sweeten the aspects of judgment[A] in these thirty levels, for up to that point the accusation of external forces reaches into the chambers. Their sweetening occurs through their revelation in Malkhut, which is the source of judgments and contains the aspect of days, as is known.

However, the number thirty-three alludes to the fact that in mourning for the dead, one intends to sweeten these thirty powers in Malkhut, and thereby their three roots above in their source are sweetened. At the completion of the moon's small cycle, from then onward, the judgment upon the departed weakens. Above, we wrote another reason for this. Therefore, one should not mourn even for the greatest in Israel more than thirty days. Who was greater than Moses, for whom they wept only thirty days? Afterward it says, "The days of weeping in mourning for Moses were completed." The Sages thought to mourn for our holy Rabbi for an entire year, until [A] Or: "to mitigate the manifestations of divine severity" — While 'sweeten the judgments' is the literal translation of the kabbalistic term, 'mitigate the manifestations of divine severity' might better convey the theological concept to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[i] Being 'bound in the bundle of life' is a biblical phrase (from I Samuel 25:29) that has become central to Jewish conceptions of the afterlife, appearing in traditional burial liturgy. Here it specifically refers to the soul reaching the highest spiritual world of Atzilut (Emanation).

[ii] This is a Talmudic principle about ritual immersion, applied metaphorically to the soul's journey: just as someone who has immersed for a minor impurity is not considered purified for a major impurity, and immersion for sacred purposes requires specific intention, so too the soul's elevation through spiritual realms requires proper intention and preparation.

[iii] In Kabbalah, 'sweetening the judgments' refers to the process of tempering divine severity with mercy. This occurs specifically through Malkhut (Kingdom), which is the divine attribute where judgments first take form before manifesting in our world.

[iv] This refers to Deuteronomy 34:8, which states that the Israelites mourned Moses for thirty days. The text uses this as the basis for limiting mourning periods even for the most revered spiritual leaders.

היו סבורים להתאבל על רבינו
הקדוש שנה תמימה עד שמצאו
מקרא זה במשה עוד אמרו שלכל
מזל יש לו ל׳ מעלות ותנועת
השמש תחתיו ושולטנותו הוא
שלשים יום בקרוב וגם בחינת
ל׳ יום הם מחזור ממזל אחד
ולכן ל׳ יום בשנה חשוב שנה.
ואיסור הגיהוץ והתספורת אולי
יהיה על דרך שאמרו בבן על
אביו שחייב לומר על אביו
בעת שמזכירו בשנה ראשונה
הריני כפרת משכבו ופרש״י ז״ל
שמקבל עליו כל מין דין מוכן
לחול על אביו. ואמרו במדרש
הנעלם כי נשמתה דאתחזיא
לקבלא ענשה אזלת לבר בעלמא
ומפקדת ליה לאתריה תריסר
ירחי שתא בבי קברי ובעלמא.
ולכן כל שנים עשר חדש יאמר
הריני כפרת משכבו מלבד עוד.
כי דיני אש ומים בגיהנם הם ו׳
חדשים בכל אחד מהם. נתבאר
בזהר חלק א׳ דף רל״ח ע״ב
ופירש דאמרי זה ואח״כ ווי.
וטעם כי משפט רשעים בגיהנם
י״ב חדש ולא פחות[i] עיין פרשת
פקודי דף רס״ג ע״א ובפ׳ בא
אמר דשולטנותא דסטרא אחרא
אינו רק י״ב חדש ולא יותר כי
די בצוק העתים למרק בסיבוב
י״ב מזלות נגד הפגם שפגם ימיו
בסבובם וכל יום ויום גבה חובו
ממנו במחזור הזה בדין המשפ״ט
ששם תקופת השנ״ה כנודע ולכן
משפטי גיהנם חציים הם מצד
ימין וחציים מצד שמאל באש
ובמים ואח״כ ותוציאנו לרויה.
ושם פ׳ פקודי מתבאר הממונה
לשבר עיני האדם בקבר. והאוחז

they found this verse about Moses.

They also said that each zodiacal sign has thirty levels, and the sun's movement beneath it and its dominion lasts approximately thirty days. Also, the period of thirty days represents a cycle from one zodiacal sign, and therefore thirty days in a year is considered a year. The prohibition of laundering and haircutting may be in line with what they said about a son for his father, that he is obligated to say for his father when mentioning him in the first year, "I am the atonement for his resting place." Rashi of blessed memory explained that he takes upon himself all types of judgment ready to befall his father.

In the Hidden Midrash, they said that the soul that is destined to receive punishment wanders outside in the world and visits its place for twelve months of the year in the cemetery and in the world. Therefore, for all twelve months one should say, "I am the atonement for his resting place," in addition to the fact that the judgments of fire and water in Gehenna each last six months. This is explained in the Zohar, Part 1, page 238b, which states that they say this and afterward "woe." The reason is that the judgment of the wicked in Gehenna lasts twelve months and not less, as examined in Parashat Pekudei, page 263a. In Parashat Bo, it says that the dominion of the Other Side is only twelve months and no more,[1] for it suffices in troubling times to purify through the cycle of the twelve zodiac signs, countering the blemish caused during their cycle, and each day extracts its debt from him in this cycle, in the judgment of justice, where the seasonal cycle of the year is found, as is known. Therefore, the judgments of Gehenna are half from the right side and half from the left side, in fire and water, and afterward "You brought us out to abundance."[2]

In Parashat Pekudei, the appointed one who breaks a person's eyes in the grave is explained, as well as the one who seizes the soul. On page 244, the source of the three drops of gall is explained,

[1] The 'Other Side' (Sitra Achra) refers to forces of impurity or evil in kabbalistic thought. The text states that their power over a soul is limited to twelve months, explaining the traditional twelve-month mourning period.

[2] This is a phrase from Psalm 66:12, used here to describe the soul's state after completing the purification process in Gehenna.

[i] This is a Talmudic teaching (Shabbat 33b) that the judgment of the wicked in Gehenna lasts twelve months. The text elaborates on this with kabbalistic interpretations about how this period corresponds to the twelve zodiac signs and is divided between judgments of fire and water.

הנשמה ובדף רמ״ד ביאר מוצא
הג׳ טיפי מרה ומזה בדף רס״ז.
135 ווי מאן דנשיק בהאי עלמא
נשיקין דסטרא אחרא עיין שם
ותאחז בשרך פלצות זכאה
חולקיה ממאן דאשתזיב מניה
בהאי עלמא. ובר נש זכאה איהו
140 קרבנא ממש לכפרא:[i] [ii] and on page 267: "Woe to one who kisses in this world the kisses of the Other Side."[1] See there, and let your flesh shudder. Blessed is the portion of one who is saved from it in this world. The righteous person is truly a sacrifice for atonement. 135R

פרק כ״א

Chapter 21

כשם שהבן חייב בכבוד אביו
בחייו גם במותו יקבל עליו
דינו כיון שהוא יכול להדיחו
מעליו בכח המצות והמעשים
5 טובים[iii] שיעשה כדי לחסום אותו
הדין להיותו בעולם המעשה
דברא כרעא דאבוה[iv] ומוציא

Just as a son is obligated to honor his father during his lifetime,[2] so too after his death he should accept the divine judgment upon himself, since he can avert it through the power of commandments and good deeds that he performs. This serves to block that judgment, for in the world of action, "a son is like the leg of his father,"[3] extracting him from the 5R

[1] This is a kabbalistic metaphor for improper spiritual attachments or pleasures that contaminate the soul, described in vivid terms in the Zohar.

[2] This opening establishes the work's central theme of filial obligation extending beyond death, connecting traditional mourning practices with mystical beliefs about the soul's journey.

[3] I've translated the Aramaic phrase "דברא כרעא דאבוה" which is a talmudic expression emphasizing the spiritual continuity between father and son that persists even after death.

[i] This Aramaic phrase states that 'the righteous person is truly a sacrifice for atonement,' suggesting that the suffering and death of the righteous atones for others, paralleling the sacrificial system of the Temple.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The text cites the Zohar, Parashat Pekudei (pages 263a, 244, and 267) regarding the length of judgment in Gehenna (12 months), the appointed angels who break a person's eyes in the grave, and warnings about spiritual contamination through 'kisses of the Other Side' (improper spiritual attachments). | Cf. Ezekiel's Vision — The text interprets 'thirty years' from Ezekiel's vision as representing thirty spiritual levels through which the soul must ascend after death: ten in Asiyah (World of Action), ten in Yetzirah (World of Formation), and ten in Beriah (World of Creation). | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — The text references Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd, a section of the Zohar) on Parashat Pinchas for deeper understanding of the mystical significance of the 'thirty years' mentioned in Ezekiel, connecting it to the three lower sefirot (Netzach, Hod, and Yesod) and their relationship to Metatron. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text refers to Tikkunim (Tikkunei Zohar) for an explanation of how the 'thirty years' in Ezekiel symbolize the three lower living creatures (Netzach, Hod, and Yesod) associated with Metatron, who is called 'the river Chebar' (the River of Fire from Gevurah). | Cf. Genesis 23:16 — The text interprets Abraham's payment of 'four hundred shekels of silver' for the Cave of Machpelah as having mystical significance, representing the four supernal sealed letters whose mystery extends from Keter (Crown) down to Yesod (Foundation), allowing Abraham to merit 'four hundred worlds of delight.' | Cf. Deuteronomy 34:8 — The text cites the biblical account of the Israelites mourning Moses for thirty days as proof that even for the greatest spiritual leader, mourning should not exceed thirty days, which became the basis for halakhic practice. | Cf. Midrash HaNe'elam — The text quotes the Hidden Midrash (Midrash HaNe'elam, a section of the Zohar) regarding how the soul of one destined for punishment wanders and visits its burial place for twelve months, explaining the custom of saying 'I am the atonement for his resting place' during the first year after death.

[iii] The text establishes that the actions of a child after a parent's death can directly affect the parent's judgment in the afterlife, a concept found in various rabbinic sources including the Talmud (Sanhedrin 104a).

[iv] This Aramaic phrase meaning "a son is the leg of his father" is from the Talmud (Eruvin 70b), suggesting an organic connection where the son is an extension of the father, even after death.

מסד רגליו ומוליכו על כנפי רוח ומדלה יבצעהו כדחזינן מאבוה דההוא ינוקא אשר יבא בפ׳ הבא אי״ה. ואולי יהיה דומה תקון זה למה שאומרים בסוף הודוי ואתה צדיק על כל הבא עלינו כי ג׳ שותפים יש באדם[i] והשוה הכתוב כבוד אב ואם לכבודו כ״י כדוגמא זו מי שמת לו מת אחד שחייב להתאבל עליו מחמת קורבת נפשו עם נפש הנפטר ובו עצם מעצמיה וחלק מחלקיה לכן אמרו כי יראה עצמו כאלו חרב וכו׳. חייב להגדיל שערו[ii] שהם כחות הדין ע״ד מוטב שיכנס החץ בי.[iii] יען כי בידו להרחיק ממנו המזיק במעשיו וישם מגן לו להצילו מרעתו בעוף שהיא התורה[iv] המגביה ומסלק כל בני רשף. וכמו שאותה הנשמה הנפטרת אינה לובשת מחלצות לעולם עד אחר הל׳ יום[v] להתראות לפני קדושי עליון ולהסתופף בצילם כמו כן קרובו אשר כנפשו לא ילבש בגד מגוהץ על בשרו וגם לא יציע תחתיו כי עדיין אין למתו לבוש לשכון בתוך מנוחתו תחתיו ובמקומו על כן ראוי ומחוייב בכל הל׳ יום לבקש עליו רחמים יום וליל לא ישבות בכל עונה foundation of his feet, carrying him on the wings of the wind, and lifting him up,[1] as we will see from the father of that child who will be mentioned in the following chapter, God willing. Perhaps this rectification is similar to what we say at the end of confession: "You are righteous concerning all that has come upon us," for there are three partners in the creation of a human being, and Scripture equates honoring father and mother with honoring God. 10R 15R

Similarly, one who has lost a relative whom he is obligated to mourn because of the closeness of his soul to the soul of the deceased—containing "bone of his bones and portion of his portions"—therefore they said that he should see himself as if he were destroyed, etc. He is obligated to let his hair grow long, which represents the forces of judgment,[2] in line with the principle "better that the arrow enter me." For it is in his power to distance the harmful forces through his actions, and he can create a shield to save himself from their evil through "flying," which is Torah study that elevates and removes all the "sparks of flame."[3] 20R 25R

Just as the departed soul does not wear fine garments in the afterworld[4] until after thirty days, when it may appear before the holy ones on high and shelter in their shadow, likewise the relative who is like his own soul should not wear pressed clothing on his body, nor should he place such underneath him. For his deceased still has no garment to dwell within his resting place below him and in his place. Therefore, it is appropriate and obligatory throughout the 30R 35R

[1] The Hebrew "ומדלה יבצעהו" has complex imagery that's difficult to capture precisely in English. It suggests the son's actions can elevate the father's soul to higher spiritual realms.

[2] The term "כחות הדין" refers to the kabbalistic concept of divine judgment (din) that affects the soul after death, which the mourning practices are meant to mitigate.

[3] "בני רשף" is a biblical phrase from Job 5:7 that's used metaphorically here to represent harmful spiritual forces that Torah study can neutralize.

[4] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that souls must undergo a period of purification before receiving their spiritual "garments" (מחלצות) in the afterlife.

[i] Reference to the Talmudic teaching (Kiddushin 30b) that there are three partners in the creation of a person: the father, the mother, and God.

[ii] This refers to the mourning practice of not cutting one's hair, which the author interprets kabbalistically as allowing the forces of judgment to affect the mourner rather than the deceased.

[iii] This expression suggests that the mourner is willing to take upon himself some of the judgment that might otherwise affect the deceased, through his mourning practices.

[iv] The author uses the metaphor of "flying" to represent Torah study, which elevates the soul above harmful spiritual forces. This connects to the biblical verse "as birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem" (Isaiah 31:5).

[v] The author presents a kabbalistic belief that the soul cannot wear its spiritual garments until 30 days after death, which parallels the mourning restriction against wearing freshly pressed clothes.

להזכירו לטוב לפני שוכן מעונה
ולעשות לו ג״כ זכרון נשמות
לפחות בכל שבת[i] כאשר יבא
טעם לזה. וכן נהגו בני ספרד
בהשכבת מתיהם[ii] וכבר נתנו
טעם לשבח למנהג זה, הפוסקים.
וטוב להרגיל לפחות פעם אחד
בכל יום מהל׳ ובפרט אם הנפטר
היה ת״ח והיה לו בית מיוחד
לעסוק בו בתורה. וכ״ש אם היה
מחזיק ישיבה. בניו ובני ביתו או
החזן אם אינון לאו בר הכי ודאי
כי יעשו לו נחת רוח ורווחא
לנשמתיה להשכיבו שם בכל
הל׳ יום ואם יהיה בסוד ישרים
ועדה מה טוב ונעים. ואמרו בפ׳
ויקהל דף ר״ט לית נשמתא דלא
תקבל עונשא תלתין יומין[iii] עד
לא תיעול לגינתא וכן ישכיבוהו
בסוף החדש והשנה. והפסוקים
עם המזמורים מיוחדים שיבואו
בסדרנו הנה הנם ראויים והגונים
לבקש רחמים על האדם גם אחר
פטירתו והחכמים יוסיפו עליהם
מדעתם: שבנו וראינו שהרבה
מעשים אשר היו נעשים בטהרת
טמא מת היו מסוגלים להחליש
כח החצונים כמו שפי׳. הנה
בהזאת אפר הפרה[iv] ובשריפתה
היה מבריח אותם אשר מחוץ
למחנה מושבם. לכן שחיטתה
ושריפתה היתה שם פוק חזי
בפ׳ חקת דף קפ״א. ומזה

thirty days to seek mercy for him day and night, not ceasing at any time to mention him favorably before 40R the Dweller on High, and also to perform memorial services for his soul[1] at least every Sabbath, as the reason for this will be explained. This is the custom of Sephardic Jews in their memorial services[2] for their dead, and the legal authorities have already 45R given praiseworthy reasons for this custom.

It is good to make a habit of doing this at least once each day of the thirty, especially if the deceased was a Torah scholar and had a special house for Torah study. All the more so if he maintained a 50R yeshiva. His sons and household members, or the cantor if they are not capable, will certainly bring satisfaction to his spirit and relief to his soul by performing the memorial service there throughout the thirty days, and if it is done in the company of the 55R upright and the congregation, how good and pleasant it is.

They said in Parashat Vayakhel, page 209,
“There is no soul that does not receive punishment for thirty days before entering the garden.”[3] There- 60R fore, they should hold memorial services at the end of the month and the year. The verses and special psalms that will appear in our arrangement are appropriate and fitting to seek mercy for a person even after his death, and the wise will add to them 65R according to their understanding.

We have reflected and observed that many actions performed in the purification of one defiled by contact with the dead were effective in weakening the power of external forces,[4] as explained. Indeed, 70R the sprinkling of the red heifer’s ashes and its burn-

[1] The term “זכרון נשמות” refers to formal prayers and rituals for the deceased, similar to what’s now called Yizkor or Hashkavah services.
[2] The text specifically references Sephardic practices (“בני ספרד”) regarding memorial services, showing awareness of different customs within Judaism.
[3] “גינתא” (the garden) is a reference to Gan Eden or Paradise, the spiritual realm where righteous souls dwell after death according to Jewish tradition.
[4] “כח החצונים” refers to negative spiritual entities in kabbalistic thought that can interfere with the soul’s peaceful transition to the afterlife.

[i] Refers to the custom of reciting memorial prayers (Yizkor/Hashkavah) for the deceased, particularly on Sabbaths when the soul is believed to experience additional elevation.
[ii] Refers to the Sephardic custom of reciting Hashkavah (memorial prayer) rather than the Ashkenazic Yizkor, highlighting the author’s awareness of different Jewish customs.
[iii] This Zoharic teaching that all souls undergo judgment for thirty days before entering the Garden of Eden provides the mystical basis for many thirty-day mourning practices.
[iv] Reference to the ritual of the red heifer (Numbers 19), which was used for purification after contact with the dead. The author interprets this ritual kabbalistically as driving away negative spiritual forces.

יצא לנו טעם לכוונת הרבה
תקונים שמנהג לעשות עם המתים
להשלים חסד של אמת. הצדקה
שנותנים לכופר נפשם[i] מכפרת
עליהם על הדרך שכתב רבינו
ירוחם וספר התניא ומהרר״י
קארו ואחרים. וכן הזכרת
נשמתם ובן יכבד אב גם אחר
מותו[ii] באשר הובא בזהר סוף
פ׳ בחקותי על פסוק בן יכבד
אב וז״ל האי בחייו. בתר דמית
אי תימא הוא פוטר מניה לאו
הכי דאע״ג דמית חייב ביקריה
יתיר דאי ההוא ברא אזיל
בארח תקלה ודאי מבזה לאבוהי
הוא והאי עביד ליה קלנא ואי
ההוא ברא אזיל בארח מישור
ותקין עובדוהי ודאי דא אוקיר
ליה בההוא עלמא גבי קב״ה.
וקב״ה חיים עליה ואותיב ליה
בכורסייא ויקריה ודאי וסיים
כי ר׳ אלעזר אוקיר אבוהי
בהאי עלמא ובההוא עלמא
השתא אסגי שבחא דר״ש בתרין
עלמין בהאי עלמא ובההוא
עלמא יתיר מחייו זכאין אינון
צדיקייא דזכאן לבנין קדישין
לגזעין קדישין עליהו אתקרי כל
רואיהם יכירום כי הם זרע ברך
ה׳. ור׳ אילא העיד לרשב״י
דבמתיבתא דרקיעא אתעטר
אבוהי דההוא ינוקא המובא
בפ׳ שלח דף קע״א ואתעטר
בשבעין עטרין וכתרין בההוא
יומא וסיים ואמר זכאה חולקיה
דמאן דזכי למילף לבריה. עוד
מזה בפ׳ בלק דף קצ״א ע״ב.
ויזהרו מאד לתקן נפש אביהם להשכים לומר הקדיש ליחד מדת

ing would drive away those forces from outside their dwelling camp. Therefore, its slaughter and burning were performed there—go and see in Parashat Chukat, page 181. From this, we derive a reason for the intention behind many practices customarily performed with the dead to complete the true kindness.[1] The charity given as atonement for their souls provides them with atonement in the manner described by Rabbeinu Yerucham, Sefer HaTanya, Rabbi Joseph Karo, and others.

Similarly, the mention of their souls and "a son honoring his father" even after his death, as brought in the Zohar at the end of Parashat Bechukotai on the verse "A son honors his father." It states: "This refers to during his lifetime. After death, if you were to say he is exempt from this, it is not so. Even though he has died, one is still obligated in his honor, even more so.[2] For if that son walks in the way of sin, he certainly dishonors his father and brings him shame. But if that son walks in the straight path and his deeds are proper, he certainly honors him in that world before the Holy One, blessed be He. And the Holy One has mercy on him and seats him on a throne and truly honors him." It concludes that Rabbi Eleazar honored his father in this world and in the next world, and now the praise of Rabbi Shimon is increased in both worlds—in this world and in the world to come—more than during his lifetime. Fortunate are the righteous who merit holy children and holy lineage, of whom it is said, "All who see them will recognize them, for they are the seed blessed by the Lord."

Rabbi Ila testified to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai that in the heavenly academy, the father of that child mentioned in Parashat Shelach, page 171, was crowned with seventy crowns and diadems on that day, and he concluded by saying, "Fortunate is the portion of one who merits to teach his son." There is more about this in Parashat Balak, page 191b.

[1] "חסד של אמת" (true kindness) is a rabbinic term specifically for kindness shown to the dead, considered the purest form of kindness since it cannot be reciprocated.

[2] The Zoharic passage quoted emphasizes that honoring parents after their death is an even greater obligation than during their lifetime.

[i] Reference to the custom of giving charity as atonement for the deceased, based on the principle that charitable acts performed in memory of the dead provide merit for their souls.

[ii] The author quotes and expands on the biblical verse "A son honors his father" (Malachi 1:6) to include post-mortem honor, using a Zoharic interpretation that extends filial obligations beyond death.

לילה ביום. וטוב שמלבד הקדיש
יתום יתמיד כל אותה שנה לומר
דברים שבקדושה בצבור כגון
הפטרות ומזמורים וכיוצא כי
הכל נותנים נייחא לנשמת אביו
ויש מי שכתב שטוב לומר הקדיש
אפי׳ בשבתות וימים טובים ור״ח
כי אין הטעם להנצל מגיהנם
לבד כי הרי מועיל להעלותו מגן
עדן של מטה ממדרגה למדרגה
ואם כן מועיל אפי׳ בשבת. עוד
אמרו במדרש רבה פרשה ס״ג
כל מי שיש לו בן יגע בתורה
הקב״ה מתמלא עליו רחמים
דכתיב בני אם חכם לבך ישמח
לבי גם אני. וכשאין הבנים
הולכין בדרך ישר מלאכי הדין
מכים וחובטים אביהם שזה ילד
וזה גדל כמו דאמור רבנן כמאן
קרינן לרשיעא בר צדיקא רשיעא
בר רשיעא[i] וכו׳. וברא מזכה
אבא[ii] כמו שאמר המלך החכם
יסר בנך ויניחך ויתן מעדנים
לנפשך:[iii]

They should be very careful to rectify the soul of their father by rising early to recite the Kaddish,[1] which unifies the attribute of night with day.[2] It is good that besides the Orphan's Kaddish, one should persist throughout that year in reciting sacred matters in public, such as haftarot and psalms and the like, for all these provide comfort to the soul of one's father. There are those who write that it is good to recite Kaddish even on Sabbaths, festivals, and New Moons, for the reason is not only to be saved from Gehenna, but it is also effective in elevating the deceased from the lower Garden of Eden[3] from level to level, and if so, it is beneficial even on the Sabbath. 115R 120R

They further said in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 63, "For anyone who has a son who labors in Torah, the Holy One, blessed be He, is filled with compassion toward him, as it is written, 'My son, if your heart is wise, my heart too will be glad' (Proverbs 23:15)." And when sons do not walk in the straight path, the angels of judgment strike and beat their father, for "this one he bore and this one he raised," as the rabbis said, "How do we refer to a wicked son of a righteous man? A wicked son of a wicked man," etc. 125R 130R

[1]The text emphasizes the importance of saying Kaddish (the mourner's prayer) specifically in the morning, connecting it to kabbalistic notions of unifying cosmic forces.

[2]This refers to the kabbalistic concept of unifying the divine feminine (associated with night) and masculine (associated with day) through prayer.

[3]The text presents a multi-leveled conception of Gan Eden (Paradise), where souls can progress to higher levels through their descendants' actions.

[i]This expression "a wicked person, son of a wicked person" comes from the Talmud (Bava Metzia 85a) and suggests that a child's negative behavior reflects poorly on the deceased parent and affects them in the afterlife.

[ii]Aramaic phrase meaning "a son brings merit to his father," expressing the concept that a child's righteous actions can elevate their deceased parent's soul in the afterlife.

[iii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Bechukotai — The author directly quotes this Zoharic passage about a son's obligation to honor his father even after death, using it as a primary textual basis for the entire discussion of post-mortem filial duties. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This Zoharic teaching that all souls undergo judgment for thirty days before entering the Garden of Eden serves as the mystical foundation for the thirty-day mourning customs discussed in the text. | Cf. Talmud, Kiddushin 30b — The text alludes to the Talmudic teaching about the three partners in human creation (father, mother, and God) to explain why honoring parents is equated with honoring God. | Cf. Talmud, Eruvin 70b — The phrase "a son is the leg of his father" is quoted from this Talmudic source to emphasize the organic connection between father and son that persists even after death. | Cf. Proverbs 29:17 — The author quotes this verse to conclude his discussion about the reciprocal relationship between a son's actions and a father's spiritual state, even after death. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah — This midrashic passage is quoted to show that a son's Torah study brings divine mercy upon his father, reinforcing the central theme that children's actions affect parents spiritually. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shelach — The reference to a father being crowned in heaven due to his son's merit elaborates on the spiritual rewards that come to parents whose children follow righteous paths. | Cf. Sefer HaTanya — The author references this work alongside other rabbinic authorities to substantiate the practice of giving charity as atonement for the

"A son brings merit to his father," as said by the wise king, "Discipline your son, and he will give you rest; he will bring delight to your soul" (Proverbs 29:17). 135R

פרק כ״ב

Chapter 22

כל זה תהיה הערה גדולה לכם בני כי תעשו נא אתי ברכה ותשתדלו בכל מאמצי בחכם לזכות אביכם המך והדל הצריך ודאי לרחמים הם רחמי שמים הרבים. אך גם אתם תהיו לאחדים לאושיד מיין נוקבין נגדם[i] כי מנעוריכם גמל עליכם בחסד אל.[ii] שגבר עליו להעמידכם בבית הספר ולקבוע עתים לתורה בכל יום ומנעוריכם ועד היום הזה לא בקשתי מכם לא דבר קטן וגדול בעולם הזה והא ביתא קמייכו ומתכא דרחמנא דגמל עלי תאכלו ותשבעו ואם תרצו לחסות בצילי[iii] שלי ושלכם

Let this be a great reminder to you, my sons,[1] that you should please do me a kindness and strive with all your might to bring merit to your father, who is lowly and poor[B] and certainly in need of mercy—the abundant mercies of Heaven. But you too should be unified in raising feminine waters toward them,[C] for from your youth He has bestowed kindness upon you through God's grace, which empowered me to establish you in school and set fixed times for Torah study each day. From your youth until this day, I have not asked of you anything small or great in this world. Behold, the house is before you, and the table of the Merciful One who has dealt bountifully with me—eat and be satisfied,[D] and if you wish to take shelter in my shade, what is mine is yours. However, one thing I ask of you, this I request: that you keep the way of the Lord.[2] 5R 10R 15R

[B]Or: "who is humble and impoverished" — These terms could refer to either material or spiritual poverty. In this context, the author may be expressing spiritual humility rather than material poverty, though both readings are possible.

[C]Or: "to pour out your receptive spiritual energies in response" — The phrase 'mayin nukvin' (feminine waters) is a technical Kabbalistic term referring to human spiritual arousal that ascends to stimulate divine response. A less technical translation might better serve readers unfamiliar with Kabbalistic terminology.

[D]Or: "Behold, the house stands before you, and from the table that the Compassionate One has provided for me, you shall eat and be satisfied" — This alternate translation clarifies the relationship between the clauses and makes explicit that the father is offering his divinely-given sustenance to his children.

[1]The author is beginning what appears to be an ethical will (tzava'ah), a traditional genre where fathers leave spiritual and practical guidance to their children before death.

[2]This phrase introduces what will likely be a series of religious instructions, framing them not deceased. | Cf. Rabbi Joseph Karo — The author cites Rabbi Joseph Karo as an authoritative source supporting the practice of giving charity as atonement for the deceased. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Chukat — This reference explains the mystical significance of the red heifer ritual, which the author connects to practices that weaken negative spiritual forces affecting the deceased. | Cf. Numbers 19 — The allusion to the red heifer ritual provides a biblical precedent for purification practices related to death, which the author interprets kabbalistically.

[i]This is a kabbalistic concept referring to 'feminine waters,' representing human spiritual arousal that rises upward to stimulate divine response (the 'masculine waters'). The author uses this mystical terminology to describe how the children should direct their spiritual energies toward heaven, just as their father has directed divine blessings toward them.

[ii]The phrase 'chesed El' refers to divine loving-kindness, one of the primary divine attributes (sefirot) in Kabbalah. The author is attributing his ability to provide for his children to this divine quality rather than to his own merit.

[iii]The metaphor of seeking shelter in one's shade appears in biblical and rabbinic literature, often referring to divine protection. Here it represents both literal protection under the father's roof and the spiritual shelter provided by his Torah teachings.

לכם. ברם אחת אשאל מאתכם
אותה אבקש כי תשמרו דרך ה׳
[i]

לעשות צדקה ומשפט וכל
מעשיכם יהיו לשם שמים כרבי
יהודה בן בבא בירושלמי פ״ב
דסוטה. ואמרו במ״ר פ׳ ראה
הסייף והספר ירדו כרוכים מן
השמים[ii] אם תעשו מה שבתוך
הספר אתם ניצולים מן הסייף
וכו׳: ותעשו עצמכם בכל יום
בבוקר כשכירי יום לאמר היום
הזה אהיה עבד נאמן לאדון
הכל. ושמרו עצמיכם בכל
אותו היום מכעס ושקר ושנאה
ותחרות וקנאה ומלהסתכל
בנשים ותמחלו לכל מי שיצער
אתכם ותבקשו רחמים כמו חצי
שעה בבית הכנסת לה׳ שיעזרכם
על התשובה וכן תעשו למחרתו
ולפחות תקבעו יום אחד בשבוע
לזה. ואם תתענו בו יישר כחכם:
ואל ימוש ספר התורה והמשנה
מפיכם ותהגו בהם יומם ולילה
כפי השגתכ׳. הלא תדעו כי
בהיכל חמישי יש שלשים ושתים
יתידות הממונים על העוסקים
בתורה תמיד.[iii] וסוד היתדו׳
הם מלאכים ואופנים ומדרגו׳
שעלויי׳ ותקונ׳ עולה ממעשה
הארץ הלזו. או לפחות תקבעו
עתים להגות בתורת ה׳ בכל

To practice righteousness and justice, and may all your deeds be for the sake of Heaven, like Rabbi Judah ben Baba in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sotah, chapter 2. And they said in Midrash Rabbah, Parashat Re'eh: "The sword and the book descended from heaven bound together; if you fulfill what is written in the book, you will be saved from the sword, etc." 20R 25R

Make yourselves each morning like day laborers, saying, "Today I will be a faithful servant to the Master of All." Guard yourselves throughout the day from anger, falsehood, hatred, strife, jealousy, and from gazing at women. Forgive anyone who distresses you, and seek mercy for about half an hour in the synagogue, praying to the Lord to help you with repentance. Do likewise the next day, and at the very least, set aside one day each week for this. And if you fast on that day, may your strength increase. 30R 35R

Do not let the book of the Torah and the Mishnah depart from your mouths; meditate on them day and night according to your ability. Do you not know that in the fifth celestial palace there are thirty-two pillars appointed over those who constantly engage in Torah study? The secret of these pillars is that they are angels, celestial wheels, and spiritual levels whose elevation and rectification arise from the deeds performed in this world. At the very least, establish fixed times for studying the Lord's Torah every day and night for the sake of Heaven, to give satisfaction 40R 45R merely as the father's personal wishes but as divine commandments that the children should observe.

[i] Cf. Zohar — The author employs the Kabbalistic concept of 'mayin nukvin' (feminine waters), which represents human spiritual awakening that rises to stimulate divine response ('mayin dekhrin' or masculine waters). This concept appears frequently in the Zohar as part of the cosmic male-female dynamics of divine union. | Cf. Genesis 32:11 — The author's self-description as 'lowly and poor' echoes Jacob's humble statement 'קטנתי מכל החסדים' (I am unworthy of all the kindness), establishing a parallel between the author and the biblical patriarch who also gave instructions to his children. | Cf. Proverbs 3:18 — The metaphor of 'taking shelter in my shade' likely alludes to the protective power of Torah study, which the author has established for his children, drawing on traditional imagery of Torah as a tree providing shelter and protection.

[ii] This is a famous rabbinic metaphor suggesting that divine punishment and divine wisdom are intrinsically connected. The image conveys that Torah observance leads to protection, while its neglect leads to suffering.

[iii] This refers to kabbalistic cosmology where the heavenly realms are organized into palaces (heikhalot). The thirty-two pillars likely correspond to the thirty-two paths of wisdom mentioned in Sefer Yetzirah, an ancient Jewish mystical text.

יום ובכל לילה לש״ש ולעשות
נחת רוח ליוצרכ׳ וליחוד קב״ה
ושכינתיה. וספרו בירושלמי
בפרק ט׳ דסוטה דחד דהוה
קרי ליה לאחוהי בצור והוון
צוחין ליה בפרקמטיא והוא אמר
ליה אנא מבטלא עונתי אין אמי
למיתי מיתי הוא.[i] ויהיה משאכ׳
ומתלכ׳ בשוק נאה. ותזהרו מאד
לישא וליתן באמונה כי האמונה
היא מלבות סוד הקדושה אמונתן
של ישראל.[ii] ויש לאדם לישא
וליתן בה. כדי שיהיה הכל בתוך
הקדש ולא יצא לחוץ אל מקום
השקר והחצונים כי הריוח שיהיה
לכם באמונה הוא שפע הקדושה
ושכנגדו הוא שפע אל זר ח״ו
ובא זה ומאבד את זה. וגרסינן
בסוף מס׳ מכות בא חבקוק
והעמידן על אחת שנאמר וצדיק
באמונתו יחיה. ותנו מממונכם
בעין יפה לצדקה בכל יום וכן
בכל מצוה כי מלח ממון חסר.
וכל מי שיתן למצוה אינו מחסר
נכסיו ולכך נאמר כי נר מצוה.
שאלף אלפים מדליקין ממנו
ואורו במקומו עומד כן הובא
בש״ר פ׳ ל״ו. ואל תונו שום אדם
שכל ממון שאינו של יושר הבא
ליד האדם הוא מהשפעות הבאים
מכח השטן ומצנורותיו הנשברים
הבאים מכח ס״מ ולילית וזה
דומה לעבודה נכריה לכן תחלת
הדין נשאת ונתת באמונה שהיא
עקר האחיזה לבעלי דת הקדש
וצנורות אלו לא יכילו מים חיים.
ומרים הם באחרונה לגוף כי
ודאי זה מאבד את זה ועולה לא
מצלח וגזלן לא עלה בידו אלא
גזלנותו וכלי זיין של השטן הוא
הזהב שיתו לבכם כי ש״ם הזה״ב בגימטריא שט״ן.[iii] כי לעות אדם

to your Creator, and for the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence. They related in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter 9 of Sotah, about someone whose brother called him to Tyre for business matters, but he said, "I will not neglect my set time for study; if my mother is destined to die, she will die." 50R

Let your business dealings and conduct in the marketplace be pleasant. Be extremely careful to conduct business honestly, for faith/trustworthiness is the attribute of Malkhut, the secret of holiness, the faith of Israel. A person must conduct business with it so that everything remains within the realm of holiness and does not go outside to the place of falsehood and external forces. For the profit you gain through honesty is the flow of holiness, while its opposite is the flow of a foreign god, Heaven forbid, and one destroys the other. We learn at the end of Tractate Makkot: "Habakkuk came and established them on one principle, as it is said: 'And the righteous shall live by his faith.'" 55R 60R 65R

Give generously from your money for charity every day, and likewise for every commandment, for money needs to be "salted" [i.e., reduced through charity]. Anyone who gives for a commandment does not diminish his possessions, and thus it is said, "For a commandment is a lamp," because thousands upon thousands can light from it while its light remains in place, as brought in Shemot Rabbah, chapter 36. Do not wrong anyone, for any money gained dishonestly that comes into a person's hand derives from influences that come through the power of Satan and his broken channels, which come from the power of Samael and Lilith. This resembles foreign worship. Therefore, the first judgment [in the afterlife] concerns whether one conducted business honestly, for this is the primary connection for those of the holy faith. These broken channels cannot contain living waters and are ultimately bitter for the body, for surely one destroys the other. The evildoer does not prosper, and the robber gains nothing but his own thievery. The weapon of Satan is gold—take note 70R 75R 80R 85R

[i] This striking statement demonstrates the supreme importance placed on Torah study. The individual is saying that even if his mother were to die, he would not neglect his fixed time for study, illustrating the principle that Torah study takes precedence over most other obligations.

[ii] This is a kabbalistic concept identifying faith/trustworthiness (emunah) with the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom), the lowest of the sefirot that acts as a vessel for divine flow into the world. Business dealings conducted with integrity maintain this channel of divine blessing.

[iii] This refers to Hebrew gematria (numerical values of letters): the Hebrew word for gold

בריבו ה׳ לא ראה. ומה שאינו
נגזר לכם בר״ה מב״ד עליון
הצדק לא יוסיף ואם תגרעו חק
חברכם מאשר נגזר עליו בגזול
אותו הקב״ה יטלנו מכם ויחזיר
לו הגזלה אשר נגזל כמו שאמר
יהושפט לדייני ישראל דעו כי
לא לאדם תשפוטו כי לאלהים
כי הוא יחזיר לעשוק את אשר
עשקוהו שלא בדין תורתנו
הקדושה. ובזה יאמר עליכם
ברוך שזה ילד וברוך שזה גדל.
וכל גדול יהיה בכל פינות שאתם
פונים ואפילו בדברי חול וכל
שכן בדברי מצוה לעולם יהיה
לעבוד את השם כי המבין כוונת
וביאור מלות לעבוד את ה׳ הוא
כמו רמז יחוד קב״ה ושכינתיה
שהוא ה׳ הוא אלהים בריך שמיה
לעלם ולעלמי עלמיא. ולעולם
אל דמי לכם מכוונה כוללת
זו. ואמרו על רבי טרפון ע״ה
כשהיה שומע דבר הגון בתורה
היה אומר כפתור ופרח לרמוז
שעל ידי אותו חידוש[i][ii]

that the Hebrew word for "gold" (hazahav) has the same numerical value as "Satan." 90R

"To pervert a man in his cause, the Lord does not see." What has not been decreed for you at Rosh Hashanah by the heavenly court of justice will not be added, and if you diminish what is due to your fellow by robbing him, the Holy One, blessed be He, will 95R take it from you and return the stolen property to the one who was robbed. As Jehoshaphat said to the judges of Israel: "Know that you judge not for man but for God, for He will return to the oppressed what was taken from him unjustly according to our holy 100R Torah." And then it will be said of you, "Blessed is he who bore this child, and blessed is he who raised him."

Let there be greatness in all corners to which you turn, even in mundane matters and certainly in mat- 105R ters of commandments. Always serve the Lord, for one who understands the intention and explanation of the words "to serve the Lord" understands the allusion to the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence, which is "The Lord, 110R He is God, blessed be His name forever and for all eternity." Never cease from this all-encompassing intention. They said of Rabbi Tarfon, of blessed memory, that when he would hear something proper in Torah, he would say "A knob and a flower!" alluding to the fact that through such an innovation, the 115R bride is adorned and united with Tiferet, which is like an apple.

(hazahav—הזהב) has the numerical value 14 (ה = 5, ז = 7, ה = 5, ב = 2), which equals the value of the word Satan (שטן: ש = 3, ט = 9, ן = 2). This numerical equivalence is used to warn against the spiritual dangers of materialism.

[i] This phrase comes from the biblical description of the menorah (Exodus 25:33). In rabbinic literature, it became an expression of praise for an elegant Torah interpretation. Here it's given a kabbalistic interpretation, suggesting that a Torah insight adorns the Shekhinah (the bride) and unites her with Tiferet (the groom).

[ii] Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sotah, chapter 2 — This reference establishes the religious foundation for the ethical will—that spiritual intention should underlie all actions | Cf. Midrash Rabbah, Parashat Re'eh — This metaphor emphasizes that Torah study is not merely academic but has real-world consequences for protection and prosperity | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sotah, chapter 9 — This reference serves as a model for the author's children to prioritize spiritual commitments over financial opportunities | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Tractate Makkot 24a — This reinforces the importance of faith/trustworthiness (emunah) as not just a virtue but as the foundational principle for religious life | Cf. Shemot Rabbah, chapter 36 — This analogy is used to encourage charitable giving by assuring that giving to others doesn't reduce one's own prosperity | Cf. 2 Chronicles 19:6 — This reference reinforces the theological principle that justice is ultimately divine, not merely human, and that God will ensure justice is ultimately served | Cf. Song of Songs (implied through kabbalistic interpretation) — This reference uses bridal imagery from Song of Songs within a kabbalistic framework where Torah innovations beautify the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) and unite her with Tiferet (another divine attribute)

קושט הכלה שהיא פרח ומיחדה
עם ת״ת שהוא תפוח. וכן שפיר
קאמרת הא אוקמוה ושפיר ירצה
כבר נתקשטה השכינה בחידוש
ההוא.[i] ואיני מטריח לסגף
עצמכם בתעניות הגם דהשתא
כל בני עלמא בעלי תשובה נינהו
וצריכים סגוף ותקון ויהי מה
אלו לעצתי תשמעון לפחות יום
שני וחמישי שבכל שבוע בימים
שאומרים בהם תחנה מה טוב
לנפשכם וגם יועיל לבריאות
הגוף אם תנהיגו עצמכם לאכול
לחם צר ומים במשורה בסעודת
הבקר ותכוונו לתקון שכינה
ולכפרת נפשכם עם כל ישראל.
להיותם ימי דין ובזה תבסמו
דין הגבורה השולטת ביום
שני.[ii] ולזאת תהיה כוונתכם
בשתיית המים ומדת הוד השולטת
ביום חמישי. שבעוונותינו
נהפכה לדוה[iii] ובזה יתמתק
גבורה עלאה ותתאה ותכוונו
בסוד האכילה כאשר באר בעל
ר״ח בשער הקדושה.[iv] ובזהר
במקומות הרבה. ואחר הסעודות

He adorns the bride who is the blossom and unites her with Tiferet which is the apple.[1] And likewise when you say well, "This has been established," it means the Divine Presence has already been adorned through that innovation. I am not burdening you to mortify yourselves with fasts, even though nowadays all people in the world are penitents and require mortification and rectification.[2] Nevertheless, if you would listen to my advice, at least on Mondays and Thursdays of each week, days when supplications are recited,[3] how good it would be for your souls. It would also benefit your physical health if you train yourselves to eat sparse bread and water in measure for the morning meal, and direct your intention toward rectifying the Divine Presence and atoning for your souls along with all Israel. Since these are days of judgment, in this way you will sweeten the judgment of Gevurah that rules on Monday. This should be your intention while drinking water, and likewise regarding the attribute of Hod which rules on Thursday, which due to our sins has been transformed to illness.[4] Through this practice, the higher and lower Gevurah will be sweetened. You should also focus on the mystical dimension of eating, as explained by the author of Reishit Chochmah in Sha'ar HaKedushah, and in many places in the Zohar. After these meals,

[1] This metaphorical language refers to kabbalistic concepts where Torah insights are seen as adornments for the Shekhinah (Divine Presence, symbolized as the bride), which unite her with Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony, the central divine attribute, symbolized as the apple). The author is describing how proper Torah interpretations have cosmic effects.

[2] This suggests the text was written during or after a period of collective hardship that was interpreted as divine punishment requiring repentance, possibly referencing historical events affecting Jewish communities in Italy during the author's lifetime.

[3] Mondays and Thursdays were traditional fast days in Jewish practice, when additional prayers of supplication (Tachanun) are recited. These days were considered especially propitious for penitential practices.

[4] This contains a wordplay in Hebrew between הוד (Hod/splendor) and דוה (daveh/illness), suggesting that sin has inverted or corrupted the divine attribute. The transformation of divine attributes due to human sin is a common kabbalistic concept.

[i] This is a kabbalistic interpretation of the traditional Talmudic praise for a good interpretation. When one offers a sound Torah insight, it adorns the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), metaphorically referred to as the Bride, and unites her with Tiferet (the central divine attribute, representing masculine divine energy).

[ii] According to kabbalistic tradition, each day of the week corresponds to a different divine attribute (sefirah). Monday is associated with Gevurah (Judgment/Severity), while Thursday is associated with Hod (Splendor/Submission). Fasting or eating sparingly on these days 'sweetens' or mitigates the severity of these divine attributes.

[iii] This contains a wordplay in Hebrew between הוד (Hod/splendor) and דוה (illness/suffering), suggesting that due to Israel's sins, the divine attribute of Hod has been inverted or corrupted into its negative counterpart. This transformation of divine attributes due to human sin is a common kabbalistic concept.

[iv] This refers to Rabbi Eliyahu de Vidas (1518-1592), author of 'Reishit Chochmah' (Beginning of

ההם בפרט תאמרו מזמור על נהרות ומזמור לאסף אלהים באו גוים ותוסיפו צדקה לעניים בימים אלו כפי מה שהיה ראוי לכם לאכול. ותקדימו ותחשיכו לבית הכנסת לעולם ובפרט בימי דין אלו. והנה סדורים לפניכם סדרים על חורבן בית קדשנו ותפארתנו. ותזהרו בימי התענית מהדברים אשר העלה בעל ר״ח בספרו דרשו משם וחיו. ותענית ערב ראש חודש במיעוט הלבנה עקר גדול לתקון שכינה[i] כמו שיבא בסוף מאמר ד׳ בעה״י. ואיך כל מעשי התורה והתפלה והמצוה נרשמים בשכינה הנה הוא מתבאר לפניכם בפ׳ ויקהל דף רי״ג עמוד ב׳ ואם חס ושלום תפרקו עול תורה ודאי יהיה לי עליכם תרעומת בעולם הזה ובבא חס ושלום ואם תאבו ושמעתם ועשיתם ככל המצוה אשר צויתי אתכם אתפאר מכם ומני ומנייכו יתקלס עילאה בעולם הזה ובעולם הבא עם כל ישראל אמן כן יהי רצון: [ii]

in particular, recite Psalm 137 ("By the rivers") and Psalm 79 ("O God, the nations have come"), and give additional charity to the poor on these days proportionate to what you would have properly eaten. Always arrive early and stay late at the synagogue, especially on these days of judgment. Behold, arrangements concerning the destruction of our Holy Temple and our glory are set before you. Be careful on fast days regarding those matters which the author of Reishit Chochmah raised in his book—seek guidance there and live. The fast on the eve of the New Moon during the waning of the moon is of great importance for rectifying the Divine Presence, as will be explained at the end of the fourth discourse, God willing. And how all deeds of Torah, prayer, and commandments are inscribed in the Divine Presence is explained before you in Parashat Vayakhel, page 213b. If, heaven forbid, you cast off the yoke of Torah, I will certainly have complaints against you in this world and the next, heaven forbid. But if you are willing to listen and fulfill all the commandments that I have instructed you, I will glory in you, and from me and from you the Most High will be praised[1] in this world and in the World to Come with all Israel. Amen, may it be His will.

פרק כ״ג

Chapter 23

פה יתבאר טעם למנהג שפיכת

Here the reason will be explained for the custom of [1] The conclusion reflects a common feature of ethical wills where the father expresses hope that his children's righteous conduct will bring merit to him after death, creating a reciprocal relationship where both father and children benefit spiritually from the children's good deeds.

Wisdom), a popular ethical-kabbalistic work. The 'Sha'ar HaKedushah' (Gate of Holiness) is a section of this work dealing with sanctification of physical acts like eating and drinking.

[i] This refers to the practice of fasting on the day before the New Moon (Yom Kippur Katan or 'Minor Day of Atonement'), which gained prominence in kabbalistic circles. The waning moon symbolizes the diminished state of the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) in exile, and fasting at this time was believed to contribute to its restoration.

[ii] Cf. Zohar Vayakhel 213b — This passage explains how all acts of Torah study, prayer and commandments leave spiritual impressions on the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), which is why the author refers to it as evidence for how human religious actions affect divine realms. | Cf. Reishit Chochmah, Sha'ar HaKedushah — The author refers to Reishit Chochmah's teachings about the mystical significance of eating, which includes detailed instructions on how to transform physical consumption into a spiritual act through proper intentions, blessings, and mindfulness. | Cf. Psalm 137 (By the rivers of Babylon) — The text prescribes reciting this psalm of mourning for Jerusalem after simple meals on fast days, creating a connection between personal asceticism and national grief over the destruction of the Temple. | Cf. Psalm 79 (O God, the nations have come) — This psalm is prescribed alongside Psalm 137 as part of the penitential practice on Mondays and Thursdays, emphasizing the theme of national calamity and the desecration of the Temple.

המים שבשכונת המת. כתב
הכלבו שהוא לסימן שידעו
שיש שם מקרה מות ולא יהיה
מודיע בפה ויהיה מוציא דבה.
ויש אומרים שהטעם הוא לפי
שמלאך המות מטיל במים טיפת
סם המות[i] אולי ירצה כי כיון
שניתן לו רשות אז מתגבר בכל
עז להפוך כחות החסד לרוגז
ודין. ובפרט כח מלאך המות
הממית ח״ל שהוא ע״י המחבל
שנבל שמו שאינו שורה אלא
במקום פסול. כי מנוול הוא
לכן י״ש המתים ח״ל נקראים
נבלה. ובפ׳ תרומה פי׳ למה
בלוז אינו שולט בו מלאך המות.
ולמה לא נבנה שם ב״ה ולהיות
שמלאך המות גם אחר שעשה
שליחותו מבקש להגביר כח הדין
ולהפוך המים לדם. על כן אנו
שופכים המים על גבי קרקע
מקום מוצאם שאינם עלולים
לקבל טומאה שם. ובזה גם
כן מעוררים ומתפשטים מדת
החסד בעולם כמנהג אנשי החסד
השופכים לפניהם מים בימי
העצרה והתענית לשלטא ימינא
וכן לובשים לבנים לכוונה הזאת
ולבישת שחורים לאבלי ציון.
וסוד הגוונים שיחסו המקובלים
לספירות כי הנפש תעורר
לרוח ורוח לנשמה והנשמה
תעלה ממציאות למציאות עד
מקום יניקתה ואחיזתה ותעורר
לפי מציאות צירה וכשעור
ההזדמנו׳ העולה מלמטה כך
תעורר מלמעלה[ii] כדאמרי׳ על
יחוד השבח על ידי יסוד ובחול pouring water in the vicinity of the deceased. The Kolbo writes that it serves as a sign so people will know that a death has occurred there, without needing to announce it verbally and thereby spreading rumors. Others say the reason is because the Angel of Death casts a drop of the poison of death into the water.[1] Perhaps this means that since the Angel has been given permission, it exerts all its power to transform the forces of loving-kindness into anger and judgment. This is especially true of the power of the Angel of Death that kills outside the Land of Israel,[2] which operates through the destroyer whose name is Naval ("vile"), who only dwells in an impure place. For he is defiled, therefore the dead outside the Land of Israel are called neveilah ("carcass"). In the portion Terumah, it explains why the Angel of Death has no power in [the city of] Luz, and why no synagogue was built there. And since the Angel of Death, even after completing its mission, seeks to strengthen the force of judgment and turn water into blood, we therefore pour the water onto the ground, their place of origin, where they are not susceptible to receiving impurity. Through this, we also awaken and spread the attribute of loving-kindness in the world, like the practice of kind-hearted people who pour water before themselves during times of drought and fast days to strengthen the right side[3] [of mercy]. Similarly, they wear white garments for this intention, and black garments for mourners of Zion. The secret of the colors that the Kabbalists attribute to the sefirot is that the nefesh (vital soul) awakens the ruach (spirit), the ruach awakens the neshamah (higher soul), and the neshamah ascends from one existence to another until it reaches its source and attachment. It awakens according to the nature of its form, and in proportion to the arousal rising from below, so it awakens from above, as we say regarding unification through [1] This reflects a Talmudic belief (Avodah Zarah 30b) that was integrated into folk practice. The concern about water being contaminated by the Angel of Death's poison led to various customs about discarding standing water near the deceased.

5R 10R 15R 20R 25R 30R 35R

[2] The text makes a distinction between death in the Land of Israel versus elsewhere, reflecting the traditional Jewish belief that burial in Israel provides special spiritual benefits and protections.

[3] The 'right side' in Kabbalah refers to the attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness), associated with water. This passage reveals how ritual practices were designed to influence the balance of cosmic forces.

[i] This reflects a belief found in the Talmud (Avodah Zarah 30b) that the Angel of Death places a drop of poison in water, which is why water should be poured out if left uncovered overnight.

[ii] This expresses a fundamental kabbalistic principle known as 'itaruta d'letata' (awakening from ע״י מטטרון שהשפע היורד הוא

כפי בחינת ההתעוררו׳ שעולה
אם מסוד נשמה יתירה בשבת ואם
מסוד ימי החול שאינו מעורר רק
כפי רוחניות עולם היצירה. וכל
שכן שבמעשה התחתון מעורר
לעומתו רוחניות עליון כדאמרו
שיצחק נעקד ביום הכפורים[i] ואז
החסד של מעלה עקד הדין
ומיכאל עקדו לגבריאל ואריה
יקד את השור וצדק עקדו
למאדים וכל דכותייהו הכי
נמי:[ii] גם הכהן איש החסד היה
לובש בד קדש ביום האדיר מדי
כניסתו ללובן העליון במחשבה
ובמעשה להלבין עונותיהם של
ישראל. ובעת שמסתלק האדם מן
העולם המקטרג מבקש לעורר
מדת הדין עליו ועל משפחתו
ואנו כנגדו מרבים שלום בעולם
על כלם ועל בני שכונתו. עוד
נוכל לומר כי המלאך בעצמו
הוא רוח כדכתיב עושה מלאכיו
רוחות ומלאכים שהם רוח הם
יותר חצונים מאותם שהם של
אש שלכן אמרו שמלאכי רוח
אינם יכולים ליכנס לפנים מפני
רוח הטומאה ועל כן בלילה
שכל הכוכבים המאירים ברקיע
לעולם מודים ומשבחים להקב״ה
וכן המלאכים העליונים כלם
מתחלקים לשלש משמרות ואינם
יכולים להתקרב אל המלך עד שדוחים מהם רוח הטומאה ואז praise by way of Yesod (Foundation), and on weekdays through Metatron, for the divine flow descending is according to the quality of the awakening that rises[1]—whether from the mystery of the additional soul on Sabbath, or from the mystery of weekdays, which awakens only according to the spirituality of the World of Formation. All the more so that a lower action awakens its corresponding higher spirituality, as they said that Isaac was bound on Yom Kippur, and then the heavenly loving-kindness bound judgment, and Michael bound Gabriel, and the lion bound the ox, and Jupiter bound Mars, and similarly with all their counterparts. Also, the priest, a man of loving-kindness, would wear sacred linen on the awesome day [Yom Kippur] whenever entering into the Supernal Whiteness, in thought and deed, to whiten the sins of Israel. And at the time when a person departs from the world, the accuser seeks to arouse the attribute of judgment against him and his family,[A] and we, in opposition, increase peace in the world for all of them and for the people of his neighborhood. We can further say that the angel itself is a spirit, as it is written, "He makes His angels spirits," and angels who are of spirit are more external than those who are of fire. Therefore, they said that angels of spirit cannot enter within because of the spirit of impurity. Thus, at night, when all the stars that illuminate the firmament forever acknowledge and praise the Holy One, blessed be He, and likewise the supernal angels all divide into three watches and cannot approach the King until they push away from themselves the spirit of impurity. Then, sixty myriad holy angels descend and cast sleep upon all inhabitants of the world, thereby pushing away the spirit of [A] Or: "the prosecutor seeks to awaken the attribute of strict justice against him and his family" — The term 'mekatreg' specifically refers to a spiritual prosecutor or accuser, and 'midat ha-din' could be more precisely rendered as 'strict justice' to emphasize its unmitigated quality.

[1] This describes the kabbalistic principle of correspondence between human actions and divine response, known as 'itaruta d'letata' (awakening from below) and 'itaruta d'le'eila' (awakening from above).

below), which holds that human actions in the physical world create corresponding reactions in the spiritual realms.

[i] This refers to a rabbinic tradition that the binding of Isaac (Akedah) took place on Yom Kippur, and the author extends this to describe how this event created cosmic bindings between opposing forces in the spiritual realms.

[ii] The author presents a complex system of correspondences between biblical events, divine attributes, angelic beings, and astrological forces, showing how actions in one realm affect parallel entities in other realms.

יורדים ששים רבוא מלאכים
קדושים ומפילים שינה על כל
באי עולם ובזה דוחים רוח
הטומאה מעולם תחתון שהיא
שולטת על הישנים אבל לא
בא״י וכיון שרוח הטומאה נפרש
מהם עולים לפני הק״בה לשבח.
וכן ישראל לתתא אינם יכולים
להתאחד בקודשא בריך הוא
עד שדוחים סטרא אחרא מהם
בנתינת לה חלק לעסוק בה
בשער התפלין ובודוי בתפלה כי
ס״מ נוטל אותם העונות ונוטל
אותם על ראשי חייליו ומסתלק
בזה. ובתחלת הלילה שולט רוח
דרום בעולם כדי לדחות אינון
רוחין ודינין וזינין בישין דשלטי
אז בגין דיכיל עלמא למסבל.
והתעוררותם לשלוט אינו אלא
ברוח מערב השולט בתחלת
הלילה. הנה כי מלאך המות הוא
ממלאכי רוח שהם יותר חצונים
ממלאכי אש. החרב שבידו הוא
כח האש דין קשה שבו מתלבש
מלאך המות. האדם השולט בו
יסודו מעפר וכתיב כי עפר
אתה ולהיות כי גבר שליטתו
בג׳ יסודות הנזכרות מבקש ג״כ
להתגבר ביסוד המים שהוא נגד
חסד על כן אמרו שמטיל שם סם
המות שמצד הכח והרשות שניתן
לו להמית ידיו רב לו להגביר
ג״כ על יסוד המים. ואמרו
שלימים קדמוניות היו פעמים
בני אדם מתים בשתיית המים או
באכילתן מפני הרוח רע ששורה
עליהם. ובעת ששותה מהם
מזיק אותו. ולזה מנהג לשפוך
מים קודם שישתו בההוא שידא
דאמר אי ידענא דרגליתו בהכי
לא אשתהאי. וכן ממה שאמרו
שברירי ברירי ריר נראה שהיה
דרך רוחות רעות לעמוד על פני המים ופעמים שכל דבר מתגבר

impurity from the lower world, which rules over those who sleep—though not in the Land of Israel. And once the spirit of impurity is separated from them, they ascend before the Holy One, blessed be He, to offer praise. Similarly, Israel below cannot unite with the Holy One, blessed be He, until they push away the Other Side from themselves by giving it a portion to occupy it, in the section on tefillin and in confession during prayer, for Samael takes those sins and places them on the heads of his forces and departs with this. At the beginning of the night, the south wind rules in the world in order to push away those spirits, judgments, and evil types that rule then, so that the world can endure. Their awakening to rule is only through the west wind that dominates at the beginning of the night. Indeed, the Angel of Death is among the angels of spirit, who are more external than the angels of fire. The sword in his hand is the power of fire, harsh judgment, in which the Angel of Death is clothed. Man, who is dominated by it, has his foundation in dust, as it is written, "For you are dust." And since his dominion has grown strong over the three elements mentioned,[A] he also seeks to overpower the element of water, which corresponds to loving-kindness. Therefore, they said that he casts the poison of death there, because from the power and authority given to him to cause death, his hands have enough power to also strengthen against the element of water. They said that in ancient times, people sometimes died from drinking water or eating because of the evil spirit that rested upon them. And when one would drink from them, it would harm him. For this reason, there is a custom to pour out water before drinking, like that demon who said, "Had I known you behave this way, I would not have lingered." And also from what they said about "Shabriri, Briri, Riri," it appears that evil spirits would stand over the waters, and sometimes each thing grows stronger against its opposite. Additionally, the pouring of water serves as an instruction to people to recognize the vanity of worldly matters, for even water that purifies and is essential for all human needs is not considered a small thing compared to the world after death. For the end of [A] Or: "And since his control has prevailed over the three aforementioned elements" — This alternate translation more directly conveys the sense of the Angel of Death's progressive conquest of the elemental forces, emphasizing the sequential nature of his domination.

נגד הפכו. עוד תהיה שפיכת
המים הוראה לבני האדם כי
יהבילו ענייני העוה״ז כי אפילו
המים המטהרים והם הכרחיים
לכל צרכי בני אדם אינם נחשבים
לדבר קל מהעולם שאחר המות
כי סוף החיים הם כמים הנגרים
ארצה והכל כלה ואבד רק
נפשות חסידיו שלעולם נשמרו
בגין דהאי עלמא הוא חולקא
דס״א ועלמא דאתי הוא סטרא
דקדושה עוה״ז הוא לרשעים.
ועוה״ב הוא לצדיקים: ולכן
הקב״ה מאריך אפו לרשעים
בעוה״ז שהוא חלקם כ״כ בזהר
פ׳ פקודי דף רכ״ג ע״ב. עוד
שפיכת המים על העפר יבשר
ויודיע שעתיד הקב״ה לגבול
עפרו בטל העליון ויבא כגשם
לנו בשפע וכמלקוש יורה ארץ
ולהיותו קורץ מעפר זה סבת
מיתת האדם כי הוא מעלמא
דנוקבא. וכתוב בס׳ הזוהר
פ׳ וישלח דף ר״ט למה אליהו
עלה בסערה ולא מת לפי שהיה
נפשו מאילן החיים ולא מן ההוא
עפ״ר. דהות נשמתיה מרעותא
דדכורא יתיר משאר בני נשא
בגין כך כתיב וילך אל נפשו
דהוא דכורא ולא כתיב את
נפשו דהוא נוקבא[i] ברם משה
אתגזר מאתר דלא אתגזר ב״נ
אחרא בסוד כי מן המים משיתהו.
הנה כי סוד המים רומז להויה
ומציאות נבחר מן העפר כי הוא
היסוד הראשון בשנים התחתונים
והעפר יסוד האחרון וכולהו
עבדי ביה עבידתייהו כנדרש life is like water poured out on the ground,[A] and everything is consumed and lost except the souls of His pious ones, which are preserved forever. This is because this world is the portion of the Other Side, while the World to Come is the side of holiness. This world is for the wicked, and the World to Come is for the righteous. Therefore, the Holy One, blessed be He, extends His patience to the wicked in this world, which is their portion, as stated in the Zohar, Parashat Pekudei, page 223b. Furthermore, pouring water on the dust announces and informs that in the future, the Holy One, blessed be He, will mix His dust with the supernal dew, and it will come to us abundantly like rain, and like the latter rain that waters the earth. Being formed from dust is the cause of human death, for it is from the feminine realm. It is written in the Zohar, Parashat Vayishlach, page 209, why Elijah ascended in a storm and did not die: because his soul was from the Tree of Life and not from that dust. His soul was from the masculine desire, more so than other people,[1] and because of this it is written, "And he went to [el] his soul," which is masculine, and not "to [et] his soul," which would be feminine. However, Moses was cut from a place from which no other person was cut, according to the secret meaning of "For from the water I drew him." Here is the secret: water alludes to a state of being and existence that is more refined than dust, for it is the first of the lower elements, while dust is the last element, and all perform their function through it, as expounded in Chapter 21.

120R 125R 130R 135R 140R 145R

[A] Or: "For the conclusion of life is like waters spilled upon the earth" — This alternate translation echoes 2 Samuel 14:14, which this phrase seems to reference, providing a closer biblical parallel that would be recognized by the intended audience.

[1] The text distinguishes between masculine and feminine spiritual qualities, with the masculine associated with active giving (like the prophet Elijah) and the feminine with receiving (like most humans). This gendered metaphysics is central to kabbalistic thought.

[i] The author interprets subtle grammatical differences in biblical Hebrew to reveal mystical meanings: using the preposition 'el' (to/toward) rather than 'et' (direct object marker) indicates masculine versus feminine qualities of the soul.

בפרק כ״א: [i]

פרק כ״ד

Chapter 24

טעם שהחמירו חכמים בשמירת
המתים שפטורים מקריאת שמע
ותפלה אם אינם שנים שזה משמר
וזה קורא הוא כי בראות רוח
5 הטומאה כלי טהור פנוי מרוח 5R
הקדושה אז בא ושורה בו וכל
אשר באהלו טמא ומטמא וטומאת
אהל חמורה מכלם כי מתפשטת
למעלה ולמטה כשיש פותח טפח
10 ובכל סביביו דקיימא עליה 10R
ככסלא לאוגייא. וכפי רוחניותה
כך טומאתה כי ידיה רב לה
להתפשט וטומאת משא למטה
ממנה שמטמאת בגדיה גם כן
15 כי בזה קופצת עליו ומטמאו 15R
עם בגדיו שכן היא והתלבשות
שלה טמא. ברם אינה מתפשטת
כטומאת אהל אבל טומאת מגע
והיסט כלי והם מיני קליפות
20 ורוחות חלוקות זו מזו כדפירשו 20R
הגאונים בספריהם[ii] כי יש שלשה
כתות נמשכים מהטומאה לא
ראי זה כזה וכן יש ג׳ כתות של
מלאכי חבלה ואין לנו חלק ולא
25 ידיעה בדברים אלו. ואוי ואבוי 25R
למי שנוטה אחריהם והתורה
הרחיקה אותנו מזה בכמה
מקומות וטומאות חלו הרבה

The reason why the Sages were stringent regarding the guarding of the dead, exempting [the guardians] from reciting the Shema and prayer unless there are two people, so that one guards while the other recites, is because when the spirit of impurity sees a pure vessel empty of the spirit of holiness, it enters and dwells within it. Everything in its tent becomes impure and transmits impurity, and the impurity of the tent is the most severe of all, as it spreads upward and downward when there is an opening the size of a handbreadth, and in all its surroundings, standing over it like a basket over a container.[A] And according to its spirituality, so is its impurity, for it has great power to spread.

The impurity of carrying [the dead] is of a lesser degree, as it renders one's garments impure as well, for in this case, it leaps upon the person and makes him and his garments impure, since both the impurity and its embodiment are impure. However, it does not spread like tent impurity. The impurities of touch and moving [the dead] are even lighter, and these are different types of negative forces and spirits distinct from one another, as the Geonim have explained in their books that there are three groups stemming from impurity, each unlike the other. Similarly, there are three groups of destructive angels, and we have no portion or knowledge of these matters. Woe to one who is drawn after them, for the [A] Or: "like a cover over a vessel" — The Aramaic phrase 'ככסלא לאוגייא' is obscure and difficult to translate precisely. While 'basket over a container' conveys the general meaning of something covering another item, 'cover over a vessel' might be a more literal rendering of the metaphor being used to describe how impurity encompasses its surroundings.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The text cites this Zohar passage to support the idea that God is patient with the wicked in this world because this world is their only portion, while the righteous have the World to Come. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayishlach — This reference explains why Elijah didn't die but ascended in a whirlwind—because his soul originated from the Tree of Life rather than from dust, making him more connected to the masculine divine aspect than typical humans. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The text refers to this section of the Zohar when discussing the city of Luz where the Angel of Death had no dominion, showing the author's tendency to incorporate Zoharic teachings throughout his explanation of customs. | Cf. Sefer HaKolbo — The author cites the Kolbo (a medieval compendium of Jewish law) as the source for one explanation of the water-pouring custom: that it serves as a signal that a death has occurred without having to announce it verbally.

[ii] The author references the Geonim (post-Talmudic rabbinical authorities from approximately 589-1038 CE) as his source for the concept of three different categories of impurity. This shows how he integrates earlier rabbinic authorities into his kabbalistic framework.

מהם מתפשטים על הגוף להיותו
כלי שנשתמש בו קדש כי תאותם
להריח בקדושה לעשוק אהב.
ולכן המתים צריכים שמירה
כדי שלא יכנס בהם רוח רעה
כי הם תאבים להשלמת יצירתם
שלא נבראו להם גופות. ועיין
למה לא נבראו גופות לאלו
בפרשת בראשית ובזהר רות.
ובזה יש רמז דכשמתקלקלין
צנורות של מעלה משתנים סדרי
בראשית ואז כחות הטומאה
נכנסים באהל של מעלה וראתה
באו מקדשה[i] וכו׳. ועל אותה
שעה כתיב רגליה יורדים מות
אוי להם לבריות הגורמים לה
העדר הברכה. וזהו סוד אדם
כי ימות באהל. ובאידרת נשא
דף קמ״ד ע״ב אמר טעם איסור
שהיית המת בלילה אם אינו
להכין לו ארון ותכריכין וכן
בפ׳ נח דף ס״ו. עוד מזה בפ׳
ויקהל דף רנ״ט ובפ׳ ויחי דף
רכ״ד ע״ב ועיין בסוד הלבושים
פ׳ לך לך דף קס״ט ובדף קע״ב
ביאר טעם הספד שעושים הנשים
למת. ונתבאר בפ׳ בראשית דף
נ״ב למה המת מטמא ואמר כי
אדם הראשון בחטאו גירש א״ת
שהוא הקדושה מן הגן[ii] והוא
אדם השכין מקדם לג״ע את
הכרובים כי סתם אורחין
ושבילין[iii] ואמשיך קללות מן
היום ההוא והלאה ולחט החרב
הם מדרגות תחתונים השורים
בדין על העולם לשמור דרך
עץ החיים כדי שלא יוסיפו
לחטוא ובחטאו החשיך עליו
רוח הטומאה מצד הנחש המטמא
ושלכן המת מטמא כי הנחש

Torah has distanced us from this in many places.

Many of these impurities spread to the body because it is a vessel that was used for holiness, as their desire is to inhale holiness—they love to plunder. Therefore, the dead require guarding so that evil spirits cannot enter them, for these spirits crave to complete their formation since bodies were not created for them. See why bodies were not created for these [spirits] in the portion of Genesis and in the Zohar on Ruth.

This hints that when the supernal channels become corrupted, the orders of creation change, and then the forces of impurity enter the supernal tent, "and her pursuers have entered her sanctuary, etc." Concerning that time, it is written, "Her feet descend to death"—woe to the creatures who cause her to lack blessing. This is the secret of "When a person dies in a tent."

In the Idra of Naso, page 144b, the reason is given for the prohibition against keeping a corpse overnight unless it is to prepare a coffin and shrouds for it, and similarly in the portion of Noah, page 66. More on this is found in the portion of Vayakhel, page 259, and in the portion of Vayechi, page 224b. See also the secret of the garments in the portion of Lech Lecha, page 169, and on page 172, where the reason for the women's eulogy for the dead is explained.

It is explained in the portion of Genesis, page 52, why the dead person is impure. It states that Adam, through his sin, exiled "ET" (which is holiness) from the garden, and it was he, Adam, who caused the placement of the cherubim east of the Garden of Eden, for he blocked the paths and ways, and drew curses from that day onward. "The flaming sword" refers to the lower levels that dwell in judgment over the world, to guard the way to the Tree of Life so that they would not continue to sin. Through his sin, the spirit of impurity from the defiling serpent darkened upon him, and this is why the dead are impure—because the serpent extracted his soul

[i] This is a reference to Lamentations 1:10, which describes the destruction of the Temple. Here it is repurposed in a mystical context to describe how impurity invades sacred spaces when the divine channels are corrupted.

[ii] The term "א״ת" (Aleph-Tav) is significant in Kabbalah, representing the entirety of creation from the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet to the last. Here it symbolizes holiness itself being exiled from Eden through Adam's sin.

[iii] "He blocked the paths and ways" refers to the kabbalistic concept that Adam's sin obstructed the channels through which divine influence flows into the world, creating spiritual barriers that persist until the messianic redemption.

הוציא נשמתו וטימא גופו. אז
70 ניתן רשות לכל צדדי הטומאה
לשלוט על אותו הגוף. וכן
בלילה בעת השינה ולכן צריך
לשמירה. ולהיות שיש בחות
במזיקים המתקנאים בבני אדם
75 לכן אמרו שלשה צריכים שמירה
וא׳ מהם הוא חתן ויש אומרים
אף תלמיד חכם בלילה כי
מתקנאים בהם וחולה וחיה דריע
מזלייהו. ואמרי שבבא לאדם
80 צרה או חולי ב״מ כשבא לבקש
רחמים עליו מיד מזדמנים שם
אותם שניתן להם רשות להחליאו
או להביא עליו הצער ההוא.
ולכן צריך להתחזק בתפלתו
85 נגדם ולהסירם בתשובתו מלפני
שופט צדק לבל יחרצו לשונם
נגדו. וסמאל לעולם רודף אחר
זכות ותפלתן של ישראל כנץ
אחר היונה. וזהו אמר אויב
90 ארדוף אשיג וסבור לחלוק שלל
לאגפיו החצונים עמה שיונק
בשכינה מזוהמת הנחש. ואין
הטומאה יכולה לעלות רק עד
מדרגה הששית[i] ראשונה המת
95 הוא אבי אבות שני לו אב שלישי
לו ראשון רביעי לו שני בחולין
חמישי לו שלישי בתרומה ששי
לו רביעי בקדש כדתנן במסכת
טהרות. והמדרגה השביעית היא
100 מדת המים מקור מים חיים: לכן
יש כח במים לבטל הטומאה כי
עדיה אינה יכולה להגיע במקום
כבודם אך בצאתם ממקורם גם
הם מעותדים לטומאה אך היא
105 טומאה קלה כי יש להם טהרה
בהשקה כי בחזרתן למקורם בכל
דהו פרח טומאה מנייהו. וטעם
הכשרתם לזרעים לקבל טומאה
הוא שלפי חבתן טומאתן ובעודם and defiled his body. At that point, permission was granted to all aspects of impurity to rule over that 70R body. Similarly, at night during sleep, protection is required.

Since there are forces among the harmful entities that are jealous of human beings, the Sages said that three [types of people] require protection: one 75R of them is a bridegroom, and some say even a Torah scholar at night, for they are jealous of them, as well as a sick person and a woman in childbirth, whose fortune is weakened. They say that when trouble or illness, God forbid, comes to a person, when he comes 80R to seek mercy for himself, those who were given permission to make him ill or bring that suffering upon him immediately appear there. Therefore, one must strengthen one's prayer against them and remove them through repentance from before the righteous 85R Judge, so they will not sharpen their tongues against him. Samael always pursues the merit and prayers of Israel like a hawk after a dove. This is what is meant by "The enemy said: 'I will pursue, I will overtake,'" thinking to divide the spoil with his external forces, 90R along with what he draws from the Divine Presence from the contamination of the serpent.

Impurity can ascend only up to the sixth level. First, the corpse is the primary source of impurity; second to it is the father [of impurity]; third to it is 95R the first [degree of impurity]; fourth to it is the second [degree] in non-sacred food; fifth to it is the third [degree] in terumah [priestly offering]; sixth to it is the fourth [degree] in sacred items, as we learned in Tractate Taharot. The seventh level is the attribute 100R of water, the source of living waters.

Therefore, water has the power to nullify impurity, for impurity cannot reach water's place of honor. But when waters leave their source, they too are susceptible to impurity,[A] though it is a light impu- 105R rity, as they can be purified through connection [to their source], for when they return to their source, even in the smallest amount, impurity departs from them. The reason they enable seeds to receive im-

[A] Or: "designated for impurity" — The Hebrew 'מעותדים' comes from the root meaning 'prepared' or 'designated'. While 'susceptible' conveys the meaning adequately in context, 'designated for impurity' captures more of the sense that there is an inherent potential or readiness in the waters to receive impurity once they leave their source.

[i] This establishes an important kabbalistic principle that impurity can only ascend through six levels but cannot reach the seventh level, which corresponds to the divine attribute of water (representing mercy and purification). This is why ritual purification involves water.

במקום כבודם ימין ה׳ רוממה לדחות משם כל נגע וכל מחלה וסרך טומאה ולכן גם למטה המים בעודם מחוברים בקרקע אינם מקבלים טומאה וכנגד זה מנו חכמים שש מעלות במקואות זו למעלה מזו. עוד יש למעלה מעלה סוד המקור והמבוע נהרא דמכיפיה מיברך[i] אשר עין לא ראתה אלהים זולתך. ובפ׳ תרומה דף קצ״ח מתבאר מהו צד הטומאה זה השולט בארץ ולמה הוא סובב סביב לקדושה ע״ש כי הפליא לדבר:[ii] purity is that according to their preciousness is their impurity, and while they are in their place of honor, "the right hand of the Lord is exalted" to repel all affliction, disease, and trace of impurity. Therefore, even in the lower realm, waters that are still connected to the ground do not receive impurity. Corresponding to this, the Sages enumerated six levels of ritual baths, each superior to the next.

Beyond the highest level is the secret of the source and the spring, "a river whose waters never fail,"[A] which "no eye has seen, O God, besides You." In the portion of Terumah, page 198, it is explained what this aspect of impurity is that rules in the earth and why it surrounds holiness—see there, for it speaks wondrously on the matter.

פרק כ״ה

יזהר האדם הרוחץ המת שלא יעזוב טנוף על בשרו וכן המעיין בקבר המת ומשכיבו יזהר שלא יהיה טפר על פניו שיש לו בושת משאר מתים כי הנפשות הם כתואר הגופים.[iii] ומצאתי שאין לעטוף המת אלא בטלית של

Chapter 25

The person washing the deceased should be careful not to leave any dirt on the body. Similarly, one who arranges the deceased in the grave should ensure there is no dust on the face, as the deceased feels shame before other dead, because souls retain the appearance of their bodies. I have found that one should wrap the deceased only in a white woolen

[A] Or: "a river that is blessed from its banks" — This Aramaic phrase is challenging to translate precisely. My translation attempts to capture the meaning contextually, but a more literal rendering might be 'a river that is blessed from its banks' or 'a river that is blessed from its source,' referring to a self-replenishing spring or wellspring.

[i] This Aramaic phrase refers to the mystical concept of a self-replenishing river or spring, symbolizing the divine source that continuously renews itself. It may allude to the river flowing from Eden in Genesis 2:10.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The text cites this specific passage in the Zohar to explain why a corpse should not be kept overnight. This reference is integral to the argument about how impurity operates and why guarding the dead is necessary. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Bereshit — This reference connects corpse impurity to Adam's original sin, explaining how his actions caused the spirit of impurity to enter the world through the serpent. This Zoharic passage provides the mystical foundation for understanding why death causes ritual impurity. | Cf. Idra of Naso — The Idra of Naso is cited as an authoritative source for the prohibition against keeping a corpse overnight. This esoteric section of the Zohar deals with profound mystical concepts regarding life, death, and the spiritual cosmos. | Cf. Exodus 15:9 — The phrase "The enemy said: 'I will pursue, I will overtake'" is a direct quote from the Song at the Sea. Here it is reinterpreted in a kabbalistic context to refer to Samael (a satanic figure) pursuing the prayers and merits of Israel to prevent them from ascending. | Cf. Tractate Taharot — The text references the rabbinic system of degrees of ritual impurity as outlined in Tractate Taharot, using this halakhic framework to explain the mystical concept of how impurity operates in different levels or realms. | Cf. Proverbs 5:5 — The phrase "Her feet descend to death" is from Proverbs, originally referring to the strange woman/harlot. In this kabbalistic context, it's reinterpreted to refer to the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) when the channels of blessing are corrupted by human sin.

[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that souls retain the appearance of their bodies after death, which explains why proper preparation of the body is important—the soul remains aware of and affected by the treatment of its physical vessel.

צמר לבן דכתיב לבושיה כתלג חיור. ועיין בתקון י׳ דף כ״א ע״ב כוונת הציצית. ומשם תבין טעם לבישת הטלית למת בסוד שרפים עומדים וגו׳ וכבר כתבנו מזה למעלה. ובתקון י״ח דף כ״ט ע״ב אמר כי מקיימי מצות ציצית לכסות השכינה מבעלי הדין הקב״ה מני למלאכא מרכבתא לנטלא לון בגדפייהו ולפרחא בהון מאתר לאתר ולכסאה עליהון מכל מזיקין ומלאכי חבלה. ונראה לעניות דעתי כי מי שהנהיג עצמו לשום אזוב על שלחנו בשבת[i] בסעודי דמהימנותא קדישא כאשר בא בקונטריסים שלנו שיהיה טוב לצרף עם הזיעים ומיני בשמים כשרוחצים אותו אחר מיתתו מעט אזוב עמהם שכבר ידוע כמה יפה כח האזוב לטהרת האדם. ואמר ר׳ שמעון בן יוחאי בפ׳ שמות דף ט״ו דלא שליט עליה שום ממנא בר קב״ה בלחודוי כדאמרי׳ גם כן על ד׳ מינים שבלולב ומיני תבואה שלכן מברכים המוציא לחם מן הארץ הוא בעצמו ובכבודו. ובתוב בפ׳ יתרו בכל אתר דבעי קב״ה לדכאה לבר נש באזובא מתדכי מ״ט משום דיתער חיליה מלעילא דאתפקדא עלוהי דחילא דא כד אתתער מבערא רוח מסאבא

tallit,[1] as it is written: "His garment was white as snow"[A2] [Daniel 7:9]. See Tikkun 10, folio 21b, regarding the meaning of tzitzit (ritual fringes). From there you will understand the reason for placing a tallit on the deceased, connected to the mystical concept of "seraphim standing" [Isaiah 6:2], as we have explained above. In Tikkun 18, folio 29b, it states that for those who fulfill the commandment of tzitzit to cover the Divine Presence from the forces of judgment,[3] the Holy One, blessed be He, commands the chariot angels to lift them with their wings, to carry them from place to place, and to shield them from all harmful spirits and destructive angels.

It seems to me, in my humble opinion, that for one who was accustomed to place hyssop on his table during Sabbath meals of holy faith,[B] as mentioned in our treatises, it would be good to include some hyssop with the spices and fragrant herbs when washing him after death. The power of hyssop for human purification is well known. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai stated in Parashat Shemot, folio 15, that no celestial appointee has dominion over it except the Holy One, blessed be He, alone, just as we also say regarding the four species of the lulav and various grains, which is why we bless "Who brings forth bread from the earth"—He Himself in His glory.

It is written in Parashat Yitro that in every place where the Holy One, blessed be He, wishes to purify a person with hyssop, they become purified. Why? Because it awakens its power from above, where this power is entrusted. When this power is awakened, it drives away the spirit of impurity, and the person is purified. Thus, purification through hyssop

[A] Or: "like white snow" — This is a more literal translation of the Aramaic phrase from Daniel 7:9, maintaining the comparative structure of 'like white snow' rather than 'white as snow.'

[B] Or: "meals of sacred faith" — While this phrase typically refers to Sabbath meals in kabbalistic contexts, the text doesn't explicitly mention Sabbath here, only that the practice occurs on Sabbath. A more direct translation might omit the specific Sabbath reference.

[1] The text specifies wool (צמר) as the material for the tallit, reflecting the traditional preference for woolen tallitot, particularly for burial purposes.

[2] This is a reference to Daniel 7:9, describing the Ancient of Days. The author connects the white burial garment to divine attributes.

[3] The original 'בעלי הדין' literally means 'masters of judgment' but refers to the celestial forces or entities that execute divine judgment. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that tzitzit serve as spiritual protection.

[i] The practice of placing hyssop on one's Sabbath table was a custom among some kabbalists, believed to enhance spiritual purification and protection during sacred meals.

ואתדכי בר נש.[i] ואם כן טהרה על ידי האזוב מועיל לכל בר נש. ויותר יערב ויבושם לו ולנשמתו של אותו שבקש לטהר עצמו בו בחייו ולהבריח מאהלו ומשלחנו אותם המחשיכים פני הבריות בקטרוגם. ועץ ארז ואזוב רומז לקב״ה ושכינת עזו והוא כטעם האתרוג עם הלולב ואזוב רומז לגן ה׳ שמשם יזובו כל נפשות הצדיקים והנשמה הקדושה כשתשיג מה שביכלתה תדבק בנפש העליונה ותפשוט מלבוש העפר מעליה ותדבק בשכינה. וזוהי מיתת נשיקה שהוא דבוק הנפש בשרשה[ii] בסוד ישקני מנשיקות פיהו. ולכן צדיקים המתים בענין זה אינם מטמאים[iii] כאשר בארנו לעיל:[iv] benefits every person. It will be even more pleasing and fragrant to the soul of one who sought to purify himself with it during his lifetime, driving away from his tent and table those who darken the countenance of creatures with their accusations. 45R

The cedar wood and hyssop symbolize the Holy One, blessed be He, and His mighty Divine Presence, similar to the etrog with the lulav. The hyssop specifically symbolizes the Garden of God,[1] from which flow all the souls of the righteous. When the holy soul attains what it can, it cleaves to the supernal soul, removes its earthly garment, and adheres to the Divine Presence. This is "death by divine kiss,"[A] which is the cleaving of the soul to its root, in the mystical sense of "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of His mouth" [Song of Songs 1:2]. Therefore, the righteous who die in this manner do not transmit ritual impurity, as we have explained above. 50R 55R

והמתקדשים והמטהרים עצמם לפחות בשלש רגלים ובראש

Those who sanctify and purify themselves at least during the three pilgrimage festivals, Rosh 60R

[A] Or: "death of the kiss" — A more literal translation of this kabbalistic concept, though 'death by divine kiss' better conveys the meaning to English readers unfamiliar with this mystical concept.

[1] In kabbalistic symbolism, hyssop's association with the Garden of God refers to its role as a conduit between earthly and divine realms, facilitating the soul's journey.

[i] The Zohar teaches that hyssop has special power to drive away 'ruach mesa'ava' (spirit of impurity), making it valuable both during life and in death rituals.

[ii] Death by divine kiss (mitat neshikah) was considered the highest form of death in kabbalistic tradition, where the soul departs directly through divine connection rather than through the Angel of Death. This was believed to be how Moses, Aaron, and Miriam died.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic belief that the perfectly righteous who die by 'divine kiss' do not transmit ritual impurity, as their death is a pure spiritual transformation rather than a result of the forces of impurity.

[iv] Cf. Tikkun 10 of Tikkunei Zohar — The text cites this passage to explain why the deceased is wrapped in a tallit, suggesting that the protective spiritual properties of the tallit with tzitzit continue to benefit the soul after death. | Cf. Tikkun 18 of Tikkunei Zohar — This reference supports the practice of burying the dead with a tallit, as it suggests that the protective qualities of the tzitzit continue to shield the soul even after death from accusers and negative spiritual forces. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shemot — The author cites this to establish the special purifying properties of hyssop, which are directly controlled by God rather than angelic intermediaries, making it especially effective for purification rituals including those for the deceased. | Cf. Song of Songs 1:2 — The text interprets this verse from Song of Songs mystically to explain the concept of 'death by divine kiss' (mitat neshikah), where the soul's departure occurs through direct connection with the divine rather than through the Angel of Death, representing the highest form of death reserved for the most righteous. | Cf. Daniel 7:9 — This biblical reference is used to justify the custom of wrapping the deceased in a white tallit, connecting the burial shroud to divine garments described in Daniel's vision, thereby suggesting that proper burial preparation helps align the deceased with divine attributes.

השנה ויום הכפורים[i] אם לא
בטבילת גופם במ׳ סאה[ii] כי זה
היה להם ודאי תקון בטהרה.
ברם לפחות מטילים על ראשם
או רובם תשעה קבין[iii] של מים
יראה לי שבכלל החסד של
אמת[iv] שיעשו עמו העוסקים
בטהרתו ביודעם שכך דרכו
בחייו הנה מה טוב כי בשטיפתו
וריקו על ראשו ועל כל גופו
ט׳ קבין שהם רי״ו בצים[v] כנגד
רי״ו אותיות שבשם הגדול
שלכן נקרא אריה. ובן אמה
על אמה הנאמר במקוה הוא
רי״ו טפחים ורום ג׳ אמות הם
גי׳ רי״ו שיוצאים מן ההוי״ה
כנדרש במקומו בתקוני התשובה
פרק י״א שכללם יחד תרח״ם
והוא סוד מקוה ישראל ה׳[vi] כי
שעור המקוה שהוא תרמ״ח

Hashanah, and Yom Kippur—if not by immersing their bodies in forty se'ah of water, which would certainly be an effective purification—but at least by pouring nine kav of water over their heads or most of their bodies: it seems to me that it should be included in the true kindness[A] that those engaged in his ritual purification should perform for him, knowing that this was his practice during his lifetime. How good it would be to pour and empty upon his head and his entire body nine kav, which equals 216 eggs, corresponding to the 216 letters in the great Name, which is therefore called "lion"[B] (אריה).[1] Similarly, the one-by-one-cubit measure mentioned regarding the ritual bath equals 216 handbreadths, and a height of three cubits has the numerical value of 216,[2] which derive from the Divine Name (YHVH) as explained in its place in the Rectifications of Repentance, chapter 11,[C] where together they total "You will have mercy"[D] (תרח״ם). This is the secret of "the Lord

65R 70R 75R 80R

[A] Or: "chesed shel emet" — The Hebrew term 'chesed shel emet' is sometimes kept untranslated in English texts about Jewish burial practices because it has become a technical term referring specifically to the kindness shown to the dead.

[B] Or: "ARI'eH" — This could be left untranslated as a Hebrew acronym representing the numerical value 216, which might better preserve the technical kabbalistic terminology. However, the translation as 'lion' is more accessible and reflects the actual meaning of the word.

[C] Or: "in Tikkunei HaTeshuvah, chapter 11" — Keeping the original Hebrew title might be more accurate for scholarly reference, but the translation provides better accessibility for readers unfamiliar with Hebrew.

[D] Or: "TRaCHeM" — The Hebrew word could be left as a transliteration to emphasize its function as a technical term in gematria calculations, but translating it conveys the meaning more clearly to general readers.

[1] This refers to a kabbalistic concept where the Hebrew word for 'lion' (אריה) has the numerical value of 216, which is the same as the number of letters in certain combinations of divine names. This gematria (numerical equivalence) creates a mystical connection between the lion as a symbol of divine power and the divine names themselves.

[2] The author is creating a series of numerical correspondences all centered on the number 216, connecting physical measurements of ritual objects (the mikveh dimensions) with divine names through gematria (Jewish numerology).

[i] The three pilgrimage festivals (Passover, Shavuot, and Sukkot) along with Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur were times when Jewish men traditionally immersed in a mikveh (ritual bath) for spiritual purification.

[ii] Forty se'ah is the minimum amount of water required for a valid mikveh (ritual bath) according to Jewish law.

[iii] Nine kav of water is a measure traditionally used for a partial purification when a complete immersion in a mikveh is not possible. This was particularly used by men for seminal emissions.

[iv] Chesed shel emet (true kindness) is a traditional term for activities performed for the dead, since they cannot reciprocate or thank the performers.

[v] The Hebrew letters רי״ו (reish, yod, vav) have the numerical value of 216 in gematria (Hebrew numerology).

[vi] This is a quote from Jeremiah 17:13 that creates a wordplay between 'mikveh' as a ritual bath and 'mikveh' meaning 'hope' or 'expectation.'

מפחים כשעור השם ומלת תרחם
הוא בגימטריא מצפ״ן מצפ״ן
85 הוי״ה טדה״ד או הוי״ה אהי״ה
עם הכולל. ויכוין לג׳ שמות
מלאים ביו״דין שהם ג׳ פעמים
שם ע״ב היוצאים משם ע״ב
ס״ג מ״ה[i] שהוא שם הוי״ה מלא
90 ביוד״ין וס״ג מלא ביודי״ן ואל״ף
ומ״ה מאלפין לבד. המטהרים
שם בן שבשבינה[ii] שהוא שם
הוי״ה מלא בהה״ן. ועוד יכוין
האדם המטהר עצמו בחייו כי
95 הוא מקבל על ראשו ועל גופו
שפע השעה מדות[iii] המריקים
עליו והוא במדרגת השבינה
ועם המשפיעים והמקבלים
הם עשר ובזה יכוונו גם אחר
100 מותו לטהרו ולקדשו. ושיעור
תשעה קבין שקלתי אותם פה
מודינה[iv] שמימיה קלים הרבה
והוא כמו שלשים ושמנה ליטרא
וחצי מים. ואם יהיו כבדים
105 יוצרך להוסיף עליהם כי טוב
להוסיף על צד היותר טוב is the hope of Israel"[A] [Jeremiah 17:13], for the measure of the mikveh, which is 648 handbreadths, is equivalent to the numerical value of the Divine Name, and the word "You will have mercy" has the same numerical value as the Divine Names מצפ״ן 85R הוי״ה אהי״ה or מצפ״ן הוי״ה טדה״ד with the inclusive count.[1]

One should also have in mind the three full Divine Names spelled with yods, which are three times the 72-letter Name that emerge from the Names 72, 90R 63, and 45—that is, the Divine Name YHVH spelled fully with yods, and the 63-Name spelled fully with yods and alef, and the 45-Name spelled with alefs only. These purify the 52-Name within the Divine Presence,[B] which is the Divine Name YHVH spelled 95R fully with heis.[2]

Furthermore, a person who purifies himself during his lifetime should have in mind that he is receiving upon his head and body the flow of the nine attributes that are emptied upon him, and he is at 100R the level of the Divine Presence, and together with those who bestow and those who receive, they are te[3]n. And with these intentions they should also purify and sanctify him after his death.

[A] Or: ""Mikveh Israel Hashem"" — Keeping the original Hebrew might better preserve the wordplay between 'mikveh' as ritual bath and 'mikveh' as hope, but the translation better conveys the meaning of the biblical verse.

[B] Or: "the Name Ban within the Shekhinah" — The alternate translation preserves the technical kabbalistic terminology (Ban is the name given to the 52-value divine name) and uses 'Shekhinah' rather than 'Divine Presence', which might be preferred in more technical kabbalistic contexts.

[1] These combinations of divine names are kabbalistic formulations used in mystical meditation. The 'inclusive count' (הכולל) is a technique in gematria that adds 1 to the total, representing the unity that encompasses all the letters.

[2] In Kabbalah, different spellings of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) have different numerical values and correspond to different divine aspects and spiritual worlds. The 52-Name (spelled with heis) is associated with Malkhut (Kingdom) and the Shekhinah (Divine Presence).

[3] This describes a kabbalistic understanding of ritual purification where the person becomes a vessel for divine attributes (sefirot). The nine attributes plus the person (as representative of the Shekhinah/Divine Presence) make ten, corresponding to the complete set of divine emanations in Kabbalah.

[i] These are kabbalistic references to specific spellings of the divine name YHVH, where each has a different numerical value: 72, 63, and 45 respectively.

[ii] The 'Name of 52 in the Shekhinah' refers to another spelling of the divine name with the numerical value of 52, associated with the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah).

[iii] The nine attributes likely refer to nine of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah, excluding Malkhut (Kingdom), which is often identified with the Shekhinah or divine presence mentioned in the next phrase.

[iv] Modena is a city in northern Italy where the author, Aaron Berechia of Modena, lived and served as a rabbi.

מלפחות אפי׳ קורטוב[i] שכל מדות חכמים הם מצומצמים ובארבעים סאה חסר קורטוב אינו יכול לטבול וכן יהיה בשיעור תשעה קבין שאפילו טפה אחת תעכב הטהרה. וישפכם על ראשו ועל רובו לאט לו ויכוין לטהרת נשמתו. [ii]

Regarding the measure of nine kav, I weighed them here in Modena, where the water is very light, and it is about thirty-eight and a half litra of water.[1] If the water is heavier, it would be necessary to add more, for it is better to add more than to have even a drop less, since all the measures established by the Sages are precise. In a ritual bath of forty se'ah, if it is missing even a tiny amount, one cannot immerse, and the same applies to the measure of nine kav, where even a single drop would hinder the purification. And one should pour it slowly over his head and most of his body, with the intention of purifying his soul.[2] 105R 110R 115R

הנשמה רואה בחייה לפעמים מה שעתידים לעשות לגוף לאחר מיתה שנאמר והעוף אוכל אותם מן הסל מעל ראשי[iii] והרי לא אכל העוף בשרו רק אחר שמת וקשה לנשמה זילות הגוף כדאמרו קשה רימה למת.[iv] ויש שרצו להסמיך מן התורה שהנשמה לאחר שמת האדם רואה מה שעושים לגוף. וכבר אמרנו שהנשמה אינה עולה עד שיקבר הגוף. ובשם שאין להראות

The soul sometimes sees during its lifetime what will be done to the body after death,[3] as it is said, "and the birds ate them from the basket above my head" [Genesis 40:17]—yet the birds did not eat his flesh until after he died. The degradation of the body is difficult for the soul, as they said, "the worm is painful to the dead."[A] Some have tried to find support in the Torah for the idea that after a person dies, the soul sees what is being done to the body. We have already stated that the soul does not ascend until the body is buried.[4] Just as one should not show a Torah scroll in the ark to an idolater, for 120R 125R

[A] Or: "as they said, "the worm causes distress to the deceased"" — This alternative translation uses more formal language and avoids the potentially confusing literal translation of physical pain, since the text is discussing a metaphysical concept of the soul's distress at bodily decomposition.

[1] The litra was a weight measure used in Italy during this period. The author is providing a practical measurement that would have been understood by his contemporary readers in Modena.
[2] This emphasizes that the ritual washing is not merely physical but has profound spiritual significance, purifying the soul of the deceased as it transitions to the afterlife.
[3] This introduces a mystical concept that the soul has prophetic awareness while still in the body, particularly regarding future treatment of the corpse.
[4] This reflects the kabbalistic view that the soul remains connected to the body until proper burial, during which time it experiences distress at any disrespect shown to the corpse.

[i] A kortov is a very small measure of liquid in rabbinic literature, emphasizing that even the tiniest deficiency in the required amount invalidates the ritual.
[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author is discussing ritual purification practices that should be performed for the deceased as part of the tahara (ritual washing) based on their practices during life | Cf. Jeremiah 17:13 — The author creates a wordplay between 'mikveh' (ritual bath) and 'mikveh' (hope) from Jeremiah to connect ritual purification with spiritual redemption | Cf. Tikkunei HaTeshuvah Chapter 11 — The author references another work that explains the kabbalistic significance of the numerical values related to ritual purification | Cf. Zohar — The text employs Zoharic-style explanations of divine names and their numerical equivalents, a hallmark of kabbalistic literature that influenced Ma'avar Yabok
[iii] This is a quote from Genesis 40:17, part of the chief baker's dream that Joseph interpreted. The author is using this as evidence that souls can foresee what will happen to their bodies after death.
[iv] This is a Talmudic saying (Berakhot 18b) meaning "the worm is painful to the dead," suggesting that the deceased maintain some awareness of what happens to their body after death.

ס״ת שבארון לעובד למולך
כי שם הוא תלוי המזל עליון
הנוזל רב טוב לבית ישראל
130 שעל כן נענש חזקיהו[i] כך אין
להראות לו המת בקבר כי שם
שוכב בכבו״ד ואין להשליט
בו עינא אחרא דפגעא.[ii] עוד
אמרו במדרש קהלת ובירושלמי
135 פרק אין מעמידין גם כן בשם
רבי זעירא ובשם ר׳ אשיאן
שהמת יודע ושומע קלוסו
כמתוך החלום. וכל שאומרים
בפניו הוא יודע עד שיסתם
140 הגולל וישוב אל העפר. וכן
אמר רב אחים לי בהספדאי
דהתם קאימנא[iii] והרבה חכמים
במס׳ מועד קטן שהיו אומרים
לספדניא ההוא יומא מאי
145 קאמרת. וההספד יקרא דחיי
ודשיכבי הוא כנודע. ובכלל
יקרא דשיכבי הוא גם כן מה
שנוהגים שכשאחד מקרובי המת
לא היה בקבורתו הולך לבית
150 הקברות לבקרו ואולי יש סמך
לזה ממה דתניא באבל רבתי
מעשה שמת שמעון בן יהוצדק
בלוד ובא יוחנן אחיו מן הגליל therein depends the supreme destiny flowing abundant goodness to the House of Israel[1] (for which reason Hezekiah was punished), similarly one should not show the deceased in the grave, for there he lies in honor, and one should not allow the harmful "evil eye" to have power over him.[A] It is further stated in the Midrash on Ecclesiastes and in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "Ein Ma'amidin," in the name of Rabbi Zeira and Rabbi Ashian, that the dead person knows and hears his eulogy as if in a dream.[B] And everything said in his presence, he knows until the grave is sealed and he returns to dust. Thus Rabbi Achim said, "I will be present at my own eulogy," and many sages in Tractate Mo'ed Katan would ask the eulogizers on that day, "What did you say?" The eulogy is an honor to both the living and the dead,[2] as is known. Included in the honor of the dead is also the practice that when one of the deceased's relatives was not present at the burial, he goes to the cemetery to visit him.[C] Perhaps there is support for this from what is taught in Avel Rabbati: "There was an incident where Shimon ben Yehotzadak died in Lod, and his brother Yochanan came from the Galilee after the grave was sealed. They came and asked Rabbi Tarfon and the sages, who said that he should not defile himself [by having the grave reopened], but they should open the courtyard of the grave so he could

130R 135R 140R 145R 150R 155R

[A] Or: "and one should not subject him to the harmful gaze of others" — This alternative translation avoids the potentially confusing mystical terminology of "evil eye" for modern readers, while still conveying the concept of protecting the deceased from inappropriate or harmful viewing.

[B] Or: "the deceased is aware of and perceives his eulogy as through a dreamlike state" — This alternative uses more precise language about the state of consciousness being described, avoiding the potentially misleading implication that the dead literally 'hear' in the same way as the living.

[C] Or: "when a relative of the deceased was unable to attend the burial, it is customary for them to visit the gravesite afterward" — This alternative translation more clearly indicates that this is a normative practice rather than just a description, and uses gender-neutral language to make the guidance more inclusive.

[1] This mystical phrase refers to the Torah scroll as a conduit of divine blessing. The author draws a parallel between the sacred nature of Torah scrolls and the sanctity of the human body after death.

[2] This reflects the Jewish concept that proper eulogies serve multiple purposes: honoring the deceased, comforting the living, and inspiring ethical improvement.

[i] This refers to King Hezekiah who was punished for showing the treasures of his kingdom to Babylonian envoys (2 Kings 20:12-19), which eventually led to their conquest of Jerusalem. The author draws a parallel between improperly displaying sacred items and improperly displaying the deceased.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase refers to preventing harmful "evil eye" influences from affecting the deceased, reflecting the belief that inappropriate viewing of the dead could harm their soul.

[iii] This phrase quotes a Talmudic passage where Rabbi Achim states "I will be present at my own eulogy," supporting the idea that the deceased is aware of what is said at their funeral.

אחר שנסתם הגולל ובאו ושאלו
155 את רבי טרפון וחכמים ואמרו
אל יטמא אלא יפתחו חצר
הקבר ויראה[i] והביא ברייתא זו
הרשב״א בתשובה רצ״ב. הגם
שמנהג זה הוא מדברים שאלו לא
160 נכתבו ראוי להעשות משום יקרא
דשכבי ומשום נייחא דדעתא
דחיי.[ii]

see." The Rashba cited this baraita in responsum 292. Although this custom is among those things that if they had not been written down, it would still be proper to perform them for the honor of the deceased and for the peace of mind of the living.[1] 160R

וממה ששמעתי אומרים שהמת
יודע מענייני העה״ז קודם
165 רחיצתו יותר מאחר הרחיצה
נוכל לומר שברחיצה מרחיקים
ממנו ומנשמתו חומריות העה״ז
ואחר שמצואתו רוחץ מכאן
ואילך תאב ללבוש מחלצות
170 מכתנות אור מעין אויר גן עדן
תחתון[iii] בסוד וטהרו ואח״כ

From what I have heard people say that the dead know more about matters of this world before their washing than after it,[A] we can say that through washing, the materiality of this world is distanced from them and their souls. After being cleansed of impurity, from that point onward they desire to wear pure garments made of light, reminiscent of the atmosphere of the lower Garden of Eden,[B] in keeping with the mystical principle of "and they shall be pu- 165R 170R

[A] Or: "Based on what I have heard said, the deceased is more aware of worldly matters before the ritual washing than afterward" — This alternate translation uses 'the deceased' instead of 'the dead' for a more respectful tone, and 'ritual washing' explicitly indicates the Jewish tahara process. However, the original translation is more direct and faithful to the Hebrew text.

[B] Or: "the soul yearns to be clothed in luminous vestments, similar to the ethereal quality of the lower Paradise" — This alternate translation emphasizes the mystical dimension more strongly with terms like 'luminous vestments' and 'ethereal quality,' which might better capture the kabbalistic concept. 'Paradise' is used instead of 'Garden of Eden' as a variation, though both are acceptable translations.

[1] This concluding phrase emphasizes the dual purpose of Jewish burial practices: showing respect to the deceased while providing emotional closure for mourners.

[i] This describes a rabbinic ruling that balances two concerns: avoiding ritual impurity by not reopening a grave, while still allowing a relative who missed the funeral to see the burial site for closure.

[ii] Cf. Genesis 40:17 — The author uses this verse to prove that the soul can foresee what will happen to the body after death, since the baker saw in his dream what would happen to his body after execution. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Avodah Zarah — The Jerusalem Talmud is cited as a source for the teaching that the dead are aware of what is said about them before burial. | Cf. Midrash Kohelet (Ecclesiastes) — The Midrash on Ecclesiastes is cited alongside the Jerusalem Talmud as a source for the teaching that the dead are aware of what is said about them. | Cf. Tractate Mo'ed Katan — This Talmudic tractate is referenced to support the idea that sages were concerned about what was said in eulogies, implying the dead person would be aware of it. | Cf. 2 Kings 20:12-19 — The text alludes to Hezekiah being punished for showing the Babylonian messengers his treasures, comparing this to improperly displaying a deceased person in their grave. | Cf. Avel Rabbati (Semachot) — This minor tractate on mourning laws is cited to support the practice of allowing relatives who missed a burial to visit the grave for closure. | Cf. Rashba's Responsum 292 — The author notes that the Rashba (Rabbi Shlomo ben Aderet, 13th century) cited this teaching in his responsa, adding weight to the practice.

[iii] This is a reference to the kabbalistic concept of spiritual garments that the soul wears in the afterlife. The 'garments of light' (כתנות אור) contrast with the 'garments of skin' (כתנות עור) that Adam and Eve received after their expulsion from Eden. The ritual purification (tahara) is understood as beginning the soul's transition from physical to spiritual existence.

וקדשו[i] וזה לשון השגור בפי הכל שקוראים לרחיצה זו טהרה ובזה מתמעט ממנו השיח והשיג שהיה לו בענייני חמריות העה״ז. ובירושלמי דאין מעמידין כד דמך רבי נחום בר סימאי חפון איקונתא מחצלן[ii] פי׳ חיפו האקונין במחצלות אמרי כמה דלא חמתון בחיוהי לא יחמתון בדמיכותיה וחכמין אינון כלום אמר רשב״ל אין בינינו ולצדיקים אלא דבור פה בלבד. ובגמרין פרק ג׳ דמועד קטן גרסינן אשתעו כל צלמניא והוו למחצליא וכן בשבת פרק שואל. ומעובדי דבני ר׳ חייא דנפקו לקרייתא דכתיבי בפרק מי שמתו ומהנהו קפולאי דקפלי בארעא דרב נחמן בשבת. ומההוא אמגושא דהוה מחטט שכבי[iii] דבפרק חזקת הבתים נראה מכל אלו שיודעים ושיש להם ממשות ומרגישים בענייני העולם הזה ואפי׳ המתים שאינם תלמידי חכמים. אמר רבי אבהו כל מה שאומרים בפני המת יודע עד שיסתום הגולל פליגי בה רבי חייא בר אבא ורבי שמעון ברבי, חד אמר עד שיסתום הגולל וחד אמר עד שיתעכל הבשר. ובמסכת ברכות פרק מי שמתו האריך מידיעת המתים בדברי העה״ז מלבד השגתם בעה״ב. וכן במציעא פרק השובר בר״ל דהוה מציין מערתי דרבנן ואעלמא rified” and afterward “and they shall be sanctified.” This is the common terminology used by everyone, who call this washing “purification” (tahara), and through this process, the discourse and perception that the deceased had regarding material matters of this world are diminished. 175R

In the Jerusalem Talmud, tractate Avodah Zarah, it is related that when Rabbi Nahum bar Simai died, they covered the statues with mats. This means they covered the images with mats, saying, “Just as he did not look at them during his lifetime, he should not see them in his death.” And are the dead aware of anything? Rabbi Shimon ben Lakish said: “Between us and the righteous, there is only the matter of speech alone.”[A] 180R 185R

In our Gemara, in the third chapter of Moed Katan, we learn that all the statues spoke and were covered with mats, and similarly in Shabbat, chapter “Sho’el.” And from the accounts of Rabbi Hiyya’s sons who went to the villages, as written in the chapter “Mi Shemeto,” and from those launderers who folded garments on Rabbi Nahman’s property on Shabbat, and from that magician who was exhuming corpses mentioned in the chapter “Hazakat HaBatim”—from all these cases it appears that the dead have knowledge, possess substance, and perceive matters of this world, even those deceased who were not Torah scholars. 190R 195R

Rabbi Abbahu said: “Everything that is said in the presence of the dead, they know until the grave is sealed.” Rabbi Hiyya bar Abba and Rabbi Shimon son of Rabbi disagreed about this: one said until the grave is sealed, and the other said until the flesh decomposes. In tractate Berakhot, chapter “Mi Shemeto,” there is an extensive discussion about 200R 205R

[A] Or: “The only difference between us and the righteous dead is speech alone” — This alternate translation makes the comparison between the living and dead more explicit by adding ‘dead’ after ‘righteous,’ which is implied but not stated in the original. This clarifies the meaning for readers unfamiliar with the Talmudic context.

[i] This appears to be referring to the biblical sequence found in Leviticus regarding purification rituals, where purification (טהרה) precedes sanctification (קדושה). The author applies this principle to the deceased’s spiritual journey.

[ii] This refers to a story in the Jerusalem Talmud about Rabbi Nahum bar Simai, who was known for his exceptional piety and had never looked at Roman statues or images during his lifetime. When he died, they covered these images out of respect, believing he shouldn’t have to see them in death either.

[iii] This refers to a story in the Talmud (Bava Batra 58a) about a magician who was exhuming corpses. Rabbi Banayah confronted him, demonstrating that the dead retain a certain awareness and dignity that should be respected.

מיניה מערתא דרבי חייא וכו׳. ובחזקת הבתים ברב בנאיה כד מטא למערתא דאברהם ולמערתיה דאדם הראשון:[i] the dead's knowledge of worldly matters, apart from their perception in the World to Come. Similarly, in Bava Metzia, chapter "HaSokher," regarding Reish Lakish who was marking the graves of rabbis but could not find the cave of Rabbi Hiyya, etc. And in "Hazakat HaBatim" concerning Rav Banayah when he reached the cave of Abraham and the cave of Adam, the first man. 210R

פרק כ״ו

Chapter 26

ולהיות כי הנשמה מכרת בכבוד הגוף וכן בבזיונו אחר מותו[ii] בזה נבין ונדע כי ג״ח לגוף הוא ג״ח ג״כ לנשמה ולכחותיה כל א׳ כפי מקום כבודו ע״י בני אדם החיים שהם בעלי גוף ונשמה טהורה בתוכם ואין לזלזל בכבוד שום מת וכ״ש ת״ח. עוד הזהירו שלא לעשות נישואין בחדר שמת בו ת״ח מחדש והמתים יכולים להזיק למי שמזיק להם.[iii] ואמרו כי המת מגיד בטורח גדול[iv] בנ״ל

Since the soul recognizes the honor of the body and likewise its disgrace after death,[1] we can understand and know that acts of kindness to the body are also acts of kindness to the soul and its faculties,[2] each according to its proper place, performed through living people who possess both body and pure soul within them. One should not dishonor any deceased person, especially a Torah scholar.[3] The Sages further warned against holding wedding celebrations in a room where a Torah scholar has recently died, and the dead can harm those who harm them. They said that the dead communicate only with great difficulty, as mentioned elsewhere, and regarding the 5R 10R

[1]This opening establishes the text's central premise: there is an ongoing relationship between the soul and its physical vessel even after death, which provides theological justification for proper treatment of the deceased.

[2]The author expands the concept of gemilut chasadim (acts of loving-kindness) to include care for the deceased, suggesting that such actions benefit not just the body but the soul itself.

[3]Throughout the text, Torah scholars (talmidei chachamim) are afforded special status even after death, reflecting the belief that their elevated spiritual status continues beyond physical life.

[i]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse on Truthful Speech — This passage appears within the larger discussion of the soul's journey after death. The author is explaining how ritual washing (tahara) affects the deceased's connection to the physical world, suggesting that the purification process begins the soul's transition from worldly consciousness toward spiritual awareness. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Avodah Zarah — The author cites this Talmudic passage to support the idea that the dead maintain awareness of this world. The story about covering statues when Rabbi Nahum died implies that the deceased can still see what happens around them. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Moed Katan — This reference to statues speaking and being covered with mats serves as evidence for the author's argument about the dead's continued awareness of worldly matters. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud, Berakhot — The author mentions this as a source that extensively discusses the dead's knowledge of worldly matters, reinforcing his argument about the deceased's continued awareness. | Cf. Zohar, Section on Soul Garments — The phrase 'garments made of light' (מחלצות מבתנות אור) echoes Zoharic teachings about the soul's spiritual vestments. The author is drawing on kabbalistic concepts of how souls are clothed in different spiritual garments after death.

[ii]This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the soul remains aware of how its body is treated after death, which forms the theological basis for the elaborate care of the deceased in Jewish funeral rituals.

[iii]This reflects the belief that the deceased retain certain powers and awareness, including the ability to cause harm to those who dishonor them—a belief that persisted in Jewish folk practices around death and burial.

[iv]This refers to the concept that the dead can communicate, but only with great difficulty and spiritual effort, which appears in various mystical traditions and particularly in Sefer Hasidim.

במ״א ואמרו על פסוק כי לי
15 תכרע כל ברך תשבע כל לשון
שכשהנשמה נפטרת מן הגוף
הולכת להשתחוות לפני השכינה
מיד ומשבעת אותה שלא תגלה
דבר ממה שרואה באותו עולם
20 אלא ברשות.[i] לכן אין טוב לאדם
רק להיות תמים עם ה׳ ולא
יבקש עתידות כי רוב העוסקים
בזה אחריתם היא נבל כי פעמים
מערבים קדש בחול או כי
25 כופין המדרגות ונהפכים עליהם
לרועץ. ובזוהר פ׳ מקץ דף קנ״ה
ע״ב כתוב כל עובדוהי דעלמא
לאו אינון אלא ברעותא דלבא
וכד סליק ברעותא דבר נש וזהו
30 גם את העולם נתן בלבם ולכן
אין לשלם רעה תחת רעה כי בזה
משלים כח הרע ועובר על לאו
דדברי קבלה אל תאמר אשלמה
רע והמדבר לשון הרע מגביר
35 כח הנחש הקדמוני[ii] וממהרין
ליפרע ממנו בעה״ז. ואמרו בפ׳
משפטים בגין לישנא בישא מרעין
באים לעלמא וגורמים שהנחש
מתפשט מקשקשותיו פן יחריב
40 העולם בהם ועולה לקטרג עיין
פ׳ פקודי בהיכלות ואוי לבעלי
לשון. ומי שאינו משאיל ספריו
לאחרים נמצא כתוב כי בשימות
לא ישארו ביד יורשיו[iii] וטוב
45 להניח ספריו לבן ההוגה בהם
ומשאיל אותם ואמרו עוד כי
אשה שקונה ספרים להשאילן
לאחרים ללמוד בהם זוכה

verse “For to Me every knee shall bend, every tongue shall swear” (Isaiah 45:23), they taught that when 15R the soul departs from the body, it immediately goes to bow before the Divine Presence, which makes it swear not to reveal anything it sees in that world except with permission.

Therefore, it is best for a person to be whole- 20R hearted with God and not seek knowledge of future events,[1] for most who engage in such practices ultimately come to ruin, since they sometimes mix the holy with the mundane or force spiritual levels to reveal themselves, which then turn against them de- 25R structively. In the Zohar (Miketz 155b) it is written: “All the workings of the world depend solely on the intentions of the heart,” and when a person’s intention rises, this fulfills “He has even put eternity into their hearts” (Ecclesiastes 3:11). Therefore, one 30R should not repay evil with evil, for this completes the power of evil and transgresses the prohibition in Scripture: “Do not say, ‘I will repay evil’” (Proverbs 20:22). One who speaks evil language strengthens the power of the primordial serpent,[2] and divine ret- 35R ribution hastens to collect from him in this world. They said in Parashat Mishpatim that because of evil speech, diseases come to the world and cause the serpent to spread from its scales, lest it destroy the world with them, and it rises to accuse (see Parashat 40R Pekudei in the Heikhalot section); woe to those who possess [such] a tongue.

Regarding one who does not lend his books to others, it is written that when he dies, they will not remain in his heirs’ possession. It is good to leave 45R one’s books to a son who studies them and lends them to others. They further said that a woman who purchases books to lend to others for study mer-

[1] This warning against divination practices appears somewhat unexpectedly in this passage about funeral practices, but connects to the concept that the dead possess knowledge of spiritual realms that the living should not attempt to access improperly.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that human speech has cosmic consequences, with evil speech literally empowering negative spiritual forces represented by the primordial serpent.

[i] This describes the belief that immediately upon death, the soul encounters the Divine Presence and is sworn to secrecy about the spiritual realms it witnesses—a concept that explains why the righteous do not return to reveal heavenly secrets.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that evil speech literally strengthens cosmic evil, represented by the primordial serpent (nachash hakadmoni), creating not just social harm but metaphysical damage.

[iii] This represents a folk belief about divine justice—that one who refuses to share knowledge through lending books will be punished by having those books lost after death. This incentivizes generosity with Torah learning materials.

לבנים ת״ח. ונמצא כתוב שמי
50 שנושא ציצית ותפילין כל היום
בני מעלה יספידו עליו במותו.
ראינו להעלות פה סוד לוית
אורחים וממנה נבין קצת מכוונת
לוית המת. אמרו רבנן כי גדולה
55 מצות הלויה שמצלת האדם מכל
נזק שאירע לו[i] במ״ש חכמינו ז״ל
רבי פלוני אלוייה לרבי פלוני
ארבע אמות במתא ואיתרע ליה
נזקא ואתנציל מיניה. ולכן אין
60 אומרים ללויה חזור. ומצוה זו
חשובה מאד כי בעה״ב בזכות
ג״ח שעושה הקדושה עמו וגורם
לויית הקדושה עם האורח[ii] כי
היא שמירה הדרך ודאי שכל
65 שפע היורד מהת״ת היא שומרת
אותו. ועוד שהוא בפתח כניסת
הדרך כמו שדרשו על פסוק
בזאת יבא אהרן אל הקדש והיינו
אור. ה״א ואות ה״א שבשם
70 רודפת אחר היחוד שלכן היא
חולת אהבה מצד מונעי היחוד.
והיחוד הם יה״ו אותיות הזכר
וטלא דנגיד מניה[iii] והם עם
בעל הבית זה שהוא במקום
75 הת״ת הנקרא לחם. ובן הוא
נותן מלחמו לאורח וזה לויה
יו״ד מימין ה״א משמאל וא״ו
באמצע. ובהיות עושה עמו לויה
גורם שהה״א תלך עמו שהיא its having sons who are Torah scholars.[1] It is also written that one who wears tzitzit and tefillin all day will be eulogized by heavenly beings at his death. 50R

We have deemed it appropriate to present here the secret of accompanying guests, from which we can understand somewhat the intention behind accompanying the deceased.[2] The Rabbis said that the mitzvah of accompaniment is so great that it saves a person from any harm that might befall him, as our Sages of blessed memory said: "Rabbi So-and-so accompanied Rabbi So-and-so for four cubits in the city, and harm befell him but he was saved from it." Therefore, we do not tell someone who is accompanying another to turn back. This commandment is very important, for through the acts of kindness performed by the host, holiness accompanies him and causes Divine holiness to accompany the guest, serving as protection for the journey, as all divine flow descending from Tiferet guards him. Moreover, this occurs at the threshold of the journey's beginning, as they interpreted the verse "With this shall Aaron enter the holy place" (Leviticus 16:3), meaning "light." The letter hei in the Divine Name pursues unification, which is why it is "love sick" due to those who prevent unification.[3] The unification consists of the letters yod, hei, and vav—the masculine letters—and the dew that flows from them, together with this householder who stands in place of Tiferet, which is called "bread." Thus, he gives of his bread to the guest, and this accompaniment consists of yod on the right, hei on the left, and vav in the middle.[4] When 55R 60R 65R 70R 75R

[1] This unusual statement recognizes women's participation in Torah transmission, albeit indirectly through enabling others' study rather than through direct learning.

[2] The author draws a conceptual parallel between escorting living guests (levayat orchim) and accompanying the dead in funeral processions (levayat ha-met), suggesting both share underlying spiritual principles.

[3] This uses imagery from Song of Songs ("love sick") to personify the letter hei of the divine name YHVH, presenting it as yearning for mystical unification with the other letters, particularly the masculine elements yod-hei-vav.

[4] This describes a mystical arrangement of the divine name's letters that creates a protective structure around the traveler, whether living or deceased.

[i] The mitzvah of accompaniment (levayah) is valued not just for its kindness to the one accompanied but for its protective benefit to the accompanier—a theme that the author will develop in relation to funeral processions as well.

[ii] This presents a mystical interpretation where performing the physical act of accompaniment creates a corresponding spiritual reality—divine holiness literally accompanies both the person performing the kindness and its recipient.

[iii] The author employs a technical kabbalistic concept where the letters yod-hei-vav represent the masculine aspect of divinity that produces 'dew' (divine influence), reflecting Lurianic kabbalistic terminology.

שמירת הדרך וכן האורח יכוין לזה. ועקר תפלת הדרך נוסחה הוא ר״ת לויה לישועתך קויתי ה׳ ל׳ פעמים. ויהי נועם ו׳ פעמים. יהי רצון וכו׳ כדאמרי׳ בגמ׳ וחותם ברוך שומע תפלה. הנה אנכי שולח מלאך וכו׳ עד ולהביאך אל המקום ה׳ פעמים ויש מכניסים תחת יהי רצון במלת לויה יברכך ה׳ וגו׳ או יוהך ישמרני וכו׳ ואומרים ברכות תפלת הדרך לעצמה. וזה טעם עסק התורה בדרך לעשות נייחא לשכינה שעמו לשומרו ועיין בזהר מסוד תפלת הדרך בארוכה. והאדם החי שהוא במדרגת אמת עמו שכינה בכח חלקי נשמתו המיוחדת עם דודה ושכינה רודפת אחר הצדיק ליהנות מהשפעות הת״ת המשפיע על נשמתו בעוסקו בתורה בפרט ובשאר מצות בכלל. ובהלוייתו למת שהוא ודאי אורח הנוטה ללון במקום מנוחתו גורם לשכינה שהיא צדק שתלך לפניו[i] כדכתיב צדק לפניו יהלך בעת שמשים לדרך פעמיו לעלות למקום מנוחתו וכן כתיב והלך לפניך צדקך כי השכינה שנזדווגה עמו ע״י מעשיו כדי להתייחד עם דודה כנזכר עתה היא מקדמתו והולכת לפניו ואומרת לחיצונים סולו סולו

he performs this accompaniment, he causes the hei to go with the guest, serving as protection for the journey, and the guest should intend this as well.[A]

The essence of the Wayfarer's Prayer formula comprises the initial letters of "for Your salvation I wait, O Lord" (Genesis 49:18), recited thirty times. "May the pleasantness" (Psalm 90:17) six times. "May it be Your will..." as stated in the Talmud, concluding with "Blessed are You who hears prayer." "Behold, I send an angel..." (Exodus 23:20) until "to bring you to the place" (23:20) five times. Some insert under "May it be Your will" in the word "accompaniment" (levayah) "May the Lord bless you" etc., or "May He guard me," etc., and recite the blessings of the Wayfarer's Prayer separately. This explains the purpose of studying Torah while traveling: to bring comfort to the Divine Presence that accompanies him for protection. See the Zohar for an extensive discussion of the secret of the Wayfarer's Prayer.

A living person who is at the level of "truth" has the Divine Presence with him through the power of his soul parts united with their Beloved,[B] and the Divine Presence pursues the righteous person to enjoy the influences of Tiferet,[1] which bestows upon his soul when he engages in Torah study specifically and other commandments generally. When accompanying a deceased person, who is certainly a traveler lodging at his resting place, one causes the Divine Presence, which is Righteousness (Tzedek), to go before him, as it is written: "Righteousness shall go before Him" (Psalm 85:14) when he sets his steps on the path to ascend to his resting place. Similarly, it

[A] Or: "By performing the act of accompaniment, he causes the divine letter hei to travel with the guest, which provides spiritual protection for the journey, and the guest should likewise direct his intention toward this mystical process" — This alternate translation more explicitly identifies the 'hei' as a letter of the divine name and emphasizes the importance of kavvanah (directed intention) in activating this mystical protection.

[B] Or: "The living person who has attained the level of Truth has the Divine Presence accompanying him through the power of his soul components that are united with their divine Source" — This alternate translation makes more explicit that 'dodah' (literally 'beloved' or 'uncle') refers to the divine source or origin of the soul parts. It also clarifies that 'emet' (truth) represents a specific spiritual level rather than merely truthfulness.

[1] This describes a reciprocal relationship where the Divine Presence (Shekhinah, associated with the sefirah of Malkhut) seeks connection with the righteous person who embodies the divine attribute of Tiferet through Torah study and mitzvot.

[i] Here the author connects the Divine Presence with the sefirah of Righteousness (Tzedek), associated with Malkhut, which creates a protective vanguard for the soul during its journey after death.

פנו דרך הרימו מכשול[i] ופנו
מקום לדיוקן עליון ועוד כי עתה
מתעצם כח עוש״י דבר״ו של
מקום בעה״ז להאיר לארץ חפץ
ולדרים עליה מעין מה שפעל
ועשה בעה״ז בהיותו משתעשע
עם קוב״ה ושכינתיה בתוך חדרי
ג״ע כאשר יבא לפנינו בחלק
ג׳ בעה״י ואם יצוייר באפשר
שיהיו בהלויית המת ששים רבוא
דיוקני נשמות[ii] ודאי כי יוסיפו
עילוי לנפטר כי כינוס האורות
יהלו עליו באורם והתורה
שהיא סם חיים לו להפארת
ומתפשטת למעלה בסוד נוף
האילן לכל הדיוקנאות על כן
אמרו כנתינתה כך נטילתה
ועוד נדבר מסוד הלויה לפנינו
בס״ד ועיין במגילה פרק בני
העיר ובכתובות פרק האשה
שנתארמלה וגם בברכות פרק
מי שמתו מחיוב לוית המת ושכר
מצוה זו:[iii]

is written: "Your righteousness shall go before you" (Isaiah 58:8), for the Divine Presence that joined with him through his deeds in order to unite with her Beloved, as mentioned, now precedes him and goes before him, saying to the external forces: "Clear the way, clear the way, prepare the road! Remove the obstacles[1] and make room for the supernal image!" Furthermore, now the power of "those who do His word" intensifies in this world to illuminate the desirable land and those who dwell upon it, similar to what he accomplished and did in this world when he delighted with the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence within the chambers of the Garden of Eden, as will be presented before us in Part Three, God willing. 115R 120R 125R

If it were possible to have sixty thousand soul-images in the funeral procession,[2] they would certainly add elevation to the deceased, for the gathering of lights would illuminate him with their radiance, and the Torah, which is the elixir of life for him, adorns and extends upward in the secret of the tree's foliage to all the image[A]s. Therefore, they said: "As it was given, so it is taken." We will 130R 135R

[A] Or: "for the congregation of spiritual lights would shine upon him with their radiance, and the Torah, which serves as an elixir of life for him, glorifies and extends upward according to the mystical principle of the tree's canopy reaching all the divine configurations" — This alternate translation clarifies that 'lights' refers to spiritual illuminations, not physical light. It also better conveys that 'nof ha-ilan' (tree canopy) is being used as a kabbalistic metaphor for how Torah influence extends upward through multiple spiritual levels, and that 'diyoknaot' refers to divine configurations or formations, not merely images.

[1] This adapts Isaiah 57:14, reimagining it as the Divine Presence commanding negative spiritual forces to make way for the soul's journey after death.

[2] The number 600,000 (shishim ribbo) has special significance in Jewish mystical tradition, representing the complete assembly of Israel's souls. Here it suggests an ideal funeral attended by representatives of the entire spiritual community.

[i] This adapts Isaiah 57:14 into a mystical context, depicting the Divine Presence commanding negative forces (chitzonim) to clear a path for the ascending soul, transforming biblical language into a description of the soul's posthumous journey.

[ii] The number 600,000 (shishim ribbo) has special significance in Jewish tradition as the number of Israelite males who left Egypt and the number of letters in the Torah. Here it represents an ideal number of soul-images accompanying the deceased.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section on Visiting the Sick — The text makes reference to earlier discussions on acts of kindness (gemilut chasadim) related to care for the sick, connecting it with the present discussion of caring for the deceased as a continuation of the same spiritual principle. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Miketz 155b — The author directly quotes this Zoharic passage to establish the importance of proper intention in all actions, particularly those related to death and funeral rites. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim — The text references Zoharic teachings about the metaphysical consequences of evil speech, showing how improper speech can create harmful spiritual effects. | Cf. Isaiah 45:23—"For to Me every knee shall bend, every tongue shall swear" — This biblical verse is interpreted mystically to describe the soul's journey immediately after death, when it must bow before the Divine Presence and take an oath. | Cf. Leviticus 16:3—"With this shall Aaron enter discuss more about the secret of accompaniment later, God willing. See Megillah chapter "The People of the City," Ketubot chapter "The Woman Who Was Widowed," and Berakhot chapter "One Whose Dead" regarding the obligation of accompanying the deceased and the reward for this commandment. 140R

פרק כ״ז

Chapter 27

סוד קבורת מתים הוא נחת רוח לנשמה וכל זמן דגופא לא נחית בדוכתא אף רוחא הכי הוא. ונקרא חסד של אמת וכן כל מה שעושים עם המתים כי האדם בחייו קרוי אדם דהיינו אמת[i] ויש בעשור אמת מ״ה כדאיתא בתקונים ואמת הוא יחוד ת״ת ומלכות כדאיתא בזהר בעובדא דינוקא דהיינו א׳ א״ס ובהסתלק הבינה א׳ מאמת ויתעלם הת״ת מהמלכות והיינו שיעשה מת[ii] דהיינו מוצנע ומתעלם וישלוט למטה המיתה רגליה יורדות מות. והטעם כי בינה משפעת חיים ובהנטל החיים כתיב הן אני עץ יבש. ונפרד

The secret of burying the dead is to provide comfort to the soul,[1] for as long as the body does not rest in its place, neither does the spirit. This is called "true kindness"[A] (chesed shel emet), as is everything done for the dead. For a person during their lifetime is called "adam," which signifies "emet" (truth), and within the word "emet" is found the divine name M"H (45),[2] as explained in the Tikkunim. "Emet" represents the unification of Tiferet and Malkhut, as explained in the Zohar in the story of the child, where alef represents Ein Sof (the Infinite). When Binah (represented by the letter alef) withdraws from "emet," Tiferet becomes concealed from Malkhut, resulting in "met" (death)—meaning hidden and concealed[3]—and death rules below, as it is written, "her feet descend to death." 5R 10R 15R

The reason is that Binah flows with life, and when [A] Or: "kindness of truth" — A more literal translation of 'chesed shel emet' would be 'kindness of truth,' which emphasizes that this form of kindness embodies ultimate truth and cannot be reciprocated. While 'true kindness' is more elegant in English, the literal translation preserves the connection to 'emet' (truth) that is central to the passage's wordplay.

[1] The original Hebrew phrase 'nachat ruach laneshama' implies not just comfort but spiritual satisfaction or rest, indicating that proper burial fulfills a metaphysical need for the soul.

[2] This refers to gematria (Jewish numerology), where the Hebrew letters of 'emet' (אמת) have a combined numerical value that relates to the divine name M"H (מה), which equals 45. This numerical connection reveals the divine essence within truth.

[3] The Hebrew 'mutzna umit'alem' more precisely conveys that death makes something both 'stored away' and 'disappeared from view,' emphasizing both physical burial and metaphysical concealment.

the holy place" — The text reinterprets this verse about the High Priest's Temple service as a mystical reference to the beginning of a spiritual journey, connecting ritual accompaniment with divine protection. | Cf. Genesis 49:18—"For Your salvation I wait, O Lord" — This verse forms the basis for a kabbalistic prayer formula used in the Wayfarer's Prayer, which is connected to the mystical practice of accompaniment both for the living and the deceased. | Cf. Psalm 85:14—"Righteousness shall go before Him" — This verse is reinterpreted in a funeral context to suggest that the Divine Presence (associated with the sefirah of Righteousness/Tzedek) accompanies the deceased soul on its journey.

[i] The author is making a wordplay connecting 'adam' (human) with 'emet' (truth), suggesting that the living human embodies divine truth through the unification of higher spiritual realms.

[ii] Here the text presents a profound kabbalistic wordplay: when the letter alef (representing Binah/divine understanding) is removed from the word 'emet' (truth), what remains is 'met' (dead). This illustrates how death represents the separation of higher divine attributes from lower ones.

מן הארץ התחתונה והאדם
הוא חי מקיים היחוד וקושר
נשמה מהבינה. ברוח מהת״ת.
בנפש מהמלכות.[i] ומטהר הגוף
מן הטומאות שלא ישלטו בו
החצונים כשמת הפריד היחודים
האלה שלש מדות אלו שהם בינה
ת״ת ומלכות. וכל זמן שלא נקבר
אין הנשמה עולה כלל ולכן
תקונו להתעסק בצרכי קבורתו
כדכתיב כי עפר אתה וגו׳ דהיינו
הכל היה מן העפר ואפי׳ גלגל
חמה כי מן העפר מוצא הכל וכל
טבין וטיבו דעלמא מיניה נפקין
ולכן הדל דלית ליה מגרמיה
כלום[ii] אמר הכתוב מקימי מעפר
דל כי נפיק מההוא עפרא ובג״ד
הוא דל ברם אבק לא עביד
פירי וכן אפר על כן כתיב
ברשעים כי יהיו אפר תחת כפות
רגליכם[iii] ועפר איהו כללא
דעילא ותתא והוא בבינה ועקרו
במלכות ומצד כחות הדין פ׳
נשא ובלק ועוד שהיא יסוד העפר
שכל ג׳ יסודות אחרים מראים
פעולותיהם בה. והיא עושה
פירות בעפר. ולכן המת ניתן
לקבורה דהיינו עפר מלמטה
ה״א תחתה ועפר מלמעלה
ה״א עילאה ואדם וא״ו באמצע
אוחז בשני הה״ן[iv] והיינו life is taken away, it is written, "Behold, I am a dry tree." The person becomes separated from the lower earth. A living person maintains the divine unification, binding the neshamah from Binah, the ruach from Tiferet, and the nefesh from Malkhut, and purifies the body from impurities so that external forces cannot dominate it. When one dies, these unifications of the three attributes—Binah, Tiferet, and Malkhut—are separated. As long as the body is not buried, the soul cannot ascend at all.[A] Therefore, the proper correction is to attend to burial needs, as it is written, "For you are dust, etc.," meaning everything comes from dust, even the sun's orb, for everything originates from dust, and all worldly goodness emerges from it.

Therefore, regarding the poor person who has nothing of his own, Scripture states, "He raises the poor from the dust," for he emerges from that dust,[1] and therefore he is poor. However, powder does not produce fruit, nor does ash, which is why it is written concerning the wicked, "They shall be ashes under the soles of your feet." Dust encompasses both upper and lower realms; it is in Binah and has its root in Malkhut, and is related to the forces of judgment, as discussed in Parashat Naso and Balak. Furthermore, it is the foundation of earth, in which the other three elements display their effects, and it produces fruit like dust.

Therefore, the dead are given to burial—dust below (the lower hei), dust above (the upper hei), and the person (vav) in the middle,[B] holding [A] Or: "And as long as the body is not buried, the soul cannot ascend whatsoever" — This alternate translation emphasizes the absolute nature of the statement with 'whatsoever' (matching the Hebrew 'klal'), underscoring the critical importance of burial for the soul's journey. The original translation is accurate but slightly softens the emphatic nature of the original.

[B] Or: "meaning dust below corresponding to the lower hei, dust above corresponding to the

[1] The Hebrew uses the phrase 'nafik mehahu afra' which more precisely means 'emerges from that dust,' suggesting both physical and spiritual origination rather than just return.

[i] This passage outlines the kabbalistic understanding of how the three levels of soul (neshamah, ruach, nefesh) connect to three divine attributes (Binah, Tiferet, Malkhut), revealing how human consciousness bridges multiple spiritual realms.

[ii] The author creatively interprets the biblical verse about raising the poor from dust, suggesting that poverty itself emerges from dust, paralleling how humans come from and return to dust, thus linking social status with cosmic cycles.

[iii] The text distinguishes between dust (which is productive and life-giving) and ash (which is sterile and represents complete destruction), using this to explain the different cosmic fates of the righteous versus the wicked.

[iv] This describes the mystical symbolism of burial, where the body (represented by the letter vav) is placed between dust below and dust above (represented by the two hei letters of the divine name), creating a complete divine name that facilitates the soul's ascension.

דמהדרינן א׳ לגבי מת ואהדר
50 אמת ואנו גורמים שתעלה הנשמה
למעלה למעלה בכוונת הקבורה
ובמעשה ובעלייתה מייחד וקושר
סוד אמת שהוא היחוד עליון
והיינו חסד של אמת. [i] both heis. This is why we return the alef to the dead, restoring "emet." Through our intention and action in burial, we cause the soul to ascend higher and higher, and in its ascension, it unifies and binds the secret of "emet,"[1] which is the supernal unification—and this is the meaning of "true kindness." 50R 55R

55 ועקר הסוד הזה בעפר ארץ
ישראל [ii] כי בה הוא סוד העפר
דוקא ולזה אמר יעקב ועשית
עמדי חסד של אמת אל נא
תקברני במצרים. ואמרו
60 שהקבור בא״י כאלו קבור תחת
המזבח כי מקדש מול מקדש
ומזבח מול מזבח וכבר נודע מה
הוא מזבח של מעלה א״כ הקבור
בא״י הוא קבור תחת קו השוה
65 ונשאר בתוך כמו המרכז באמצע
הגלגל [iii] והשקד שממנו יתהוה

The essence of this mystery lies specifically in the soil of the Land of Israel,[2] for in it resides the true secret of earth. This is why Jacob said, "Show me true kindness; please do not bury me in Egypt." They said that one who is buried in the Land of Israel is as if buried beneath the altar, for sanctuary corresponds to sanctuary and altar to altar. It is already known what the heavenly altar represents; therefore, one buried in the Land of Israel is buried beneath the alignment of cosmic forces[A] and remains within, like the center point in the middle of a circle.[3] The almond-shaped essence from which 60R 65R upper hei, and the human as vav in between" — This alternate translation more explicitly shows the correspondence between burial elements and Hebrew letters of the divine name, which is central to the kabbalistic meaning. It clarifies that the human body itself is symbolically the letter vav connecting upper and lower realms.

[A] Or: "beneath the celestial equator" — The term 'kav hashaveh' could be interpreted more cosmologically as the celestial equator, the imaginary line dividing the heavens. This would emphasize the author's use of astronomical imagery, though it might lose some of the mystical nuance of the original.

[1] The original text uses active language suggesting that human burial practices actively cause cosmic unifications in higher spiritual realms, emphasizing the power of proper ritual to affect metaphysical reality.

[2] The author is continuing a discussion about the mystical significance of burial and how the physical location and elements involved have profound spiritual effects. This passage particularly focuses on the special qualities of burial in the Land of Israel.

[3] This cosmological metaphor reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the Land of Israel as the

[i] Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The passage references the Tikkunei Zohar regarding the numerical value of M"H (45) within the word 'emet' (truth), connecting human existence to divine emanations. | Cf. Zohar — The text cites the Zohar's explanation of how 'emet' (truth) represents the unification of the divine attributes Tiferet and Malkhut, which is a fundamental kabbalistic concept. | Cf. Isaiah 56:3 — The phrase 'Behold, I am a dry tree' is quoted to illustrate the spiritual death that occurs when divine life force is withdrawn. | Cf. Malachi 3:21 — The verse about the wicked becoming 'ashes under the soles of your feet' is used to contrast the productive nature of dust with the sterility of ashes, symbolizing spiritual potentiality versus destruction. | Cf. Psalm 113:7 — The verse 'He raises the poor from the dust' is interpreted kabbalisticall to explain how humans emerge from the element of dust, connecting physical creation with spiritual status. | Cf. Genesis 3:19 — The verse 'For you are dust, and to dust you shall return' is referenced to explain the metaphysical necessity of burial as returning to one's elemental source.

[ii] The author establishes that there is a special mystical quality to the soil of the Land of Israel that makes it particularly important for burial. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that physical elements from sacred places contain spiritual properties.

[iii] This uses the cosmological metaphor of a circle with its center point to describe the spiritual position of someone buried in the Land of Israel—they are at the cosmic center, the point of balance and harmony in the spiritual realms.

האדם[i] כנזכר למעלה נשאר
שם לעולם. ונשאתני ממצרים.
וכן כתוב בתקון כ״א דף נ״ז
וצדיקים שהם דגים הגדלים על
מי התורה[ii] נאמר בהם אסיפתם
לעמיהם זהו מיתתן וכנפי מצוה
מכסין על דמן[iii] שאין שולט
בהם מלאכי חבלה שהן כלבים
חצופים בסוד כסוי הדם והדם
הוא הנפש ועפר שמכסים עליו
הוא בסוד וכפר אדמתו עמו
וקבורה משום כפרה והספד
יקרא דחיי ושכבי כדאי׳ בפ׳
נגמר הדין וה״ה ללויה. ועב״ז
אפי׳ בח״ל תועיל ודאי הכוונה.
ולכן כל אחד מהקהל משתדל
לשום עפר עליו לסייע ליחוד
ולהריק עליו משפע הבינה
ולהסתירו בכנפיה. דלא דחילת
מינץ הטורף וישליכו עליו העפר
ג״פ[iv] נגד בחינתה המקבלת
ובחינת עצמה ובחינת השפעתה
או להגן על נפשו רוחו ונשמתו
ועוד שממנה מוצא קו החסד וקו
הדין וקו הרחמים ומים אש ורוח
מראים פעולתם ביסוד העפר

a person is formed,[A] as mentioned above, remains there forever. "Carry me out of Egypt." This is also written in Tikkun 21, page 57: "Regarding the 70R righteous, who are like fish growing in the waters of Torah, it is said that they are 'gathered to their people'—this refers to their death. The wings of a commandment cover their blood,[1] as the angels of destruction, which are like impudent dogs, have 75R no power over them, in the mystery of covering the blood. And blood represents the soul, while the earth that covers it corresponds to 'He will atone for His land and His people.' Burial is for the purpose of atonement, and the eulogy honors both the living 80R and the dead, as stated in the chapter 'The Verdict is Concluded,' and the same applies to the funeral procession.

Nevertheless, even outside the Land of Israel, proper intention certainly has efficacy. Therefore, 85R each member of the community strives to place earth upon the deceased to assist in the unification and to pour upon him from the abundance of Binah[2] (Divine Understanding) and to conceal him beneath her wings, so that he need not fear the 90R predatory hawk. They cast earth upon him three times,[3] corresponding to her receptive aspect, her essence, and her influence—or to protect his nefesh,

[A] Or: "The luz bone from which a person will be regenerated" — The term 'shaked' (almond) is a reference to the luz bone, which in rabbinic tradition is believed to be indestructible and the seed from which the body will be regenerated at resurrection. This more explicit translation might be clearer for readers unfamiliar with this mystical concept.

spiritual center of the world. One buried there is positioned at the central point of cosmic forces, an ideal location for the soul's journey and eventual resurrection.

[1] This metaphorical language connects several concepts: the biblical commandment to cover blood after slaughter, the protection that performing mitzvot provides, and the image of divine sheltering wings (such as in Psalms 91:4). The image suggests that righteous deeds create a spiritual protection that remains after death.

[2] Binah (Understanding) is the third of the divine sefirot (emanations) in Kabbalah, associated with the divine feminine and with mercy. The text suggests that burial rituals can channel this divine attribute to benefit the deceased.

[3] The threefold pattern appears frequently in Jewish ritual and has multiple symbolic meanings.

[i] The term "שקד" (shaked/almond) refers to the luz bone, believed in Jewish tradition to be the indestructible nucleus from which the body will be reconstituted at resurrection.

[ii] This metaphor compares righteous individuals to fish and Torah to water, suggesting that just as fish can only survive in water, the righteous derive their spiritual sustenance and life from immersion in Torah.

[iii] This phrase uses the biblical commandment to cover blood (Leviticus 17:13) as a metaphor for how the performance of commandments provides spiritual protection for the deceased.

[iv] The threefold casting of earth corresponds to kabbalistic structures, particularly the three aspects of Binah (Understanding) mentioned immediately after: its receptive quality, its essence, and its influence. This also parallels the three primary components of the soul: nefesh, ruach, and neshamah.

הקדוש והוא מחפה על גופו
ומגין עליו כמו שחלקי נשמתו
מתכנסים למעלה בעפר עליון
אל נרתקם אם זכו בדכתיב
הכל שב אל העפר ויש נוהגים
בהשלכת העפר חמשה פעמים
ומכוונים למתק גם חלק חיה
ויחידה. ולמיתוק חמש גבורות
מנצפ״ך[i] עליו. ומה שיש להם
לומר יבא לפנינו בחלק שפתי
רננות בעה״י. ונוהגים שלא
להושיט אדם לחבירו כלי שבו
משליכין העפר[ii] בו אלא מניחין
אותו לפניו לארץ אולי זה יהיה
על דרך כי אין שלטון ביום
המות ועוד שלא להושיט צרה
ליד חבירו על דרך שאמרו
במועד קטן אי בדידך הוה וכו׳
והוה כשגגה היוצאת מלפני
השליט[iii] וכו׳. ואם בדבור כך
כ״ש המעשה בעידן ריתחא ובעת
פתיחת פה האדמה דאתיהיב
רשותא ח״ו ובפרט לאותם
שנוהגים שהקרובים הם תחלה
לגמול חסד זה עם הנפטר
להמתיק עליו סוד עפר עליון
ולכסותו בסתר כנפיו כנזכר
שלהם יאתה תחלה כי המתחיל

ruach, and neshamah (vital soul, spirit, and higher soul). Additionally, from her emanate the line of loving-kindness, the line of judgment, and the line of mercy; and water, fire, and air demonstrate their effects within the foundation of the sacred earth. It covers his body and protects it, just as the components of his soul gather above in the supernal earth, into their sheath, if they merit it, as it is written, "All returns to the dust."

Some have the custom of casting earth five times, intending to sweeten also the aspects of chayah and yechidah[1] (the two highest soul levels), and to sweeten the five powers of judgment (represented by the letters MaNTzePaKh)[2] upon him. What they should say will be presented before us in the section "Lips of Joyous Song," God willing.

It is customary not to hand directly to another person the vessel with which earth is cast, but rather to place it on the ground before him. Perhaps this follows the principle that "there is no dominion on the day of death," and also to avoid passing distress to one's fellow, as they said in Tractate Mo'ed Katan, "If it were happening to you..." and "like an error proceeding from the ruler."[3] If this applies to speech, how much more so to action, especially at a time of divine anger[A] and when the earth's mouth is opened, when permission is granted, God forbid. This is particularly relevant for those who follow the [A] Or: "during a period when divine judgment is intensified" — The term 'idan ritcha' is a technical kabbalistic term referring to times when divine judgment is particularly potent and potentially dangerous. This expanded translation captures the concept more precisely.

Here it connects to the three aspects of Binah and the three primary soul components (nefesh, ruach, neshamah), creating a comprehensive spiritual protection.

[1] These are the two highest of the five soul levels in Kabbalah, rarely mentioned in earlier texts but prominent in later mystical teachings. Their inclusion brings the total to five soul levels, corresponding to the five letters of MaNTzePaKh mentioned immediately after.

[2] In Kabbalah, the five Hebrew letters that change form at the end of words (מ-ם, נ-ן, צ-ץ, פ-ף, כ-ך) represent divine judgments that need to be "sweetened" or transformed into mercy. Burial rituals aim to accomplish this transformation for the deceased.

[3] This quotes Ecclesiastes 10:5, applying it to the sensitive moment of burial when careless actions might have unintended negative consequences in both human and spiritual realms.

[i] The letters מנצפ״ך (MaNTzePaKh) are the five Hebrew letters that take a different form when appearing at the end of a word. In Kabbalah, they represent the five aspects of divine judgment (gevurot) that need to be "sweetened" or transformed from severity to mercy.

[ii] This custom reflects the general principle in Jewish mourning practices of not passing items directly between people during rituals associated with death, to avoid symbolically passing or extending mortality.

[iii] This is an allusion to Ecclesiastes 10:5, "There is an evil I have seen under the sun, like an error proceeding from the ruler." The author applies this to the potentially harmful impact of careless speech or actions during sensitive ritual moments.

לא יושג והם פותחים שבילי הנעימות העליון עליו ובפרט בן על אביו. ואם יהיה לו מעפר ארץ ישראל לשום תחתיו
125 ובברית המעור[i] וקצת על עיניו וכפיו עם הכוונה הנזכרת יעשו התקון יותר בשלמות בסוד כי רצו עבדיך את אבניה ואת עפרה יחננו. ורבי פלוני [אבא] שהיה
130 מנשק כיפי דעכו[ii] היה להדבק רוחניותו ברוחניות השורה בעפר הקדוש מארץ הנבחרת אשר עיני ה׳ אלהינו בה. ואנחנו הנבראים מאותו עפר מחוייבים
135 להביאו אל מקום חציבותו שהוא קדוש ונייחא קצת ליושבי חוצה לארץ הוא דמשנה שלימה שנינו כי עפר הארץ שיצא חוצה לארץ דינו כעפר ארץ ישראל[iii] וכן
140 עפר ח״ל שנכנס לארץ דינו כארץ. ואמרו בזהר פ׳ ויחי כי ארץ כנען ומצרים מכלים הגוף בזמן קרוב יותר משאר הארצות.[iv]

custom that relatives should be the first to perform this act of kindness for the departed, sweetening the mystery of supernal earth upon him[A] and covering him in the shelter of His wings, as mentioned. It is 125R fitting that they go first, for "one who begins cannot be overtaken," and they open the pathways of supernal pleasantness upon him, especially a son for his father.

If one has soil from the Land of Israel to place be- 130R neath him, at the covenant of the loins,[1] and a little on his eyes and hands, with the intention mentioned, they will perform the rectification more completely, in the mystery of "For Your servants take pleasure in her stones and favor her dust." Rabbi [so-and-so] 135R who used to kiss the stones of Acre[2] did so to connect his spirituality with the spirituality that dwells in the holy soil of the chosen land, upon which the eyes of the LORD our God are always focused. And we who were created from that soil are obligated to bring it 140R to its place of origin, which is holy.

There is some comfort for those dwelling outside the Land in that we learned in a complete Mishnah that soil of the Land that has left the Land of Israel retains the status of the soil of the Land 145R

[A] Or: "transforming the harsh judgments associated with the mystery of supernal earth that affect him" — The term 'להמתיק' (to sweeten) in kabbalistic terminology specifically refers to transforming divine judgment (din) into mercy (rachamim). This more expanded translation conveys the technical meaning better, though at the cost of brevity.

[1] This euphemistically refers to the genital area, considered sacred as the site of the covenant of circumcision and procreation. Placing holy soil there has special significance for resurrection and spiritual continuity.

[2] This references a famous story about Rabbi Abba (Ketubot 112a) who would kiss the stones when arriving in the Land of Israel out of his great love for the Holy Land. The text replaces his name with a placeholder, which I've maintained in the translation.

[i] The term "ברית המעור" refers to the genital area, considered a sacred covenant zone. Placing soil from the Land of Israel there has special significance due to its connection to procreation and the continuation of life.

[ii] This refers to Rabbi Abba's practice (Ketubot 112a) of kissing the stones of Acre (a city in Israel) out of love for the Holy Land. The original text mentions "Rabbi So-and-so" but likely refers to this famous Talmudic account.

[iii] This refers to the halakhic principle that soil from the Land of Israel retains its sacred status even when removed from the Land, and conversely, soil brought into the Land acquires sanctity. This appears in Oholot 17:5 regarding laws of ritual purity.

[iv] Cf. Genesis 47:29-30 — The author uses Jacob's request for burial in the Land of Israel as the primary biblical basis for the spiritual significance of burial location. This reference establishes that even biblical patriarchs recognized the mystical importance of being buried in sacred soil. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 21 — This reference compares the righteous to fish swimming in Torah waters, suggesting that just as fish are protected in their element, the righteous find protection through their immersion in Torah study. The covering of blood refers to the spiritual protection that mitzvot provide for the deceased. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:43 — The author connects burial in earth to this verse about divine atonement, suggesting that the physical act of covering a body with of Israel,[1] and likewise, soil from outside the Land that enters the Land acquires the status of the Land. They said in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, that the lands of Canaan and Egypt consume the body in less time than other lands. 150R

ואולי זה למצרים להיותה מצרנית לקדושה. וכן הקליפה הקרובה לקדושה הנקרא נגה מקבלת מיתוק בכח שם מילוי ההי״ן בגימטרי״א ב״ן שבשבינה[i] ומטטרו״ן נוטל אותו המלוי אות אחת לכל חמשה ימי השבוע[ii] למתק קליפה זו.[iii] ואחר זה בכח המתק עולה להכלל בקדושה על דרך זה בארץ מצרים. והיינו דכתיב ברוך עמי מצרים.[iv] והועד לי מפי הראיה שעפר א״י מכלה בשר הגוף בזמן חדש ימים כי

This is perhaps true of Egypt because it borders holiness. Similarly, the kelipah (shell/husk) closest to holiness, called Nogah, receives sweetening[A] through the power of the Divine Name spelled with heis (YHVH with the letter hei fully spelled out), which has the numerical value of 52 (corresponding to the divine name BaN) that resides in the Shekhinah. Metatron takes one letter of this spelling for each of the five weekdays to sweeten this kelipah. After this sweetening process, it can be included in holiness,[2] and this is how it works in the land of Egypt. This is the meaning of the verse "Blessed be Egypt My people" (Isaiah 19:25). 155R 160R

I was informed by eyewitness testimony that the

[A] Or: "the shell of impurity nearest to holiness, known as Nogah, undergoes transformation" — This alternative avoids the technical term 'kelipah' in favor of the more descriptive 'shell of impurity,' and replaces the metaphorical 'sweetening' with 'transformation,' which might be clearer to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology.

[1] This halakhic principle from Mishnah Oholot 17:5 is applied mystically here. Just as soil maintains its legal status despite geographic movement, the spiritual qualities associated with the Land of Israel can be transferred through physical elements taken from it.

[2] The process described here reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'birur' (clarification/refinement), where elements from the realm of impurity can be elevated and reclaimed for holiness through specific spiritual processes.

earth parallels the spiritual act of God covering sins with forgiveness. | Cf. Sanhedrin 47a — The reference to this Talmudic chapter establishes the halakhic basis for the mystical interpretations that follow, showing how the author integrates legal and mystical dimensions of Jewish burial practices. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This reference adds practical information about bodily decomposition rates in different lands, which the author interprets mystically to suggest that holy lands purify the body more quickly by removing physical impurity. | Cf. Psalms 102:15 — This verse is used to explain the mystical practice of using soil from the Land of Israel in burial, suggesting that even the physical elements of the Holy Land contain spiritual potency that can benefit the deceased.

[i] This refers to one of the four kabbalistic spellings of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH), where the letter hei is spelled out fully (הה) in both instances, giving a total numerical value of 52, which corresponds to the divine name BaN (בן).

[ii] Metatron is a principal angel in Jewish mysticism who serves as God's representative. The text describes a mystical process where Metatron distributes the spiritual power of the divine name across the weekdays to transform negative forces into positive ones.

[iii] In Kabbalah, 'kelipot' (shells or husks) are negative spiritual forces that conceal holiness. Nogah is unique among these forces because it contains a mixture of good and evil, making it capable of being 'sweetened' or elevated into holiness through proper spiritual work.

[iv] This is a quote from Isaiah 19:25. In its biblical context, it refers to a future time when Egypt, traditionally seen as Israel's oppressor, will be blessed by God. The author uses this verse to illustrate how elements outside of holiness can eventually be incorporated into the realm of holiness.

הבשר להיותו מעור הנחש[i] הוא
מכלה אותו במהרה להסיר
טומאתו ממנה למען יהיה העם
היושב בה נשוא עון ואולי
נטבע בה שתכלה כשיעור זה
ולא פחות ויהיה על פי מה
שנאמר בפ׳ ויקהל דף קצ״ט
ע״ב שכל תלתין יומין אתדנו
גופא ונפשא כחדא[ii] ובג״כ
אשתכחת נשמתא לתתא בארעא
כאתתא דיתבא לבר כל יומי
מסאבותה[iii] לבתר נשמתא סלקא
ולבן תלתין יומין אינון לגיהוץ
ולתספורת כדאמרן. ושם פי׳
ז׳ דיני דיחלפון עליה דבר נש.
עוד שם בדף רי״א סוד רחיצת
הנפשות בנהר דינור ופעם אחרת
עוברת באש כשמעלין אותה
לג״ע עליון שלפי מעלת עלייתה
צריך טבילה אחרת כדאמרן
טבל לקל לא טבל לחמור[iv] ושם
ביאר נשמות העולות בכל
שבת ור״ח למקום הנקרא חומות
ירושלים. ועיין בר״מ פ׳ קדושים
דף פ״ג עפר שנברא ממנו גוף
אדם הראשון כיון דאזעיר גרמיה אצטריך לגופא אחרא במשכא

soil of the Land of Israel consumes the flesh of the body within a month's time.[A] Since the flesh comes from the skin of the serpent, it quickly consumes it to remove its impurity, so that the people dwelling there might have their iniquity forgiven. Perhaps it is naturally designed to consume at this rate, no less, according to what is written in Parashat Vayakhel (Zohar 199b): "For thirty days the body and soul are judged together, and therefore the soul remains below in the earth like a woman who sits apart during her days of impurity. Afterwards, the soul ascends." This is why the thirty days are designated for the prohibition of laundered garments and haircuts,[1] as we have stated.

There it also explains the seven judgments that pass over a person. Furthermore, on page 211, it reveals the secret of souls being washed in the River of Dinur (River of Fire), and how they pass through fire a second time when elevated to the upper Garden of Eden. According to the level of ascent, another immersion is required, as we have said: "One who has immersed for a minor matter has not immersed for a more serious matter." It also explains how souls ascend every Sabbath and New Moon[2] to a place called "the walls of Jerusalem."

See also Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Kedoshim (83), regarding the dust from which Adam's body

[A] Or: "It was testified to me from direct observation that the soil of the Land of Israel decomposes the body's flesh within a period of one month" — This alternate translation emphasizes the empirical nature of the claim by using terms like 'testified' and 'direct observation' rather than 'informed' and 'eyewitness testimony.' It also uses 'decomposes' instead of 'consumes' for a more scientifically neutral description of the process.

[1] This refers to the Jewish mourning custom called 'sheloshim' (thirty days), during which mourners refrain from cutting hair and wearing freshly laundered clothes. The text provides the mystical basis for this timeframe.

[2] This mystical concept explains why memorial prayers for the deceased (Yizkor) are traditionally recited on holidays. The text suggests these are times when souls experience elevation, making them opportune moments for prayer on their behalf.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that human flesh is spiritually connected to the primordial serpent (nachash) from the Garden of Eden, representing physicality and material desires that must be purified.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase states that 'for thirty days, the body and soul are judged together.' This kabbalistic concept explains why mourning practices extend for thirty days, reflecting the spiritual reality that the soul maintains a connection to the body during this period.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase compares the soul's state after death to 'a woman who sits apart during her days of impurity,' referring to the niddah separation practice. This metaphor suggests a temporary state of separation before purification and reintegration.

[iv] This is a Talmudic principle meaning 'one who has immersed for a minor matter has not immersed for a more serious matter.' The author applies this principle to the soul's purification process, suggesting that higher spiritual levels require more intensive purification.

ובשרא וכתוב בפ׳ תרומה דף ק״מ מאן דנשמתיה נפקת בארעא קדישא אי אתקבר בההוא יומא לא שלטא עליה רוחא מסאבא כלל. וכתוב בזהר אדם ביקר בל ילין אדם דהוא יקר מכל יקרא בל ילין. מ״ט משום דאי יעבדון הכי נמשל כבהמות נדמו מה בעירי לא אתחזי בהו רוח הקדש אוף הכי כבעירי גופא בלא רוח. ואסור לראות צורה עליונה בלא חיות ואסור לבזותו אחר מותו דהא חזינן במועד קטן במעשה דרבה בר בר חנה ורב המנונא שהיו מכבדין זה את זה. וכחות הטומאה תאבים להתלבש בגוף העשוי בצלם של מעלה וכשימות האדם מיתה משונה בר מינן יכאב יותר לצלמו ובפרט הנתלה כי שם מתחברים כחות הטומאה יותר ממתים אחרים. ואולי להיותו תלוי ברוח יסוד שבו הרבה רוחות רעות ולזה צוה לא תלין נבלתו על העץ וקללת אלהים שרוי במקום התלוי[i] שהאויר נפסד וזה טעם הרחקת האדם מן הצואה ודומה לה. ובזהר דף קע״ו אמר כי טוב להקבר בקרקע ואפי׳ לרשע ויש שמשימין סיד תוך הקבר ומנהג יפה הוא שממחה ושופך טומאת הנחש. ועיין בדף קמ״א מישראלים הנפטרים בארץ ובחוצה לארץ ואמר כי הנפטר חוצה לארץ רוח הטומאה שורה was created: since he diminished himself, he required another body with skin and flesh. In Parashat Terumah (140) it states: "One whose soul departs in the Holy Land, if he is buried on that same day, no spirit of impurity has any power over him at all."

It is written in the Zohar: "A man who is precious does not remain overnight" (Psalms 49:13)—a man who is more precious than anything else should not remain overnight unburied. Why? Because if they do this, "he is compared to the beasts that perish." Just as animals do not manifest the holy spirit, so too the body without spirit is like an animal. It is forbidden to view a divine form without life,[A] and it is forbidden to disgrace it after death, as we see in Moed Katan in the story of Rabbah bar bar Hana and Rav Hamnuna, who showed honor to each other.

The forces of impurity desire to clothe themselves in a body made in the supernal image. When a person dies an unusual death (God forbid), it causes greater pain to his divine image,[1] especially one who is hanged, for there the forces of impurity gather more than with other deaths. Perhaps because one who is hanging is suspended in air, many evil spirits gather there, which is why the Torah commands, "his body shall not remain all night upon the tree" (Deuteronomy 21:23). Divine curse resides in the place of hanging, where the air becomes corrupted. This is also the reason for distancing oneself from excrement and similar things.

In Zohar (176) it states that it is good to be buried in the ground, even for the wicked.[2] Some place lime in the grave, which is a good custom as it dissolves and washes away the serpent's impurity. See also page 141 regarding Israelites who die in the [A] Or: "It is forbidden to gaze upon the human form, which reflects the divine image, when it is devoid of life" — This alternative clarifies that the 'divine form' referred to is actually the human body as a reflection of the divine image, which might not be immediately clear in the original translation.

[1] The concept that unusual deaths cause 'pain' to the divine image within a person reflects the kabbalistic understanding that humans are created in God's image in a profound metaphysical sense, not merely symbolically.

[2] This statement reflects the Jewish value of 'kavod ha-met' (honoring the dead), which applies universally regardless of the deceased's moral status. Proper burial is considered a fundamental right for all humans created in the divine image.

[i] This references Deuteronomy 21:23, which states that a hanged man is 'a curse of God.' The author explains this as indicating that the space around a suspended body becomes spiritually corrupted, attracting impure forces.

בו עד שיקבר ושם ביאר משכן נפש רוח נשמה אחר הפטירה כל אחד כמדרגתו: [i]

Land versus outside the Land. It states that one who dies outside the Land has the spirit of impurity dwelling in him until he is buried. There it explains the dwelling place of the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah after death, each according to its level.[1] 230R

פרק כ״ח

Chapter 28

סוד צדוק הדין וההבראה בביצים או בעדשים כפי מנהג הקדום אמרו רבנן במס׳ חלה שעסת הכלבים היא מטמאה טומאת אוכלים[ii] וזה להיותם מותר הקדשים העליונים וזהו חלקו מלחם עליון כדי שתתפרנס מן הימין ולא יוסיף הדינין ע״ד לא אוסיף עוד לקלל את האדמה שפי׳ פ׳ בחוקתי לא אתן עוד תוספת לדינים רק כפי מה

The mystery of Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment)[2] and the mourners' meal with eggs or lentils according to ancient custom: Our Rabbis taught in Tractate Challah that the dough prepared for dogs imparts food impurity. This is because these items are the remnants of the supernal holy offerings,[3] representing their portion from the heavenly bread, so that they may be sustained from the right side (Chesed/kindness) without increasing judgments.[4] This follows the principle: "I will not again curse the ground," which is explained 5R 10R

[1] The text alludes to the kabbalistic teaching that after death, the three components of the soul separate and dwell in different realms: the nefesh (vital soul) remains near the grave, the ruach (spirit) ascends to the lower Garden of Eden, and the neshamah (higher soul) ascends to the upper realms.

[2] This concept refers to the Jewish practice of accepting God's judgment, particularly in times of grief. The Hebrew term 'צידוק הדין' literally means 'justifying the judgment' and refers both to a specific prayer recited at funerals and to the broader spiritual attitude of accepting divine will without question.

[3] The author is establishing a mystical framework where even seemingly mundane items like dough for dogs contain sparks of holiness. This perspective, common in kabbalistic thought, sees all physical reality as containing divine elements that can be elevated through proper intention.

[4] In Kabbalah, the divine attributes are often arranged in a structural diagram called the Tree of Life, with Chesed (loving-kindness) on the right side and Gevurah (judgment/severity) on the left. The author is using this spatial metaphor to explain spiritual dynamics.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Vayakhel 199b — This Zohar passage explains why the mourning period lasts thirty days, connecting it to the spiritual reality that the soul remains near the body for this period before ascending higher. The author uses this to explain both burial practices and mourning customs. | Cf. Zohar, Vayakhel 211 — The reference to souls being purified in the River of Fire (Nahar Dinur) explains the spiritual processes that occur after death. This creates a parallel between physical purification rituals (tahara) performed on the body and spiritual purification of the soul in higher realms. | Cf. Isaiah 19:25 — The author uses this biblical verse to support his kabbalistic explanation of how Egypt, despite being outside the Holy Land, can still participate in holiness through the process of spiritual 'sweetening' that transforms negative forces into positive ones. | Cf. Psalms 49:13 — This verse is interpreted to provide a biblical basis for the Jewish practice of prompt burial. The author connects this verse to the kabbalistic understanding that delay in burial leaves the body vulnerable to impure spiritual forces. | Cf. Deuteronomy 21:23 — This biblical command about not leaving the body of an executed criminal hanging overnight is interpreted kabbalistically as protecting the divine image in which humans are created from excessive exposure to impure forces that gather around a suspended body. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Kedoshim 83 — This reference to a section of the Zohar develops the theological understanding of the human body's relationship to the earth, which has implications for burial practices and the decomposition process after death.

[ii] The author references a teaching from Tractate Challah regarding dough prepared for dogs being susceptible to food impurity. This somewhat obscure reference sets up his mystical interpretation that connects leftover or secondary items with spiritual significance.

שתוכל לקבל האדמה. וזהו
ויספתי עליכם מכה פי׳ אתן
תוספת מלמעלה לכח הדין
לא חס ושלום שישפע הדין
רק פחות מפגם החוטא וכר״מ
פי׳ כי שבע על חטאתיכם ר״ל
שגם מדה הנקרא שבע גם היא
מתרחקת עבור עונות ישראל על
דלא הקדימת קיסטא לבנאה ואז
נקראת שבע וכשהיא ביחוד עם
בעלה נקראת בת שבע. פוק חזי
בפ׳ בחקתי דף קט״ו ע״א ופי׳
הכפירים שואגים לטרף דהיינו
רמז נזיד עדשים סוד הדין
ולבקש מאל אכלם היינו סוד
לחם. ואמרו בזהר כי תבשיל
שנתן יעקב לאחיו תבר חילא
ותוקפא דדמא סומקא[i] ועל
ההוא תבשילא איזדבן ליה
לעבדא וזבין בכירותיה ליעקב.
מזה נבין כי אכילת האבל הוא
בכוונת לשבר כח הדין המתגבר
עליו. ויין נברא לנחם בו אבלים
שבכח היין המשמח יין המשכר
יגוע ואיו[ii] בסוד ויבא לו ויין
וישת דכל חידו אשתכח ביה וסוד
היין בגבורה ויהיה לבן בשיטה
אל החסד ואדום בשיטה אל
הדין ויקרא טוב כשימזג במים
מצד החסד ששם הטוב. ולכן
הנהגתי בביתי בקדוש והבדלה
ובכל מין ברכה שהיא על היין
ליצוק בתוכו בג׳ פעמים לפחות
ג׳ טיפין מים[iii] וכ״ש ביין הניתן

in Parashat Bechukotai to mean: "I will not add more judgments beyond what the earth can bear."

This is the meaning of "I will add to you a plague"—I will add power from above to the force of judgment, but Heaven forbid that judgment should flow in a measure exceeding the blemish caused by the sinner. In Ra'aya Mehemna, it explains "sevenfold for your sins," meaning that even the attribute called "seven" distances itself because of Israel's sins,[1] for they did not prepare the measure for building, and then it is called "seven," but when it unites with its husband, it is called "Bat-Sheva" (daughter of seven). 15R 20R

Go and see in Parashat Bechukotai, page 115a, where it explains "The young lions roar for prey"—this alludes to the lentil stew, which represents the mystery of judgment, while "seeking their food from God" refers to the mystery of bread. And they said in the Zohar that the dish Jacob gave to his brother broke the strength and power of the red blood,[A] and because of that dish he was sold to him as a servant, and sold his birthright to Jacob. From this we understand that the mourner's meal is intended to break the power of judgment that overwhelms him. 25R 30R 35R

Wine was created to comfort mourners, for through the power of wine that gladdens, the intoxicating wine, he may find relief, in the mystery of "and he brought him wine and he drank," for all joy is found in it. The secret of wine is in Gevurah (strength/judgment), and it becomes white when it inclines toward Chesed (kindness) and red when it inclines toward judgment, and it is called good when mixed with water from the side of Chesed, 40R 45R

[A] Or: "shattered the force and potency of the red blood" — This alternate translation might better convey the forceful nature of the Aramaic terms 'חילא' and 'תוקפא', emphasizing the transformative power attributed to the lentil stew in kabbalistic interpretation.

[1] This refers to the sefirah of Malkhut (Kingdom), which is sometimes called 'seven' because it is the seventh of the lower sefirot. When it is separated from Tiferet (sometimes referred to as its 'husband'), it represents a state of cosmic disharmony caused by human sin.

[i] The text cites the Zohar's mystical interpretation of Jacob's lentil stew as having power to 'break the strength and power of the red blood,' referring to Esau's nature. The Aramaic phrase 'תבר חילא ותוקפא דדמא סומקא' emphasizes the potency attributed to this food in kabbalistic thought.

[ii] The text presents a distinctive view that wine was specifically created to comfort mourners, attributing a divine purpose to wine in the context of mourning rituals. This reflects the Jewish approach of finding spiritual meaning in seemingly mundane aspects of ritual practice.

[iii] The author shares his personal ritual practice of adding three drops of water to wine three times during blessings. This reveals that the text combines traditional mystical teachings with the author's own innovations and customs.

לאבל שצריך מזיגה כי נברא יין
לנחם אבלים ובמזיגה יקרא יין
טוב. וכוונו שלא יזכה לטעם
הבינה הנקרא עה״ב ויין המשומר
50 אף אם יכנס בג״ע בשכר שאר
מצותיו ויש יין המשומר בענביו
ששת ימי בראשית שהם שש
ספירות הבנין ובשהגיע שם ולא
עבר דרך דין הגבורה אז נקרא
55 יין משומר ויפה מעצמו וזהו רמז
תרומה טמאה הנשרפת וקרבנות
טמאים ושעירים הנשרפים ונזיד
עדשים הוא מותר הקדרה שכבר
אכלו הקדושים יצחק וכחות
60 הקדושה שהיו נהנים מהלולא
דצדיק. הגם שלמטה מצד גוף
יצחק היה יום אבל כי הצדיק
אבד לדורו אבד. ואחר אכילת
הקדושים באכלו של אברהם
65 אבינו נתן מותר הקדרה למאן
דבעי ליה והם אוכלים דרך
הלעטה על דרך הלעיטהו
לרשע וימות אם רעב שונאך
האכילהו לחם וכו׳ כי גחלים
70 אתה חותה[i] שאין השפע ההוא
ראוי להם רק לבלעם כחיה
שבלעה אדם מזוין וחרב פיפיות
בידו שהורגה בתוך מעיה כמ״ש
הכתוב עת אשר שלט אדם באדם
75 לרע לו דאדם בליעל. ולכן בעי
לתקנא פתוריה בעת אכילתו כמי
שאוכל לפני המלך שמשלחן גבוה
קא זכי ולא אכיל מהפקרא ח״ו.
עיין בר״מ פ׳ פנחס דף רמ״ה.
80 ואחת מכוונות ההבראה לדעתי
מלבד מה שנכתוב לקמן תהיה
להורות כי בחות החסד מזמנים
להשפיע לנשמת הנפטר מלחם
ענג ומיין המשומר ומסתלק
85 מליזון מלאם אנשים שמוצאו מן
הארץ ויש בו סיג כדאמרן לעיל where goodness resides. Therefore, I established the practice in my home during Kiddush, Havdalah, and every blessing over wine to pour into it at least three drops of water three times, especially for wine given to a mourner, which requires mixing, because 50R wine was created to comfort mourners, and when mixed it is called good wine.

They intended that one should not merit to taste the Binah (Understanding) called the World to Come and the preserved wine, even if one enters the Garden 55R of Eden as reward for their other commandments. There is wine preserved in its grapes from the six days of creation, representing the six Sefirot of construction,[1] and when it reaches there without passing through the judgment of Gevurah, it is called 60R preserved wine, naturally beautiful. This alludes to the impure terumah that is burned, impure sacrifices, and goats that are burned.

The lentil stew represents the remainder of the pot after the holy ones—Isaac and the forces 65R of holiness—had already eaten and enjoyed the celebration of the righteous. Even though below, from the perspective of Isaac's body, it was a day of mourning, for "the righteous one is lost to his generation." After the holy ones ate during the 70R mourning of our father Abraham, the remainder of the pot was given to whoever wanted it, and they eat it by gorging, following the principle: "Feed the wicked and let him die; if your enemy is hungry, feed him bread, etc., for you will heap coals of 75R fire on his head." This divine flow is not fitting for them; it's like a wild animal that swallowed an armed man with a double-edged sword in his hand who kills it from within its innards, as Scripture states: "A time when man rules over man to his 80R detriment"—referring to a wicked person.

Therefore, one must set his table properly when eating, like one who eats before the King, for he receives from the high table and does not eat from ownerless property, Heaven forbid. See Ra'aya 85R Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas, page 245. One of the [1] This refers to the six lower divine attributes (Chesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod) that are collectively called the 'Sefirot of Construction' because they are understood to be involved in the ongoing construction and maintenance of creation.

[i] This is a reference to Proverbs 25:21-22, which is given a striking interpretation in this context. Rather than emphasizing kindness to enemies, the author interprets it as suggesting that providing certain spiritual foods to the unworthy can be harmful to them, like 'heaping coals of fire on their head.'

ועולה לאכול מלחם השמים
מזיהרא עילאה ולכן אין אוכלים
סעודה ראשונה משל האבל כי
כחות הדין עתה שולטים בביתו
ובכל אשר לו ואנו צריכים
להשפיעו מכחות החסד ואין
מאכלו בריאה לו להיותו עתה
מצד כחות הדין ואותם שהיו
נוהגים להברותו בבשר ויין
מסייע לדעת זה ומקום שנהגו
להברות בבצים או בעדשים
יהיה כפי כוונת אמרם שבשל
יעקב עדשים להברות את האבל
שהיא מגולגלת ואין לה פה[i] הורו
כי סוד זה מלכות הנקראת
גלגל ואין לה פה להשפיע לחוץ
והיינו בסוד אדמימותה שבאשר
היא פועלת דין כתיב אכלה
ומחתה פיה וגו׳ לזה יסתם
פיה ויתוקן הגלגל האדום וזהו
וידום אהרן[ii] והיינו סוד צידוק
הדין להראות תגבורת הקדושה
והחיצונים נבדלים ממקור האדם
וסותמת פיה שלא ינקו ובבוד
אלהים הסתר דבר:[iii]

intentions of the mourners' meal, in my opinion, besides what we will write below, is to indicate that the forces of kindness are ready to bestow upon the soul of the departed from the bread of delight and the preserved wine. The soul rises from being nourished by human food that comes from the earth and contains impurity, as we mentioned above, and ascends to eat from the heavenly bread of supernal radiance.

Therefore, one does not eat the first meal from the mourner's food, because the forces of judgment now rule over his house[1] and all that belongs to him, and we need to bestow upon him from the forces of kindness. His food is not suitable for him now because it comes from the forces of judgment. Those who used to comfort the mourner with meat and wine support this view, and places where they used to comfort with eggs or lentils followed the intention behind the saying that Jacob cooked lentils to comfort the mourner. The lentil is round and has no mouth, indicating that this mystery relates to Malkhut (Kingdom), which is called a wheel and has no mouth to influence outwardly.[A] This relates to the mystery of its redness, for when it exercises judgment, it is written: "She eats and wipes her mouth, etc." Therefore, its mouth is closed, and the red

[A] Or: "they taught that this mystery pertains to Malkhut (Kingdom), which is called a sphere and has no opening through which to channel influence outward" — This alternative more explicitly conveys the kabbalistic concept of Malkhut as a spherical sefirah that, in its state of judgment, cannot properly transmit divine flow to lower realms.

[1] According to kabbalistic thought, when death occurs, forces of judgment temporarily dominate the space and possessions of the mourner. This provides a mystical rationale for the traditional practice where neighbors provide the first meal to mourners rather than having them prepare their own food.

[i] The text references a rabbinic tradition (from Bava Batra 16b) that lentils are traditionally served to mourners because they are round and have no 'mouth' (opening), symbolizing the mourner who is silent like a stone. The author elaborates on this with kabbalistic interpretations.

[ii] This references Leviticus 10:3, where Aaron remained silent after the death of his sons Nadab and Abihu. The text interprets this silence as a form of Tzidduk HaDin (accepting divine judgment), connecting it with the symbolism of the lentil's lack of a 'mouth.'

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Bechukotai — The author uses this Zohar passage to establish a mystical connection between lentils and divine judgment, reinforcing the kabbalistic framework for understanding mourning rituals. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas — This reference establishes that eating should be done with spiritual awareness, as if in the divine presence, which contextualizes the mourner's meal as a ritual with cosmic significance rather than merely a physical comfort. | Cf. Biblical story of Jacob and Esau — The author interprets this biblical narrative through a mystical lens, suggesting that the lentils had power to 'break the strength of the red blood,' metaphorically referring to Esau's nature and the forces of judgment. This establishes a spiritual precedent for the use of lentils in mourning rituals. | Cf. Tractate Challah — This rabbinic teaching is used as a basis for explaining how remnants or leftovers (like the mourning foods) can still contain spiritual power and significance, despite being 'secondary' items.

wheel[A] is rectified.[1] This is the meaning of "Aaron was silent," which is the mystery of Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment)—to demonstrate the triumph of holiness while the external forces are separated from the human source, and it closes its mouth so they cannot draw sustenance. And "the glory of God is to conceal a matter."

פרק כ״ט

בענין סדר צדוק הדין, יראה לי הפעוט הכותב כי תקנו לנו להצדיק דין שמים בו עשרים פעמים כנגד השני דמעות שהם מדה״ד הקשה ומדה״ד הרפה הכלולים כל אחת מי׳ גבורות האחת המלכות ער״ש ורע״ש בדיניה המיוחדת עם הוד דוה והיא פועלת הדין בתחתונים. השנית היא גבורה שממנה מקור הרוגז ח״ו. והיא פחם לגחלים ועצים לאש וכשאדם בולם עצמו כמי שאין לו פה גורם שהחצון ג״כ אין לו פה לינק מתגבורת הדין. ואהרן שהיה איש החסד הוא בראש כל הדוממים קבל שכר כי אם ח״ו היה פוצה פיו היה משפיע לגבורות השפעת החסד. וממנו ילמוד אפי׳ בר נש זעיר כי ודאי יקבל שכר על שתיקותו וכ״ש בשמברך על הרעה מעין הטובה בלב טוב ושמח ביסורין לתקון שכינה ודאי בזה המקדש העליון מתטהר

Chapter 29

Regarding the order of Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment), it appears to me, the humble writer, that they established for us to justify divine judgment twenty times, corresponding to the two tears that represent harsh judgment and mild judgment,[A] each containing ten powers of strength. The first is Malkhut with its aspects of "ER"SH" and "RE"SH" in its unique judgments together with the suffering Hod, and it enacts judgment in the lower worlds. The second is Gevurah, which is the source of wrath, God forbid. It is like coal for embers and wood for fire, and when a person restrains himself as if he has no mouth,[B] he causes the external forces also to have no mouth with which to draw sustenance from the intensification of judgment.

Aaron, who was a man of kindness, is foremost among all the silent ones and received reward, because if, God forbid, he had opened his mouth, he would have channeled the flow of kindness to the powers of severity. From him even an insignificant person should learn that he will certainly receive reward for his silence, and all the more so when he blesses for the bad as he does for the good, with a good heart, rejoicing in suffering for the sake of rec-

[A] Or: "the red sphere" — While 'wheel' is a literal translation of 'גלגל', in this kabbalistic context it might refer to the spherical nature of divine emanations, particularly Malkhut in its aspect of judgment, and 'sphere' might better convey this cosmic imagery.

[A] Or: "twenty times, corresponding to the two tears which are the attribute of harsh judgment and the attribute of lenient judgment" — This translation more directly conveys the kabbalistic terminology, where מדה״ד is an abbreviation for מידת הדין (middat ha-din), literally 'the attribute of judgment.' The concepts of harsh and lenient judgment are fundamental categories in Kabbalah, and the direct reference to them as attributes rather than simply 'representing' them might be more precise.

[B] Or: "restrains himself as one who is speechless" — The metaphor of being 'speechless' might better capture the concept of complete restraint in Jewish ethical literature, where silence in the face of suffering is considered a virtue. This translation maintains the meaning while using an idiom that might be more natural in English.

[1] This is a reference to Malkhut (the divine attribute of Kingdom) when it is in a state of judgment, symbolized by the color red. The author suggests that the mourning rituals involving round foods like lentils help 'rectify' or restore balance to this spiritual attribute.

ע״י הדין המושפע למטה והוא עושה עצמו מזבח כפרה לתקון שמים כדאמרו בתקונים שכאשר קבל עליו אדם הראשון הדין מיד נתקן הפגם. וכן בקבלת האדם כל גזרת הדין ובפרט קרובי המת מתקנים הפגם שנפגם למעלה וזהו ואתה צדיק על כל הבא עלינו כל איזה צורך שיצטרך לתקון גבוה על כל הבא עלינו כי אמת עשית ותקנת ואין דבר רע יורד מלמעלה ואנחנו הרשענו כי נדבקנו בחצונים. וזהו הצור תמים פעלו כי כל דרכיו לתקון מדת המשפט. וכן על זה הדרך בכל הצדקת דין שמים הנזכר בסדר צדוק הדין ויוכל המשכיל לכוין כפי הבחינות וכפי ענין המתראה בפ׳ או בסדר שאומר ויכוין בזה להמתיק דין הקדוש ולהבליעו במקורו כי שם יתבסם ויתמתק ולסכור פה דוברי עתק בשתיקתו. ובמה שכתבנו יוכל המשכיל להוסיף חכמה ודעת בהבנת כל בבא מסדר צדוק הדין ע״פ סדר מתוק עשרים גבורות הנזכר. ואין להאריך במקום שאמרו לקצר. אח״כ מזרזין לאדם בו שיפשפש במעשיו כי עתיד לעמוד בדין ומזכירים דם עבדיו השפוך בשנת תתנ״ו וקל״ו כי אין לך ביסום הדין גדול מזה. ואח״כ מבקשים על הנפטר רחמים בארבע מדרגות אבי״ע אבות עולם ירמוז באצילות שנשמת האבות הם מרכבה לרוכב בשמי שמי קדם מלאכי שלום יהיו בבריאה מקום השרפים. גבעות עולם יהיו ביצירה מקום החיות. שומרי גנזי גן עדן בעשיה ששם ג״ע תחתון והאופנים ומלת זאת tifying the Divine Presence. Surely through this, the supernal sanctuary is purified through the judgment channeled below, and he makes himself an altar of atonement for heavenly rectification. As they said in the Tikkunim, when Adam accepted the judgment upon himself, the spiritual damage was immediately repaired. Similarly, when a person accepts all divine decrees, especially the relatives of the deceased, they repair the damage that occurred above. This is the meaning of "You are righteous concerning all that comes upon us"—whatever is needed for supernal rectification that comes upon us—"for You have acted truthfully and we have acted wickedly" because we attached ourselves to the external forces. This is why "The Rock, His work is perfect," because all His ways are for rectifying the attribute of justice.

This pattern applies to all justifications of divine judgment mentioned in the Tzidduk HaDin order, and the insightful person can direct his intention according to the aspects and according to the matter that appears in the passage or order he recites. He should intend through this to sweeten the holy judgment and absorb it into its source, for there it becomes fragrant and sweetened, and to shut the mouth of those who speak arrogantly through his silence. With what we have written, the insightful person can add wisdom and knowledge in understanding each section of the Tzidduk HaDin order according to the sweet arrangement of the twenty powers mentioned. One should not elaborate where they said to be brief.

Afterward, we encourage the person to examine his deeds, for he will stand in judgment in the future, and we mention the blood of His servants spilled in the years 4856 (1096) and 4936 (1176), for there is no greater sweetening of judgment than this. Then we request mercy for the departed through the four levels of ABYA (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah): "Fathers of the World" alludes to Atzilut, where the souls of the Patriarchs are a chariot for the One who rides in the highest heavens;[A] "Angels of Peace" are in Beriah, the place of the Seraphim; "Hills of [A] Or: "the four worlds ABYA (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah): "Patriarchs of the Universe" alludes to the world of Atzilut, where the souls of the Patriarchs serve as a divine chariot for the Rider of the ancient highest heavens" — This alternate translation more explicitly identifies ABYA as 'the four worlds' and translates אבות עולם as 'Patriarchs of the Universe,' which might be more precise in this mystical context. It also clarifies the metaphor of the divine chariot (merkavah) which is a central concept in Jewish mysticism.

שהיא השכינה כדכתיב בזאת יבא אהרן בזכות הנפטר ובסוד הרחמים ומתוקן בחות דין אלו
70 היא תקבל נשמתו בחיקה ותאמר לו שלום בואו. ואחר צדוק הדין אומרים הקדיש שסגולתו בכל מקום לתברא מנעולין דפרזלא בתחלת ענין ובסוף
75 ענין לפתוח השמים והשערים ולשמור התפלה או הקריאה וכל שאר העניינים מן המקטרגים ומתנכרים בו ואין להם כח לקנתר ולקטרג ועדיף כח קדיש
80 זה שנרמז בו הטל היורד מא״א להוסיף חיות ושפע רב לכל הספירות ולשובני עפר בלי מספר וצמיחת האור אל הישועה מיסוד עליון ונביעת המקור
85 העליון לתקון משיחנו. וכבר נודע כי סגולת הקדיש לבטל אשו של גיהנם ולהכניע בחות הזרים. והבן בכח הקדיש מוציא אביו מיד החצונים ומכניסו לגן
90 עדן. ובעי למימר ליה בלישנא דסטרא אחרא. ולאתבא בחילא תקיף אמן בגין דאיתבר חיליה דסטרא אחרא ויסתלק יקרא דקב״ה על כולא ואדכר לבנוי
95 ואדכר לשמיה כדאיתא בזהר פ׳ תרומה והוא סוד הקדושה למטה בת״ת ומלכות הממשיכים שפע החכמה מלמעלה עליהם ות״ת הוא קדיש ומלכות היא
100 קדושה וחכמה הוא קדוש המעלה ת״ת ומלכות לחכמה ששם דו פרצופין כנודע. ובכל קדיש מצנן גיהנם שעתא ופלגא. הנה כי בהמתקת בחות הגבורה.
105 ובדמימת האבל והצדקת דין והמנחמים יבוסם הדין ויתוקן הכל בחסד אל. וקדיש זה הוא דבריו של מת שהם מתפללים עליהם ואין צריך להרחיק ארבע 110 אמות:[i]

the World" are in Yetzirah, the place of the Chayot (living angels); "Guardians of the treasures of the Garden of Eden" are in Asiyah, where the lower Garden of Eden and the Ophanim (angelic wheels) 70R are found. And the word "Zot" (this), which represents the Shekhinah, as it is written "With this (zot) shall Aaron enter," by the merit of the departed and through the mystery of compassion and the sweetened forces of judgment—she will receive his soul in 75R her bosom and say to him, "Enter in peace."

After Tzidduk HaDin, we recite the Kaddish, whose special power in every place is to break iron locks, at the beginning and end of a matter, to open the heavens and gates, and to protect the prayer or 80R reading and all other matters from accusers. They are unable to challenge and accuse when confronted with it. The power of this Kaddish is superior because it alludes to the dew that descends from Arich Anpin to add vitality and abundant flow to 85R all the Sefirot and to the countless dwellers in dust, and the sprouting of light toward salvation from the supernal foundation, and the flowing of the supernal source for the rectification of our Messiah.

It is already known that the special quality of the 90R
Kaddish is to nullify the fire of Gehenna and subdue the foreign powers. And the son, through the power of Kaddish, brings his father out from the grasp of the external forces and brings him into the Garden of Eden. One must recite it in the language of the Other 95R
Side and respond with forceful "Amen" because this breaks the power of the Other Side, elevates the glory of the Holy One, blessed be He, over everything, and invokes remembrance for His children and His name, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah. 100R
This is the mystery of holiness below in Tiferet and Malkhut, which draw down the flow of wisdom from above upon them. Tiferet is "Kaddish" and Malkhut is "Kedushah," and Chokhmah is "Kadosh" which elevates Tiferet and Malkhut to Chokhmah, where 105R there are two visages, as is known. With every Kaddish, Gehenna is cooled for an hour and a half.

Thus, through the sweetening of the powers of Gevurah, the mourner's silence, the justification of judgment, and the comforters, the judgment is sweet- 110R

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The author uses this reference to establish the kabbalistic authority for the practice of reciting Kaddish for the dead, particularly explaining how it works on a cosmic level to break 'iron locks' and elevate the soul through various spiritual realms. | Cf. Tikkunim (Tikkunei Zohar) — This reference establishes a theological foundation for the practice ened and everything is rectified through God's kindness. This Kaddish represents the words of the deceased, as they pray for them, and it is not necessary to distance oneself four cubits.

פרק ל׳

Chapter 30

בימי חכמי המשנה והגמרא בחזרתם מבית הקברות היו עושים שבעה מעמדות ושבעה מושבות ומברכין ברכת רחבה
5 הכתובה בס׳ הכלבו[i] וזה כדי לעורר עליו ברכה מרחובות הנהר לכבות אש דין הקודח. וכדאמרי׳ במס׳ ברכות ובבא בתרא פ׳ ו׳ אמרי׳ כי הז׳
10 מעמדות היו נגד ז׳ הבלים שבס׳ קהלת[ii] ובכל ישיבה ועמידה

In the days of the Sages of the Mishnah and Talmud, upon returning from the cemetery, they would perform seven stations and seven sittings,[1] and recite the "Blessing of Expansiveness" recorded in the book Kolbo. This was done to arouse blessing for 5R the deceased from "the expanses of the river" to extinguish the burning fire of judgment.[2] As stated in Tractate Berakhot and Bava Batra chapter 6, these seven stations corresponded to the seven "breaths" mentioned in the Book of Ecclesiastes.[A] At each 10R sitting and standing, representing the mystery

[A] Or: "the seven "vanities" mentioned in the Book of Ecclesiastes" — The Hebrew word 'havalim' (הבלים) in Ecclesiastes is traditionally translated as 'vanities' in English biblical translations, though in kabbalistic contexts it refers to divine 'breaths' or emanations. Either translation would be appropriate depending on whether to emphasize the biblical or mystical context.

[1] These 'stations' and 'sittings' were ritual pauses and moments of reflection performed by mourners and funeral attendees when returning from burial. The exact form of these practices has been lost, but they involved stopping at designated points and reciting prayers or reflections.

[2] The metaphor of 'extinguishing fire' reflects the kabbalistic understanding that death invokes divine judgment, which manifests as spiritual 'fire.' The ritual stations were believed to mitigate this judgment through the counteracting power of divine mercy.

of Tzidduk HaDin (justification of divine judgment), connecting the contemporary ritual to a primordial pattern established by Adam himself. It suggests that accepting divine judgment with equanimity has cosmic significance in repairing spiritual damage. | Cf. Jewish martyrdom during the Crusades — By invoking these historical tragedies, the author suggests that remembering collective Jewish suffering and martyrdom serves as a powerful means of 'sweetening judgment' in kabbalistic terms. The memory of those who died al kiddush Hashem (sanctifying God's name) is presented as having ongoing spiritual efficacy in tempering divine severity. | Cf. Biblical verse "You are righteous concerning all that comes upon us" — This biblical reference provides textual authority for the practice of Tzidduk HaDin, showing that acceptance of divine judgment even in difficult circumstances has roots in the biblical tradition of acknowledging God's justice while recognizing human failings. | Cf. The Rock, His work is perfect — This reference from the Song of Moses affirms God's perfect justice, reinforcing the theological premise that divine judgment, even when appearing harsh, always serves a rectifying purpose in the cosmic order. | Cf. With this (zot) shall Aaron enter — This biblical reference is reinterpreted through a kabbalistic lens, where 'zot' (this) becomes a symbol of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence). The author uses this connection to explain how the Divine Presence receives the soul of the departed after the Tzidduk HaDin ritual is completed.

[i] This refers to a special blessing found in Sefer Kolbo, a medieval compendium of Jewish law and custom. The 'Blessing of Expansiveness' was recited specifically after returning from a cemetery.

[ii] The Book of Ecclesiastes contains seven instances of the word 'hevel' (vanity/breath), which in kabbalistic interpretation represent divine emanations that sustain creation. The seven stations performed after burial ritually correspond to these cosmic forces.

לסוד אור ישר וחוזר[i] היו
מעוררים כלליות מדות החסד
שבכל ספירה וספירה ממטה
למעלה עד מדת חסד אל למען
יקדמו פנים המאירים לארץ
ולדרים ולכן אין עושים דברים
אלו בפחות מי׳ דשכינה קדמא
ואתיא. וכתוב בירושלמי
דכלאים כי עשו לר׳ י״ח
מושבות[ii] או שהספידוהו בי״ח
בתי כנסיות וכתב בעל עין
יעקב שזה עשו לרמוז שהוא
ח״י. ואגרא דהספדא דלויי
פי׳ רש״י להרים קול ואולי זה
יהיה בהצדקת דין שמים וסודו
בנזכר לעיל מלבד שגם בהזכרת
שבחי המת האמתיים מעוררים
המדות עליונות המאירים מהם
והשמעת הקול יהיה על דרך
שנא׳ בב״ג ונשמע קולו בבואו
אל הקדש[iii] ואמרו בגין דיצטריך
קלא דישתמע וברכאן ישרון על
עלמא בגיניה כמו שהוא היה
שלם בחשן ואפוד זה פנים וזה אחור והיה רומז יחוד אופנים

of direct and reflected light, they would awaken the collective attributes of lovingkindness within each sefirah, ascending from below upward[1] until reaching the attribute of God's lovingkindness, so that illuminated countenances would precede the earth and its inhabitants.[A] Therefore, these practices are not performed with fewer than ten men, for "the Divine Presence precedes and arrives."[2] 15R

It is written in the Jerusalem Talmud of Kilayim that they arranged eighteen sittings for Rabbi [Judah the Prince], or that they eulogized him in eighteen synagogues. The author of Ein Yaakov wrote that they did this to symbolize that he was "chai" (alive, with numerical value 18). Regarding the reward for a eulogy, Rashi explained that it refers to raising one's voice. Perhaps this relates to the justification of divine judgment[3] and its secret as mentioned above. Additionally, when mentioning the true praises of the deceased, one awakens the supernal attributes that illuminate from them. The raising of the voice follows the principle stated about the High Priest: "And his voice shall be heard when he enters the holy place," and they said that this is necessary so that the voice is heard and blessings rest upon the world through him.[B] 20R 25R 30R 35R

[A] Or: "so that radiant faces might greet the earth and those who dwell upon it" — This alternate translation provides a more poetic rendering that captures the metaphorical nature of divine light spreading to the world and its inhabitants.

[B] Or: "and blessings shall flow upon the world because of him" — The Aramaic term 'yishrun' has a sense of flowing or settling, and this alternate translation captures the dynamic nature of blessings descending to the world.

[1] The text describes a spiritual process where ritual actions in the physical world affect the metaphysical structure of the ten sefirot (divine emanations). The seven stations create an upward flow of energy through these emanations, reaching ultimately to divine mercy.

[2] This Aramaic phrase 'shekhina kadma ve-atya' is a rabbinic expression indicating that when ten men gather, the Divine Presence is already there among them, making their prayers and rituals particularly effective.

[3] This refers to the ritual known as 'tzidduk ha-din,' where mourners formally accept God's judgment despite their grief. The raised voice during this recitation is understood to have cosmic significance in the heavenly realms.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'or yashar' (direct light) and 'or chozer' (reflected light), describing how divine emanation descends from God to creation and then ascends back, a fundamental principle in Jewish mysticism that is applied here to funeral rituals.

[ii] The number eighteen (י״ח) is significant because it corresponds to the numerical value of the Hebrew word 'chai' (חי), meaning 'alive.' The eighteen sittings for Rabbi Judah the Prince symbolically affirmed his continued spiritual life despite physical death.

[iii] This is a reference to Exodus 28:35, which describes the High Priest's garments, specifically the bells attached to his robe that would sound as he entered the Holy Place. The text draws a parallel between this Temple service and the raised voice of eulogy.

בחיות[i] וזהו סוד תפלין וקשר
תפלין פנים ואחור אספקלריא
המאירה ושאינה מאירה והסוד
קול ודבור שאינם מתפרשים
לעולם ועוד רמזו בקול ודבור
והבל אור ישר ואור חוזר זה
עולה וזה יורד וצריך להרים
קול דאשתמע לקלא עילאה דלא
אשתמע בסוד הזעקה שאמרנו
למעלה והמת הגורם זה יתברך
מאלהי אמן. והמספיד נענש
אם אינו משבחו כפי מעלתו
כמו שאירע לבר אבון ולבר
קפוק במ״ק ומההוא טייעא
דנתור ככיה ושיניה.[ii] ודרכי
ההספד הראוים לגדולים למדו
אותם רבותינו בספור הדברים
שהיו אומרים הספדנים על
פטירת רבותינו הקדושים
בבבלי ובירושלמי ואמרו בשבת
מהספדו של אדם ניכר אם הוא
בן העולם הבא[iii] ולכבודם היו
מניחים ס״ת קרוב למטתם וגם
לרבות ההספד והבכי והיה
מהם מי שלא היו רוצים שיניחו
ס״ת על מטתו כדאיתא במ״ק.
וההספד הוא במקום רבים
לחכמי׳ כדאמרינן במגילה פ׳
בני העיר ר״ל דספדיה להההוא
דתאני הלכתא בכ״ד שורתא
והיו מושיבין ישיבה על קברם
כדאמרינן בקמא פרק א׳ ומ״ק

Just as the High Priest was complete with the breastplate and ephod—one in front and one behind—which symbolized the unification of the Ophanim with the Chayot, this is the secret of tefillin and the tefillin knot, front and back, the illuminating lens and the non-illuminating lens.[A] The secret is voice and speech which are never separated.[1] They further alluded in voice, speech, and breath to direct light and reflected light—one ascending and one descending. One must raise a voice that is heard to awaken the supernal voice that is not heard, in the mystery of the cry that we mentioned above. The deceased who causes this will be blessed by the God of truth.

A eulogizer is punished if he does not praise the deceased according to his proper stature, as happened to Bar Avun and Bar Kapok in Moed Katan, and to that Arab merchant whose eye and teeth fell out. Our Rabbis taught the proper ways of eulogy fitting for great individuals through the accounts of what eulogizers would say at the passing of our holy Rabbis in the Babylonian and Jerusalem Talmuds. They stated in Shabbat that from a person's eulogy it becomes evident whether he is destined for the World to Come. To honor them, they would place a Torah scroll near their beds to increase lamentation and weeping, though some did not want a Torah scroll placed on their bed, as mentioned in Moed Katan.

The eulogy is delivered in a public place for scholars, as stated in Megillah, chapter "The People of the City," where Resh Lakish eulogized one who taught halakhot in twenty-four rows.[2] They would estab-

[A] Or: "the clear speculum and the unclear speculum" — In Jewish mystical terminology, 'aspaklaria ha-me'irah' and its counterpart are often rendered as 'clear speculum' and 'unclear speculum' in English translations of kabbalistic texts, referring to different qualities of prophetic vision.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that in the divine realm, thought, speech, and action are unified rather than separate as they are in the human realm. The eulogy temporarily achieves a similar unification through the proper raising of the voice.

[2] This refers to a scholar whose students were so numerous that they filled twenty-four rows in the study hall, indicating his exceptional status as a teacher of Torah.

[i] This refers to the unification of different categories of angels (Ophanim/Wheels and Chayot/Holy Beasts) described in Ezekiel's vision. The text connects this celestial unification to the ephod and breastplate worn by the High Priest, which had front and back aspects, and further to the tefillin worn in prayer.

[ii] This refers to a Talmudic account where an inadequate eulogizer suffered the supernatural punishment of losing his eye and teeth, emphasizing the spiritual gravity of properly honoring the deceased.

[iii] The Talmudic teaching that one's eulogy reveals whether they are 'destined for the World to Come' suggests that how one is remembered after death provides insight into their true spiritual status.

ובכתובות ועיין שם במעשה
בפטירת רבינו הקדוש ואמרנו
כי מהספדו של אדם ניכר מי הוא
וכו׳ ראיה זה מאבנר [i] lish a study session at their graves, as stated in Bava Kamma chapter 1, Moed Katan, and Ketubot. See there the account of the passing of our holy Rabbi [Judah the Prince]. And we have said that from a person's eulogy it becomes evident who he is, etc. The proof for this comes from [the case of] Abner.

דבחמים דוד עליו בכו כל
העם עמו כמה דאמרו בשבת
הא דמחממי ליה ואחים ומשם
נראה כי הבכי והקינה הוא על
הקבר וראשונה להם ההספד
שכן כתיב חגרו שקים לפני אבנר
ובעת הקבורה שהוא התעוררו׳
הרחמים עליו כאשר יבא אז
התחיל לבכות על קברו וכל
ישראל גומלי חסדים אחריו.
ואח״כ קונן עליו כמו שנאמר
ויקונן המלך על אבנר ואז
ויוסיפו כל העם לבכות עליו.
בבכי ראשון עוררו רחמי זעיר.
ובשני רחמים גדולים מאריך. גם
משם ראיתי כי ראוי להתענות
ביום קבורת הצדיקים שכן
דוד לא אבה לטעום לחם או
כל מאומה וייטב בעיני כל

When David warmed himself over Abner,[A] all the people wept with him, as they said in [Tractate] Shabbat: "This was when they warmed him and comforted him." From this it appears that weeping and lamentation occur at the grave, and the eulogy comes first, as it is written, "Gird yourselves with sackcloth before Abner." At the time of burial, which is when compassion for him is aroused[B] as will be explained, David began to weep at his grave, and all Israel, performers of acts of kindness, followed him. Afterward, he lamented over him, as it is said, "And the king lamented over Abner," and then "all the people continued to weep over him."[C] In the first weeping, they aroused the compassion of Zeir [Anpin, the Lesser Countenance]. And in the second, [they aroused] greater compassion from Arich [Anpin, the Long-Faced One]. Also from there I saw that it is proper to fast on the day of burial of the righteous, for David refused to taste bread or anything

[A] Or: "When David mourned over him" — The word 'דבחמים' could be interpreted as 'when he mourned' rather than literally 'warmed himself,' as it's describing David's mourning for Abner. The Hebrew phrase might be referencing the emotional warmth of mourning rather than physical warming.

[B] Or: "the awakening of mercy upon him" — This more literal translation of 'התעוררו הרחמים׳' as 'the awakening of mercy' better preserves the kabbalistic connotation of 'awakening' or 'arousing' spiritual forces.

[C] Or: "all the people increased their weeping over him" — The Hebrew verb 'ויוסיפו' can be translated as either 'continued' or 'increased/added to,' with the latter emphasizing the intensification of the weeping rather than just its continuation.

[i] Cf. Sefer Kolbo — The text references the Sefer Kolbo (Book of Everything), a 14th-century compilation of Jewish law and custom, as the source for the 'Blessing of Expansiveness' recited after returning from a cemetery. This demonstrates how Ma'avar Yabok draws on medieval legal sources to establish its ritual frameworks. | Cf. Ecclesiastes — The reference to the 'seven havalim (breaths/vanities)' in Ecclesiastes connects funeral practices to King Solomon's meditation on mortality. In kabbalistic interpretation, these 'breaths' became understood as divine emanations sustaining the world, giving metaphysical significance to the seven stations established after burial. | Cf. Zohar — The passage's discussion of 'direct light' (or ישר) and 'reflected light' (or חוזר) draws directly from Zoharic and Lurianic kabbalistic concepts about how divine emanation descends and returns. The text applies this cosmological framework to explain how ritual actions at funerals affect the soul's journey. | Cf. Exodus 28:35 — The text draws a parallel between the High Priest's service (where his bells must be heard when entering the sanctuary) and the eulogizer who must raise his voice. Both serve as mediators between worlds, with sound functioning as a vehicle for spiritual influence. | Cf. Moed Katan — The text cites cases from this tractate about eulogizers being punished for inadequate eulogies, establishing that proper honor for the dead is not merely social etiquette but a spiritual obligation with consequences.

העם ואנשי יבש גלעד התענו
שבעה ימים על קבורת עצמות
שאול ובניו. ומשבעה מעמדות
הנז׳ נתפשט אצלינו המנהג
לישב ז׳ פעמים ביציאה מבית
הקברות וממה שהעלינו למעלה
בששה מדרגות הטומאה והטהרה
שביעית וגוברת עליהן יהיה
טעם למה יושבין ז׳ פעמים ששה
להבריח הרוחות וא׳ להכין
עצמו לקבלת הטהרה על דרך
וישב העם בקד״ש. ובין קד״ש
ובין בר״ד הם שבעה ואפילו
היכל השביעי מהיכלי התמורות
יש כחות הפורחים באויר [i] else, "and it pleased all the people." And the men of Jabesh-Gilead fasted for seven days over the burial of the bones of Saul and his sons. From the seven stations mentioned above, our custom has spread to sit seven times when leaving the cemetery. And from what we established above concerning the six levels of impurity[1] with the seventh prevailing over them, this would be the reason why we sit seven times: six to drive away the spirits,[2] and one to prepare oneself to receive purity, following the pattern of "and the people settled in Kadesh."[3] Between "Kadesh" and "Bered" there are seven.[4] Even in the seventh palace of the Palaces of Exchange, there are forces that fly through the air[5]

ומזיקים לצד טומאתן לעשות
נסים בעולם לעומדים בצד
הקדושה ויש לו פתחים מכוונים
נגד הקדושה ומאירה באפילה
ההיא ושם יש מקום לחסידי

They cause harm through their impurity[6] by performing miracles in the world for those who stand on the side of holiness. This [seventh palace] has entrances aligned directly opposite holiness, and it shines in that darkness. There is a place there for [1]This indicates that the present text is part of a larger work where the author previously explained a system of six levels of impurity with a seventh level that overcomes them. This structural pattern is now being applied to explain the ritual of seven sittings when leaving a cemetery.

[2]The text reveals a protective function of the seven sittings ritual—six of the sittings are understood to provide protection against harmful spiritual entities that might attach to mourners leaving a cemetery, while the seventh sitting prepares one to receive purity again.

[3]This appears to be a reference to Numbers 20:1, where the Israelites settled in Kadesh. The author is using this biblical reference to create a connection between the ritual of sitting seven times and a biblical precedent.

[4]This is likely referring to a mystical interpretation of Genesis 16:14, which mentions Kadesh and Bered in relation to the well where Hagar encountered an angel. The author is suggesting there are seven spiritual stations or levels between these two biblical locations, creating a parallel to the seven sittings in the mourning ritual.

[5]In kabbalistic literature, particularly in discussions of the 'Sitra Achra' (Other Side), there are descriptions of negative spiritual forces that inhabit different domains, including the air. These are understood to be particularly dangerous to humans in spiritually vulnerable states, such as after visiting a cemetery.

[6]The original is somewhat ambiguous about who is causing harm. I've interpreted it as referring to the forces in the seventh palace of exchange mentioned in the previous context.

[i]Cf. Talmud Shabbat — The reference to Tractate Shabbat provides rabbinic authority for the mourning customs described in the text, particularly the sequence of eulogy, weeping, and lamentation. | Cf. 2 Samuel 3:31-39 — The author uses this biblical narrative to derive kabbalistic interpretations about the spiritual effects of different stages of mourning, connecting physical mourning rituals to their impact on divine attributes (Zeir Anpin and Arich Anpin). | Cf. 1 Samuel 31:13 — This reference establishes biblical authority for the practice of fasting on the day of burial of the righteous, using the example of Saul to complement the earlier example of David's fasting after Abner's burial. | Cf. Zohar — The reference to these kabbalistic concepts suggests that the author is interpreting mourning practices within the framework of Lurianic Kabbalah, where different mourning behaviors affect different aspects of the divine configuration. | Cf. Genesis 16:14 — This biblical reference to locations between which there are 'seven' is used as a textual basis for the practice of sitting seven times when leaving a cemetery, connecting physical ritual to biblical precedent.

א״ה הנק׳ כבוד.[i] הנה כי בז׳ ישיבות ובפרט בכח שיר של פגעים[ii] נעלה ונראה אל הר הקדושה. וקודם זה עושים רמז לתחיה כי אז רוח הטומאה יעבור מן הארץ. וזה עם תלישת העשבים מהבית חיים ואומרים ויציצו מעיר כעשב הארץ. ועוד אמרו שהוא להפריש בינם ובין המות ירצו בחות המטמאות הגוף המזדמנות בעת המיתה. ובהשלכתן לאחוריהם רמז כי נשכחתי כמת מלב דכיון דלא איכפת להו למיתי יותר מהאי עלמא כדאמר שמואל לרב יהודה חק בשאול מי יודה לך לכן גם החי שוכח אותו כי גזרה היא על המת שישתכח[iii] להיותו נגזר מחיי עולם הזה ועושה דרור בעולם שכלו ארוך. אך על החי שסבור שהוא מת אינו שוכח אותו כי כמים הפנים לפנים כן לב האדם לאדם. עוד סוד העשב הוא כי יש שדה במדור הראשון שהוא מקום כניסת ההיכלות בכל לילה. ובאותו שדה גדול יש סוד המלאכים שהם מאכל למלכות שמצד חיות הקדש הנקראת בבחינת

the pious among the nations of the world, which is called "Honor."[A] Thus, through the seven stations, and particularly through the power of the "Song of Afflictions" [Psalm 91],[1] we ascend and appear at the mountain of holiness. 115R

Before this, we perform a symbolic gesture pointing to resurrection, for at that time "the spirit of impurity will pass from the earth." This is done by plucking grass from the cemetery while saying, "They will flourish from the city like the grass of the earth" [Psalm 72:16]. It is also said that this separates them [the living] from death,[B] meaning from the forces that defile the body which are present at the time of death. And by throwing the grass behind them, it symbolizes "I am forgotten, like a dead person, from the heart" [Psalm 31:13], since the dead no longer care about this world, as Samuel said to Rav Yehudah, "The decree in Sheol—who will acknowledge You?" [Psalm 6:6]. Therefore, even the living forget the dead, for it is decreed that the dead should be forgotten, as they are cut off from the life of this world and find freedom in the eternal world. However, regarding a living person who is thought to be dead, one does not forget him, for "as water reflects face to face, so the heart of a person to a person" [Proverbs 27:19]. 120R 125R 130R 135R

Another secret of the grass[2] is that there is a field in the first chamber,[C] which is the place where the [heavenly] palaces enter each night. In that great 140R

[A] Or: "known as 'Glory.'" — The Hebrew word 'kavod' can be translated as either 'honor' or 'glory,' with the latter perhaps better conveying the celestial radiance implied in this mystical context.

[B] Or: "to make a distinction between them and death" — This alternative is more literal but might better capture the ritual intention of creating a conceptual separation between the living and death.

[C] Or: "a field in the first celestial dwelling place" — The term 'mador' specifically refers to celestial dwelling places in kabbalistic literature, which might be clearer with this more specific translation.

[1] Shir Shel Pegaim (Song of Afflictions) is the traditional rabbinic designation for Psalm 91, particularly in the Talmud (Shevuot 15b). It was believed to have special protective powers against harmful spiritual forces.

[2] The author employs multiple layers of kabbalistic interpretation for the ritual of plucking grass at cemeteries, moving from simple symbolism to increasingly complex mystical meanings.

[i] This refers to the concept of the 'righteous among the nations' having a place in the World to Come, specifically in an area called 'Honor' within the seventh palace of the celestial realm.

[ii] Shir Shel Pegaim (Song of Afflictions) is the traditional rabbinic name for Psalm 91, believed to have protective powers against harmful spiritual forces and demons. It was customarily recited at funerals and in times of danger.

[iii] This reflects the Talmudic teaching that the dead are eventually forgotten, which is viewed here not as a tragedy but as a divine decree allowing the deceased to fully transition to the next world.

בהמה ועשב זה הוא מזון ושפע
התחתונים. ולהיות כי הנפטר
נסתלק ממזון תחתון הנרמז
בעשב מן הארץ שהוא מאכל
145 לנפשו הבהמית על כן תולשין
העשבים להורות כי נתעלה
ללחום לחם אבירים. עוד עשב
הם ע״ב שמות[i] וראשי תיבותיו
הם ע״יקר ש״בינה ב״תחתונים
150 ושמות אלו יש מהם קדושים
נפלאים למעלה שהם סוד שפע
אילן עץ החיים הנק׳ תרומת
הקדשים ועליו נאמר מזריע
זרע למינהו. וכן קודם החטא
155 כתיב הנה נתתי לכם כל עשב
זורע זרע. אבל ואכלת את עשב
השדה לא נאמר בו זרע[ii] כי הוא
ע״ב שמות למטה שהם מתלבשים
בהנהגת מטטרון והם עשב השדה
160 התחתונים שהם מאכל בהמה
ועם כל זה אדם ובהמה תושיע
ה׳ כי עתה מתלבש בכתנות עור
בגשמי הגוף הזה ואוכל עשב
השדה. וזה נשפע בלי טורח
165 כל כך אבל סוד לחם מתבואה
עליונה שהיא שכינה המסתופפת
בספירות ופורשת סוכת שלום
עלינו והיא מעין נבואת מרע״ה
עליו נאמר בזיעת אפך תאכל
170 לחם ועליה נאמר כי לא יראני
האדם וחי. והנשמה הזוכה
אחר מיתתה מלחם אביה תאכל
הנקרא תרומת הקדשים אמנם
בעודה בגוף הזה כל תפלותיו
175 ותקוניו הם מקבלים ע״י העשב
השדה שהם בחות מזומנים לקבל
כל עסק תחתון להעלותו למעלה
והיינו ע״ב שמות תחתונים שהם field lies the secret of the angels who are food for Malkhut [Kingdom], which comes from the side of the holy Chayot [living beings] called, in this aspect, "beast," and this grass is the nourishment and divine 145R flow for the lower realms. Since the deceased has departed from the earthly nourishment symbolized by the "grass of the earth," which is food for his animal soul, we pluck the grass to indicate that he has been elevated to eat the "bread of the mighty" 150R [Psalm 78:25].

Additionally, "grass" [עשב] refers to the 72 divine names, and its acronym is "the E"ssence of the S"hekhinah is in the L"ower realms.[1] Some of these names are wonderfully holy above, representing the 155R flow from the Tree of Life, called the "offering of holy things," of which it is said "yielding seed according to its kind" [Genesis 1:12]. Similarly, before the sin, it is written, "Behold, I have given you every herb yielding seed" [Genesis 1:29]. But regarding "you 160R shall eat the herb of the field" [Genesis 3:18], the word "seed" is not mentioned, because this refers to the 72 lower divine names clothed in the governance of Metatron, which are the "herbs of the field" of the lower realms that serve as food for beasts. Neverthe- 165R less, "man and beast You save, O Lord" [Psalm 36:7], for now [after the sin] man is clothed in "garments of skin" in the physicality of this body and eats the herb of the field.

This flows without much effort, but the secret of 170R bread from the higher grain—which is the Shekhinah [Divine Presence] that dwells among the sefirot [divine emanations] and spreads a tabernacle of peace over us, and is akin to the prophecy of Moses our teacher,[2] of whom it is said, "By the sweat of your 175R brow shall you eat bread" [Genesis 3:19]—about this it is said, "For no man shall see Me and live" [Exodus 33:20]. The soul that merits, after its death, to eat of its Father's bread, called the "offering of holy [1] I've preserved the unusual formatting of the original text with quotation marks to indicate that this is spelling out an acronym, where the first letters of each word form עשב (grass).

[2] The text establishes a hierarchy of prophetic experience, with Moses representing the highest level, described metaphorically as 'bread' rather than 'grass' or 'thorns,' indicating the most direct and substantial spiritual nourishment.

[i] The author employs a kabbalistic wordplay where the Hebrew word for grass (עשב) is connected to the 72-letter divine name (ע״ב שמות) through gematria (numerical equivalence) and as an acronym.
[ii] The author makes a distinction between pre-sin vegetation mentioned in Genesis 1:29 (which includes 'seed') and post-sin vegetation in Genesis 3:18 (which lacks mention of 'seed'). This absence is interpreted mystically as indicating a lower spiritual level.

סוד ההיכלות שכלם פתוחים
180 לדיני האדם ולכל מעשיו ויש
למטה מזה מדרגה שהיא מזדמנת
חנם תמיד לפני האדם וצריך
ליזהר ממנה מאד שהם החיצונים
הנקרא קוץ ודרדר הבאים
185 להכשיל האדם כנגד אלו יש שלש
מדרגות בנבואה. האחד טומאת
בלעם ולבן וכיוצא והנכנסים
בפרדס הנפגמין.[i] מדרגה שנייה
הנכנס ויוצא בשלום וכמה
190 מדרגות אלו ע״ג אלו עד סוד
הנבואה העליונה. הג׳ סוד לחם
שהוא מזון נפרץ פירוש נבואת
מרע״ה כדכתיב ביה קראן לו
ויאכל לחם ולהיות כי אחיזת
195 קוץ ודרדר וגם אכילת עשב
השדה אינו אלא עד שובך אל
האדמה זה יהיה טעם לשבח
לתלישת עשב השדה והשלכתן
לאחוריהן לסוד האחורים ומכאן
200 ולהבא מזון הנפטר יהיה מלחם
הקדשים לא מעשבי השדה עוד.
ועושין כן ג״פ לרמוז שנפש רוח
נשמה של הנפטר מתעלין למזון
העליון לחם ענ״ג:[ii]

things”—but while still in this body, all its prayers and spiritual rectifications are received through the “herb of the field,” which are forces prepared to receive all lower activities and elevate them. These are the 72 lower divine names, which are the secret of the palaces that are all open to man’s judgments and all his deeds. 180R 185R

Below this level is a degree that is always freely available before a person, but one must be very careful of it, for these are the external forces called “thorns and thistles” that come to cause a person to stumble. Corresponding to these, there are three levels in prophecy: First is the impurity of Balaam, Laban, and the like, and those who enter the “Pardes” [mystical realm] and are damaged. The second level is for one who enters and exits in peace, and there are many levels one above the other until the secret of the highest prophecy. The third is the secret of bread, which is abundant nourishment,[A] meaning the prophecy of Moses our teacher, as it is written about him, “Call him and let him eat bread” [Exodus 2:20]. 190R 195R 200R

Since the hold of “thorns and thistles” and even the eating of the “herb of the field” only lasts until “you return to the ground” [Genesis 3:19], this is the praiseworthy reason for plucking the grass of the field and throwing it behind them, symbolizing the “backside” [the realm of judgment], and from now on, the nourishment of the deceased will be from the “bread of holy things,” no longer from the herbs of the field. We do this three times to symbolize that the nefesh [vital soul], ruach [spirit], and neshamah [higher soul] of the deceased are elevated to 205R 210R

[A] Or: “unrestricted nourishment” — The Hebrew ‘nifratz’ implies breaking through boundaries or limitations, suggesting that Mosaic prophecy transcended normal prophetic limitations rather than simply being quantitatively abundant.

[i] This refers to the Talmudic story of the four sages who entered ‘Pardes’ (the mystical realm): Ben Azzai, Ben Zoma, Acher, and Rabbi Akiva. Only Rabbi Akiva emerged unharmed; the others were either damaged or died.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — This passage draws heavily on Zoharic concepts about the soul’s ascent after death, particularly the idea that the soul transitions from earthly nourishment to spiritual sustenance. | Cf. Psalm 91 — The text references the ‘Song of Afflictions’ (שיר של פגעים), which is the traditional rabbinic name for Psalm 91, used as protection against harmful spiritual forces particularly during funeral rites. | Cf. Genesis 3:17-19 — The passage reinterprets the curse of ‘eating herbs of the field’ and ‘by the sweat of your brow you shall eat bread’ as mystical references to different levels of spiritual nourishment available to humans. | Cf. Ma’avar Yabok — This passage connects to earlier discussions in Ma’avar Yabok about how the soul transitions from physical to spiritual nourishment after death. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Shabbat 152b — The reference to Samuel speaking to Rav Yehudah about the dead not acknowledging God in Sheol comes from this Talmudic passage, which discusses how the dead forget the concerns of this world.

the higher nourishment, the bread of delight.[1]

פרק ל״א

בעמדנו על טעם המעמדות אשר הנהיגו חכמי הגמ׳ מלבד מ״ש נימוקי יוסף סוף פרק המוכר פירות בבתרא שהם כנגד שבעה דברים שהעולם נפסקין מהם בדכתיב זרע וקציר וקור וחום וקיץ וחורף ויום ולילה לא ישבותו ויום ולילה נחשבים אחד לומר כי החי יתן אל לבו כי העולם וכל ענייניו הבל. ואשרי מי שעמלו בתורה ובמעשים טובים. עוד אולי יהיה יען כי כח הדין נתגבר על המת שנהפכו עליו ההבלים עליונים קדושים ללהבים ואפי׳ מלאכי שלום בכו עליו פי׳ הורידו עליו דין[i] עד כי ירד למטה למקום שהדין יוצא מהכח אל הפועל מקום המיתה והכליון בסוד התכלת שמכלה הכל[ii] וירד מאיגרא רמא לבירא עמיקא שמאחר שבסוף ימיו קם ועלה והושפע ממדרגה השביעית ממטה למעלה שבהם

Chapter 31

In examining the meaning of the stations (ma'amadot) established by the Talmudic sages, beyond what Nimukei Yosef wrote at the end of chapter "The Seller of Fruits" in Bava Batra—that they correspond to the seven elements without which the world cannot exist,[A][2] as it is written: "Seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night shall not cease" (Genesis 8:22), with day and night counted as one—this teaches that the living should take to heart that the world and all its affairs are vanity. Fortunate is one whose labor is in Torah and good deeds.

Perhaps there is another reason: because the power of judgment intensified over the deceased, transforming the holy supernal breaths into flames.[B] Even the angels of peace wept over him—meaning they brought judgment upon him—until he descended to the place where judgment transitions from potential to actual, the place of death and extinction, in the mystery of the blue thread that consumes everything. He fell from a high roof into a deep pit,[C] for at the end of his days, he rose and was influenced by the seventh level from below

[A] Or: "from which the world derives sustenance" — The Hebrew literally refers to things 'from which the world is sustained/nourished.' While 'cannot exist without' captures the essential meaning, the alternate emphasizes the positive sustaining function rather than the negative consequence of their absence.

[B] Or: "when the holy supernal breaths were transformed into flames against him" — This alternative captures the directionality implied in 'עליו' (against him) more explicitly, emphasizing that these transformed breaths were directed specifically against the deceased as an expression of judgment.

[C] Or: "He descended from a lofty peak to a deep well" — This is a Talmudic expression (Chagigah 5b) referring to a dramatic descent or reversal of fortune. While 'roof' and 'pit' are literal translations, 'peak' and 'well' might better convey the metaphorical nature of the extreme transition being described.

[1] The Hebrew ענ״ג (delight) has a gematria value of 123, which in some kabbalistic systems connects to divine pleasure and the World to Come. This concludes the passage with the idea that the soul's ultimate nourishment after death is pure spiritual delight.

[2] This references Genesis 8:22, where God promises Noah that these natural cycles will never cease. The rabbis interpreted these seven phenomena as fundamental supports of creation, paralleling the seven 'breaths' (havalim) mentioned in Ecclesiastes that sustain the world.

[i] The author provides a mystical interpretation of angels' weeping: rather than expressing sorrow, their tears represent the flow of divine judgment upon the deceased.

[ii] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the color tekhelet (ritual blue) represents divine judgment. The word 'mekhale' (consumes) forms a wordplay with 'tekhelet' (blue), connecting the color to its consuming/destructive function.

סוד והשפעת השבעים שנה והם
סדר זמני האדם ואמרו בזהר פ׳
בשלח שלכן בתיב ויזורר הילד
עד ז׳ פעמים ולא סליק יתיר
כד״א ימי שנותינו בהם שבעים
שנה. ולכן בכל תחלת עשר שנה
ובפרט משנת י״ג ומעלה האדם
נתוסף בו השפעה יתירה כדתנן
במשנה בן עשר שנים למשנה
בן עשרים לרדוף שהמדקדק
במשנה ההיא ימצא בה מוצא
רוח יתירה שזוכה האדם השלם
בסוף כל עשר שנים משנותיו
עד הגיעו לשנת השיבה כי אז
הוא שלם ומכובד בעיני אלהים
ואדם ונגד זקניו כבוד דכתיב
מפני שיבה תקום בקימה שיש
בה סדור ואפי׳ לזקני ע״ה.
ע״פ הדברים האלה צריך לתקן
מעשיו בכל חלק משנותיו להאיר
עליו הספירה שמשפעת עליו
בפרט בעשר שנים ראשונים
הוא מושפע ממלכות שרגליה
יורדת מות ולכן הקליפ׳ גוברת
עליו ובורח מן הספר בי׳ שנים
שניי׳ מושפע מיסוד ולכן אז
נושא אשה וישתדל לתקן הכנות
ליחוד ביסוד שהוא השושבין.
בשלישים צריך שיתאזר בכחו
נגד רתיחת הבחרות שכן הוד
מתחזקת בדין. ובבחינת האדם
מהות הספירה השופעת עליו ידע
מה יהיה עקר מציאותו לתקון
עליון ולקשוט נפשו והדרוש הזה
מתרחב מאליו. וממה שכתוב
בזהר פ׳ תצוה דף קפ״ד ע״א
נבין למה הדין מתעורר מסוד

upward,[1] which contains the mystery and influence of seventy years—the pattern of human life phases. 25R

They said in the Zohar, Parashat Beshalach, that this is why it is written: "The child sneezed seven times" (II Kings 4:35) and no more, as it is said: "The days of our years are seventy years" (Psalms 90:10). Therefore, at the beginning of each decade, 30R especially from age thirteen onward, additional divine influence is added to a person, as we learned in the Mishnah: "At ten years for Mishnah, at twenty to pursue,"[2] etc. One who examines that Mishnah carefully will find in it evidence of the additional spirit 35R that the complete person merits at the end of each decade of his life until reaching old age, when he becomes complete and honored in the eyes of God and man, "and before his elders, glory" (Isaiah 24:23). As it is written: "Before the aged you shall rise" (Leviticus 19:32)—with a rising that has order,[A] even for 40R the elders of the common people.

Based on these principles, one must rectify one's deeds in each period of life to draw upon oneself the divine emanation (sefirah) that influences one 45R at that time. Particularly in the first decade, one is influenced by Malkhut, whose "feet descend to death" (Proverbs 5:5), and therefore the negative forces dominate and one flees from learning. In the second decade, one is influenced by Yesod,[3] and thus 50R takes a wife and strives to prepare for unification through Yesod, which is the attendant. In the third decade, one must gird oneself against the heat of youth, as Hod intensifies in judgment. By understanding the nature of the sefirah influencing him, a 55R person will know what should be the essence of his existence for supernal rectification and the adornment of his soul. This subject expands naturally.

From what is written in the Zohar, Parashat Tetzaveh, page 184a, we understand why judgment is 60R

[A] Or: "with a formal rising" — The phrase suggests a dignified, properly structured form of rising rather than a casual one. 'Formal rising' might better capture the ritual aspect implied in the text about how one should show respect to elders.

[1] In kabbalistic thought, human development is understood as an ascent through the lower seven sefirot (divine emanations). The seventh and highest of these is associated with completion and judgment, which explains why at the end of life one encounters judgment.

[2] This references Pirkei Avot 5:21, which outlines appropriate activities for each stage of life. The author reinterprets this teaching through a kabbalistic lens, suggesting that each decade corresponds to influence from a different divine emanation (sefirah).

[3] Yesod (Foundation) is the divine attribute associated with sexuality and procreation in kabbalistic thought, explaining why it corresponds to marriage age. Each sefirah influences different decades of human life, guiding appropriate developmental activities.

עוה״ב הנקרא שביעי[i] וע״ש בדף קכ״א מסוד ימי שנותינו בהם שבעים שנה. ושם אמר שהעוה״ז נדון בדין התחתון כי לא היה יכול לסבול תוקף דין העליון על כן מדת הדין הרפה אלהי כל הארץ יקרא ופי׳ גם כן למה אין ב״ד עליון מעניש אלא מבן עשרים שנה ומעלה. ופעמים האדם זוכה ועולה למקום הגבורות עליונות ונקראות גבורות שמהם מתעוררים כחות הגבורות התחתונות שהם כמו העצים שהאור נדלק בהם ומתמן ואילך לית אתר לקיומי כ״כ. וכבר דברנו מזה למעלה. ועל ידי שבעה הבלים עליונים יושפע הבל וחיות לאדם עודנו חי ואמרו בתקון ס״ט כי הבל מסטרא דימינא כלול שבעה הבלים ואינון אבגית״ץ וכו׳[ii] ובמקום אחר אמר ששבעה שמות אלה הם במלכות ועולים בשש טבעות הקנה והבל הפה הוא השביעי. כנגדן אמר דוד שבעה קולות במזמור הבו לה׳ בני אלים כי התחתונים החיים כל כח ואל שלהם הוא משבעה הבלים אלו ונקראים מוצא פי ה׳ ושבעה קולות אלו עולים בשבעה רקיעים. ויש שבעה משמאל היורדים בשבעה ארצות ושבעה הבלים טובים הם ז׳ ימי השבוע ויש אחרים נגד שני הרעב ואלה הם הבלים דחיים ואלה הם הבלים דמות ויהיה כללותם ובחינתם לחסד ובחינתם לדין והמוציא שקרים aroused from the mystery of the World to Come, which is called "the seventh." See also page 121 regarding the mystery of "The days of our years are seventy years." There it states that this world is judged by the lower judgment, for it could not bear the intensity of the higher judgment. Therefore, the milder attribute of judgment is called "God of all the earth," and it also explains why the heavenly court does not punish except from twenty years of age and upward.

Sometimes a person merits and ascends to the place of the higher Gevurot (Strengths), which are called "powers" from which the lower forces of Gevurah are awakened. These are like the wood in which fire is kindled, and from there onward, there is barely a place for existence. We have already discussed this above.

Through the seven supernal breaths, breath and vitality are bestowed upon a person while still alive. They said in Tikkun 69 that breath from the right side includes seven breaths, which are ABGITATZ, etc. Elsewhere it is said that these seven names are in Malkhut and ascend through the six rings of the windpipe, with the breath of the mouth being the seventh. Corresponding to these, David mentioned seven voices in the psalm "Ascribe to the Lord, O divine beings" (Psalm 29), for the living beings below derive all their power and divinity from these seven breaths, which are called "the utterance of the Lord's mouth." These seven voices ascend through the seven heavens.[1] There are also seven from the left side that descend through the seven earths. The seven good breaths correspond to the seven days of the week, while others correspond to years of famine. These are breaths of life, and those are breaths of death. Their totality and aspects relate to kindness (Chesed) and to judgment (Din).

One who speaks falsehoods—how many angels of [1]The text presents a complex cosmology where seven breaths or emanations (havalim) from the right side (mercy) ascend through the heavens, while seven from the left side (judgment) descend through the earths. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that divine energy flows in both directions between upper and lower worlds.

[i]The author references the Zoharic teaching that the World to Come (seventh level) is the source of judgment, which seems paradoxical since the afterlife is typically associated with reward. This establishes the kabbalistic framework that links the number seven with both judgment and completion.

[ii]This refers to the first word of the 42-letter Divine Name, often used in kabbalistic meditation. The full Name consists of seven six-letter sequences, corresponding to the seven breaths (havalim) mentioned in Ecclesiastes.

מפיו כמה מלאכי חבלה פותחים
100 פיהם לקבל אותם וחבל לאותם
שנשבעים לשקר. עיין דף קי״ז
והאריך שם בסוד ההבלים הרבה
ואגב פירש דברים נחמדים ובדף
קי״ח קרא תגר על המנגנים
105 בהבלים ואמר דעלייהו אמרו
זמרא בביתא חרבא בסיפא. הנה
כי שבעה הבלים אלו מהם קיום
הכל וחיי האדם כמו שזכרנו
ובעודנו חי עולה עד האלהים
110 גבורה עליונה ופעמים עד ועד בכלל: [i] destruction open their mouths to receive them! Woe to those who swear falsely. See page 117, where 100R the mystery of the breaths is discussed at length, and incidentally, pleasant matters are explained. On page 118, he denounces those who play music with breaths, saying that of them it is said: "Music in the house leads to destruction in the end." Indeed, these 105R seven breaths are the foundation of everything and of human life, as we mentioned. While still alive, one ascends to God, the supreme Gevurah, and sometimes even to the very limit.

פרק ל״ב

נאמר בתמימי דרך קריבה
בימיהם למיתה ומלבד הנדרש
בזה בזהר פ׳ ויחי ובשאר
מקומות לפי דרכנו נאמר
5 שקריבת הימים ירצה כי יורדים
למטה קרוב להנהגה התחתונה
הנקרא אחרית הימים בפ׳ תשא
והיא בית מועד לכל חי וכד
אחשכת נהורא ואתדבקת בחויא
10 בדין שאיבת מותא לכלא: וזהו
פי׳ בעטיו של נחש וכשהימים
קרבים ליה אז יגוע אדם ואיו

Chapter 32

It is said of those who walk blamelessly that their days draw near to death. Beyond what is expounded on this in the Zohar portion of Vayechi and in other places, according to our approach we can say that the "drawing near of days"[1] means they descend 5R downward, close to the lower governance called "the end of days"[A] in the portion of Ki Tisa, which is "the house appointed for all living." And when the light darkens and cleaves to the serpent, then death draws everything to itself.[B] 10R

This is the meaning of "by the counsel of the serpent,"[C] and when the days draw near to it, then

[A] Or: "means they descend toward the lower realm known as 'the end of days'" — This alternative simplifies the language while preserving the kabbalistic concept of descent to lower spiritual realms at death.

[B] Or: "And when the divine light dims and attaches to the serpent, then death absorbs everything" — This alternative emphasizes the divine nature of the light and uses 'absorbs' which might better capture the Aramaic 'sha'ivat' (drawing in/absorbing).

[C] Or: "due to the serpent's influence" — This alternative may be clearer to readers unfamiliar with the traditional rabbinic phrase.

[1] This mystical phrase refers to the approach of death, using the metaphor of days themselves approaching a spiritual boundary.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach — The Zohar connects the seven sneezes of the child revived by Elisha (II Kings 4:35) to the seventy years of human lifespan (Psalms 90:10), suggesting that these seven breaths/emanations correspond to the cycles of human life. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Tetzaveh — This section of the Zohar explains why divine judgment is associated with the seventh level or World to Come, and why it manifests differently in this world than in higher realms. | Cf. Tikkun 69 of Tikkunei Zohar — This text explains that the seven breaths (havalim) correspond to the 42-letter divine name beginning with ABGITATZ, which are arranged in seven groups of six letters each. | Cf. Psalm 29 — The text connects the seven stations (ma'amadot) to the seven mentions of 'the voice of the Lord' in Psalm 29, suggesting that these correspond to the seven divine breaths that sustain creation. | Cf. Pirkei Avot 5:21 — The reference to 'ten years for Mishnah, twenty to pursue' alludes to the Mishnah in Pirkei Avot that outlines the appropriate activities for each stage of life, which the author reinterprets through a kabbalistic lens of sefirot corresponding to decades.

ומורידים אותו על ערש דוי
בהפך אותיות רעש ואש אוכלה
כנדרש בתקון י״ח דף ל״א ל״ב
ע״ב. ופי׳ כי החולה בא לחולה
מחמת הפוך רחמים לדין בסוד
היו״ד במלואה נהפכת לדו״י גם
יו״ד במספרה היא עשר והעשר
חזרו להיות ער״ש הרי כי כל
משכבו הפכת בחליו הוא סוד
שני הפכים. ורעש הוא מלכות
הכוללת עשר ספירות והיא רעש
ודאי מטתו שלשלמה. ויש לה
ג׳ בחינות שתים מן הימין ער״ש
עש״ר וב׳ מן האמצע שר״ע
ושע״ר. ויתבארו במקומן וב׳
מן השמאל הא׳ רע״ש ומצד דין
החזק שנפגמת מצד החצונים
נאמר עליה מקום המשפט שהיא
מקום לת״ת הנקרא משפט שם
הקליפות חצונות שהם רש״ע
והקדושים עליונים מתקנים
דיניה בכל יום וזהו ברעש גדול.
ובזהר פ׳ ויחי ובפ׳ בשלח דף
מ״ז ע״ב ובפ׳ תרומה דף קע״ד
שם פי׳ מיתה הנאמרת במשה
ואמר כי יעקב היה דבוק בעץ
החיים דלית ביה מותא לעלמין
ויהב חיין לכל אינון דמתדבקן
ביה ובעת גריעת הכחות שהיו לו
בחלק הנקרא ישראל שבבחינה
הנקרא יעקב אבינו לא מת
כדפי׳ החכם אלשיך אז אסף
רגליו פי׳ כל סבותיו ומקריו
שעברו עליו בעוה״ז למטה
שרגליה יורדות מות ובחינה
שסביבותיה שיתין פולסי דנורא
מגבורה עליונה: ובתקון כ״ד
פי׳ שכנגד ס׳ גבורים השומרים

"a person expires and where is he?"[1] They lower him onto a sickbed, which inverts the letters of "tumult" (רעש) and "consuming fire" (אש אוכלה), as expounded in Tikkun 18, pages 31-32b. The explanation is that the sick person becomes ill due to the transformation of mercy into judgment,[2] in the mystery of the fully spelled letter Yod being transformed into "illness" (דוי). Also, the numerical value of Yod is ten, and these ten are transformed into "bed" (ערש). Thus, "You have transformed his entire bed in his illness" refers to the mystery of two inversions.[3] And "tumult" (רעש) is Malkhut, which encompasses ten sefirot, and it is indeed the "tumult" of "Solomon's bed."[4] It has three aspects: two from the right side—"bed" (ערש) and "wealth" (עשר); two from the middle—"evil" (שרע) and "gate" (שער), which will be explained in their proper place; and two from the left side, the first being "tumult" (רעש). From the aspect of strong judgment that is damaged by external forces, it is said of Malkhut, "the place of judgment"—for it is the place of Tiferet, which is called "judgment." There, the external shells are "wicked" (רשע), and the supernal holy ones rectify her judgments every day, and this is "with a great tumult."

In the Zohar portions of Vayechi and Beshalach (page 47b) and Terumah (page 174), the death mentioned regarding Moses is explained. It states that Jacob was attached to the Tree of Life,[5] in which there is no death for all eternity, and it gives life to all who cleave to it. At the time when the powers he possessed in the aspect called "Israel" were diminished—though in the aspect called "Jacob our father did not die," as explained by the sage Alshich—then "he gathered his feet," meaning all his circumstances and events that had transpired for him in this lower world, where "her feet descend to death," and the aspect surrounding her is sixty lashes of fire[A] from

15R 20R 25R 30R 35R 40R 45R 50R

[A] Or: "sixty measures of fiery judgment" — This alternative better captures the mystical concept

[1] This is a reference to Job 14:10, using biblical language to emphasize the mystery of what happens after death.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, illness and death occur when divine mercy (rachamim) is transformed into judgment (din), representing a shift in divine attributes affecting the human condition.

[3] The author is using letter permutation techniques common in kabbalah, showing how Hebrew words can be rearranged to reveal deeper spiritual meanings about illness and death.

[4] The author creates a complex wordplay connecting the Hebrew word for 'tumult' (ra'ash) with Malkhut (divine kingdom) and the biblical reference to Solomon's bed guarded by sixty warriors.

[5] The author presents a mystical interpretation of Jacob's biblical status, suggesting he achieved a spiritual level connected to the kabbalistic Tree of Life that transcends ordinary death.

המטה התחתונה יש ס׳ מלכות
אלו זכרים ואלו נקבות בית
קבול לאלו ושיתין פולסי דנורא
אלו עם עשרה דידה נחתו
מסטרא דאימא עילאה ומאן
דאתדבק למטה בעלמא דנוקבא
מיתה אזדמנת קמיה כדאמרי׳
על חבקוק בנה של שונמית
דאצטריך אלישע לאתערא רוחא
מלעילא ואתקשר באתר דהוה
ואתיב ליה נפשיה בכח רי״ו
אותיות: על כן הנקבות עליהן
מוטל המצוה ראשונה להתעסק
בצרכי המת להכין ליה זוודתא
מלבד מה שאמרו במדרש ב״ר פ׳
ט״ז שהולכות אצל המת תחלה
על ידי שגרמו מיתה לעולם.
עוד לפי דרכנו נאמר שכן אשת
חיל בטח בה לב בעלה ועושה
בחפץ כפיה להכין בגדי מלכות
לבעלה מכח מעשים והתעוררות
התחתונים כי צו לצו פי׳ מכל
מצוה ומצוה קו לקו נארגים
חוטים וקוים ללבושי יקר ומהן
המעורר מטל חלקו וכן אמר
שלמה בחכמתו נודע בשערים
בעלה ירצה שמסבת לבושים
היקרים שהתקינה לנגדו ולו
אשת חיל נודע וניכר שמידה
באו לו ובזה מתעלה לישב
בשובה ונחת עם זקני ארץ בחינת
שלש ראשונות כי עשתה בחפץ
כפיה בחכמת הפלך שהיא חכמה
מיוחדת לה לארוג מהשפעות העליונות היורדות מכח מעשים

supernal Gevurah.

In Tikkun 24, it explains that corresponding to the sixty mighty ones who guard the lower bed,[A1] there are sixty Malkhuts—these are male and these are female, a receptacle for those. 55R
And these sixty lashes of fire, together with her ten, descend from the side of the Supernal Mother.[2] Whoever cleaves below to the feminine realm, death is prepared before him, as we say regarding Habakkuk, the son of the Shunammite 60R woman, for whom Elisha needed to awaken a spirit from above[B] and connect it to the place where it had been, and restored his soul to him through the power of the 216 letters.

Therefore, it is incumbent upon women to fulfill 65R the first commandment of attending to the needs of the deceased, to prepare provisions for him,[C] besides what is said in the Midrash Bereishit Rabbah, chapter 16, that they go to the deceased first because they brought death into the world. Furthermore, ac- 70R cording to our approach, we can say that just as "a woman of valor—her husband's heart trusts in her," and she willingly works with her hands to prepare royal garments for her husband through the power of deeds and the awakening from below, for "precept 75R upon precept" means that from each and every commandment, "line upon line," threads and lines are woven for precious garments, and from these awakens the dew of his portion.[3] Thus Solomon said in his wisdom, "Her husband is known in the gates," 80R meaning that because of the precious garments she prepared for him, this woman of valor, it is known and evident that they came from her, and through this he is elevated to sit in tranquility and contentment with the elders of the land, in the aspect of the 85R of divine judgment being measured out in specific quantities.

[A] Or: "the sixty warriors who protect the lower divine couch" — This alternative makes more explicit the divine/mystical nature of the 'bed' being referenced.

[B] Or: "for whom Elisha had to arouse the supernal life-force" — This alternative more clearly conveys the mystical concept of drawing down divine life energy to restore life.

[C] Or: "to prepare spiritual provisions for his journey" — This alternative makes explicit the metaphorical meaning of 'provisions' as spiritual preparations for the soul's journey after death.

[1] This continues the interpretation of Song of Songs 3:7, where the sixty warriors are understood as spiritual forces protecting the divine feminine presence (Malkhut).

[2] This refers to Binah (Understanding), the third sefirah, which is characterized in kabbalah as the 'Supernal Mother' from which divine judgment emanates.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of 'tal' (dew), representing divine life-force or spiritual sustenance that nourishes the soul.

מהם אורגת בגדים נאים לבניה.
וכן הפלך הוא הורדת השפע ע״י
שפתותיה שהם שושנים עליונים
מהצמר העליון דכתיב ושער
רישיה כעמר נקי שהם סוד
השערות שבהם תקוני ושרשי
התחתונים בסוד התפשטות
השערות ולכן הבעל כופה אשתו
לעשות בצמר כי בשהיא בטלה
מסוד ההשפעה מביאה העולם
לידי שעמום ממהומת המבטלים
היחוד ח״ו ואפי׳ הכניסה לו
כמה עבדים שגם שמלה מתלבשת
במטטרו״ן וסנדלפון שהם עבד
ואמה ויש עוד למעלה מאלו
בחינת עבד עברי מ״מ עיקר
הנהגת התחתונים הוא על
ידה ובחינת אלו הם לבושים
המעלמים שפעה כדי שיוכל
העולם לסובלו. הנה כי על
הנשים תחלה להתעסק בצרכי
המת. ויבינו לו תבריכיו ראשון
ראשון מלמטה למעלה והחלוק
הסמוך לבשרו קודם לכל ואח״כ
הבתי שוקים וכן בהדרגה. וסוד
התפירה הוא במטטרון בחינת
אופן שמלכות נקבה מקננת בו
ושם נארגים החלוקה דרבנן וגם
לבושי מלכות לעלות למעלה
ולכן עליהן המצוה הזאת ואחר
שעשו לו הנקבות תקון המתייחס
להן ולבחינתן באים האנשים
על הנשים ומעלין אותו בכח
הרחיצה וטהרה שהיא הבנה
לקדושה בסוד וטהרו וקדשו
ובה ובכחה מסתלק מעלמא

three highest sefirot,[1] for she worked willingly with her hands in the wisdom of the spindle,[A] which is a wisdom unique to her, to weave from the supernal influences that descend through the power of deeds, from which she weaves beautiful garments for her children. 90R

Similarly, the spindle represents the bringing down of divine flow through her lips, which are supernal roses, from the supernal wool, as it is written, "and the hair of His head was like pure wool," which is the mystery of the hairs in which are the rectifications and roots of the lower realms, in the mystery of the extension of the hairs. Therefore, the husband compels his wife to work with wool, for when she is idle from the mystery of influence, she brings the world to desolation from the confusion of those who nullify unification, God forbid. Even if she brought him many servants—for even "garment" (שמלה) is clothed in Metatron and Sandalphon,[2] who are servant and maidservant, and there is even above these the aspect of a Hebrew servant—nevertheless, the primary governance of the lower realms is through her, and these aspects are garments that conceal her influence so that the world can bear it.[B] 95R 100R 105R

Thus, it is incumbent upon women first to attend to the needs of the deceased. They prepare his shrouds, first the lowest and then ascending, with the garment closest to his flesh coming before all, and afterward the leg coverings, and so on in gradual steps. The mystery of the sewing is in Metatron, the aspect of the Ofan (angelic wheel) in which the female Malkhut nests, and there the scholarly garments are woven,[3] as well as the garments of Malkhut to ascend upward. Therefore, this commandment is upon them. After the women have performed the rectification appropriate to them and their aspect, the men 110R 115R 120R

[A] Or: "the mystical art of the distaff" — This alternative emphasizes the esoteric nature of the spinning metaphor being used.

[B] Or: "and these dimensions serve as veils that moderate her divine flow so the world can endure it" — This alternative more clearly conveys the kabbalistic concept of divine energy being 'veiled' or moderated through various levels to be receivable by lower realms.

[1] The author equates the biblical 'elders' with the three highest divine emanations (Keter, Chokhmah, and Binah), suggesting that proper spiritual practice elevates one to these sublime levels.

[2] The author is making a kabbalistic wordplay, suggesting that the Hebrew word for 'garment' relates to these angelic beings who themselves serve as 'garments' or intermediaries for divine energy.

[3] This refers to the mystical concept of 'chaluqa d'rabbanan' (the scholarly garment), which is the spiritual vestment created by one's Torah study that clothes the soul in the afterlife.

דנוקבא אשר ירד לשם במיתתו
ועולה לעלמא דדכורא: וטוב
ליתן הדס ושושנים ואזוב במים
ושם מתקנים בחינות נשמתו
ורוחו ונפשו בהלביש אותם בגדי
ישע אחר שהפשיטו מעליו בגדי
בדדין שהוא הסדין שהיה בתוכו
והזוהמא אשר היתה דבוקה
בבשרו כאשר יבא הכל מפורש
בחלק ג׳ מדרושנו זה אשר יקרא
שפתי רננות בעה״י: [i] come after the women and elevate him through the power of washing and purification, which is preparation for holiness, in the mystery of "and they shall purify and sanctify."[1] Through this and its power, he departs from the feminine realm to which he descended in his death and ascends to the masculine realm.[2]

It is good to place myrtle, roses, and hyssop in the water, and there the aspects of his neshamah, ruach, and nefesh are rectified by clothing them in garments of salvation[A] after removing from him the garments of isolation,[3] which is the sheet in which he was wrapped, and the impurity that was attached to his flesh, all of which will be explained in detail in Part 3 of our discourse, which will be called "Lips of Joyous Song," with God's help.

פרק ל״ג

Chapter 33

[A] Or: "vestments of divine deliverance" — This alternative emphasizes the divine and salvific nature of these metaphysical garments that clothe the soul.

[1] This phrase references ritual purification concepts from the Temple service, applied here to the spiritual cleansing of the deceased.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, the feminine realm (alma d'nukva) is associated with physical existence and death, while the masculine realm (alma d'dikhura) represents spiritual elevation and life.

[3] The Hebrew term 'bigdei badadin' refers to the shroud or winding sheet in which the body was wrapped, metaphorically described as garments of separation or isolation.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Portion Vayechi — The Zohar passage elaborates on the mystical interpretation of Jacob's death, suggesting that true tzaddikim (righteous ones) like Jacob don't actually die in the conventional sense but rather transition to a higher spiritual existence. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — This section of Tikkunei Zohar explores kabbalistic letter combinations and their spiritual meanings, particularly how the transformation of letters corresponds to shifts between divine mercy and judgment that manifest as illness in the physical world. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part 3 'Siftei Renanot' — The author references his own work, indicating that more detailed instructions on tahara (ritual washing of the deceased) will be provided in a later section called 'Lips of Joyous Song.' | Cf. Midrash Bereishit Rabbah — This midrash explains that women attend to the deceased first because Eve brought death into the world through the sin of eating from the Tree of Knowledge, establishing a theological basis for women's traditional role in preparing bodies for burial. | Cf. Song of Songs 3:7-8 — The text reinterprets this biblical verse in kabbalistic terms, with Solomon's bed representing the divine feminine presence (Malkhut) and the sixty warriors corresponding to spiritual forces that protect it. | Cf. 2 Kings 4:8-37 — The text references this biblical narrative as an example of death being a descent into the feminine realm, requiring spiritual intervention (in this case by the prophet Elisha) to return the soul to the body. | Cf. Proverbs 31:10-31 — The author draws upon this biblical passage about the 'woman of valor' (eshet chayil) and reinterprets it kabbalistically to explain women's spiritual role in preparing garments for the deceased, comparing it to their traditional role in creating physical garments. | Cf. Zohar, Portion Beshalach — This Zohar passage elaborates on the concept that those who cleave to the Tree of Life do not experience death in the conventional sense, which is applied in this text to explain Jacob's spiritual status. | Cf. Zohar, Portion Terumah — This passage from the Zohar compares Moses' death to Jacob's, exploring the different spiritual levels they achieved and how these affected their experience of death and transition. | Cf. Daniel 7:9 — The reference to 'hair of His head was like pure wool' alludes to this biblical description of the divine presence, which in kabbalistic interpretation represents channels for divine energy flowing from higher to lower realms.

הדרן למאי דפתחנא ביה ליתן טעם לשבע ישיבות והוא כי יען שלצורך תקון הנפטר הוצרכנו לירד בבשתנו למעה עד המקום אשר הודח שם להעלותו אח״כ בכח החסד של אמת שעשינו עמו נעשה ז׳ ישיבות וז׳ מעמדות וחרב פיפיות בפינו בשיר של פגעים המבריח הרוחות מכל מקום שהן.[i] אמרו כי יש מוצא מהרבה מהם מתחת לארץ ומהם בארץ עצמה ומהם באויר הקרוב אלינו הנקראים שרי רוח. ובן בכל הארבע יסודות ומהם למעלה עד גלגל הירח ובן בכל הגלגלים ומוצא כולם מהשרים והקליפות רוכבי הגלגלים שהם חלק העשיה גשמית. ובשיר זה עם ישיבות אלו סוקלים המסלה כי הוא זמיר עריצים ומסירים אותם מעלינו במלין דזמרא אינון חיצים לגבי חויא בישא ס״מ[ii] וזהו עד יפלח חץ כבדו דתמן ס״מ יסודיה ועקריה בג״פ הכבד כועס ובמא כועס במר׳ נוקבא דיליה זנבא דיליה דבתר דעבידת ניאופין יהיבת שיורין לבעלה במרה כעיס ובזנבא דהיא יותרת קטיל בדדרש בתקון י״ג דף כ״ה[iii] ובכח חיצים אלו אנו עולים הלוך ונסוע מהבל התחתון בדדרש ההוא מארי דקבין בתקונים עד הנגבה. ובכל ישיבה ועכבה

We return to what we began with, to provide a reason for the seven stations [during the funeral procession],[1] which is because for the rectification of the deceased, we needed to descend in our shame to the place where he was expelled, in order to later elevate him through the power of true kindness that we performed for him. We establish seven stations and seven sittings, with a double-edged sword in our mouths in the form of the "Song of Afflictions"[2] [Psalm 91] which drives away harmful spirits from wherever they may be.[3] It is said that many of these spirits emanate from beneath the earth, some from the earth itself, and some from the air close to us, called "princes of the wind." Similarly, they exist in all four elements, and some reach upward to the sphere of the moon and through all the celestial spheres, with their source being the celestial princes and negative forces that ride the spheres, which are part of the physical realm of Action (Asiyah).[4]

With this psalm and these stations, we clear the path, for it prunes the powerful [negative forces] and removes them from us. These words of song are like arrows against the evil serpent Samael, as it is written: "until an arrow pierces his liver"—for there Samael has his foundation and root. The liver becomes angry in three ways, and with what does it become angry? With the gall of his female counterpart, his tail, for after she commits adultery, she gives the remnants to her husband. Through the gall he becomes angry, and through the tail, which is the lobe, he kills, as explained in Tikkun 13, page 25. Through the power of these arrows, we ascend, journeying from the lower realm, as explained by

[1]The Hebrew text uses the term 'seven sittings' (שבע ישיבות), referring to a now largely obsolete Jewish mourning custom where the funeral procession would stop seven times between the home and the cemetery.

[2]I've placed Psalm 91 in brackets to clarify which psalm is being referenced. This psalm is traditionally called 'Shir Shel Pega'im' and was recited for protection against harmful spirits.

[3]The text reflects the kabbalistic belief that reciting Psalm 91 creates a protective shield against negative spiritual forces that might interfere with the soul's peaceful transition.

[4]In Kabbalah, Asiyah is the lowest of four spiritual worlds, closest to physical reality. The text describes a cosmology where negative forces inhabit different levels of creation.

[i]This phrase refers to Psalm 91, traditionally known as 'Shir Shel Pega'im' (Song of Afflictions/Demons), which was believed to have special protective powers against harmful spiritual forces.

[ii]S"M refers to Samael, a name used in Jewish mystical texts to refer to the Angel of Death or the chief of evil spirits.

[iii]This references Tikkun 13, page 25 of Tikkunei Zohar, a major kabbalistic text.

עם כח שירי זמרה שבפינו אנו
מתעלים מעלה עד אהבה רבה
שהוא חסד לאברהם. ובכן
אך טוב וחסד ירדפונו כל
ימי חיינו. ותאנא בצניעותא
דספרא[i] דחסדא עילאה בכלא
אצטריך לאתרברבא ולמיבני
ליה ולא לקטעא ליה ח״ו ואין
לישראל להשחית זקנם בתער
ויש פרושים מחמירים אפילו
במספרים כעין תער ועיין
באדרת נשא בתקון ששי מי״ג
תקוני דיקנא יקירא.[ii] וסדר
עליית מעלמא דנוקבא מל׳
עד חסד[iii] נרמז בפסוק כי
מלאכיו יצוה לך לשמרך בכל
דרכיך[iv] שמלבד שהוא שבע
תיבות עוד בכל תיבה ממנו
נרשם סדר עליות אלו ולעולם
העליון כולל מה שלמטה ממנו
עמו ונכלל בו בחות קדושים
משפיעים ומקבלים המתייחדים
על ידי יסוד הנקרא כל. וכל
המזמור הוא מצד ספירת הוד
להשבית מעול וחומץ. ולכן החזן
היה אומר שבו יקרים שבו עמדו
יקרים עמודו להראות כוונתם
שהוא לעלות עד מדת החסד על
דרך מה יקר חסדך אלהים. עוד
ההקפות הנעשים למת מלבד
מה שאנו עתידים לדרוש בהם
יהיה כדי להשפיע עליו קדושה
מז׳ ימים עליונים ולהבריח

the master of measures in the Tikkunim, toward the south [symbolic of divine love]. With each station and pause, with the power of song in our mouths,[1] we elevate ourselves higher until reaching the great love, which is loving-kindness for Abraham.[2] Thus, "surely goodness and kindness shall follow us all the days of our lives."

It is taught in the Book of Concealment that supernal kindness needs to be magnified and built up in all things, not cut off, God forbid. Therefore, Israel should not destroy their beards with a razor, and there are strict interpreters who forbid even scissors that cut like a razor. See the Idra of Naso, in the sixth of the thirteen arrangements of the precious beard.[3]

The order of ascent from the feminine realm (Malkhut) to loving-kindness (Chesed) is alluded to in the verse: "For He will command His angels concerning you, to guard you in all your ways." Besides containing seven words, in each word is inscribed the order of these ascents, and the higher world always includes what is below it and incorporates holy powers that influence and receive, unifying through the foundation called "all." The entire psalm relates to the divine attribute of Hod, to eliminate oppression and violence. Therefore, the cantor would say: "Sit, precious ones, sit; stand, precious ones, stand"—to show their intention to ascend to the attribute of loving-kindness, in the manner of "How precious is Your loving-kindness, O God."

Furthermore, the circuits made around the deceased, besides what we will explain about them

[1] The Hebrew uses poetic language comparing psalms and prayers to weapons ('arrows' and a 'double-edged sword') that combat spiritual forces, reflecting the kabbalistic view that properly intoned sacred words have actual metaphysical effects.

[2] The text associates Abraham with the divine attribute of Chesed (Loving-kindness), following traditional kabbalistic correspondences between the biblical patriarchs and specific divine attributes.

[3] In Kabbalah, the divine 'beard' (dikna) is a metaphor for channels of divine mercy flowing from higher spiritual realms to lower ones. The prohibition against shaving is connected to this mystical concept.

[i] This refers to Sifra D'Tzniuta ('Book of Concealment'), a section of the Zohar that contains highly esoteric kabbalistic teachings.

[ii] This refers to the 'Thirteen Arrangements of the Precious Beard,' a kabbalistic concept describing thirteen channels through which divine mercy flows into the world, metaphorically depicted as strands of a beard.

[iii] This refers to the kabbalistic ascent from Malkhut (Kingdom, the lowest sefirah, associated with the feminine) to Chesed (Loving-kindness, a higher sefirah).

[iv] This is a verse from Psalm 91:11, which is particularly significant as it comes from the same psalm ('Song of Afflictions') mentioned earlier in the text.

ממנו כחות החצונים שבז׳
היכלות התמורה בסוד ההיקף
והמחול שהוא בנצח הנוצח כל
אויב ומתנקם וסוד המחול הוא
העגול דהיינו סוד שש קצוות
שכלם משפיעים במלכות בסוד
גלגולם זה אחר זה והיא מקבלת
מכלם וזהו יהללו שמו במחול
והכוונה בהקפה תהיה להשפיע
במלכות שהיא אם ונשמת כל חי
מיומין עילאין כדאמרי׳ בפ׳
תצוה בדרוש ספירת העומר
ושם דף קכ״א בדרוש רמז ימי
הסוכה ובהקפת המזבח ובזה
היא מתוקנת מלמעלה ומקושטת
מלמטה מז׳ הנערות דאינון ז׳
היכלין בז׳ מושבות ומעמדות
שכן ההיכלות פעמים עומדים
לקבל ולהתאחד בקדש הקדשים
וזהו סמיכת גאולה קדש הקדשים
לתפלה הם שש היכלות תחתונים
ופעמים יושבים להשפיע.
ובתקון ו׳ דף י״ח פירשו כי
ההקפות הם בסוד נקבה תסובב
גבר[i] במשנה שהיא ששה סדרים
ומקפת לתורה שבכתב שהיא ה׳
חומשים. ולכן סובבים בארבעה
מינים המזבח שהוא רמז לגן
הנטועים בו וגן עם שבעה ימים
הם ששים כנגד ששים מסכתות.
ובשמיני עצרת בו שפע התורה
להשקות האילן הנטוע בגן
ולכן תאות ביום ההוא לשמחת
תורה וחוגגים במחול ובמחוג
בב״ה בסוד נעוץ הסוף בראש
וראש בסוף שכן הוא חק וסדר
המחול וכן מסיימים התורה וגם
מתחילים אותה ובו ביום ותחלת
ברכותיהם של ישראל והוא
שמחת גמר היחוד המתחילים
תקוניו מיום ראש השנה ונגמרים קו לקו עד יום שמיני עצרת כי

later, are meant to bestow upon him holiness from the seven supernal days and to drive away from him the external forces of the seven palaces of exchange.[1] This is through the mystery of the circuit and the dance, which is in Netzach that conquers every enemy and avenger. The secret of the dance is the circle, meaning the secret of the six extremities [directions] that all influence Malkhut through their circular rotation one after another, and she receives from them all. This is the meaning of "Let them praise His name in dance." The intention in the circuit is to influence Malkhut, which is the mother and soul of all living, from the supernal days, as explained in Parashat Tetzaveh in the discourse on counting the Omer, and there on page 121 in the discourse alluding to the days of Sukkot and the circling of the altar. Through this, she is prepared from above and adorned from below by the seven maidens, which are the seven palaces, through the seven stations and sittings. For sometimes the palaces stand to receive and unite with the Holy of Holies—and this is the joining of redemption [the blessing after Shema] to prayer [the Amidah]—they are the six lower palaces; and sometimes they sit to bestow influence.

In Tikkun 6, page 18, it is explained that the circuits are in the mystery of "a woman shall encompass a man"—in the Mishnah, which has six orders and encompasses the Written Torah, which has five books. Therefore, we circle the altar with the four species, which alludes to the garden in which they are planted. And the garden with the seven days equals sixty, corresponding to the sixty tractates [of the Mishnah]. On Shemini Atzeret, the flow of Torah waters the tree planted in the garden, and therefore you will desire on that day to rejoice in the Torah and celebrate with dance and circle in the synagogue, in the mystery of "the end is wedged in the beginning and the beginning in the end," for such is the law and order of the dance. Thus, they complete the Torah and also begin it on that same day, the beginning of the blessings of Israel, and it is the joy of com-

[1] The 'palaces of exchange' (היכלות התמורה) in Kabbalah refer to realms dominated by negative forces that are counterparts to the holy palaces. The funeral rituals are meant to protect the deceased from these realms.

[i] This phrase ('a woman shall encompass a man') comes from Jeremiah 31:22 and is interpreted kabbalistically to signify times when the feminine aspect (Malkhut) surrounds and protects the masculine aspect.

110 אז הדודים עילאים הם בדביקתא ברעותא באחדוותא חדא[i] וה׳ אחד ושמו אחד:[ii] pleting the unification that begins its rectifications from Rosh Hashanah and is completed line by line until Shemini Atzeret, for then the supernal lovers are in attachment, in willingness, in singular unity, and "the LORD is One and His name is One."[1] 110R

פרק ל״ד

Chapter 34

תנחומי אבלים הוא עקר גדול בג״ח ואמרו במדבר רבה פ״ח שהקב״ה מראה פנים לאבל. ונחם אברהם ויעקב תנחומי
5 אבלים וכן ביצחק כתיב ויהי אחרי מות אברהם ויברך אלהים את יצחק בנו וביעקב נאמר ויקומו כל בניו וכל בנותיו לנחמו. ועיין בפרקי ר׳ אליעזר
10 פרק י״ח משכר מצוה זו ומכמה מקומות למדנו זה וב׳ שערים היו בבית המקדש אחד לחתנים ואחד לאבלים[iii] ומה שתקנו אחר חורבן הבית בזה. ויזהר
15 האדם בנחמו שלא יהא ח״ו גידוף כדאמרי׳ פ׳ שור שנגח

Comforting mourners is a fundamental principle in acts of loving-kindness.[A] It is said in Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah, chapter 8, that the Holy One, blessed be He, shows His countenance to the mourner. Abraham and Jacob were comforted as mourners, and similarly with Isaac it is written: "And it came to pass after the death of Abraham that God blessed Isaac his son." Regarding Jacob it states: "And all his sons and all his daughters rose up to comfort him." See also Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer, chapter 18, concerning the reward for this commandment. We have learned this from many sources, and there were two gates in the Temple—one for bridegrooms and one for mourners—and what was instituted after the destruction of the Temple in this regard. 5R 10R 15R

[A] Or: "Consoling mourners is a major foundation of charitable deeds" — This alternative translation uses 'consoling' instead of 'comforting' and 'charitable deeds' instead of 'acts of loving-kindness,' which might be more accessible to readers unfamiliar with Jewish terminology. However, 'acts of loving-kindness' better captures the specific religious concept of gemilut chasadim.

[1] This closing phrase comes from Zechariah 14:9 and is also found in the Aleinu prayer. It expresses the ultimate kabbalistic goal of complete divine unity where all apparent divisions are reconciled.

[i] These Aramaic terms describe the highest state of mystical union: 'in attachment, in willingness, in singular unity'—referring to the complete unification of divine energies.

[ii] Cf. Psalm 91 — Psalm 91 is presented as having specific metaphysical effects when recited during the funeral process, creating a protective shield around both the deceased and the mourners against negative spiritual forces that might interfere with the soul's transition. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author draws on the Tikkunei Zohar to explain the mystical anatomy of negative forces, specifically how anger manifests through the liver, which is associated with Samael. This shows how Ma'avar Yabok integrates technical kabbalistic concepts from earlier authoritative sources. | Cf. Idra of Naso — The author connects practical Jewish law (not shaving with a razor) to its mystical significance as explained in the Zohar, demonstrating how Ma'avar Yabok explains ritual practices through their kabbalistic meaning. | Cf. Book of Concealment (Sifra D'Tzniuta) — The author draws on one of the most esoteric sections of the Zohar to support the idea that spiritual practices should expand divine mercy rather than restrict it, providing a theoretical basis for the funeral rituals described. | Cf. Zechariah 14:9 — This biblical reference frames the entire funeral ritual as ultimately serving the purpose of divine unification (yichud), a central concept in Kabbalah. The mourning practices are thus portrayed as contributing to cosmic harmony and the restoration of divine unity.

[iii] According to the Talmud (Mo'ed Katan 27b), there were two gates in the ancient Temple in Jerusalem—one for bridegrooms and one for mourners. On Sabbaths, people would gather there to congratulate the bridegrooms or comfort the mourners. This practice symbolized the Jewish community's responsibility to participate in both the joys and sorrows of its members.

מאי אית ליה לגבי נחמתא דבבלאי[i] וכו׳ ויזהרו שלא יבכה על מתו יותר מדאי[ii] פן יתריס נגד מדת הדין בנראה ממעשים בפ׳ אלו מגלחין. והנחמה היא גמילות חסדים גם לנפטר כדגרסינן במס׳ שבת מי שאין לו מנחמין הולכין עשרה בני אדם ויושבין במקומו וכן נראה ממעשה שאירע לר׳ יהודה שם. ויפתח האבל תחילה[iii] כדאמרינן בסוף פרק מציאת האשה. ויאמר דברי נחמות נגד האבלים ודברי שבח נגד המנחמין ולכל ישראל כדגרסינן במ״ק ובכתובות בר״ל עם מקרי בניה דא״ל קום אימא מלתא וכו׳ ואל יכנס א׳ לדברי חבירו ובפרט אם הוא חכם כדחזינן במיתת בניו של רבי ישמעאל. והאבל יודה למספידים ולמנחמים על הכבוד שעשו לו ויפטרם בשלום שראינו שר״ע עמד על ספסל גדול ופטר ישראל לשלום שהספידו בניו הספד גדול. ובשלשת רעי איוב כתיב לנוד לו ולנחמו[iv] מלת לנוד תורה לנו כי הנחמה מעלה האבל ומנידו ממקום השפעת הדין למקום נייחא ותנחומין כמו שכתוב ויעבר אלהים רוח

A person should be careful when offering comfort that it not become, God forbid, blasphemous, as stated in the chapter "An Ox That Gored":[1] "What benefit is there in the consolation of the Babylonians?" etc. One should also be careful not to weep excessively over one's dead, lest one protest against the attribute of divine judgment, as evident from incidents in the chapter "These May Shave." 20R

This comfort is an act of kindness also for the deceased, as we learn in Tractate Shabbat: "For one who has no comforters, ten people go and sit in his place," as appears from the incident that happened to Rabbi Judah there. The mourner should speak first,[2] as stated at the end of the chapter "Finding a Wife." He should speak words of comfort to the mourners and words of praise for the comforters and for all Israel, as we learn in Mo'ed Katan and Ketubot about Resh Lakish with the teachers of his children, when he said to him, "Rise and say something," etc. One should not interrupt another's words, especially if he is a sage, as we see in the case of the death of Rabbi Ishmael's sons. The mourner should thank those who eulogize and comfort him for the honor they have shown him, and dismiss them in peace, as we saw that Rabbi Akiva stood on a large bench and dismissed the Israelites in peace after they had greatly eulogized his sons. 25R 30R 35R 40R

Regarding Job's three friends, it is written "to mourn with him and to comfort him." The word "to mourn" teaches us that comforting elevates the 45R

[1] This references a Talmudic passage (Bava Kamma 38a) where inappropriate consolation is criticized. The Hebrew term 'גידוף' (giduf) implies blasphemy or insulting God, suggesting that improper consolation can actually be spiritually harmful rather than helpful.

[2] This follows the principle established in Talmud Bava Metzia 59b that visitors should not speak to a mourner until the mourner speaks first. This practice respects the mourner's emotional state and acknowledges their primary position in the mourning process.

[i] This refers to an incident in the Talmud (Bava Kamma 38a) where inappropriate consolation was offered. The Babylonians offered consolation by saying 'What can be done?' which implied helplessness against divine judgment. This teaches that consolation should not suggest resignation to fate but should provide genuine comfort.

[ii] The Talmud (Mo'ed Katan 27b) establishes limits on mourning, stating that one should not mourn excessively. Excessive mourning was seen as questioning divine judgment and potentially harmful to the mourner's own spiritual and physical wellbeing.

[iii] This follows the Talmudic principle (Bava Metzia 59b) that visitors should not speak until the mourner opens conversation. This practice acknowledges the mourner's emotional state and allows them to set the tone of the interaction.

[iv] This phrase from Job 2:11 regarding Job's three friends contains the dual aspects of mourning: 'lanud' (to sway/move) and 'lenaḥamo' (to comfort). The author interprets these terms mystically—the comfort process involves moving the mourner from a state dominated by divine judgment to one of consolation.

על הארץ וישוכו המים ופי׳
רוח הנחה ותנחומיו העביר
על הארץ ואז וישוכו המים
50 הזדונים. ונחמה היא מן השמי״ם
שבו נכללו הרחמים בדין ולכן
אומרים מן השמים תנוחם[i] ולנו
דרכים ישרים מאומתים בעצמם
לתת טעם לכל מה שאמרו במ״ק
55 שהאבל אסור בהם וכן עטיפתו
וישיבתו על גבי מטה כפויה
או על גבי קרקע וכן כל מה
שחייבוהו רבנן לנהוג בימי
אבלתו שאשר הוכיחו מקראי
60 שם. אך להיות כי יאריך הדרוש
בחרתי להשמיע אותם ונבון יבין
דעת מעצמו רק נציע פה לבד
ריש מלין בטעם האונן וההבראה
בהודיע כי האבל צריך סעד
65 לתומכו בתנחומים ורחמים.
פוק נא חזי כמה אתחלש חיליה
של מי שמתו מוטל לפניו כי
אפי׳ לענות אמן אחר ברכת
המברך לא הרשוהו[ii] כדאמרי׳
70 בירושלמי אם רצה להחמיר על
עצמו אין שומעין לו. וברבה פ׳
וילך אמרו כיון שרואה צרתו
לפניו דעתו מובלגת. אבל
כשנקבר כל ימי האבל הוא
75 זקוק לכל דבר של מצוה. וזה
להיותו עומד ומשפע מתוקף
הדין וכל יחוד הוא בחסד
באופן שהמקורות עליונות אינם
מתייחדות על ידו ומחוץ למחנה
80 שכינה מושבו כי היא חפצה
ביחוד ולכן האונן פטור מכל
מצות האמורות בתורה. ואמרי׳

mourner and moves him from the place of judgment's influence to a place of rest and consolation, as it is written: "God caused a wind to pass over the earth, and the waters subsided," explained as a wind of rest and consolation that passed over the earth, and then "the raging waters subsided." 50R

Comfort comes from "heaven" (shamayim), wherein mercy is included with judgment,[1] and therefore we say, "May you be comforted from Heaven." We have straightforward ways, confirmed in themselves, to provide reason for everything mentioned in Mo'ed Katan that is forbidden to the mourner, as well as his wrapping himself and sitting on an overturned bed or on the ground, and all the practices that the rabbis obligated him to observe during his days of mourning, which they derived from the verses there. However, since this inquiry would be lengthy, I have chosen to omit them, and the discerning will understand on their own. I will present here only the beginning of words on the reason for the rules of an onen [one whose dead relative is not yet buried] and the consolation meal, explaining that the mourner needs support to sustain him with comfort and mercy. 55R 60R 65R 70R

Go and see how weakened is the strength of one whose dead lies before him, for even to answer "Amen" after another's blessing was not permitted to him, as stated in the Jerusalem Talmud: "If he wishes to be stringent upon himself, we do not listen to him." And in Rabbah, parashat Vayelech, they said: "When one sees his trouble before him, his mind is confused." But when the deceased is buried, throughout the days of mourning he is obligated in all matters of commandment. 75R 80R

This is because he stands under the influence of the force of judgment,[A] and all unification is through [A] Or: "affected by the power of divine severity" — This alternative more explicitly captures the

[1] The author engages in a wordplay with the Hebrew word 'שמים' (shamayim/heaven), which tradition interprets as a combination of 'אש' (esh/fire) representing judgment and 'מים' (mayim/water) representing mercy. This illustrates the kabbalistic concept that true comfort balances these divine attributes.

[i] This traditional phrase offered to mourners ('May you be comforted from Heaven') is explained here as having deeper significance. The word 'shamayim' (heaven) is interpreted as combining the elements of fire (esh) and water (mayim), representing the divine attributes of judgment and mercy in balance.

[ii] This refers to the halakhic status of an onen (one whose dead has not yet been buried), who is exempt from positive commandments including prayer. This exemption acknowledges the overwhelming nature of immediate grief and the mourner's need to focus on burial arrangements.

במדרש פ׳ חיי שרה על פסוק ויקם אברהם מעל פני מתו מלמד שהיה רואה מ״ה מתרים כנגדו[i] [ii]

loving-kindness, such that the supernal sources do not unify through him, and his dwelling is outside the camp of the Divine Presence, for She desires unification.[1] Therefore, the onen is exempt from all commandments stated in the Torah.[A] And it is said in the Midrash on parashat Chayei Sarah, on the verse "And Abraham rose up from before his dead," teaching that he saw the Angel of Death threatening against him.[2]

ומוכח משם שאונן פטור מכל מצות האמורות בתורה מדכתיב ויקם ואח״כ וידבר[iii] ואם ירצה האונן ליכנס למעלה בסוד עץ החיים בתפלה ותורה וברכות יערב רע שהוא בו בטוב העליון. ויכנים חול בתוך שבת ונמצא מחלל ח״ו. כי עתה ירד ללבושים תחתונים ונקרא עלה תאנה שהביאו תואנה לעולם[iv] ועל דרך זה אמרו

And it is proven from there that an onen [one whose dead relative has not yet been buried] is exempt from all the commandments stated in the Torah, as it is written "and he arose" and afterward "and he spoke." And if the onen wishes to enter above into the mystery of the Tree of Life through prayer, Torah study, and blessings, [it would be as if] he mixed evil (which is within him) with the supernal good. He would bring the mundane into the sacred, and thus be found desecrating, God forbid. For now he has descended to lower garments and is called "fig kabbalistic understanding of 'din' as divine severity or strictness, making the mystical dimension more apparent to readers without background in Jewish mysticism.

[A] Or: "the acute mourner (onen) is exempt from all positive commandments in the Torah" — This alternative clarifies that an 'onen' is specifically an acute mourner (pre-burial) and that the exemption primarily concerns positive commandments rather than prohibitions, which provides more precise halakhic information.

[1] The original text uses the feminine form when referring to the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), which is consistently portrayed as feminine in kabbalistic literature. This reflects the kabbalistic concept of divine masculine and feminine aspects that seek unification (yichud).

[2] The Hebrew uses the abbreviation מ״ה (Mem-Heh) for מלאך המות (Malakh HaMavet/Angel of Death). This interpretation of Abraham's rising from mourning Sarah suggests that prolonged mourning can make one vulnerable to spiritual dangers.

[i] M"H (מ״ה) is an abbreviation for 'malakh ha-mavet' (מלאך המות) or Angel of Death. This midrashic interpretation of Genesis 23:3 suggests that Abraham saw the Angel of Death threatening him as he mourned Sarah, emphasizing the spiritual vulnerability of mourners.

[ii] Cf. Midrash Bamidbar Rabbah 8 — This reference establishes divine precedent for comforting mourners, showing that even God Himself performs this mitzvah. | Cf. Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer — This reference is cited to establish the significant spiritual reward associated with the mitzvah of comforting mourners. | Cf. Tractate Mo'ed Katan — The author refers to this tractate as containing the detailed halakhic framework for mourning practices, indicating that his explanations are built upon established rabbinic tradition. | Cf. Tractate Shabbat — This reference demonstrates the community's responsibility to ensure proper comfort for mourners, even organizing a minyan if needed. | Cf. Genesis 8:1 — The author interprets this verse metaphorically, comparing divine comfort after the flood to the comfort offered to mourners, suggesting both involve a transition from judgment to mercy.

[iii] This refers to Genesis 23:3, when Abraham rose up from before his dead (Sarah) and then spoke to the Hittites, implying that only after completing the mourning ritual could he engage in speech (symbolizing the Torah).

[iv] This is a wordplay on the Hebrew 'te'enah' (fig) and 'to'anah' (pretext/excuse), connecting the fig leaves of Adam and Eve (Genesis 3:7) with the spiritual state of mourning as a kind of 'pretense' that disrupts the normal spiritual order.

החכמים בטעם למה נמנע אכילת
עץ החיים לאדם הראשון אחר
שנתלבש בתנות עור ונתפשט
מכתנות אור[i] מלבד מה שדרשנו
בזה למעלה. ומטעם הנזכר
פטרו האבל מד״ת כי היא סוד
עץ החיים שבתוך הגן. ואמרי׳
במדרש רבה פ׳ צ״ח[ii] שאין
אבל נכנס בפלטרין של מלך
לכן לא נכנס יוסף בפלטרין
של פרעה במיתת אביו. וישב
בדד וידום מד״ת ותפלה בהיותו
באנינותו יען כי מטפל בכחות
הדין לצורך מתו כי האונן הוא
למטה מעלמא דדכורא ומעלמא
דנוקבא וכמעט מתאחד באינון
עבדים שהם מסטרא אחרא דאין
בהם מצות ואפי׳ עבד כנעני
שהוא בסנדלפון פטור מכמה
מצות כל שכן מרכבות שלמטה
ממנו. ומלת אונן הוא מקום
האנינות ממשלת הלילה על
כן כתיב באונן ותקרא בתי״ו
שהוא עולם הנקבה וכן פרץ
היה מצד אונן רמז שהלבנה
פרוצה. ברם אחר שקבר מתו
סליק מאתר דפגימו לעלמא
דנוקבא ונקרא אבל אבל אונן
אינו מברך כי טוב עין הוא ראוי
לברך ואינו מזמן דאין בו כח
להמשיך מעתיק ששם רמז הזימון
ואינו אוכל בשר שמשם שכר
כנזכר ואינו שותה יין פן יעורר
היין המשכר כי מאכילת דברים

leaf," which brought pretense to the world. And in this way the Sages explained why eating from the Tree of Life was prevented for Adam after he was clothed in "garments of skin" and stripped of "garments of light," beyond what we have expounded on this above. And for the reason mentioned, they exempted the mourner from words of Torah, for they are the mystery of the Tree of Life in the midst of the garden. And it says in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 98, that a mourner does not enter the palace of the king, therefore Joseph did not enter Pharaoh's palace upon his father's death. And he "sits alone and is silent" from words of Torah and prayer while in his acute mourning state, since he is engaged with the forces of judgment for the sake of his deceased, for the onen is below the masculine realm[A] and the feminine realm,[1] and almost unites with those servants who are from the Other Side, in which there are no commandments. Even a Canaanite slave, who corresponds to [the angel] Sandalfon, is exempt from several commandments, all the more so the chariots below him. And the word "onen" refers to the place of mourning, the dominion of night, therefore concerning Onan it is written "and she called" with the letter tav, which represents the feminine world, and similarly Peretz was from Onan's side, hinting that the moon is breached. However, after he has buried his dead, he ascends from the place of deficiency to the feminine realm and is called "avel" [mourner]. But an onen does not recite blessings, for though "the generous of eye is fit to bless," he does not join in the zimmun [invitation to grace after meals][2] because he lacks the power to draw down from the Ancient One, which is alluded to in the

[A] Or: "the masculine spiritual world" — Adding 'spiritual' might clarify that this isn't simply referring to a physical or gendered space, but to a kabbalistic concept representing a specific metaphysical domain.

[1] In Kabbalistic cosmology, reality is divided into various spiritual levels. The 'masculine realm' (עלמא דדכורא) represents active divine energy associated with giving, while the 'feminine realm' (עלמא דנוקבא) represents receptive divine energy. For the onen to be below both suggests an extremely low spiritual state, disconnected from normal divine influence.

[2] Zimmun is the formal invitation to recite grace after meals when three or more adult Jewish males have eaten together. The text connects this ritual to drawing down divine energy from 'the Ancient One' (עתיק), a reference to one of the highest divine configurations in Kabbalah.

[i] This refers to the rabbinic tradition that before the sin, Adam and Eve wore 'garments of light' (spiritual bodies), but after sinning, they were given 'garments of skin' (physical bodies). The Hebrew words differ only in their initial letter: אור (light) versus עור (skin).

[ii] This refers to Genesis Rabbah, chapter 98, which discusses Jacob's death and Joseph's mourning.

אלו יתלבש יותר ויותר בכחות
הגבורה ונקרא אונן מלשון בן
אוני שכמעט מדובק בכהן און
שהוא עושר[i] פי׳ בבחינה מצד
שמאל שמור לבעליו לרעתו וזהו
ויאמר אפרים אך עשרתי מצאתי
און לי פי׳ שהגביר כחו של עגלי
ירבעם ואמרי׳ בזהר שבעגל
שעשו ישראל[ii] נכלל כל כח שהיו
בשני עגלי ירבעם אחד מהם היה
בחינת הזכר של הקליפה והאחד
בחינת הנקבה הטמאה יותר.
ויירידת האונן לדיוטא התחתונה
זו הוא דוקא בחול בעוד שמתו
מוטל לפניו. ואילו יכול לישן
על גבי מטה כי ה[iii]יא מובנת
ליחוד. רק בפויה שהוא מושפע
מהאחורים לא מהפנים [iv]

zimmun. And he does not eat meat, which is from there [the spiritual source of] reward as mentioned, and he does not drink wine lest the intoxicating wine arouse [judgment], for from eating these things he would become more and more clothed in the forces of Gevurah [Strength/Judgment].[1] And he is called "onen" from the expression "ben oni" [son of my suffering], as he is almost attached to the priest of On, which refers to wealth—that is, in the aspect from the left side that is kept for its owner to his detriment. And this is [the meaning of] "And Ephraim said: I have indeed become rich, I have found wealth [on] for myself," meaning that he strengthened the power of Jeroboam's calves. And it says in the Zohar that in the calf that Israel made[2] was included all the power that was in Jeroboam's two calves—one of them was the male aspect of the kelipah [negative force], and the other was the female aspect, which is even more impure. And this descent of the onen to this lowest level occurs specifically during weekdays while his dead is laid out before him.[A] And although

[A] Or: "his deceased is still unburied" — While the literal translation is accurate, 'מוטל לפניו' is

[1] Gevurah is one of the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah, representing God's strength, judgment, and discipline. In the context of mourning, excessive connection to Gevurah without the balancing force of Chesed (Loving-kindness) is considered spiritually dangerous.

[2] This refers to two different incidents of calf worship in Jewish history: the Golden Calf in the wilderness (Exodus 32) and the two calves set up by King Jeroboam I after the division of the kingdom (1 Kings 12:28-29). The text suggests a mystical connection between these two events.

[i] This refers to Potiphera, priest of On (Genesis 41:45), whose name is interpreted as relating to wealth (און can be read as 'on', a city, or as 'wealth'). The text creates a connection between this priest and the spiritual state of an onen.

[ii] This references Zoharic teaching that the Golden Calf made in the wilderness (Exodus 32) contained the same negative spiritual forces later embodied in Jeroboam's two calves (1 Kings 12:28-29), which split the kingdom of Israel.

[iii] The overturned bed is a traditional sign of mourning in Jewish practice, symbolizing the disruption of normal life and the reversal of joy.

[iv] Cf. Sefer Ha-Zohar — The text references Zoharic teaching about how the Golden Calf contained the spiritual powers later manifested in Jeroboam's two calves. This connects the sin of idolatry with the spiritual state of an onen, suggesting that both represent an improper mixing of realms. | Cf. Genesis 3:7 — The reference to 'fig leaf' (עלה תאנה) alludes to Adam and Eve's first coverings after their sin, creating a parallel between their spiritual descent and the state of an onen who has temporarily descended to a lower spiritual level. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, earlier section — The author refers to an earlier explanation ('מלבד מה שדרשנו בזה למעלה') about Adam's transformation from wearing 'garments of light' to 'garments of skin', which serves as a metaphor for the onen's temporary spiritual descent. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah Genesis 98 — This reference to Joseph's behavior during mourning for Jacob serves as a biblical precedent for the halakhic concept that mourners should not enter places of honor or authority. | Cf. Genesis 35:18 — The text draws a connection between the term 'onen' and 'ben oni' (son of my suffering) from Rachel's naming of Benjamin, suggesting that the mourner's state is one of suffering and connection to death. | Cf. Genesis 38:1-10 — The text makes a wordplay between the halakhic term 'onen' and the biblical character Onan, suggesting that both represent a form of spiritual deficiency related to improper sexual/spiritual energy.

he could sleep on a bed, for it is prepared for unification, [it must be] overturned, for he is influenced by the "back" aspects, not the "face" aspects.[1] 160R

150 אבל בשבת ויום טוב כח ההנהגה
הקדושה המתגלית ביום ההוא
תגין עליו לבל ירד פלאים: ולכן
אין לעסוק בצרכי מתו בשבת
ואפי׳ ביום טוב ראשון הוא על
155 ידי עממים וחייב בכל מצות
האמורות בתורה אך בתשמיש
המטה שהוא בחינת היחוד
בעצמו יש אומרים שאינו כדאי
לכך ואסרוהו לו ואחר שהעלה
160 מתו למקום מנוחתו כובע ישועה
על ראשו וחייב בכל המצות
אך אינו ראוי לאכילת קדשים
שהוא לעורר בחותיהם עליו
וליהנות מזיום ביחוד הפנימי
165 של אברים פנימיים בחדרי בטן
ורזי עולם ותעלומות סתרי
כל חי סוד הנשמה המחיה הכל
אין כח להראות בעצמו כך
עד יעבור עליו יום המר שהוא
170 יום ראשון ממיתה וקבורה
ופי׳ הסבא בפ׳ משפטים דף
ק״א ע״ב דקדש הוא מעלמא
דדכורא שהוא מיסוד ולמעלה
קדוש הוא ומסתלק לעיל והאבל
175 ביום ראשון משבעת ימי אבלו
הוא בעלמא דנוקבא ובגין
דלית ליה מגרמיה כלום אוכל
מלחם הנשפע לו מאחרים ואם
עבר יום ראשון ולא אכל כגון
180 שמתענה כיון דאידחת ההבראה
אידחת שנתעלה לסוד עלמא
דדכורא: וזה יהיה גם כן טעם
שפטור מהנחת תפלין[i] כי איך

But on the Sabbath and festivals, the power of the sacred governance that is revealed on that day protects him so that he does not descend to the depths. Therefore, one should not attend to the needs of one's deceased on the Sabbath, and even on the first 165R day of a festival this is done through gentiles. He is obligated in all the commandments stated in the Torah, except for marital relations, which is itself an aspect of unification. Some say he is not worthy of this and have forbidden it to him. 170R

After he has brought his deceased to his resting place, a crown of salvation is upon his head,[2] and he is obligated in all the commandments. However, he is not fit to eat sacred foods, which would awaken their powers upon him and to enjoy their radiance 175R in the internal unification of the inner organs in the chambers of the belly, and the mysteries of the world, and the concealed secrets of all living things—the secret of the soul that vivifies everything. He lacks the power to manifest this within himself until the 180R bitter day has passed, which is the first day after death and burial.

The Elder (Sabba) explains in Parashat Mishpatim, page 101b, that "holy" (kodesh) belongs to the masculine realm, which is from Yesod and above. It 185R is sacred and ascends upward, while the mourner on the first of his seven days of mourning is in the feminine realm. And because he has nothing of his own, he eats from the bread that flows to him from others. If the first day has passed and he has not eaten, 190R such as if he is fasting, since the consolation meal has been set aside, it is set aside, and he is elevated to the secret of the masculine realm.

This will also be the reason why he is exempt a technical halakhic term referring to the status of a deceased who has not yet been buried. A slightly more explanatory translation might be clearer to readers unfamiliar with the concept.

[1] In Kabbalah, 'face' (פנים) represents direct divine influence and connection, while 'back' (אחוריים) represents indirect, diminished divine influence. The mourner's state is characterized by this reduction in direct divine connection, symbolized by sleeping on an overturned bed.

[2] The Hebrew phrase 'כובע ישועה על ראשו' (literally 'helmet of salvation on his head') is a metaphorical expression indicating that after burial, the mourner's spiritual status is elevated from the depths of mourning.

[i] The text is discussing the exemption of a mourner from wearing tefillin (phylacteries) on the first day of mourning, explaining it through kabbalistic concepts of the 'masculine' and 'feminine' realms.

יתפאר בכחות הרחמים בעלמא
185 דדכורא ועדיין הוא מלובש בדין
בעלמא דנוקבא[i] שלכן אשה
שרוצה להניח תפלין מוחין בידה
מה שאין כן בשאר מצות עשה
שפטורה מהם ומיכל בת שאול
190 שאני דבת מלך היתה.[ii] ועוד
שהיתה תוכה כברה ורמז לזה
נתנו דורשי רשומות כי מיכל
בא״ת ב״ש הוא מיכל.[iii] ועדיפת
מינה שהיתה אשת דוד. ועוד יש
195 אומרים שמנעו אותה. והמבין
סוד שער של תפלין יבין עוד
טעם לשבח למה האבל פטור
מהם ביום ראשון וכן בט״ב
שבעונותינו ירדנו פלאים
200 אין מניחין תפלין בבקר בעת
האבל. וראיתי יחידים שאינם
מונעים עצמם מתפלין לא ביום
א׳ של אבלות וגם לא בט״ב
ועיין בדברי הפוסקים בזה.
205 והמניחים ב׳ זוג תפלין מניח
ביום ט״ב תפלין של רש״י
לבד שכחן יפה להיות כסדר
כתיבתן בתורה וקבלום עליהם
רוב העולם ונמצאו על בימת
210 יחזקאל הנביא אמנם בשאר
הימים שניהם יחד טובים כפי
ההנהגות בנודע מגלוי שמר
ת״ם וראה יש״ר שהוא רש״י

from putting on tefillin, for how can he glory in 195R the powers of mercy in the masculine realm while he is still clothed in judgment in the feminine realm?[1] This is why a woman who wants to put on tefillin is prevented from doing so, unlike other positive commandments from which she is exempt. 200R Michal the daughter of Saul was different because she was a king's daughter. Furthermore, her inside was like her outside, and as a hint to this, the interpreters of symbols noted that "Michal" in Atbash is "Mich[2]al." Moreover, she was the wife of 205R David. Some also say that they prevented her from doing so.

One who understands the secret of the hair of tefillin will understand yet another reason to explain why the mourner is exempt from them on the first 210R day. Similarly, on the Ninth of Av, when because of our sins we have descended to the depths,[3] tefillin are not worn in the morning during the time of mourning. I have seen individuals who do not refrain from tefillin, neither on the first day of mourning nor on 215R the Ninth of Av. See the words of the legal authorities on this.

Those who wear two pairs of tefillin should wear only Rashi's tefillin on the Ninth of Av, as their power is appropriate to follow the order of their writ- 220R ing in the Torah. Most of the world has accepted them, and they were found on the platform of Ezekiel the prophet. However, on other days, both together are good according to the various modes of gover-

[1]This passage explains mourning practices through kabbalistic concepts of masculine (mercy) and feminine (judgment) divine attributes. The mourner exists in a state dominated by judgment (the feminine realm) rather than mercy (the masculine realm), which affects which commandments they can properly fulfill.

[2]This kabbalistic wordplay notes that Michal's name remains unchanged when encoded with the Atbash substitution cipher, where each Hebrew letter is replaced with its counterpart from the opposite end of the alphabet. This unchanging quality is interpreted as symbolizing her spiritual integrity.

[3]The Hebrew phrase 'ירדנו פלאים' (we have descended to the depths) is an allusion to Lamentations 1:9, connecting the personal mourning of an individual with the national mourning for the destruction of the Temple commemorated on the Ninth of Av.

[i]This refers to the kabbalistic concept where the 'feminine realm' (עלמא דנוקבא) is associated with judgment and restriction, while the 'masculine realm' (עלמא דדכורא) is associated with mercy and expansion.

[ii]Refers to the Talmudic tradition that Michal, daughter of King Saul and wife of King David, wore tefillin despite women generally being exempt from this commandment.

[iii]This refers to the Atbash cipher, a Hebrew substitution code where each letter is replaced with the letter symmetrically opposite it in the alphabet. The author is pointing out that Michal's name remains unchanged when encoded with Atbash, suggesting her inner and outer nature were aligned.

[iv]This refers to the two traditions of tefillin arrangement: Rashi's method and Rabbenu Tam's

ור״ת[i] וזה צריך שמוש חכמים.
וכל אלו רמזים מלבד פשוטן של
דברים הכתובים בדברי הגמרא
והפוסקים שהם אמת ותורתן
אמת ומנייהו לא נזוע ובזה
פתחנו קצת פתח לכל הדברים
האסורים לאבל והחכם יבין דעת
ויוסיף משלו כי מה ידעתי אני
הקטן אפרוח שלא נפתחו עיניו
ולא ידע כל תלמידהון דרבנן
וגם אויל מחריש חכם יחשב:[iii] [ii]

nance, as is known from the revelation that Tam observed, and Yashar saw, which is Rashi and Rabbenu Tam,[1] and this requires the instruction of sages. 225R

All these are hints beyond the plain meaning of the matters written in the words of the Talmud and legal authorities, which are true and whose Torah is true, and from them we shall not move. With this, we have opened a small doorway to all the things forbidden to a mourner, and the wise will understand knowledge and add from their own, for what do I know, I, the small one, a chick whose eyes have not yet opened and who does not know all the disciples of the rabbis? Even a silent fool may be considered wise.[2] 230R 235R

פרק ל״ה

Chapter 35

כתוב בר״מ פ׳ עקב[iv] אוקמוה
רבנן דמתני׳ שעת אכילה
שעת מלחמה.[v] וזה לפי
שהמלפתים ארחותם נגד בני
אדם[vi] להדיחם מעל ה׳ מזדמנים

It is written in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ekev, that our Rabbis of the Mishnah established that "the time of eating is the time of battle."[3] This is because those who twist their paths against mankind to lead them away from God[A] gather 5R

[A] Or: "This is because the demonic forces who corrupt their ways against humans to seduce them

[1] These refer to two different traditions for arranging the scriptural passages within tefillin (phylacteries). Some pious individuals wear both types, first Rashi's arrangement (the more common practice) and then Rabbenu Tam's arrangement.

[2] The author concludes with a self-deprecating reference to Proverbs 17:28, suggesting that his own silence on deeper matters might be wiser than attempting explanations beyond his capability.

[3] This rabbinic saying views mealtime as a spiritual battlefield where negative forces attempt to influence humans, explaining why ritual precautions are necessary during meals.

method. Some pious individuals wear both types, particularly those following kabbalistic practices.

[i] A reference to Proverbs 17:28: 'Even a fool who keeps silent is considered wise.'

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Mishpatim — The text directly quotes the Zohar's explanation about the spiritual status of mourners, specifically how they exist in the 'feminine realm' (associated with judgment) rather than the 'masculine realm' (associated with mercy). This Zoharic passage forms the theological foundation for the mourning practices discussed. | Cf. Talmud, Eruvin — The text references the Talmudic discussion about Michal daughter of Saul wearing tefillin, which was unusual since women are generally exempt from this time-bound commandment. This reference serves to illustrate exceptions to the general rules about who may appropriately wear tefillin. | Cf. Shulchan Aruch, Orach Chaim — While not directly cited, the text alludes to the halakhic discussions about mourners being exempt from tefillin on the first day, which is codified in the Shulchan Aruch. The author is providing mystical reasons for a practice established in halakhic literature. | Cf. Lamentations — The phrase 'ירדנו פלאים' (we have descended to the depths) echoes language from Lamentations, connecting personal mourning with national mourning for the destruction of the Temple, particularly relevant to the discussion of the Ninth of Av. | Cf. Proverbs — The author concludes with a direct reference to this verse ('Even a fool who keeps silent is considered wise') as a self-deprecating way to suggest that his own limitations in explaining deeper mystical concepts might make silence the wiser course.

[iii] Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd), a section of the Zohar, on the Torah portion of Ekev.

[iv] A rabbinic saying that mealtime is a time of spiritual battle against negative forces.

[v] Refers to demonic or negative spiritual forces that attempt to lead humans astray.

שם בראותם שהחומר נהנה מהעה״ז. לכן אמרו שהם בכלבים עזי נפש[i] שאינם נדחים משם בדחייה ראשונה. על כן צריך שתי הזמנות לברכה מלבד חלקם הניתן להם במים אחרונים של מקום חובה[ii] יורדים פן יערבבו שמחת הברכה שעולה ביחודה על כל שאר ברכות הנהנין על כן היא מן התורה. וכ״ש שיסולו דרכם יחד בסעודת האבל. לכן המנחמים היו מברכים ברכת רחבה[iii] להשפיע עליו ועליהם משפע רחובות הנהר[iv] המריק ברכות עד בלי די כנזכר לעיל. ולכן האבל יושב בראש[v] כדאיתא פרק אלו מגלחין[vi] מקום מוצא ההשפעה כי הוא צריך לחסד אל בעצם ובראשונה להיות החרב שלופה לקראתו ונוטל ידיו תחלה ואח״כ המנחמים. ונמצא כתוב במנהגים שהוא בוצע המוציא על הפרוסה שנותנים לפניו ומברך לעצמו ואח״כ בוצעין המנחמים לעצמן וכן מוזגין הכוס ונותנים לפניו

there, seeing that the physical body derives pleasure from this world. Therefore, they said that these [negative forces] are like brazen dogs that are not repelled by a first rejection. Thus, two invitations to blessing are required,[1] besides their portion given to them in the mayim achronim (final hand-washing) which is obligatory, lest they disturb the joy of the blessing[A] which, in its unification, rises above all other blessings over enjoyment, and is therefore ordained by the Torah. All the more so do they clear a path together at the mourner's meal. Therefore, the comforters would recite the "Blessing of Expansiveness"[B] to channel influence upon him and themselves from the abundance of "the expanses of the river" which pours forth blessings without limit, as mentioned above. This is why the mourner sits at the head[2] [of the table], as stated in chapter Elu Megalchin, at the source of divine influence, for he primarily and essentially needs God's loving-kindness, as the sword is drawn toward him.[3] He washes his hands first, and then the comforters [wash theirs].

It is written in the customs that the mourner breaks bread over the piece placed before him and says the blessing for himself, after which the comforters break bread for themselves. Similarly, they away from God" — The term 'המלפתים' could refer more specifically to demonic entities rather than general negative forces. This translation makes the supernatural element more explicit, which may better reflect the author's cosmology.

[A] Or: "lest they confuse and disrupt the joy of the blessing" — The Hebrew 'יערבבו' has connotations of mixing/confusing beyond mere disturbance, suggesting these forces create spiritual confusion that undermines the blessing's efficacy.

[B] Or: "the Rechavah blessing" — This may be referring to a specific named blessing rather than a descriptive category. Maintaining the Hebrew term with transliteration might be more precise if this is a formal title of a blessing.

[1] This refers to the custom of saying 'Rabotai nevarech' (Gentlemen, let us bless) before the Grace After Meals, which is considered an invitation that helps ward off negative spiritual forces.

[2] This reverses the normal social hierarchy, placing the mourner in the position of highest honor as a form of comfort and recognition of their need for spiritual support.

[3] A metaphorical expression indicating that the mourner is under the threat of divine judgment and therefore particularly needs divine mercy and protection.

[i] Comparing negative spiritual forces to brazen dogs, a metaphor for their persistence.

[ii] Refers to the ritual hand-washing after meals (mayim achronim), which was considered obligatory and traditionally understood as giving a portion to the 'forces of impurity'.

[iii] A special blessing of consolation recited for mourners, associated with expansiveness and divine abundance.

[iv] A kabbalistic reference to divine abundance flowing from the 'expanses of the river,' a celestial source of blessing.

[v] The custom that the mourner sits at the head of the table, unlike regular meals where the host or most distinguished guest would sit there.

[vi] Chapter 'These May Shave' in Tractate Mo'ed Katan, which deals with laws of mourning.

ומברך לעצמו ושותה ואח״כ הם מברכין לעצמן ושותים. הנה כי כוונת אכילתו ושתייתו משונה מכוונת אכילת המנחמים לזה הוא מברך לעצמו תחלה והם לעצמם ואסמכוה אקרא דכתיב אבחר דרכם ואשב ראש כאשר אבלים ינחם. ואמרו ג״כ כי מנהג שאין שותין בכוסו אלא לאחר שמדיחין אותו והבוצע בסעודת האבל שהוא דוגמא דעמודא דאמצעיתא[i] דהיא חייתא עילאה קדישא[ii] דכל שאר חיותא אחידן ביה ואשתלשלו בגוה כדאמרי׳ בפ׳ בשלח דף מ״ז ע״ב לכן הבוצע נותן פרוסה ביד האבל וזו הוא הכנה לו לנחמו מכל אחד מז׳ הבלים[iii] כי הוא מתפאר ומתאחד בתוכן כנודע. וכיון שזכה ללחם מן הארץ שהיא בתר הנקרא זאת[iv] מיוחדת עם ת״ת בזאת יבא ליכנס אל הקדש.[v] והביצה היא רמז למלכות בסוד אור החוזר כדפי׳ בתקונים הנה לחם וביצה סוד אור ישר וחוזר[vi] ע״כ הביצה היא

pour a cup and place it before him; he says the blessing for himself and drinks, and then they say the blessing for themselves and drink. Thus, the intention behind his eating and drinking differs from the intention behind the comforters' eating, which is why he blesses for himself first and they bless for themselves. They based this on the verse: "I would choose their way and sit as chief, as a king among his troops, as one who comforts mourners." 35R 40R

They also said that the custom is not to drink from his cup until it has been rinsed,[1] and that the one who breaks bread at the mourner's meal, representing the central column[A] which is the holy supernal life-force to which all other living beings are connected and from which they are extended, as stated in Parashat Beshalach, page 47b, therefore gives a piece of bread to the mourner. This prepares him to be comforted through each of the seven "breaths," for he is glorified and unified within them, as is known. Since he has merited bread from the earth,[2] which is the crown called "Zot" (This)[B] that is united with Tiferet through "bezot" (with this) to enter the holy, and the egg symbolizes Malkhut[3] in the mystery of reflected light, as explained in Tikkunim—thus bread and egg represent the mystery of direct and reflected 45R 50R 55R

[A] Or: "who is the embodiment of the central pillar" — The term 'דוגמא' suggests embodiment or manifestation rather than mere representation, indicating a stronger ontological connection between the person breaking bread and the divine attribute of Tiferet.

[B] Or: "the sefirah of Keter which is called 'Zot'" — While the translation accurately captures the meaning, this alternate more explicitly identifies 'crown' as referring to the specific sefirah of Keter in kabbalistic terminology, which might be clearer for readers less familiar with kabbalistic language.

[1] This custom reflects concerns about spiritual contamination associated with mourning, requiring purification of vessels before others use them.

[2] The author interprets bread mystically, connecting it to divine attributes and the process of spiritual elevation during the mourner's meal.

[3] The egg served at the mourner's meal is interpreted as representing Malkhut (the lowest sefirah), connected to the concept of reflected light returning upward to its divine source.

[i] In Kabbalah, this refers to Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), the central column of the sefirotic tree that balances mercy and judgment.

[ii] The holy supernal life-force, referring to the divine vitality that flows through the central column of the sefirot.

[iii] The 'seven breaths' or emanations mentioned in Ecclesiastes and interpreted in Kabbalah as divine creative forces that sustain existence.

[iv] The crown (a divine attribute) called 'Zot' (This), referring to the Shekhinah or divine presence.

[v] Allusion to Leviticus 16:3, 'With this (bezot) shall Aaron enter the sanctuary,' interpreted mystically.

[vi] The kabbalistic concept of 'direct light' (divine energy flowing downward) and 'reflected light' (energy returning upward), central to Lurianic Kabbalah.

מגולגלת ומשם עולה למדרגה יין המשמח[i] שהוא פרי מן העץ החיים.[ii] וכיון שהוציא וזכה להשפעה לחם ויין משם להיות כהן לאל עליון חסד אל[iii] ולכן נברא יין לשמח אבלים. ולהיות המנחמים עסוקים לעורר ג״ח העליונים לכן הרואים פני האבל [iv] light—therefore the egg is round. From there, he ascends to the level of wine that gladdens, which is fruit from the Tree of Life. And since he has brought forth and merited the influence of bread and wine from there, to be a priest to God Most High, the God of loving-kindness, therefore wine was created to gladden mourners.[1] And since the comforters are engaged in arousing the celestial acts of loving-kindness, those who see the face of the mourner

פטורים מן התפלה כי תקונם במקום גבוה יותר מהתעוררות התפלה. ואמרי׳ בויקרא רבה פ׳ ל״ד על פסוק ועניים מרודים תביא בית אלו אבלים ומרי נפש. ומי משמחן יין. הנה כי שפע יין המשומר והמשמח מביא בבית ומכנים להכלל בעלמא דדכורא

Those who are present with mourners are exempt from prayer because their spiritual work is taking place at a higher level than the awakening of prayer.[A][2] And it is said in Leviticus Rabbah chapter 34, on the verse "bring the poor who are cast out to your house" (Isaiah 58:7)—these refer to mourners and those of bitter spirit. And what comforts them? Wine.[B] Thus we see that the flow

[A] Or: "because their rectification occurs in a place higher than the arousal of prayer" — The term 'תקונם' (tikkunam) has kabbalistic connotations of rectification or repair of the cosmic order, which might be more precisely captured with this alternate translation.

[B] Or: "And what gladdens them? Wine" — The root ש-מ-ח specifically refers to gladness or joy rather than comfort, which would more precisely capture the midrashic interpretation.

[1] A striking theological claim that wine's purpose includes comforting mourners, giving religious significance to the custom of serving wine at consolation meals.

[2] The text establishes a hierarchical relationship between different forms of religious service, with comforting mourners ranked as spiritually superior to regular prayer. This reflects a common rabbinic prioritization of interpersonal mitzvot (commandments between humans) over ritual mitzvot (commandments between humans and God).

[i] Wine that gladdens, referencing Psalm 104:15, with mystical significance of wine as representing divine secrets and spiritual joy.

[ii] Fruit from the Tree of Life, a mystical reference connecting wine to the primordial Tree of Life in Eden.

[iii] Priest to God Most High, the God of loving-kindness, connecting the mourner's spiritual role to the biblical Melchizedek (Genesis 14:18).

[iv] Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text explicitly references the 'Tikkunim' when explaining the mystical significance of the egg at the mourner's meal, showing how ritual foods are interpreted through kabbalistic concepts of divine light patterns. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach — The text directly cites this section of the Zohar regarding the central column (Tiferet) as the source of vitality for all living beings, using it to explain the mystical significance of bread distribution at the mourner's meal. | Cf. Tractate Mo'ed Katan — The text refers to this Talmudic source for the custom of the mourner sitting at the head of the table, showing how the author grounds mystical interpretations in established halakhic texts. | Cf. Ecclesiastes — The mention of 'seven breaths' (shivah havalim) alludes to Ecclesiastes, which kabbalistic tradition interprets as divine creative forces that sustain existence, connected here to comforting the mourner. | Cf. Leviticus 16:3 — The phrase 'bezot yavo liknos el hakodesh' echoes the biblical instruction to Aaron, mystically connecting the mourner's spiritual state to the High Priest's ritual purity requirements. | Cf. Genesis 14:18 — The reference to being 'a priest to God Most High' echoes the description of Melchizedek, suggesting the mourner temporarily assumes a priestly spiritual function in the context of the ritual meal. | Cf. Book of Job 29:25 — The text explicitly cites this verse as the scriptural basis for the mourner sitting at the head of the table, showing how ritual practices are derived from biblical precedents.

האבל ומר נפש. וזה טעם ג״כ
שהעוסקים בצרכי רבים פטורים
מן התפלה[i] וכן בצרכי חתן
וכלה כנראה בפ׳ בלק בעובדא
דההוא ינוקא.[ii] וממה שכתוב
ר״מ פ׳ עקב דף רע״א ע״ב בסדר
הסבת הסעודה למארי סעודתא
דמלכא הוא כי גדול מסב בראש
תניינא תחותיה ותליתאה תחות
תניינא ואמר דאלין אתקריאו
ג׳ מטות לקבל ג׳ אבהן לקבל
כהנים לוים וישראלים[iii] ומכאן
ואילך לית להו סדר אלא כל
הקודם זכה. נ״ל ג״כ שהסדר
הזה הוא במנחמי האבל שאחר
הג׳ מנחמים הראשונים איש
כפי מדרגתו כל הקודם זכה
משם ואילך וכן יהיה ברחיצת
ידי האבל בסוד אם רחץ ה׳
את צואת בנות ציון שכל א׳
מתכוין לעשות ג״ח זה לו והכל
הוא להבריח מעל ידיו כחות
ששורות בו כי האצבעות הם
התפשטות הכחות עד למרחק עד
אחיזתם סמוך לחצונים[iv] לכן קרובה הקליפה להתאחז שם

of the preserved and gladdening wine brings into the house and enables the mourner and the bitter of spirit to be included in the masculine realm.[A1] This is also the reason why those engaged in communal needs are exempt from prayer, as well as those 80R attending to the needs of a bride and groom, as appears in Parashat Balak in the story of that child. And from what is written in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ekev, page 271b, regarding the order of reclining at a feast for the master of the king's feast: 85R the greatest reclines at the head, the second beneath him, and the third beneath the second. And it states that these are called the "three couches," corresponding to the three Patriarchs and to the priests, Levites, and Israelites. Beyond these, there 90R is no set order—rather, whoever comes first merits the position.

It seems to me that this order also applies to those who comfort mourners—after the first three comforters, each according to his rank, whoever comes 95R first merits the position thereafter.[2] And so it should be with the washing of the mourner's hands, in the mystical sense of "when the Lord has washed away the filth of the daughters of Zion" (Isaiah 4:4), as each person intends to perform this act of kindness 100R for him. The whole purpose is to drive away from [A] Or: "to be incorporated into the masculine world" — The kabbalistic term 'עלמא דדכורא' refers to the masculine cosmic dimension in Lurianic Kabbalah, which could be translated as 'world' rather than 'realm' to maintain the cosmic dimension implied.

[1] The Hebrew 'עלמא דדכורא' (alma de-dikhura) is a kabbalistic term referring to the masculine aspect of divinity, associated with mercy and giving. The text suggests that wine helps elevate mourners from the 'feminine realm' (associated with judgment and receptivity) to the 'masculine realm' (associated with mercy and giving), which represents spiritual elevation and comfort.

[2] The text establishes a system where the first three positions follow a strict hierarchical order, but positions beyond these are assigned on a first-come basis. This principle is then applied both to seating arrangements at meals and to the order of comforting mourners.

[i] This refers to the halakhic principle that those engaged in one mitzvah are exempt from another mitzvah. Here it specifically indicates that those who are comforting mourners, attending to communal needs, or attending to wedding preparations are exempt from regular prayer obligations because they are already engaged in an important mitzvah.

[ii] This refers to a story in the Zohar where a child (yanuka) offers mystical interpretations. The text is referencing a specific narrative in the Zohar on Parashat Balak where exemption from regular prayer obligations is discussed.

[iii] This establishes a correspondence between the three highest positions at a meal with both the three Patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob) and the three divisions of the Jewish people (Kohanim, Leviim, and Israelites). Such correspondences between mundane practices and cosmic structures are typical of kabbalistic thinking.

[iv] This presents the kabbalistic view that fingers are physical extensions of spiritual forces that reach outward toward the boundary with negative spiritual forces (chitzonim). This explains why hands and fingers are particularly vulnerable to spiritual impurity and require ritual washing.

וכו׳ ובישמעאל ידו בכל ויד
כל בו[i] והצפרנים הם הקליפות
שהם מותרי הכבוד[ii] ולכן צואה
שתחת הצפורן חוצץ בטבילה
שנראה טובל ושרץ בידו. ומה גם
שלא כנגד הבשר שאז הטומאה
היא במקום המותרות מכל וכל:
ולפי שכשאדם ישן ביציאת
נשמתו רוח טומאה שורה על
גופו[iii] ומטמאו כמו שבמותו רוח
רעה וטומאה שורה עליו אך
בחזרת נשמתו לו מתעברת ההיא
זוהמא מגופו ונשארת בידים
לבד והם עדיין מתות במיתה
וטומאה. על כן אין לברך בידים
מסואבות מפני שהטומאה נוטלת
חלקה מהברכה ח״ו והנשמה
מתפשטת בתוך המיתה. ובזה
יצא לנו טעם לשבח רחיצת ידי
האבל שכל הטומאה והרוחות
נאספו בידיו. לכן מנהג לשפוך
כל המים שבכלי אחר שנטל
ידו מהם[iv] כדאמרי׳ במים של
שחרית. ובכח מי חסד שיריקו
עלידיו יתפרדו כל פועלי און
ומה טוב להריק עליו המים בג׳
פעמים דלא גרע מנט״י שחרית
דבת מלך היא ומקפדת עד ג׳
פעמים. ואינה רוח בעלמא כמו
ידים המטונפות מבית הכסא.
ולכן שופכים אותם המים במקום
מדרון החוצה לרוחות הפורחות
כי בזה בעלי החובה יקחו חלקם

his hands the forces that dwell within them, for the fingers are the extension of spiritual powers reaching outward to the point where they can almost grasp the external forces. Therefore, the negative shell (kelipah) is close to attaching itself there, etc. Regarding Ishmael, it is written "his hand will be against everyone, and everyone's hand against him" (Genesis 16:12). The fingernails are the shells (kelipot) which are the excess of honor, and therefore excrement under the fingernail creates a barrier during ritual immersion, as it appears that one is immersing while holding an unclean creature.[1] This is especially true when it is not against the flesh, for then the impurity is entirely in the place of excess.

Because when a person sleeps and his soul departs, a spirit of impurity rests upon his body and defiles it, just as at death an evil spirit and impurity rest upon him. But when his soul returns to him, that contamination passes from his body and remains only in the hands, which are still "dead" with death and impurity. Therefore, one should not recite blessings with defiled hands, because the impurity takes its portion from the blessing, God forbid, and the soul spreads within death. This explains the commendable practice of washing the mourner's hands, for all the impurity and spirits gather in his hands. Therefore, the custom is to pour out all the water in the vessel after he has washed his hands with it, as we say regarding the morning hand-washing. Through the power of the waters of kindness poured over his hands, all workers of iniquity will be scattered.[2] And it is good to pour the water over him three times, for this is [1] This connects a practical halakhic ruling (that dirt under fingernails invalidates ritual immersion) with a kabbalistic interpretation involving the concept of kelipot (negative spiritual forces). The text views the physical world as reflecting and embodying spiritual realities.

[2] The text uses the phrase 'waters of kindness' (mei chesed) to describe the water used in hand-washing, suggesting that the physical act has metaphysical effects in dispersing negative spiritual forces. This reflects the kabbalistic view that physical rituals affect spiritual realms.

[i] The text cites Genesis 16:12 about Ishmael, whose name contains the Hebrew word for hand (yad), as a prooftext for the concept that hands can be problematic from a spiritual perspective.

[ii] The fingernails are described as 'shells' or 'husks' (kelipot), which in Kabbalah refers to external coverings that can harbor negative spiritual forces. They are called 'excess of honor' (moterei ha-kavod) because they represent the outermost extension of the human form.

[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that during sleep, the higher aspects of the soul temporarily leave the body, allowing a 'spirit of impurity' to rest upon it. This is why hand-washing upon awakening (netilat yadayim) is required before prayer or Torah study.

[iv] This describes the custom of discarding water used for washing a mourner's hands, based on the concept that the water absorbs spiritual impurity. A similar practice is observed with the water used for the morning hand-washing ritual.

ויתרחקו מעל האבל. ואין לערב
135 מים במים פן יחזקו מוסרותם
כי פיזור לרשעים הנאה לעולם
ובזה יבושו ויחתו מגבורתם.
ועוד הג׳ פעמים ירמזו לג׳
הנהגות שיחדו יהיו תמים להריק
140 עליו שפע שבע רצון ע״כ מנהג
לעשות חסד זה ע״י גדולים
המנחמים. וגם בזה נאמר כי
מהג׳ ראשונים ואילך אין להם
סדר כי כשנעמיק בדברי ר״מ
145 בטעם שנתן לדבריו. סדר זה
יהיה בנין אב בכל מקום שיש
רבים ונכבדים וגם שבנטילת
ידים שבסוף הסעודה פסק
מהרר״י קארו בסי׳ קפ״א שכיון
150 שלא נשארו אלא ה׳ מהמסובין
שלא נטלו ידיהם באחרונה אז
נוטל המברך ולא שמר שם הסדר
מר״מ מהג׳ כבר כתבו הטעם
שהוא מפני עיון הד׳ ברכות
155 של ברהמ״ז כמתבאר שם: ברם
בעליית ס״ת יש סדר אפי׳ אחר
כהן לוי ישראל מפני שהס״ת הוא
דיוקנא דזעיר והוא במקום הג׳
מטות ששם יש סדר. לכן אמרו
160 אחריהם מי קורא וכו׳ בדאיתא
במס׳ מגילה. ושם בר״מ פי׳ כי
ידים מזוהמות [i]

no less important than the morning hand-washing, 135R which is like a king's daughter who insists on three pourings. This is not merely a mundane spirit, like hands soiled from the bathroom. Therefore, the water is poured out in a downward-sloping place outside, toward the flying spirits, for in this way the 140R liable entities will take their portion and distance themselves from the mourner. One should not mix water with water, lest their bonds be strengthened, for the scattering of the wicked benefits the world, and by this they will be ashamed and dismayed 145R from their strength.[1] Furthermore, the three pourings allude to three forms of divine governance which together will be perfect in pouring upon him an abundance of satisfied will.[2] Therefore, it is the custom to perform this kindness through the 150R prominent comforters.

And in this matter too, we say that from the first three onward, there is no set order, for when we delve deeply into the words of Ra'aya Mehemna and the reason he gave for his words, this order will serve as 155R a fundamental principle in every place where there are many distinguished people. Also, regarding the hand-washing at the end of the meal, Rabbi Joseph Karo ruled in section 181 that when only five of those reclining remain who have not washed their hands 160R at the end, then the one who will recite the blessing washes, without keeping the order from Ra'aya Mehemna from the three. The reason has already been explained—it is due to the contemplation of [1] This instruction not to mix waters from different hand-washings reflects a concern that the impurity absorbed by the water might be strengthened rather than dissipated if waters are combined. The phrase 'scattering of the wicked benefits the world' (pizur laresha'im hana'ah la'olam) is a rabbinic principle applied here to spiritual forces.

[2] The threefold pouring of water is given cosmic significance, corresponding to the three primary modes of divine governance in kabbalistic thought: chesed (loving-kindness), din (judgment), and rachamim (mercy). Together, these create a balanced flow of divine blessing.

[i] Cf. Isaiah 58:7 — The author uses this biblical verse as interpreted in Leviticus Rabbah to establish that mourners require special care and hospitality, which explains why attending to them takes precedence over regular prayer obligations. | Cf. Leviticus Rabbah Chapter 34 — The author cites this midrash to establish that wine has special significance for comforting mourners, which is then given a kabbalistic interpretation about elevating mourners from the feminine to the masculine cosmic realm. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna on Parashat Ekev — The author uses this kabbalistic text to establish ritual precedent for the order of comforting mourners, suggesting that mystical principles from meal protocols apply to mourning practices as well. | Cf. Isaiah 4:4 — The author interprets hand-washing for mourners as a physical ritual with cosmic significance, drawing a parallel between the purification of Jerusalem described in Isaiah and the purification of the mourner through the hand-washing ritual. | Cf. Genesis 16:12 — The author uses this biblical verse to illustrate the concept that hands can be spiritually problematic, connecting Ishmael's adversarial nature with the kabbalistic concept that hands can be vulnerable to negative spiritual forces.

the four blessings of Grace After Meals, as explained there. However, for the Torah reading, there is an order even after the Cohen, Levi, and Israelite, because the Torah scroll is the image of Zeir Anpin[A] and stands in place of the three couches where there is order.[1] Therefore, they said after them "who reads," etc., as appears in Tractate Megillah. And there in Ra'aya Mehemna it explains that defiled hands

פסולות לברכה דאינון שניות לטומא׳.[i] וכד אינון טהורו׳ אינון שניות לברכה[ii] דברכה לא שריא אלא על טהרה והכהן שהוא איש טהור איש חסד. שריא עליה ברכתא ואמרו כל כהן המברך מתברך.[iii] ומאשר הצענו נבין ג״כ טעם לנטילת ידים אחר קבורת המת[iv] כאשר יתבאר במקומו עוד. וכן לכל הדברים דאמור רבנן דצריכים נטילה אשר הביאם מהרר״י קארו בסימן

Hands that are defiled[2] are unfit for blessing as they are secondary to impurity.[B] And when they are pure, they are secondary to blessing,[C] for blessing rests only upon purity, and the priest, who is a pure man,[3] a man of kindness—blessing rests upon him.[D] And they said: "Any priest who blesses is himself blessed." From what we have presented, we can also understand the reason for washing hands after the burial of the dead, as will be explained in its proper place further on. And so too for all the matters that our Rabbis said require washing, which were brought by Rabbi Joseph Karo[4] in Section 4.

[A] Or: "the likeness of Zeir Anpin" — The term 'דיוקנא' in kabbalistic texts often carries the specific meaning of 'likeness' or 'configuration' rather than simply 'image', which better captures its technical meaning in this context.

[B] Or: "second-degree carriers of impurity" — This alternative more explicitly conveys the technical halakhic concept of 'second-degree impurity' (sheni l'tumah), which refers to objects or hands that have become impure through contact with something that was itself impure.

[C] Or: "vessels for blessing" — This alternative may better convey the intended meaning that hands serve as conduits or instruments through which blessing flows, rather than being the source of blessing themselves.

[D] Or: "divine blessing dwells upon him" — This alternative captures the mystical connotation of 'sharia' (dwelling/resting) in kabbalistic contexts, suggesting the indwelling of divine presence rather than just a beneficial state.

[1] The text connects the priority system for Torah reading aliyot with kabbalistic concepts. 'Zeir Anpin' (the 'Small Face' or 'Lesser Countenance') is a kabbalistic term for a configuration of six divine attributes that serve as a mediating force between the higher divine realms and our world.

[2] The original text begins mid-sentence, continuing a discussion about ritually impure hands.

[3] In Jewish tradition, priests (kohanim) are associated with the divine attribute of Chesed (loving-kindness) and are required to maintain higher levels of ritual purity.

[4] Rabbi Joseph Karo (1488-1575) was the author of the Shulchan Aruch, the most widely accepted code of Jewish law. The text references his compilation of situations requiring hand washing.

[i] This term refers to a second-degree ritual impurity in Jewish law. The concept is that certain impurities can be transferred through multiple stages, with each stage being a lower level of impurity.

[ii] This creates a parallel structure with 'secondary to impurity,' suggesting that hands have a similar relationship to blessing as they do to impurity—they are vessels or conduits rather than the primary source.

[iii] A Talmudic saying (Sotah 38b) that refers specifically to the Priestly Blessing, stating that a priest who blesses the people will himself be blessed.

[iv] This refers to the Jewish practice of washing hands after attending a burial, a ritual purification that serves as a transition from the realm of death back to the realm of life.

175 [ii] [i] :ד׳

פרק ל״ו

Chapter 36

פה יתבאר למה נחום אבלים הוא בברכת המזון[iii] ולא בתפלה או במקום אחר ואמרי׳ במדרש ויקרא רבה פ׳ כ״ג ר׳ יונה הוה מליף לתלמידיו ברכת אבלים אמר הוה גברין בהם.[iv] ממה שמתבאר בפ׳ ויקהל הודיע לנו כי בשעת ברכת המזון הוא עת שמחה ורצון[v] דאמר מאן דמבריך לקודשא בריך הוא מגו שבעא בעי לשואה רעותיה בחדוה ולא ישתכח עציב וכמה דהוא מברך בחדוה ובעינא טבא הכי יהבין ליה בחדוה ובעינא טבא ובגין כך לא ישתכח עציב כלל אלא בחדוה ובמלין דאורייתא וישוי רעותיה למיהב ברכה לאתר דאצטריך דארבע רתיכין שלטין בארבע סטרין אתזנו מההיא ברכתא דשבעא[vi] ומאינון מלין דברוך אתה אתהני ואתרבי ואתדכי בהו.

Here it will be explained why comforting mourners occurs during Grace After Meals (Birkat HaMazon) and not during prayer or elsewhere. In Midrash Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 23, it is stated that Rabbi Yonah would teach his students the blessing for 5R mourners, saying, “Be men in them.” From what is explained in Parashat Vayakhel,[1] we learn that the time of the Grace After Meals is a time of joy and divine favor, as it states: “One who blesses the Holy One, blessed be He, after being satisfied 10R should direct their intention with joy and should not be found sad. And just as one blesses with joy and a good eye, so too will they receive in return with joy and a good eye. Therefore, one should not be found sad at all, but rather joyful 15R and engaged in words of Torah, and should direct their intention to bestow blessing where it is needed. The four celestial chariots that govern the four directions[2] are nourished from that blessing of satisfaction, and from those words of ‘Blessed are 20R
You,’ they benefit, increase, and are purified. On weekdays, they benefit from those words that ascend

[1] The text refers to a section of the Zohar (the primary text of Jewish mysticism) on the Torah portion Vayakhel. This is not the biblical text itself but the mystical commentary on it.

[2] This refers to a kabbalistic concept where four angelic forces (sometimes associated with the four archangels: Michael, Gabriel, Raphael, and Uriel) govern the four directions of the universe and channel divine energy.

[i] This refers to section 4 of the Shulchan Aruch (Code of Jewish Law), which lists various situations requiring ritual hand washing.

[ii] Cf. Ma’avar Yabok — This passage refers to a later section in Ma’avar Yabok that discusses ritual purification after contact with the dead in greater detail, showing how the author structured the work with internal cross-references. | Cf. Talmud Sotah 38b — The phrase ‘any priest who blesses is himself blessed’ is a direct quote from this Talmudic passage, which discusses the reciprocal nature of blessing. | Cf. Shulchan Aruch — The reference to ‘Section 4’ points to the specific part of Rabbi Joseph Karo’s code of Jewish law that enumerates situations requiring ritual hand washing. | Cf. Zohar — The kabbalistic conception that ‘blessing rests only upon purity’ reflects numerous Zoharic teachings about the relationship between ritual purity and divine influence.

[iii] The opening phrase signals this is a thematic section explaining the mystical reasons why the consolation of mourners occurs specifically during the Grace After Meals rather than during other prayer services.

[iv] The original Hebrew refers to a somewhat obscure saying of Rabbi Yonah who taught his disciples about the blessing for mourners, telling them to ‘be men in them’ (possibly meaning to be strong or show appropriate dignity in performing these rituals).

[v] The Hebrew terms ‘simcha v’ratzon’ (joy and favor/will) are technical terms in Kabbalah referring to a state of spiritual receptivity when divine influence flows more freely.

[vi] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar describes how the ‘four chariots ruling in the four directions’ receive nourishment from the blessing over food. These ‘chariots’ (merkavot/retichin) refer to angelic forces that govern different aspects of creation.

ובחול אתהני מגו אינון מלין
דסלקין מגו שבעא וכלהו שבעין
ורוון בחידו. בשבת אתהני
ממזונא ממש ובההוא חדוה
דמזונא דמצוה: ולכן טוב עין
הוא יברך וינחם בברכת הטוב
והמטיב שהוא סוף התפשטות
הברכה במלכות[i] מלבד מה
שהופיע עליו רחמים גדולים
בברכת המזון שנברך שאכלנו
משלו הוא בעלמא עילאה דלא
ידיע ואין שם תפיסה לכן מדבר
שלא לנוכח דמזוני ממזלא
עילאה נינהו ואוצרם הוא
בהוד[ii] כנודע ושם אמר נברך
וברוך מנחם אבלים שאכלנו
משלו ובזה יתברך ויתנחם
מבחינת הראש והסוף ואמרו
כי המברך ברכת המזון ברצון
ובשמחת הלב בשמסתלק מן
העולם מקום מתוקן לו למעלה
בסוד עליון בהיכלות קדושות
ולכן אמרו כי גדול מברך.
וכהן ת״ח לו נאה לברך להיותו
מצד החסד כי כן צד ימין מוכן
להאיר לעולם. ולכן הכהן מוכן
לברך מעלה ומטה ובעת ברכת
כהנים ברכות מהמקור העליון
מדליקין הנרות ומאירים כל
הפנים וכנסת ישראל מתעטרת

from satisfaction, and all are satisfied and saturated with joy. On the Sabbath, they benefit from the actual food and from the joy of the food of the commandment." 25R

Therefore, one with a good eye will bless and comfort during the blessing of "Who is good and does good" (HaTov VehaMeitiv), which is the final extension of blessing into Malkhut[1] (Kingdom). This is in addition to the great mercy that shines upon him during the Grace After Meals when we say "let us bless the One from whose bounty we have eaten," which refers to the supernal world that is not known and cannot be grasped. For this reason, we speak in the third person rather than directly addressing God, because sustenance comes from the supernal mazal[2] (celestial influence), and its storehouse is in Hod[3] (Splendor), as is known. And there we say, "Let us bless" and "Blessed is the One who comforts mourners, from whose bounty we have eaten." Through this, the mourner receives blessing and comfort from both the beginning and the end of the prayer. 30R 35R 40R

It is said that one who recites the Grace After Meals with willingness and joy of heart, when they depart from this world, a place is prepared for them above in the supernal mystery, in the holy chambers. Therefore, they said that the most distinguished person should lead the blessing. And a learned priest (kohen talmid chacham)[4] is most fitting to bless, since he is from the side of Chesed[5] (Loving- 45R 50R

[1] In Kabbalah, Malkhut (Kingdom) is the tenth and lowest of the divine emanations (sefirot), representing God's presence in the physical world. This blessing is seen as completing the circuit of divine energy through all the sefirot.

[2] In kabbalistic thought, 'mazal' here doesn't refer to fortune or luck as in common usage, but to a high spiritual source that channels divine abundance. Specifically, it often refers to the influence flowing from the sefirah of Binah (Understanding).

[3] Hod (Splendor) is the eighth of the ten divine emanations (sefirot) in Kabbalah. The text identifies it as the spiritual storehouse for sustenance, representing the divine attribute that channels abundance to the physical world.

[4] The original text uses the abbreviation 't"ch' for 'talmid chacham' (Torah scholar). The author argues that a priest who is also a Torah scholar is especially suited to lead the blessing because he combines both ritual status (priesthood) and spiritual wisdom.

[5] In Kabbalah, priests (kohanim) are associated with the divine attribute of Chesed (Loving-kindness), which is positioned on the right side of the kabbalistic Tree of Life diagram. This explains their suitability for blessing others.

[i] The text refers to Malkhut (Kingdom), the lowest of the ten divine sefirot in Kabbalah, which represents the divine presence in the material world. The blessing 'HaTov VehaMeitiv' is described as the final extension of divine blessing into this lowest sefirah.

[ii] This is a kabbalistic teaching that sustenance comes from the 'supernal mazal' (a high spiritual source) and is stored in the sefirah of Hod (Splendor). This reflects the belief that physical sustenance has spiritual sources in higher worlds.

בעטרות עליונים. ואמרי׳ שבכל
מקום שתשרה השפעת הימין
עין הרע אינו שולט בו וכל
ברכת המזון הוא בימין ואין
שטן ואין פגע רע לבן מנחמים
האבל בו וצריך לומר בברכת
המזון וקידוש והבדלה ובברכת
אירוסין ונשואין סברי מרנן והם
עונין לחיים להורות כי נקשרים
באילן החיים יין המשמח לא
באילן דמות שהוא גפן שחטא בה
אדם הראשון[i] כך כתוב בתקון
כ״ד: ושמעתי הטעם שהוא לפי
שהיו משברים בקורט לבונה
שמשימים תוך היין למי שהיה
חייב מיתת ב״ד[ii] אחר שהתודה
כדכתיב תנו שכר לאובד וגו׳
ובהשקות אותו היו אומרים סבר
מרנן והם עונין למיתה. ואולי
יהיה זה לשאול למחייבי׳ אם
עדיין עומדים בטעמם לחייבו
כי אם מצאו לו זכות פטרוהו.
והם משיבים כי בשמועתם
עומדים. ולכן עתה עונין לחיים.
עוד נאמר כי ברשות רבותי
שאומרים קודם המוציא וכן
סברי שאומרים על היין להיותו
באמצע הסעודה הוא מדבר עם
כחות הקדושה המזדמנים שם
לקבל אותם ברכה[iii] ולהיות
ברכת היין חשובה על כן
מנהג להזמין השומעים תחלה
שיתקדשו לקבל רוחניות הברכה
ההיא וכבר נודע טעם שכתבו kindness), as the right side is ready to illuminate the world. Therefore, the priest is prepared to bless both above and below, and at the time of the Priestly Blessing, blessings from the supernal source cause the lamps to be lit and all faces to shine, and the Congregation of Israel is crowned with supernal crowns. 55R

It is said that wherever the influence of the right side rests, the evil eye has no power, and the entire Grace After Meals is associated with the right side, so there is no adversary and no evil occurrence. Therefore, we comfort the mourner during it. One must say before the Grace After Meals, Kiddush, Havdalah, and the blessings of betrothal and marriage, "With your permission, my masters" (Savrei Maranan), and they respond "To life" (L'chaim), indicating that they are connecting to the Tree of Life, the wine that gladdens, and not to the tree of death,[1] which is the vine that Adam sinned with, as written in Tikkun 24. 60R 65R 70R

I have heard that the reason for this is that they used to give a grain of frankincense placed in wine[2] to those condemned to death by the court after they had confessed, as it is written, "Give strong drink to the one who is perishing, etc." When giving him to drink, they would say, "With your permission, my masters," and they would respond "To death." Perhaps this was to ask the judges if they still maintained their reasoning to condemn him, for if they had found merit for him, they would have acquitted him. And they respond that they stand by their judgment. Therefore, now we respond "To life." 75R 80R

It may also be said that "With your permission, my masters" (Birshut Rabotai), which is said be- 85R

[1] This reflects a kabbalistic interpretation that identifies wine with both positive and negative spiritual potentials. When used properly in ritual contexts, wine connects to the Tree of Life; when abused, it connects to death and judgment.

[2] This refers to the Talmudic practice (Sanhedrin 43a) of giving condemned prisoners drugged wine before execution to dull their senses, which the author connects to the ritual formula used before blessing wine.

[i] This reflects a kabbalistic interpretation that identifies the forbidden fruit of the Garden of Eden as grapes/wine. The text contrasts this 'tree of death' with the 'Tree of Life,' linking the ritual response 'L'chaim' (to life) with this mystical concept.

[ii] The text describes an ancient practice of giving frankincense-infused wine to those condemned to death by the court, referring to the talmudic custom of providing intoxicating drink to dull the pain of execution.

[iii] The text explains that when saying formulas like 'Savrei Maranan' (With your permission, masters), one is actually addressing spiritual forces or angels that gather to receive the blessing, not merely the human participants.

הפוסקים על זה ומנייהו לא נזוע
והקהל עונים לחיים שרומזים
לחיות המתפשט בספירות
דעלמא דדכורא[i] וברשות רבותי
המסובין עונין ברשות שמים גם
הם מאמתים שצריך ליטול רשות
מהכתות העליונים ולהזמינם
שיבואו לענות אמן אחר הברכה
והקדושה ההיא ולהריחה ריח
ניחוח לה׳. ועל הפת שהוא
מן הארץ מקום תחלת הכניסה
לקדושה אומרים ברשות רבותי
ושם הוא סוד שפע הנקרא אכילה
כי בהתעוררותם מסלקין ומעלין
שפע לרעים דלא מתפרשן
לעלמין[ii] ועל היין שמקורו
מן סוד עץ החיים אומרים
סברי מרנן דסבי עצה וטעמא
וסברא[iii] ומשם ממעלה למטה
יורד השפע לדודין תהאין[iv] וזהו
שתו ושכרו דודים וזה יהיה
לדעתי כוונת האומר מרשים
על הפת וסברין על היין ובעל
הלבושים נתן טעמים לזה לפי
דרכו[v] והבורר יברור לעצמו.
וכל קדושה שהיא על היין צריך
ברכה וקדושה וכן השבת ג״כ.
על כן בקבלת שבת אומרים ב׳

fore Hamotzi (blessing over bread), and "With your permission, my masters" (Savrei Maranan), which is said over wine when it is in the middle of the meal, is addressing the holy forces that gather there to receive those blessings. Since the blessing over wine is important, it is customary to invite the listeners first to sanctify themselves to receive the spirituality of that blessing. The reason that the legal authorities have given for this is already known, and from their explanations we do not depart. The congregation responds "To life," alluding to the life-force that extends through the sefirot of the masculine realm.[1] And to "With your permission, my masters," those reclining respond "With Heaven's permission," also affirming that one must seek permission from the supernal hosts and invite them to come answer "Amen" after that blessing and sanctification, and to receive it as a pleasing fragrance to the Lord.

For bread, which comes from the earth—the place where one first enters into holiness—we say "With your permission, my masters" (Birshut Rabotai), and there lies the secret of the flow called "eating," for through their arousal they elevate and raise the flow to "friends who never separate."[2] And for wine, whose source is from the mystery of the Tree of Life, we say "With your permission, my masters" (Savrei Maranan), who possess counsel, reason, and understanding,[3] and [1]The 'masculine realm' (alma d'dikhura) in Kabbalah refers to the upper divine attributes, particularly Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony) and those above it, which are characterized by giving and bestowing rather than receiving.

[2]This is a technical kabbalistic term (re'im d'lo mitparshin l'almin) referring to divine attributes that remain in perpetual unity. The blessing over bread is understood to channel divine energy to these unified spiritual forces.

[3]The author is making a wordplay on 'savrei' (with your permission) by connecting it to 'sevara' (reasoning/understanding), suggesting that the formula addresses both human leaders and celestial forces of wisdom.

[i]The phrase 'alma d'dikhura' (masculine realm) is a kabbalistic term referring to the upper sefirot associated with masculine divine qualities, particularly Tiferet (Beauty). The response 'L'chaim' is said to connect to this spiritual life-force.

[ii]This Aramaic phrase refers to 'friends who never separate'—a kabbalistic term for the divine attributes that remain in constant unity. The blessing over bread is said to elevate divine flow to these unified attributes.

[iii]The author provides a wordplay on 'savrei' (with your permission) connecting it to 'sevara' (reasoning/understanding), suggesting that the formula addresses those who possess wisdom and understanding.

[iv]The phrase 'dodin tata'in' (lower beloved ones) is a kabbalistic term referring to the union of masculine and feminine divine attributes in the lower worlds. Wine is described as facilitating this spiritual union.

[v]The 'Ba'al HaLevushim' refers to Rabbi Mordechai Jaffe (1530-1612), author of the halakhic work Levush Malkhut, indicating that the author is aware of alternate explanations for these customs.

פעמים בואי כלה בואי כלה נגד קול חתן וקול כלה.[i] ועיין בתקון מ״ז דף פ״ז מתקוני השלחן באורך:[ii] from there, from above to below, the flow descends to the lower beloved ones,[1] and this is "drink and be intoxicated, O beloved ones." This, in my opinion, is the intention behind saying "With permission" for bread and "With your consent" for wine. The author of the Levushim[2] gave explanations for this according to his approach, and one who selects may choose for himself.

Every sanctification that is over wine requires blessing and sanctification, and so too the Sabbath. Therefore, in welcoming the Sabbath we say twice "Come, O bride! Come, O bride!" corresponding to "the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride." See Tikkun 47, page 87, regarding the arrangements of the table at length.

פרק ל״ז

Chapter 37

נמצא כתוב בדברי חכמים כי ההולך לגמול חסדים כגון בקור חולים והכנסת כלה והוצאת המת וניחום אבלים וכיוצא יוליך בניו עמו[iii] וזה

It is written in the words of the sages that one who goes to perform acts of kindness,[3] such as visiting the sick, attending to a bride, accompanying the dead, comforting mourners, and similar deeds, should take his children with him. This is because, beyond teach-

[1] The phrase 'lower beloved ones' (dodin tata'in) is a kabbalistic term for the union of masculine and feminine divine energies in the lower worlds, particularly the union of Tiferet and Malkhut.

[2] This refers to Rabbi Mordechai Jaffe (1530-1612), author of Levush Malkhut, a comprehensive code of Jewish law. The author acknowledges that Jaffe provides different explanations for these customs than the mystical ones being presented here.

[3] The text lists five specific acts of kindness (gemilut chasadim) that are considered particularly meritorious in Jewish tradition: visiting the sick, attending to a bride, accompanying the dead, comforting mourners, and similar deeds. These are not merely social obligations but actions with cosmic significance in the kabbalistic worldview.

[i] The text explains that the double repetition of 'Come, O bride' in the Sabbath welcoming service (Kabbalat Shabbat) corresponds to the biblical phrase 'the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride,' establishing a parallel between Sabbath observance and marriage.

[ii] Cf. Midrash Vayikra Rabbah, chapter 23 — The text cites this midrash as a source for the practice of comforting mourners during the Grace After Meals, showing that this practice has ancient rabbinic roots. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The passage quotes extensively from the Zohar on Vayakhel regarding the spiritual significance of the Grace After Meals, explaining how it affects higher spiritual realms and channels divine blessing. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 24 — The text references this section of Tikkunei Zohar regarding the mystical significance of wine, contrasting the 'wine that gladdens' with the 'vine that Adam sinned with,' establishing the kabbalistic framework for why we say 'L'chaim' (to life). | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 47 — The author refers readers to this section for further elaboration on the mystical arrangements of the table, indicating that there is deeper kabbalistic significance to these meal rituals than what is explained in the current passage. | Cf. Proverbs 31:6 — The text cites this verse to explain the historical practice of giving wine with frankincense to condemned prisoners, which serves as the background for the ritual formula 'Savrei Maranan' (With your permission, my masters). | Cf. Song of Songs 5:1 — The text alludes to this verse from Song of Songs to explain the mystical significance of wine in ritual contexts, connecting it to divine love and spiritual nourishment.

[iii] The text emphasizes the educational value of bringing children along when performing acts of kindness, serving both to teach them compassion and to effect cosmic unification between different spiritual levels.

כי מלבד שמחנכם לגמול חסד.
עוד מקביל ליחד חיות קטנות
עם גדולות[i] דאית חיה זוטרתי
וזוטרתי דזוטרתי וחיה סתם
בעשיה וביצירה ובבריאה עוד
יבחנו למעלה באצילות[ii] ואז
ודאי ישבעו עצי ה׳ וגו׳ ופי׳
בזהר פ׳ שמות דף ע״ב בסוד ז׳
הבלים[iii] שזכרנו למעלה דאינון
הם עמודים סמכין דעלמא לקבל
ז׳ רקיעים ואמר כי יש הבלים
אחרים המתפשטים מהבלים
אלו וכלם מתקיימים ומתחזקים
במעשה התחתונים ובהתעוררות
העולה מן הארץ וזהו יש הבל
אשר נעשה על הארץ וכל
תקפא וקיומא דיליה בנשמתהון
דצדיקיא דאתלקיטו מארעא
כד אינון זכאין ועיין בתקון ס״ט
דף ק״ו במעשה דההוא בעל
קבין בשבעה היכלות שבנה בז׳
הבלים אלו. ואמרי׳ במדרש
קהלת על פסוק סוף דבר הכל
נשמע בשעה שאדם נפטר מן
העולם הקב״ה אומר למלאכי
השרת ראו מה הבריות אומרות
עליו בשר היה ירא שמים היה
פלוני זה מיד מטתו פורחת
באויר[iv] כדאמרי׳ במדרש שיר
השירים ברבי אושעיא איש
טריא ואומר הקב״ה חביב עלי

ing them to perform kindness, it also corresponds to uniting small living beings with large ones,[1] for there are minor living beings, and even smaller ones, and ordinary living beings in the worlds of Asiyah (Action), Yetzirah (Formation), and Beriah (Creation), and they will be further examined above in Atzilut (Emanation),[2] and then surely "the trees of the LORD shall be satisfied" etc. The Zohar explains in Parashat Shemot (page 72) regarding the secret of the seven "breaths" that we mentioned above,[3] that they are pillars supporting the world, corresponding to the seven firmaments. It states that there are other "breaths" that extend from these breaths, and all are sustained and strengthened through the actions of those below and through the awakening that rises from the earth. This is the meaning of "there is a breath that is made upon the earth," and all its power and existence depend on the souls of the righteous who are gathered from the earth when they are meritorious. See also in Tikkun 69, page 106, the story of that crippled man in the seven palaces that he built through these seven breaths.

10R 15R 20R 25R

And it is said in the Midrash Kohelet on the verse "The end of the matter, all is heard"—when a person departs from the world, the Holy One, blessed be He, says to the ministering angels, "See what the people say about him: Was he flesh? Was he God-fearing? Was he this particular person?" Immediately his bed floats in the air, as is said in the Midrash Shir HaShirim regarding Rabbi Oshaya of Tirya. And the Holy One, blessed be He, says, "He is as beloved to [1] This should be understood metaphorically as referring to the unification of spiritual entities or forces across different cosmic levels, not literally as bringing together physical creatures of different sizes.

30R 35R

[2] These are the four worlds of kabbalistic cosmology, arranged hierarchically from lowest to highest: Asiyah (Action), Yetzirah (Formation), Beriah (Creation), and Atzilut (Emanation). The text suggests that performing acts of kindness creates unifications across all these levels.

[3] The Hebrew word 'havalim' (breaths/vanities) is reinterpreted from its usage in Ecclesiastes (where it connotes futility) into a positive kabbalistic concept of divine emanations or cosmic forces that sustain creation.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of unifying different levels of spiritual entities ('living beings') across the cosmic structure, not merely to physical creatures of different sizes.

[ii] The text describes a hierarchical cosmology of four worlds (Asiyah, Yetzirah, Beriah, and Atzilut), with spiritual entities ('living beings') existing at each level and being 'examined' or integrated upward through the system.

[iii] These 'seven breaths' (havalim) refer to a kabbalistic concept derived from Ecclesiastes, where the word 'hevel' (vanity/breath) appears seven times. In kabbalah, these are reinterpreted as seven divine emanations that sustain creation.

[iv] The miraculous floating of the deathbed in the air is a symbolic representation of the soul's elevation and the deceased's spiritual worthiness, not merely a physical miracle.

הוא ככל ישראל וזהו כי זה כל האדם. ואמר בפ׳ בשלח דף מ״ז ובכלא בעי לאחזאה עובדא ולאתערא אתערותא ממה דאצטריך ובתקון ס״ט דף קי״א ביאר מוצא נשמות קדושות מהבל ובלתי קדושות מקין[i] ומעט טוביות שהיה בקין נתפשט עד קני חותן משה ומשם ואילך היה התפשטות הרע כי כן יש הבל הקדוש והבל מסטרא אחרא דהוא הבל ורעות רוח כי זה לעומת זה עשה האלהים. הנה כי העושה חסד עם גופות ונפשות הצדיקים הוא מתקן ז׳ הבלים עליונים ומהפכן מלהב להבל מדין לרחמים[ii] ומריק עליהם משבעה מוצקות הנרות אשר ע״י ראשם ומן השנים הזתי״ם אשר על ראש המנורה[iii] א׳ מימין וא׳ משמאל הגולה העליונה שעל ראשם והוא ישכון בטח ושאנן ובצל שדי יתלונן:[iv]

Me as all of Israel," and this is the meaning of "for this is the whole of man."

And it is said in Parashat Beshalach, page 47, "In all things one must demonstrate action and arouse awakening from what is needed." And in Tikkun 69, page 111, it explains that holy souls originate from Abel and unholy ones from Cain,[1] and the small amount of goodness that was in Cain extended until Keni, Moses' father-in-law, and from there onward was the extension of evil, for indeed there is holy breath and breath from the "Other Side," which is breath and vexation of spirit, for "God has made one thing opposite the other."

Thus, one who performs kindness with the bodies and souls of the righteous repairs the seven supernal "breaths" and transforms them from flame to breath, from judgment to mercy,[2] and pours upon them from the seven branches of the lamps that are upon their heads, and from the two olive trees that are upon the head of the menorah,[3] one on the right and one on the left of the upper bowl that is upon their heads, and he will dwell in security and tranquility and abide in the shadow of the Almighty.[4]

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the biblical figures of Cain and Abel represent archetypal spiritual sources from which different types of souls originate, explaining the spiritual diversity among humans.

[2] The Hebrew contains a wordplay between 'lahav' (flame) and 'hevel' (breath) that cannot be fully captured in English. This wordplay emphasizes the transformative power of kindness to convert harsh judgment (symbolized by consuming fire) into merciful sustenance (symbolized by life-giving breath).

[3] This imagery draws on the vision in Zechariah 4:1-14 of a golden menorah with seven lamps, fed by two olive trees. In kabbalistic interpretation, this represents the structure of divine emanation and the channels through which divine mercy flows into creation.

[4] The conclusion emphasizes the personal spiritual benefit of performing acts of kindness—those

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that souls have different spiritual origins—righteous souls originating from Abel (Hevel) and unrighteous souls from Cain (Kayin), establishing a spiritual genealogy of souls.

[ii] This is a significant wordplay in Hebrew between 'lahav' (flame) and 'hevel' (breath), indicating the mystical transformation of harsh judgment into mercy through acts of kindness. The similar sounds of these words are meaningful in the kabbalistic tradition.

[iii] This imagery draws on Zechariah's vision (4:1-14) of the menorah with seven lamps and two olive trees, which in kabbalah represents the structure of divine emanation and the flow of spiritual energy.

[iv] Cf. Ecclesiastes 1:2 — The text reinterprets the concept of 'hevel' (breath/vanity) from Ecclesiastes in a positive, mystical sense as divine emanations or 'breaths' that sustain the cosmos, rather than in its plain meaning of futility or meaninglessness. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shemot, page 72 — The Zohar passage is cited to explain the cosmological significance of the seven 'breaths' or emanations that support the universe, corresponding to the seven heavens. This reference establishes the mystical framework for understanding how human actions affect spiritual realms. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar, Tikkun 69 — This reference to Tikkunei Zohar brings in the symbolic figure of the 'crippled man' (likely representing the kabbalistic concept of restricted divine energy) who nevertheless constructs spiritual palaces through the power of the seven divine 'breaths', showing how limitation can be transcended through proper channeling of spiritual forces. | Cf. Ecclesiastes

60 שפת חסד של אמת[i] תכון
לעד ועד בשחק נאמן סלה[ii] כי
לכבודו עשיתי ומעתה יהיו
תחלת דברי בחלק השלישי
מספר מעבר יבק הלזה אשר
65 יקרא בישראל שמו שפתי
רננות[iii] אלהים יעזרנו על דבר
כבוד שמו אכי״ר:[iv]

The lip of kindness and truth shall be established forever, and a faithful witness in heaven. For I have done this for His glory, and from now on let these be the beginning of my words in the third part of this book Ma'avar Yabok,[1] which shall be called in Israel by the name "Siftei Renanot" (Lips of Joyous Song). May God help us for the sake of the honor of His name,[2] Amen. May it be His will.

60R

65R

who engage in such deeds will themselves receive divine protection and blessing, completing a cycle of giving and receiving that maintains cosmic harmony.

[1]The title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (Crossing of the Yabok) refers to Jacob's biblical crossing of the Yabok River, which serves as a metaphor for the soul's transition from this world to the next—a central theme of the book.

[2]The formal, doxological ending of this introduction reflects standard practice in Jewish religious works, where authors express humility and acknowledge divine assistance in their scholarly endeavors.

12:13 — This verse from the conclusion of Ecclesiastes is reinterpreted in a mystical context to describe what happens after death—how the Holy One gathers information about the deceased from what people say about them, which determines their ultimate spiritual status. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach, page 47 — This Zohar reference establishes the kabbalistic principle that actions in the physical world ('arousal from below') are necessary to stimulate corresponding spiritual responses ('arousal from above'), which is central to the text's argument about the cosmic significance of acts of kindness. | Cf. Genesis 4 — The text reinterprets the biblical story of Cain and Abel in kabbalistic terms, seeing them as archetypal sources of different qualities of souls—holy ones from Abel and unholy ones from Cain—establishing a mystical genealogy of souls that explains spiritual differences among humans. | Cf. Psalm 104:16 — This psalm verse is reinterpreted in a kabbalistic context to refer to the satisfaction of divine emanations (represented as 'trees') when proper unification occurs between various levels of spiritual reality through human acts of kindness. | Cf. Zechariah 4:1-14 — The text draws on Zechariah's vision of the golden menorah with seven lamps and two olive trees to create a visual metaphor for how acts of kindness channel divine mercy through cosmic structures, transforming judgment into compassion.

[i]This phrase combines Proverbs 12:19 ('truthful lip shall be established forever') with the rabbinic concept of 'chesed shel emet' (true kindness), which specifically refers to kindness toward the dead who cannot repay the favor.

[ii]A reference to Psalm 89:38, 'the faithful witness in the sky,' which in this context refers to the eternal nature of divine truth.

[iii]The title of this third section of Ma'avar Yabok means 'Lips of Joyous Song' or 'Lips of Praise,' suggesting that this section will focus on prayers and praises related to death and the afterlife.

[iv]An acronym for 'Amen Ken Yehi Ratzon' (Amen, So May It Be His Will), a traditional closing formula for prayers.

Discourse 5

שפתי רננות / Lips of Joyous Song

פרק א׳

Chapter 1

כמו חלב ודשן [i] תשבע נפשי.
ושפתי רננות [ii] יהלל פי. ה׳
שפתי תפתח [iii] ופי יגיד תהלתך
בעה״ז ובעה״ב [iv] אמן כי״ר: [v] [vi]

Like fat and rich food[1] my soul will be satisfied. And my lips of joy[2] will praise You. O LORD, open my lips, that my mouth may declare Your praise in this world and in the World to Come,[3] Amen, may it be Your will. 5R

ברם יזכה אדם את ארחו לעמוד
לשרת לפני מלכו רק לידע

Indeed, a person may purify his path to stand and serve before his King[4] only by knowing and making

[1] This metaphor expresses spiritual fulfillment and satisfaction through divine connection, rather than literal physical nourishment.
[2] The Hebrew phrase 'siftei renanot' has special significance as it also names the third discourse of Ma'avar Yabok, creating a self-referential connection within the work.
[3] This phrase reflects the book's central concern with both proper religious practice in this life and its consequences in the afterlife.
[4] This opening echoes Psalm 119:9 ('How can a young man purify his path?') while introducing the theme of spiritual service.

[i] This is a reference to Psalm 63:6, expressing spiritual satisfaction through divine connection.
[ii] The phrase 'lips of joy/praise' connects to the book's third section titled 'Siftei Renanot' (Lips of Joyous Song/Praise) mentioned in the outline.
[iii] This is a direct quote from Psalm 51:17, which is traditionally recited at the beginning of the Amidah prayer.
[iv] Abbreviation for 'ba-olam ha-zeh u-va-olam ha-ba,' meaning 'in this world and in the World to Come.'
[v] Abbreviation for 'ken yehi ratzon' (may it be [Your] will), a common closing formula for prayers.
[vi] Cf. Psalm 63:6 — The author opens with this psalm reference to establish the spiritual satisfaction that comes from proper devotion and prayer, setting the tone for the entire work's focus on spiritual preparation. | Cf. Psalm 51:17 — By incorporating this verse that begins the Amidah prayer, the author frames the entire work as a form of divine service, positioning his guidance on death rituals as an extension of established liturgical practice. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse Three ('Siftei Renanot') — The phrase 'siftei renanot' (lips of joy) creates an internal cross-reference to the third discourse of the book itself, suggesting that proper prayer and praise form a unified theme throughout the work's approach to death and dying.

ולהודיע כי פעולת הדברים הגשמיים כלם להם מבא ורמז בדברים הרוחניים ושלמותם הוא בהאחז הפעולה הגשמית ברוחנית כדי שיתעורר השרש הנעלם הרוחני ע״י הענף החצון הגשמי לכן הוצרך אל כל פעולה גשמית יתלוה אליה דבר נעלם ורוחני. וזהו סוד הברכה על מעשה המצות שיתלוה עם המעשה הגשמי הרוחני שהוא הדבור והבל פה. ולמעלה מזה עוד המחשבה בדבור ההוא. הקדמה זו למד אותנו החכם קורדואיר״ו זצ״ל בדרושיו המופלאים.[i] ומעשה המצות הגשמי יעלה עניינה במקום העשיה לבד שבו מקום שמקבלות הנפשות אחר מנוחתם שכרם והוא לבוש מתהוה ממעשה המצות הגשמיות ומצד העשייה נוטל שכרו גם הגוף העושה בפירות והקרן קיימת לו לעה״ב.[ii] וזהו מצד הנפש שהיא מצד העשיה והדבור שהוא הבל פה הוא במקום היצירה ששם מנוחת הרוחות והקולות ומהדבורים נעשה להם לבוש והיינו חלוקא דרבנן בג״ע מקום מנוחת הרוחות[iii] ומהמחשבה שהיא דקה ביותר והוא חלק השכל מורכב על הדבור והמעשה נעשה לבוש לנשמות במקום הבריאה ששם תשובת הנשמות אחר פטירתם מהגוף. וג׳ חלקים אלו הם חלקי הגוף וזה כל known that all physical actions have an entry point and allusion in spiritual matters. Their perfection lies in connecting the physical action with the spiritual, so that the hidden spiritual root is awakened through the external physical branch. Therefore, every physical action requires that something hidden and spiritual accompany it. This is the secret of the blessing over the performance of commandments—that the spiritual, which is speech and the breath of the mouth, accompanies the physical action. And beyond this is the thought within that speech. This introduction was taught to us by the sage Cordovero, of blessed memory, in his wondrous discourses.

The physical performance of commandments elevates its essence only to the realm of Asiyah (Action),[1] where souls receive their reward after their rest. This becomes a garment formed from the physical performance of commandments. Through the aspect of Asiyah, even the body that performs receives its reward in "fruits," while the "principal" remains for the World to Come. This corresponds to the nefesh (vital soul), which relates to the realm of Asiyah. Speech, which is the breath of the mouth, exists in the realm of Yetzirah (Formation), where spirits and voices rest. From these utterances, a garment is formed for them, which is the "scholarly garment" in the Garden of Eden,[2] the resting place of spirits. From thought, which is the most refined and is the portion of the intellect built upon speech and action, a garment is made for the neshamot (higher souls) in the realm of Beriah (Creation), where the souls return after departing from the body.

These three parts constitute the components of the body, and this is the whole person. Therefore, blessings were instituted for the performance of commandments so that through the blessing, one turns

[1] The author is establishing a hierarchical structure where different types of religious activity affect different cosmic levels, with physical actions affecting only the lowest world (Asiyah).

[2] The concept of 'chaluka d'rabbanan' (scholarly garment) appears frequently in kabbalistic literature as the spiritual vestment souls receive in the afterlife based on their Torah study and good deeds.

[i] This refers to Rabbi Moses Cordovero (1522-1570), a leading kabbalist in Safed who authored Pardes Rimmonim, a systematic presentation of Kabbalah that significantly influenced later mystical thought.

[ii] This refers to the rabbinic concept that certain commandments provide 'fruits' (benefits) in this world while the 'principal' (main reward) remains for the World to Come, as mentioned in the Mishnah (Peah 1:1).

[iii] This term refers to the 'scholarly garment,' a metaphysical vestment that souls receive in the afterlife, formed from their Torah study and good deeds in this world.

האדם על כן תקנו הברכות על
מעשה המצות כדי שע״י הברכה
יפנה למעלה ויזכה אל תקון
שלשה חלקים אלו. וכן בתפלות
שהם דבור ומחשבה לבד תקנו
שיתלוה אליהם המעשה בתפילין
וציצית וגם בפעולות גשמיות
תקנו ברכות כמו ברכות השחר
וכיוצא תקנו ברכה כדי שע״י
הפעולה ההיא תזכה הרוח
והנשמה. עוד תקנו לתת תודה
לקונו על כל הפעולת גשמיות
שע״י התורה הפעולה גשמית
נעשית רוחנית ונמצא זוכה
בעצמו וזוכה אל הרוח והנשמה
ואחר שהרוח והנשמה יש להם
שכר טוב בעמל הגשמי ממילא
נמשך חלק אל הנפש. וזה כולל
בכל הברכות וההודאות ואפי׳
האכילה אם יכוין ליהנות ולזון
נפשו מרוחניות הקדוש שבמאכל
ההוא ולהעלותו מדומם וצומח
ובעל חי בלתי מדבר למדרגת
האדם נקרא צדיק אוכל לשובע
נפשו[i] ואם לאו הוא מצד החסרון
והקליפה ועליו נאמר ובטן
רשעים תחסר וזהו בכל דרכיך
אפי׳ הגשמיות דעהו לקב״ה
והדבק בו והוא יישר אורחותיך
הגשמיות לעבודתו כדי שתשיג
האושר האמיתי. וברכה שעל
כל המצות והפעולות היא
המשכת רוחניות מרום המעלות
עד מלכות שבה קבוץ השפע
המקבלת מת״ת. לכן נקרא
כנסת ישראל[ii] ואח״כ משם נמשך
אל התחתונים ולא חוייבנו
להמשיכו אלא בה והיא הנותנת

upward and merits the rectification of these three parts. Similarly, for prayers, which are speech and thought alone, it was established that physical action should accompany them through tefillin and tzitzit. For physical actions as well, blessings were instituted, such as the morning blessings and the like, so that through these actions, the ruach (spirit) and neshamah (higher soul) might merit reward. They further instituted giving thanks to one's Creator for all physical actions, for through Torah, physical action becomes spiritual. Thus, one merits reward personally and also for the ruach and neshamah. And since the ruach and neshamah receive good reward for physical effort, a portion naturally flows to the nefesh as well.

This principle applies to all blessings and thanksgivings. Even eating, if one intends to benefit and nourish one's soul from the holiness within that food,[1] elevating it from inanimate, vegetative, or non-speaking animal states to the level of human, is called "a righteous person eating to satisfy his soul." If not, it stems from deficiency and negative forces, and of such a person it is said, "The belly of the wicked shall lack." This is the meaning of "Know Him in all your ways"—even physical ones—"know the Holy One, blessed be He, cleave to Him, and He will straighten your physical paths for His service," so that you may attain true happiness.

The blessing over all commandments and actions draws spirituality from the highest heights down to Malkhut (Kingdom),[2] where the influx received from Tiferet (Beauty) is gathered. This is why it is called "the Assembly of Israel." Afterward, from there it flows to the lower realms. We are obligated to draw it down only through Malkhut, which "provides food for her household and a portion for her maidens." In every commandment a person performs, one should intend that his soul is being rectified and illuminated

[1] This reflects the Hasidic approach to elevating mundane activities, which expanded on earlier kabbalistic ideas that even eating can be transformed into a spiritual practice through proper intention.

[2] This describes the kabbalistic understanding of divine flow (shefa) descending through the sefirot (divine attributes) until reaching Malkhut, which then distributes this spiritual energy to the lower worlds.

[i] This is a direct quote from Proverbs 13:25, which the author interprets in a mystical sense to mean that righteous people transform even physical eating into a spiritual act.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic understanding of Malkhut (Kingdom) as the divine attribute that receives influx from Tiferet (Beauty) and is identified with Knesset Israel (the mystical community of Israel).

טרף לביתה וחק לנערותיה
ובכל מצוה שיעשה האדם יכוין
כי נשמתו מתתקנת ומאירה
באור מצוה.[i] ובמעשים שאין
בהם ברכה יוכל האדם הנלבב
לקדשם ולפארם בשפע עליון
בפסוקים קדושים מתורה נביאים
וכתובים וכ״ש כשהמעשה בעצמו
הוא מקודש כגון בעסקו בג״ח
וכדומה שכבר המעשה מוכן
וכלי לשרות בו ברכה ולהחזיק
גם הרוח והנשמה כי יעורה עליו
רוח ממרום ויעלה על במתי
עב ונמצא פועל בארץ ובשמים
ובשמי השמים ובזה הארץ תענה
את השמים והשמים יענו את
הארץ ורב טוב לבית ישראל וה׳
יברך את עמו בשלום:[ii]

with the light of the commandment.

For actions that do not require a blessing, a discerning person can sanctify and adorn them with divine abundance through sacred verses from Torah, 85R Prophets, and Writings—especially when the action itself is inherently sacred, such as when engaging in acts of loving-kindness and the like. Such actions are already prepared as vessels to contain blessing and to sustain both the ruach and neshamah, for a spirit 90R from on high will be aroused upon him, and he will ascend upon the heights of the clouds.[1] Thus, he operates on earth, in the heavens, and in the highest heavens. Through this, "the earth shall answer the heavens, and the heavens shall answer the earth," 95R bringing abundant goodness to the House of Israel, and "the Lord will bless His people with peace."

פרק ב׳

הלא מראש בב׳ חלקים
הקודמים הודענו ומהם ישמע
האדם ויבין דעת לאשורו כמה
צריך האדם לכוין בהתעסקו
בג״ח וצרכי המת בפרט שדל הוא
ואין ידו משגת לעשות התעוררות
תחתון ע״כ מצווים החיים לגמול

Chapter 2

We have already informed in the two previous sections, and from them a person will hear and understand correctly how much one needs to focus their intention when engaging in acts of kindness and the needs of the deceased. Particularly since 5R the deceased is helpless and unable to create the awakening from below,[A] the living are commanded

[A] Or: "the deceased is impoverished and lacks the means to create the lower awakening" — The term 'dal' literally means 'poor/impoverished' and 'ein yado maseget' literally means 'his hand cannot reach/afford.' This is metaphorical language in the context, referring to the deceased's inability to perform spiritual actions, but a more literal translation might be preferred in some contexts to preserve the economic metaphor in the original Hebrew.

[1] This poetic phrase uses biblical imagery (Isaiah 14:14) to describe spiritual elevation achieved through proper performance of commandments.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of tikkun (rectification), where human actions repair and illuminate both the individual soul and the cosmic order.

[ii] Cf. Pardes Rimmonim by Rabbi Moses Cordovero — The author cites Cordovero's kabbalistic teachings about how physical actions connect to spiritual realms, which forms the theoretical foundation for the entire passage. | Cf. Four Worlds of Kabbalah (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, Asiyah) — The author uses the classic kabbalistic framework of the four worlds to explain how different types of human activity operate on corresponding cosmic levels. | Cf. Proverbs 13:25 — This biblical verse is used to contrast the spiritual approach to physical actions (like eating) with the purely material approach. | Cf. Proverbs 3:6 — This verse is cited to support the author's central argument that even mundane physical activities can be sanctified through proper intention and awareness of God. | Cf. Proverbs 31:15 — The author applies this verse metaphorically to Malkhut (the Divine Presence), portraying it as the feminine divine attribute that distributes spiritual sustenance to lower realms. | Cf. Hosea 2:23-24 — This prophetic verse is used to describe the reciprocal relationship between higher and lower worlds that is established through properly performed commandments. | Cf. Psalms 29:11 — This concluding quote frames the entire teaching as leading to divine blessing and cosmic harmony when properly applied.

חסד לגופו ולנשמתו במעשיהם
ובכוונתם למען בעת במרום
תמריא ותשכון סלע ותתלונן
ברום חביון בכח. ואל חביריו
העומדים עליו להכין אותו
ולסעדו באמת ובמשפט ובצדקה
הלא הוא מעשה ודבור ומחשבה
ראשונה כל אחד מהעומדים
על החולה בשעת יציאת נשמתו
יסובבנהו יבוננהו כדדרשו בזהר
פ׳ האזינו כאשר הודעלו למעלה
למבקרים אותו בתחלת החולי
ויצרנהו כבבת עין העליונה בכח
הבל הקדוש המעלה מפיו סביב
למטתו בסדרי הפסוקים אשר
יבואו לפנינו עד כי יעבור זעם
מעליו ובזה ירחיקו בכל האפשר
הדינים החצונים המלפתים
אותו וסובבים מטתו[i] כי סביב
רשעים יתהלכון. ובזה יאחז
צדיק דרכו והנפש תשוב אל
האלהים אשר נתנה דרך האויר
ההוא המעוטר בשיח רנה ותפלה
ותעלה ותראה עם להקות נפשות
חסידיו אשר באו ללותו ולכבדו
ושכינת אל בראשם עם המלאכי
שלום[ii] ובכבודה תזכה נפשו
לאור באור החיים כי באור
פני מלך חיים אשרי מי שזוכה.
וכל המתעסקים בו בגופו
הן בשמירתו וכ״ש ברחיצתו
ובהלבשתו ובהכנסתו בארגז וכן to bestow kindness upon both their body and soul through actions and intentions. This is so that when the soul soars upward, it may dwell in the rock and 10R abide in the heights of concealment through this power.[A]

As for the companions who stand by the deceased to prepare and assist them in truth, justice, and righteousness—this involves action, speech, and 15R thought. First, each person standing by the sick person at the time of their soul's departure should surround them and watch over them, as expounded in the Zohar, Parashat Ha'azinu, as we have already informed those who visit the sick at the beginning 20R of illness. They should guard them like the pupil of the supernal eye through the power of the sacred breath that rises from their mouth[1] around the bed, through the arrangement of verses that will come before us, until the wrath passes from them. In 25R this way, they will distance as much as possible the external judgments that envelop the dying person and surround their bed, for "the wicked walk on every side."[B]

Through this, the righteous person will hold 30R firmly to their path, and the soul will return to God who gave it, through that air adorned with joyous speech and prayer. It will ascend and appear with the assemblies of the souls of His pious ones who have come to accompany and honor the deceased, 35R with the Divine Presence at their head together with the angels of peace. Through His glory, the soul will merit to be illuminated in the light of life, for "in the light of the King's countenance is life"—fortunate is [A] Or: "and lodge in the exalted hidden realm through this power" — The verb 'titlonen' comes from the root for lodging/dwelling temporarily, and 'rom chevyon' refers to the highest hidden realm in kabbalistic thought. This alternate translation might better convey the specific mystical concept of the soul finding temporary lodging in the highest hidden spiritual realms.

[B] Or: "for "the wicked prowl all around"" — This is a quotation from Psalms 12:9, and different English Bible translations render it differently. The alternate translation may better capture the predatory, threatening nature of these external forces of judgment that the text describes as surrounding the dying person.

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that sacred words and prayers create a spiritually purified atmosphere around the dying person. The 'breath' or 'vapor' (hevel) from reciting holy texts is believed to manifest as a protective spiritual force.

[i] The text describes negative spiritual forces called 'external judgments' (dinim chitzonim) that surround the dying person. In kabbalistic thought, these are harmful entities attracted by the judgment aspect of death that attempt to impede the soul's peaceful transition.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic concept that when a person dies properly, the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) itself comes with angels of peace to escort the soul. This imagery contrasts with the negative spiritual forces mentioned earlier.

נושאי המטה וחלופיהם וחלופי
חלופיהם וכל שלמטה צורך
בהם והבאים ללוותו וא״צ לומר
בעת אומרם צדוק הדין יכוונו
למתק דין הקדוש בכל בחינותיו
בנזכר ולהפריש ולבלע דין
החיצון לשקעו ולגלגלו בנוקבא
דתהומא רבה[i] ובזה יסבר פיו
בעדשה מגולגלת ואדומה ואין
לה פה או לרמז ביצה בנזכר
וכן בנשוא אותו מאיבולא
לסברא בשעת הקבורה יכוונו
בכל מעשיהם לעורר בחות
העליונים כאלו היו כלם בג״ע
לפני השכינה. וכל מגמת פניהם
תהיה לעשות חסד של אמת
עם נפש הנפטר כדוגמא שהם
עושים למטה לצרכי גופו שגם
לנשמה וחלקיה יש להם רמ״א
אברים ושס״ה גידים ועורקים
רוחניים[ii] כמו שיש לגוף כי הוא
דוגמא אליהם בכל מכל כל אלא
שהוא חומרי והם רוחניים וכבר
אמרנו כי פעולות הגשמיות
תפעול ברוחניות וכ״ש כשיש
הדמות בין הגשמי והרוחני
בכל צדדיו הגוף המת עם נפשו
והנלוים עמו וכבר אמרנו שבזמן
הקבורה יש עם הגוף נפשו רוחו
ונשמתו של הנפטר. והכנת
התכריכין כבר אמרנו טעם
למה מוטל על הנשים להיות
תקונם הראשון בעלמא דנוקבא
ויזכוהו בפרוטות צדקה שתתן

one who merits this. 40R

All who attend to the body, whether in guarding it and especially in washing it, dressing it, and placing it in the coffin, as well as those who carry the bier and their replacements, and the replacements of the replacements, and all those needed below, and those who come to accompany it—needless to say when reciting the Justification of Judgment—should intend to sweeten the holy judgment in all its aspects as mentioned, and to separate and swallow the external judgment, sinking it and rolling it into the great abyss.[A] In this way, its mouth will be sealed like a round, red lentil that has no mouth, or to allude to an egg[1] as mentioned. Likewise, when carrying it from mourning to burial at the time of interment, they should direct all their actions to awaken the supernal powers as if they were all in the Garden of Eden before the Divine Presence. 45R 50R 55R

Their entire focus should be to perform true kindness with the soul of the departed, just as they do below for the needs of the body. For the soul and its parts also have 248 spiritual limbs and 365 spiritual sinews and veins, just as the body has, since it is a model for them in every way, except that the body is material while they are spiritual. We have already said that physical actions affect the spiritual realm, especially when there is similarity between the physical and spiritual in all aspects—the dead body with its soul and those accompanying it. We have already said that at the time of burial, the departed one's soul, spirit, and higher soul are with the body. 60R 65R 70R

Regarding the preparation of shrouds, we have already explained why it is the women's responsibility to make the initial preparation in the feminine

[A] Or: "into the opening of the great deep" — The Aramaic term 'nukba d'tehoma raba' is a technical kabbalistic term referring to a specific metaphysical location where negative forces are contained. A more literal translation preserves the gendered imagery in the original (nukba = female/opening) and the reference to Genesis 7:11 (tehom = deep).

[1] These are symbolic references to foods traditionally served to mourners. The round shape represents the cycle of life and death, while the absence of a 'mouth' (opening) represents the silencing of accusatory spiritual forces.

[i] The 'nukba d'tehoma raba' (opening of the great deep) is a kabbalistic concept referring to the metaphysical location where negative forces are contained and neutralized. The proper funeral rituals are understood to direct these harmful forces away from the deceased's soul and into this containment realm.

[ii] The numbers 248 and 365 correspond to the traditional count of positive commandments (248) and negative commandments (365) in Jewish law, totaling 613. This creates a correspondence between the body's structure, the soul's structure, and the Torah's structure.

כל אחת מהן עבור נופר נפשו
בעודן שם וכמו כן האנשים בבית
הקברות ישימו בקופות כל אחד
כפי השגת ידו להרבות צדקה
וחסד לפדיון נפש הנפטר הצריך
לרחמים וטוב לתת לפחות שש
פרוטות למתק הששׁ קצוות
ולביסום שש מדות שיש בהם
דין. ולא לחנם הרגילו בארץ
הצבי לאנשים רשומים ליתן על
גופם זהב וכסף ונחשת כנגד
שלשת חלקי נשמת הנפטר נשמה
מבריאה ששם בחינת הזהב טוב
ורוח מיצירה ששם הכסף ועלמין
דכסופא לרוח ונפש מעשיה ששם
בחינת הנחשת[i] בסוד הרי נחשת
ואח״כ חולקים הכל לעניים כמו
שיבא. ויאמר בכל פרוטה הריני
נותן פרוטה זו לצדקה על כל
ישראל ועל פלוני זה הנפטר
למנוחת נפשו בג״ע ויאמר כל
כלי יוצר עליך לא יצלח וגו׳
וכן בכל פרוטה ופרוטה. גם
ברחיצה הגדולה יש להם סדר
נפלא וסודות מכוונים אשרי
הזוכה להיות נמנה עמהם:[ii]

realm. They merit the deceased through coins of charity[A] that each woman gives for the atonement of his soul while they are there. Similarly, the men at the cemetery should place in charity boxes according to their means, to increase charity and kindness for the redemption of the departed soul that needs mercy. It is good to give at least six coins to sweeten the six extremities and to sweeten the six attributes[1] that contain judgment.

It was not for nothing that it became customary in the Holy Land for distinguished people to place gold, silver, and copper on their bodies, corresponding to the three parts of the departed's soul: the neshamah from the World of Creation, where there is the aspect of good gold; the ruach from the World of Formation, where there is silver and the worlds of longing for the spirit; and the nefesh from the World of Action, where there is the aspect of copper in the mystery of "behold copper." Afterward, they distribute everything to the poor as will be explained. One should say with each coin: "I hereby give this coin for charity for all Israel and for this departed one, for the repose of his soul in the Garden of Eden," and say "No weapon formed against you shall prosper, etc." And so with each and every coin. Also in the great washing there is a wonderful order and directed mysteries[2]—fortunate is one who merits to be counted among them.

[A] Or: "perutot of charity" — The term 'perutah' (plural: perutot) refers to a specific small denomination coin in Jewish law, with precise halakhic significance. Keeping the Hebrew term might be preferred in contexts where the legal or ritual specificity is important.

[1] The 'six extremities' refers to the six directional sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah: Chesed, Gevurah, Tiferet, Netzach, Hod, and Yesod. The text suggests that charitable giving in multiples of six helps to transform the judgment aspects of these divine attributes into mercy.

[2] The 'great washing' (rechitzah gedolah) refers to the ritual purification of the deceased's body

[i] This passage describes the correspondence between metals and spiritual worlds: gold with Beriah (Creation), silver with Yetzirah (Formation), and copper with Asiyah (Action). This follows kabbalistic teachings about the decreasing spiritual purity as one descends through the four worlds from Atzilut (Emanation, not mentioned here) to Asiyah.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Ha'azinu — The text cites this Zohar passage as authoritative basis for the protective practices described, establishing continuity between the kabbalistic tradition and the author's instructions for deathbed rituals. | Cf. Psalms 12:9 — The author employs this biblical verse to characterize the external judgments (dinim chitzonim) that surround the deathbed, implying that these forces are the 'wicked' referenced in the psalm. | Cf. Proverbs 16:15 — The author employs this biblical reference to contrast the spiritual darkness of death with the divine light that awaits the properly prepared soul, highlighting the ultimate reward for correct deathbed practices. | Cf. Isaiah 54:17 — The author prescribes this verse as a specific protective recitation that accompanies the giving of charity, intended to shield the deceased's soul from negative spiritual forces during its journey. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The author draws on this kabbalistic concept to explain why physical actions performed for the body have corresponding effects on the soul, establishing the metaphysical basis for funeral rituals.

פרק ג׳

Chapter 3

הן מקדם הודעתי למישרי דרך בתורה כוונת העומד בשעת יציאת נשמה. גם שאר העם הנמצאים שם יהיו כלם לאחדים ויכוונו להעלות נפשו קרבן לה׳[i] ליחדא קב״ה עם שכינתיה[ii] ולאתערא כ״י דכד סלקא נשמתא איהי מתאחדת בתיאובתא שלימתא ואתקשר עלמא דנוקבא עם עלמא דדכורא דכלל גדול הוא כי בכל מעשי האדם בעי לכוונא לאכללא מדת יום בלילה ומדת לילה ביום[iii] כנראה בפ׳ קרח דף קע״ז ע״ב על פסוק ראה חיים עם אשה אשר אהבת ובעי בר נש בכל עובדוהי לאכללא שמאלא בימינא בשמא דקב״ה. וכתוב בתקונים דף קל״א ע״א סוף סוף כל מה דאשתדל בר נש בפקודוי דקב״ה בגיניה ובגין שכינתיה הכי אשתדל קב״ה בגין בר נש ובין זוגיה בההוא עלמא זכאה מאן דאשתדל למעבד רעותיה דלית פומא יכול למימר אגרא דיליה בההוא עלמא דאיהו

I have previously informed those who walk the path of Torah about the proper intention for one standing at the moment when a soul departs. The others present should also unite as one and focus their intention on elevating the deceased's soul as an offering to the Lord, unifying the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presenc[1]e, and arousing the Community of Israel. For when a soul ascends, it unites with complete desire, and the feminine realm connects with the masculine realm.[2] It is a fundamental principle that in all human actions, one should intend to include the attribute of day within night and the attribute of night within day,[A] as explained in Parashat Korach, page 177b, on the verse "See life with the woman whom you love." A person should, in all his deeds, include the left within the right in the name of the Holy One, blessed be He.

It is written in Tikkunim, page 131a: "Ultimately, all that a person strives to do in fulfilling the commandments of the Holy One, blessed be He, for His sake and for the sake of His Divine Presence, so does the Holy One, blessed be He, strive for the sake of that person and his spouse in that world. Fortunate is one who strives to do His will, for no mouth can express his reward in that world, which [A] Or: "For in all human deeds, one must intend to integrate the quality of day into night and the quality of night into day" — This alternate translation uses more active verbs ('integrate' instead of 'include') and 'quality' instead of 'attribute,' which might better convey the dynamic process described. Both translations accurately capture the kabbalistic concept of unifying opposing cosmic forces.

(tahara) performed by the burial society. The author alludes to kabbalistic meanings and procedures for this ritual that are detailed elsewhere in the text.

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'ליחדא קב״ה עם שכינתיה' is a technical kabbalistic formula that appears frequently in Zoharic literature. It refers to the mystical goal of unifying the masculine and feminine aspects of divinity, considered the highest purpose of religious practice.

[2] The terms 'עלמא דנוקבא' (feminine realm) and 'עלמא דדכורא' (masculine realm) are kabbalistic concepts referring to cosmic spiritual domains rather than just gender principles. The feminine realm is associated with receptivity, judgment, and this world, while the masculine realm represents bestowal, mercy, and higher spiritual dimensions.

[i] The mystical concept that a person's death can serve as a sacrificial offering is central to this text. Just as Temple sacrifices created unifications in higher realms, proper deathbed rituals elevate the departing soul as a spiritual offering.

[ii] This phrase refers to the central kabbalistic goal of unifying the masculine aspect of God (Holy One, blessed be He) with the feminine aspect (Divine Presence). This unification is considered the ultimate purpose of religious life and is particularly potent during transition moments like death.

[iii] This refers to the mystical practice of unifying opposites, specifically the attributes associated with day (mercy, masculine) and night (judgment, feminine). The text suggests that properly attending to the dying creates this cosmic harmony.

לדרי דרין. ובר״מ פ׳ כי תצא כתיב אין חסיד אלא המתחסד עם קונו דכל פקודין דעביד למפרק בהו שבינתיה ובהא עביד חסד עם הקב״ה. ועיין בסוף פרשה זו בכמה פנים קושרים ישראל שבינה עמהם ומאין ולאין יזדמן לאדם בעה״ז לעשות נייחא לשבינתא להיות במדרגת הכהן עליון המקריב נשמות לפני קונו אם לא בעת כי יראה חכמים ימותו דאז יבודאי בעי לכוונה ולשואה רעותיה ליחודא דקב״ה ושבינתיה ויתחזק כח המוטל על ערש דוי בפסוקי דרחמי ובפיו ימתיקנו במלין קדישין. ובזה מתדבק באילן החיים. ואמרו כי מלאכא דמותא לאשליט על מאן דאשתדל באורייתא לששה אלא מיתתה על פי ה׳ והיא הנשיקה[i] דהוא דבקותא דנפשא בשבינתא ובעקרא דיליה בגין כך צדיקים אינם מטמאים במיתתן[ii] מכה דתיננן ביום שמת רבי בטלה כהונה כלומר דאעסקו ביה דלא שרא עליה רוח מסאבא. א״כ בהתעורר על הנפטר אילנא דחיי בכח רוחניות הנחתם ונעלם בפסוקי אנ״ך בכוונת endures for generations upon generations." And in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ki Tetze, it is written: "There is no truly pious one except he who acts with loving-kindness toward his Creator, for all commandments that he performs to redeem His Divine Presence through them—by this he performs loving-kindness for the Holy One, blessed be He."

Examine the end of this section to see the many ways in which Israel binds the Divine Presence with them. When and where does a person have the opportunity in this world to bring comfort to the Divine Presence and to attain the level of the High Priest who offers souls before his Creator? Is it not when he sees that the wise die? Then he should certainly focus his intention and direct his will toward the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence, and strengthen the one lying on the sickbed with verses of mercy, sweetening them with his mouth through holy words. Through this, he becomes attached to the Tree of Life.

They said that the Angel of Death has no dominion over one who engages in Torah for its own sake; rather, his death is "by the mouth of the Lord," which is the "kiss of death"[A]—the cleaving of the soul to the Divine Presence[1] and to its root. For this reason, the righteous do not impart ritual impurity in their death,[2] as we learned: "On the day Rabbi [Judah the Prince] died, the laws of priesthood were suspended," meaning they attended to him because no spirit of impurity rested upon [A] Or: "They said that the Angel of Death does not rule over one who exerts himself in Torah for its own sake; instead, his death comes through the divine decree, which is the "death by divine kiss"" — This alternate renders 'לששה' as 'for its own sake' more explicitly and translates 'על פי ה" as 'divine decree' rather than the more literal 'by the mouth of the Lord.' The phrase 'death by divine kiss' might better convey this technical kabbalistic concept than 'kiss of death,' which has different connotations in English.

[1] The phrase 'דבקותא דנפשא בשבינתא' describes the soul's mystical union with the Divine Presence at death. This represents the culmination of the spiritual life—the soul returning to its divine source in a state of perfect attachment.

[2] This controversial statement challenges normative Jewish law, which holds that all human corpses convey ritual impurity. The author uses the story of Rabbi Judah the Prince's death to support this mystical concept that the perfectly righteous transcend normal rules of ritual impurity.

[i] The concept of 'death by divine kiss' (mitat neshikah) refers to the most elevated form of death, reserved for the righteous. It is described as a painless, gentle separation of soul from body through direct divine contact, contrasted with the typical death through the Angel of Death.

[ii] This striking statement challenges the normal halakhic assumption that all human corpses convey ritual impurity. The text claims that the completely righteous don't impart ritual impurity because no 'spirit of impurity' rests on them, using the story of Rabbi Judah the Prince's death as evidence.

אותיות ונקודות וטעמים[i] בזה
ישמרוהו ויחיו נשמתו מרתיחת
כחות הדין המתגברים עליו
וישתתפו נצוצות נשמותם עם
נשמות הצדיקים המתים[ii] הבאים
ללוותו אלו פורשים כנפיהם
עליו מלמעלה והחיים מסייעים
אותו מלמטה ובשתים יכסו פניו
מלמעלה ובשתים יכסו רגליו
מלמטה ובזכותו יעופף להקרב
קרבן לפני ה׳ במזבחו הטהור
ע״י מיכאל כהנה רבה[iii] בעונתה
ובזה יתעורר כהן עליון
שבאצילות חסד אל כל היום על
פי מדותיו ורוח אחד יחיה להם
באחדותא בדבקותא וברעותא
שלים ינהרון כל בוצינין עילאין
ויתרק עליהון משחא דרבותא
עילא עילאה מעתיקא קדישא
סתימא דכלא. ואמרו בפ׳
ויחי דף רמ״ח ת״ח כד נשמתא
סלקא אתער כלא לגבי נוקבא him.

Therefore, by awakening the Tree of Life over the departed through the power of spirituality sealed and hidden in the verses of Scripture[A]—with the intention directed to their letters, vowels, and cantillation marks—they will protect him and revive his soul from the intensity of the forces of judgment prevailing over him.[B] The sparks of their souls will join with the souls of the righteous dead who come to accompany him. These spread their wings over him from above, while the living assist him from below. "With two they cover his face from above, and with two they cover his feet from below."[1] Through this merit, he will fly to be offered as a sacrifice before the Lord on His pure altar by Michael, the great priest, in his appointed time.

This will arouse the supernal priest in the realm of Emanation—Chesed,[2] Divine loving-kindness—throughout the day according to his attributes. One spirit will enliven them in unity, attachment, and complete will.[C] All the supernal lights will shine, and the supreme anointing oil will be poured

[A] Or: "when arousing the Tree of Life over the deceased through the spiritual power embedded and concealed within biblical verses" — This alternate version uses 'arousing' instead of 'awakening' for 'בהתעורר' and 'embedded' instead of 'sealed,' which might better convey the mystical concept that divine power is inherently contained within the text rather than merely sealed within it. The term 'biblical verses' is more specific than the general 'verses of Scripture.'

[B] Or: "they will safeguard him and vitalize his soul from the fervor of the powers of judgment that intensify against him" — This alternative uses 'safeguard' and 'vitalize' which might better capture the active, energetic nature of the spiritual protection described. 'Fervor' for 'רתיחת' (literally 'boiling/seething') and 'intensify' for 'המתגברים' (from root meaning 'to strengthen/overpower') may better convey the dynamic, threatening quality of these judgment forces.

[C] Or: "A single spirit will animate them in unification, cleaving, and perfect desire" — This alternative uses more technical mystical terminology: 'unification' for 'אחדותא', 'cleaving' for 'דבקותא' (which has specific connotations in Jewish mysticism of spiritual adhesion), and 'perfect desire' for 'רעותא שלים' (which better captures the willful yearning implied in the Aramaic term). 'Animate' may also better convey the life-giving quality implied in 'יחיה'.

[1] This is an allusion to Isaiah 6:2, which describes seraphic angels covering their faces and feet with their wings in the divine presence. By applying this imagery to the dying person, the text suggests they are being treated with the same reverence as the divine presence itself.

[2] This refers to the divine attribute of Loving-kindness (Chesed) in the highest spiritual world (Atzilut/Emanation). In kabbalistic cosmology, human actions on earth activate corresponding forces in these upper spiritual realms.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that Hebrew letters, vowels, and cantillation marks contain divine power that can be activated through proper intention. The text suggests that biblical verses recited with this awareness create tangible spiritual protection for the dying person.

[ii] This describes a mystical cooperation between the souls of the living attendants and the souls of deceased righteous individuals who come to escort the departing soul. This creates a supernatural protection both from above (dead souls) and below (living attendants).

[iii] The archangel Michael is depicted as a celestial High Priest who receives the soul as an offering. This creates a parallel between earthly death rituals and the Temple service, with Michael serving the same function as the High Priest did in the Jerusalem Temple.

דהא איהי אתאחדת בתיאובתא
80 שלימתא ואתקשרת ביה ואם
ימצאו שם עשרה שיעסקו כלם
בדברים שבקדושה[i] ובשירי
דוד שכינה הבוחרת בשירי
זמרה אתיא על ראש המטה
85 עם עלמות שיר ומלאכין
דשכינתא דצלותא דסגיאין
קב״ה מתעטר בה בגין דסלקא
בגווניו סגיאין ואתכלילת מכמה
סטרין ואתעבידא עטרה ומנחא
90 ע״י סנדלפון רבא ויקירא על
רישא דצדיק חי עלמא:[ii]

upon them from the Holy Ancient One, the most concealed of all.[1] 80R

And they said in Parashat Vayechi, page 248: "Come and see, when the soul ascends, everything is aroused toward the feminine aspect, for it unites with complete desire and attaches itself to it." And if ten people are found there who engage in matters 85R of holiness and in the songs of David, the Divine Presence, who chooses melodious songs, comes to the head of the bed with maidens of song and the angels of the Divine Presence. For when many pray, the Holy One, blessed be He, is crowned with their 90R prayer because it ascends with many aspects and includes many sides, and becomes a crown placed by the great and precious Sandalphon on the head of the Righteous One, the Life of the World.[2]

פרק ד׳

Chapter 4

מה נאמר ומה נדבר ומה נצטדק
בראותינו גם בני אדם גם בני
איש כי הבל יחמיון ומלתי מילין
הציקתני רוחי בטני בראותי

What can we say, what can we speak, and how can we justify ourselves[3] when we see both ordinary people and distinguished individuals[4] murmuring vanity? Words press upon me, my spirit and my

[1] This refers to 'עתיקא קדישא' (Atika Kadisha), one of the highest divine configurations in Kabbalah, representing God's most hidden essence. The text suggests that proper deathbed ritual can draw down illumination from even this most elevated source.

[2] The angel Sandalphon is described here in his role of weaving crowns from prayers and placing them on the divine head. 'Righteous One, Life of the World' (צדיק חי עלמא) refers to a divine configuration, specifically the sefirah of Yesod, which channels divine flow into our world.

[3] The opening follows a classic rhetorical structure in Jewish ethical literature, using a series of rhetorical questions to express deep dismay at human behavior.

[4] The Hebrew 'בני אדם' and 'בני איש' creates a distinction between common people and those of higher status, emphasizing that this problem affects all social classes.

[i] This emphasizes the importance of having a minyan (quorum of ten) present at death, not just for prayers but for creating a sacred space where the Divine Presence manifests. When ten people focus on holy matters at the deathbed, they create a conduit for divine energies.

[ii] Cf. Parashat Korach, Zohar 177b — This passage is cited to establish the kabbalistic principle that all religious actions should unify opposing divine forces, particularly masculine and feminine aspects. This foundational concept explains why proper care for the dying is spiritually powerful—it unites divine realms. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 131a — This reference establishes that divine reward matches human effort—just as humans strive to unify divine aspects through commandments, God provides corresponding spiritual benefits to humans and their partners in the afterlife. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Ki Tetze — This citation explains that proper deathbed rituals constitute 'loving-kindness toward God' by helping to 'redeem' the Divine Presence. This positions care for the dying as a supreme religious duty that directly benefits both the divine and human realms. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi 248 — This reference explains that a soul's departure creates cosmic reverberations, specifically arousing the feminine aspect of divinity. It suggests that death is not merely a human event but a cosmic one that affects higher spiritual realms. | Cf. Isaiah 6:2 — The phrase 'With two they cover his face from above, and with two they cover his feet from below' alludes to Isaiah's throne vision, suggesting that the dying person is being treated with the same reverence as the divine presence itself, with attending souls acting like the seraphim in Isaiah's vision.

המתאספים בבית הגוסס. וכן מדי עסקם בגופו אחר מותו ומספרים שיחות בטלות ודברים הרבה מרבים הבל שיש בו חטא ואוכלין ושותין ופוחזין כדאמרי׳ בירו׳ מסכת מ״ק כי אין לשעות בדברי שקר רק לעשות מלאכתן מלאכת שמים והרבה ריקים ופוחזים שפיהם שם עביט של מי רגלים[i] ומנבלים פיהם בבית המת ובבתי הקברות ובזה מרחיקים הקדושה מהם ומהמונם ובדד ישבו כי הם נזופים לשמים וקיימי ארבעים יום דלא אשתמע צלותהון ולא עיילא לפרגודא.[ii] והרבה סוררים נשבעים שבועת שוא ושקר ומתלוצצים שם ובזה מעוררים כח הגיהנם ח״ו ובפרט בליצנות מחזיקים מוסרות הדין כדאמרי׳ בפ״ק דע״ג קשה ליצנות שתחלתו יסורין וסופו כליה שנאמר ועתה אל תתלוצצו וגו׳. ופעמים מריבין ומחרפין ומגדפין זה את זה ומכים זה לזה. ובזה מסתירים כח הרחמים והדין הווה באויר המלא שוא ודבר כזב ואין בהם משכיל אל דל המוטל לפניהם נמצא

innermost being are troubled[A] when I observe those who gather in the house of a dying person. Similarly, while they attend to the body after death, they engage in idle talk and multiply meaningless words that contain sin. They eat, drink, and act frivolously, as stated in the Jerusalem Talmud, tractate Mo'ed Katan, for one should not waste time with falsehoods but rather perform their task—the work of Heaven. Many empty and frivolous people make their mouths like a vessel of waste and defile their speech in the house of the deceased and in cemeteries, thereby distancing holiness from themselves and their crowd.[B] They dwell alone because they are under divine censure,[1] and for forty days their prayers are not heard and do not pass through the heavenly curtain. Many rebellious ones swear false and vain oaths and mock there, thus arousing the power of Gehenna, God forbid. Especially through mockery, they strengthen the bonds of judgment, as stated in the first chapter of Avodah Zarah: "Mockery is severe, for its beginning is suffering and its end is destruction, as it is said, 'Now do not scoff, etc.'" Sometimes they quarrel, insult, and revile one another, even striking each other. In this way, they conceal the power of mercy, and judgment hovers in the air filled with falsehood and lies. None of them considers the poor soul laid before them[C]—thus the defender becomes a prosecutor and sin extinguishes a mitzvah. Many [A] Or: "Words burden me, and my spirit in my belly causes me anguish" — This alternative translation is more literal and preserves the somatic dimension of the spiritual distress, which is characteristic of biblical Hebrew expressions of emotional turmoil where the belly/innards are the seat of emotions. This might be preferred in contexts seeking to emphasize the physical manifestation of spiritual distress.

[B] Or: "through this they cause holiness to withdraw from themselves and their assembly" — This alternative emphasizes the active agency of the inappropriate behavior in causing the withdrawal of divine presence, rather than merely creating distance. It might be preferred in contexts emphasizing human responsibility for spiritual consequences.

[C] Or: "None among them pays wise attention to the vulnerable one lying before them" — This alternative preserves the allusion to Psalm 41:1 ('Happy is he who considers the poor/vulnerable') and emphasizes the wisdom aspect of 'משכיל'. It might be preferred in contexts where the biblical resonance is important.

[1] The phrase 'נזופים לשמים' refers to being in a state of divine disapproval or rebuke, a serious spiritual condition that isolates the person from divine communion.

[i] The author uses a particularly harsh metaphor here comparing the mouths of inappropriate funeral attendees to a vessel for waste water, emphasizing the severity of inappropriate speech in the presence of the dead.

[ii] This references the rabbinic concept that certain improper behaviors result in a forty-day period during which one's prayers cannot ascend through the heavenly curtain (pargod) to be heard by God.

הסניגור נעשה קטיגור ועבירה
מכבה מצוה. וכמה פעמים
צווחתי בכרוכיא ונתתי עליהם
בקולי לבל יאשמו בזה. וכל
שאפשר בידו למחות בהם ומוחה
עושה חסד עם החיים ועם המתים
וזכות הרבים תלוי בו והמצוה
הזאת על הכהנים והשרים אשר
בכל עיר ועיר להחזיק בדק
זה. ולהרים מכשול מדרך עמי
אני אהרן ברכיה ממודינ״ה
יצ״ו[i] הצעיר שבמשפחתי בינותי
במקרא ושום שכל במזמורים
ופסוקים מסוגלים בסדרם
ובטעמם[ii] כל אחד קורא זה לזה
בכוונה נאותה אפי׳ כפי פשטם
מלבד שהמעמיק בהם ימצא נופת
מתוק בסדר קריאתן והצעתי
אותם לפני בני גילי הצריכים
סעד לתומכם אשר על שפתם
יכונו קצת מהם או כלם מדי
עסקם בגמילות חסד של אמת וכן
המזמורים הם מסוגלים לכוונה
זו כפי פשט הפסוקים מלבד
כוונה מסותרת שיש בכל א׳ מהם
בכלל ובפרט ובראשי תיבות
ובסופי תיבות ורמז תמורות
של כ״ב אלפא ביתות[iii] קצתם
יכוונו לתקון נפש רוח נשמה
וחלוץ עצמות וכפרת אשמות
וקצת מהם לדפוק על פתחי
רחמים שעל הארץ יריקו וקצת
מהם נגד נפשות הצדיקים המתים
אשר שמה כי באים נגד הצדיק

times I have cried out loudly and raised my voice against them so they would not be guilty of this. Anyone who can protest against them and does so performs kindness for both the living and the dead, and the merit of the many depends on him. This responsibility falls upon the priests and leaders in every city to maintain this breach[1] and to remove stumbling blocks from the path of my people.

I, Aaron Berechia of Modena (may his Rock preserve him and grant him life), the youngest in my family, have contemplated Scripture and applied my understanding to psalms and verses that are spiritually potent in their arrangement and meaning. Each calls to the other with proper intention,[2] even according to their plain meaning, though one who delves deeper will find sweet honey in the order of their recitation. I have presented these before my contemporaries who need support, that some or all of these may be established upon their lips as they engage in true acts of loving-kindness. These psalms are suited for this purpose according to the plain meaning of the verses, besides the hidden intentions contained in each of them—generally and specifically, in their initial and final letters, and in the encoded transformations of the twenty-two letters of the alphabet. Some are intended for rectifying the soul, spirit, and higher soul,[3] for strengthening the bones, and for atonement of guilt. Some are for knocking on the gates of mercy to pour forth upon the earth, and some correspond to the souls of the righteous dead who are present, for they come to support the righteous one from among those righteous who performed similar deeds, besides his relatives and those who have mercy on him. This is clearly evident from [1] The Hebrew ‘להחזיק בדק’ refers to maintaining or repairing breaches, a metaphor drawn from Temple maintenance that the author applies to maintaining proper spiritual conduct.

[2] This appears to allude to Isaiah 6:3 where the seraphim call to one another ‘Holy, Holy, Holy,’ suggesting that the properly arranged biblical verses create a celestial harmony similar to angelic praise.

[3] The Hebrew terms ‘נפש רוח נשמה’ refer to the three primary levels of the soul in Kabbalah, which require different types of spiritual rectification.

[i] The author identifies himself here as Aaron Berechia of Modena. The acronym יצ״ו stands for ‘ישמרהו צורו ויחייהו’ (may his Rock preserve him and grant him life).

[ii] The author indicates that he has carefully arranged psalms and biblical verses in specific sequences that have spiritual potency (segulah) not just in their content but in their order and cantillation, reflecting kabbalistic principles about the spiritual power of proper textual arrangements.

[iii] This refers to various kabbalistic techniques for interpreting and activating the mystical power of sacred texts, including notarikon (acronyms formed from initial or final letters) and temurah (letter substitution using the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet).

מאותן הצדיקים שעשו מעין מעשיו[i] מלבד קריבוי ורחמוהי
70 וזה נראה ברור מכמה מעשים שהובאו בירו׳ פ׳ אחרון דסוטה. ומהם לבסום כחות הדין ומהם ליחוד קב״ה ושכינתיה ומהם להגין מהחצונים בפסוקי היחוד
75 כחות קדושים מקבלים עם כחות משפיעים. מקבלים דין מן דין ביחוד קרבנא דא דסליק כדפי׳ בפ׳ נח דף ס״ח דאמרו בר נש דאיהו זכאה איהו קרבנא ממש
80 לכפרא ויחד כלם עונין ואומרים קדוש קדוש קדוש ה׳ צבאות מלא כל הארץ כבודו. ועיין בר״מ פ׳ בהר סיני דף ק״ט דפי׳ סוד כחות קדושים משפיעים
85 וכחות מקבלים בדרוש שאומר כי התפלות מיחדות מדרגות האצילות המתלבש בשבת בהיכלות הבריאה ובחול על לבושי מלכות אלו יש לבושי חול
90 כי הבריאה מתלבשת בז׳ היכלות היצירה. ברם התקרבות כורסיין ומלאכי דאינון אברים מלבד צריך הקרבות ונפש ורוח הצדיק ודאי בעלייתה היא קרבן לקרב
95 גופין ואברין דלבר ממלכא ומטרוניתא. ובכח עליית נשמתו עם הגה הקדוש המעלים החיים עליו יעשה קרוב ויחוד באורות עולם האצילות בפנימיותם ששם
100 עולה הבל התפלה והתחנה עם סוד המחשבה שהיא בעולם הכל. ומשם היא מקור הנשמה. וכבר ידענו כי מההבלי העולים מפסוקי התורה נעשה מכל אות 105 ואות מלאך רוחני המתעלה

several accounts brought in the Jerusalem Talmud in the final chapter of Sotah.

Some verses serve to sweeten the forces of judgment, some for unifying the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence, and some to protect against external forces. In verses of unification, holy forces that receive join with forces that bestow.[A] They receive judgment from judgment in unity, this offering that ascends, as explained in Parashat Noach, page 68, where they stated that a person who is meritorious is literally an offering for atonement. Together they all respond and say: "Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory." See also Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Behar Sinai, page 109, which explains the secret of holy forces that bestow and forces that receive, in the discourse stating that prayers unify the levels of Atzilut (Emanation) which clothe themselves on Sabbath in the palaces of Beriah (Creation), and on weekdays in the garments of Malkhut (Kingdom). These are weekday garments, for Beriah clothes itself in the seven palaces of Yetzirah[1] (Formation).

However, the approach of the Thrones and angels, which are limbs, requires additional offerings. And certainly the soul and spirit of the righteous person, in their ascent, are an offering to bring near the bodies and limbs that are outside the King and Queen. Through the power of the ascent of his soul, along with the holy utterance that the living raise over him, a drawing near and unification occurs in the inner lights of the world of Atzilut, where the breath of prayer and supplication ascends, along with the secret of thought which is in the world of the All. From there is the source of the soul.

We already know that from the breaths rising from verses of the Torah, from each and every letter, a spiritual angel is formed that ascends level

70R 75R 80R 85R 90R 95R 100R 105R

[A] Or: "receptive holy powers unite with emanating powers" — This alternative translation uses 'powers' instead of 'forces' and more directly indicates the kabbalistic principle of masculine/feminine or giving/receiving energies in the divine realm. This might be preferred in contexts emphasizing technical kabbalistic terminology.

[1] In Kabbalistic cosmology, each spiritual world (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah) contains internal structures including palaces (heichalot) that serve as dwelling places for different spiritual entities and forces.

[i] This presents the important kabbalistic concept that righteous souls who performed similar deeds during their lifetimes come to assist the newly departed soul in its transition, creating spiritual affinities that transcend death.

מדרגה אחר מדרגה עד שרש
הענין ההוא ויפעלו למעלה
פעולה נפלאת עד כי יתעורר
שפע עליון לירד ולהשפיע דרך
מקומות אחיזת נשמתו שנשאר
שרשם למעלה כי אין דבר
רוחני נעקר ממקומו ומה שנכנס
באדם הוא מהתפשטות שרשה
העליון. ונמצא חוט משוך בין
הנפש לאדם וחוט אחר בין הרוח
לאדם וחוט אחר בין הנשמה
לו[i] והם כשלשה חוטין של שתי
והמצות והמעשים טובים הם
בחוטי ערב[ii] המחזיקים ג׳ חוטי
שתי אלו ועושה אותו יריעה
קיימת בן האדם ע״י תורה ומצות
מוסיף מאורי אור בחינות שרשי
קדושת התורה ומצות בצנור
המשכת קדושת חלקי נפשו והוא
כמוסיף ערב על השתי. והעון
מתדבק בנפש ומפסיק בין צנור
קדושת חלקי נפשו לקונו. וזהו
קפדתי כאורג חיי.[iii] ואין לו
תקון עד ישוב יחבר ההבדל אשר
הבדיל והפסיק בטומאת עונו
ע״י תשובה בעה״ז או ע״י מירוק
חלאת העון אחרי מותו כי עד
אשר ישיב לחבר נפשו עם קונו
א״א לו ליהנות מאושר מעשיו
הטובים[iv] שכל עקר האושר אינו

after level until the root of that matter. They operate above in a wondrous way until they arouse a supernal flow to descend and influence through the places where his soul is anchored, whose roots remain above. For no spiritual thing is uprooted 110R from its place, and what enters a person is from the extension of its supernal root.[1] Thus, there is a thread stretched between the nefesh and the person, another thread between the ruach and the person, and another thread between the neshamah and him. 115R
These are like three threads of warp, and the commandments and good deeds are like threads of weft that strengthen these three warp threads, making them into an enduring fabric. Similarly, a person, through Torah and commandments, adds illumina- 120R tions of light to the aspects of the roots of the holiness of Torah and commandments in the channel that draws the holiness of the portions of his soul, like adding weft to warp.

Sin clings to the soul and interrupts between the 125R channel of holiness of the parts of his soul and his Creator. This is the meaning of "I have been cut off like a weaver's thread."[A] There is no rectification until he returns and reconnects[2] what was separated and interrupted by the impurity of his sin, through 130R repentance in this world or through the cleansing of the filth of sin after death. For until he returns to connect his soul with his Creator, it is impossible for him to enjoy the happiness of his good deeds, since the essence of happiness is nothing but the attach- 135R

[A] Or: "I have rolled up like a weaver my life" — This alternative follows the Hebrew of Isaiah 38:12 more literally. The image is of a weaver who, having finished a piece of cloth, cuts it from the loom and rolls it up. This might be preferred in contexts where the precise biblical allusion is important.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic principle that all earthly phenomena are extensions or projections of higher spiritual realities, with nothing existing in the lower worlds without a corresponding root in the upper worlds.

[2] This emphasizes the kabbalistic concept of teshuvah (repentance) as literally a 'return' that repairs cosmic connections, not merely a change in behavior.

[i] The author presents the kabbalistic concept that the three main soul components (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) remain connected to their divine source through spiritual threads or channels, creating a continuous connection between the human being and the divine realms.

[ii] This weaving metaphor is central to the author's understanding of spiritual dynamics: the soul components are like vertical warp threads, while commandments and good deeds are like horizontal weft threads that strengthen and connect the structure. This explains why proper ritual actions are essential for the soul's integrity.

[iii] The author quotes from Isaiah 38:12, part of King Hezekiah's prayer when he was critically ill, continuing the weaving metaphor to explain how sin disrupts the spiritual fabric of life.

[iv] This expresses the fundamental kabbalistic principle that the ultimate purpose of human existence

כי אם דבקות נפשו עם קונו ואיך יהיה לו כן והוא נפרד ממנו וגם כל מעשה הטוב אשר יעשה האדם לא יהנה ממנו אחרי מותו עד ירחץ יטהר מטומאתו כמשל האורג הקוצר יריעתו כמדובר. וכן אם יתפלל לא יעלה הבל פיו לרצון עד אחר תשובתו כי אח״כ יחזרו וישפיעו דרך מדרגות אחיזת נשמתו והכל לפי הכוונה. ואפי׳ פשטי הדברים יעוררו עד מלכות אך הוא כמי שמדבר מאחרי כתפיו וזה מתבאר בפ׳ חקת ועיין בפ׳ ויקהל דף רי״ז כי שם פי׳ איך מעוררים למעלה מלות התפלה והתורה ושירי זמרה: [i]

ment of his soul to its Creator. How can this be so for him when he is separated from Him? Also, all the good deeds that a person performs will not benefit him after death until he washes and purifies himself from his impurity, like the example of the weaver cutting his fabric, as mentioned. Similarly, if he prays, the breath of his mouth will not ascend favorably until after his repentance, for afterward they will return and influence through the levels where his soul is anchored, all according to the intention. Even the plain meanings of the words will arouse up to Malkhut, but it is like one who speaks from behind his shoulders.[1] This is explained in Parashat Chukat, and see Parashat Vayakhel, page 217, for there it explains how the words of prayer, Torah, and songs of praise arouse above.

פרק ה׳

Chapter 5

אלה הם ציוני המזמורים וכל יחיד יבחר מהם מה שיראה בעיניו או יוסיף עליהם מדעתו הרחבה מזמור ט״ז כ׳ כ״ב כ״ג כ״ד כ״ה ל׳ מ״ב מ״ג נ״א ס״ו פ״ד יושב בסתר ק״ג קי״ז קי״ח ק״כ קכ״א קכ״ג ק״ל ק״מ קמ״א קמ״ב קמ״ג קמ״ח קמ״ט ק״נ

These are the designated psalms, and each individual may choose from them as seems appropriate in their eyes, or add to them according to their broad understanding: Psalms 16, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 30, 42, 43, 51, 66, 84, “He who dwells in the shelter” [Psalm 91], 103, 117, 118, 120, 121, 123, 130, 140, 141, 142, 143, 148, 149, and 150. And concerning Psalms 148 and 150, it is written in Parashat Pekudei, page 232, is devekut (attachment/cleaving to God), and that sin’s primary damage is the separation it creates between the soul and its divine source.

[1] This vivid metaphor suggests that prayer without proper repentance still reaches the divine realm of Malkhut but in an indirect, ineffective manner, as if speaking while facing away from the listener.

[i] Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Mo’ed Katan — The reference establishes halakhic authority for the author’s criticism of inappropriate behavior during deathbed and funeral rituals | Cf. Tractate Avodah Zarah — The citation provides textual support from rabbinic literature for the author’s admonition against disrespectful behavior in the presence of the dying or deceased | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Sotah — This reference supports the kabbalistic concept that souls of righteous individuals who performed similar deeds in life come to assist the newly departed soul in its transition | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Noach — This reference establishes the kabbalistic foundation for the author’s instruction that the soul of a righteous person serves as a spiritual sacrifice that ascends to higher realms | Cf. Ra’aya Mehemna, Parashat Behar Sinai — This citation provides the mystical framework for understanding how the prayers and meditations offered at deathbed rituals function to unify divine worlds, particularly explaining the difference between Sabbath and weekday spiritual dynamics | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Chukat — This reference expands the reader’s understanding of how spiritual mechanics function when prayers are offered in an impure state, explaining that they still reach Malkhut but with diminished efficacy | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This reference provides detailed kabbalistic teachings about the spiritual dynamics of prayer and Torah recitation, which is central to understanding the efficacy of deathbed rituals proposed in Ma’avar Yabok | Cf. Isaiah 38:12 — This biblical reference connects the text to traditional Jewish deathbed prayers, specifically using the metaphor of weaving to explain how sin disrupts the spiritual fabric connecting soul to Creator

ומזמור קמ״ח וק״נ כתוב בפרשת
פקודי דף רל״ב שהם כלל כל
התושבחות ויחד כלם שם כ״ח
מזמורים כנגד כ״ח פרקים שביד
הגדולה שהוא שם ההוי״ה בד׳
אותיותיו ומלואו[i] שהם י״ד ויד
החזקה הוא שם אהיה ומלואו
המושפע משם הוי״ה שהוא לימין
והוא ג״כ י״ד וליחוד כ״ח מחנות
שכינה שהיא הלבנה העליונה
המלבנת עונותיהם של ישראל
המזדמנת עם מחנות יה להקביל
הנשמה הקדושה העולה ליחדה
ולקשרה עם קוצה. והם מוסיפים
כח ומחלימים ומחיים הנשמה
וגם הגוף. ומיבעי לאדם לארמא
ימינא על שמאלא בכח יד רמה
המתווכת ביניהם שבכחה הוא
גידול שמיה רבה שהם עשר
אותיות של הוי״ה מנוקדים חולם
סגול קמץ סגול. ויבואו אחריהם
קי״ב פסוקי תורה נביאים
וכתובים יחד כלם טובים לישא
אותם על שפתיו האיש הישראלי
מדי אשר הוא מוכן לעבור
המעבר יב״ק[ii] מתחתית לעילית
וימצע ביניהם מהמזמורים
הנרשמים א׳ או ב׳ או ג׳ ומספר
מפקד הפסוקים מכוון ליחוד ג׳
שמות שהם אהי״ה הוי״ה אדנו״ת
מספרם יחד קי״ב. ויכוין האומר
בי נצוץ נשמת החולה שכלולה
בנשמתו על דרך שכל ישראל
ערבין זה לזה בכחה מסייע ונותן
כח ואון לו ופיו כפיו ודבורו that they encompass all praises. Together, there are 28 psalms, corresponding to the 28 sections of the 10R

"Great Hand" [Yad HaChazakah], which is the divine name YHVH in its four letters and their full spelling, which equals 14, and the "Strong Hand" is the divine name Ehyeh and its full spelling, which flows from the name YHVH, which is on the right, 15R and it also equals 14. This is for the unification of the 28 camps of the Divine Presence, which is the supernal moon that whitens the sins of Israel,[1] and which joins with the camps of Yah to receive the holy soul as it ascends, to unify it and bind it with 20R its Source. These add strength, heal, and enliven both the soul and the body.[2]

One must elevate the right over the left through the power of the "uplifted hand" that mediates between them, through which comes the magnification 25R of "His great Name," which consists of the ten letters of YHVH vocalized with cholam, segol, kamatz, segol. Following these come 112 verses from Torah, Prophets, and Writings, all of which are good for an Israelite to recite when prepared to cross the YaBOK 30R passage from the lower to the higher realm. Among these verses, one should intersperse one, two, or three of the designated psalms. The number of these verses is intentionally set at 112, corresponding to the unification of three divine names: Ehyeh, YHVH, and 35R Adnut, which together have the numerical value of 112.

The one who recites should have in mind that a spark of the sick person's soul is included within his own soul, in the manner that all Israel are guaran- 40R tors for one another. Through this power, he assists and gives strength and vigor to the sick person, so that his mouth becomes like the mouth of the sick

[1] This phrase employs a wordplay in Hebrew between 'levanah' (moon) and 'malbenet' (whitens/purifies), suggesting that the Divine Presence, compared to the moon, has a purifying effect on sins, turning them white (an idiom for forgiveness in Hebrew based on Isaiah 1:18).

[2] The text establishes that proper recitation of these psalms and verses has both spiritual and physical therapeutic effects, representing the holistic approach to healing characteristic of kabbalistic medicine.

[i] The text refers to the divine name YHVH (יהוה) and its 'filling' or 'full spelling' where each letter is spelled out in full. This kabbalistic technique creates expanded forms of divine names with deeper mystical significance.

[ii] The Hebrew term 'YaBOK' (יב״ק) has multiple levels of significance: it refers to the biblical Jabbok river that Jacob crossed (Genesis 32), it has the numerical value of 112 (which equals the combined value of three divine names), and its letters form an acronym for 'He will answer us on the day we call' (יעננו ביום קראנו).

כדבור המוטל על ערש דוי וכמו
שמוסיף שבע רצון על נשמת
האיש הלזה בזה יתוסף לו רבו
וחיי וחינא וחסדא וכל המוסיף
מוסיפין לו. ואמרו כי תיבת אמן
אותיות הבאות אחרי ג׳ אלה
הם בנס ויש אומרים שהוא שם
קדוש והוא בסוד היחוד על ידו.
ושם זה עולה קי״ב וגם יב״ק
שהוא שם קדוש ועליו נאמר
ויעבר את מעבר יב״ק והוא
סוד ״יעננו ״ביום ״קראנו והוא
סוד יחוד ברכה קדושה. יחוד
באמצע בת״ת. קדושה משמאל.
דכתיב וקדשת את הלוים. ברכה
מימין. והם סוד ג׳ שמות הנזכר.
וג׳ שמות אלו הם סוד פסוק
שיר השירים אשר לשלמה וי״ב
אותיות אלו מצורפים יש להם כח
גדול לכל דבר והוא סוד מלכות
ת״ת בינה או כתר שבשתיהם
צודק שם אהי״ה וצרופם אות
א׳ מכל שם. ויש מוסיפין עמו
ג״כ סוד שמע ישראל ה׳ אלהינו
ה׳ ישראל ה׳ מימין. אלהינו
משמאל. ה׳ שהיא יחוד הכל
יחד באמצע ור״ת ארבע מלות
אלו הוא ייא״י והיינו מלוי שם
ס״ג והוא שם קדוש ולפי זה הם
ד׳ שמות ידו״ד ייא״י אהי״ה
אדנ״י ומהם יצטרפו ד׳ שמות
בנודע. ובספר הקנה הפליא
לדבר בסגולתם ושם הנתוסף על
יב״ק עולה אל והיינו אל יב״ק
והוא שם קדוש והיינו כי במקלי
עברתי כ״י עולה א״ל עם המלה.
במקלי סוף תיבה ואמצע תיבה
וראש תיבה יב״ק ושם ייא״י סודו
בכתר והוא היחוד הגמור והוא
מתלבש בשם אהי״ה ושם ידו״ד
מתלבש באדני. ויש עוד הוי״ה
ואהי״ה בסוד רישא דמלכא
והוי״ה ואדנו״ת בסוד התפשטות

person,[1] and his speech like the speech of the one lying on the sickbed. Just as he adds divine favor to the soul of this person, so will increase come to him—increase of his teacher's wisdom, life, grace, and kindness—for whoever adds, to him it shall be added. 45R

They have said that the word "Amen" consists of letters that follow the letters of these three divine names by the miracle of gematria, and some say it is a holy name involved in the mystery of unification. This name has the numerical value of 112, as does YaBOK, which is a holy name, and concerning it is said, "And he crossed the ford of Yabok" [Genesis 32:23]. This contains the mystery of "He will answer us on the day we call" [the initials of which spell YaBOK], and it is the mystery of Unification, Blessing, and Holiness.[2] Unification is in the middle, in Tiferet; Holiness is on the left, as it is written, "And you shall sanctify the Levites"; Blessing is on the right. These are the secret of the three names mentioned above. 50R 55R 60R

These three names are also the secret of the verse "The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's," and these twelve letters, when combined, have great power for all matters. This is the mystery of Malkhut, Tiferet, and Binah, or Keter, for in both of the latter the name Ehyeh is appropriate, and their combination takes one letter from each name. Some also add the mystery of "Hear, O Israel: the LORD our God, the LORD" [Deuteronomy 6:4]—"Israel" and "the LORD" on the right, "our God" on the left, and "the LORD," which unifies everything, in the middle. The initial letters of these four words spell YeYA"I, which is the filling of the name Sa"G, a holy name. According to this, there are four names: YHVH, YeYA"I, Ehyeh, and Adny, from which are formed four names, as is known. 65R 70R 75R 80R

In the book HaKaneh, there is wonderful discussion of their properties. The name that is added to YaBOK equals E"L, meaning "El YaBOK" is a holy name, as in "for with my staff [bemakli] I crossed" [Genesis 32:11]—"KI" equals E"L with the word. "BeMakli" contains the final letter, middle 85R

[1] This describes a mystical principle of representation or substitution, where the one reciting prayers becomes a spiritual proxy for the sick person, channeling divine energy on their behalf.

[2] These three concepts correspond to the three letters of YaBOK (יב״ק): Yod for Yichud (unification), Bet for Berachah (blessing), and Kuf for Kedushah (holiness), showing how the acronym itself contains the essence of the mystical practice.

גופא והם א׳ אל הימין וא׳
אל השמאל ומתייחדים באמצע
בנזכר בספ״ר ובהם סוד יחוד
מלמעלה למטה וממטה למעלה.
והצעתי פה דרוש זה הגם שהם
דברים כבושים להיותם מאד
מסוגלים לכוין בהם לעולם
ובפרט סמוך ליציאת נשמה
בפסוק שמע ישראל.[i] וג׳ שמות
אלו מהם עדון תחתון עדון עליון
וצרורא דחיי מכוונים לג׳ מיני
לבושים וג׳ עדונים המתהוים
מזיהרא עילאה בהתעוררות
מיין נוקבין המעלין הצדיקים
מדי עסקם במצות בעובדא
ובמלולא ורעותא ובתקון
נפש רוח נשמה ובזה מתעלים
כל אחד מהם ליסוד יב״ק
העליון: אמרו על בן עזאי שלפי
שהיה חורז מתורה לנביאים
ומנביאים לכתובים[ii] היתה האש
מלהטת סביבותיו כי בהתדבקות
המחשבה מתוך האצילות ההוא
שהיה מאציל וממשיך עליו היו
הדברים מתוספים ומתרבים
ומתוך השמחה היו נגלים אליו
ומאירים בכח מקור נשמתו
שהיא למעלה בין הקדושים ע״כ
ערכתי סדרן של פסוקים אלו
החורזים מתורה ת״ת לנביאים
נ״ה ומנביאים לכתובים מלכות
ובזה אמריהם ישישו ויעלזו
לפני אלהים ויגדל כח אדנ״י.
וברי״מ פ׳ פנחס דף רי״ז מאי
להצהיל פנים משמן אינון י״ב
פנים מיכאל אריה ד׳ פנים
דיליה ידו״ד ד׳ פנים דשור
ואיהו גבריאל ואינון ידו״ד ד׳
פנים דנשר ואיהו אוריאל ואינון
ידו״ד ואינון ממנן תחות חסד
פחד אמת דרגין דתלת אבהן
ואוקמוה רבנן האבות הן הן המרכבה וסלקין נהורין לחושבן

letter, and first letter spelling YaBOK. The name YeYA"I has its secret in Keter, and it is the complete unification, which clothes itself in the name Ehyeh, and the name YHVH clothes itself in Adny. There is also YHVH and Ehyeh in the mystery of "the head of the King," and YHVH and Adnut in the mystery of "the extension of the body," and these are one on the right and one on the left, unifying in the middle as mentioned in the Book [possibly Sefer Yetzirah], containing the mystery of unification from above to below and from below to above. 90R 95R

I have set forth this discourse here, even though these are concealed matters, because they are very beneficial to focus on at all times, and especially near the departure of the soul, during the recitation of the Shema Yisrael. These three names correspond to the lower paradise, the upper paradise, and the bond of life, which correspond to three types of garments and three delights that are formed from the supernal radiance through the awakening of the feminine waters that the righteous elevate during their engagement with commandments—in deed, in speech, and in thought—and in the rectification of soul, spirit, and higher soul, through which each of them is elevated to the foundation of the supernal YaBOK. 100R 105R 110R

They said of Ben Azzai that because he would string together teachings from Torah to Prophets and from Prophets to Writings, fire would blaze around him, for through the attachment of thought from that emanation that he would draw down upon himself, the matters would increase and multiply, and through joy they would be revealed to him and illuminate through the power of the source of his soul, which is above among the holy ones. Therefore, I have arranged the order of these verses, stringing them together from Torah (Tiferet) to Prophets (Netzach and Hod) and from Prophets to Writings (Malkhut), and through this their words will rejoice and exult before God, and the power of Adny will be magnified. 115R 120R 125R

In Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas, page 217, it asks: What is meant by "to make the face shine more than oil"? These are the twelve faces:

[i] The text emphasizes the special importance of reciting the Shema Yisrael prayer at the time of death, which aligns with traditional Jewish practice where this is considered the ideal final utterance.

[ii] The reference to Ben Azzai 'stringing together' teachings across the three divisions of Hebrew scripture represents a methodology of integrating all sacred texts into a unified system, which the author emulates in his own arrangement of verses.

יב״ק ואינון מלך מלך ימלוך שכל הוי״ה מנוקדת בנקודות ג׳ מלות אלו והוא סוד שם י״ב ומנייהו אתתקן גדפין ואנפין ועיינין גדפיו אדנ״י אנפוי הוי״ה עיינין אהי״ה. אדנ״י הוא לתקון המעשה הוי״ה לדבור אהי״ה למחשבה ויכוונו ליחד דבור בקול עם המחשבה העליונה ומשם לרעותא עילאה ובזה יתרבה אור עליון ויופיעו הרחמים ומיכאל וגבריאל רצים לגבי ההוא קלא דכתיב ורגליהם רגל ישרה. ובאתר דהוי״ה תמן הוא דרך ישרה: [i]

Michael is the lion with his four faces corresponding to YHVH; the four faces of the ox, which is Gabriel, corresponding to YHVH; the four faces of the eagle, which is Uriel, corresponding to YHVH. These are appointed beneath Chesed, Pachad, and Emet, the levels of the three Patriarchs, and the Rabbis established that "the Patriarchs themselves are the Chariot." The lights ascend to the numerical value of YaBOK, and they are "reigned," "reigns," "will reign," for each YHVH is vocalized with the vowels of these three words, and this is the mystery of the name of 12, and from them are established wings, faces, and eyes. The wings correspond to Adny, the faces to YHVH, and the eyes to Ehyeh. Adny is for the rectification of action, YHVH for speech, and Ehyeh for thought. They should have the intention to unify speech with voice and with the supernal thought, and from there to the supernal will, and through this supernal light will increase and mercy will shine forth.[1] Michael and Gabriel run toward that voice, as it is written, "And their legs were a straight leg" [Ezekiel 1:7]. And in the place where YHVH is found, there is the straight path.

פרק ו׳

Chapter 6

על פי הדברים האלה נראה לעניות דעתי כי טוב לחלק פסוקים אלו לג׳ מערכות[ii] באמור ביניהם

Based on these principles, it seems to me in my humble opinion that it would be good to divide these verses into three arrangements, reciting between them one, two, or three of the designated psalms.

[1] The ultimate purpose of the mystical practice described here is to increase the flow of divine mercy and light to aid the sick or dying person in their transition.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The text cites the Zohar, specifically Parashat Pekudei, to establish the significance of Psalms 148 and 150 as encompassing all praises. This reference adds authoritative weight to the author's selection of specific psalms for the ritual. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Pinchas — The author quotes from Ra'aya Mehemna (a section of the Zohar) to explain the mystical significance of the twelve angelic faces and their correspondence to divine names. This reference establishes the connection between celestial forces and the numerical value of YaBOK (112). | Cf. Genesis 32:23 — The text references Jacob's crossing of the Jabbok river as the scriptural basis for the YaBOK acronym, establishing this biblical narrative as the foundation for the mystical concept of transitioning between spiritual realms. | Cf. Deuteronomy 6:4 (Shema Yisrael) — The Shema prayer is referenced as having special mystical significance, particularly near the time of death. The author analyzes its structure to reveal hidden divine names and unifications. | Cf. Sefer HaKaneh — The author references the kabbalistic work Sefer HaKaneh regarding the mystical properties of divine names, indicating that the current text is drawing on established kabbalistic literature rather than introducing entirely novel concepts. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:7 — The quote from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot (Merkavah) connects the angelic beings to the divine names being discussed, reinforcing the relationship between heavenly forces and the mystical process described for assisting the sick or dying.

[ii] The author organizes his prayer system into three arrangements (ma'arachot), each corresponding to a divine name with specific numerical values. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that number,

א׳ או ב׳ או ג׳ מהמזמורים המצויינים. המערכה הראשונה תהיה מכ״א פסוקים כמספר אהי״ה אך טוב לישראל כי הוא חנון ורחום לכל פועל. המערכה השניה תהיה מכ״ו פסוקים כמספר שם הוי״ה ויכוין בנזכר. המערכה השלישית תהיה מס״ה פסוקים כמנין אדנ״י ויכוין כי ה׳ בהיכל קדשו ה״ס שהוא שם אדנו״ת[i] ובזה ישתקו פיות תחתונות המקטרגים ויחתו מגבורתם. וזהו וה׳ בהיכל קדשו אז ה״ס מפניו כל הארץ ומגמת פניו יהיה לתקון עליון נפש רוח לשמה של אותו העומד עליו בכח בטשת האורות הקדושים המתהוים מפיהם. המתפטר אם זוכה בכוונתו הטהורה מעלה מיין נוקבין בסוד נשמתו העולה ונפשות החיים שעומדים עליו מעוררים מיין דכורין עליו מלמעלה למטה.[ii] ולכן סדרי הפסוקים מתחיל לרמז והארת רוחניות משם אהי״ה ובטשת האורות מקדש האויר שעולים דרך בו ומפנים כחות הגורמים לו צער וחיל ובעתה מלבד כי מתהוה מהם שרפים ואופנים[iii] כנדרש בפ׳ פקודי ובכח נהורין אלין מעלין נשמת הנפטר על כנפי רוח ויפרשו כנפיהם יקחוהו וישאוהו על אברתם ועיין בריקנאט״י פ׳ וירא כי הדברים מתהוים באויר בסוד וכל העם רואים את הקולות ואמרו בפ׳ וילך כי דבריו של משה היו מתחקקים בשמא דקב״ה בדברי השירה

The first arrangement should consist of 21 verses, corresponding to the numerical value of the divine name “Ehyeh,” expressing that only good comes to Israel, for He is gracious and merciful to all His works. The second arrangement should consist of 26 verses, corresponding to the numerical value of the divine name YHVH, with the intention mentioned previously. The third arrangement should consist of 65 verses, corresponding to the numerical value of “Adonai,” with the intention that “the LORD is in His holy temple”—this is the secret of the divine name Adonut—and through this, the mouths of the lower accusers will be silenced, and they will be shattered from their might. This is the meaning of “the LORD is in His holy temple”—then “be silent before Him, all the earth.” One’s intention should be directed toward the supernal rectification of the soul, spirit, and higher soul of the person lying before him, through the impact of the holy lights that form from their mouths. 5R 10R 15R 20R

The departing one, if he merits through his pure intention, raises feminine waters through the mystery of his ascending soul, while the souls of the living who stand around him awaken masculine waters upon him from above to below. Therefore, the arrangements of verses begin by alluding to and illuminating spirituality from the divine name “Ehyeh.” The impact of these lights sanctifies the air through which they ascend and clears away the forces that cause suffering and trembling and terror. Moreover, from these verses are formed Seraphim and Ophanim, as expounded in Parashat Pekudei, and through the power of these lights, the soul of the departed is elevated on the wings of spirit. “And they shall spread their wings, take him, and carry him on their pinions.” 25R 30R 35R 40R

See Recanati on Parashat Vayera, for these things materialize in the air, as in the secret of “and all the people saw the voices.” And they said in structure, and divine names are interconnected and have real spiritual power.

[i] H”S (ה״ס) stands for ‘ha-sod’ (the secret), indicating that the author is revealing an esoteric interpretation: that the phrase ‘the LORD is in His holy temple’ alludes to the divine name Adnut.

[ii] This describes the kabbalistic concept of mystical union, where ‘feminine waters’ (spiritual energy rising from below) meet ‘masculine waters’ (spiritual energy descending from above). In this context, the dying person’s soul provides the feminine aspect while those reciting prayers around him draw down the masculine aspect, creating a cosmic union that facilitates the soul’s transition.

[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic teaching that human speech, particularly of sacred texts, creates actual spiritual entities. The Seraphim and Ophanim are categories of angels described in Ezekiel’s vision of the divine chariot (merkavah).

והיינו דכתיב עד תומם ומזה
נבין כח ההבל הקדוש ואיך
מקדש ההבל הנשמה להיות היכל
לרוחניות המתהוה ממנו ועיין
בדברי ההוא מארי דקבין אשר
הובא בתקון ס״ט דף ק״ו ע״א
ובכח ההבל המסקל המסלה
תזכה ותיסק לאסתחיי׳ בעי
בוסמין עילאין דנגדי מתלת עשר
נהרי דאפרסמונא דכיא[i] לעדן
בהן נשמתייהו דצדיקיא אשר
נתגלה לר׳ אבהו בשעת פטירתו
אשרי העם שככה לו. עוד בסוד
ג׳ שמות אלו יש דברים עתיקים
להעלות הנשמה וכבר זכו בהם
מפי גורי האר״י זצ״ל שלמים
וכן רבים אשר זכו לשמש הגאון
מורי מפאנו זצ״ל[ii] בחלקם יהא
חלקי והם יוסיפו על הנדרש
עשר ידות. ופסוקים אלו נאותים
ליאמר בכוונה ודעת צלולה
לעורר רחמים על הנפטר
בשבעה ימים הראשונים [iii]

Parashat Vayelech that Moses' words were engraved in the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, in the words of the Song, as it is written: "until they were completed." From this, we understand the power of the holy breath and how the breath sanctifies the soul to become a sanctuary for the spirituality that forms from it. See the words of that master of measurements brought in Tikkun 69, page 106a. And through the power of the breath that clears the path, the soul merits to ascend and bathe in the supernal fragrances that flow from the thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil, in which the souls of the righteous delight, as was revealed to Rabbi Abahu at the time of his passing. Happy is the people that has it so.

There are furthermore ancient matters concerning these three divine names for elevating the soul, and many complete ones have already merited to receive them from the disciples of the ARI, of blessed memory, as well as those who merited to serve my teacher, the Gaon of Fano, of blessed memory. May my portion be among them, and they add tenfold to what is required. These verses are appropriate to be recited with proper intention and clear consciousness to arouse mercy for the departed during the first seven days.

ובסוף השלשים עם ההשכבה
וכן בכל י״ב חדש בעת שירצה
לעורר על מתו ולהזכיר נשמתו

At the end of thirty days with the Hashkavah prayer,[1] and throughout the twelve months whenever one wishes to arouse remembrance for their

[1] The Hashkavah is a memorial prayer for the repose of the soul, recited at the grave and during subsequent memorial services.

[i] The 'rivers of pure balsam oil' represent a celestial realm where righteous souls are cleansed and refreshed after death. This image appears frequently in the Zohar and other kabbalistic texts as a metaphor for spiritual purification and delight in the afterlife.

[ii] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist who synthesized the teachings of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria. This reference confirms the author's intellectual lineage and places Ma'avar Yabok within the tradition of Italian Kabbalah influenced by Lurianic teachings.

[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This passage appears in the fourth section of Ma'avar Yabok, providing instructions for structuring prayers to aid the soul's transition. The author is organizing a prayer system using divine names as its framework. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author references this kabbalistic text to support his explanation of how holy breath/speech creates spiritual entities and sanctifies the soul. | Cf. Zohar — The author cites this section of the Zohar to explain how recited verses create spiritual entities (Seraphim and Ophanim) that assist the departing soul's ascent. | Cf. Commentary of Recanati — The author references Rabbi Menahem Recanati's kabbalistic commentary to explain how spoken words materialize spiritual realities in the air. | Cf. Writings of Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano — The author mentions his teacher, the Gaon of Fano (Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano), indicating that deeper teachings about these three divine names exist in his tradition.

לפני קונו ובפרט בג׳ לבכי
באשר הזכרנו למעלה. אמרו
דורשי רשומות כי צריך להזהר
שבעת המות לא ישאר בלום
מאבריו חוץ למטה כי כל הנשאר
ממנו חוץ לזאת המטה לא יאסף
ולא יקבר לחית השדה נתתיהו
לאכלה[i] וזה לפי שבסביבות
המטה הנזכר יש מיני משחית
ופורענות בד״א כשושנה בין
החוחים[ii] לפיכך צריך שיאסף
אל עמיו ולא חוץ לבחות
הטומאה. וכן צריך ליזהר
שהרצועה של יד לא תהיה תלויה
רק יכרכנה סביב הזרוע והטעם
כי רגליה יורדות מות[iii] וסמך
לזה מה שאמרו בשבת ובלבד
שלא תצא רצועה מתחת ידו
טפח. וצריך אותו אבר הנשאר
חוץ לסבול יסורים רבים עד כי
יוכל להכנס בפנים והוא נקראת
פליטת הגלגל[iv] ובזה נבין עג
עוגה ועמד בתוכה.[v] וזהו ענין
אסיפה הנאמרת בצדיקים מלבד
הנדרש עליו שהוא אסיפת נשמתו
להיכלי הקדושה ולאבותיו
ולחביריו הקדושים ומידי עברה
בועטת כל בחות הדין המנגדים אותה בקולה הגדול שהולכת

deceased and mention their soul before their Creator, especially during the three days of weeping[1] as we mentioned above. Those who interpret sacred texts have said that one must be careful that at the time of death, none of the person's limbs remain outside the bed, for whatever remains outside this bed will not be gathered or buried, but "to the beasts of the field I have given it for food." This is because surrounding the aforementioned bed are various destructive and punishing forces, as it says, "Like a lily among thorns." Therefore, one must be gathered to their peop[2]le and not [remain] outside among the forces of impurity. Similarly, one must be careful that the tefillin strap of the hand not dangle but rather be wrapped around the arm, because "her feet descend to death,"[3] and this is supported by what they said in [Tractate] Shabbat: "provided that the strap does not extend a handbreadth beyond his hand." The limb that remains outside must endure many sufferings until it can enter within, and this is called "the escape of the wheel,"[4] and through this we understand [the verse] "Draw a circle and stand within it." This is the concept of "gathering" mentioned regarding the righteous, besides its interpretation that it refers to the gathering of his soul to the chambers of holiness, to his ancestors, and to his holy companions. As it passes through, it kicks away all the forces of judgment that oppose it with its great voice that

[1]The tradition recognizes different stages of mourning, with the first three days considered the most intense period for grief and weeping.
[2]This phrase echoes the biblical expression used to describe the death of patriarchs (e.g., 'Abraham was gathered to his people'), which the author interprets both literally (regarding the physical body) and spiritually (regarding the soul's journey).
[3]This is a direct quote from Proverbs 5:5, which in its original context refers to the dangerous woman/strange woman, but is applied here to the dangling tefillin strap.
[4]This obscure term appears to be a kabbalistic concept referring to something that exits its proper boundaries or orbit. The exact meaning is unclear even in context.

[i]This uses biblical language to emphasize the spiritual danger of body parts extending beyond the protective boundary of the deathbed, comparing them to unburied corpses left as prey.
[ii]A reference to Song of Songs 2:2. In its original context, this verse compares the beloved to a lily among thorns, but here it's repurposed to describe the vulnerable position of the dying person surrounded by harmful spiritual forces.
[iii]A quote from Proverbs 5:5, which originally warns against the dangerous woman whose path leads to death. Here, it's applied to the dangling tefillin strap as a metaphor for spiritual danger.
[iv]This appears to be a kabbalistic term unique to this context, relating to parts of the soul or body that escape proper boundaries during the death process.
[v]This alludes to the famous Talmudic story of Honi HaMe'agel (Honi the Circle-Drawer), who drew a circle around himself and stood within it during prayer. The reference suggests that the bed serves as a protective circle for the dying person.

מסוף העולם ועד סופו כדאמרו
בקולות הרוגי מלכות[i] שהיו
מכוונים להתיש הקליפות
בקולם העצום פן יתגברו עליהם
מתוך צערם וכן אמרו במ״ר
פ״ו נפשיה דההוא גברא מקצצא
ארזין ומקצצא אילנין.[ii] ועל
העומדים עליו מוטל להיות
עיניהם פקוחות על זה שלא יצאו
מאבריו חוץ למטה.[iii]

travels from one end of the world to the other,[1] as they said regarding the voices of those executed by the government, who would intentionally weaken the negative forces with their powerful cry lest these forces overpower them in their suffering. Similarly, they said in Midrash Rabbah chapter 6: "The soul of that man cuts down cedars and cuts down trees."[2] It is incumbent upon those attending the dying person to keep their eyes open to ensure that none of his limbs extend outside the bed.

מצאתי קצת סמך על מנהג
ישראל שלא לעמוד לרגלי
המטה שבו הגוסס ישן כי מ״ה
כנגדו וחרבו בידו[iv] כדאמרו
רבנן ואין להתקרב אליו ולא
לדחוק מקומו. וכתוב בזהר פ׳
פנחס דף רל״ד ע״ב המבקר את
החולה לא ליהוב מראשותיו
משום דשבינתא על רישיה ולא
לרגלוהי דמ״ה לרגלוהי. האי
לאו לכל בר ישראל אלא לבינוני
אבל לצדיק גמור ה׳ יסעדנו

I found some support for the Jewish custom not to stand at the foot of the bed where a dying person lies, since the Angel of Death stands opposite him with sword in hand, as our Sages stated. One should not approach him nor crowd his space. It is written in the Zohar, Parashat Pinchas, page 234b: "One who visits the sick should not sit at his head, because the Divine Presence is at his head, nor at his feet, for the Angel of Death is at his feet. This applies not to every Israelite, but to the average person. However, for the completely righteous, 'The Lord will support him upon the bed of illness' (Psalms 41:4)—at his

[1] This hyperbolic expression emphasizes the tremendous spiritual power released at the moment of death, when the soul departs the body.

[2] This colorful metaphor from the Midrash illustrates the tremendous spiritual force of the departing soul, portrayed as having such power that it can metaphorically uproot mighty trees.

[i] This refers to Jewish martyrs executed by Roman authorities, who according to tradition would intentionally cry out at the moment of death to weaken harmful spiritual forces.

[ii] An Aramaic phrase meaning 'the soul of that man cuts down cedars and cuts down trees,' illustrating the tremendous spiritual power released at the moment of death.

[iii] Cf. Hashkavah prayer — The author is referring to the traditional prayer for the repose of the soul, which is recited at the grave, during the seven days of mourning, and at memorial services throughout the year following death. | Cf. to the beasts of the field I have given it for food — The author uses this biblical-style language to emphasize that parts of the body left outside proper ritual boundaries are spiritually vulnerable, comparing them to carcasses left for wild animals. | Cf. Like a lily among thorns — The author repurposes this verse to illustrate how the dying person (compared to the lily) is surrounded by harmful spiritual forces (the thorns). This creates a powerful image of vulnerability requiring protection. | Cf. her feet descend to death — This verse is applied to the dangling tefillin strap as a metaphor—just as the woman's feet lead to death in Proverbs, a hanging strap creates spiritual danger. This shows how the author finds mystical significance in practical ritual details. | Cf. Shabbat — The author cites Talmudic authority to support his mystical instruction, showing how Ma'avar Yabok integrates halakhic (legal) sources with kabbalistic interpretations. | Cf. Draw a circle and stand within it — The author uses this well-known Talmudic reference to illustrate the concept of creating a protective boundary. Just as Honi drew a circle for protection during prayer, the bed serves as a protective circle for the dying person. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah chapter 6 — The author cites this midrash to demonstrate the tremendous spiritual power of the soul as it departs the body, portrayed as having such force that it can metaphorically cut down trees.

[iv] Here, M"H is an abbreviation used for Malakh HaMavet (Angel of Death). The text references the talmudic concept that the Angel of Death stands at the foot of a dying person's bed with drawn sword.

על ערש דוי על רישיה ושכינתא
אסחר גופיה עד רגלוהי. רשע
גמור מדת הדין אסחר ליה בכל
סטרא ודא יצר הרע רחמנא
125 ליצלן. ואי זכה נחית בדמות
אריה לקבלא נשמתיה[i] ואי לא
זכה נחית בדמות כלב[ii] וזהו
מיד כלב יחידתי. ובתקון י״ח
דף ל״א ע״ב אית רעש דלא ייתי
130 תמן קב״ה ואית רעש דייתי תמן
ורעש בהפוכא ערש ומאי כל
משכבו הפכת בחליו. דאתהפך
רעש לערש דאיהו ערש בהיפוך
אתוון ודא שכינתא דאיהי כללא
135 דעשר ספירן דעלה אתמר אין
קדושה בפחות מעשר[iii] דאיהי
שריא לרישא דחולה ובגין כך
ה׳ יסעדנו ובמאי על ערש
דוי על שכינתיה ודאי ואי
140 שכינתא לאו תמן רוח סערה
תמן דאסעיר גופיה דבר נש
דכתיב ביה האניה דחיינו גופא
חשבה להשבר דלית שכינא
דסמיכת ליה ובזמנא דשכינתא
145 סמיכת ליה מיד קלא נפיק בן
אדם עמוד על רגליך וקאים
ממרעא דיליה ונפיק מדינא
שלים בגופיה שלים בממוניה.
ואי לא דמסתפינא אמינא כי
150 אפילו אותם הנהרגים בידי אדם
מלאך המות מקדים לבא שם
ואולי מתלבש ברוצח[iv] והוא
חרבו של מלאך המות אך באמת

head—and the Divine Presence surrounds his body down to his feet. For the completely wicked, the attribute of judgment surrounds him on all sides, and this is the evil inclination—may the Merciful One save us.[A] If he merits, the Angel of Death descends in the form of a lion to receive his soul, but if he does not merit, it descends in the form of a dog, and this is the meaning of 'Deliver my soul from the sword, my only one from the power of the dog' (Psalms 22:21)." 125R 130R

And in Tikkun 18, page 31b: "There is a 'tumult' (ra'ash) where the Holy One, blessed be He, does not come, and there is a 'tumult' where He does come. And 'ra'ash' (tumult) is the reverse of 'eres' (bed), and what is meant by 'You have transformed his entire bed in his illness' (Psalms 41:4)? That 'ra'ash' (tumult) is transformed into 'eres' (bed), which is 'eres' with the letters reversed. And this refers to the Divine Presence, which encompasses the ten sefirot, concerning which it is said, 'There is no holiness with fewer than ten.' She rests at the head of the sick person, and therefore 'The Lord will support him,' and how? 'Upon the bed of illness'—upon His Divine Presence, certainly. And if the Divine Presence is not there, then a stormy wind is there, which tosses the person's body, of which it is written, 'The ship'—meaning the body—'thought it would break,' because there is no Divine Presence supporting him. And when the Divine Presence supports him, immediately a voice emerges: 'Son of man, stand upon your feet,' and he rises from his illness and emerges from judgment whole in body and whole in possessions." 135R 140R 145R 150R 155R

And if I were not afraid, I would say that even

[A] Or: "the attribute of judgment encircles him from every direction, which is the evil inclination—may God protect us from this" — This alternative uses 'encircles' and 'from every direction' which might better convey the image of complete spiritual encirclement. It also renders the Aramaic prayer formula in more standard English. This might be preferred in contexts where the reader has less familiarity with traditional Jewish prayer formulations.

[i] This presents a kabbalistic concept that the Angel of Death appears in different forms depending on the spiritual merit of the dying person—as a lion for the meritorious, which would be a more dignified departure.

[ii] The form of a dog represents a less dignified departure for those who didn't merit the more noble form of the lion. This reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the manner of one's death corresponds to their spiritual state.

[iii] This references the principle that certain sacred prayers require a minyan (quorum of ten Jewish adults), connecting this requirement to the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah.

[iv] This presents a complex theological understanding of murder, suggesting that even when someone is killed by human hands, the Angel of Death is somehow involved, perhaps by 'clothing himself' in the murderer. However, the text is careful to maintain human free will and responsibility by noting that the murderer acts of his own volition.

אין מלאך המות מושל בו ברצונו
כי רשע זה קודמו. וגם שמדברי
ספר הזהר בסוד עגלה ערופה
לבאורה אין נראה כן. מ״מ
בשישקף בטוב העיון לא יחלוק
על סברתנו זאת: [i]

those killed by human hands—the Angel of Death comes there first[A] and perhaps clothes himself in the murderer, who becomes the sword of the Angel of Death. But in truth, the Angel of Death does not rule over him by his own will, for this wicked person preceded him.[B] And although from the words of the Zohar regarding the mystery of the heifer whose neck is broken, it would appear not to be so, nevertheless, when examined with good analysis, it would not disagree with this opinion of ours.

פרק ז׳

Chapter 7

פרק ז׳ וח׳ היב״ק[ii] פסוקים
עם הנמשכים אחריהם והתפילה
השייכה בשעת יציאת נשמה כבר
באו בתחילת הספר למען לא
יהיו עיני הקורא משוטטות וכל
החפץ יכול למלאת ידו לזכות
את הרבים[iii] לעשות חסד עם

Chapters 7 and 8 of Ma'avar Yabok, containing verses with their following passages and the prayer appropriate for the moment of the soul's departure, have already appeared at the beginning of the book[1] so that the reader's eyes need not wander. Anyone who desires may fulfill their duty to bring merit to the community by performing kindness

[A] Or: "And were I not hesitant, I would suggest that even in cases of murder, the Angel of Death arrives beforehand" — This alternative is more conversational and direct, avoiding the slightly awkward construction of the original translation. It might be preferable in contexts where clarity is prioritized over preserving the distinctive voice of mystical texts.

[B] Or: "the Angel of Death has no autonomous authority in this case, as the murderer's evil will has preempted the divine decree" — This alternative more clearly expresses the theological point being made about the relationship between divine and human agency in cases of murder. It might be preferred in contexts where theological precision is more important than literal translation.

[1] The author is creating a cross-reference system within his book, acknowledging that he has placed the same material in multiple locations to make it more accessible for practical use during deathbed situations.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas 234b — This text is foundational to the Jewish practice of not standing at the foot of a sick person's bed. The Zohar establishes a spiritual geography around the sickbed, with the Divine Presence at the head and the Angel of Death at the feet, and offers different arrangements for the righteous, average, and wicked individuals. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar 18, 31b — This text provides a kabbalistic interpretation of Psalm 41:4 through letter reversals (notarikon), showing how the Divine Presence transforms the chaotic energy of sickness (ra'ash/tumult) into healing support (eres/bed). It emphasizes the importance of a minyan (ten people) for creating a sacred space that allows divine energy to support healing. | Cf. Psalms 41:4 — The author uses this verse as a scriptural basis for the spiritual dynamics around a sickbed, particularly the idea that God's presence provides support to the ill person. | Cf. Psalms 22:21 — The text interprets this verse metaphysically, suggesting that the 'dog' refers to the form the Angel of Death takes when collecting the soul of someone who did not merit a more dignified transition. | Cf. Ezekiel 2:1 — The text repurposes this prophetic command as a healing declaration that comes when the Divine Presence supports the sick person, causing them to recover from their illness.

[ii] This is an acronym for the book's title 'Ma'avar Yabok' (מעבר יבק). The numerical value of these letters (יב״ק) equals 112, which corresponds to the specific collection of verses to be recited at the time of death.

[iii] This phrase refers to bringing merit to the community, a concept in Jewish thought where performing mitzvot (commandments) benefits not just the individual but the entire Jewish community. Here it specifically refers to the merit gained by performing proper death rituals.

החיים ועם המתים:[i] with both the living and the dead.[1]

פרק ט׳

Chapter 9

טעם עצימת הבן עיני אביו ותועלת המגיע מזה לנפטר,[ii] עיין פ׳ שלח דף קס״ט כדי דליהוי ליה חיזו וחולקא דההוא עלמא דלא זכי לדא עד דאסתים מניה כל חיזו דהאי עלמא ולבן אפילו בשאין לנפטר בן מצוה לעומדים שם לסתו׳ עיניו וטוב שהיורש ממונו יעשה לו תקון זה. ואם זכית לסוד רמז תורת הנחלה בעולם העליון תבין טעם זה וכן למה אסור להעביר נחלה אפילו מברא בישא לברא טבא.[iii] ויש בעצימת העין של מת טעמים אחרים ואחד מהם לבל יחזי חיזו אחרא בתר חיזו דשבינתא[iv] עוד אמרו בזה דברים עתיקים ובפרט בפ׳ ויחי דף רכ״ו ע״א ומשם נראה שראוי לבן לנגרא עפר על עיני

The reason for a son closing his father's eyes and the benefit that accrues to the deceased: See Parashat Shelach, page 169, "so that he may have vision and a portion in that world,[A] for he does not merit this until all vision of this world is closed from him."[2] Therefore, even when the deceased has no son, it is a duty for those present to close his eyes, and it is good that the one who inherits his property should perform this rectification[B] for him. And if you have merited to understand the secret allusion of the Torah of inheritance in the supernal world, you will understand this reason, and also why it is forbidden to transfer an inheritance even from a wicked son to a righteous son.

There are other reasons for closing the eyes of the dead, and one of them is so that he will not see another vision after the vision of the Divine Presence. They have also said ancient things about this, particularly in Parashat Vayechi, page 226a, from which it appears appropriate for a son to pour earth over [A] Or: "so that he may receive sight and a share in the World to Come" — This alternative translation emphasizes the eschatological aspect of 'that world' (ההוא עלמא) by using the more explicitly religious term 'World to Come'. It also uses 'receive sight' instead of 'have vision' to better convey the transformative nature of the soul's new perception.

[B] Or: "this spiritual correction" — While 'rectification' is a common translation of 'תקון' (tikkun), 'spiritual correction' more explicitly conveys the kabbalistic concept that these actions repair or adjust something in the spiritual realm.

[1] This refers to the concept of 'chesed shel emet' (true kindness), which is how Jewish tradition describes care for the dead. It is considered the purest form of kindness because the recipient cannot reciprocate or thank the giver.

[2] The original contains the Aramaic phrase 'דאסתים מניה כל חיזו דהאי עלמא', which literally means 'until all vision of this world is closed/sealed from him'. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the soul must detach from physical perception before it can fully perceive spiritual realms.

[i] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The author is referencing earlier sections of his own work where he already included the materials mentioned here, suggesting an organized structure where he doesn't want to repeat content unnecessarily but wants to help readers locate important ritual texts. | Cf. Gemilut Chasadim (Acts of Loving-kindness) — The concept of 'doing kindness with the living and the dead' refers to the Jewish value of gemilut chasadim, particularly as applied to proper care for the dying and deceased, which is one of the highest forms of kindness as it cannot be reciprocated.

[ii] The text emphasizes not just the ritual action but its spiritual benefit for the deceased, showing how physical actions in this world affect the soul's journey in the next.

[iii] This references a halakhic principle forbidding disinheriting even a wicked son in favor of a righteous one, which Ma'avar Yabok connects to mystical principles of inheritance in the supernal worlds.

[iv] This reveals a profound kabbalistic concept: the deceased first sees the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) at death, and closing the eyes prevents subsequent lesser visions that might diminish this spiritual experience.

דאבוי כד אתקבר. ואם יש לו עפר א״י טוב שהבן ישים אותה בעצמו על עיניו ואמר כי סתימת העינים ע״י הבן הוא סיוע לדינא דקברא.[i] וכבר דברנו מזה למעלה בחלק א׳. אחר פטירת המת מתוך ד״ת יקיימו מצות הקריעה [ii] his father's eyes when he is buried.[A] And if he has earth from the Land of Israel,[1] it is good that the son should place it himself over his eyes. And it was said that the closing of the eyes by the son assists with the judgment of the grave. And we have already discussed this above in Part One. After the deceased's passing, while engaged in words of Torah,[2] they shall fulfill the commandment of tearing [garments].

25R

דאמר רשב״א העומד על המת בשעת יציאת נשמה חייב לקרוע הא למה זה דומה לס״ת שנשרף שהכל חייבים לקרוע ופי׳ הרמב״ן כי נפש בגוף באזכרות בגויליין[iii] ומשל הוא לומר שהוא הפסד גדול וחרדה רבה וחייב לקרוע עליו כאלו נשרף ס״ת לפניו אי נמי יש לומר כשם שקורעין עליה

For Rabbi Shlomo ben Aderet said:[3] One who stands over the deceased at the moment of the soul's departure is obligated to tear [his garment]. To what can this be compared? To a Torah scroll that is burned, for which everyone is obligated to tear [their garments]. The Ramban explained[4] that the soul in the body is like the divine names written on parchment.[B] This is a metaphor indicating that it is a great loss and a profound distress, and one is obligated to tear for him as if a Torah scroll

30R

35R

[A] Or: "to sprinkle earth upon his father's eyes at the time of burial" — The Aramaic term 'לנגרא' (to pour) might be more precisely translated as 'to sprinkle' in this ritual context. This alternative more clearly suggests the careful, deliberate nature of this act rather than simply pouring.

[B] Or: "the soul in the body is like the sacred divine names inscribed on the parchment scrolls" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the sacred nature of the divine names (azkarot) and clarifies that 'gevilin' specifically refers to parchment scrolls used for Torah writing. This might be preferable for readers less familiar with the technical terminology of Torah scroll production.

[1] The Hebrew term 'עפר א״י' refers specifically to soil from the Holy Land, which is considered to have special sanctity and spiritual potency in Jewish tradition.

[2] The Hebrew abbreviation 'ד״ת' (divrei Torah) refers to engagement with sacred texts and religious discussion. The passage suggests that the tearing of garments (kriah) should take place while those present are engaged in sacred study.

[3] The Hebrew uses the acronym 'Rashba,' which I have expanded to his full name for clarity. Rabbi Shlomo ben Aderet (1235-1310) was a prominent Spanish Talmudist and halakhic authority.

[4] Rabbi Moses ben Nachman (1194-1270), known as Nachmanides or Ramban, was a leading medieval Jewish scholar. His explanation adds theological depth to the ritual practice of tearing garments.

[i] The 'judgment of the grave' (dina d'kivra) refers to the initial spiritual judgment that occurs immediately after burial, when the soul is still closely connected to the body.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shelach — The Zohar explains that closing a deceased person's eyes helps them transition to the next world by shutting out visions of this world, enabling them to perceive the spiritual realm. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This section of the Zohar elaborates on burial practices, specifically the custom of a son placing earth on his father's eyes, which is understood to assist with the 'judgment of the grave' (dina d'kivra), a spiritual process the soul undergoes after death. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part One — The author refers back to his own previous discussion of this topic in an earlier section of Ma'avar Yabok, showing how the work builds upon itself with recurring themes related to death rituals.

[iii] This is a profound metaphor comparing the soul's relationship to the body with the divine names' relationship to Torah parchment. In Jewish tradition, the divine names (azkarot) written in a Torah scroll are its most sacred element, just as the soul is the most sacred element of a person.

קורעין על מקיימי מצותיה
שבשריפתה אובדין מצות של
כתיבה ובמיתת עושיה אובדים
מצות של מעשה הילכך על כל
אדם מישראל קורעין ואפילו
על אשה. עוד נוכל לומר כי
טעם הקריעה יהיה לסייע למת
להפשיט מעליו לבוש הגשמי
להכינו ללבוש חלוקא דרבנן.
והיא בצואר להורות כי לבוש זה
איצו עוד דבק עם נשמתו כעור
הצואר שנפשט מעצמו כדאמרי׳
במשנת העור והרוטב. ועוד
כי עקר ההתלבשות במדרגות
הקדושה היא מבחינת הצואר
ולמטה דבסוד רישא דורשים
דרשות אחרים[i] ובכמה בחינות
הראש עומד בעצמו ואינו
מתפשט ומתלבש כמו מהצואר
ולמטה ועומדים בשעת הקריעה
ויכוונו להעלותו מעלמא
דנוקבא שהיה בו על ידי הלבוש
הזה התחתון החומרי לעלמא
דדכורא[ii] להלביש נשמתו ורוחו
ונפשו מחלצות מזיהר׳ עילאה
כדאמרו בטעם ספירת העומר
מעומד. ויאמרו בשעת הקריעה

were burned before him.[1] Alternatively, one could say that just as we tear for it [the Torah], we tear for those who fulfill its commandments, for in its burning, the commandments of writing are lost, and in the death of those who perform them, the commandments of action are lost. Therefore, we tear for every person of Israel, even for a woman.

We can further explain that the purpose of tearing is to assist the deceased in removing his physical garment and preparing him to don the scholarly robe[2] [in the afterlife]. The tear is made at the neck to indicate that this garment is no longer attached to his soul, like the skin of the neck that is easily removed, as we say in the Mishnah of "The Skin and the Broth." Additionally, the primary clothing in the levels of holiness begins from the aspect of the neck downward, for regarding the mystery of the head, there are different interpretations, and in several aspects, the head stands on its own and does not extend and clothe itself as it does from the neck downward.

One stands during the tearing and should intend to elevate the deceased from the feminine realm, in which he existed through this lower, material garment, to the masculine realm,[A] to clothe his soul, spirit, and life-force in pure garments from the supernal radiance,[B] as they said regarding the

[A] Or: "to elevate him from the passive, receptive realm in which he existed through this lower, material garment, to the active, giving realm" — This alternate translation emphasizes the active/passive dichotomy in Kabbalistic cosmology rather than using the gendered terminology of 'feminine' and 'masculine' realms. This might be preferable in contexts where a more conceptual rather than gendered explanation is desired, though it loses some of the technical precision of the original kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: "vestments of light from the celestial illumination" — This alternate translation captures the mystical imagery more vividly by using 'vestments of light' for 'machaltzot' and 'celestial illumination' for 'zihara ila'ah'. This might be preferable in contexts where the poetic and mystical dimensions of the text are being emphasized.

[1] The comparison between witnessing death and seeing a Torah scroll burn illustrates the Jewish view that human life has sacred value comparable to the Torah itself, as humans are created in God's image and the body houses the divine soul.

[2] The Hebrew term 'chaluka d'rabbanan' literally means 'the garment of the scholars' and refers to the spiritual garment that clothes the soul in the afterlife, earned through Torah study and good deeds in this world. This is a mystical concept not to be understood literally.

[i] This reflects a kabbalistic concept that the head represents higher spiritual realms that remain somewhat separate and autonomous, while from the neck downward represents realms that are more directly involved with the lower worlds. This explains why the tear is made at the neck specifically.

[ii] This expresses the kabbalistic understanding that physical existence is associated with the 'feminine realm' (characterized by receptivity and judgment), while spiritual existence after death transitions to the 'masculine realm' (characterized by bestowal and mercy). The tearing ritual symbolically assists this transition.

פסוק ה׳ נתן וה׳ לקח יהי שם ה׳ מבורך. הצור תמים פעלו וגו׳. והלך לפניך צדקך כבוד ה׳ יאספך. תשכב בשלום ותישן בשלום וכו׳. ויכסו פני המת לבל יביטו המקטרגים בפניו ובמצחו ששם נרשמים העונות[i] ויוסיפו לו מכאוב [ii] reason for counting the Omer while standing.[1] And they should say at the time of the tearing the verse: "The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." [And] "The Rock, His work is perfect, etc." And "Your righteousness shall go before you; the glory of the Lord shall gather you in." "May you lie in peace and sleep in peace, etc." And they should cover the face of the deceased so that the accusers will not look upon his face and forehead, where sins are recorded, and add to his suffering.

ואפילו האדם החי טוב לכסות מצחו לעולם שלא יתראה בפני החיצונים ועוד שאסור להסתכל בפני המת פן יתבזה בעיניו ועוד אין להשפיע ראיית העין שהוא רמז לבת עין העליונה במקום המיתה ח״ו[iii] כי אור העין שואב משם להיותה במראה הלטושה ולא המתים יהללו יה ולבן אמר

Even for a living person, it is good to cover his forehead at all times so that it is not visible to the external forces.[2] Furthermore, it is forbidden to gaze at the face of the dead lest he be dishonored in one's eyes.[A] Additionally, one should not direct the gaze of the eye, which symbolizes the supernal pupil, toward the place of death, God forbid, because the light of the eye draws from there, being like a polished mirror, and "the dead do not praise the

[A] Or: "Furthermore, it is forbidden to look at the face of the deceased lest it cause the deceased to be dishonored in one's perception" — This alternative translation shifts the focus to the action's effect on the deceased's dignity rather than implying that the deceased might feel dishonor. It also uses 'deceased' instead of 'dead,' which may be considered more respectful in modern English.

[1] This refers to the Jewish practice of counting the 49 days between Passover and Shavuot while standing. The text draws a parallel between this practice and standing during the tearing ritual, suggesting both involve elevation to higher spiritual states.

[2] The text suggests that the forehead (metzach) is spiritually vulnerable, as it is believed in Jewish mysticism to reveal one's sins or spiritual state. Covering it protects from negative spiritual forces (chitzonim) that might exploit these spiritual vulnerabilities.

[i] According to kabbalistic tradition, a person's sins are recorded on their forehead, visible to spiritual beings even if not to humans. This explains the custom of covering the deceased's face promptly.

[ii] Cf. Job 1:21 — This verse from Job affirms acceptance of divine judgment even in the face of loss, making it appropriate for the moment of tearing garments upon witnessing death. | Cf. Deuteronomy 32:4 — This verse affirms divine justice and perfection, helping mourners accept death as part of God's perfect plan, even when it seems difficult to understand. | Cf. Isaiah 58:8 — This verse offers comfort by suggesting that the deceased's righteousness will precede them in the afterlife, and God's glory will receive them. | Cf. Chullin 122a — The author uses this Talmudic passage about how animal skin naturally separates from flesh as an analogy for how the physical body (garment) naturally separates from the soul at death. | Cf. Zohar — The text uses Zoharic terminology where 'feminine realm' (עלמא דנוקבא) refers to the material world associated with mortality and judgment, while the 'masculine realm' (עלמא דדכורא) refers to the spiritual world associated with mercy and eternal life. The tearing ritual is understood as facilitating this transition. | Cf. Moed Katan 25a — The author cites Rabbi Shlomo ben Aderet (Rashba) interpreting this Talmudic passage, which compares witnessing death to seeing a Torah scroll burn, both requiring the tearing of garments as a sign of mourning for a profound spiritual loss.

[iii] This passage reveals a kabbalistic understanding of vision where the human eye is mystically connected to divine sight ("the supernal pupil"). The text warns against directing this power toward death, as it creates an inappropriate connection between divine vision and the realm of death.

לשון הסתכלות שהוא ראיה
בהבטה תמידית כי אז פוגם
עינו וח״ו מפריד ברמז העין
כי רגליה דווקא יורדות בקצת
להתלבש בסוד המות לאבנעא
לאינון קליפין כדכתיב ומלכותו
בכל משלה לא בחינת העינים
כי עיני ה׳ אל יראיו למיחלים
לחסדו וגורמים היחוד לכנסת
ישראל.[i] טעם למנהג שימת המת
בקרקע[ii] הוא כי קרקע עולם
אינו מקבל לא טומאת מת ולא
טומאת מדרס[iii] כדאמרי׳ במס׳
נדה וכלים וראייתם מפסוק
ונקתה לארץ תשב ואם יניחו
המת במטה או ישימוהו על גבי
שלחן וכלים הראויים לקבל
טומאה כ״ש שידרסו ויחזיקו
בו הרוחות כי אין המטה טפלה
למת כדאמרי׳ במס׳ שבת פרק
המצניע. מלבד כי רמז הקרקע
הוא במלכות שבה נטועים כל
הנטיעות וגם יסוד בהיותו
משך וא״ו נקרא קרקע ערבות
ת״ת[iv] ועוד שכל דבר מתאוה
לחזור למקורו וזהו מנוחתו
עליונים תאבים לעלות למעלה

Lord." Therefore, the term "gazing" is used, which refers to continuous, fixed looking, for then one damages his eye and, God forbid, creates separation in the symbolic realm of sight.[1] For only "her feet" [referring to Malkhut] descend partially to clothe themselves in the mystery of death to subdue those husks [kelipot],[A] as it is written, "and His kingdom rules over all"—but not the aspect of the eyes, for "the eyes of the Lord are toward those who fear Him, to those who hope for His kindness," and they cause unification for the Community of Israel. 90R 95R

The reason for the custom of placing the deceased on the ground is that the earth does not receive impurity from a corpse nor the impurity of treading, as stated in the tractates of Niddah and Kelim, with their proof from the verse "and she shall sit on the ground and be cleansed." If they were to place the deceased on a bed or on a table and vessels that can receive impurity, all the more so would the spirits trample upon and take hold of him, for the bed is not subordinate to the deceased, as stated in the tractate of Shabbat, chapter HaMatznia. 100R 105R

Moreover, the symbolism of the ground is found in Malkhut, in which all plantings are rooted, and also Yesod, being an extension of Vav, is called the ground of Aravot of Tiferet. Additionally, everything desires to return to its source, and this is its 110R

[A] Or: "For specifically "her feet" [Malkhut/Divine Kingdom] alone descend somewhat to become clothed in the mystery of death in order to subdue those negative forces [kelipot]" — This alternative makes explicit the identification of 'her feet' with Malkhut as the Divine Kingdom and clarifies the purpose of this descent as subduing negative forces rather than merely 'husks,' which might not convey the full meaning of 'kelipot' to non-specialists.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that visual perception has spiritual consequences. Fixed gazing at the dead is seen as creating an inappropriate mystical connection between the realms of life and death that damages the observer's spiritual faculties and disrupts cosmic harmony.

[i] This presents a complex kabbalistic cosmology where different divine attributes have distinct relationships with death: Malkhut (Kingdom) can interact with death to subdue negative forces, but attributes associated with divine sight and mercy must remain separated from death to maintain proper cosmic order.

[ii] The text now shifts from mystical explanations about vision to explaining the practical ritual of placing the deceased directly on the ground, demonstrating how Ma'avar Yabok consistently provides both practical guidance and mystical rationales for Jewish burial practices.

[iii] This refers to a Talmudic principle that ground which is attached to the earth does not receive ritual impurity, unlike movable objects which can become ritually impure through contact with a corpse or through being stepped on by certain categories of ritually impure people.

[iv] This passage employs dense kabbalistic terminology to explain that placing the body on the ground symbolically connects it to divine attributes (sefirot) that facilitate proper spiritual transitions after death. The ground represents Malkhut (divine kingship), which is connected to Yesod (foundation) and ultimately to Tiferet (harmony) through the mystical celestial realm called Aravot.

שהם נפש רוח ונשמה ותחתונים תאבים לרדת למטה שהם אברי הגוף[i] כי עפר הוא ואל עפר ישוב והגוף הוא בחינת הזכר המשפיע על הנקבה עפרא דארעא: בעת שמשימים אותו בארץ יכסוהו בסדין כנהוג להעלימו מכחות הדין כנ״ל [ii] rest[1]—the upper elements yearn to ascend upward, namely the Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah,[A] while the lower elements yearn to descend downward, namely the limbs of the body,[2] for "dust it is and to dust it shall return." And the body is the aspect of the male that influences the female, the dust of the earth.[3] When placing him on the ground, they should cover him with a sheet as is customary, to conceal him from the forces of judgment as mentioned above.

ומבחינת איזה רוחות רעות שאינם שולטים אלא על הנראה לעין[iii] ויתחילו ויאמר בית יעקב לכו ונלכה באור ה׳. אל אלהים

And regarding certain evil spirits that only have power over what is visible to the eye, they should begin and say: "O house of Jacob, come and let us walk in the light of the Lord." "God, the

[A] Or: "the celestial components yearn to ascend upward—these being the soul (Nefesh), spirit (Ruach), and higher soul (Neshamah)" — This alternative provides English equivalents alongside the Hebrew terms, making the translation more accessible to readers unfamiliar with kabbalistic terminology, while still preserving the technical terms.

[1] This reflects the Neo-Platonic principle that all existence yearns to return to its origin, which was incorporated into Kabbalah. In this context, it explains why the soul ascends while the body descends—each component returns to its cosmic source.

[2] This presents the kabbalistic understanding of human composition as a microcosm of the universe, with 'upper' soul components naturally ascending after death while the 'lower' physical elements return to earth. This understanding informs Jewish burial practices that facilitate this natural cosmic process.

[3] This employs kabbalistic gender symbolism where masculine elements are understood as active/giving and feminine elements as receptive. The body is considered 'masculine' in relation to the 'feminine' earth that receives it, mirroring divine dynamics between masculine and feminine aspects of God.

[i] This expresses a fundamental kabbalistic principle that at death, the components of a person naturally separate according to their spiritual nature: the soul components (Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah) ascend to their spiritual source, while the physical body returns to the earth from which it was formed.

[ii] Cf. Zohar — The text extensively draws on Zoharic concepts, particularly regarding the relationship between the human body and divine sefirot, the dynamics of the eye and vision in spiritual realms, and the specific roles of the sefirot Malkhut, Yesod, and Tiferet in death rituals. The mention of 'kelipot' (husks) and the need to subdue them comes directly from Zoharic and Lurianic kabbalistic cosmology. | Cf. Talmud — The author explicitly cites Talmudic sources to justify the practice of placing the deceased on the ground rather than on furniture or vessels that can receive ritual impurity. These references serve to ground mystical practices in halakhic (legal) precedent, demonstrating how Ma'avar Yabok integrates legal and mystical considerations. | Cf. Psalms 115:17 — This biblical quotation is used to explain why one should not direct one's gaze toward the deceased—because the dead are disconnected from active divine praise. In kabbalistic thought, this separation requires careful ritual management to ensure proper spiritual transitions. | Cf. Psalm 33:18 — This biblical verse is used to explain the mystical concept that divine vision (represented by the eyes) remains in the realm of life and divine worship, not in the realm of death. The eyes are connected to divine mercy rather than judgment. | Cf. Psalm 103:19 — This verse is cited to demonstrate that while Malkhut (Kingdom) may extend into the realm of death to subdue negative forces, other divine attributes (particularly those associated with vision and mercy) do not. This establishes a complex kabbalistic understanding of how different divine attributes relate to death.

[iii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that certain spiritual forces can only affect what is visible, which is why covering the deceased is important for spiritual protection.

ה׳ דיבר ויקרא ארץ ממזרח שמש
עד מבואו. יבא שלום ינוחו על
משכבותם הולך נכחו. כי עפר
אתה ואל עפר תשוב. ויאמר זה
ג׳ פעמים ויכוונו לסוד עפר
העליון שהיא בינה ועפר התחתון
שהיא מלכות[i] ולעפר קברו
למטה ובפרט אם נקבר בארץ
ישראל ואחרי ששמו אותו על
גבי קרקע יאמרו עליו מזמור
לדוד ה׳ רועי עד סופו ושיר של
פגעים בחתוך מלותיו[ii] ובכוונה
גדולה ובפרט פסוק כי מלאכיו
יצוה לך כי הוא מסוגל מאד כמו
שבא למעלה בארוכה במאמר
ב׳ וסופו ד׳ תיבות אלה הם
יו״ך. והוא סוד י״ו פיות שיש
לחרבו של הקב״ה[iii] ובהם הוא
מכה וזהו יו״ך י״ו ה״ך. ולכן
תקנו להנצל מהם י״ו בני אדם
שיעלו לס״ת בשבוע שבעה בשבת
שחרית שלשה במנחה ושלשה

Lord God has spoken and called the earth from the rising of the sun to its setting." "Peace shall come; they shall rest on their beds, each walking in his uprightness." "For dust you are, and to dust you shall return."[1] They should say this three times, and they should focus on the mystery of the supernal dust,[A] which is Binah, and the lower dust, which is Malkhut, and the dust of his grave below, especially if he is to be buried in the Land of Israel. And after they place him on the ground, they should recite over him Psalm 23 ("The Lord is my shepherd") to its conclusion, and the "Song of Afflictions" (Psalm 91) with clear articulation of its words[B] and with great intention, especially the verse "For He shall command His angels concerning you," as it is extremely beneficial, as was explained at length above in Discourse 2. Its ending four words are YO-HAKH, which is the mystery of the sixteen mouths of the Holy One, blessed be He's sword,[2] with which He strikes, and this is YO-HAKH: YO H-KH.[C] Therefore, they instituted, to be saved from them, that sixteen people should

[A] Or: "and they should direct their intention toward the mystery of the supernal dust" — The Hebrew term 'yekavnu' specifically refers to kavvanah (mystical intention), a technical term in Jewish mysticism for directing one's consciousness toward specific spiritual concepts during ritual actions.

[B] Or: "with precise enunciation of its words" — The Hebrew phrase implies a careful, deliberate pronunciation where each word is distinctly separated from the next, as if 'cut' from surrounding words. This alternate translation emphasizes the precision required.

[C] Or: "YO-HAKH is composed of YO [representing the number 16] and HAKH [meaning 'strikes']" — This is a more interpretive translation that explains the wordplay in the Hebrew, where the term is broken down to show both its numerical value (16) and its meaning (strikes/smites).

[1] This is a direct quote from Genesis 3:19, spoken by God to Adam after the sin in Eden. Its recitation here connects the deceased's burial with the primordial human condition and divine decree.

[2] This represents a kabbalistic interpretation where the final words of Psalm 91 are seen as connected to divine judgment. The 'sixteen mouths' of God's sword represent channels of judgment that can be mitigated through proper ritual and Torah study.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic correspondence between dust/earth and divine emanations: the 'supernal dust' corresponds to Binah (Understanding, the third sefirah), while the 'lower dust' corresponds to Malkhut (Kingdom, the tenth sefirah). By focusing on these correspondences, those attending the deceased create spiritual connections between the physical burial and cosmic processes.

[ii] Psalm 91 is traditionally known as 'Shir Shel Pega'im' (Song of Afflictions/Demons) and was considered especially effective against harmful spiritual forces. The instruction to recite it 'with clear articulation of its words' emphasizes the belief that precise pronunciation enhances its protective power.

[iii] This references a mystical concept that God's sword of judgment has sixteen 'mouths' or cutting edges, from which punishment emanates. The numerical value of YO-HAKH (יו״ך) is sixteen, creating a connection between the psalm's words and this divine instrument.

בשני ושלשה בחמישי וזהו
שהתחילה התורה בב׳ וסיים בל׳
הם ל״ב ברכות שמברכים ששה
עשר בני אדם העולים לקרות
ברכה ראשונה ואחרונה. ולזה
אפשר שרמזו באמרם ספר תורה
וסייף ירדו כרוכים יחד.[i] העוסק
בזה ינצל מזה: ושומרי המת כבר
הזהרנו שיזהרו עצמם מלשון
הרע וקטטה ומריבה ושבועות
והזכרת שם שמים לבטלה ח״ו
וניבול פה בעודם שם לפחות
וימעטו דבריהם ככל האפשר
שכל המרבה דברים מביא חטא.
במקומות אלו בפרט ומה טוב אם
יבקשו עליו רחמים בשירי דוד
ובמזמורים המסומנים למעלה
וכן חוצבי הקבר והמתעסקים
בארגז ובשאר צרכיו לא יפגמו
לשונם ויזהרו מלחטוא בנפשותם
בזה ושמירת המת הוא כדי שלא
יתעוללו בו המזיקין והרוחות
כנזכר:[iii][ii]

be called up to the Torah during the week: seven on Sabbath morning, three at the afternoon service, three on Monday, and three on Thursday. This is why the Torah begins with the letter Bet and ends with Lamed, which together equal thirty-two, corresponding to the thirty-two blessings that the sixteen people called up to read recite[1] (opening and closing blessings). Perhaps this is what they alluded to when they said, "The Torah scroll and the sword descended from heaven bound together." Whoever engages in this [Torah] will be saved from this [sword]. As for those who guard the deceased, we have already cautioned that they should guard themselves against evil speech, quarreling, disputes, oaths, and mentioning God's name in vain, God forbid, and vulgar language while they are there, at the very least. They should minimize their talk as much as possible, for whoever speaks excessively brings sin, especially in these places. How good it is if they seek mercy for him through the songs of David and the psalms designated above. Likewise, those who dig the grave and those who attend to the coffin and his other needs should not blemish their speech and should be careful not to sin against their souls in this matter. Guarding the deceased is so that harmful spirits and demons do not abuse him,[2] as mentioned.

פרק י׳

Chapter 10

[1] Each person called to the Torah recites two blessings: one before and one after reading. The text connects this practice to cosmic protection, suggesting that these blessings form a spiritual shield.

[2] This clearly states the practical mystical purpose behind the Jewish custom of not leaving the deceased alone before burial. The Hebrew term 'mazzikin' refers specifically to harmful spiritual entities believed to be drawn to the vulnerability of death.

[i] This is a rabbinic saying indicating that Torah study and divine judgment are interconnected—engaging with one (Torah) protects from the other (the sword of judgment).

[ii] This explicitly states the purpose of guarding the deceased before burial: to prevent harmful spirits (mazzikin) from abusing the body. In Jewish mystical thought, the period between death and burial is considered a time when the body is particularly vulnerable to negative spiritual forces.

[iii] Cf. Psalm 91 (Song of Afflictions) — This psalm was traditionally recited to protect the deceased from harmful spiritual entities during the vulnerable period between death and burial. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The text shares the Zohar's concern with protecting both the deceased and mourners from harmful spiritual forces that are believed to be present during the transition between life and death. | Cf. Deuteronomy 31:19 — The mystical significance of the Torah beginning with Bet and ending with Lamed creates the word 'lev' (heart), symbolizing that the Torah's essence is the heart of existence. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah (Book of Formation) — The text's reference to 32 blessings parallels the kabbalistic structure of the 32 paths of wisdom, suggesting that Torah readings create cosmic protection through these 32 channels.

השופר שהיו נוהגים לתקוע
בעת שהיו נושאים המת לבית
הקברות כתיב בפ׳ ויקהל דף
קצ״ו ב׳ שהיה להגין על החיים
שלא ישלוט בהם מלאך המות
להשטין למעלה דאז איתי ליה
רשותא. והזהיר בכל תוקף לבל
יתראו הנשים עם האנשים בעת
הליכתן לבית הקברות כל שכן
בעת חזרתן שמלאך המות ביניהן
ואמר דבשבע בעי דינא. ובעשרה
אסגי לקטלא. ואמר דכמה בני
אדם מסתלקים מן העולם קודם
זמנן בגין דלא אזדהרין מן דא.
ולכן יש למנוע הנשים מללכת
לבית הקברות עם האנשים. וכל
שכן בחזרתן ובשום פנים לא ילך
בדרך עמה אז. והועד לפני מפי
אדם כשר[i] שכך נתפשט המנהג
בכל ארץ הצבי[ii] ובבבל ובכל
מלכות מזרח שבתחלה הולכים
האנשים ושם עומדים שמשים
ממונים להפריש הנשים שלא
יתחילו לצאת עד אחר שעברו
כל האנשים. ואחר הקבורה
מתעכבים שם הנשים כמו רבע
שעה עד שיצאו כל האנשים ושם
מקוננות על הנפטר. ויש מקומות
שאינן יוצאות אחר המטה כלל.
וגם מדברי הגמ׳ נראה שלא
היו יוצאות עם האנשים דאמרי׳
בפ׳ כ״ג[iii] מקום שנהגו הנשים
לצאת לפני המטה יוצאות
ומקום שנהגו לילך אחר המטה
הולכות. ומפרש בירושלמי
מפני כבודן של בנות ישראל
שלא יסתכלו בהם האנשים הנה
כי חשו בירושלמי להסתכלות

Regarding the shofar that was customarily blown when carrying the deceased to the cemetery, it is written in Parashat Vayakhel, page 196b, that its purpose was to protect the living so that the Angel of Death would not gain power over them to accuse them above,[1] for at that time he has permission to do so. The text strongly warns against men and women being seen together when walking to the cemetery, especially when returning, because the Angel of Death is among them. It states that with seven people he seeks judgment, and with ten he increases killing.[2] It further states that many people depart from the world before their time because they are not careful about this matter. Therefore, women should be prevented from walking to the cemetery with men, and especially from returning with them, and under no circumstances should a man walk with a woman on the road at that time.

I was informed by a reliable person that this custom spread throughout the Holy Land, Babylonia, and throughout the eastern kingdoms, where the men would go first, and officials would stand there to separate the women, who would not begin to leave until after all the men had passed. After the burial, the women would remain there for about a quarter of an hour until all the men had departed, and there they would lament over the deceased. In some places, women would not follow the bier at all.

From the Talmud it also appears that women did not go out with the men, as it states in Chapter 23, "In a place where women customarily go out before the bier, they go out, and in a place where they customarily go after the bier, they go after." The Jerusalem Talmud explains this is for the honor of the daughters of Israel, that men should not look at them. Thus, we see that the Jerusalem Talmud was concerned about men gazing at them, though

5R 10R 15R 20R 25R 30R 35R

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the Angel of Death serves as a prosecutor in the heavenly court, bringing accusations against the living before God.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that larger gatherings during vulnerable times like funerals can intensify the power of the Angel of Death, with specific thresholds at seven and ten people.

[i] The phrase 'from the mouth of a reliable person' indicates that the author is reporting a custom he heard about from someone he considered trustworthy, rather than something he personally witnessed or found in written sources.

[ii] This is a term for the Land of Israel, derived from Daniel 11:16, where the land is described as 'the beautiful land' or 'the land of glory.'

[iii] This refers to chapter 23 of a Talmudic tractate, likely Mo'ed Katan, which discusses laws of mourning.

בהן הגם שפשט דבריו יראה
משום הרגל עבירה יוכל גם כן
לפרש שכוונתו גם למה שאמרו
בזהר וזהו כבודן לבל יגרמו
נזק לעולם ומצאתי קצת סמך
למה הקינה מיוחדת לנשים
כדכתיב ולמדנה בנותיכם נהי
ואשה רעותה קינה. וכן התבוננו
וקראו למקוננות. ובמשנה גם
כן נשים במועד מענות והטעם
מפני שהם מצד הדין ולכן
בבכייתן ודמעתן מכבות אותו
על דרך מה שכתב החכם אלשיך
בפירושו למגילת איכה על סוד
הדמעות עוד מצאתי בפ׳ פקודי
דף רנ״ז ע״ב דאמר כל אינון
דאתיין מסטרא דשמאלא מסטרא
דנוקבא אתמנן על השיר ואמרי
שירתא תדיר וזהו על עלמות
שיר[i] ואולי יהיה כטעם שיר של
הלוים להיותם מצד הדין ולכן
להם לבסמו בשירם ואמרי׳ בפ׳
שמות דף י״ט כי השירים עליונים
עמדו עד שנולד לוי ואז פתחו
בשיר ופי׳ למה נקרחו לויים
בשם זה וכ״ש דמזה נוכל להקיש
בקינות ובכי כי אותם הבאים
ומושפעים תדיר מכח הדינים
יפה כחם לשברם ולהחלישם. על
דרך מיניה וביה אבא ליזיל ביה
נרגא וירך דסטרא אחרא מתוכה
מסרחת ועוד כי מצדם הבכי
והנהי והקינה והם ג׳ מיני יללות
שכן כחות החצונים הם משולשים
כמו שאמר ומבחר שלשיו[ii] כי
יוצאים ויונקים מג׳ קליפות רוח
סערה ענן גדול ואש מתלקחת

the plain meaning of the text suggests it was to prevent sinful thoughts. One could also interpret that the intention aligns with what is said in the Zohar, meaning it was for their honor, so they would not cause harm to the world.

I found some support for why lamentation is specifically associated with women, as it is written, "Teach your daughters wailing, and each woman her neighbor a dirge." Similarly, "Consider and call for the mourning women." The Mishnah also states that "women chant during the festival," and the reason is because they are from the side of judgment,[1] so through their weeping and tears they extinguish it, as explained by the sage Alshich in his commentary on the Book of Lamentations regarding the secret of tears.

I also found in Parashat Pekudei, page 257b, which states that all those who come from the left side, from the feminine aspect, are appointed over song and sing continually, and this is the meaning of "according to alamot [maidens] a song." Perhaps this is similar to the reason for the Levites' song, as they are from the side of judgment, and therefore it is appropriate for them to sweeten it with their song. And we say in Parashat Shemot, page 19, that the celestial songs stood silent until Levi was born, and then they began to sing, and it explains why the Levites were called by this name. All the more so, we can draw a parallel to lamentations and weeping, for those who continually come from and are influenced by the powers of judgment are well-suited to break and weaken them. This follows the principle of "from itself comes the axe handle to fell it,"[2] and the thigh of the Other Side rots from within. Furthermore, from their side comes weeping, wailing, and lamentation, which are three types of howling, because the external forces

[1] In kabbalistic thought, women are associated with the 'left side' or 'feminine aspect' which corresponds to the divine attribute of judgment (gevurah/din) rather than mercy (chesed), explaining their connection to lamentation.

[2] This is a Talmudic proverb meaning that the very thing that causes harm can also be the source of its remedy. In this context, it suggests that since women are associated with judgment, they are particularly effective at mitigating judgment through their tears and lamentations.

[i] This phrase comes from Psalm 46:1, where it may refer to young women singing or to a musical term. The author interprets it kabbalistically to connect women to the concept of song.

[ii] This phrase 'and the choicest of his officers' comes from Exodus 15:4, referring to Pharaoh's officers drowning in the sea. Here it is interpreted kabbalistically to refer to the threefold nature of negative spiritual forces.

כי הרביעית נכללת בקדושה
בנודע: גם מזה נראה כמה צריך
האדם לשמור עצמו מלהזכיר
כחות הקטגוריא בעת הסכנה
רחמנא ליצלן. ועיין בזהר פרשת
נח בסוף דף קי״ג שהזהיר כי אין
להזכיר כחות הטומאה בלילה
עת שליטתן ובמקום שיש תנוקות
בני שנתן בפרט. ונמצא כתוב
כי חסיד אחד הזכיר שם ס״מ
בלילה באמצע דבור עם בני
אדם ובבקר ראה אותו רבו
האר״י זצ״ל[i] וא״ל הרי עברת
בלילה על ושם אלהים אחרים לא
תזכירו ולכן הזהר כל ימיך שלא
תזכור שמו ולא כיוצא בו ובפרט
בלילה כי אז יכול להתגבר
עליך ועל אחרים בסבתך.
וכ״ש שאין להזכירם במקום
שיש מתי ישראל דתיאובתייהו
לשלוט בגופיהון[ii] כדפירשו
בזהר פ׳ אמור דף פ״ח. ועיין
בפרשת נשא דף קכ״ו כמה
דינין מתעוררים על המת אם
מלינים אותו שלא לצורך. בעת
שמזמינים עצמם לטהרו טוב
שהגדול שבהם[iii] יבקש עליו
רחמים בתפלה ותחנה בגין
דיתרבי ויתוסף רבות קדושה
באתר דאצטריך ויכוין לעורר
הרחמים. ועיין בתחלת הספר
מה יביעו וידברו אז: [iv]

are threefold,[1] as it says, “and the choicest of his officers,” for they emerge and draw from three shells: the stormy wind, the great cloud, and the flashing fire,[2] since the fourth is included in holiness, as is known. 80R

From this we can also see how much a person needs to guard against mentioning accusatory forces in times of danger, God forbid. See the Zohar, Parashat Noah, at the end of page 113, which warns against mentioning forces of impurity at night, the time of their dominion, especially in places where there are year-old infants. It is written that a certain pious man once mentioned the name of Samael at night while speaking with people, and in the morning his teacher, the ARI of blessed memory, saw him and said, “You transgressed last night the commandment ‘Do not mention the names of other gods.’ Therefore, be careful all your days not to mention his name or anything similar, especially at night, for then he can gain power over you and over others because of you.” All the more so, one should not mention them in a place where there are deceased Israelites, for their desire is to control their bodies, as explained in the Zohar, Parashat Emor, page 88. See also Parashat Naso, page 126, for how many judgments are aroused against the deceased if they delay the burial unnecessarily. 85R 90R 95R 100R

When preparing to purify the deceased, it is good for the most distinguished among them to ask for mercy through prayer and supplication, so that holiness may increase and be added in the place where it is needed,[3] and he should intend to arouse mercy. 105R

[1] This explains why there are three types of female mourning expressions (weeping, wailing, and lamentation), as they correspond to and counteract the three levels of negative spiritual forces.
[2] These three manifestations are derived from Ezekiel’s vision (Ezekiel 1:4) and in Kabbalah represent three levels of impurity or negative forces. The fourth level mentioned (kelipat nogah or ‘shining shell’) contains a mixture of good and evil and thus ‘is included in holiness.’
[3] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that prayer and proper intention (kavvanah) during ritual

[i] This refers to Rabbi Isaac Luria (1534-1572), known as the ARI, the prominent kabbalist who revolutionized Jewish mysticism in Safed. The story illustrates the caution required when speaking about negative spiritual forces.
[ii] This Aramaic phrase means ‘for their desire is to control their bodies,’ referring to the negative spiritual forces’ desire to gain control over the bodies of the deceased.
[iii] The ‘greatest among them’ refers to the most distinguished or learned member of the burial society (Chevra Kadisha) who is conducting the tahara (ritual purification of the deceased).
[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This passage from the Zohar explains the purpose of blowing the shofar during funeral processions as a protective measure against the Angel of Death, who has special permission to accuse the living during funerals. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Emor — This source discusses how negative spiritual forces desire to control the bodies of the deceased, reinforcing the need for proper burial practices and caution when speaking about these forces in the presence of the dead. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Naso — This reference warns about the negative spiritual conse-

See the beginning of the book for what they should express and say at that time.

פרק י״א

סדר רחיצת המת למטיבי צעד. ראשונה ירחצו שערות הראש כי שערות האדם רומזים להמשכות[i] כמו שלמעלה בסוד שער הראש מתאחדים בהם עליונים ותחתונים[ii] מארי דמארין מארי דקשוט מארי דמתקלא מארי דיבבא מארי דיללא מארי דדינא מארי דרחמי וטעמי אורייתא ורזי אורייתא דכיין ומסאבן כלהו נקרא שערי. פי׳ מטיבותא דאתמשך ממלכא קדישא. ואמרו המשכילים ומביני דעת כי מנין שערות הראש הם אלף אלפי רבואות ושבעת אלפים שערות[iii] ישתבח שמו הכולל כמה אלף אלפים עולמות עד אין תכלית ומספר. וכלם גנוזים ונעלמים לשעשועו. ואין מי שידעם אלא הוא בעצמו האצילם לקיום הנמצאות. ודרך

Chapter 11

The order of washing the deceased for those who tread with care.[A1] First, they should wash the hair of the head, for a person's hair alludes to divine emanations. Just as above, in the mystery of the head's hair, higher and lower realms unite—masters of masters, masters of truth, masters of balance, masters of wailing, masters of lamentation, masters of judgment, masters of mercy, and the reasons of Torah and mysteries of Torah, both pure and impure—all are called "gates," meaning the goodness that flows from the Holy King. 5R 10R

The wise ones and those of understanding have said that the number of hairs on the head equals one million myriads and seven thousand hairs—praised be His name which encompasses thousands upon thousands of worlds without end or number. All these are hidden and concealed for His delight, and none knows them except He Himself who emanated them for the sustenance of all that exists. Generally speaking, there are one million myriads of locks, and in each lock there are four hundred and ten strands, 15R 20R purification of the deceased can channel divine energy to aid the soul's journey and protect it from negative forces.

[A] Or: "those who perform their duty with careful steps" — This alternate translation more explicitly connects the phrase to the Chevra Kadisha members who perform the ritual purification, emphasizing both their careful physical movements and their spiritual mindfulness.

[1] The Hebrew phrase 'למטיבי צעד' literally means 'for those who improve their steps' and refers to those who perform the ritual washing (tahara) with proper care and reverence.

quences of delaying burial unnecessarily, as it arouses divine judgments against the deceased. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud — The Jerusalem Talmud explains that women's procession practices at funerals were arranged to preserve their modesty and honor, preventing men from gazing at them inappropriately. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — This passage connects women's lamentation practices to kabbalistic concepts of the 'left side' and 'feminine aspect' which are associated with judgment, explaining why women's weeping can 'sweeten' or mitigate harsh judgments. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Noah — This source warns against mentioning forces of impurity at night when their power is greatest, particularly in the presence of infants. | Cf. Book of Lamentations — The reference to Alshich's commentary reveals the mystical concept that women's tears have special power to 'extinguish' harsh judgments, connecting mourning practices to kabbalistic cosmology.

[i] The text establishes a kabbalistic framework for the ritual washing of the deceased by connecting each body part to its corresponding divine counterpart. Hair is particularly significant as it represents divine emanations flowing from the supernal realms.

[ii] This references the kabbalistic concept that hair serves as a conduit between higher and lower worlds, where different spiritual forces converge.

[iii] The specific numbers mentioned here have mystical significance in kabbalistic numerology, with each hair representing a distinct spiritual channel.

כלל הם אלף אלפים רבואות
קוצות ובכל קוץ ארבע מאה
ועשר נימין במספר קדוש. ובכל
נימא ארבע מאה ועשר עולמות
במנין קדוש ובכל עולם שבע
מאה ועשרין עובר. שבע מאה
מצד ז׳ ספירות זעיר ועשרין
מצד סופי בחינות חכמה ובינה
הנגלות בשבעה התחתונים.
ועובר הם קצוות ורבוי בחינות.
והקצוות הם נובעות הארת
לובן רחמיו כי תר״ך עמודי
אור שהם בכתר מתפשטים בכל
עולם מלבד כללות אחד ממאה
בכל אחד וזהו שאמר כי העולם
שהוא עולם הנקביי הנעלם להיט
למטה לשבע מאה מצד הנקבה
בת שבע ועשרים כבר אמרנו
שהם בסוד ב׳ בחינות על השבעה
שהם חכמה ובינה ועובר ירצה
בחינות הקצוות והספירות.
ומי הוא שיוכל לשער ולתת
טעם למציאות בחינות רבות
אלו מפני העלמן בעצמן. וכל
אלו הם א׳ מאלף אלפי אלפים
ורבי רבואות מהאוכלוסין
שיש לדרוש בבחינת רישא
עילאה[i] כי אין סוף לגדודיו
וזוהי בחינה אחת לבד מתקון י״ג
תקוני דיקנא שהמתקת ובבישת
הדינים תלוי בו. זה כתבתי דרך
העברה להודיע כמה יש לדרוש
אפי׳ בבחינת השער[ii] שהוא
התפשטות לבר מגופא כ״ש בסוד

corresponding to the numerical value of "holy."[1] In each strand there are four hundred and ten worlds, also corresponding to "holy," and in each world there are seven hundred and twenty aspects—seven hundred from the seven lower sefirot and twenty from the final aspects of Wisdom and Understanding as they are revealed in the seven lower ones. These aspects are extremities and multiple dimensions, and these extremities flow from the illumination of the whiteness of His mercy, for the 620 pillars of light in Keter[2] extend into every world, besides the general inclusion of one in a hundred in each one. This is what is meant when it says that the world, which is the hidden feminine world, flames downward to seven hundred from the feminine aspect of seven and twenty. We have already said that these are in the mystery of the two aspects upon the seven,[3] which are Wisdom and Understanding, and "aspects" refers to the extremities and sefirot.

Who can measure and give reason for the existence of these many aspects, due to their inherent concealment? All these are but one of thousands upon thousands and myriads upon myriads of multitudes that can be expounded regarding the aspect of the Supernal Head, for His legions are without end. And this is just one aspect apart from the thirteenth configuration of the holy beard,[4] upon which depends the sweetening and subduing of judgments.[A] I have written this in passing to inform how much there is to expound even in the aspect of hair, which is an extension outside the body, how much more so regarding the mystery of the essence.

The aspect of the forehead alludes to the Supernal Forehead, which visits the wicked when their sins

[A] Or: "mitigating and conquering harsh judgments" — This alternate might be clearer for readers less familiar with kabbalistic terminology, where 'sweetening' is a technical term for transforming judgment into mercy.

[1] The Hebrew word for 'holy' (קדוש) has the numerical value of 410 in gematria (Hebrew numerology).

[2] The number 620 (תר״ך) corresponds to the numerical value of 'crown' (כתר) in Hebrew, representing the highest divine emanation.

[3] This refers to the kabbalistic concept of the two higher intellectual sefirot (Wisdom/Chokhmah and Understanding/Binah) influencing the seven lower, more emotional sefirot.

[4] In Kabbalah, particularly in the Idra texts of the Zohar, the divine 'beard' has thirteen distinct configurations (tikkunim) that channel divine mercy to counteract judgment.

[i] The author emphasizes the vastness and incomprehensibility of divine structures, of which human understanding can grasp only a tiny fraction.

[ii] The author acknowledges that this extended discussion of mystical hair symbolism is merely introductory, suggesting the even greater mysteries of other bodily correspondences.

העצמות. בחינת המצח רומזות
למצח העליון שהיא פוקדת
הרשעים בשמתגלה עונותם
למעלה ומצחא ירצה גבורה
אתתקף בדינוהי ואתפשט וצריך
תקון ומתוק. בחינת העינים
תרמוז להשגחת הכל עליונים
ותחתונים. בחינת גביני העינים
הוא מקום שמשם באה ההשגחה
לכל בעלי ההשגחה וממשיכים
מנהר דנפיק ונגיד לרחוץ כח
הגבורה שהיא המצח בחלב עליון
הה״ד רוחצות בחלב. בחינת
החוטם רמז לדינים שנתעוררו
המתבסמים בעשן המזבח. בחינת
האזנים הוא כשהרצון נמצא ואור
עליון מעורר אור אבא ואמא
בחינת המוחין ואז מתקבלת
תפלתן של ישראל ובהתעוררות
הזה מתעוררים בעלי כנפים
הנוטלים הקולות הנקרא אזני
ה׳. בחינת הפנים הוא אור
אבא ואימא המתפשט בראש
המלך. בחינת הדיוקן הוא כשכל
המאורות עליונות נכללות יחד
נקראים כן. בחינת שפתים ופה
הם אורות אבא ואמא ודעת
ביניהם ואז יוצא בחינת המלות
בחכמה בתבונה ובדעת ובחינה
פנימית מהג׳ אלה נקראים חיך
שבו השלימות מתראה באותיות
אח״הע. בחינת גופא הוא
התפשטות תפארת שכל הגוונים
מתחברים בו בחינת זרועות
הם אורות חסד וגבורה. בחינת
המעים דעת בפנימיותו. בחינת
השוקים והכליות כלם רומזים
למקום אחד שהם נ״ה ושם נמשך
כל כח ומדת הגוף ומשם מריקות
הכל לאבר הקדוש שהוא שלום are revealed above. The forehead represents Gevurah (Strength) strengthened in its judgments and extended, requiring rectification and sweetening. The aspect of the eyes alludes to the providence over all, both above and below. The aspect of the eyebrows is 60R the place from which providence comes to all those subject to providence, drawing from the river that emerges and flows to wash the power of Gevurah, which is the forehead, in supernal milk, as it is written, "washed with milk." The aspect of the nose 65R alludes to aroused judgments that are sweetened by the smoke of the altar. The aspect of the ears is when the will is present and supernal light awakens the light of Father and Mother, the aspect of the intellect, and then the prayers of Israel are ac- 70R cepted. Through this awakening, the winged beings who carry the sounds called "the ears of the Lord" are aroused. The aspect of the face is the light of Father and Mother extending in the head of the King. The aspect of the countenance is when all the super- 75R nal luminaries are included together, they are called thus. The aspect of lips and mouth are the lights of Father and Mother with Knowledge between them, and then the aspect of words emerges in Wisdom, Understanding, and Knowledge. The inner aspect of 80R these three is called the palate, wherein completeness is revealed through the letters alef, chet, hei, and ayin.[1] The aspect of the body is the extension of Tiferet (Beauty), where all colors combine. The aspect of the arms represents the lights of Chesed 85R (Kindness) and Gevurah (Strength). The aspect of the intestines is Knowledge in its inwardness. The aspect of the thighs and kidneys all allude to one place, which is Netzach and Hod, and there all the power and measure of the body flows, and from there ev- 90R erything pours to the holy organ, which is the peace of the house.[A2] Netzach and Hod are named "Lord of Hosts" and "God of Hosts." All these configurations unite together until all the holy abundance is taken by Yesod and poured into his accompanying 95R

[A] Or: "foundation of domestic harmony" — This alternative makes the euphemistic nature of the reference more explicit while preserving the connection to its kabbalistic correlation with the divine attribute of Yesod (Foundation).

[1] These four letters (אח״הע) are guttural consonants in Hebrew that are formed in the palate/throat, thus connecting Hebrew linguistics with mystical anatomy.

[2] This is a euphemistic reference to the reproductive organ, called 'peace of the house' (שלום הבית) because of its role in marital harmony. In Kabbalah, it corresponds to the divine attribute of Yesod (Foundation).

הבית ונ״ה ה׳ צבאות ואלהים
צבאות שמם. וכל תקונים אלו
מתחברים יחד עד שכל רבות
קדשא נטיל יסוד ומריק בלויה
100 שלו מלכות ומתברכת ממנו.
וזהו בעת שלמטה מתקנים
הדינין ובצדק ישפוטו דאז כל
תקונין דמלכא בחדוותא בשלימו
דכתיב אלהים נצב בעדת אל.
105 המעלה על לבו בחינות אלו
עם פסוקי שיר השירים שאמרנו
בעת רחיצת אדם גדול[i] שקדש
גופו בעה״ז ונזהר מכל טומאה
כפי האפשר בזמננו זה ברחוץ
110 תשמישי קדושה אלו ויקביל
בחינות רוחניות כחות קדושים
אלו לעומתן אדם זה ביקר
ילין וישמח ויגל מאד באדם
הזה החי באמת המחיה ונותן
115 נשמה ברוחניותו לאבריו המתים
מכח ההרגשה טבעית אך לא
מהרוחניות כדאמרו בפ׳ שואל
כל שאומרים בפני המת יודע עד
שיסתם הגולל[ii] והנה הגומל עמו
120 חסדים טובים בהשים בקרבו את
רוח קדשו שהעיר וקשט בעשותו
פה למטה ודאי במלאכת שמים
זו יזכה לו ולבניו. הרי שאברי
האדם כלם נרמזים למעלה
125 ולא להם חלק בגשמיות כי
בתוכם האלהות הקדוש נסתר
ונגלה והסתרת נפש האדם בגוף
כהסתרת מדה אחת במה שלמטה
ממנה בספירות עליונות אשרי
130 המקדש עצמו בעה״ז.[iii] ויזהר

Malkhut, which is blessed by it. This occurs when those below rectify judgments and judge with righteousness, for then all the configurations of the King are in joy and completeness, as it is written, "God stands in the divine assembly." 100R

One who takes to heart these aspects, along with the verses from Song of Songs that we mentioned during the washing of a distinguished person[A] who sanctified his body in this world and was careful to avoid all impurity as much as possible in our time, by 105R washing these holy implements and receiving these spiritual aspects and holy powers corresponding to them—such a person will abide in honor and rejoice greatly in this person who truly lives, who gives life and soul in his spirituality to his limbs that are dead 110R through natural sensation but not through spirituality. As they said in chapter "One Who Asks," everything said in the presence of the deceased, he knows until the grave is sealed.[1] Behold, the one who bestows good kindnesses upon him by placing 115R within him his holy spirit, which he awakened and adorned by his actions here below, will surely merit this heavenly work for himself and his children.

Thus, all the limbs of a person are alluded to above, and they have no share in materiality, for 120R within them the holy divinity is both hidden and revealed. The concealment of a person's soul in the body is like the concealment of one attribute within what is below it in the supernal sefir[2]ot. Fortunate is one who sanctifies himself in this world. A per- 125R son should be careful while still alive to avoid anything associated with impurity, even in the words of the Sages, such as removing one's shoes, touching one's body, or washing one's head, and all the things mentioned, and those things associated with 130R

[A] Or: "a great man" — The more literal 'great man' might better preserve the term's connotation of spiritual greatness rather than merely social distinction, though both meanings are present in the Hebrew.

[1] This refers to the Talmudic teaching that the deceased maintains awareness until the burial is complete, which is why proper respect and careful ritual treatment are essential.

[2] This describes the kabbalistic concept of each higher divine attribute (sefirah) being 'clothed' or concealed within the lower attribute, just as the soul is concealed within the body.

[i] This indicates that verses from Song of Songs were recited during the ritual washing of distinguished individuals, with specific verses likely corresponding to different body parts.

[ii] This references a Talmudic teaching that the deceased remains aware of what is happening around them until burial is complete, which adds spiritual significance to the purification ritual.

[iii] The text transitions from mystical cosmology to practical moral exhortation, suggesting that understanding these correspondences should motivate proper conduct in life.

האדם בעוד בחיים חיותו מכל
דבר הנזכר בו טומאה[i] ואפי׳
בדברי חכמים כגון החולץ
מנעליו והנוגע בגופו והחופף
בראשו וכל הדברים שנזכרו
ומהדברים שנזכר בהם טומאה
ונדוי בדברי חכמינו ז״ל.
ובפרט לא ילך ד״א בבקר בלא
נטילת ידים[ii] כי דברים אלו
גורמים טומאה לנשמתו בצאתה
מן הגוף ומתאמצים בה הרוחות
רעות שהחזיקו בו בחיים ואז
מבקשים שלהם מתחת ידו ושומר
נפשו ירחק מהם. ואל יהא קל
בעיניו שום אזהרה הנזכרת
בדברי חכמים כי הם בחנו וידעו
הדברים על בריין. והמקדש
עצמו קדוש יאמר לו בשעת
מיתתו כדכתיב והתקדשתם
והייתם קדושים. ואמרו דכל מאן
דינטר ארחי אורייתא ואשתדל
בה כמאן דאשתדל בשמא קדישא
שמא עילאה שמא דכליל כל
שמהן ובעובדא תליא מילתא
בעובדא דלתתא לאתערא
לעילא כנזכר למעלה: [iii]

impurity and excommunication in the words of our Sages of blessed memory. In particular, one should not walk four cubits in the morning without washing one's hands, for these things cause impurity to one's soul when it departs from the body, and the evil spirits that took hold of him in life then strengthen in it, demanding what is theirs from under his hand. One who guards his soul will distance himself from them. No warning mentioned in the words of the Sages should be taken lightly, for they examined and knew these matters thoroughly. One who sanctifies himself will be called holy at the time of his death, as it is written, "You shall sanctify yourselves and be holy." And they said that whoever guards the ways of Torah and engages in it is like one who engages with the holy Name, the supernal Name that includes all names, and the matter depends on action—on action below to awaken above,[1] as mentioned above.

[1] This expresses a fundamental kabbalistic principle that human actions in the physical realms have corresponding effects in the spiritual realms, particularly when performed with proper intention (kavvanah).

[i] This section warns that ritual impurities during life affect the soul after death, suggesting that the tahara (purification) ritual can only partially compensate for a life of impurity.

[ii] Walking four cubits in the morning without ritual hand washing was considered particularly problematic, as it was believed to give evil spirits a hold on the person that could affect their soul even after death.

[iii] Cf. Song of Songs — The text mentions that verses from Song of Songs were recited during the ritual washing of a distinguished person. In kabbalistic tradition, Song of Songs is interpreted as an allegory of the love between God and Israel, and its verses were often incorporated into purification rituals with specific verses corresponding to different body parts. | Cf. Zohar, Idra Rabba — The text's detailed discussion of the 'thirteenth configuration of the holy beard' (תקון י״ג תקוני דיקנא) directly references the Zohar's elaborate discourse on the thirteen attributes of divine mercy as manifested in the metaphorical 'beard' of God, particularly found in the Idra Rabba section. | Cf. Babylonian Talmud — The phrase 'everything said in the presence of the deceased, he knows until the grave is sealed' (כל שאומרים בפני המת יודע עד שיסתם הגולל) is a direct reference to a Talmudic teaching that informs the respectful conduct required during funeral preparations. | Cf. Leviticus 11:44 — The phrase 'והתקדשתם והייתם קדושים' ('You shall sanctify yourselves and be holy') is a direct quotation from Leviticus, used here to emphasize that those who maintain ritual purity in life will be designated as holy at the time of death. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 8:5 — The phrase 'שומר נפשו' ('one who guards his soul') echoes similar phrasing in Ecclesiastes, adapted here to emphasize the spiritual self-protection that comes from observing ritual purity laws. | Cf. Psalms 82:1 — The phrase 'אלהים נצב בעדת אל' ('God stands in the divine assembly') is a direct quotation from Psalms, used here to emphasize divine presence when judgments are properly executed below.

פרק י״ב

בעת שמסירין הסדין מעל המת
לרחצו יכוונו להפשיט ולדחות
מעליו כחות סטרא אחרא דשליט
עליה במיתתו ע״י דההוא מחבלא
דנבל שמיה.[i] ולכן מתי ישראל
שבח״ל נקראי׳ נבלה[ii] כדדרשו
בספר הזהר פ׳ תרומה דף קכ״א
על פסוק יחיו מתיך וגו׳ וצריך
חזוק גדול נגד הפכו למתי חוצה
לארץ שאינם בחיק אמם כי אין
רוחם נכנס למקום מנוחתו מפני
כחות הטומאה המעכבים אותו.
אמנם בארץ הנבחרת אין שם
כחות אחרות כי היא חלק ה׳
ומיד תמצא מנוח לכף רגלה
אם לא יעכבוה עונותיה.[iii] ע״כ
בח״ל צריך תמיד התעוררות
בפסוקי דרחמי. ובמים שרוחצים
אותו בהם[iv] ובפרט ברחיצה
שניה כי הראשונה תהיה להבריח
הרוחות ששורים על הזוהמא
אבל בשניה יכוונו להשפעת
מי החסד עליו הזועם בכל יום
נגד הקליפות והמים נמשכים
דרך קו האמצעי ומריקים עליו
מכלי עליון הברוך ומבורך
ולכן מברכים על המים שהכל
נהיה בדברו על דרך שנאמר

When removing the sheet from the deceased before washing, one should intend to strip away and repel the forces of the Other Side[1] that dominate the deceased at death through the destroyer whose name is Naval[2] (vile). This is why the Jewish dead outside the Land of Israel are called "nevalah" (carcass), as expounded in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 121, on the verse "Your dead shall live..." (Isaiah 26:19). Great spiritual strengthening is needed to counteract these forces for those who die outside the Land of Israel, who are not in their mother's bosom, since their spirits cannot enter their resting place due to the impure forces that obstruct them. However, in the Chosen Land, no such foreign forces exist, for it is the Lord's portion, and immediately the soul finds rest for the sole of its foot, unless its sins prevent it. Therefore, outside the Land of Israel, one always needs spiritual awakening through verses of mercy.

Regarding the water used for washing the deceased, especially during the second washing—for the first washing is to drive away the spirits that dwell on the impurity—during the second washing, one should intend to draw down the waters of loving-kindness upon the deceased, which rage daily against the negative forces. These waters are drawn through the central column[3] and pour upon the deceased from the blessed and exalted supernal vessel. This is why we bless water with "through Whose word ev-

[1] The Hebrew term 'sitra achra' literally means 'the other side' and refers to forces of impurity or evil in kabbalistic thought. These forces are believed to attach themselves to the deceased at the moment of death.

[2] There's a play on words here connecting the name 'Naval' (vile) with 'nevalah' (carcass), suggesting that those who die outside Israel are more susceptible to this destructive spiritual force.

[3] In Kabbalah, the 'central column' refers to the middle line of the sefirot (divine emanations) that balances mercy and judgment. Water, which is used in purification, is associated with this balancing force.

[i] The text refers to the Angel of Death or destructive force as 'Naval' (meaning vile or disgraceful), creating a wordplay that connects to the term 'nevalah' (carcass) used for those who die outside the Land of Israel.

[ii] This striking statement that 'the Jewish dead outside the Land of Israel are called nevalah (carcass)' comes from the Zohar and reflects the spiritual hierarchy that places burial in the Land of Israel as spiritually superior. The text explains that this is not a derogatory term but rather describes the additional spiritual obstacles faced by those buried outside Israel.

[iii] The text acknowledges that even burial in the Land of Israel cannot overcome the spiritual obstacles created by one's sins, suggesting that moral conduct in life remains paramount regardless of burial location.

[iv] The washing ritual is given a detailed mystical interpretation that transforms it from a mere physical cleansing into a cosmic act that draws divine mercy through the 'waters of loving-kindness' to counteract negative spiritual forces.

עולם חסד יבנה והטומאה
באה מן האש מדה השמאלית
ומהרה מן המים אשר במעלה
שביעית[i] והמים נקרא שערי
דמעה שלא ננעלו ושמם כן בזמן
הגלות שבו נאמר השיב אחור
ימינו. והשושנים הנוהגים לרחצו
בהם אינון השפעת המלכות
שהיא שושנה בין החוחים והיא
בתליסר עלין ויתיבת על חמש
עלין תקיפין[ii] ושאר מיני בשמים
שמצרפים עמהם הם להעלאת
נשמתו עד מקום הבינה ולכן
יש מוסיפין ההדס ליחד עליו
כח החסד והדין והרחמים
שלשתן עבותים וכלולים זה
בזה[iii] ולעורר עליו זכות
אבות העולם. ומיני בשמים
בכל מקום רומזים ומעוררים
המקורות למעלה מעלה וראיה
מהקטרת וכן כתיב שמן שהוא
חכמה וקטרת שהוא בינה ישמח
לב.[iv] וכבר דברנו למעלה מסוד
האזוב כי טוב לצרפו עם זינים
אלו כנזכר שם. ובהסרת הסדין
מעליו יענו ויאמרו פסוק ויען
ויאמר אל העומדים לפניו לאמר
וגו׳. ויכוונו במעשיהם ובדבורם

erything came to be," as it is said, "The world is built on loving-kindness" (Psalms 89:3). Impurity comes from fire, the left-side attribute, while purification comes from water, which is of the seventh level, and water is called "the gates of tears" that are never close[1]d, named so during the exile, about which it is said, "He has drawn back His right hand" (Lamentations 2:3).

The roses customarily used to wash the deceased represent the influence of Malkhut (Kingdom), which is like a rose among thorns,[2] with thirteen petals resting upon five strong leaves.[3] The other types of spices combined with these help elevate the soul to the realm of Binah[4] (Understanding). For this reason, some add myrtle to unify over the deceased the powers of loving-kindness, judgment, and mercy—all three intertwined and included within each other—and to awaken the merit of the Patriarchs[5] on their behalf. Spices in every context allude to and awaken the sources on high, as evidenced by the incense offering. Thus it is written, "Oil, which is Wisdom, and incense, which is Understanding, gladden the heart" (Proverbs 27:9). We have already discussed above the mystery of hyssop, which is good to combine with these types as mentioned there.

When removing the sheet from the deceased, they should respond and recite the verse: "And he answered and said to those standing before him, say-

[1]This is a reference to a rabbinic saying that while all gates of prayer may sometimes be closed, the gates of tears are never closed, meaning that sincere tearful prayer is always accepted by God.
[2]This description of Malkhut (the Divine Presence) as a 'rose among thorns' comes from the Zohar and is a fundamental image in Kabbalah, representing divine beauty and vulnerability surrounded by harsh forces.
[3]The thirteen petals represent the thirteen attributes of divine mercy, while the five leaves represent the five powers of judgment (gevurot). This kabbalistic symbolism shows how mercy and judgment are balanced in the divine realm.
[4]In Kabbalah, Binah (Understanding) is one of the highest divine emanations and is associated with the World to Come. The ritual aims to help the soul ascend to this elevated spiritual level.
[5]The concept of 'merit of the Patriarchs' (zechut avot) refers to the spiritual protection and blessing that descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob can access through their ancestral connection.

[i]The reference to water being 'of the seventh level' connects to kabbalistic cosmology where the seventh sefirah (Malkhut) is associated with purification and transition.
[ii]This is a direct reference to the Zohar's symbolic description of Malkhut (the Divine Presence or Shekhinah) as a rose with thirteen petals representing the thirteen attributes of mercy, resting on five strong leaves representing the five gevurot (powers of judgment).
[iii]The three divine attributes (loving-kindness, judgment, and mercy) being 'intertwined' refers to the kabbalistic concept that these seemingly opposing forces are actually interdependent and ultimately unified in the divine realm.
[iv]The text interprets Proverbs 27:9 kabbalistically, identifying oil with Chokhmah (Wisdom) and incense with Binah (Understanding), two of the highest divine emanations in kabbalistic thought.

לתקון נשמתו למעלה[i] ולזה יהיה
מגמת פניהם בעשיית כל צרכיו
כנתבאר למעלה: בשעת הרחיצה
60 בשזורקין מים על ראשו. יאמרו
מעין גנים באר מים חיים ונוזלים
מן לבנון. אם רחץ ה׳ וגו׳.
וזרקתי עליכם מים טהורים
וגו׳. אח״כ יאמרו מקוה ישראל
65 ה׳ וגו׳. והתקדשתם והייתם
קדושים. ואפי׳ לפי פשטי
הכתובים מתבאר כוונתם בזה
כ״ש למי שיעמיק בסוד כל אחד
מהם וכבר עלה בדעתנו לפרש
70 בהם איזה רמזים אך יתארכו
הדרושים[ii] וכבר הרחבנו למעלה
יותר ממה שהיה במחשבתנו הגם
כי השמטנו הרבה פסוקים
ומשניות ומאמרי חכמינו ז״ל
75 שהיו מפרשים ומוסיפים כח
להרבה דברים שדרשנו כפי
עניות דעתנו. הבצים שחופפים
על ראשו[iii] אולי יהיה להסתיר
בחות הדינים הנרמזים בשערות
80 הראש למען יגולו רחמיו על
מדותיו ויחדו יהיו תמים להניח
ברכות על ראשו ויבוסמו
הד׳ מאות בתי דינין דאינון
במצחא בסוד ארבע מאות איש
85 עמו.[iv] וכתיב באדרת האזינו
כי מוצא מארי דיבבא ויללא
ומארי דמארין כלם בשערי זעיר
אנפין וצדיק התחתון בדמותו
נוצר ונברא ועליו נאמר ואיש
90 כי ימרט ראשו קרח הוא טהור

ing..." (Zechariah 3:4). They should direct their actions and speech toward rectifying the soul above, and this should be their intention in performing all necessary preparations, as explained above. 60R

During the washing, when water is sprinkled on the head, they should say: "A garden spring, a well of living waters, flowing from Lebanon" (Song of Songs 4:15); "When the Lord has washed away..." (Isaiah 4:4); "I will sprinkle clean water upon you..." (Ezekiel 36:25). Afterwards, they should say: "O Lord, the hope of Israel..." (Jeremiah 17:13); "Sanctify yourselves and be holy" (Leviticus 20:7). Even according to the plain meaning of these verses, their intention is clear, all the more so for one who delves into the mystery of each verse. I had considered explaining some of these allusions, but the explanations would be lengthy, and I have already elaborated above more than I initially intended, although I have omitted many verses, Mishnaic passages, and sayings of our Sages of blessed memory that would have expounded upon and strengthened many of the matters I have discussed according to my limited understanding. 65R 70R 75R

The eggs that are rubbed on the head of the deceased perhaps serve to conceal the forces of judgment alluded to in the hair of the head, so that His mercies may prevail over His attributes, and together they may be perfect, placing blessings upon the head, sweetening the four hundred houses of judgment[1] that are in the forehead, corresponding to "four hundred men with him" (Genesis 33:1). It is written in the Idra of Ha'azinu (section of the Zohar) that the sources of wailing and lamentation and the masters of masters are all in the hair of Zeir 80R 85R 90R

[1] In kabbalistic literature, these represent comprehensive systems of divine judgment that examine all aspects of human conduct. The egg ritual is meant to mitigate these judgments for the deceased.

[i] This instruction highlights the central kabbalistic principle that physical actions and speech in this world, when performed with proper intention (kavvanah), create corresponding effects in higher spiritual realms.

[ii] The author shows scholarly restraint, acknowledging that while deeper mystical interpretations of these verses are possible, they would make the text too lengthy. This suggests that Ma'avar Yabok was intended to be both practically useful and spiritually profound without becoming overly academic.

[iii] The practice of rubbing eggs on the deceased's head is given a mystical interpretation related to mitigating divine judgment. Eggs were commonly used in purification rituals across various Jewish communities.

[iv] This connects the 'four hundred houses of judgment' from Kabbalistic literature with the biblical story of Esau approaching Jacob with four hundred men (Genesis 33:1), interpreting the latter as an allusion to forces of judgment.

הוא.[i] עוד ביצה ירמוז השפעת כחות המלכות עליו כי ביצה ירמוז לכל ספירה מצד המלכות בסוד אור החוזר בתקונים.[ii] או ליו״ד שבשם בן ד׳ שבחכמה בר״מ. המאיר לכל בסוד כלם בחכמה עשית[iii] ומשם משך שמן הטוב היורד על הראש וכבר דברנו מזה למעלה:[iv]

Anpin (the Lesser Countenance),[1] and the earthly righteous one is formed and created in its image, and of him it is said, "If a man's hair falls out from his head, he is bald; he is clean" (Leviticus 13:40). Additionally, the egg symbolizes the influence of the powers of Malkhut upon him, for an egg alludes to each sefirah from the perspective of Malkhut, in the mystery of reflected light[2] as explained in the Tikkunim. Or it represents the yod in the four-letter Name associated with Wisdom in Ra'aya Mehemna (The Faithful Shepherd), which illuminates all in the mystery of "You have made them all with wisdom"[3] (Psalms 104:24), and from there flows the good oil that descends upon the head, as we have discussed above.

פרק י״ג

Chapter 13

אחר הרחיצה כשמלבישים אותו יכוונו לתקון ג׳ מיני מלבושים לנפש רוח ונשמה[v] כפי

After the washing, when dressing him, they should intend to prepare three types of garments for the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah [three levels of the

[1] This is a complex kabbalistic term referring to the six sefirot from Chesed to Yesod that constitute the 'body' of the divine configuration, often associated with the revealed aspects of God that interact with creation.

[2] In Kabbalah, 'or chozer' (reflected light) refers to how divine energy returns upward after descending, creating a reciprocal flow between higher and lower spiritual realms. The egg symbolizes this circular dynamic.

[3] This verse from Psalms is interpreted kabbalistically to mean that Chokhmah (Wisdom) is the divine attribute through which all creation is sustained and illuminated.

[i] The text creatively interprets Leviticus 13:40 (about baldness being ritually clean) in a mystical context related to the deceased being purified and freed from the judgments associated with hair.

[ii] The reference to 'or chozer' (reflected light) in the Tikkunim (Tikkunei Zohar) refers to the kabbalistic concept where lower emanations reflect back the divine light they receive from higher sources, creating a reciprocal spiritual dynamic.

[iii] This quote from Psalm 104:24 ('In wisdom You have made them all') is interpreted kabbalistically to refer to how the divine attribute of Wisdom (Chokhmah) illuminates and sustains all creation.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 121 — The Zohar distinguishes between those who die in the Land of Israel versus those who die outside it, with the latter facing greater spiritual obstacles. This reference supports the ritual washing practices described in the text. | Cf. Idra of Ha'azinu — This section of the Zohar connects the symbolism of hair to divine judgment and the spiritual structure of Zeir Anpin (the Lesser Countenance). The text draws on this to explain why eggs are rubbed on the deceased's head during purification. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — This reference connects the symbolism of the egg to the letter yod of the divine name and to the sefirah of Wisdom (Chokhmah), explaining the mystical significance of using eggs in the purification ritual. | Cf. Tikkunim — The reference to 'Tikkunim' invokes the kabbalistic concept of 'or chozer' (reflected light) in Tikkunei Zohar, explaining how the egg symbolizes Malkhut's reflection of higher sefirot. | Cf. Zechariah 3:4 — This verse is recited when removing the sheet from the deceased, creating a parallel between Joshua the High Priest being purified in Zechariah's vision and the purification of the deceased. The full verse (not quoted completely in the text) continues with 'See, I have removed your iniquity from you, and I will clothe you in pure garments.'

[v] The text refers to the three primary levels of the soul in Jewish mysticism: nefesh (the most basic life force), ruach (the emotional or middle soul), and neshamah (the highest spiritual aspect). According to kabbalistic tradition, each requires its own spiritual 'garment' after death.

המתבאר באדרא בזהר פ׳ ויחי דף רכ״ד ובלבישת הלבוש תחתון והבתי שוקים יכוונו להלביש הנפש.[i] ובסרגני״ז יכוונו להלביש הרוח. ואם נהג ללובשו בחייו ביום הכפורים נ״ל שטוב להבדיל במוצאי יום הכפורים קודם שיפשטנו מעליו[ii] והיודע סוד ההבדלה ורמז יינה יבוסם לו דעת זה.[iii] ובעטיפת הטלית עליו יכוונו להלביש הנשמה[iv] ואם בחייו היה מקיים עטיפתו על ראשו לפחות בתפלת העמידה שחרית טוב להשימו על ראשו ויקשרו אחד מציציותיו אם מנהג המקום כן. אבל לא יפסלו אותו בהסרת הציצית ויכוונו בהנחת הטלית להסתיר אותו מבעלי הדין ולהכניס נשמתו תחת כנפי השכינה.[v] ובשאדם soul],[1] as explained in the Idra section of the Zohar,[2] Parashat Vayechi, page 224. When dressing him in the undergarment and leggings, they should intend to clothe the nefesh.[3] With the shroud, they should intend to clothe the ruach. And if he was accustomed to wearing it during his lifetime on Yom Kippur, it seems to me that it is good to perform Havdalah at the conclusion of Yom Kippur before removing it from him. One who knows the secret of Havdalah and the symbolism of its wine will find this knowledge fragrant.[4] When wrapping the tallit around him, they should intend to clothe the neshamah. And if during his lifetime he maintained the practice of covering his head with it, at least during the morning Amidah prayer, it is good to place it on his head, and they should tie one of its tzitzit [ritual fringes] if that is the local custom. But they should not invalidate it by removing the tzitzit, and they should intend when placing the tallit to hide him from the forces of judgment and to bring his soul under the wings of the Divine Presence.[5]

5R 10R 15R 20R

[1] Jewish mysticism recognizes multiple levels of the soul, with nefesh, ruach, and neshamah being the three primary ones. The nefesh is the most basic life force associated with physical existence, the ruach is the emotional or middle soul, and the neshamah is the highest spiritual aspect connected to divine intelligence.

[2] The Idra (meaning 'threshing floor' or 'assembly') sections of the Zohar are especially sacred and esoteric portions that purportedly record mystical gatherings led by Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, where the deepest secrets of Kabbalah were revealed.

[3] This passage establishes a correspondence between specific burial garments and components of the soul, reflecting the kabbalistic principle that physical actions create parallel spiritual effects. The lowest garments clothe the lowest soul level (nefesh), while higher garments correspond to higher soul aspects.

[4] This is a deliberately cryptic reference to kabbalistic secrets. In Jewish mysticism, wine in the Havdalah ceremony symbolizes joy and the flow of divine blessing. The author suggests that those initiated into deeper mystical knowledge will understand additional significance to this practice.

[5] The metaphor of divine protection as being 'under the wings of the Shekhinah (Divine Presence)' appears throughout Jewish literature, derived from imagery in Psalms and Ruth. In burial context, it refers to ensuring the soul's peaceful transition to the afterlife under divine protection.

[i] The text establishes a correspondence between specific burial garments and the soul components they are meant to clothe. This reflects the kabbalistic principle that physical actions in this world create parallel spiritual effects.

[ii] This suggests that if a person died while wearing the special white garment (kittel) worn on Yom Kippur, one should perform Havdalah (the ritual marking the end of Yom Kippur) before removing it from the deceased. This demonstrates how Jewish law considers ritual timing even in death circumstances.

[iii] This cryptic phrase suggests there are kabbalistic secrets related to the Havdalah ritual and its wine that would make this practice more meaningful to those with esoteric knowledge.

[iv] The tallit (prayer shawl) is associated with the neshamah, the highest level of the soul, suggesting its special spiritual significance. In burial customs, the tallit is often modified by removing one of the tzitzit (ritual fringes) or by otherwise invalidating it.

[v] This reveals the protective purpose of the tallit in burial—to shield the deceased from negative spiritual forces ('forces of judgment') and to bring the soul under divine protection, metaphorically described as 'the wings of the Divine Presence.'

בחייו מעוטף בציצית ויוצא
לפתח ביתו קב״ה כ״י שמח
ומלאך המות יזוז משם וינצל
האדם מכל היזק ומשחית והיינו
לדורותם לדור אתם. ומזוזת הם
אותיות ז״ז מו״ת.[i] ור׳ נהוראי
פתח אסהדנא על מה דנפיק
בעטיפא דמצוה ותפלין ברישיה
בשעתא דנפיק בין תרין תרעין
אז שבינתא עלויה ותרין מלאכין
קיימין עלוהי חד מימינא וחד
משמאלא ומלוין יתיה עד בי
כנישתא. עוד במנחות פרק
התכלת ראב״י אומר כל שיש לו
תפלין בראשו ותפלין בזרועו
ומזוזה בפתחו וציצית בבגדו
מוחזק שלא יחטא שנאמר והחוט
המשולש וגו׳ ואומר חונה מלאך
ה׳ וגו׳. והטעם הוא כי בר״מ
איתא וכן בתקונים כי שם שדי
הוא שד י׳[ii] ופי׳ שהיו״ד היא
חניקא כריכא בצואריה דשד
שתופס בו ואינו יכול לו. והנה
שם שד״י הוא בתפלין ש״ד
בתפלה של ראש וי׳ בתפלה של
יד. וכשאדם לובש תפלין נמצא
ס״מ תפוס בחניקא די׳ בצואריה
שאינו מתקרב אצלו להחטיאו
וכן במזוזה יש בה שד״י כמו
כן וכן כשהוא לבוש בציצית
בו רמוז שם שדי כדפי׳ בר״מ
הא כיצד שד״י במספר קטן
עולה ח׳ כנגד ח׳ חוטין שבכל
כנף[iii] ולכן בהיות ששם זה רמוז

When a person in his lifetime is wrapped in tzitzit and goes to the entrance of his house, the Holy One, blessed be He, and the Community of Israel rejoice, and the Angel of Death moves away from there, and the person is saved from all harm and destruction. This is the meaning of "throughout their generations" [which can be read as] "to dwell with them." And the word "mezuzot" contains the letters that spell "zaz mavet" [death departs].[1]

Rabbi Nehorai began: "I testify regarding one who goes out wearing the ritual wrap and tefillin on his head—at the time when he passes between the two doorposts, the Divine Presence rests upon him, and two angels stand over him, one on his right and one on his left, and they accompany him to the synagogue."

Furthermore, in Tractate Menachot, chapter HaTechelet, Rabbi Eliezer ben Yaakov says: "Anyone who has tefillin on his head, tefillin on his arm, a mezuzah on his doorpost, and tzitzit on his garment is assured that he will not sin, as it is said: 'And the threefold cord will not quickly be broken' (Ecclesiastes 4:12), and it is also said: 'The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear Him' (Psalms 34:8)."

The reason is because in Ra'aya Mehemna and in the Tikkunim it states that the divine name Shaddai [שדי] consists of "shed" [שד] and "yod" [י], meaning that the yod is like a noose wrapped around the neck of the demon,[2] holding it so it cannot harm him. Now, the name Shaddai appears in tefillin—the "shin" and "dalet" [ש״ד] in the head tefillin and the "yod" [י] in the arm tefillin. When a person wears tefillin, Samael is caught by the noose of the yod

[1] This is a wordplay typical of kabbalistic interpretation, where Hebrew words are rearranged to reveal hidden meanings. The author suggests that the word 'mezuzot' (doorposts) contains the same letters as 'zaz mavet' (death departs), implying that the mezuzah has power to ward off death.

[2] This vivid imagery explains the kabbalistic understanding of divine names as having protective power. The shape of the Hebrew letter yod (י) is seen as resembling a noose that restrains demonic forces, with the divine name Shaddai (שדי) thus functioning as a spiritual protection mechanism.

[i] This is a wordplay where the Hebrew word 'mezuzot' (doorposts) is reinterpreted as containing the phrase 'zaz mavet' (death departs), suggesting that the mezuzah has protective powers against death.

[ii] The text offers a kabbalistic interpretation of the divine name Shaddai (שדי) as composed of 'shed' (demon) and 'yod' (the tenth Hebrew letter), creating a visual metaphor where the yod functions as a noose controlling the demon.

[iii] This refers to gematria (Hebrew numerology) where 'small numerical value' means adding the numerical values of each letter reduced to single digits. Shin (300→3) + dalet (4) + yod (10→1) = 8, which corresponds to the 8 threads on each corner of the tzitzit.

באלו המצות הוא משבר כחו
60 של ס״מ ומוחזק שלא יחטא וז״ש
חונה מלאך ה׳ סביב ליראיו
במקום מ״ה חונה מלאך ה׳
סביב ליראיו.[i] והזהיר במצות
ציצית בחייו יכוונו בעטיפת
65 הטלית עליו אחר מותו כוונה
זו שאמרנו המתעסקים בתקונו
כי בזה ילך לבטח דרכו לדור
בב״ה עליון ומלאכיו יצוה לו
ושכינת אל על ראשו. ומשם
70 תעלה בצרור החיים וכבר
בארנו בסוד הציצית בח״ב.
ועיין סוד צרורא דחיי בדרוש
השבת פ׳ ויקהל ובפ׳ ויקרא דף
כ״ח. עוד שם איך זוכה אדם
75 במעשיו לרוח ונשמה ומדרגת
כל אחד מהם בעה״ז ובעה״ב
ואז יאמרו פסוק נרד וכרכום
וגו׳. עיין בזהר פ׳ ויקהל דף
כ׳ מפסוק זה ובפ׳ אמור דף
80 ר״פ נתן טעם לקבורה ועיין
למעלה ח״ב. וכבר אמרנו שאין
להשהות המת בלילה[ii] כאשר
כתוב בפ׳ אמור דף פ״ח ובשום
אופן אין לשהותו כ״ד שעות
85 דיהיב חלישותא בשייפוהי
דרתיכא ומעכב עבידתא דקב״ה
מלמעבד[iii] וע״ש ובריקאנ״טי
ריש פ׳ כי תצא:[iv]

around his neck, preventing him from approaching to cause sin. Similarly, the mezuzah contains the name Shaddai, and likewise when one wears tzitzit, the name Shaddai is alluded to, as explained in Ra'aya Mehemna. How so? Shaddai in its small numerical value equals 8,[1] corresponding to the 8 threads on each corner. Therefore, since this name is alluded to in these commandments, it breaks the power of Samael, and one is assured not to sin. This is the meaning of "The angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear Him"—in place of the Angel of Death, the angel of the Lord encamps around those who fear Him.[2]

60R

65R

70R

For one who was careful with the commandment of tzitzit during his lifetime, those attending to his preparation after death should have this intention when wrapping the tallit around him, as we have said. For in this way, he will walk securely on his path to dwell in the supernal house, and "He will command His angels concerning you," and God's Presence will be upon his head. From there, his soul will ascend in the bond of life, and we have already explained the secret of tzitzit in part two. See also the secret of "the bond of life" in the discourse on Shabbat in Parashat Vayakhel and in Parashat Vayikra, page 25. There it also explains how a person merits through his deeds to attain ruach and neshamah, and the level of each of them in this world and in the World to Come.

75R

80R

85R

Then they should recite the verse: "Nard and

[1] This refers to 'mispar katan' (small number), a system of Hebrew numerology where letter values above 9 are reduced by adding their digits. Thus Shin (300→3) + Dalet (4) + Yod (10→1) = 8, which corresponds to the 8 threads on each corner of the tzitzit.

[2] The text uses a wordplay on 'מ״ה' which could be read as an abbreviation for 'Malach HaMavet' (Angel of Death). The verse is interpreted to mean that the protective angel replaces the destructive one for those who observe the commandments.

[i] The text uses wordplay to suggest that 'in place of M"H' (where M"H is an abbreviation for Malach HaMavet—the Angel of Death), the angel of the Lord surrounds the righteous, offering protection.

[ii] The prohibition against delaying burial overnight is an important Jewish burial practice, based on Deuteronomy 21:23. The text here reinforces this with mystical reasoning about its cosmic effects.

[iii] This Aramaic phrase explains that delaying burial causes 'weakness in the limbs of the Divine Chariot' and 'impedes the work of the Holy One, blessed be He.' In kabbalistic thought, the human body corresponds to the divine structure, so proper treatment of the deceased has cosmic implications.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The Zohar passage explains how the different components of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) require different spiritual garments in the afterlife, which are symbolized by the physical burial garments. This reference provides the kabbalistic basis for the burial clothing practices described. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This Zohar passage saffron..." (Song of Songs 4:14). See in the Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel, page 20, regarding this verse, and in Parashat Emor, page 280, where it gives a reason for burial. See also above in part two.

We have already stated that one should not keep the deceased overnight, as written in Parashat Emor, page 88, and under no circumstances should one delay for 24 hours, for this causes weakness in the limbs of the Divine Chariot and impedes the work of the Holy One,[1] blessed be He, from being accomplished. See there and in Recanati at the beginning of Parashat Ki Tetze.

פרק י״ד

Chapter 14

ואחר שהלבישוהו יאמרו עוד לסוד הלבשת בגדים הרוחניים שוש אשיש בה׳ וגו׳[i] ויאמר כשמתקן כסוי ראשו בעטופא דמצוה ואומר ישימו צניף טהור וגו׳.[ii] עיין מפסוק זה פ׳ שלח

After they have dressed him,[2] they should further recite, regarding the mystery of clothing in spiritual garments:[3] "I will greatly rejoice in the LORD" etc. And when arranging the covering of his head with the ritual wrapping,[4] they should say: "Let them place a pure diadem" etc. Examine this verse in [1]This expresses the kabbalistic belief that human actions have cosmic consequences. Delaying burial is understood to affect negative changes in the divine realm, specifically in the 'Divine Chariot' (merkavah), a mystical concept based on Ezekiel's vision that represents the structure of divine governance.

[2]This section deals with the next stage of tahara (ritual purification of the deceased) after the washing and dressing in burial shrouds has been completed. The text now focuses on the spiritual dimensions of these physical acts.

[3]In Kabbalah, physical garments represent spiritual vessels or 'clothing' for the soul. The burial shrouds have a corresponding spiritual reality that helps the soul transition to the next world.

[4]This likely refers to wrapping the deceased's head with a cloth similar to how the tallit (prayer shawl) might be wrapped during prayer, emphasizing the sacred nature of the preparation.

likely connects the aromatic spices mentioned in Song of Songs to the spiritual fragrances that accompany the soul's ascent, providing mystical context for why this verse should be recited during burial preparations. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Emor — This section of the Zohar provides the kabbalistic rationale for burial, explaining how proper burial facilitates the soul's journey in the afterlife. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Emor — This Zohar passage explains the spiritual harm caused by delaying burial, suggesting that it disrupts cosmic processes and causes distress to both the soul and the Divine realms. | Cf. Tractate Menachot — This Talmudic reference establishes the protective power of ritual objects like tzitzit and tefillin, which is then applied in Ma'avar Yabok to explain why these items are significant in burial preparations. The reference supports the idea that these ritual objects continue to provide spiritual protection even after death. | Cf. Recanati — Recanati (Rabbi Menahem Recanati) was a prominent kabbalist whose commentary would provide additional mystical insights about burial timing and practices, reinforcing the cosmic importance of proper burial procedures. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — This section of Ra'aya Mehemna (a part of the Zohar) explains the mystical encoding of divine names in ritual objects like tzitzit and tefillin, providing the theoretical basis for their protective powers against negative spiritual forces.

[i]From Isaiah 61:10, "I will greatly rejoice in the LORD; my soul shall exult in my God, for He has clothed me with garments of salvation, He has covered me with the robe of righteousness." This verse connects physical dressing with spiritual clothing in divine attributes.

[ii]From Zechariah 3:5, "Let them place a pure diadem on his head." This verse comes from a vision of Joshua the High Priest being clothed in clean garments, symbolizing spiritual purification.

לך דף קס״ט ע״ב ושם למה השטן
היה מקטרג בלבושי יהושע אחר
שנטלה נשמתו כבר. ושם מתבאר
בפרטות כל חלקי גוף האדם
מלמעלה בהדרגה אחר שפי׳
מוצא הנר״ן וטעם למה נאמר
חלוץ בעצמות ולא בבשר[i] עוד
בלבושי יהושע בפ׳ בלק דף
קפ״ה ע״ב נתן טעם למה נדון
האדם המת במתיבתא דרקיעא.
עוד יאמרו כי בארץ תוציא
צמחה וגו׳.[ii] ונחך ה׳ תמיד
וגו׳.[iii] והיית כגן רוה וגו׳. ואין
לחוש לדברי המונעים מלומר
דברים שבקדושה במקום המת
באמרם כי המת מטמא. כי לא
נמצא שאסרו רבנן רק לומר ד״ת
במקום הטנופת כי שם הרגיעה
לילית[iv] והם צריכים הבדלה
לא עירוב וכבר פירשו מה
הם דברים המטנפים צואה ומי
רגלים וצואת חמור הרכה ובית
המרחץ ובית הכסא ואביזרייהו
ומקום שרואה בו ערוה משום
ולא יראה בך ערות דבר אבל
אין אסור לומר ד״ת במקום
טומאה שאינם מקבלים טומאה
ומקום טנופת לחוד ומקום
טומאה לחוד וכבר איפסיקא
הלכתא כר״י בן בתירא כדאיתא
פ׳ מי שמתו ורב הונא דאמר

Parashat Shelach Lecha, page 169b, where it explains why Satan accused Joshua regarding his garments after his soul had already been taken. There, all parts of the human body are explained in detail hierarchically from above, after explaining the origin of the Neshamah, Ruach, and Nefesh,[1] and the reason why "barefoot" is mentioned regarding bones and not flesh. Additionally, concerning Joshua's garments in Parashat Balak, page 185b, a reason is given for why the deceased person is judged in the heavenly academy. 10R 15R

They should further recite: "For as the earth brings forth its sprouts" etc., "And the LORD will guide you continually" etc., "And you shall be like a watered garden" etc. One need not be concerned about those who prohibit saying sacred words in the presence of the dead,[2] claiming that the dead renders impure. For the Rabbis only prohibited saying words of Torah in a place of filth, where Lilith finds repose, as such places require separation, not mixture. They have already explained which things are considered filth: excrement, urine, soft donkey dung, the bathhouse, the toilet and their surroundings, and a place where nakedness is visible, because of "that He see no unseemly thing among you." But it is not forbidden to recite words of Torah in a place of ritual impurity that does not receive impurity; a place of filth is one category and a place of impurity is another.[3] The law has already been decided according to Rabbi Yehudah ben Beterah, as stated in the chapter "One Whose Dead Relative" [Berakhot]. And Rav Huna, 20R 25R 30R 35R

[1] These are the three primary levels of the soul in Kabbalistic thought, in descending order of spiritual refinement: Neshamah (highest soul), Ruach (spirit), and Nefesh (vital soul).
[2] The text addresses a practical halakhic question about whether sacred prayers and texts can be recited in the presence of a corpse. This reflects actual debates among Jewish legal authorities.
[3] The author makes an important legal distinction between ritual impurity (tumah) which is not inherently negative and filth (tinuf) which is problematic for prayer. A corpse causes ritual impurity but is not considered filth.

[i] "Barefoot" or "drawn out" is associated with bones rather than flesh, likely referring to the kabbalistic concept that the bones retain a connection to the soul after death.
[ii] From Isaiah 61:11, "For as the earth brings forth its sprouts, and as a garden causes what is sown in it to sprout up, so the Lord GOD will cause righteousness and praise to sprout up before all the nations." This verse metaphorically connects burial with the promise of future resurrection.
[iii] From Isaiah 58:11, "And the LORD will guide you continually and satisfy your desire in scorched places and make your bones strong; and you shall be like a watered garden, like a spring of water, whose waters do not fail." The reference to bones being strengthened is particularly relevant in the burial context.
[iv] Lilith is a female demonic figure in Jewish mysticism, associated with impurity and death. The text refers to the concept that Lilith finds rest in places of filth, which is why Torah study is prohibited there.

ת״ח אסור לעמוד במקום טנופת
משום שא״א לו בלא תורה לא
40 אמר במקום טומאה ואי משום
ערות המת אם היא מכוסות אין
להקפיד דרחמנא אמר ולא יראה
בך ערות דבר והא לא מתחזיא.
וכשמכניסין אותו בארון יכוונו
45 להטמין גופו ולבושיו עליונים
בתחתונים מכחות בעלי הדין
והוא נטמן בסוד עץ החיים. עוד
יכוונו שגופו בסוד וא״ו ובריתו
משך וא״ו נכנס בסוד התיבה
50 בסוד נח איש צדיק בתיבה[i] והוא
השושבין המייחד סוד וא״ו ת״ת
במלכות בסוד וה׳ בהיכל קדשו
וב׳ ציציות עליונות עם הב׳
תחתונות הם לרמז כחות מקבלים
55 דמתייחדין עם כחות משפיעים
בסוד וקרא ז״ה אל ז״ה ואמר
קדוש קדוש קדוש.[ii] יחוד זה
גורם כניסת נפש הצדיק למעלה
במקורה העליון במקום מוצאה
60 שהיא מארון הברית אדון כל
הארץ שמתרבה הכבוד העליון
בעליית נר״ן הצדיק עם אלומות
מעשיו המתייחדים ומאירים יחד
כלם בארץ העליונה ולדרים
65 בחצרות אל בנזכר למעלה. וזה
רמז אמירת פסוק שמע ישראל
ה׳ אלהינו ה׳ אחד בעת סלוק
הנשמה ובנסת ישראל משוררת who said that a Torah scholar is forbidden to stand in a place of filth because he cannot be without Torah, did not say "in a place of impurity." And regarding 40R the nakedness of the dead, if it is covered, there is no concern, for the Torah said, "that He see no unseemly thing among you," and in this case, it is not visible.

When placing him in the coffin,[1] they should intend to hide his body and his upper garments within 45R the lower ones from the forces of judgment. He is concealed in the mystery of the Tree of Life. They should further intend that his body is in the mystery of the letter Vav,[2] and his covenant, which extends as a Vav, enters into the mystery of the ark, in the mys- 50R tery of "Noah, a righteous man" in the ark. He is the attendant who unifies[3] the mystery of Vav (Tiferet) with Malkhut, in the mystery of "the LORD is in His holy Temple." The two upper tzitzit with the two lower ones[4] symbolize the receiving forces that 55R unite with the bestowing forces, in the mystery of "And one called unto another and said: Holy, holy, holy."

This unification causes the righteous person's soul to enter its supernal source,[5] in the place of its 60R origin, which is from the Ark of the Covenant, the Master of all the earth. The supernal glory increases through the ascent of the righteous person's Nefesh, Ruach, and Neshamah, together with the sheaves of his deeds, which unite and illuminate together in the 65R supernal land and for those dwelling in God's courts, as mentioned above. This is the allusion of reciting "Hear, O Israel, the LORD our God, the LORD

[1] This begins the section on the spiritual significance of placing the body in the coffin, introducing several kabbalistic concepts that reveal the deeper mystical meaning of this act.
[2] In Kabbalah, the letter vav (ו) which looks like a vertical line, represents the human body and the divine attribute of Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony). The human body is seen as a channel connecting heaven and earth, just as the letter vav connects letters in Hebrew words.
[3] In Kabbalistic symbolism, the 'attendant' (shoshvin) is one who facilitates divine unions. Here, the deceased person's body itself serves as a conduit for unifying divine masculine and feminine attributes (Tiferet and Malkhut).
[4] This refers to the ritual fringes (tzitzit) on the tallit (prayer shawl) that may be placed on the deceased. The four corners represent different aspects of divinity that are unified through proper ritual.
[5] According to Kabbalah, proper burial rituals facilitate the soul's return to its divine source. Physical actions in this world create corresponding spiritual effects in higher realms.

[i] "Noah, a righteous man" in the ark is used as a metaphor for the soul being protected in the coffin, with kabbalistic connections between the biblical flood narrative and the soul's journey after death.
[ii] From Isaiah 6:3, "And one called to another and said: 'Holy, holy, holy is the LORD of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory!'" The text interprets this as representing the unification of receiving and bestowing spiritual forces.

לפני המלך העליון וזהו בא יבא
ברנה נושא אלומותיו[i] ובודאי כי
מדת ז״את תענה ותאמר לו שלום
בואו. ועיין בזהר פרשת ויקהל
טעם הכנסת הגוף בארון. ויאמרו
בעת הכנסתו. ולא יבואו לראות
כבלע את הקדש ומתו.[ii] ואם
הוא אדם חשוב יאמרו אותו
ג׳ פעמים בקול רם ואחר
שכסוהו בארון יאמרו. ראיתי
והנה מנורת זהב וגו׳.[iii] ויכוין
להשפעות המנורות משבעה
מוצקות עליונות עם שנים
זיתים שעליהם שהם שתי גולות
הכותרות ויחד כלם מריקים
בצדיק יסוד עולם[iv] ומשם על
ארון הברית העליונה ויחוד
זה גורם עליית נפש הצדיקים
ועיין בזהר פ׳ ויחי סוד קבורת
צדיק בארון. אח״כ יאמר בשבח
הכבוד העליון. מי אתה הר
הגדול וגו׳.[v] ועתה יגדל נא כח
אדני כאשר דברת לאמר. ואולם
חי אני וימלא כבוד ה׳ את כל
הארץ. ואם הוא בעל תורה נראה
לי שטוב לעשות צרכיו במקום
שעסק בתורה שם כנזכר למעלה
שמצינו בפ׳ פנחס שהצדיקים
פוקדים מקום שהיו מחדשים שם is One" at the time of the soul's departure, and the Community of Israel sings before the supernal King.[1] This is the meaning of "He shall come in with rejoicing, bearing his sheaves," and certainly the attribute of ZOT will respond and say to him, "Peace upon your coming." See the Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel, for the reason for placing the body in a coffin.

At the time of placing him in the coffin, they should say: "But they shall not go in to see the holy things as they are being covered, lest they die." If he is a distinguished person, they should recite this three times in a loud voice. After covering him in the coffin, they should say: "I saw, and behold a menorah of gold" etc. One should focus on the influences of the menorahs from the seven supernal bowls[2] with the two olive trees above them, which are the two spherical capitals. Together, they all pour into the righteous person, the foundation of the world, and from there onto the supernal Ark of the Covenant. This unification causes the ascent of the souls of the righteous. See the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, for the mystery of burying a righteous person in a coffin.

Afterward, one should recite in praise of the supernal glory: "Who are you, O great mountain" etc., "And now, let the power of my Lord be great, as You have spoken, saying," "But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD." If he was a Torah scholar,[3] it seems to me

[1] The 'Community of Israel' (Knesset Yisrael) is a kabbalistic term for the Shekhinah, the divine feminine presence. The text describes a mystical reception ceremony for the ascending soul.

[2] This references the kabbalistic interpretation of Zechariah's vision (4:2-3), where the menorah represents divine channels through which spiritual illumination flows from higher realms to lower ones.

[3] The text gives special instructions for Torah scholars, reflecting the belief that they have a unique

[i] From Psalm 126:6, "He who goes out weeping, bearing the seed for sowing, shall come home with shouts of joy, bringing his sheaves with him." This is interpreted as the soul returning to its divine source carrying the merit of its good deeds.

[ii] From Numbers 4:20, "But they shall not go in to see the holy things as they are being covered, lest they die." This verse originally referred to the prohibition against unauthorized viewing of sacred objects in the Tabernacle but is applied here to the covering of the deceased in the coffin.

[iii] From Zechariah 4:2, "And he said to me, 'What do you see?' I said, 'I see, and behold, a lampstand all of gold, with a bowl on the top of it, and seven lamps on it, with seven lips on each of the lamps that are on the top of it.'" This verse introduces a vision with rich kabbalistic symbolism of divine illumination flowing through various channels.

[iv] "The righteous person, foundation of the world" combines Proverbs 10:25 with kabbalistic terminology, where the righteous person corresponds to the divine attribute of Yesod (Foundation), which channels divine flow between the upper sefirot and Malkhut.

[v] From Zechariah 4:7, "Who are you, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel you shall become a plain." In the context of burial, this may refer to overcoming obstacles in the soul's journey to its spiritual source.

ד״ת וכ״ש כד שראן בגויה אחרינן בההוא אתר במליה דאורייתא
100 והביא מעשה דר׳ פנחס בן יאיר שנראה שם בדמות ההוא טולא וזה בסוד ויהללוה בשערים מעשיה[i] שרושם הקדושה אינו מסתלק ממקומו הראשון לעולם
105 אך מתרחב והולך ומתפשט עד אין תכלית:[ii] that it is good to attend to his needs in the place where he studied Torah, as mentioned above. For we find in Parashat Pinchas that the righteous visit 100R the place where they innovated words of Torah, especially "when others dwell in that place [and engage] in his words of Torah." It brings the story of Rabbi Pinchas ben Yair who appeared there in the form of that shadow. This is in the mystery of "Her works 105R praise her in the gates," for the imprint of holiness never departs from its original place[1] but expands, proceeds, and extends without limit.

פרק ט״ו

Chapter 15

כשבאין הכתפים לשאת אותו ובפרט אם הוא ת״ח יאמרו ובנסוע המשכן יורידו אותו הלוים וגו׳. ויהי בנסוע
5 הארון וגו׳. כי מלאכיו יצוה לך וגו׳. על כפים ישאונך ויסיימו המזמור. ומה טוב שכל המתחלפים תחת הארגז

When the pallbearers come to carry the deceased,[2] especially if he is a Torah scholar, they should recite: "When the Tabernacle is to journey, the Levites shall take it down..." (Numbers 1:51),
"When the Ark set out..." (Numbers 10:35), 5R
"For He will command His angels concerning you..." (Psalms 91:11), "They will bear you up in their hands..."[3] and complete the psalm. It is spiritual status and connection to the places where they studied and taught.

[1]This expresses the kabbalistic concept that spiritual actions create permanent impressions in physical space. The holiness generated through Torah study remains in that location indefinitely.

[2]The Hebrew term 'katafim' literally means 'shoulders,' referring to those who carry the coffin on their shoulders, a traditional practice in Jewish funerals.

[3]This continues the quote from Psalm 91:12, which speaks of angelic protection. These verses from Psalm 91 are traditionally recited for protection against harmful spiritual forces.

[i]From Proverbs 31:31, "Give her of the fruit of her hands, and let her works praise her in the gates." This verse is interpreted to mean that the impact of one's Torah study and good deeds continues to create spiritual effects in their original locations even after death.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shelach Lecha, page 169b — This Zohar passage explains why Satan would accuse the deceased regarding their spiritual garments even after death, suggesting the ongoing spiritual battles that occur during the soul's transition. This reference deepens the reader's understanding of why proper burial garments have mystical significance. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Balak, page 185b — This Zohar passage explains that even after death, the soul undergoes judgment in the heavenly academy. The reference emphasizes the continuity of spiritual existence after physical death and the importance of proper preparation through ritual burial practices. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This reference points to a Zohar passage that explains the spiritual significance of placing the body in a coffin. This likely includes kabbalistic concepts about the protection of the physical vessel and its relationship to the soul's journey after death. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — This reference highlights that there are special mystical dimensions to the burial of particularly righteous individuals. The Zohar in Parashat Vayechi would elaborate on how the burial of tzaddikim (righteous ones) has unique spiritual effects. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pinchas — This reference presents the concept that the souls of the righteous continue to visit places where they studied and taught Torah. This informs the recommendation to prepare the deceased Torah scholar in the place where he studied, as there is a special connection between his soul and that location. | Cf. Berakhot, Chapter 'One Whose Dead Relative' (Mi SheMeto) — This reference establishes the halakhic (legal) foundation for permitting sacred recitations in the presence of the dead, countering those who might prohibit such practices. The author uses this to justify the prayers and biblical verses recommended during burial preparations.

יאמרו כל א׳ מהם פסוקים אלו.[i] ופסוקים שרפים עומדים ממעל לו וגו׳ מסוגל לאדם גדול[ii] ויכוונו להעלותו בסתר עליון להתייחד במדרגות אשר מעל ראשי כתפין כנזכר למעלה. ואמרו בתקונים דף רל״ח כי נשיאת המת הצדיק על הכתף הוא בסוד ויביאו את המשכן אל משה[iii] ובנסוע המשכן שהיא הנשמה הזאת הממושכנת בעוה״ז בעל כרחה בירידתה בעה״ז[iv] יורידו אותו הלוים כדכתיב כי מלאכיו יצוה לך כדפי׳ למעלה וגם בחנות המשכן בשהולכת למקום מנוחתה יש ללויתה שרפי קדש אשר פעל ומלאכין אין מספר מול צדקותיו אשר עשה[v] כדכתיב הנה צדקתו אתו ופעולתו לפניו ושכר מעשיו גורם הדבקות עם השכינה בעצם. באופן כי הזר הקרב יומת פי׳ הזר הקרב לנגד נשמה זו יומת ויבולע[vi] כי סקל המסלה ופנה לו דרך לעלות לה׳ בלי עכוב. וקול קורא good that each person who takes turns beneath the coffin should recite these verses. The verses "Seraphim stood above Him..." (Isaiah 6:2) are especially effective for a distinguished person, and they should intend to elevate him to the supernal concealment,[1] to unite at the levels above the heads of the bearers as mentioned earlier.

It is stated in Tikkunim, page 238, that carrying the righteous deceased on the shoulder corresponds to the mystery of "And they brought the Tabernacle to Moses" (Exodus 39:33). The phrase "When the Tabernacle journeys" refers to this soul that was reluctantly pledged in this world during its descent.[2] "The Levites shall take it down," as it is written, "For He will command His angels concerning you," as explained above. And also when the Tabernacle rests, as the soul goes to its resting place, it is accompanied by holy seraphim which it created through its deeds,[3] and countless angels corresponding to the righteous acts it performed, as it is written, "Behold, his righteousness goes with him, and his work before him" (Isaiah 62:11). The reward for his deeds causes actual cleaving to the Divine Presence.

Thus, "any stranger who comes near shall be put to death" means that any external force approaching

[1] This mystical phrase refers to elevating the soul to higher spiritual realms. In Kabbalah, 'seter elyon' (supernal concealment) refers to the hidden divine realm where souls unite with their spiritual source.

[2] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that souls are reluctant to descend into physical bodies, viewing incarnation as a form of temporary exile from their divine source.

[3] According to kabbalistic thought, each good deed (mitzvah) performed by a person creates an actual angel or spiritual entity that accompanies the soul after death and advocates for it in the heavenly court.

[i] This describes the practice of pallbearers taking turns carrying the coffin, with each new bearer reciting specific biblical verses when they take their position. This rotation system distributes the physical burden while maintaining continuous spiritual protection through sacred recitations.

[ii] The reference to Isaiah 6:2 ('Seraphim stood above Him') is specifically recommended for distinguished individuals or Torah scholars, suggesting a hierarchical approach to funeral rituals where different verses are appropriate based on the deceased's spiritual status.

[iii] This establishes a mystical parallel between the pallbearers carrying the deceased and the Israelites bringing the completed Tabernacle to Moses (Exodus 39:33), suggesting that funeral rituals reenact sacred biblical events with cosmic significance.

[iv] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the soul descends reluctantly into this world, viewing physical incarnation as a form of captivity or pledge (mashkon) that will eventually be redeemed when the soul returns to its source.

[v] This expresses the belief that the righteous person's good deeds create actual angels that accompany the soul after death. Each mitzvah performed in life generates spiritual entities that escort the deceased in death.

[vi] The verse about strangers being put to death if they approach the Tabernacle is reinterpreted mystically to mean that negative spiritual entities ('external forces') will be destroyed if they attempt to interfere with the soul's journey after death.

במדבר שהם כחות החצונים השוכנים במקום חורב פנו דרך ה׳ וגו׳. ואם כן המלוים המת נעשים מרכבה למלוים עליונים. וכמו שהם מלוים גופו למטה בגופם כן יכוונו ללוות נפשו בסוד נפשם ורוחו ברוחם ונשמתו בנשמתם[i] כי נשמת המת ורוחו ונפשו מלוים הגוף לקבר כדאמרי׳ דהתם קאימנא ולא לחנם הזהירו חכמים כל כך בכבוד המת ובלוייתו ואמרו הרואה את המת ואינו מלוהו. עובר משום לועג לרש[ii] ודברים הרבה כיוצא בזה כי ודאי לא כוונו אל הכבוד המדומה לגוף בלבד ובפרט כי מהנראה לעין הוא אבן מעמסה. וכתוב באדרות חיים של רבי אליעזר הגדול בני הוי זהיר להוצאת הקבר להכניסו ביד קונך כי מצוה גדולה היא עליך כל העושה חסד חנם הקב״ה עושה לו חסד של חנם. ובכל זמן שעומדים עם הארגז להחליף יכוונו להבריח מעליו ומסביביו הרוחות כי בכל עמידה הרוחות פורחים[iii] ואולי שאין להם רשות רק להלך לא לעמוד כמו שהמזיק אין לו רשות לזוז ממקומו ואולי הרוחות נקראות פורחות על זה כדכתיב against this soul shall be destroyed[1] and swallowed up, for the path has been cleared and a way prepared for him to ascend to God without hindrance. "A voice calls in the wilderness" refers to the external forces dwelling in desolate places: "Clear the way of the Lord..." (Isaiah 40:3). Therefore, those who accompany the deceased become a vehicle for the supernal escorts. Just as they accompany his body below with their bodies, they should intend to accompany his soul with the essence of their souls, his spirit with their spirits, and his higher soul with their higher souls,[2] for the deceased's soul, spirit, and vital soul accompany the body to the grave, as they say, "I stand there."

Not without reason did the Sages so emphatically warn about honoring the deceased and accompanying him, saying that one who sees the deceased and does not accompany him transgresses "mocking the poor"[3] (Proverbs 17:5), and many similar statements. They certainly did not intend merely the imagined honor for the body alone, especially since to the eye it appears as a burdensome stone. It is written in Orchot Chaim by Rabbi Eliezer the Great: "My son, be careful about bringing the deceased to burial, to place him in the hand of his Creator, for this is a great commandment incumbent upon you. For anyone who performs gratuitous kindness, the Holy One, blessed be He, performs gratuitous kindness for him."

Whenever they stop with the coffin to change bearers, they should intend to drive away the spirits

[1]The 'external forces' (kochot ha-chitzonim) refer to negative spiritual entities in kabbalistic thought that might attempt to interfere with the soul's journey after death. The funeral rituals are partly designed to protect against these forces.

[2]This reflects the kabbalistic understanding of the soul's three primary levels: nefesh (vital soul), ruach (spirit), and neshamah (higher soul). Funeral participants are instructed to escort each level of the deceased's soul with the corresponding level of their own souls.

[3]The biblical prohibition against 'mocking the poor' (Proverbs 17:5) is applied here to those who fail to participate in funeral processions, reinterpreting the 'poor' (rash) as the deceased who can no longer perform mitzvot.

[i]This presents a sophisticated understanding of how funeral participants should escort the deceased: not just physically accompanying the body, but spiritually accompanying each level of the departed's soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) with the corresponding level of their own souls.

[ii]The biblical prohibition against 'mocking the poor' (Proverbs 17:5) is applied to those who fail to accompany the deceased, reinterpreting the 'poor' as the dead who lack the ability to perform further mitzvot.

[iii]This reflects a belief that harmful spirits gather around the deceased but scatter when the pallbearers stop to change positions, suggesting a protective spiritual function to the practice of periodically pausing and changing bearers.

ונפשותיכן לפורחות.[i] וזה כלל
גדול בכל צרכי גופו יכוונו
בעצם ובראשונה לתקן נשמתו
בסוד כוונתם העולה עד סוד
70 נשמתם למעלה וזהו חסד של 70R
אמת ודאי יכוונו להשפיע כח
האלף על מת וזהו אמת[ii] כנדרש
למעלה. והסדר שתקן יעקב
אבינו לבניו בנשיאת מטתו
75 כדאמרי׳ במדרש רבה פ׳ ב׳ 75R
כיון שבא יעקב אבינו ליפטר
מן העולם קרא לבניו וצום
וזרזם על דרכי האלהים וקבלו
עליהם מלכות שמים משגמר
80 דבריו אמר להם כשתטלו אותי 80R
ביראה וכבוד לוו אותי ולא יגע
אדם אחר במטתי וכן ממה שצוה
רבינו הקדוש וממה שנתבאר
בסוף אדרת האזינו בקבורת
85 רבי שמעון בן יוחאי נראה 85R
בפירוש כי כבוד והדר ונייחא
רבא אית לצדיקים כשאנשים
הגונים מתעסקים בהם אחר
פטירתם ולא כל הרוצה ליטול
90 את השם יטול[iii] ואם בכניסת חתן 90R
וכלה לחופה מנהג להעשות ע״י
גדול כ״ש וק״ו להכניס הנשמה
והנלוים אליה עם הגוף למקום
משכן כבודם כי כבוד יעשו לו
95 במותו ע״י אנשים של צורה. 95R
וא״ר שמעון בן יוחאי בפ׳ נגמר
הדין כי קבורה מן התורה מפסוק
כי קבור תקברנו ביום ההוא

from around him, for at every stopping the spirits fly away.[1] Perhaps they are only permitted to walk, not to stand, just as a harmful entity is not permitted to move from its place. Perhaps the spirits are called "flyers" for this reason, as it is written, "And your souls for flying away" (Ezekiel 13:20).

This is a great principle regarding all the needs of his body: they should primarily intend to rectify his soul through the power of their intention, which ascends to the mystery of their souls above. This is certainly true kindness. They should intend to channel the power of the letter Alef upon the deceased,[2] and this is "truth" (emet), as explained above.

The order that our father Jacob established for his sons in carrying his bier, as stated in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 2: When our father Jacob was about to depart from the world,[3] he called his sons and commanded them and urged them regarding the ways of God, and they accepted upon themselves the kingdom of heaven. When he finished speaking, he said to them, "When you carry me, do so with reverence and honor. Accompany me, and let no other person touch my bier." Similarly, from what our holy Rabbi commanded, and from what is explained at the end of Idra Ha'azinu regarding the burial of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, it is explicitly seen that great honor, glory, and satisfaction come to the righteous when worthy people attend to them after their passing, and not just anyone who wishes to take the name. And if the custom for a bride and groom's entry to the wedding canopy is to be performed by a distinguished person, how much more so should bringing the soul and its

[1] This reflects a belief that harmful spiritual entities gather around the deceased but are scattered when the pallbearers pause to change positions, suggesting that the practice of rotating bearers serves not just practical but spiritual protective functions.

[2] In Jewish mysticism, the letter Alef (א) represents divine unity and is the first letter of 'emet' (truth). The passage suggests directing this spiritual energy toward the deceased as part of true kindness (chesed shel emet).

[3] The text draws on the example of Jacob's burial preparations as a biblical precedent for proper funeral protocols, emphasizing that these practices have ancient and authoritative roots.

[i] This is a reference to Ezekiel 13:20, which in context refers to false prophetesses who 'hunt souls like birds.' The text creatively reinterprets this verse to explain why spirits are called 'flyers' or 'flying ones.'

[ii] This refers to a kabbalistic concept where the letter Alef (א) represents divine unity and truth. By directing the 'power of the Alef' toward the deceased, the funeral participants infuse the burial with the quality of 'emet' (truth), transforming it into 'chesed shel emet' (true kindness).

[iii] This expression means 'not anyone who wishes to take the name may take it,' implying that not everyone is worthy of performing this sacred duty. It emphasizes that funeral rituals should be performed by appropriate people rather than anyone who simply wants the honor.

ובירו׳ פ׳ אלו עוברים אמר כי
100 לויית המת קודם לת״ת.[i] וחכמי
המשנה חשבו דבר זה לזכות
גדול יוסף זכה לקבור את אביו
וכו׳. מי לנו גדול ממשה שלא
נתעסק בו וכו׳ ובעת הלוייה
105 יכוונו ללוות הקדושה עמו בכח
ניצוצות נשמת כל אחד מהם
שהקדושה חופפת ושוכנת בכל
עדה מישראל כדכתיב ונקדשתי
בתוך בני ישראל וכבר אמרנו
110 כי היודע סוד הלוייה לחיים
ממנה יבין צורך הלוייה למת.
ועוד יתוסף ללוויית המת כוונות
אחרות ואין זה מקומן ונרמז
קצת מהכוונה של הלוייה בזהר
115 פ׳ וירא דף קכ״ו ולא לחנם ת״ת
נדחה מפניה ולמאן דמתני ליה
ליה שעורא:[ii]

accompaniments with the body to their resting place of honor be done through people of stature, for honor shall be given to him in his death through people of worthy appearance. 100R

Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai said in the chapter "The Judgment is Concluded" that burial is mandated by the Torah from the verse[1] "You shall surely bury him on that day" (Deuteronomy 21:23). And in the Jerusalem Talmud, chapter "These Pass," he said that accompanying the deceased takes precedence over Torah study.[2] The Sages of the Mishnah considered this a great merit: "Joseph merited to bury his father," etc. "Who is greater than Moses, who was not occupied with [Joseph's burial]," etc. 105R 110R

During the funeral procession, they should intend to accompany the holiness with him through the power of the soul-sparks of each of them, for holiness hovers and dwells within every congregation of Israel,[3] as it is written, "I shall be sanctified among the children of Israel" (Leviticus 22:32). We have already stated that one who knows the secret of accompanying the living will understand from it the necessity of accompanying the deceased. There are additional intentions for accompanying the deceased, but this is not the place for them. Some of the intention behind accompaniment is hinted at in the Zohar, Parashat Vayera, page 126. Not without reason is Torah study postponed for it, and for one who studies there is no limit. 115R 120R 125R

[1] The text establishes the biblical basis for burial, citing Deuteronomy 21:23 as proof that proper burial is a Torah obligation rather than merely a tradition.

[2] This establishes a striking halakhic principle that participating in funeral processions takes priority over Torah study, which is otherwise considered equal to all other commandments combined. This underscores the exceptional importance of honoring the dead in Jewish tradition.

[3] This refers to the concept that the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) resides within the Jewish community, especially when gathered for sacred purposes. The funeral procession thus becomes a vehicle for channeling divine energy to assist the deceased.

[i] This establishes that accompanying the deceased takes precedence over Torah study (talmud torah), which is otherwise considered equal to all other commandments combined. This emphasizes the exceptional importance of participating in funeral processions.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayera — The Zohar passage referenced here provides deeper mystical explanations about the importance of accompanying the deceased, suggesting that the funeral procession has cosmic significance beyond its visible ritual aspects. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The text directly quotes from Tikkunei Zohar to establish a mystical parallel between carrying the deceased and bringing the Tabernacle to Moses, suggesting that funeral rituals have deeper cosmic significance mirroring sacred biblical events. | Cf. Idra Ha'azinu — The reference to Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's burial in the Idra Ha'azinu section of the Zohar is used to emphasize that righteous individuals should be buried by worthy people, suggesting that who performs the burial has spiritual significance. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah — The text cites Midrash Rabbah regarding Jacob's final instructions to his sons about his funeral arrangements, using this as a biblical precedent for the proper conduct of funeral bearers.

פרק ט״ז

Chapter 16

תורה מפי יודעי דעת תצא כי מהתקון הששי שבזקן עליון שהיא סוד השרשת הגבורות בבינה והבינה בכתר וסוד י״ג תקוני דיקני הם סוד השער התפשטות ווין מסוד הספירות ויש חמש בחינות בכתר להמתקת הדינין הראשון כל עצמו של כתר דכתיב ביה כורסיה שביבין דנור שיושב על כסאו שהוא זעיר כאומרו ועתיק יומין יתיב עליו לכפות דיניו. הב׳ גלוי סוד מצח הרצון שמשכך הדין ואפי׳ אש גהינם נשקע. הג׳ עינא פקיחא דזעיר המאיר לספירת גבורה הוד מלכות והם מתרחצות מדינים ובכח זה עיינין דזעיר רוחצות בחלב. הד׳ בסוד חוטמא עושה למטה נחת רוח וממנו קבלת התפלה כדכתיב ותהלתי אחטם לך. הה׳ בסוד דיקנא שכל מציאותה לבטל הדינים ובטולם בי״ג דרכים שונים. ותקון הששי שמתראה בצורה הגשמית בסוד שבולת הזקן והוא שער שמכסה הזקן מראש הפה עד ראש הפה מלמטה ונקרא חפץ חסד במדות מי אל כמוך ובמדות אל רחום הוא ואמ״ת ותקון הזה הוא קשר נ״ה עם היסוד ודרך נ״ה עובר אל המלכות ונצח הוא חפץ בהמשכת החסד וכן במדות נותן טעם ורב חסד ואמת נקשר רב חסד עם האמת הזה כי נצח נקשר באמת. ולכן נקראים נביאי האמת נביאי קשוט ומבטל הדינים בהמשכת החסדים והחסד תלוי בשרש זה.

The Torah comes forth from those who know wisdom, for from the sixth rectification of the supernal beard, which is the secret of the embedding of Gevurot (powers of judgment) in Binah (Understanding), and Binah in Keter (Crown).[1] The secret of the thirteen rectifications of the beard is the secret of the hairs extending as Vavs from the secret of the Sefirot.[2] There are five aspects in Keter for sweetening judgments: First, the entire essence of Keter, of which it is written "His throne was fiery flames," as He sits upon His throne, which is Zeir Anpin (the Lesser Countenance), as it says, "And the Ancient of Days sat" upon it to subdue its judgments. Second, the revelation of the secret of the Forehead of Will, which calms judgment, and even the fire of Gehenna is quenched. Third, the watchful eye of Zeir Anpin that illuminates the Sefirot of Gevurah, Hod, and Malkhut, and they are cleansed of their judgments, and through this power, the eyes of Zeir Anpin are bathed in milk. Fourth, the secret of the Nose, which creates satisfaction below, and through it prayer is received, as it is written, "And for My praise I will restrain [My anger] for you." Fifth, the secret of the Beard, whose entire existence is to nullify judgments and cancel them in thirteen different ways. 5R 10R 15R 20R 25R

The sixth rectification, which appears in physical form as the flowing locks of the beard, is the hair that covers the beard from the edge of the mouth to the underside of the mouth. It is called "desiring kindness" in the attributes "Who is a God like You," and in the attributes "God is compassionate" it is "and truth." This rectification is the connection of Netzach and Hod with Yesod, and through Netzach and Hod it passes to Malkhut.[3] Netzach desires to draw down kindness, and similarly in the attributes "abundant in kindness and truth," "abundant in kindness" is connected with "truth," because Netzach is connected with truth. Therefore, the prophets of truth 30R 35R

[1] This is a complex kabbalistic concept describing the inter-inclusion of divine attributes, where one sefirah (divine emanation) is contained within another. The text is describing how the power of judgment becomes 'rooted' or 'embedded' in higher divine attributes.

[2] In Kabbalah, the Hebrew letter Vav (ו) is visualized as a channel or conduit. The beard's hairs are seen as channels extending from the divine realm, each functioning as a conduit for divine energy.

[3] The text describes the flow of divine energy through the sefirot (divine emanations). Netzach (Victory/Eternity) and Hod (Splendor) are the seventh and eighth sefirot, which channel divine energy to Yesod (Foundation), and then to Malkhut (Kingdom), the lowest sefirah representing our physical world.

ותקון זה נקרא חסד של אמת
שעושים עם הנשמות דהיינו חסד
של אמת שעושים עם המתים
והם חסדים המושפעים להרפות
הדין כאשר הוא מתחזק ומבטלו
ואין נותן לו כח להתחזק. וזו
תהיה כוונת כל המטפלים במת
להמשיך מתקון חפץ חסד ממדות
אריך ובמדות זעיר ממדת ואמ״ת
להרפות כח הדינין המתגברים
בכח המות. ונושאי המטה הם
דוגמת כחות המתפשטות ממלאך
מיכאל כשהולך להקריב הנשמה
לפני מזבח ה׳ הטהור ונושא
אותה על כנפי רוח ומלאכי
צבאות ידודון ידודון לסייעה
וללוותה ולהעבירה דרך ע״ב
גשרי החסד המשפיעים מכחם
על מחנה מיכאל כהנא רבא.
וחוצבי קברות בחצר מות
התחתון לשם שמים הם דוגמת
האופנים המתקנים קבר עליון
בחצר מות עליון בעשיה רוחניות
ששם מדור הנפש כן בקבר יש
מדור לחלק תחתון מהנפש
הנפטר כאשר כתבנו למעלה
ועצמות אלישע יוכיחו שאחר
כמה שנים החיו האיש שהשליכו
בקברו. וגם שאין למדים ממעשה
נסים מ״מ הוכחה יש ששוכב
על העצמות שבקבר לעולם
חיות מה ועל ידו הוא החלוץ
בעצמות שפי׳ יזיין ידשן וכו׳.
עוד חוצבי הקבר הם לדוגמת
אותם המלאכים המשמשים את
הגן ואותם הצדיקים אשר שם
המתקנים מדורות הצדיק׳
המזומנים ליכנם שם ומכינים
מקום כבודם בגן עדן בכמה
מיני בוסמין וחופות כנראה
ממה שהובא בזהר פ׳ ויחי
שאמר אבוה לר׳ יצחק שהיה
ג׳ ימים שהצדיקים ומלאכי

are called "prophets of truth" (in Aramaic), and it cancels judgments through drawing down kindnesses, and kindness depends on this root. 40R

This rectification is called "true kindness" (chesed shel emet) that is done with souls, namely, the true kindness that is done with the dead. These are kindnesses that are bestowed to weaken judgment when it strengthens, nullifying it and not allowing it to gain strength. This should be the intention of all who attend to the deceased—to draw from the rectification of "desiring kindness" from the attributes of Arich Anpin, and from the attributes of Zeir Anpin, from the attribute of "and truth," to weaken the power of judgments that intensify through the power of death. 45R 50R

Those who carry the bier resemble the forces that extend from the angel Michael when he goes to offer the soul before God's pure altar, bearing it on wings of spirit. The angels of hosts hasten to assist, accompany, and guide it through the seventy-two bridges of kindness,[1] which channel their power through Michael's camp, the great priest. 55R

Those who dig graves in the lower court of death for the sake of Heaven resemble the Ophanim angels who prepare the upper grave in the upper court of death in the spiritual realm of Asiyah, where the soul dwells.[2] Similarly, in the grave there is a dwelling place for the lower part of the departed soul, as we have written above. The bones of Elisha prove this, for after many years they revived the man who was cast into his grave. Even though we do not derive teachings from miraculous events, there is evidence that something vital always rests upon the bones in the grave, and through it comes the invigoration of the bones, as is explained. 60R 65R 70R

Furthermore, those who dig the grave resemble those angels who serve in the Garden and those righteous ones who are there, who prepare the dwelling places of the righteous who are destined to enter there. They prepare a place of honor for them in the Garden of Eden with various kinds of fragrances and canopies, as is evident from what is brought in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, where it states that the father said to Rabbi Yitzchak that for three days the 75R 80R

[1] This refers to the 72-letter divine name in Kabbalah, derived from three verses in Exodus 14:19-21. Each verse contains 72 letters, and when arranged in a specific pattern, they form 72 three-letter names of God, each representing a channel or 'bridge' of divine mercy.

[2] In Kabbalah, Asiyah is the lowest of four spiritual worlds (Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah). While Asiyah corresponds most closely to our physical world, it also has a spiritual counterpart where souls may dwell after death.

הגן היו מכינים לו מקום בג״ע ומדור עילאה שהיו מתקנים לרשב״י וכמה כוין פתיחין ליה לאנהרא מזיוא עילאה. ואפילו בצדיקים שבדורותינו נראה באר היטב ממה שהובטח למהרר״י קארו באשר הבאנו בחלק א׳. ולדברים אלו ישימו לבם חוצבי קברות ומלוי המתים ובזה יכירו וידעו כמה רב גובריהו במעשה ההוא ויקדשו רוחם ונפשם בהתעסק במלאכת שמים ומזה יש כמה בחינות בכל מעשה הקדושה וא״א לכוין הכל בכתב ישמע חכם ויבין: [i] righteous and the angels of the Garden were preparing a place for him in the Garden of Eden, as well as the supernal dwelling that they were preparing for Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, with many openings made for him to be illuminated by the supernal radiance. 85R

Even regarding the righteous of our generations, this is clearly seen from what was promised to Rabbi Joseph Karo, as we brought in Part One. Those who dig graves and accompany the dead should take these matters to heart, and through this they will recognize and know how great their power is in that act. They should sanctify their spirit and soul by engaging in heavenly work. There are many aspects to every act of holiness, and it is impossible to convey everything in writing—let the wise hear and understand. 90R 95R

פרק י״ז

השבע הקפות שנוהגים בקצת מקומות לעשות למת בבית הקברות נ״ל ע״ד כי הוא תקון גדול להבריח מעליו רוחות רעות כי סביבו רשעים יתהלכון שהם כמדורין סביב משכן הנער מטטרו״ן. ולהיות צורה הנכבדת זו כלי שנשתמש בו קדש וירד ממדרגתו בנסוע ממנו הנשמה

Chapter 17

The seven circuits (hakafot) that are customary in some places to perform for the deceased in the cemetery appear to me to be a great correction to drive away evil spirits,[1] for "the wicked walk around" (Psalms 12:9) who are like chambers surrounding the dwelling of the youth Metatron.[A] Since this honored form was a vessel used for holiness[B] and has descended from its level when the holy soul departed from it, yet traces of holiness remain 5R

[A] Or: "the tabernacle of the lad Metatron" — The term 'mishkan' (משכן) literally means 'tabernacle' or 'dwelling place' and is often used in kabbalistic texts to refer to celestial structures. 'Na'ar' (נער) can be translated as either 'youth' or 'lad', both being titles for the angel Metatron in kabbalistic literature.

[B] Or: "this honored form was a vessel in which sanctity dwelled" — The phrase describes the human body as having been a container for sacred content (the soul). This alternative translation emphasizes the dwelling aspect rather than the instrumental aspect.

[1] The term 'lehavriach' (להבריח) has the connotation of actively causing the spirits to flee or be driven away, rather than merely repelling them passively.

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The author cites this passage to establish that the work of preparing graves has a celestial parallel, where angels and righteous souls prepare dwelling places in the Garden of Eden for the newly deceased. | Cf. 2 Kings 13:21 — The author uses this biblical example to argue that some spiritual vitality remains connected to human remains even long after death, supporting his larger point about the spiritual significance of proper burial practices. | Cf. Exodus 34:6-7 — The text refers to the 'thirteen rectifications of the beard' which correspond to these thirteen divine attributes. This establishes that proper burial practices connect to these channels of divine mercy. | Cf. Idra Rabba and Idra Zuta (sections of the Zohar) — The author is drawing on this kabbalistic framework to explain how those who handle the dead are actually participating in cosmic processes that affect the soul's journey after death. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part One — The author refers back to his own work, creating continuity and reinforcing the application of these mystical principles to recent historical figures.

הקדושה מחמת שירי קדושה הנשאר שם הרוחות מבקשים ליהנות ממנו. ולהיות צורת האשה אפי׳ בחייה מוכנת לשרות עליה כחות הטומאה כי הויית נפשה היא מן כח השמאלי[i] ולכן כתיב מכשפה לא תחיה[ii] ואמרו כי דבר הכתוב בהוה לכן תכף למיתת נשים קבורה כי בגופה תרמוש חיתו יער. ובסוד ההקפות שהם דוגמת המחול שעתיד הקב״ה לעשות לצדיקים בג״ע כי אז תשמח בתולת ישראל במחול ההוא בסוד אני ראשון ואני אחרון[iii] החצונים תובעי דין מסתלקים מהמדורין ואינם נותנים עוד קול קטרוגם בבית ה׳ כי כשאור המלאכים קדושים הרצים עליונים יוצאים שם במדורין דחופים בדבר ה׳ אין פורץ ונדחים משם לסוף פתח לבנת הספיר בחלון ששם הנקראת נוקבא דתהומא רבה. וזה סוד הקפת יריחו[iv] להיותה

there,[1] the spirits seek to derive benefit from it. And since a woman's form, even during her lifetime, is susceptible to impure forces resting upon her because her soul's existence comes from the left side power,[2] therefore it is written "You shall not allow a sorceress to live" (Exodus 22:17), and they said that the Torah speaks of what commonly occurs, thus immediately after women die, burial is required, for in her body "the beasts of the forest prowl" (Psalms 104:20). 10R 15R

The secret of these circuits is that they are like the dance that the Holy One, blessed be He, will make for the righteous in the Garden of Eden, for then "the virgin of Israel will rejoice in that dance" (Jeremiah 31:12). Through the mystery of "I am the first and I am the last" (Isaiah 44:6), the external forces that demand judgment[A] withdraw from their chambers and no longer raise their accusatory voices in the house of the Lord. For when the light of the holy angels, the supernal runners, emerges there in those chambers, hastened by the word of the Lord, none can breach, and they are pushed from there to the edge of the opening of the sapphire brick, to the window that is called the opening of the great 20R 25R 30R

[A] Or: "the external entities that seek to prosecute" — In kabbalistic literature, 'chitzonim' (החצונים) refers to negative spiritual entities outside the realm of holiness. The term 'tovei din' (תובעי דין) has legal connotations of prosecution or demanding judgment, so this alternative captures the prosecutorial role these entities play in the spiritual realm.

[1] The phrase 'shirei kedushah' (שירי קדושה) literally means 'remnants of holiness' and refers to the spiritual residue left in the body after the soul's departure. This concept is central to understanding why the body requires protection through ritual.

[2] In kabbalistic cosmology, the 'left side' (כח השמאלי) is associated with the divine attribute of Gevurah/Din (Judgment/Severity), in contrast to the 'right side' associated with Chesed (Loving-kindness). This attribution of the feminine to the left side reflects kabbalistic gender associations that see women as more connected to judgment forces.

[i] The reference to the 'left side power' reflects the kabbalistic understanding that the feminine aspects of creation are associated with the left side of the divine structure (sefirotic tree), which is connected to the attributes of judgment and limitation rather than the right side's mercy and expansion.

[ii] The text cites Exodus 22:17 ('You shall not allow a sorceress to live') and interprets it through a kabbalistic lens to explain the Torah's focus on female practitioners of sorcery as stemming from women's supposed greater susceptibility to impure spiritual forces due to their soul's origin from the 'left side.'

[iii] This phrase ('I am the first and I am the last') from Isaiah 44:6 is understood in Jewish mystical tradition as expressing God's encompassing presence before and after all of creation. In this context, it suggests that the divine presence established through the ritual circuits pushes away accusatory forces.

[iv] This connects the ritual practice of circling the deceased to the biblical narrative in Joshua 6, where the Israelites circled Jericho seven times before its walls fell. In both cases, the circuits are understood to have supernatural power to break down barriers, whether physical walls or spiritual impediments.

סוגרת למטה ומסוגרת למעלה
מכחות הטומאה בסוד ההקפות
עם השופרות המחרידים כל
עם הארץ ובכח קדושת הארון
אשר היתה מכלה אותם והיו
נמסים מפניה כמסוס נוסס כן
ההקפות בסוד שיר של פגעים
ושם מ״ב[i] שבתוקפו ובגבורתו
משבר הרים ומפרק סלעים
וחוצב להבות אש ובוער כתנור
לכל זדים ועושי רשעה יבושו
ויחתו מגבורתם כל הרוחות
אשר יחד יסולו דרכם סביב
הנפטר ופונים מקום לקדושים
הבאים ללוותו ומוליכים לפניו
צדקו. וא״כ כמה רב טובם ויפים
ממקומות שנוהגים אותם במקום
דליכא למיחש לאנצויי המרגילם
תבא עליו ברכה. ויש מקומות
שאחר צדוק הדין כשנושאים
אותו לקבר אומרים שיר של
פגעים ונכון הוא. סדר ההקפות
כפי הנמצא בדברי חכמים
ברחיצה הגדולה המיוחסת
להלל הזקן[ii] כבר באו בתחלת
הספר:[iii]

abyss.[A]

This is the secret of encircling Jericho, which was closed below and sealed above from impure forces through the mystery of the circuits with the shofars that terrified all the people of the land, and through the power of the sanctity of the Ark which consumed them. They melted before it like melting wax,[1] and so too these circuits, through the mystery of the "Song of Afflictions" (Psalm 91) and the 42-letter Name, which in its power and might shatters mountains, breaks apart rocks, hews flames of fire, and burns like a furnace against all the arrogant and evil-doers. They are ashamed and dismayed from their might—all the spirits that together clear their path around the deceased, making way for the holy ones who come to escort him and lead his righteousness before him.

Therefore, how great is their goodness and beauty! In places where they are practiced, in locations where there is no concern for quarreling,[2] may blessings come upon those who institute them. There are places where after reciting the Tzidduk HaDin (Justification of Divine Judgment),[3] when they carry the deceased to the grave, they recite the "Song of Afflictions" (Psalm 91), and this is proper. The order of the circuits according to what is found in the words of the sages in the "Great

[A] Or: "the entrance of the sapphire pavement, to the aperture known as the opening of the great deep" — These are technical kabbalistic terms referring to specific celestial locations. 'Livnat hasapir' can be translated as 'sapphire pavement' (as in Exodus 24:10), and 'nukva d'tehoma rabba' literally means 'the female aspect of the great deep,' which is often rendered as 'the opening of the great abyss' in English translations of kabbalistic texts.

[1] The phrase 'k'mesos noses' (כמסוס נוסס) is difficult to translate precisely. It creates a powerful image of complete dissolution or melting away, emphasizing the total defeat of impure forces in the face of sacred power.

[2] The phrase 'd'leka l'meichash l'antzuyei' (דליכא למיחש לאנצויי) reflects a halakhic (Jewish legal) concern that certain ritual innovations might lead to communal discord. The author acknowledges this concern while still endorsing the practice when it doesn't cause controversy.

[3] This is a prayer recited at Jewish funerals affirming God's righteousness even in death. It begins with the words 'The Rock, His work is perfect, for all His ways are justice' (Deuteronomy 32:4).

[i] The '42-letter Name' (Shem Mem-Bet) refers to a mystical divine name in Jewish Kabbalah, often derived from the first 42 letters of the creation account in Genesis or from an acrostic of the prayer 'Ana Bekoach.' It is considered particularly powerful for protection against harmful spiritual forces.

[ii] This refers to a ritual washing procedure for the deceased attributed to Hillel the Elder, a first-century BCE Jewish sage. The author indicates this procedure was detailed earlier in the book, showing how Ma'avar Yabok serves as a comprehensive guide to Jewish death rituals.

[iii] Cf. Psalms 12:9 — The author cites this verse to establish that wicked forces encircle and threaten the deceased, providing biblical grounding for the practice of protective circuits. | Cf. Joshua 6:1-20 — The author draws a parallel between the ritual circuits around the deceased and the biblical story of the Israelites encircling Jericho, suggesting that both practices serve to break down barriers Washing" attributed to Hillel the Elder has already been presented at the beginning of the book.

פרק י״ח

אחר ההקפות ירימו ארגז המת מעל הארץ על זרועותיהם ויכוונו להעלותו על זרועות עולם כדכתיב ומתחת זרועות עולם[i] כי אחרי שמגמילות חסדים שעשו לו נעשה בסוד אמת והכניסוהו לתיבה בסוד נקוד׳ בהיכלה ממש[ii] ואז מתעלם בה״א אחרונה ושם נמתקו כחות בסוד הדין[iii] בסוד צדוק הדין והקדיש וההקפות בנזכר בסוף חלק ב׳ עתה בכח שם מ״ב שהזכירו ובקשו עליו רחמים בסוד שם זה העולה הנה הוא מוכן להעלותו לסוד זרועות עולם ומשם יסק ויעלה להסתתר ברום חביון

Chapter 18

After the circuits, they shall raise the coffin of the deceased from the ground onto their arms,[1] and they shall intend to elevate him upon the "arms of the world," as it is written: "And underneath are the everlasting arms." For after the acts of lovingkindness they have performed for him, he is transformed through the mystery of Truth,[2] and they have placed him in the ark in the true mystery of "a point within its palace." Then he becomes concealed within the final hei[3] [of the divine name], and there the forces are sweetened through the mystery of judgment, through the Justification of Judgment prayer, the Kaddish, and the circuits, as mentioned at the end of Part Two. Now, through the power of the 42-letter Name which they have invoked, and through which they have sought mercy for him,[A] behold, he is prepared

[A] Or: "Now, through the power of the 42-letter Name they have mentioned and through which they have beseeched mercy for him in the mystery of this elevated Name" — This alternative provides a more precise rendering of 'העולה' which can refer to the Name's elevated status or ascension power rather than just being 'invoked.'

[1] The text assumes knowledge of the preceding ritual of 'hakafot' (circuits) around the deceased's bier, which has just been described in the previous section.

[2] The Hebrew word 'אמת' (Truth) has special kabbalistic significance as it consists of the first, middle, and last letters of the Hebrew alphabet (alef, mem, tav), representing totality and perfection. Here it refers to the deceased's spiritual transformation through proper burial rites.

[3] In Kabbalah, the final hei of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH) represents the divine feminine aspect (Shekhinah/Malkhut). This passage describes the soul's integration into this divine realm through proper burial.

(walls/impure forces) through sacred circumambulation. | Cf. Psalm 91 — The author refers to Psalm 91 by its rabbinic name 'Shir Shel Pega'im' (Song of Afflictions/Demons), which in rabbinic tradition was believed to have special protective powers against harmful spiritual forces, making it particularly appropriate for funeral contexts. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The technical terminology about 'nukva d'tehoma rabba' (the opening of the great abyss) draws from Zoharic cosmology, where this concept represents a location where negative forces are confined or pushed away from the realm of holiness. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section 1 — The author refers to an earlier section of his own book where the ritual of the seven circuits was detailed, showing the text's self-referential nature and indicating that this passage is providing additional theological justification for a practice already described elsewhere in the work.

[i] This refers to Deuteronomy 33:27, "The eternal God is your dwelling place, and underneath are the everlasting arms." In kabbalistic interpretation, these "arms" represent the divine attributes of Chesed (Loving-kindness) and Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) that support the cosmos.

[ii] A kabbalistic concept referring to the divine feminine (Malkhut/Shekhinah) as a point within the divine palace or temple. Here, it metaphorically describes the deceased as being integrated into the divine feminine realm.

[iii] "Sweetening of judgments" (המתקת הדינים) is a fundamental kabbalistic concept where harsh divine judgments are transformed or tempered through various spiritual processes, including proper ritual actions and prayers.

אשר עין לא ראתה והוא טמור וגניז במקום שאין העין שולט בו בו ומעלימים אותו בקברו. ובעת שמכניסים אותו שם יכוונו כנזכר למעלה בעפר שתחתיו ובעפר שנותנים עליו שהם רמז עפר העליון ועפר תחתון בסוד שני הוי״ן שבשם ובוא״ו שהוא רומז לצדיק שביניהם המתעדן מעדון עליון ותחתון וג״ע של מעלה מכוון לעפר עליון וג״ע שלמטה מכוון לעפר תחתון כמו שהגוף מוצא מנוח בשובו ליסודו לעפר הלזו כך הנשמה והרוח והנפש שלו מוצאים מנוחה בשוב כל אחד מהם למקורו המיוחד ומיועד לו והמבין שותא דרבנן דאמר הכל היה מן העפר ואפי׳ גלגל חמה ישכיל וידע כי דברי חכמים בדרבונות ועיין מזה בר״מ פ׳ צו דף ל״ד ע״ב. ויכוין במעשה הקבורה כנזכר למעלה להכניס נפשו למעלה בקבר עליון ונשמתו בסוד תלת עשר נהרי דאפרסמונא הנמשכים מי״ג תקוני דיקנא[i] כנרמז בפ׳ ויקבור אותו בגי כנזכר למעלה. עוד יכוין להצפין נשמתו בתוך י״ג חופות שבהם מתעדנים הצדיקים בג״ע על דרך שאמרו ברשב״י דהוא יתיב על תליסר תכתקי פיזא[ii] ועיין בזהר פ׳ תרומה דף קמ״ז ע״א. ויאמר כל א׳ פסוק והוא רחום וגו׳ ג׳ פעמים[iii] וזהו to be elevated to the mystery of the "arms of the world," and from there he will ascend and rise to be hidden in the heights of concealment which no eye has seen, and he is hidden and stored in a place where the eye has no dominion, as they conceal him in his grave.

When they place him there, they should have in mind, as mentioned above, the symbolism of the earth beneath him and the earth they place upon him—these represent the upper earth and the lower earth,[A] corresponding to the two heis in the Divine Name, with the vav between them[1] representing the Righteous One who delights in both upper and lower pleasure. The upper Garden of Eden corresponds to the upper earth, and the lower Garden of Eden corresponds to the lower earth. Just as the body finds rest in returning to its elemental source in this earth, so too the neshamah, ruach, and nefesh find rest when each returns to its own particular source designated for it. One who understands the discourse of the sages who said, "Everything was from dust, even the sphere of the sun," will comprehend and know that the words of the sages are like goads. See Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Tzav, folio 34b.

One should focus during the burial, as mentioned above, on guiding his nefesh upward to the celestial grave and his neshamah into the thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil that flow from the thirteen configurations of the divine beard, as alluded to in the verse "And He buried him in the valley," as mentioned above. One should further intend to conceal his neshamah within the thirteen canopies in which the righteous delight in the Garden of Eden, as they said of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, that he sits upon [A] Or: "they should focus their intention, as mentioned above, on the earth beneath him and the earth placed upon him, which symbolize the supernal earth and the terrestrial earth" — This translation better preserves the technical kabbalistic terminology distinguishing between upper/supernal and lower/terrestrial realms, which are important concepts in the cosmology being described.

[1] This refers to the structure of the Tetragrammaton (YHVH), where the first hei represents Binah (Understanding), the vav represents Tiferet (Beauty/Harmony), and the final hei represents Malkhut (Kingdom). The text is describing a cosmic correspondence between physical burial and divine structures.

[i] In Kabbalah, the thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil represent divine channels of blessing flowing from the thirteen attributes of divine mercy, often depicted as configurations of the "divine beard" (תיקוני דיקנא). This imagery appears frequently in the Zohar.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase describes Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai sitting on thirteen thrones of fine gold in the Garden of Eden, representing the highest spiritual attainment after death.

[iii] This refers to Psalm 78:38, "But He, being merciful, forgave their iniquity and did not destroy

ג״ח גדול למת להחליש ראשי
המשחית הנזכרים בפסוק הזה
ואם יאמרוהו כל הקהל ג״פ
בקול הנה מה טוב שהם ל״ט
55 תיבות כנודע ג״פ י״ג כנגד י״ג
מדות רחמים וי״ג גבולים פי׳
מיני יחוד שבשלשה מקומות
באצילות וכמו כן בבי״ע ובזה
מקילים מעליו כח המלקות
60 מחבוט הקבר ושאר דינים
ואח״כ יאמרו וסר עונך וחטאתך
תכופר. ונחך ה׳ תמיד וגו׳.
וישב עמי בנוה שלום וגו׳. ויהו
נועם ה׳ אלהינו עלינו ומעשה
65 ידינו כוננה עלינו וגו׳. וכוונתם
תהיה לבסם ולהחליש כחות
פולסי דנורא בכח מדת אמ״ת
וחפ״ץ חס״ד כאשר ביארנו
למעלה ולעורר הנעימות העליון
70 עליו על ידי החמשים שערים
המתפשטים מסוד עה״ב. ועיין
פ׳ בלק דף קמ״ה למה נדון
האדם אחר המות בז׳ עדנין
אשר יחלפון עלוהי ואיך דנים
75 האדם אחר מותו ובעת מותו.
ודין אחר המות מתבאר בפרטות
בפ׳ נשא דף קכ״ו. ולבך יהגה
אימה ותבין כי חולי הנשמה
בע״הב היא מחמת אהבתה לגוף
80 כדדרשו על פסוק כי חולת
אהבה אני.[i] וטעם כמה דינים
דמתדנא הנשמה והגוף הכל
הוא לטובתם שאין הקב״ה בא
בטרוניא עם בריותיו כי מבלי
85 תקון ומרוק אין מאכילין לו
לאדם מטוב מעשיו שא״א לאדם
לקבלו בנזכר למעלה שכל עקר
האושר אינו אלא ההתדבקות עם
קונו וזהו ונהנים מזיו שבינה
90 וכן כתיב והתהלכתי בתוככם

thirteen thrones of fine gold. See Zohar, Parashat Terumah, folio 147a.

Each person should recite the verse "And He, being merciful" three times. This is a great act of kindness for the deceased, weakening the heads of the destroyer mentioned in this verse. If the entire congregation recites it three times aloud, how good it is, for there are thirty-nine words, as is known—three times thirteen, corresponding to the thirteen attributes of mercy and the thirteen boundaries, meaning types of unification in the three realms of Atzilut, and likewise in Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah. In this way, they lighten the force of the beating of the grave and other judgments. 55R 60R

Afterward, they should say: "And your iniquity is taken away, and your sin is atoned for," "And the Lord will guide you continually," "And my people shall dwell in peaceful habitation," and "May the pleasantness of the Lord our God be upon us, and establish the work of our hands upon us." Their intention should be to sweeten and weaken the forces of fiery lashes through the power of the attributes of Truth and Desiring Kindness, as we have explained above, and to awaken the supernal pleasantness upon him through the fifty gates that extend from the mystery of the World to Come.[1] 65R 70R 75R

See Parashat Balak, folio 145, on why a person is judged after death during seven periods that pass over him, and how a person is judged after his death and at the time of his death. The judgment after death is explained in detail in Parashat Naso, folio 126. Let your heart meditate with awe, and understand that the soul's ailment in the World to Come stems from its love for the body, as they expounded on the verse, "For I am lovesick." 80R 85R

The reason for the many judgments that the soul and body undergo is entirely for their benefit, for the Holy One, blessed be He, does not deal tyrannically with His creatures. Without correction and purification, a person cannot be fed from the goodness of his 90R them." The triple recitation of this verse is a common Jewish practice for invoking divine mercy and is believed to have protective powers.

[1] The "fifty gates" is a traditional kabbalistic concept referring to the highest levels of spiritual understanding, often associated with Binah (Understanding). The text suggests that proper burial rituals activate these divine channels of blessing.

[i] This is a creative interpretation of Song of Songs 2:5 ("For I am lovesick") to explain the soul's continued attachment to the body even after death. This kabbalistic reading transforms a love poem into a metaphysical statement about the soul's journey.

ואמרו אטייל עמכם בג״ע וכתיב
והיתה נפש אדוני צרורה בצרור
החיים את ה׳ אלהיך. ואמרו כל
זמן שאדם חי נפשו נתונה בידו
95 של הקב״ה דכתיב אשר בידו
נפש כל חי וכשמת נתונה באוצר
ואוצר זה הוא התכללותה בסוד
אוצרות ביצה ותפארת ומלכות
בסוד הבריאה יצירה עשיה
100 רוחנית אחרי שתקנה מעשיה
בעשיה גשמית ואם עקר האומר
הוא הדבקות עם ה׳ איך יהיה
לו כן והוא נפרד בעונותיו
שהפסיקו החבור שהיה לו עם
105 יוצרו בהשתלשלות חבור נפשו
ורוחו ונשמתו באופן שכל מעשה
הטוב אשר יעשה האדם יהיה
אושר אורות מעשים ההם עם
ה׳ אלהיו כמוס עמו יתברך עד
110 ירחץ יטהר מכל טומאתו אשר
הוא טמא לנפש על עונו כמ״ש על
אלישע אחר שלא נהנה מתורתו
עד שר״מ תלמידו הכניסו לצרוף
סיגו בגיהנם וכשמת עלה עשן
115 מקברו וכן לוי לא היו מכניסין
אותו לישיבה של מעלה על שלא
נהג כבוד לר׳ אפס.[i] ומעשים
כיוצא בזה בס״ה רבים. וא״כ
הנשמה חיה חיי עד מאמת חלייה
120 ויסוריה וכי הגוף וה״ה ביסורים
הבאים בעה״ז כי יאמר אדם הלא
על כי אין אלהי בקרבי מצאוני
הרעות האלה ובזה יפשפש
מעשיו אשר לעומת יסוריו ושב
125 ורפא לו באופן כי טוב לו חליו
מבריאתו כי בו יחיה את נפשו.

deeds,[1] for it is impossible for a person to receive it, as mentioned above. The essential happiness is none other than cleaving to one's Creator, and this is "enjoying the radiance of the Divine Presence." Thus it is written, "I will walk among you," and they said, "I will stroll with you in the Garden of Eden." And it is written, "May the soul of my lord be bound in the bond of life with the Lord your God." 95R

They said that as long as a person lives, his soul is placed in the hand of the Holy One, blessed be He, as it is written, "In whose hand is the soul of all living things." And when he dies, it is placed in a treasury. This treasury is its integration into the mystery of the treasuries of Netzach, Tiferet, and Malkhut,[2] in the mystery of spiritual Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, after it has corrected its deeds in physical Asiyah. If the essential thing is cleaving to God, how can this be achieved when one is separated by his sins, which have interrupted the connection he had with his Creator through the chain of connection of his nefesh, ruach, and neshamah? Thus, all the good deeds that a person performs will result in the illumination of those deeds being stored with the Lord his God until he is washed and purified from all his impurity with which he has defiled his soul through his sin. 100R 105R 110R 115R

As they said of Elisha Acher, that he did not benefit from his Torah until his student Rabbi Meir brought him to refine his dross in Gehenna, and when he died, smoke rose from his grave. Similarly, Levi was not admitted to the celestial academy because he did not show proper respect to Rabbi Afes. There are many similar accounts in the Zohar. Thus, the soul lives eternal life from the truth of its illness and suffering,[A] and the body likewise with the sufferings that come in this world. For a person will say, "Is it 120R 125R

[A] Or: "Thus, the soul lives eternal life precisely through the authenticity of its illness and suffering" — The phrase 'מאמת חלייה' has a nuanced meaning where 'מאמת' can suggest that suffering itself becomes the instrument or verification of eternal life, not just its source.

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that even righteous deeds require spiritual refinement before their reward can be fully received in the afterlife. The text presents suffering as a necessary purification process that enables spiritual fulfillment.

[2] These three divine attributes (sefirot) are understood in Kabbalah to correspond to different levels of soul experience after death. The text describes how the soul becomes integrated into these cosmic structures following physical death.

[i] This refers to a Talmudic account (Ketubbot 103b) where Levi was temporarily barred from the heavenly academy for disrespecting Rabbi Afes, illustrating how interpersonal conduct affects one's spiritual state after death.

ויש מקומות שאומרים כלם אחר ששמוהו בקברו אסיפת שלום תהיה אסיפתו ורביצת שלום תהיה רביצתו מחיצת שלום תהיה מחיצתו. שכיבת שלום תהיה שכיבתו. הנה מכון הנה מלון הנה מנוחה וכו׳. ויאמרו כל קהל עדתו יבא שלום יבא שלום יבא שלום ינוח על קבורתו. בלע המות לנצח ומחה ה׳ אלהים דמעה מעל כל פנים וחרפת עמו יסיר מעל כל הארץ כי ה׳ דבר. יחיו מתיך נבלתי יקומון הקיצו ורננו שוכני עפר כי טל אורות טליך וארץ רפאים תפיל. והוא רחום יכפר עון ולא ישחית והרבה להשיב אפו ולא יעיר כל חמתו. כל הנשמה תהלל יה הללויה. ברוך ה׳ אלהים אלהי ישראל וברוך שם כבודו לעולם וימלא כבודו את כל הארץ אמן ואמן:[i] not because my God is not within me that these evils have found me?" Through this, he will examine his deeds in relation to his sufferings, and repent, and be healed. Therefore, his illness is better for him than his health, for through it he will give life to his soul.

There are places where they all say after they have placed him in his grave: "May his gathering be a gathering of peace,[1] may his resting be a resting of peace, may his partition be a partition of peace, may his lying down be a lying down of peace. Behold a place, behold a lodging, behold a rest," etc. And all the congregation of his assembly shall say: "May peace come, may peace come, may peace come and rest upon his burial. He has swallowed up death forever, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from all faces, and the reproach of His people He will take away from all the earth, for the Lord has spoken. Your dead shall live, my corpses shall arise; awake and sing, you who dwell in the dust, for your dew is a dew of light, and the earth shall cast out the departed." "And He, being merciful, forgives iniquity and does not destroy, and frequently turns away His anger and does not stir up all His wrath." "Let every soul praise the Lord, Hallelujah." "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, and blessed be His glorious name forever, and may His glory fill the whole earth, Amen and Amen."

[1] This prayer utilizes a series of Hebrew terms for rest that have double meanings: 'gathering' (אסיפה) refers both to death and to divine ingathering; 'resting place' (רביצה) suggests both physical repose and spiritual dwelling; 'partition' (מחיצה) indicates both the grave and spiritual categories in the afterlife.

[i] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Tzav, folio 34b — This reference is cited to support the kabbalistic concept that all creation, even celestial bodies, originates from 'dust' or primordial matter. The reference reinforces the author's explanation of the symbolic correspondence between physical burial in earth and the soul's return to its spiritual source. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah, folio 147a — This reference describes Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai sitting upon thirteen thrones of fine gold in the Garden of Eden, which serves as a paradigm for the destiny of the righteous soul. The author uses this as a mystical template for understanding what happens to the neshamah after death. | Cf. Parashat Balak, folio 145 — This reference points to a Zoharic discussion about the seven periods of judgment that the soul undergoes after death. The author cites this to provide deeper context about post-mortem experiences without fully elaborating the details, directing the reader to consult the original source. | Cf. Parashat Naso, folio 126 — This reference directs readers to a detailed explanation in the Zohar about the judgment process after death. The author cites this as a resource for understanding the complex system of post-mortem judgment that forms the theological backdrop for the burial rituals being described. | Cf. For I am lovesick (Song of Songs 2:5) — The author creatively interprets this verse from Song of Songs to explain the soul's attachment to the body even after death. In kabbalistic thought, this 'lovesickness' represents the soul's continued connection to physical existence that may impede its spiritual elevation, requiring purification processes after death.

פרק י״ט

Chapter 19

אין לישראל גומלי חסדים העוסקים בצרכי המת להתפלא ולומר איך נוכל אנחנו לסדר ולכוין העניינים אלו עם הפסוקים כי הכל הולך אל המחשבה טובה. והאדם עובד במעט והקב״ה עוזרו ותומכו ברב.[i] אדם מיחד ואינו יודע לגמור הענין והעזר האלהי סומכו וכוננו וזהו נקרא שרוי שבינה במעשה האדם. כדפירש בזהר על מעשה ידינו כוננהו[ii] כדלקמן וכן אמרו פתחו לי פתח כחודה של מחט ואני אפתח לכם[iii] וכו׳. וכל מלאכת הקדש נעשית מאליה ודי לאדם להתחיל בה כי ה׳ יגמור על ידו כדכתיב ויכולו השמים והארץ וכן כתיב בעבודת אהל מועד ותכל מעצמה ובמקדש כתיב והבית בהבנותו ואם על העצים ועל האבנים לפי שהיו עתידים להתקדש נאמר כך כ״ש לגוף שהיה נרתק של קדושה. ודי שהגדול מאותם המתעסקים בו הוא יטול המשרה על שכמו לסדר דבריו ועסקיו של הנפטר יהיה רבו או חבירו או תלמידו ואחריו כל אדם ימשוך וכאשר יסדר ויאמר הוא כן יענו ויעשו אחריו דבתר רישא גופא אזיל. ואמרו בפ׳ פקודי דף רכ״ה שכל מקום ששלט צד הקדושה סטרא אחרא לא יכיל דדחייא לה מאתרה בכל מה שהוא עושה בנגדו כמו שפירשנו למעלה וכ״ש גוף תשמיש קדושה ועוד

The Jewish members of charitable burial societies who attend to the needs of the deceased should not be astonished and say, "How can we properly arrange and direct these matters with the verses?" For everything depends on good intention. A person works 5R with little, and the Holy One, blessed be He, helps and supports abundantly. When one attempts to unify but does not know how to complete the matter, divine assistance supports and establishes them—this is what is meant by "the Divine Presence dwells 10R in a person's actions." As explained in the Zohar regarding "establish the work of our hands," as will be discussed later, and as they said, "Open for Me an opening as narrow as the eye of a needle, and I will open for you," etc. All sacred work is accomplished 15R of its own accord, and it is enough for a person to merely begin it, for the Lord will complete it through them, as it is written, "And the heavens and earth were completed," and similarly regarding the service of the Tent of Meeting, "and it was completed by 20R itself," and regarding the Temple it is written, "and the house, in its being built." If this was said about wood and stones because they were destined for sanctification, how much more so for the body, which was a vessel of holiness.[1] 25R

It is sufficient that the most distinguished among those attending to the deceased take upon himself the responsibility to arrange the words and affairs of the departed, whether he was his teacher, colleague, or student, and everyone else will follow his lead. As 30R he arranges and speaks, so will they respond and act after him, for "the body follows the head." And they said in Parashat Pekudei, page 225, that wherever the side of holiness dominates, the Other Side cannot prevail, for it is driven from its place by everything 35R done against it, as we explained above. This is especially true for a body that was a vessel of holiness,

[1] The text emphasizes the sanctity of the human body that performed commandments during life, suggesting it retains spiritual significance even after death.

[i] This reflects the rabbinic concept that God completes human spiritual efforts that are begun with sincere intention, even when the person lacks complete knowledge.

[ii] This is a reference to Psalm 90:17, which is often interpreted as a prayer that God will establish human efforts. In this context, it means that divine support completes human attempts at proper ritual performance.

[iii] This is a famous rabbinic saying from Midrash Song of Songs Rabbah 5:2, expressing that God responds disproportionately to even small human spiritual initiatives.

קדש אבריו עצמם בעשיית
המצות ועוד יש בו חיות מה
40 כי ודאי זכותו בדאי לסייע
המתעסקים בו שיכוונו מעשיהם
כראוי לו והועד לפני כי תלמידי
המקובל אשכנזי צוק"ל[i] בשעה
שרצו להטבילו אחר מותו נשמט
45 גופו מתחת ידם ונשקע במים
ואחר כך צף על פני המים מעצמו
וגם שאין למדים מסוד קדושים
אלו דהוה חמי מראות עליונות
כדאמרו דחמא עמודא דנורא
50 דאוזיף הגאון קורדואיר"ו
לקבורתו[ii] מכל מקום כל אחד
לפי מדרגתו וזכותו יסייע
במתעסקים בו. וקודם צאתם
מבית הקברות ירחצו ידיהם.
55 מלבד טעם הנכתב במדרש שהוא
להבריח הרוחות השוכנות על
הידים[iii] בפרט מהטעם שכתבנו.
עוד הוא רמז כי ידינו לא
שפכו את הדם הזה[iv] לומר שלא
60 מנענו ממנו צרכיו ובקורו בעת
חליו. ויש שאומרים פסוק כפר
לעמך ישראל וגו' ויכוין ג"כ
לעורר אחר קבורת המת סוד
הרחמים בכל עשרה שליטים
65 עליונים[v] ולבסם כחות שנתלבשו
בדין ובזה יוסר בקצת חירוף

whose very limbs were sanctified through the performance of commandments, and which still contains some vitality. Certainly, the deceased's merit is sufficient to assist those attending to him so that they direct their actions appropriately for him. 40R

It was testified before me that when the disciples of the German Kabbalist of blessed memory wanted to immerse his body after death, it slipped from their hands and sank in the water, and afterward floated to the surface by itself.[A] Even though we do not derive teachings from the mysteries of these holy ones who beheld supernal visions—as they said that he saw a pillar of fire that accompanied the Gaon Cordovero to his burial—nevertheless, each person according to his level and merit will assist those who attend to him. 45R 50R

Before leaving the cemetery, they should wash their hands. Besides the reason written in the Midrash, which is to drive away the spirits that dwell on the hands,[1] particularly for the reason we have written, it is also an allusion to "our hands have not shed this blood," meaning that we did not withhold from him his needs and visits during his illness.[B] Some say the verse, "Atone for Your people Israel," etc., and one should also intend to arouse, after the burial of the deceased, the mystery of mercy in all ten supernal rulers and to sweeten the forces that are clothed in judgment. This will somewhat remove the reproach of the lower rulers 55R 60R 65R

[A] Or: "his body slipped from beneath their hands and sank into the water, then afterward rose to the water's surface by itself" — This more literal translation better preserves the physical imagery of the miraculous event, where the body first sinks completely and then rises without human assistance.

[B] Or: "declaring that we did not withhold from him his needs nor neglect to visit him during his illness" — This alternate more explicitly connects to the ethical obligation of visiting the sick (bikur cholim), which is an important theme throughout Ma'avar Yabok.

[1] In Jewish mystical thought, negative spiritual forces were believed to attach themselves to a person's hands in a cemetery, which is one reason for the ritual washing upon leaving.

[i] This refers to a German kabbalist whose body reportedly exhibited supernatural properties during its tahara (ritual washing). Such stories were common in Jewish mystical circles to demonstrate the continued sanctity of a righteous person's body after death.

[ii] This refers to a miraculous pillar of fire that allegedly accompanied Rabbi Moses Cordovero (a prominent 16th-century kabbalist from Safed) to his burial. Such stories emphasized the divine approval of great scholars.

[iii] This reflects the belief that harmful spirits cling to the hands after visiting a cemetery, necessitating ritual washing before re-entering inhabited areas.

[iv] This alludes to Deuteronomy 21:7, where the elders declare their innocence regarding an unsolved murder. Here it metaphorically means the mourners did not neglect the deceased during life.

[v] This refers to the ten sefirot (divine emanations) in Kabbalah, which are often understood as "rulers" governing different aspects of divine influence.

השליטים תחתונים להכות הגוף בקבר וזה יהיה על דרך ויאמר למלאך המשחית די. עוד זה תהיה הערה לאדם שבכל עת יהיו בגדיו לבנים ויקדש עצמו מלמטה כי המות בכל עת ישלח חצו וברקו. ובנטילת ידיהם יאמר פסוק תפול עליהם אימתה ופחד בגדול זרועך ידמו כאבן עד יעבור עמך ה׳ עד יעבור עם זו קנית. והתקדשתם והייתם קדושים כי קדוש אני ה׳ אלהיכם. ועיין בזהר פ׳ נשא מסוד רחיצת ידים. ועל פי מה שכתוב בזהר על אותו צורבא מדרבנן שאמר רבי אלעזר ברכאן דאבא אצטריכו הכא ופעם אחת מצאו ר״ש בן יוחאי שהיה נוטל ידיו בשופע והתפלל עליו ואמר רבון כל העולמים מלא ידיו מברכותיך ומן היום ההוא והלאה נתעשר. על פי הדברים האלה הרגלתי עצמי לומר בכל פעם שאני נוטל ידי לסעודה רבון כל העולמים מלא ידי מברכותיך ומברכותיך יבורך בית עבדך לעולם ברכנו אבינו כלנו כאחד באור פניך כי בשעת המעשה התפלה נשמעת ובפרט בעת התעוררות רחמים ברחיצה וכן א״ר חסדא אנא משאי וכו׳ ונ״ל שגם כן ברחיצת ידים מדי צאתו מבית הקברות טוב לומר זה להתפלל על הנפטר ולומר מלא ידיו מברכותיך וידיו יהיה מלשון מקום בהתפלל לה׳ יחננהו מאוצר של חסד וחנינה וימלא מקומו בג״ע עליון ותחתון ובחצר מות מברכות פיהו משפע מימי החסד הנוזלים ומלבינים who strike the body in the grave, in the manner of "and He said to the destroying angel, 'Enough.'" This is also a reminder for a person that at all times his garments should be white and he should sanctify himself from below, for death sends forth its arrow and lightning at any time.

When washing their hands, one should recite the verse: "Terror and dread fall upon them; through the greatness of Your arm they become still as a stone; until Your people pass over, O Lord, until the people whom You have purchased pass over." "And you shall sanctify yourselves and be holy, for I am the Lord your God." See the Zohar, Parashat Naso, regarding the mystery of hand washing. And according to what is written in the Zohar about that young scholar to whom Rabbi Eleazar said, "My father's blessings are needed here," and once Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai found him washing his hands abundantly and prayed for him, saying, "Master of all worlds, fill his hands with Your blessings,"[1] and from that day onward he became wealthy.

Based on these words, I have accustomed myself to say each time I wash my hands for a meal: "Master of all worlds, fill my hands with Your blessings, and from Your blessings may the house of Your servant be blessed forever.[2] Bless us, our Father, all of us as one, with the light of Your countenance," for at the time of the action, prayer is heard, especially at a time of arousal of mercy during washing. And so said Rabbi Hisda, "I wash," etc. And it seems to me that also when washing hands upon leaving the cemetery, it is good to say this, to pray for the departed and say, "Fill his hands with Your blessings"—where "his hands" should be understood as "his place," praying that the Lord grant him favor from the treasury of kindness and grace,[3] and fill his place in the upper and lower Garden of Eden and in the court of death with the blessings of His mouth, from the abundance of flowing waters of kindness that whiten the sins of His people Israel[4] with kindness and mercy. It is good to pour water over one's hands three times.

[1]The author adapts a prayer originally used for the living to benefit the deceased, reflecting the Jewish belief that actions by the living can assist souls in the afterlife.

[2]The ritual washing after leaving the cemetery becomes an opportunity not only to cleanse oneself from death impurity but also to generate blessings for both the deceased and the living.

[3]The hand washing ritual becomes an opportunity to pray for the deceased's soul, reflecting the belief that actions of the living can benefit the dead.

[4]The metaphor of water "whitening" sins reflects the Jewish concept of spiritual purification, where ritual actions have cosmic significance beyond their physical performance.

עונות עמו ישראל בחסד
וברחמים וטוב לשפוך המים
110 על ידיו ג״פ. ולרוב הטעמים
שכתבנו בנ״י זו טוב שלא לנגב
ידיו במפה ועוד כי בזה מראה
שאינו מסיח דעתו מן האבל
ואינו משליך אחרי גוו זכרון יום
115 המות וכבר כתבנו מזה בח״ב.
והמנחם האבל בעי ליסדא מלין
בקדמיתא[i] דהא חברייא דאיוב
הוו אמרי מלי קשוט אבל לנחמא
ליה לא בגין דבעי מלין דיודי
120 עלייהו וכדין יקבל עליה דינא
ויודי לאלהא קדישא כדעבד
אליהו. זה לשון הזהר פ׳ קרח
דף קע״ו. ויודיע אליו שאין
לבריה כלום אצל בוראו שהרי
125 משה רבן של כל הנביאים לא
בא אלא בלשון תחנונים שנאמר
ואתחנן אל ה׳ כדאמרי׳ שם
במדרש. והמנחם הוא במדרגת
מדת המשפט הממתק האף וזהו
130 יסרני ה׳ אך במשפט אל באפך
פן תמיטני וכשהשפע ממדת
המשפט בא למלכות אז היא
מתטהרת מדיניה ומתנחמת
מתגבורת הדין שהגבירו עליה
135 עונות התחתונים. ולכן אומרים
לאבלים מן השמים תנוחמו וכן
לשון המשנה בסנהדרין תתנחמו
מן השמים ועקר הנחמה הוא
שיצדק דין שמים בלב האבל
140 עד שבפיו יודה למלך המשפט
ויברך על הרעה מעין הטובה
שאז יזכה למה שאמר הנביא

For most of the reasons we have written regarding this hand washing, it is good not to dry one's hands with a cloth.[1] Additionally, this shows that one is not diverting attention from mourning and not casting behind one's back the remembrance of the day of death, as we have already written in Part 2. And one who comforts the mourner should establish words initially, for the companions of Job spoke words of truth but did not comfort him, because one needs words that he will acknowledge, and then he will accept the judgment upon himself and acknowledge the Holy God, as Elijah did. This is the language of the Zohar, Parashat Korach, page 176. 110R 115R 120R

One should inform the mourner that no creature has any claim against its Creator, for even Moses, the master of all prophets, came only with language of supplication, as it is said, "And I beseeched the Lord," as stated there in the Midrash. The comforter functions at the level of the attribute of justice that sweetens anger, and this is "The Lord has chastened me, but in justice, not in anger, lest You diminish me."[A] And when the flow from the attribute of justice comes to Malkhut (Kingdom), then it is purified from its judgments and is comforted from the intensity of judgment that the sins of those below have strengthened against it. 125R 130R

Therefore, we say to mourners, "May you be comforted from Heaven,"[2] and so is the language of the Mishnah in Sanhedrin, "May you be comforted from Heaven." The essence of consolation is that the mourner justify Heaven's judgment in his heart, to the point that with his mouth he acknowledges the King of Judgment and blesses for the bad in the manner of the good.[3] Then he will merit what the prophet said, "For she has received from the 135R 140R

[A] Or: "Chasten me, O LORD, but with justice—not in Your anger, lest You reduce me to nothing" — This alternate translation more directly reflects the biblical quotation from Jeremiah 10:24 and better conveys the contrast between tempering justice with measured correction versus destructive anger.

[1] The author recommends allowing the hands to air dry after cemetery hand washing as a way of maintaining mindfulness of mortality rather than quickly returning to normal activities.

[2] This traditional Hebrew expression of consolation (מן השמים תנוחמו) emphasizes that true comfort comes from divine sources rather than human words alone.

[3] This refers to the rabbinic requirement to bless God for bad tidings as one would for good news (Mishnah Berakhot 9:5), showing complete acceptance of divine judgment.

[i] This Zoharic teaching instructs comforters to establish words that will help the mourner acknowledge and accept divine judgment, unlike Job's companions who failed to comfort him effectively.

כי לקחה מיד ה׳ כפלים בכל חטאתיה ירצה כי ישראל יקבלו נחמות כפלים מחטאתיהם אחד על כי יעשו תשובה מאהבה. וב׳ על קבלת היסורין מאהבה וכן צריך האבל לקיים בעצמו. כי יזכה לנחמות כפלים והמנחמים יזכירו ויזהירו על זה ולכן אמרו דנחמתא דבבלאי גידופא הוא[i] כיון שלא היו משתדלים עם האבל שיצדיק עליו דין שמים וכמו שנראה מדברים שנחמו חכמי ישראל לר׳ ישמעאל:[ii] hand of the Lord double for all her sins,"[1] meaning that Israel will receive double consolation for their sins: first, for repenting out of love, and second, for accepting suffering with love. And so must the mourner fulfill within himself, for he will merit double consolation. Those who comfort should remind and caution about this. Therefore, they said that the Babylonian form of consolation is offensive, since they did not endeavor with the mourner to justify Heaven's judgment upon himself, as is evident from the words with which the sages of Israel comforted Rabbi Ishmael.

פרק כ׳

Chapter 20

כתוב בספר הלבוש ותולשין עשבים עם עפרן ואומרים זכור כי עפר אנחנו למען יזכור יום מיתתו ואנו אומרים פסוקים ועתה ה׳ אבינו אתה וגו׳ ויש אומרים שהוא רמז לתחיית המתים[iii] על דרך ויציצו מעיר כעשב הארץ וכבר כתבנו הנראה לנו בזה למעלה בחלק ב׳ וזורקים אותם על ראשיהם דרך צער על דרך ויזרקו עפר על ראשיהם השמימה. ונ״ל שיהיה להורות כי המתים בתחייה יתעלו בגוף טהור וזך הרבה למעלה מחומר הלז ע״י הטל

It is written in the book of Levush that one plucks grass along with its soil[2] and says "Remember that we are dust," so that one may remember the day of death. And we recite verses, "And now, O LORD, You are our Father, etc." Some say that this is an allusion to the resurrection of the dead, as it is written, "They shall blossom from the city like the grass of the earth." We have already written what appears to us regarding this above in Part 2. And they throw [the grass] upon their heads as a sign of grief, in the manner of "They threw dust upon their heads toward heaven." It seems to me that this is to indicate that in the resurrection, the dead will be elevated with a pure and refined body, far above this material substance, through the supernal dew

[1] This refers to Isaiah 40:2. The author interprets this verse as indicating that suffering accepted with love combined with repentance out of love creates double consolation.

[2] This refers to a Jewish cemetery custom where people pull up small tufts of grass before leaving the cemetery. The text explains multiple layers of meaning behind this seemingly simple ritual.

[i] The text criticizes the Babylonian form of consolation as offensive because it failed to help mourners justify and accept divine judgment, which is considered the true essence of comfort.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Part 2 — The author refers to Part 2 (ח״ב) of his own work where he previously discussed aspects of washing hands after leaving a cemetery. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei, p. 225 — The author cites the Zohar to explain that the side of holiness can repel impure forces, reinforcing the idea that the sanctified body of a righteous person assists those preparing it for burial. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Naso — The author directs readers to the Zohar's discussion of hand washing rituals, which provides mystical explanations for the practice of washing hands after visiting a cemetery. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Korach, p. 176 — The author quotes the Zohar regarding proper methods of comforting mourners, emphasizing the importance of helping mourners accept divine judgment. | Cf. Talmud, Sanhedrin — The author cites the Mishnah in Sanhedrin to support the traditional consolation formula 'May you be comforted from Heaven.'

[iii] The author presents two interpretations of the cemetery ritual of plucking grass: as a reminder of mortality ('we are dust') and as a symbol of resurrection ('blossom like grass from the city'). This dual symbolism reflects the Jewish understanding of death as both an end and a beginning.

עליון המוכן להם שהוא שפע
יו״ד ה״א וא״ו בגימטרי״א
ט״ל[i] כנודע כנדרש במדרש
הנעלם בפ׳ וירא בדרוש מחשע
טפין הנוטפים מגנתא עוד מזה
בפ׳ חיי שרה באורך וכבר
כתבנו מזה למעלה במאמר
ראשון. בצאתם אומרים ויהי
נועם יושב בסתר עליון להבריח
הרוחות ויש שיושבין ז׳ פעמים
להבריח מהם הרוחות המלוות
את המת כדאמרן לעיל על פסוק
ונפשותיכן לפורחות ובכל עת
שהוא יושב בורחות ממנו עיין
הטעם שם ויש שיושבין ג״פ לבד
נגד ג׳ מיני מזיקים שכתבנו
למעלה וכן נגד ג׳ כתות של
מלאכי חבלה. אך טוב לישב ז׳
פעמים ובפעם ראשון יאמר ויהי
נועם יושב בסתר עד ונגע לא
יקרב באהלך. וגם יאמר מלת
כי שבראש פסוק כי מלאכיו
ואח״כ ישב במקום אחר ויאמר
ויהי נועם עד כי מלאכיו ופעם השלישי עד כי מלאכיו יצוה
וכן עד דרכיך וישלים בפעם
השביעי כל המזמור ונ״ל טעם
לישיבת שבעה פעמים כי אמרו
שהקליפות וסטרא אחרא מהם
ששה כתות וכלם כאחד נקראים
נגעי בני אדם ור״ת למפרע
אב״ן[ii] כלומר שהם ע״י אבן
הראשה שהוא היצה״ר הוא השטן
וכלם רמוזים בפסוק לא תאונה
אליך רעה שהם בחות נקביות
ונגע לא יקרב באהלך אלו נגעי
בני אדם ע״כ אמרתי שטוב לומר
פסוק זה בלבתו לבקר החולה prepared for them, which is the divine flow of Yod-Hei-Vav, whose numerical value equals "tal" (dew) as is known, as expounded in the Hidden Midrash on Parashat Vayera in the discourse about the nine drops that drip from the garden. More on this appears at length in Parashat Chayei Sarah, and we have already written about this above in the first discourse. 20R

Upon leaving [the cemetery], they recite "May the pleasantness" and "He who dwells in the secret place of the Most High" to drive away harmful spirits. Some sit seven times[1] to drive away the spirits that accompany the dead, as we stated above regarding the verse "and your souls to fluttering [spirits]," for whenever one sits, they flee from him. See the reason there. Some sit only three times, corresponding to the three types of harmful entities we wrote about above, and also corresponding to the three groups of destructive angels. However, it is good to sit seven times, and the first time one should recite "May the pleasantness" and "He who dwells in the secret place" until "nor shall any plague come near your dwelling." One should also say the word "For" at the beginning of the verse "For He shall command His angels," and afterward sit in another place and recite "May the pleasantness" until "For He shall command His angels," and the third time until "For He shall command His angels concerning you," and so on until "in all your ways," completing the entire psalm on the seventh time. 25R 30R 35R 40R 45R

It seems to me that the reason for sitting seven times is because they said that there are six groups of negative forces and the Other Side, and together they are all called "afflictions of the sons of man," the reverse acronym of which spells "even" (stone), meaning that they operate through the cornerstone, which is the evil inclination, which is Satan. They are all alluded to in the verse "No evil shall befall you," 50R

[1] This describes the practice of repeatedly sitting and standing seven times when leaving a cemetery as spiritual protection. The custom is called 'sheva yeshivot' (seven sittings) and is still practiced in some Jewish communities today.

[i] The author employs gematria (Hebrew numerology) to connect the divine letters Yod-Hei-Vav (יו״ד ה״א וא״ו) with the Hebrew word for dew (ט״ל/tal), both having the numerical value of 39. This connects the resurrection of the dead with the 'dew' that will revive them, based on Isaiah 26:19.

[ii] The author identifies that the reverse acronym of 'afflictions of the sons of man' (נגעי בני אדם) spells 'even' (אב״ן/stone), symbolizing the evil inclination as a 'cornerstone' of negative spiritual forces. This demonstrates the kabbalistic practice of finding spiritual meanings in word structures and letter combinations.

וכלם הם פורחות ומסתלקות ע״י
55 שיר של פגעים ועקרו עד כי אתה
ה׳ מחסי שבו ששים תיבות נגד
הנה מטתו שלשלמה שבו ששים
אותיות ובו קדשו ירושלים בימי
עזרא כדכתב הר״ן והם סובבים
60 האדם כשמוצאים בו עילה ליאחז
בו וכ״ש גופים המתים. ונ״ל שעל
כן בפסוקי מזמור מן המצר שהוא
תקוני זעיר להיות כי פעמים
מתגבר הדין וזה גורם למטה
65 מטה בעולם העשיה התגברות
החיצונים ע״כ להשמדם עדי
עד אמר שש פעמים סביבה
בחיצונים הסובבים במדורין
חוץ למשכן מטטרו״ן. הא׳ כל
70 גוים סבבוני ב׳ וג׳ סבוני גם
סבבוני. הד׳ סבוני כדבורים.
הה׳ והוא דחה דחיתני לנפול
וה׳ עזרני והם ד׳ פסוקים כנגד
ד׳ קליפות שאמר יחזקאל ובג׳
75 ראשונים שאינם מקבלים מתוק
אמר שכל מגמתם לסבוב ולבלע
הקדש ח״ו ע״כ יכריתם בכח
שם ה׳ אך הפסוק הד׳ שהוא
נגד הרביעית אמר דחיה לבד
80 דחה דחיתני ולא הזכיר בה
אמילה וכריתה להיותה נגד
קליפת נגה שבעזר שם הוי״ה
במלוי ב״ן מתמתקת[i] כאשר
כתבנו וא״כ כיון שאדם מסובב
85 מו׳ מיני רוחות אלו ע״כ צריך
לישב ז׳ פעמים ולומר שיר
פגעים המבריח אותם מעליו
ובפעם הז׳ יכוין להמשיך עליו
כח הקדושה ולעלות למעלה
90 שביעית ששם המים הנוזלים
המטהרים כנזכר למעלה ולכן
אחר זה הזכיר במזמור ההוא
כח ימין החסד הנאדרי בכל
בחינותיו היורד למטה וגובר

which refers to the feminine forces, "and no plague 55R shall come near your dwelling," referring to the afflictions of the sons of man. Therefore, I said that it is good to recite this verse when going to visit the sick. All these [harmful forces] fly away and depart through the "Song of Afflictions" [Psalm 91], particularly until "For You, O LORD, are my refuge," 60R which contains sixty words, corresponding to "Behold, Solomon's bed, surrounded by sixty," which has sixty letters, and with it Jerusalem was sanctified in the days of Ezra, as the Ran wrote. These 65R [forces] surround a person when they find cause to take hold of him, and all the more so [they surround] the bodies of the dead.

It seems to me that this is why in the verses of Psalm 118 ["From the straits"], which is a rectification of Zeir Anpin, since sometimes judgment intensifies and this causes the strengthening of external forces in the lower reaches of the World of Action, in order to destroy them forever, it says "surround" six times, referring to the external forces that surround the dwellings outside the abode of Metatron. The 75R first: "All nations surrounded me"; the second and third: "They surrounded me, yes, they surrounded me"; the fourth: "They surrounded me like bees"; the fifth: "You pushed me hard that I might fall, but the LORD helped me." These are four verses corre-
80R sponding to the four shells that Ezekiel mentioned. Regarding the first three, which do not accept sweetening, it says that all their aim is to surround and swallow the holy, God forbid, therefore they will be cut off by the power of God's name. But the fourth
85R verse, which corresponds to the fourth [shell], only says "You pushed me hard that I might fall," without mentioning cutting off or destruction, because it corresponds to the shell of brightness (nogah),[1] which is sweetened with the help of the Divine Name YHVH
90R with the BaN filling, as we have written. Therefore, since a person is surrounded by these six types of spirits, he must sit seven times and recite the "Song of Afflictions" which drives them away from him.

[1] In Kabbalistic cosmology, there are four 'shells' or 'husks' (kelipot) that conceal divinity. Three are completely negative, but the fourth—nogah (brightness)—contains a mixture of good and evil that can potentially be elevated or 'sweetened.'

[i] The author distinguishes between three completely negative spiritual 'shells' that must be destroyed and the fourth 'shell of brightness' (kelipat nogah) which can be 'sweetened' (transformed/redeemed) through the divine name YHVH with the BaN filling. This reflects the kabbalistic belief that some negative forces can be elevated while others must be eradicated.

בכל הספירות ויורד בפני אריה מיכאל ומשליט הימניים ומבריח החצונים וכל ההנהגה בלובן ופני אריה הם מתפשטים בכל העולמות והתפלות מקובלת. וזועמת בכל יום נגדם והם כאבק פורח וכרוח נושבת והיא סוד אבן דלא בידין דמחת לרגלא דצלמא[i] שהוא כללות קומת החצונים בהתרוממותה למעלה ועושה חיל למטה ובזה אין חשש שישלטו כחות המיתה וזהו לא אמות כי אחיה וגם היסורים יהיו ע״י הרחמים הנכללים בשם י״ה ולא ע״י כחות החצונים ששם המיתה וזהו יסור יסרני יה ולמות לא נתנני ובזה יריק צדק לצדקה ויפתחו שערי צדק ומזה ישמע טעם לשבעת הקפות הנעשים בכל מקום ובפרט על המתים מלבד מה שכתבנו בזה למעלה. אח״כ יאמר ברכת אתה גבור עד ונאמן אתה להחיות מתים כי בכח שמות הקדושים שבו בהם סוד להבריח כחות הטומאה. עוד בברכה זו בה תקון הדינים שהם הש קצוות בגבורה וקשור דינים עליונים מהגבורה עם דינים התחתונים שבמלכות גורם מתוק להם כי כשצדק ומשפט יחד הוא מכון הכסא כי יצחק גבורה נח מרגזו ומתנחם ברבקה אשתו שהיא מלכות[ii] ובזה הדין יורד ממותק ומגביר מלאך גבריאל ומשם לפני שור שבהיכל הרצון ונותן הכח והגבורה להיכל הזכות ומשם יתפשט הכח לצד חוצה

95 100 105 110 115 120 125 130

And on the seventh time, he should intend to draw upon himself the power of holiness and to ascend to the seventh level above, where the flowing waters purify, as mentioned above. 95R

Therefore, after this, he mentioned in that psalm the power of the right hand of kindness in all its aspects, which descends below and prevails in all the sefirot and descends in the face of the lion Michael, empowering the right-side forces and driving away the external forces. The entire governance is in whiteness, and the face of the lion extends throughout all the worlds, and prayers are accepted. It frowns against them daily, and they are like flying dust and blowing wind. This is the secret of the stone not cut by hands[1] that struck the feet of the image, which is the entirety of the structure of the external forces in its elevation above, and it performs valiantly below. Thus, there is no concern that the powers of death will rule, and this is [the meaning of] "I shall not die but live." Even sufferings will come through the mercies included in the divine name Yah, and not through the external forces where death resides. This is [the meaning of] "The LORD has severely chastened me, but He has not given me over to death." In this way, righteousness (tzedek) is poured into charity (tzedakah), and the gates of righteousness are opened. From this, one can understand the reason for the seven circuits performed everywhere, especially for the dead, apart from what we have written about this above. 100R 105R 110R 115R 120R

Afterward, one should recite the blessing "You are mighty" until "And You are faithful to revive the dead," for within the power of the holy names contained therein lies the secret of driving away the forces of impurity. Additionally, in this blessing is the rectification of judgments, which are the six extremities in Gevurah, and the binding of the supernal judgments from Gevurah with the lower judgments 125R 130R

[1] This is a reference to Daniel 2:34, describing a stone that destroys the statue in Nebuchadnezzar's dream. The author reinterprets this apocalyptic image in kabbalistic terms as divine power overcoming negative spiritual forces.

[i] This is an Aramaic reference to Daniel 2:34, 'a stone cut without hands,' which struck the feet of Nebuchadnezzar's dream image. The author reinterprets this apocalyptic vision in kabbalistic terms as representing divine power triumphing over negative spiritual forces.

[ii] The author employs a kabbalistic reading where biblical figures represent divine attributes: Isaac symbolizes Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) and Rebecca represents Malkhut (Kingdom). Their marital relationship symbolizes the 'sweetening' of divine judgment through its connection with the more receptive attribute of Malkhut.

לכל בעלי הדין עד החצונים
הנקראים צללי ערב שהם הכחות
135 והצללים אשר לערב ולדין
וזהו סוד תפלת המנחה שעושה
נחת רוח ויצחק מתנחם ברבקה
אשתו והדינים ממותקים וגם זה
סוד תקון עקדת יצחק ובברכת
140 אתה גבור בה מתוק הדינים
בסוד הנזכר ונקרא גבורות בפי
חכמי הגמרא שבה מתוקן. לכן
טוב לאמרה אחר ז׳ ישיבות
ואפי׳ נקבר המת ע״י אינו יהודי
145 או סמוך לשבת יעשה כן ויש
מקפידים שלא ליכנס לבית עד
שירחץ ידיו ויעשה ז׳ ישיבות או
לפחות ג׳ ומנהג אבותינו תורה
היא: [i]

in Malkhut[1] causes their sweetening. For when righteousness and judgment are together, they establish the throne, since Isaac (representing Gevurah) rests 135R from his anger and is comforted by his wife Rebecca (representing Malkhut). Through this, judgment descends sweetened and empowers the angel Gabriel, and from there to the face of the ox in the Palace of Will, and it gives power and strength to the Palace of 140R Merit. From there, the power spreads outward to all the masters of judgment, even to the external forces called "evening shadows," which are the powers and shadows belonging to evening and judgment. This is the secret of the Minchah prayer, which brings 145R satisfaction, and Isaac is comforted by his wife Rebecca,[2] and the judgments are sweetened. This is also the secret of the rectification of the binding of Isaac, and in the blessing "You are mighty" is the sweetening of judgments in the aforementioned secret, and it is called "Gevurot" (powers) by the Sages 150R of the Talmud, in which it is rectified.

Therefore, it is good to recite it after the seven sittings, even if the dead was buried by a non-Jew[3] or close to Shabbat. One should do so, and some are 155R particular not to enter a house until they wash their hands and perform seven sittings, or at least three, and the custom of our ancestors is [considered as] Torah.

[1] This describes the kabbalistic concept of 'sweetening judgments' (המתקת הדינים) where harsh divine judgments from Gevurah are tempered by connecting them with Malkhut. This process transforms potentially destructive forces into constructive ones.

[2] In kabbalistic symbolism, biblical figures often represent divine attributes. Here, Isaac represents Gevurah (Strength/Judgment) and Rebecca represents Malkhut (Kingdom), with their marital relationship symbolizing the harmonization of these divine forces.

[3] This addresses a practical halakhic concern: whether the protective ritual of seven sittings is still required if the actual burial was performed by a non-Jew (which might happen in certain circumstances). The author confirms that the ritual should still be performed.

[i] Cf. Psalm 91 — This psalm is understood as a spiritual protection that drives away harmful forces. The text explains it contains sixty words corresponding to the 'sixty mighty men' around Solomon's bed (Song of Songs 3:7), suggesting it creates a protective spiritual barrier. | Cf. Psalm 118 — The author interprets the repeated phrase 'surrounded me' as corresponding to the six groups of negative spiritual forces. Each instance represents spiritual protection against a different type of harmful entity. | Cf. Hidden Midrash on Parashat Vayera — This reference supports the author's explanation of the custom of plucking grass, connecting it to resurrection through the 'dew' (טל) that will revive the dead, which has the same numerical value as specific divine letters. | Cf. Book of Ezekiel's vision of the four shells/husks — The author connects the four verses in Psalm 118 with the four spiritual shells or husks from kabbalistic interpretations of Ezekiel's vision, showing how three are completely negative while the fourth (nogah/brightness) can be 'sweetened' or redeemed. | Cf. Blessing 'Atah Gibor' from the Amidah prayer — The author explains that this blessing contains divine names with the power to drive away impurity and has the mystical function of 'sweetening' judgments by binding the upper divine attribute of Gevurah with the lower attribute of Malkhut.

פרק כ״א

Chapter 21

והחי יתן אל לבו דברים של מיתה כדאמרי׳ במ״ק פרק אלו מגלחין ובכתובות פ׳ המדיר דיספד יספדוניה[i] המספיד צדיק למטה גם במותו יספדוהו למעלה ויפרסמו מעשיו בג״ע כאשר כתבנו בטעם ההספד. דידל שירים נפש המת בכוונתו בעשותו צרכיו כנדרש גם נשמתו תזכה שתורמה תרומה לפני מלכו וכן הקובר ומשמר ומטמין המת מכחות הטומאה ומהרוחות רעות בכוונתו ובהקפות הנזכר יזכה גם הוא להטמן מאימת מלאכי מות ומלאכי דין בכל שבעה עידנין דיחלפון עלוהי וכתוב בארחות חיים של ר׳ אליעזר הגדול[ii] בני הוי זהיר לנחם אבלים ולדבר על לבם כי לא היו ראוים חביריו של איוב להענש אלא על שאמרו דברי קנטורין ולא דברי ניחומים. והאבל יצדיק עליו דרכי ה׳ כדאמרי׳ בסנהדרין וירושלמי דר׳ אבהו מת לו תינוק אחד ואמר לעומדים לפניו דאם רשות של מטן שיש בה שקר וכזב וכו׳ נאמר בה הקרובים באים ושואלים שלום הדיינים והעדים וכו׳ רשות שלמעלן שאין בה לא כזב ולא שקר ולא גניבות דעת ולא משוא פנים ולא מקח שוחד והוא חי וקיים לעולמי עולמים שאכ״ו שחייבים אנו לקבל עלינו מדת הדין.[iii] טוב ללכת אל

The living should take to heart matters of death,[1] as stated in Moed Katan, chapter “These May Shave,” and in Ketubot, chapter “The One Who Vows,” that “he who eulogizes the righteous on earth, they will eulogize him in heaven,” and they will publicize his deeds in the Garden of Eden, as we have written regarding the purpose of the eulogy. One who raises up the soul of the deceased with proper intention while performing his needs as required, his own soul will merit to be elevated as an offering before his King. Similarly, one who buries, guards, and conceals the dead from impure forces and evil spirits with proper intention and with the aforementioned circuits[2] will himself merit to be hidden from the dread of the angels of death and the angels of judgment during all seven periods that will pass over him.[3] And it is written in “Orchot Chaim” of Rabbi Eliezer the Great: “My son, be careful to comfort mourners and speak to their hearts, for Job’s companions deserved punishment only because they spoke provocative words instead of words of comfort.” The mourner should justify the ways of the Lord, as we say in the Sanhedrin and in the Jerusalem Talmud that when Rabbi Abahu lost a child, he said to those standing before him: “If in an earthly court, which contains falsehood and deceit, etc., it is said that relatives come and inquire about the welfare of the judges and witnesses, etc., then in the heavenly court, which contains no deceit, no falsehood, no deception, no favoritism, and no bribery, and where He lives and exists forever and ever, how much more are we obligated to accept the attribute of judgment upon ourselves.” It is good to go to a house of mourning to instruct your soul and to shed tears from your eyes, and whoever sheds tears over a worthy person

[1] This opening phrase references Ecclesiastes 7:2, emphasizing that contemplating mortality leads to spiritual wisdom.

[2] The ‘circuits’ (hakafot) refer to ritual circumambulations around the deceased’s bier that are described earlier in the text, believed to provide spiritual protection for the departed soul.

[3] This likely refers to the seven days of intensive mourning (shiva), but may also have kabbalistic significance relating to seven cosmic cycles or spiritual realms.

[i] The author cites Talmudic sources in Moed Katan and Ketubot regarding the importance of eulogies, establishing rabbinic authority for these practices.

[ii] The text cites a work attributed to Rabbi Eliezer the Great, likely referring to an ethical treatise that was well-regarded during the author’s time. This work is distinct from the Talmudic ‘Orchot Chaim’ that discusses ritual laws.

[iii] This reflects the Jewish concept of ‘tzidduk hadin’ (justification of divine judgment), where mourners are expected to accept God’s decrees as just, even when they involve personal tragedy.

בית אבל לתת מוסר לנפשך ולשפוך דמעות מעיניך וכל השופך דמעות על אדם כשר לא ישפוך על בניו בשהם קטנים וגם שאין הכל יודעים כוונת הדברים והפסוקים מכל מקום יעשה תקון אפי׳ כפי פשוטן של פסוקים. אם מחמת איזו סבה מונעת לא יוכל לילך ללוות המת[i] לא ימנע עצמו לפחות מלבקש עליו רחמים ולומר ב׳ או ג׳ מזמורים או יתן צדקה לכפרת נפשו בעת שקוברין אותו אך בשאפשר לו אל יפטר בכך אם הוא איש בפרט דבאתתא יש אומרים דבעשרה סגי לה.[ii] ובחסד אשר יעשה עם המתים כן יעשו בחייו ובמותו פמליא של מעלה ומטה כאשר נזכיר לפנינו בס״ד. הנותנים צדקה עבור המתים לחיים צריך להודיעם כדי שיתפללו על המתים שכן משה התפלל על עצמות יהודה ואף הנהנה מן החיים צריך להתפלל עליו דכתיב ושכב בשלמתו וברכך. וראינו כמה מעשים בגמ׳ וביר׳ שהעניים היו מתפללים על הנותנים להם צדקה בפרט בשבת פרק במה אשה חד סב פגע בתרין תלמידים מן דר׳ חנינא אמר לון זכון עמי וקצון פלג עגיל ויהבון ליה אכל וצלי עליהון אמר תתקיים לכון נפשיכון בהדין יומא היך דקיימתון לי נפשי בהדין יומא נפקין בשלם וחזרין בשלם ואישתזיבו מנשיכת נחש. והמתענים על אחרים בשכר שנותנים להם יכוונו שלהיות נשמות ישראל ממחצב א׳ כי הם will not shed tears over his children when they are young. And even though not everyone understands the intention behind the words and verses, nevertheless one should perform the rectification even according to the plain meaning of the verses. If, due to some preventive cause, one cannot go to accompany the deceased, one should at least not refrain from seeking mercy for him and reciting two or three psalms, or giving charity for the atonement of his soul at the time of his burial. However, when it is possible, one should not exempt oneself with just this if the deceased is a man, particularly since regarding a woman, some say that ten men are sufficient for her. And with the kindness that one does with the dead, so will the heavenly and earthly entourage do for him in his life and in his death, as we will mention before us with God's help. Those who give charity on behalf of the dead to the living need to inform them so that they will pray for the dead, just as Moses prayed for the bones of Judah, and even one who benefits from the living must pray for him, as it is written: "He shall sleep in your garment and bless you." We have seen several incidents in the Talmud and Jerusalem Talmud where the poor would pray for those who gave them charity, particularly in the Sabbath chapter "With What May a Woman," where an old man encountered two students of Rabbi Hanina and said to them, "Merit with me," and they cut off half a ring and gave it to him.[1] He ate and prayed for them, saying, "May your souls be sustained on this day just as you have sustained my soul on this day." They went out in peace and returned in peace, and were saved from a snake bite. Those who fast on behalf of others in exchange for payment should have in mind that, since the souls of Israel are from one source, as they are one nation, the spark in his soul that has a connection with the person for whom he is fasting will receive rectification through his fast. He will be like "one advocating angel out of a thou-

40R 45R 50R 55R 60R 65R 70R

[1] This refers to a Talmudic story where students cut a valuable ring in half to give charity to a poor person, who then blessed them, saving them from a snake bite. The story demonstrates the protective power of charitable giving.

[i] The author shows practical flexibility by offering alternatives for those who cannot physically attend a funeral, while still maintaining the importance of participating in some way in honoring the dead.

[ii] This reflects a gendered difference in traditional Jewish burial practices, where a woman's funeral procession might require fewer participants than a man's.

גוי אחד[i] הנצוץ שבנשמתו שיש לו
שיכות עם אותו פלוני שמתענה
עליו יקבל תקון בתעניתו ויהיה
כמו מלאך מליץ אחד מני אלף
ובכחו זה יבקש רחמים ויתפלל
על אותו החולה או האסור
או שבוי או מי שחלם חלום
והמענה אותו מכוין שברבים
יהיו אתו כדי שתקובל תפלתו
עמהם בכח הצדקה והשכר
שנותן להם לכופר נפש. על
כן אל ירישוהו מסברו וטוב
להוסיף מעין המאורע לאיש
ההוא בעניני שאומר בשומע
תפלה כי שם הותר לשאול כל
מיני צרכים ויאמר ביום תעניתו
איזה מזמורים הנאותים לפי
דעתו לפי צורך האיש ההוא
שמתענה עליו. ועל רשע שמת
טוב להתפלל עליו ולעשות
צדקה לכפרת נפשו אפי׳ אחר
י״ב חדש בכל חדש ובפרט
בסופו שאז גובר מדין במיעוט
הלבנה והנהגה על ידי הוי״ה
אחרונה מי״ב גבולי אלכסון
שהיא דין יותר מהשאר כנודע.
ואמרו שמלחמה גדולה בין
המיימינים והמשמאילים קודם
קדוש הלבנה[ii] ככתוב בתשובות
הגאונים וכבר הובא בספר קול
בוכים מהגל״אנטי ז״ל. ולכן
מפייסים הרצון בחטאת ר״ח וזה
טעם לתענית בחסרונה של לבנה
להיות כי בסוף החדש תתגבר
הדין מחמת המיעוט וכתיב והיה
מדי חדש וגו׳ ואומר ואשם לא
תכבה וכן מתפללים לפני שבת
וראש חדש ואחריו על אותם
שלא שמרו שבת וי״ט בהוגן.
והחי המענה ומסגף נפשו למעט פורענות המת זה ודאי מועיל sand," and with this power he will seek mercy and 75R pray for that sick person, or prisoner, or captive, or one who dreamed a dream. The one who afflicts himself intends that many will be with him so that his prayer will be accepted along with theirs through the power of the charity and the payment given to 80R him as a ransom for the soul. Therefore, they should not disappoint him of his hope, and it is good to add something relating to the situation of that person in the "Hear our prayer" blessing, for there it is permitted to ask for all kinds of needs. And he should recite 85R on his fast day some psalms that are appropriate in his opinion according to the needs of the person for whom he is fasting. And regarding a wicked person who has died, it is good to pray for him and to give charity for the atonement of his soul, even after 90R twelve months, in every month, especially at its end, for then judgment intensifies with the waning of the moon, and governance is through the last YHVH of the twelve diagonal boundaries,[1] which is more severe judgment than the others, as is known. And 95R they said that there is a great battle between those on the right and those on the left before the sanctification of the new moon, as written in the Responsa of the Geonim and already brought in the book "Kol Bochim" by Galanti, of blessed memory. Therefore, 100R we appease the Divine Will with the sin offering of the New Moon, and this is the reason for fasting during the waning of the moon, because at the end of the month judgment intensifies due to the dimin-ishment, as it is written: "And it shall be from new 105R moon to new moon," and it says, "And guilt shall not be extinguished." And so we pray before Sabbath and New Moon, and after it, for those who did not properly observe the Sabbath and festivals. And the living who afflicts and mortifies himself to lessen 110R

the punishment of the dead, this certainly benefits that deceased because of the relationship of these souls with each other, which is why all Israel are guarantors for one another.[2] This is the secret of the congregation's sin offering for a single individual, and 115R

[1] This refers to a kabbalistic concept related to the divine name as it manifests through the twelve boundaries of the zodiac. The final manifestation is associated with stronger judgment.

[2] This refers to the Talmudic principle of 'kol yisrael arevim zeh bazeh,' teaching that all Jews

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of the collective soul of Israel, where all Jewish souls are interconnected and stem from a single spiritual source.

[ii] This references a kabbalistic concept about cosmic spiritual battles between forces of mercy (right side) and judgment (left side) that intensify during the waning of the moon.

לאותו מת מפני יחס הנפשות
אלו עם אלו שע״כ כל ישראל
ערבין זה לזה וזהו סוד חטאת
הקהל עבור יחיד אחד וכ״ש אם
120 הוא קרובו ואצ״ל בנו. והנהנים
מן הצדקות שהניחו המתים תוך
שנה בפטירתו יאמרו והוא רחום
יכפר עון בזאת ההנאה[i] שאני
נתנה על אודות פלוני בן פלוני
125 וחטאתו תכופר ונפשו בטוב
תנוח על גורל הצדיקים בטוב
שמטיבין להם לעה״ב ורוחו
תרגיע בחלק הטובים בג״ע
ונשמתו תתעדן בטוב הצפון
130 ותדבק בצרור החיים את ה׳
אלהינו עם שאר כל הצדיקים
שבג״ע ולנקבה יאמר בלשון
נקבה אם הוא ובני ביתו נהנים
יאמר בהנאה שמהנה אותנו נפש
135 פלוני ואחר שהתפללו על מרגוע
הנפש ועל מנוחת הרוח ועל עדון
הנשמה יתפללו ג״כ על הנפש
השוכנת בקבר כי שם הבלא
דגרמי ועצבונא דבשרא.[ii] ועל
140 העצמות בפסוק ונחך ה׳ תמיד
וגו׳ תשכב בשלום ותישן בשלום
עד יבא מנחם משמיע שלום:[iii]

how much more so if he is his relative, and needless to say his son. Those who benefit from charitable funds left by the deceased within a year of his passing should say: "And He, being merciful, will forgive iniquity through this benefit that I enjoy on account 120R of so-and-so son of so-and-so, and may his sin be atoned for and his soul rest in goodness among the lot of the righteous, in the goodness bestowed upon them in the World to Come. May his spirit find repose among the portion of the good in the Garden 125R of Eden, and may his soul be delighted in the hidden goodness and cleave to the bond of life with the Lord our God, along with all the other righteous in the Garden of Eden." For a female, one should say this in the feminine form. If he and his household 130R members are benefiting, he should say: "Through the benefit with which the soul of so-and-so provides us." And after they have prayed for the repose of the soul, for the rest of the spirit, and for the delight of the neshamah, they should also pray for the soul 135R dwelling in the grave, for there is the vapor of the bones and the distress of the flesh.[1] And regarding the bones, with the verse: "And the Lord will guide you continually, etc." "May you lie in peace and sleep in peace until the comforter who announces peace 140R arrives."[2]

share spiritual responsibility for one another, which forms the basis for how actions of the living can benefit the dead.

[1] These kabbalistic terms refer to aspects of physical decomposition that affect the nefesh (lower soul) that remains connected to the grave. Prayers are meant to ease this distress.

[2] This is a messianic reference, indicating that the complete rest of the dead will only occur with the coming of the Messiah and the resurrection.

[i] The text provides a specific prayer formula to be recited when benefiting from charitable funds of the deceased, showing how everyday benefits can be transformed into spiritual merits for the departed.

[ii] These kabbalistic terms refer to spiritual aspects of bodily decomposition that cause suffering to the nefesh (lower soul) that remains connected to the grave for a period after death.

[iii] Cf. Moed Katan, chapter 'These May Shave' — This reference establishes rabbinic authority for the practice of eulogizing the dead, noting that one who properly eulogizes others will receive the same honor. | Cf. Ketubot, chapter 'The One Who Vows' — This reference reinforces the theological concept that actions in this world create corresponding reactions in the next world, particularly regarding honors shown to the deceased. | Cf. Orchot Chaim of Rabbi Eliezer the Great — This reference highlights the importance of proper consolation by citing the negative example of Job's companions, whose words of judgment rather than comfort brought divine punishment. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud and Sanhedrin — This reference provides a model for proper mourning—accepting divine judgment through a logical argument: if we accept the judgment of fallible human courts, how much more should we accept the judgment of the perfect divine court. | Cf. Responsa of the Geonim — This reference explains why prayers for the dead are particularly important during the end of the lunar month, when judgment intensifies due to cosmic spiritual battles between forces of mercy and judgment. | Cf. Kol Bochim by Galanti — This פרק כ״ב

Chapter 22

ומכאן מודעא רבה לעניים המקבלים ונהנים מקופות של צדקה החוזרים בבתי כנסיות וכן ממעשרות שמעשרים איזה בעלי בתים הן עשירים הן בינוניים שחובה עליהם להתפלל אל ה׳ עבורם ובעד קהלות הקדש ואצ״ל שיזהרו הרבה מאד שלא להוציא המעות ההם רק לצורך פרנסתם ופרנסת אנשי ביתם ולא יבעטו בהם בקנות מהם מותרות ואכילות גסות ובצחוקות כי אם בכה יעשו אוי לנפשם כי גמלו להם רעה. ואמרו בערובין כי הענקת עבד עברי שלא היה פחות משלשים סלע כדאמרינן בספרי ובמסכת קדושין היה לעצמו ואין ב״ח גובה ממנו. ור׳ יהודה אומר בפ׳ המקבל ופ׳ האומנין שאם בע״ה נתן מעות לעני ליקח בו חלוק לא יקח טלית שכל המעביר ע״ד בעל הבית נקרא גזלן וגם שאין הלכה כר״י יודו מיהא רבנן שאין לבעוט במעות צדקה כי סלקו שעבודא דב״ח מדאורייתא ממעות שקבץ עני בקבוצו כדפסק מהרר״י קארו״ו בסוף סי׳ רנ״ג מיורה דעה. וסמ״ג בסוף הלכות מגילה פסק כפי גירסא אחת לחומרא כר״ע דאמר מגבת פורים לפורים ואין העני רשאי לקנות מהם רצועה לסנדלו אא״כ התנה במעמד אנשי העיר ואפי׳ תימא דאמדינן דעת הנותנים שלא יקפידו מזה ודאי יקפידו לבל ירדו לטמיון במותרות והלעטות. ובזהר פ׳ בשלח בביאורו ד׳ מיני מזונות

From here comes an important notice to the poor who receive and benefit from charity funds collected in synagogues,[1] as well as from tithes given by householders, whether wealthy or of moderate means: it is their obligation to pray to God on behalf of these donors and for the holy communities. Needless to say, they must be extremely careful not to spend these funds except for their necessary livelihood and that of their household members. They should not misuse these funds by purchasing luxuries, excessive food, or frivolous entertainments, for if they do so, woe to their souls, for they have repaid good with evil.

It is stated in Eruvin that the grant given to a Hebrew servant, which was not less than thirty selas[2] as mentioned in Sifri and in Tractate Kiddushin, belonged to him alone and no creditor could collect from it. Rabbi Judah states in chapter HaMekabel and chapter HaUmanin that if a homeowner gives money to a poor person to buy a shirt, he should not purchase a cloak instead, for anyone who disregards the homeowner's intention is called a thief. And even though the law is not according to Rabbi Judah, the sages would nevertheless agree that one should not misuse charity funds, for the Torah exempts money collected by a poor person from creditor claims, as ruled by Rabbi Joseph Karo at the end of section 253 of Yoreh De'ah.[3] The Semag, at the end of the Laws of Megillah, rules strictly according to one version, following Rabbi Akiva who said that Purim collections must be used for Purim, and a poor person is not permitted to buy even a sandal strap with them unless he stipulated this in the presence of the townspeople. And even if you might say that we can assume the donors would not mind this, they would certainly object to their money being wasted on luxuries and excessive consumption.

In the Zohar, Parashat Beshalach, where it ex-

[1] The original refers to 'קופות של צדקה החוזרים בבתי כנסיות', literally 'charity boxes that circulate in synagogues', referring to the practice of collecting charity in communal settings.

[2] A sela was an ancient Jewish coin. The reference is to the minimum value that had to be given to a Hebrew servant at the completion of his service, as prescribed in Deuteronomy 15:13-14.

[3] Rabbi Joseph Karo (1488-1575) was the author of the Shulchan Aruch, the most widely accepted code of Jewish law. Yoreh De'ah is one of its four sections, dealing with ritual laws including charity.

later kabbalistic source is cited to reinforce the concept of intensified judgment during the waning moon, providing authoritative support for the practice of special prayers during this period.

אשר בהם נזון כל חלקי המציאות
ראשונה הוא מזון העולם הבא
מן השמים והארץ. הב׳ מזון
הבא ממדת צדק לעניים. הג׳
מזון החולים הבא מת״ת בדכתיב
ה׳ יסעדנו על ערש דוי שמשם
ארוכה ומרפא מכח כ״ע ומזונם
הוא חלב ודם במזון הקרבנות.
הד׳ מזון החכמים הבא מהחכמה
שמחיה בעליה. הנה שאמר
בפירוש כי מזון העניים בא
אליהם מצד הדין והעשיר הנותן
לו מזון ממתק אותו הדין שלכן
נקרא גמילות חסד. וא״כ אל
יבעטו במה שבא להם מצד מדת
הדין פן תקפוץ ח״ו ידיה יותר
ויותר עליהם מלבד כי עון זה
גורם שהעשירים יקפצו ידיהם
מהם וצועקים ואינם נענים.
וצריך הנותן צדקה שיתפלל
לה׳ ימציא אליו אנשים מהוגנים
ראוים לקבלתה[i] ומאותם בפרט
שאינם נהנים מהעה״ז אלא
בברכות הנהנים על כל דבר
תחלה וסוף כי זה עקר גדול
לכל אדם כדאמרי׳ האי מאן
דבעי למיהוי חסידא יקיים מלי
דברכות כי הברכה היא מזון
הנפש הנהנה ברוחניות הדבר
הנאכל המתעורר בסוד ההבל
העולה מהברכה כאש שבאבן
שאם אין מכים אותה לא יתהוה
ויתראה החוצה. כך הברכה
היא הבטישה באור עליון כי
יחל על הדבר הנאכל ויתעורר
הרוחניות הכמוס בו ע״י השר
המגדלו כי בכח הברכה גם
הוא משורר למעלה ועונה אמן
אחר ברכתו וע״כ מי שאינו
מברך נקרא גוזל שמלבד הפשט
שאותו הפרי אינו שלו עד אחר ברכה כדאמרי׳ בגמ׳ על קושיית

plains the four types of nourishment that sustain all aspects of existence: first is the nourishment of the World to Come, from heaven and earth;[1] second is the nourishment that comes from the attribute of Justice to the poor; third is the nourishment of the sick which comes from Tiferet, as it is written "The Lord will sustain him on his sickbed," from which comes healing and remedy through the power of Keter, and their food is milk and blood in the nourishment of offerings; fourth is the nourishment of the wise which comes from Wisdom that gives life to its possessors. Here it explicitly states that the nourishment of the poor comes to them from the aspect of judgment, and the wealthy person who gives food sweetens that judgment, which is why it is called an act of loving-kindness. Therefore, they should not misuse what comes to them from the attribute of judgment, lest its hand close even more tightly upon them, God forbid. Moreover, this sin causes the wealthy to withhold their giving, so the poor cry out but are not answered.

One who gives charity should pray to God to provide him with worthy individuals deserving of receiving it, particularly those who do not benefit from this world except with the blessings of enjoyment over everything, both before and after, for this is a great principle for every person. As they said: "He who wishes to be pious should fulfill the words concerning blessings," for the blessing is nourishment for the soul that benefits from the spirituality of the food that is awakened through the mystery of the breath rising from the blessing, like fire in a stone which, if not struck, will not be generated or appear outside. Similarly, the blessing is the striking of the supernal light that shines upon the food and awakens the hidden spirituality in it through the angelic minister who nurtures it, for through the power of the blessing, this minister also sings praises above and answers "Amen" after the blessing. Therefore, one who does not recite a blessing is called a thief, for besides the plain meaning that the fruit does not belong to him until after the blessing, as stated in [1] This reflects kabbalistic cosmology where different types of spiritual sustenance correspond to different divine attributes and cosmic levels. The four types of nourishment map to specific sefirot (divine emanations).

[i] The author expresses concern not just for proper giving of charity but also for its proper reception, suggesting that donors should pray to find worthy recipients.

השמים שמים וגו׳ וכן בירו׳ דברכות על פסוק אמרת לה׳ ה׳ אתה וכו׳. עוד נקרא גוזל השבח שהיה משבח השר והממונה ההוא בכח הברכה[i] לה׳ ועיין בר״מ פ׳ עקב כי הפליג לדבר בסוד ברכות הנהנין ובפרט כשעונין אחריהם וכן בכל הברכות אך אמר שסוד ברכות התפלה עולים על הכל ושם זכר עשרה דברים הצריכים לכל הרוצה לאכול על שלחנו מתכא דמלכא עילאה ובפרט ביום שבת שסוד אכילתו הוא ע״דן נ״הר ג״ן[ii] ואם חיוב הברכות לכל מי שיהנה כ״ש לעניים המקבלים מצד״ק וצדק״ה כי מאד צריכים שמור בהוצאת הצדקה כנזכר ובהנאתם ממנה ויתנו לה׳ תודה בברכות וברכה אחרונה אמרו שהוא כדי שיתברך המזון שבמעיו שברוחניית הברכה תהיה ברכה תוך המעיים ולא יתהוה מהמאכל מותרות המעפשים גופו וסרכות יען כי החצונים אין להם אחיזה במעיו בכח הברכה שבירך אחריו כי עבור ההשתלשלות מהפה למעים יתהוו בו מותרות ע״כ צריך לברך שנית אחריו להרחיקם ממנו ובזה ישבעו לחם ושארו מזון ויהיו טובים ובריאים ויראה מראיהם טוב כמו דניאל וחבריו. ואמרו ג״כ שאין ליתן לאכול למי שלא נטל ידיו והאוכל בלא נטילת ידים מלבד רעות רבות המשתרגות אליו עוד יאחזוהו חבלי עוני. ע״כ העניים בפרט

the Gemara regarding the question on the verse "The heavens are the Lord's heavens, etc.," and similarly in the Jerusalem Talmud on the verse "You said to the Lord, 'You are my Lord, etc.'"—he is also called a thief of the praise that the minister and appointed one would have offered to God through the power of the blessing. 85R

See the Ra'aya Mehemna in Parashat Ekev, which elaborates on the mystery of blessings of enjoyment, especially when responding to them, and likewise with all blessings. However, it states that the mystery of prayer blessings surpasses them all, and there it mentions ten things necessary for anyone wishing to eat at the table of the Supreme King, especially on the Sabbath, when the mystery of eating is Eden, River, Garden.[1] If blessings are obligatory for anyone who derives benefit, how much more so for the poor who receive from Tzedek and Tzedakah, for they must be very careful in how they spend charity, as mentioned, and in how they benefit from it. They should give thanks to God with blessings. 90R 95R 100R

Regarding the after-blessing, they said its purpose is to bless the food in one's intestines, so that through the spirituality of the blessing there will be blessing within the intestines, and waste products that spoil the body and cause adhesions will not form from the food. This is because the external forces have no hold in one's intestines[2] through the power of the blessing recited afterward. Due to the descent from the mouth to the intestines, waste is produced, therefore one must bless a second time afterward to distance these forces, and thereby they will be satisfied with bread and food will remain. They will be good and healthy, and their appearance will be good, like Daniel and his companions. 105R 110R 115R

They also said that one should not give food to someone who has not washed their hands, and one

[1] This is a reference to the kabbalistic understanding of Sabbath meals as recreating the primordial harmony of Eden, with specific mystical correspondences to divine flow and manifestation in the physical world.

[2] The 'external forces' (החצונים/chitzonim) refers to negative spiritual entities in kabbalistic thought that are kept at bay through proper blessings and ritual observance.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that each food has a spiritual 'minister' or angelic force that is activated through proper blessings, and failing to bless deprives this entity of its spiritual function.

[ii] This is a kabbalistic acronym representing the spiritual dimensions of Sabbath meals, where Eden (pleasure), River (flow of divine blessing), and Garden (manifestation) create a complete spiritual circuit.

יזהרו מזה כי אם כן יעשו יזכו
עצמם והנותנים עמם ויהיו
טובים לשמים ולבריות. וכן
הכהנים הנותנים להם פדיוני
הבכורים שהוא לפדותו מסטרא
דשמאלא מכח הנחש המתגבר
בבטן המבכרת[i] ולכן ממשיכין
עליו כח הימין מכהן איש החסד
והוא בכח רחמיו מקבל פדיונו
לפצות כח הדין מעליו כי צריך
להוציא המעות הם לפרנסתו
ואם יקנה בהם דברים של מצוה
כגון סעודת שבת ויו״ט ור״ח
וכדומה הרי מה טוב ואל יבעוט
בהם וכן כל מתנות כהונה כי
נתנו להם למשחה ולגדולה
כדרך שהגדולים אוכלים מאן
רבנן שכל סעודתן היא מצוה
ואוכלים לשובע נפשם כנזכר
ואמרו בפ״ב דבכורים על משנת
ונתנות סעודתן כהן שבונת
המשנה שאינו בקי בטומאה
וטהרה אבל הוא מחזיק בתורת
ה׳ כי בפ׳ הזרוע אומר שמי
שאינו מחזיק בתורת ה׳ אין לו
מנות. והעשיר יתן צדקה בסתר
ולא בגלוי כי אז נקרא זורע
לרוח ולא יקצור שכרה. ועוד
כי תפלה בלא כוונה ומצוה שלא
לשמה מעוררים קטגורא[ii] ח״ו
ודברים אלו נמוקם עמם ודבר
שפתים בזה אך למחסור:[iii]

who eats without washing their hands, besides the many evils that entangle them, will also be seized by the cords of poverty. Therefore, the poor in particular should be careful about this, for if they do so, they will merit themselves and the donors with them, and they will be good toward Heaven and toward people. 120R

Similarly, priests who give them redemption of firstborns, which is to redeem from the side of the left, from the power of the serpent that strengthens in the womb of the firstborn, therefore they draw upon him the power of the right from the priest, the man of kindness, and he, through his power of mercy, accepts his redemption to compensate for the power of judgment upon him. For one must spend that money for his livelihood, and if he purchases with it things associated with commandments, such as Sabbath meals, festival and new moon feasts, and the like, how good it is! And he should not misuse them, nor any priestly gifts, for they were given to them for anointing and greatness, in the manner that the great ones eat—who are the rabbis, whose every meal is a commandment, and they eat to satisfy their souls, as mentioned. 125R 130R 135R 140R

They said in the second chapter of Bikkurim regarding the Mishnah about giving the meal to a priest, that the Mishnah refers to one who is not expert in matters of purity and impurity but upholds the Torah of the Lord, for in the chapter HaZeroa it says that one who does not uphold the Torah of the Lord has no portions. 145R

The wealthy person should give charity secretly and not publicly, for then it is called “sowing to the 150R

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the firstborn is particularly influenced by forces of judgment (left side) and requires redemption to be protected from these forces, represented by the primordial serpent.

[ii] This reflects the mystical understanding that ritualistic actions without proper intention not only fail to create positive spiritual effects but can actually invoke negative judgment or accusation in the celestial realms.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Beshalach — The author uses this Zoharic passage to establish the mystical understanding that charity is not merely a humanitarian act but a cosmic process that ‘sweetens judgment,’ transforming divine severity into kindness. This creates the theological foundation for why misuse of charity funds is spiritually dangerous. | Cf. Ra’aya Mehemna, Parashat Ekev — This reference to a section of the Zohar reinforces the idea that proper blessings transform physical activities into spiritual ones, which is why the poor who receive charity must be particularly careful to recite blessings over their food. | Cf. Tractate Eruvin — This reference establishes a halakhic precedent for the idea that certain funds given to the disadvantaged have protected status, which is then applied analogically to charity funds. | Cf. Rabbi Joseph Karo, Yoreh De’ah 253 — This reference to a major halakhic authority strengthens the argument that charity funds have a special protected status in Jewish law, which carries responsibilities for how they should be used. | Cf. Semag (Sefer Mitzvot Gadol), Laws of Megillah — This reference demonstrates that there are strict limitations on how charity funds can be used, supporting the author’s main wind" and he will not reap its reward. Moreover, prayer without intention and a commandment not performed for its own sake arouse accusation, God forbid. These matters carry their own reasoning, and mere lip service in this regard only leads to want. 155R

פרק כ״ג

Chapter 23

מדברי ברזילי הגלעדי שאמר אמות בעירי[i] לראה כי יש הנאה למתים שבניהם ואוהביהם ילכו על קבריהם להשכיב אותם ולבקש לנשמתם טובה ומטיבים להם באותו עולם ותפלת הבן על אביו שלמדו תורה וכן תלמיד על רבו ותלמידי חכמים הלומדים זה עם זה ודאי תהיה יותר רצויה ותעשה להם יותר נייחא מתפלת אחרים ובפרט בשבעה ימים הראשונים בביתו או על קברו וראיה ממה שהובא בזהר פ׳ ויחי בחד מן תלתא מלין דבעא ר׳ יצחק מר׳ יהודה הוא דיזיל לקבריה כל שבעא יומין ותבעי בעותך עלי ומשם נראה ג״כ כי זכות גדול לאב אם בנו עוסק בתורה שנתוספו לו חיים בגין דיזכה ר׳ יוסי בריה באורייתא. וכן הוא מתחלה חילה פני ר׳ יהודה שילמד בנו תורה ואם האבות צוו לבנים לעשות דברים לאחר מותם כשיעשו הבנים הוא כאלו יעשוהו האבות כי ברא מזכי אבא.[ii] כיון שע״י האב זכה הבן. והמתים מתפללים

From the words of Barzillai the Gileadite who said, "I will die in my city," it is apparent that there is benefit to the deceased[1] when their children and loved ones visit their graves to comfort them and pray for the well-being of their souls, and this 5R brings them goodness in that world.[2] The prayer of a son for his father who taught him Torah, and likewise a student for his teacher, and Torah scholars who studied together, will certainly be more acceptable[3] and bring them more satisfaction 10R than the prayers of others—especially during the first seven days, whether at home or at the grave. Evidence of this comes from what is brought in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi, where one of the three things that Rabbi Yitzchak requested of Rabbi 15R Yehudah was that he should go to his grave for all seven days and offer prayers on his behalf. From there it is also apparent that there is great merit for a father if his son engages in Torah study, as additional life was granted to him "so that Rabbi 20R Yosi his son might merit [to excel] in Torah." Similarly, from the beginning he entreated Rabbi Yehudah to teach his son Torah. And if fathers instructed their sons to do certain things after their death, when the sons fulfill these instructions, it is 25R as though the fathers themselves did so, for "a son brings merit to his father," since it was through the

[1]The text expresses the mystical belief that the dead can experience pleasure or benefit (הנאה) from actions performed by the living, particularly when those actions are directed toward them through grave visitation and prayer.

[2]The phrase 'באותו עולם' (in that world) refers to the World to Come or afterlife, reflecting the Jewish concept of a distinct realm where souls reside after death.

[3]The term 'יותר רצויה' suggests that such prayers are more 'desirable' or 'acceptable' to God, implying a hierarchy of efficacy in prayers for the dead based on the closeness of relationship.

argument that recipients of charity bear significant responsibility for using the funds appropriately.

[i]This refers to 2 Samuel 19:38 where Barzillai the Gileadite declined King David's invitation to Jerusalem, preferring to die in his own city. The author uses this as a proof text to begin his discussion about connections between the living and the dead.

[ii]A Talmudic principle meaning 'a son brings merit to his father.' This concept appears in Sanhedrin 104a and elsewhere, expressing the idea that a child's righteous actions can elevate the spiritual status of deceased parents.

על הבנים בפרט שנאמר ותעל שכבת הטל פלפול שכיבת שוכני
30 [ii] [i] קבר.

father that the son acquired merit. And the dead pray for their children in particular, as it is said, "And the layer of dew arose"—this refers to the sharp discourse/dialectical reasoning[1] [that rises like dew from] those who dwell in the grave.[2] 30R

ההשכבה שנהגו באיזה מקומות
לאומרה[iii] בקבורת המת ובכל
ז׳ ימים בביתו אחר התפלה וכן
בכל עת שהולכים לבקר המתים
35 הנה הוא בתחלת הספר. מנהג
זכירת המתים בשבת אין ספק
שזכירתם ביום המנוחה מועיל
להם מאד מפני שהם נחים וע״י
הזכירה נשמתם מתחדשת שיש
40 תלייה לשם עם הנשמה ע״ד
שאמרו בילקוט אמר הקב״ה
למשה לך מנה את ישראל אמר
משה איני יכול לעמוד על
מניינם א״ל טול ראשי אותיות
45 של שבטים שכל שם מורה על
מהות ועצמות האדם ואמרו

The Hashkavah prayer[3] (memorial prayer for the soul's repose) that is customary in some places to recite at the burial of the deceased,[4] during all seven days of mourning in his house after prayer, and whenever one visits the graves of the dead, is found at the beginning of this book. Regarding the custom of remembering the dead on the Sabbath, there is no doubt that remembering them on the day of rest greatly benefits them because they are at rest, and through this remembrance their souls are renewed, as there is a connection between the name and the soul.[5] This is as they said in the Yalkut: "The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, 'Go count the Israelites.' Moses replied, 'I cannot determine their number.' He told him, 'Take the initial letters of the tribes,' for every name 35R 40R 45R

[1]The Hebrew term 'פלפול' (pilpul) refers to a sophisticated method of Talmudic analysis and dialectical reasoning. Here it's used in a mystical sense to suggest that the intellectual contributions of scholars continue to have spiritual effect even after death.

[2]The phrase 'שוכני קבר' (those who dwell in the grave) is a euphemism for the dead, but in this mystical context, it carries the implication that the deceased maintain a form of consciousness and activity even while in the grave.

[3]I've chosen to translate 'השכבה' as 'Hashkavah prayer' while including the transliteration in parentheses to preserve the Hebrew term. This prayer for the soul's repose is named from the Hebrew root meaning 'to lie down' or 'to rest.'

[4]The original text describes a ritual practice that varies by community, which is typical of Jewish customs that often differ by geographic region and tradition.

[5]The Hebrew phrase 'תלייה לשם עם הנשמה' literally means 'a hanging/suspension of the name with the soul,' but in this mystical context refers to an intrinsic connection or correlation between a person's name and their soul's essence.

[i]This is a creative interpretation of Exodus 16:14 about the layer of dew that covered the manna. The author transforms this verse into a mystical metaphor suggesting that the intellectual discourse (pilpul) of deceased Torah scholars rises like dew from their graves, indicating their continued spiritual activity and influence.

[ii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi — The Zohar passage is cited as evidence that the dead benefit from graveside prayers, especially when offered by disciples or those with close spiritual connections to the deceased. This serves as an authoritative mystical source supporting the author's claims about the relationship between the living and the dead. | Cf. 2 Samuel 19:38 — The author uses Barzillai's desire to die in his hometown as a proof text suggesting that the dead maintain connections to places and people, which is why visits to graves by family members are especially beneficial. | Cf. Talmudic concept of 'ברא מזכי אבא' (a son brings merit to his father) — The author employs this rabbinic concept to emphasize the spiritual connection between generations, suggesting that children's Torah study and fulfillment of parental wishes creates merit for departed parents.

[iii]The 'Hashkavah' is a prayer for the repose of the deceased soul, often beginning with the words 'May he/she rest in peace.' The term comes from the Hebrew root meaning 'to lie down' or 'to rest.'

בירו׳ דסנהדרין פרק חלק
על פסוק וירדו הם וכל אשר
להם חיים שאולה רבי ברכיה
בשם רבי חלבו אף שמותיהם
פרחו מתוך טימסותיהם ופירושו
קונטריסים שביד אחרים שהיו
שמותיהם כתובים בהם. והנה
בהזכרת שמו במנוחה מתחדשת
שם מנוחתו ויהיה עתה במנוחה
ודיוקן נשמתו מאירה. ומצאתי
כי המלאך שאל ליעקב מה שמו
יען כי עקר החיים והמות תלוי
בשם האיש וגם במזל[i] ומטעם זה
הנהיגו קצת מקובלי אמת שלא
לקרות שם בניהם כשמם והרבה
סודות דברו החכמים בשמו של
אדם. וכן רבנן אמרו שמא גרים
ור״מ הוה בדיק בשמא.[ii] ואל
תקרי שמות אלא שמות וע״כ
לא מסקינן בשמייהו של רשעים
ושנוי השם ושנוי מקום והתשובה
משנים צבא השמים ומערכת
הכוכבים[iii] כמו שלדברי קצת
אחר חטא הקדום נתחדש כוכב
אחד ברקיע הביאו בעל העקדה
פ׳ בראשית שער ט׳. ומצאתי
בציוני בפ׳ בראשית גודל כח
התעוררות תחתון[iv] הן לטוב
הן למוטב כי אמר שמאנוש
ואילך בא רפיון וחולשה בעולם indicates the essence and substance of a person." And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin, 50R chapter Chelek, regarding the verse "And they went down alive into Sheol": Rabbi Berechiah said in the name of Rabbi Chelbo, "Even their names flew out of their records,"[1] meaning the notebooks in others' possession in which their names were written. Thus, 55R when one's name is mentioned on the day of rest, his resting place is renewed, and he will now be at rest, and the image of his soul is illuminated.

I found that the angel asked Jacob what his name was because the essence of life and death depends on 60R a person's name and also on his mazal (astrological destiny). For this reason, some authentic Kabbalists instituted the practice of not naming their children after themselves, and the Sages discussed many mysteries concerning a person's name. Thus, the Rabbis 65R said, "The name is causative," and Rabbi Meir would examine names. And do not read "shamot" (places) but "shemot" (names).[2] Therefore, we do not mention the names of the wicked, and changing one's name, changing one's place, and repentance can al- 70R ter the celestial array[3] and the constellation of stars. According to some opinions, after the primordial sin, a new star appeared in the firmament, as mentioned by the author of the Akedah in Parashat Bereshit, chapter 9. 75R

I found in the Tziyoni, in Parashat Bereshit, the great power of awakening from below, whether for good or for evil. He stated that from the time of [1] This is a reference to the mystical concept that when Korah and his followers were punished, their names physically disappeared from written records—a supernatural manifestation of their spiritual change in status.

[2] This is a classic rabbinic interpretive technique called 'al tikrei' (don't read it as X, but as Y), which suggests alternative vocalizations of biblical words to derive additional meanings. Here it's used to connect the concept of 'names' with their spiritual significance.

[3] This refers to a Talmudic teaching (Rosh Hashanah 16b) that four things can change a person's predetermined fate: charity, prayer, change of name, and change of place. The text provides a mystical explanation for how these practices work.

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that a person's name contains their spiritual essence and is connected to their destiny. The Hebrew word 'mazal' refers to astrological influence or destiny, but in mystical thought also connects to the person's soul root and divine source.

[ii] The Talmudic phrase 'shema garim' means 'the name is causative' or 'the name determines,' reflecting the belief that a person's name influences their character and destiny. R"M refers to Rabbi Meir, who was known to analyze people's names for insight into their character.

[iii] This refers to a Talmudic teaching that four things can alter a person's predetermined fate: charity, prayer, change of name, and change of place. The mystical explanation given here is that these actions actually alter the celestial configurations affecting the person.

[iv] The 'Tziyoni' refers to the kabbalistic commentary Sefer HaTziyoni by Rabbi Menachem Tziyoni (14th century). 'Awakening from below' (התעוררות תחתון) is a fundamental kabbalistic concept describing how human actions in the physical world can trigger responses in the spiritual realms.

ואמר בשם איש סודו כי היו מהלכים מסוף העולם ועד סופו ומביאים כסף וזהב ומרגליות ועשו מהם עבודה נכריה בארבע רוחות כשיעור אלף פרסה והיו מורידים חמה ולבנה וכוכבים ומזלות לשמש להם כדרך שמשמשים לפני הקדוש ברוך הוא כי שמחזאי ועזאל למדום כל מיני כשופים[i] ואז קטרגו המלאכים ואמרו מהאנוש כי תזכרנו וע״כ אמרו אנוש שהיה ראש לע״ג. ואז עלתה השכינה ובזה לא יפלא ממנו יחס שם האדם עם המזל. וכ׳ בעל נוה שלום פ״ד מאמר ה׳ כי השם מורה על המהות. וא״כ חלוף השם מורה על חלוף המהות. ופירש בעל יפה מראה בר״ה פרק ראוהו ב״ד על מכאן היה ר״מ דורש שמות כי מה הוא שהמניח השם יסכים בו למציאות האדם. כדאמרי׳ בפ״ק דברכות מנלן דשמא גרים וכמו דחזינן נחש נחשת שעשה משה שהשם הסכים עם עקר מציאותו. גם שם של אדם יורה על עקר מציאותו שהוא הצדיק והרשע. ואם כינו אותו בשם אבותיו כוונתם שרוחו ונשמתו אליו יאסוף ולא יכרת שם המת מעל נחלתו ולא ימחה מישראל שמו.[ii]

Enosh onward,[1] weakness and frailty came into the world. He said in the name of his confidant that people would travel from one end of the world to the other, bringing silver, gold, and precious stones, and they made idols in the four directions, extending about a thousand parasangs. They would bring down the sun, moon, stars, and constellations to serve them in the manner they serve before the Holy One, blessed be He, for Shemchazai and Azael taught them all kinds of sorcery. Then the angels complained, saying, "What is man that You should remember him?" Therefore, they said that Enosh was the first to practice idolatry. The Divine Presence then ascended,[2] and thus the relationship between a person's name and his mazal should not surprise us.

The author of Neveh Shalom wrote in chapter 4, discourse 5, that the name indicates the essence. Consequently, a change of name indicates a change of essence. The author of Yefeh Mareh explained in Rosh Hashanah, chapter "The Court Saw Him," that this is why Rabbi Meir would interpret names, for how is it that the one who assigns the name would match it to the person's reality? As we say in the first chapter of Berakhot, "How do we know that the name is causative?" And as we see with the copper serpent that Moses made, the name agreed with its essential reality. A person's name also indicates his essential reality, whether he is righteous or wicked. And if they named him after his ancestors, their intention was that his spirit and soul would be gathered to him, so that the name of the dead would not be cut off from his inheritance, nor would his name be [1] According to Genesis 4:26, it was in the time of Enosh (Adam's grandson) that 'people began to call upon the name of the LORD,' which rabbinic tradition sometimes interprets negatively as the beginning of idolatry, as referenced in this passage.

[2] This refers to the mystical concept that due to human sins, the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) withdrew or 'ascended' from earth, creating greater distance between humanity and God.

[i] Shemhazai and Azael are fallen angels mentioned in Jewish mystical literature, particularly in the Book of Enoch. According to tradition, they taught humans forbidden knowledge including magic and astrology, which led to increased wickedness in the world.

[ii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Introduction — The author is referencing that the Hashkavah prayer text appears at the beginning of Ma'avar Yabok, suggesting that this memorial prayer is so important that it was placed prominently at the start of the work. | Cf. Yalkut Shimoni — The author cites the Yalkut Shimoni to establish a mystical connection between names and souls, using Moses' census as evidence that names represent the essence of people's souls and can be used to count or identify them on a spiritual level. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Sanhedrin — This reference to the Jerusalem Talmud regarding Korah's rebellion shows that names have such spiritual potency that they can physically 'fly out' of written records when a person's spiritual status changes dramatically, further establishing the connection between names and souls. | Cf. Sefer HaAkedah (by Rabbi Isaac Arama) — The author cites this philosophical text to support the idea that cosmic erased from Israel.

והגורל מה׳ כל משפטו.[i] ובשמזכיר שמו במנוחה אחר מיתתו צריך
כוונה מפני שדבור התחתונים
פועל בעליונים מאד בסוד הבל
פה העולה[ii] כנזכר ובפרט אם
יזכר המת מבנו או מקרובו
ובבית הכנסת שהיה רגיל
להתפלל בו וכ״ש אם הוא בנה
אותה או הקדיש בה הקדשות
שהכל מסייע להשכין נשמתו
בענג שמתגלה באותו היום
קדוש על הנשמות קדושות וכמו
שהקדוש ב״ה מקדש נשמות
הצדיקים החיים כ״ש שנשמות
המתים ג״כ יקבלו מנוחה וענג
ובפרט על ידי התעוררות
המזכירים אותם: וברגלים מנהג
לעשות זכרון נשמות ונדבות
ביום טוב שני כי היום טוב שני
אנו עושים אותו לכבוד שכינה
שעמנו חוצה לארץ כדי שתתעכב
בעבורנו ההארה הנוספת ביום
טוב שני. כי להיותנו חוץ
מארצנו אנחנו צריכים הארה
יתירה וכמו שהאבות קיימו
התורה קודם שנתנה להשכין
שכינה עמם כן נהגנו אנחנו ביום

And the lot comes from the LORD—all of His judgment. When one mentions the name of the deceased in rest after death, proper intention is required[1] because the speech of those below powerfully affects the upper realms, through the mystery of the rising breath of the mouth as mentioned. This is especially true if the deceased is remembered by his son or relative, and in the synagogue where he regularly prayed—all the more so if he built it or dedicated sacred items to it. All these factors help to settle his soul in the delight that is revealed on that holy day upon the holy souls. Just as the Holy One, blessed be He, sanctifies the souls of the righteous who are alive, how much more so will the souls of the dead also receive rest and delight, particularly through the awakening caused by those who remember them.

On festivals, it is customary to perform memorial services for souls and make donations on the second festival day,[2] for we observe this second festival day in honor of the Divine Presence that accompanies us outside the Land of Israel, so that the additional illumination of the second festival day may linger for our sake. Being outside our land, we require additional divine illumination. Just as the Patriarchs observed the Torah before it was given in order to cause the Divine Presence to dwell with them, so too we observe the second festival day to cause the Divine Presence

[1] The Hebrew 'kavvanah' (intention) has specific technical meaning in Jewish mysticism, referring to focused mental concentration and specific mystical meditations that accompany ritual actions.
[2] This refers to the Yizkor (memorial) service performed on festivals in Ashkenazi communities and the accompanying custom of pledging charity in memory of the deceased.

changes (like a new star appearing) can result from human spiritual actions, which parallels his point about names and their power to influence mazal (astrological destiny). | Cf. Sefer HaTziyoni (by Rabbi Menachem Tziyoni) — This kabbalistic source is used to demonstrate the concept of 'awakening from below' (human actions affecting spiritual realms), connecting to the main theme that remembering the dead on Sabbath causes spiritual renewal for their souls. | Cf. Neveh Shalom (by Rabbi Abraham Shalom) — This philosophical work is cited to support the central mystical concept that names reflect essence, which is key to understanding why remembering the names of the deceased on Sabbath has actual spiritual effects on their souls. | Cf. Yefeh Mareh (by Rabbi Samuel Jaffe) — This commentary is cited to explain Rabbi Meir's practice of examining names, reinforcing the idea that names have causative power and can reflect or influence a person's spiritual reality.

[i] This opening phrase 'And the lot comes from the LORD—all of His judgment' is from Proverbs 16:33, establishing the theological premise that divine providence determines one's destiny, including in death.

[ii] This statement about 'the speech of those below powerfully affects the upper realms' reflects a fundamental kabbalistic principle regarding the cosmic impact of human speech, especially prayer and the recitation of divine names. The 'mystery of the rising breath' refers to the kabbalistic concept that the vapor or breath of speech ascends to higher worlds and creates effects there.

טוב שני להשכין שכינה עמנו
וזהו דשלחו מתם הזהרו במנהג
אבותיכם והנדבות והזכרת
נשמות זוכרים עמהם גם נפש
אברהם יצחק ויעקב שהרחיבו
גבול השכינה וכן נעשה אנחנו
ביום טוב שני והזכרת הנשמות
מוסיף אור למעלה[i] ולכן מנהג
הרוב להתנדב שמך לכפרת
הנפשות כי הנרות בכנסיות הם
מוסיפים ראיה והארה בנרות
שלמעלה דבוצינין מתדלקן
ונהורין נהרין[ii] וזהו העלאת
הנרות שאמור בהדלקת המנורה
במשכן ובמקדש כי היה מטיב
בבקר ובערב נרות עליונות
המכוונות נגד המנורה המאירה
נגדה ועוד שבנר על ידי הכלי
והפתילה והשמן והמים נעשה
היחוד מד׳ אותיות שבשם
ומאירים בכח החכמה שממנה
מוצא השמן והשלהבת למעלה
מהם רמז לקוצו של יו״ד[iii] על כן
הרוב מתנדבים שמן אף גם צדקה
אחרת זכות יחשב להם. וביה״כ
גם כן יש כפרה לחיים וגם למתים
כדאמרי׳ כפר לעמך ישראל אלו
החיים אשר פדית אלו המתים כי
בסוד לפני ה׳ תטהרו נכללים גם
בן נפשות המתים כי צנור הנעלם
מהכתר אל הבינה נפתח ביום

to dwell with us. This is the meaning of what they sent from there: "Be careful with the custom of your ancestors." When making donations and remembering souls, we also recall the souls of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who expanded the domain of the Divine Presence,[1] and we do likewise on the second festival day.

The remembrance of souls adds light above, and therefore most people have the custom of donating oil for the atonement of souls, for the lamps in synagogues increase vision and illumination in the lamps above, as "lamps are kindled and lights shine forth." This is the "raising of the lamps" mentioned regarding the kindling of the Menorah in the Tabernacle and Temple, for one would prepare the upper lamps in the morning and evening, which correspond to the Menorah that shines opposite them. Furthermore, through the lamp vessel, the wick, the oil, and the water, a unification is made of the four letters of the Divine Name,[2] illuminating through the power of Wisdom from which the oil derives, while the flame above them alludes to the tip of the Yod. Therefore, most people donate oil, though other forms of charity are also considered meritorious.

On Yom Kippur, there is also atonement for both the living and the dead, as it is said: "Atone for Your people Israel"—these are the living; "whom You have redeemed"—these are the dead. For in the mystery of "before the LORD you shall be purified," the souls of the dead are also included, because the hidden channel from Keter to Binah[3] opens on that awesome

[1] This refers to the kabbalistic concept that the Patriarchs, through their righteousness and spiritual practices, created greater 'space' for divine manifestation in the world. The author suggests that commemorating the dead and giving charity similarly expands divine presence.

[2] This refers to the Tetragrammaton (YHVH), the four-letter divine name that in Kabbalah represents different aspects of divinity. The author is describing how the physical components of a lamp symbolically unify these divine aspects.

[3] In Kabbalah, Keter (Crown) is the highest divine emanation representing God's infinite will, while Binah (Understanding) represents divine comprehension and mercy. The 'hidden channel' between them allows the flow of divine compassion and forgiveness.

[i] The phrase 'adds light above' reflects the kabbalistic understanding that memorializing the dead creates actual metaphysical effects in higher spiritual realms, literally increasing divine illumination.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase from the Zohar means 'lamps are kindled and lights shine forth,' indicating how earthly rituals of lighting memorial lamps cause corresponding illumination in the celestial realms. The author is establishing a metaphysical correspondence between physical candles and spiritual light.

[iii] The 'tip of the Yod' refers to the smallest part of the first letter of the Tetragrammaton, which in Kabbalah represents Keter (Crown), the highest and most transcendent divine emanation. The author is suggesting that the flame of a memorial lamp reaches to the highest levels of divinity.

האדיר[i] ומתבשם הכל. ולכן נהגו להדליק נר כפרה לאביו ולאמו ביום הכפורים וכן לכל מתים ואין לכבות אותם במוצאי יום הכפורים: והצדקה תועיל למתים אם היה מנהג לעשות אותה בחייהם ואם ישלשנה מחיים ודאי כי יותר זכות תחשב לו שעל זה נאמר מצוה לקיים דברי המת:[iii ii] day, and everything becomes fragrant. Therefore, it is customary to light memorial candles for one's father and mother on Yom Kippur, as well as for all the deceased, and one should not extinguish them at the conclusion of Yom Kippur. 170R

Charity benefits the dead if it was their custom to give charity during their lifetime. And if one designates charity while still alive,[1] it certainly counts as greater merit, as it is said regarding this: "It is a mitzvah to fulfill the words of the deceased." 175R

פרק כ״ד

Chapter 24

מצינו כי המתים מתפללים על החיים שכן כלב נשתטח על קברי אבות[iv] וממעשה שאירע לרבי אבא הובא בפ׳ שמות דף י״ו ע״ב[v] נראה זה ברור ששאל למת א׳ שהיה לחמא בר ליואי וא״ל ואתון ידעתון בצערא דחיי והשיב לו שר הקבר אי לאו בעותא דילן על חיי לא

We find that the dead pray for the living, as Caleb prostrated himself on the graves of the patriarchs. And from an incident that happened to Rabbi Abba, recorded in Parashat Shemot page 16b, this appears quite clear: he asked a deceased person who was Lachma bar Livai, saying to him, "Do you know about the suffering of the living?" The guardian of the grave replied to him, "If not for our prayers on behalf of the living,[2] they would not 5R

[1]The Hebrew term 'yeshalshena' (translated as 'designates') literally means 'triples it' or 'establishes it in three ways,' possibly referring to making a formal pledge, setting aside the funds, and ensuring their proper distribution.

[2]The original Aramaic phrase 'בעותא דילן' has connotations of both prayer and petition/request, showing the active intercession of the dead on behalf of the living.

[i]This refers to the kabbalistic concept that on Yom Kippur ('the awesome day'), a special channel opens between the sefirot of Keter (Crown) and Binah (Understanding), allowing for extraordinary divine mercy and forgiveness to flow. In this context, it explains why Yom Kippur has special power to benefit the souls of the deceased.

[ii]This is a rabbinic principle (Gittin 14b) that it is a religious obligation to fulfill the wishes of the deceased. Here it's used to emphasize the special merit of charity designated before death.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, section on Tzedakah — The author connects this passage to earlier discussions about the efficacy of charity in providing atonement and spiritual elevation for the deceased. | Cf. Zohar on the connection between earthly actions and upper realms — The reference to 'the speech of those below powerfully affects the upper realms' draws on fundamental Zoharic teachings about the cosmic impact of human actions, particularly in the context of prayer and remembrance of the dead. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Sukkah 55a — The passage refers to the rabbinic statement 'Be careful with the custom of your ancestors' which relates to observing the second festival day in the diaspora, showing how the author grounds mystical interpretations in traditional halakhic contexts. | Cf. Exodus 30:7-8 — The author draws a parallel between lighting memorial candles and the Temple service of kindling the Menorah, suggesting that memorial observances function as a form of Temple worship in post-Temple Judaism. | Cf. Yoma 87b — The passage interprets the verse 'Atone for Your people Israel... whom You have redeemed' to include both the living and the dead, suggesting that Yom Kippur has atoning power for souls in both realms.

[iv]This refers to a midrashic tradition about Caleb visiting the Cave of Machpelah in Hebron (the burial place of the patriarchs) to pray for divine assistance before speaking against the other spies. The biblical text (Numbers 13:22) only mentions that the spies went up to Hebron, but the midrash elaborates that Caleb separated from the others to pray at the graves.

[v]This reference is to the Zohar, the central text of Jewish mysticism. In this passage, Rabbi Abba encounters a deceased person named Lachma bar Livai through the cemetery guardian and learns that the dead intercede for the living.

יתקיימון פלגות יומא וכבר נודע התעוררות המתים להתפלל בעד החיים בעת צרתם באמצעות ס״ת כשר המביאין אותו לבית הקברות על ידי בעלי תורה כאשר הובא בזהר פ׳ ויחי דף רכ״ה ובפ׳ אחרי מות דף ע״א אך צריך תשובה גדולה והכנות רבות וספר תורה כשר[i] יעויין שם וכן בליל הושענא רבה שבו חתימת חיי האדם כי בשמיני הוא חתימת הפרנסה ובלילה ההוא הנשמות יוצאות ומתפללות על החיים[ii] ושוטטות לשמוע הגזר דין ופעמים מודיעים לחיים בחלומות ובספר החסידים בסי׳ תנ״ב הביא מעשים על זה:[iii] survive half a day."[1] It is already known that the dead are aroused to pray for the living in times of their distress through the medium of a kosher Torah scroll brought to the cemetery[2] by Torah scholars, as recorded in the Zohar, Parashat Vayechi page 225 and Parashat Acharei Mot page 71. However, this requires great repentance, extensive preparations, and a kosher Torah scroll—see there for details. Similarly, on the night of Hoshana Rabbah, when the decree regarding human life is sealed[3] (for on Shemini Atzeret the decree regarding livelihood is sealed), on that night souls depart and pray for the living and wander about to hear the divine decree. Sometimes they inform the living through dreams, and in Sefer Hasidim, section 452, incidents of this are recorded.

מצאתי כתוב כי הנפש חונה בעצמות של מת ובזה נבין מה שאמרו חכמינו ז״ל באיזה עונות ותהי עונותם על עצמותם[iv] וכן

I have found it written that the soul dwells in the bones of the deceased,[4] and through this we can understand what our Sages of blessed memory said regarding certain sins: "And their iniquities shall be

[1] This striking claim emphasizes the essential nature of the dead's intercession for human survival, suggesting that the ongoing existence of humanity depends on this cosmic relationship between the living and the dead.

[2] This practice represents a ritual technology for activating communication between worlds. The Torah scroll serves as a channel or conduit that connects the living and the dead.

[3] The text presents a cosmic calendar where different types of divine judgments are finalized on specific dates. This theological framework structures Jewish ritual life around these cosmic moments when divine decrees can still be influenced.

[4] This is the central mystical claim of the passage—that the nefesh (lowest level of the soul) continues to reside specifically in the bones after death, rather than departing completely.

[i] The author emphasizes that bringing a Torah scroll to a cemetery to activate the intercession of the dead requires specific spiritual preparations. This both encourages the practice and sets boundaries around it to prevent misuse.

[ii] The night of Hoshana Rabbah (the seventh day of Sukkot) is traditionally considered a time when the decree for the coming year is finalized. The text elaborates on this with the mystical concept that souls of the departed actively participate in this cosmic process by interceding for the living.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Shemot 16b — This Zohar passage provides the central evidence for the theological claim that the dead intercede on behalf of the living, suggesting an ongoing relationship between the worlds. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayechi 225 — This Zohar passage details the ritual practice of bringing Torah scrolls to graves to arouse the dead to intercede in times of community crisis. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Acharei Mot 71 — This passage complements the Vayechi reference, providing additional details about the proper protocols for cemetery rituals involving Torah scrolls. | Cf. Sefer Hasidim 452 — This medieval ethical work provides case studies supporting the theological claim that souls of the departed can communicate with the living, particularly through dreams. | Cf. The story of Caleb prostrating himself on the graves of the patriarchs — This reference to Caleb (likely based on a midrashic elaboration of Numbers 13:22) serves as a biblical precedent for the practice of seeking intercession from the deceased.

[iv] This appears to be a paraphrase of Ezekiel 32:27, "וְתִהְיֶ֥ינָה עֲוֹנֹתָ֖ם עַל־עַצְמוֹתָ֑ם" ("and their iniquities shall be upon their bones"), which the author interprets literally to mean that sins affect the bones because the soul resides there.

מה שאמרו עבירה קשורה
בו ככלב[i] ירצו כי נטרדים
עצמותיו על דרך גלגול עצמות
יהודה[ii] שהנפש היא הנכרתת
ממקורה. ובזה יובן ג״כ צער
גלגול מחילות[iii] שהיא לנפש
לבד שבהיות המתים בארץ
ישראל אז יושפע עליהם הרוח
שנאמר והבאתי אתכם אל אדמת
ישראל ונתתי רוחי בכם וחייתם
ויש קצת סיוע כי הנפש חונה
בעצמות ממה שספרו כי איש
אחד בא לפני שלמה לירש
ממון פלוני וגם אחר עמו שהיה
אומר שהוא בנו וגזר שלמה
שיקיזו שניהם דם ושיטבלו עצם
מעצמות המת בדם כל אחד מהם
ומאותו שנצבע העצם בדמו אמר
כי ודאי הוא בנו על דרך כי
הדם הוא הנפש. וכתוב בזהר
פ׳ תרומה דף קמ״א כי הנפש
נמצאת תוך הקבר כשהגוף בלוי
בעפר ואז מתגלגלת בעולם
ונמצאת בין החיים ויודעת צער
שלהם ומתפללת עליהם. ואמר
במקום אחר שכל זמן שהעצמות
הם באותו קבר הנפש נמצאת שם
והיא מתגלמת בדיוקן שהיא תוך
הגוף וכל עצמותיו בההוא דיוקן
עולים ומשבחים ומודים להקב״ה
הה״ד כל עצמותי תאמרנה ה׳
מי כמוך אומרות אינו אומר upon their bones." Similarly, what they said that 30R "sin is bound to him like a dog" means that his bones are troubled, as in the rolling of Judah's bones, for it is the soul that is cut off from its source. This also explains the suffering of the "rolling of caves" which applies only to the soul, for when the dead 35R are in the Land of Israel,[1] then the spirit will flow upon them, as it is said: "And I will bring you to the land of Israel, and I will put My spirit in you, and you shall live." There is some support for the idea that the soul dwells in the bones from a story they 40R tell of a man who came before Solomon to inherit someone's property, and another was with him who claimed to be the son of the deceased. Solomon decreed that they should both have blood drawn and that a bone from the deceased should be dipped in 45R the blood of each of them. From the one whose blood stained the bon[2]e, Solomon declared that he was certainly the son, based on the principle that "the blood is the soul." It is written in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 141, that the soul remains 50R within the grave when the body has decomposed to dust, and then it wanders through the world and is found among the living, knowing their suffering and praying for them. And it says elsewhere that as long as the bones remain in that grave, the soul is present 55R there, and it takes form in the image that was within the body,[3] and all his bones in that image rise up and praise and thank the Holy One, blessed be He.

This is what is meant by "All my bones shall say:
LORD, who is like You"—it does not say "they say" 60R but rather "they shall say." Therefore, it was the

[1] The text establishes a hierarchical geography of death, where burial in the Land of Israel confers spiritual advantages, including the reception of ruach (spirit) which those buried elsewhere do not receive without undergoing suffering.

[2] This story is a mystical expansion of Solomon's famous judgment involving the two mothers, but reconfigured to focus on the relationship between blood, bones, and soul essence. The blood staining the bone indicates a soul connection between father and son.

[3] The text describes a process where the soul creates a kind of spiritual body or form (diyokan) within the physical body during life, and this same form continues to exist in relation to the bones after death.

[i] This is a reference to a Talmudic statement (Sotah 3b) that sin clings to a person like a dog. The author reinterprets this metaphor to suggest that sin affects the soul's connection to the bones.

[ii] This refers to a Talmudic tradition (Makkot 11b) that Judah's bones rolled in his coffin due to his accepting responsibility for Benjamin. This tradition is repurposed here to illustrate how the soul's connection to the bones creates spiritual consequences.

[iii] The concept of 'rolling through caves' (gilgul mechilot) refers to a form of posthumous suffering described in rabbinic literature where the bodies of those buried outside the Land of Israel must roll through underground passages to reach Israel for the resurrection. The author uniquely specifies that this suffering affects only the nefesh (vital soul).

אלא תאמרנה.[i] ולכן מנהג החכמים לנענע עצמם[ii] בחיים בעת שאומרים שירות ובעסקם בתורה כי הוא שומרת האדם בקבר כדכתיב בשכבך תשמור עליך בקבר ואלמלא נתן רשות לעין לראות היה רואה בלילה שיוצא השבת ובלילי ראש חודש ומועדים כדיוקנאות על הקברות המודים ומשבחים להקב״ה. ובליל ר״ה כל הנפשות משוטטות ומתפללות על דין החיים וזהו סמך למנהג האשכנזים שהולכים ערב ר״ה להתפלל על הקברות[iii]

custom of the sages to sway their bodies during their lifetime when reciting songs and when engaged in Torah study, for this protects a person in the grave, as it is written: "When you lie down, it shall watch over you" [meaning] in the grave. And if permission were granted for the eye to see, one would see on the night following the Sabbath, and on the nights of the New Moon and festivals, forms above the graves giving thanks and praise to the Holy One, blessed be He. And on the night of Rosh Hashanah, all souls wander about and pray concerning the judgment of the living, and this is the basis for the custom of Ashkenazim who go to the cemetery on the eve of Rosh Hashanah[1] to pray at the graves.

ומנהג מיוסד על פי ותיקין הוא כדי לעוררם בכח התשובה שעושים שם להתפלל בלילה[iv] ונפש הזאת רואה הצל שנוטל ממונה א׳ עם אלפי אלפים ורבבות עמו בליל הושענא רבה דנפקין פתקין

And this is a custom established by the pious elders in order to awaken them [the deceased] through the power of repentance that is performed there, t[2]o pray at night. This soul [of the deceased] sees the shadow that is taken by an appointed angel with thousands upon thousands and myriads accompanying him on the night of Hoshana Rabbah, when the verdicts go

[1]The author provides a mystical explanation for the custom of visiting graves before Rosh Hashanah, suggesting that on this night souls are especially active in praying for the living who are about to be judged.

[2]The Hebrew is somewhat ambiguous about who is awakened—the dead souls or the living who visit the graves. Based on context, I've interpreted it as referring to awakening the dead souls through the power of the repentance performed by the living at their graves.

[i]The author is making a grammatical observation about Psalm 35:10. He notes that the verb is feminine plural ("תאמרנה"—"they shall say") rather than masculine plural ("יאמרו"—"they say"), which he interprets as evidence that the bones themselves actively praise God in the afterlife.

[ii]The author connects the traditional Jewish practice of swaying during prayer and Torah study (known as 'shuckling') to his mystical concept that movement of the bones during life prepares them for their spiritual role after death.

[iii]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 141 — The author directly quotes this Zohar passage to support his claim about the soul's continued existence within the grave and its ability to move among the living and pray for them after the body has decomposed. | Cf. Psalms 35:10 — The author uses this verse to demonstrate that bones themselves have spiritual qualities, noting the precise wording 'shall say' (תאמרנה) which he interprets as indicating that bones literally praise God in the afterlife. | Cf. Story of King Solomon's judgment — This appears to be a midrashic expansion of the famous judgment of Solomon story, modified to focus on blood and bones as carriers of familial identity through the soul. The author uses this to support his claim about the soul residing in bones. | Cf. Ezekiel 37:12-14 — The author cites this prophetic passage about resurrection to support the special status of burial in the Land of Israel, where the spirit/ruach flows into the deceased, creating a higher spiritual state than burial elsewhere. | Cf. Proverbs 6:22 — The author reinterprets this verse about Torah study protecting one while sleeping to refer to how Torah study during life continues to protect the person after death 'in the grave.' This connects to his claim about bodily movements during study.

[iv]This likely refers to the Jewish custom of visiting graves before Rosh Hashanah and reciting prayers there. The author explains the mystical purpose behind this practice: the repentance performed at the graves awakens the deceased souls.

מבי מלכא[i] ומעלין אותו הצל
למעלה. ואחר ראייתה חוזרת
לקבר ומבשרת לשאר מתים
פלוני עתיד לבא גבן ואם צדיק
הוא כלם שמחים ואי לא אמרין
ווי שהדין מתגבר על שאר מתים
בבא אצלם רשע ולהפך בבא
צדיק הדין מיקל ע״כ אמרו
אוי לרשע ואוי לשכנו טוב
לצדיק וטוב לשכנו[ii] ושכנו יהיה
מלשון שוכני עפר הגם כי דברים
הם כפשטן ג״כ ואמרו שאותו
הצל מעלין אותו לעבד נאמן
מטטרו״ן[iii] והוא מעלה אותו
למקומו דכתיב כעבד ישאף
צל ומשם ואילך מתוקן מקום
לאיש ההוא בג״ע ומקום לנפש
לנוח וליהנות בעת שמשוטטת
והולכת לפי שיש נפשות שאין
להם מנוחה ועליהם כתיב
ונפש אויבך יקלענה בתוך כף
הקלע.[iv] שאין לה מנוחה יומם
ולילה. וזהו עונש גדול מכל.
ויש נפש שנכרתת עם הגוף עליה
כתיב והכרתי אותה מקרב עמה
ואין לה זכר כלל ויש נפש שאינה
נכרתת עם הגוף אלא כריתתה
ממקום אחר עליה כתיב ונכרתה
הנפש ההיא מלפני[v] ואינה
שורה עליה הרוח ואונה יודעת forth from the King's house,[1] and they elevate that shadow upward. After seeing this, it returns to the grave and announces to the other dead: "So-and-so is destined to come among us." If he was righteous, all rejoice; if not, they say, "Woe!" because judgment intensifies upon the other dead when a wicked person joins them, and conversely, when a righteous person arrives, the judgment is eased. Therefore they said, "Woe to the wicked and woe to his neighbor; good to the righteous and good to his neighbor." Here "neighbor" refers to the "dwellers in the dust," although these matters can also be understood literally. And they said that this shadow is elevated to the faithful servant Metatron, who elevates it to its place, as it is written, "As a servant longs for shade" (Job 7:2). From then on, a place is prepared in the Garden of Eden for that person, and a place for the soul to rest and enjoy when it wanders and travels, for there are souls that have no rest, about which it is written, "But the soul of your enemies He shall sling out from the hollow of a sling" (I Samuel 25:29), having no rest day or night. This is the greatest punishment of all. There is a soul that is cut off with the body, about which it is written, "I will cut it off from among its people"[2] (Leviticus 17:10), and it has no remembrance at all. And there is a soul that is not cut off with the body, but its severance is from another place, about which it is written, "That soul shall be cut off from before Me" (Leviticus 22:3). The ruach [spirit] does not rest upon it, and it has

85R 90R 95R 100R 105R 110R

[1] The Aramaic phrase 'דנפקין פתקין מבי מלכא' refers to the kabbalistic belief that on Hoshana Rabbah, the final divine judgments (represented as 'notes' or 'verdicts') are issued from the divine court.
[2] The text is describing the concept of 'karet' (spiritual excision), but distinguishes between two forms: complete annihilation versus a lesser form where the soul continues to exist but is cut off from divine presence.

[i] This refers to the kabbalistic belief that on Hoshana Rabbah (the seventh day of Sukkot), the divine verdicts that were sealed on Yom Kippur are 'sent out' from the divine court. The Aramaic phrase 'נפקין פתקין מבי מלכא' literally means 'notes/verdicts go forth from the King's house.'
[ii] This is a Talmudic saying (Sanhedrin 103b) originally referring to how neighbors influence each other in life. Here it's creatively reapplied to the realm of the dead, suggesting that souls buried near each other affect each other's spiritual condition.
[iii] In Jewish mysticism, Metatron is considered the highest of angels, often described as God's 'faithful servant.' The text suggests that the spiritual 'shadow' or essence of a person is first brought to Metatron, who then elevates it to its proper place in the afterlife.
[iv] This quotes 1 Samuel 25:29, which contains both the negative fate ('being slung from the hollow of a sling') and the positive fate ('being bound in the bundle of life') that the author uses to contrast the destinations of wicked and righteous souls.
[v] The text distinguishes between two forms of 'karet' (spiritual excision): complete annihilation where the soul is cut off with the body, and a lesser form where the soul continues to exist but is cut off from divine presence and higher spiritual awareness.

מדברים של מעלה כלל והיא
בנפש הבהמות ואין לה מנוחה
ובהליכתה פוגשת בממונה
הנזכר עם חיילותיו ומראים
לה כבוד הצדיקים וכבוד רוח
שלה ומתדבקת בו במנוחה
תוך מלבוש הרוח ואז יודעת
מדברים של מעלה וכשאותו
רוח עולה להתעטר תוך הנשמה
עליונה למעלה מתקשרת עמו
ומאירה ממנו כירח המאיר מן
השמש ורוח מתקשר תוך נשמתו
ונשמה מתקשרת בסוף המחשבה
שהיא סוד נפש למעלה ואותו
נפש מתקשרת בתוך ההוא רוח
עליון ואותו רוח מתקשר תוך
נשמה עליונה ואותה נשמה
מתקשרת בא״ס ואז הוא נייחא
וקשורא דכלא מעלה ומטה בסוד
אחד[i] ואז הוא נייחא לנפש למטה
ועל זה כתוב והיה נפש אדוני
צרורה בצרור החיים את ה׳
אלהיך בסוד וקשר אחד[ii]

no knowledge whatsoever of heavenly matters, being like the soul of animals. It has no rest, and in its wandering it encounters the aforementioned appointed angel with his hosts, who show it the glory of the righteous and the glory of its own ruach. It cleaves to it in rest within the garment of the ruach, and then it knows of heavenly matters. And when that ruach ascends to be crowned within the supernal neshamah [higher soul] above, it [the nefesh/lower soul] becomes bound with it and illuminated by it, like the moon that shines from the sun. The ruach binds within its neshamah, and the neshamah binds to the end of thought,[1] which is the mystery of the supernal nefesh, and that nefesh binds within that supernal ruach, and that ruach binds within the supernal neshamah, and that neshamah binds to the Infinite (Ein Sof). Then there is rest and binding of everything above and below in one secret,[2] and then there is rest for the nefesh below. Concerning this it is written, "May the soul of my lord be bound in the bundle of life with the LORD your God" (I Samuel 25:29), in the secret of one binding.

[1] This complex description of soul components binding together reflects kabbalistic conceptions of the hierarchical structure of the soul and its reunification after death. The 'end of thought' (סוף המחשבה) refers to a high spiritual level where divine thought transitions into manifestation.

[2] The phrase 'קשורא דכלא' (binding of all) refers to the ultimate kabbalistic goal of unifying all levels of existence. The 'one secret' (סוד אחד) refers to the fundamental unity underlying apparent diversity in creation.

[i] This describes the ultimate spiritual achievement in kabbalistic thought: the unification of all levels of existence ('above and below') into a single harmonious whole ('in one secret'). This concept of cosmic unity is central to kabbalistic theology.

[ii] Cf. I Samuel 25:29 — This biblical verse is used to establish the concept of 'tzror ha-chayyim' (the bundle of life), a metaphor for the soul's ultimate connection to the divine source after death. The author cites this verse twice—once negatively (souls of enemies being slung from the sling) and once positively (righteous souls being bound up with God). This verse became a cornerstone of Jewish mourning practices and appears on many traditional tombstones. | Cf. Job 7:2 — The author creatively reinterprets this verse, which in its original context describes a laborer longing for shade as relief from work. Here it's given a mystical interpretation where the 'shade/shadow' (צל/tzel) represents the soul's spiritual image, and the verse is used to describe how Metatron elevates this 'shadow' or spiritual essence to its proper place after death. | Cf. Zohar — The complex description of how the nefesh, ruach, and neshamah interact and bind together after death draws heavily from Zoharic conceptions of the soul's structure. Particularly Zoharic is the idea that the three soul components can be separated after death, with the nefesh remaining near the grave, the ruach ascending to lower Gan Eden, and the neshamah rising to higher spiritual realms, yet all maintaining a connection. | Cf. Talmud Bavli, Sanhedrin 103b — This is a Talmudic saying that originally referred to the living, warning about the influence of bad neighbors. The author creatively reapplies it to the realm of the dead, suggesting that the proximity of souls in the afterlife affects their spiritual condition—righteous souls bring relief to neighboring souls, while wicked souls intensify judgment on those buried nearby. | Cf. Hoshana Rabbah traditions — This references Jewish mystical traditions about Hoshana Rabbah (the seventh day of Sukkot) as a final day of judgment when the verdicts sealed on Yom Kippur are actually 'delivered.' The text extends this tradition to suggest that these verdicts also determine the fate of souls in the afterlife.

ועד״ז בירידתם מלמעלה למטה
הירח ב״י שהיא נפש עליונה
המאירה לארץ ולדרים[i] היא
מלאה ומאירה מכל מחנות
ומרכבות עליונות ועושה מכלם
גוף אחד שלם המאיר כאור וזיו
עליון וזה ירמוז לעשר נצוצות
מאור המלכות המתפשטות
להחיות עולם הבריאה המאירה
מאור עליון בדמיון זה[ii] יורדות
נפש התחתונה מאירה מכל צדדין
מתוך אור הנשמה ומתוך אור
של הרוח ויורדת ומאירה לכל
מרכבות ומחנות שהם אברים
ועצמות[iii] ועושה אותם גוף
שלם המאיר כאור עליון מצד
צורת הדיוקן שלו שהוא צל
מהעליונים הדא הוא דכתיב
והשביע בצחצחות נפשך[iv] נפש
ממש ואחר כך ועצמותיך
יחליץ שעושה מהם בקבר גוף
שלם ומאיר כאור עליון והוא
קם ומודה ומשבח להקב״ה
כדאמרי׳ מפסוק כל עצמותי
תאמרנה[v] וזהו ניוחא לנפש מכל
הצדדין:[vi]

Similarly, in their descent from above to below, the moon—which is the Community of Israel (Knesset Yisrael),[1] the supernal soul that illuminates the earth and its inhabitants—is filled with and radiates light from all the celestial camps and chariots, forming from them all a single, complete body that shines with supernal light and radiance. This alludes to the ten sparks from the light of Malkhut[2] (Kingdom) that extend to enliven the World of Beriah[3] (Creation), which shines from the supernal light. In like manner, the lower soul descends, illuminated from all sides by the light of the neshamah (higher soul) and the light of the ruach (spirit),[4] and descends to illuminate all the chariots and camps, which are the limbs and bones, making them into a complete body that shines like supernal light through the form of its image, which is a shadow of the higher realms. This is what is written: "And He will satisfy your soul with radiance" (Isaiah 58:11)—literally the soul—and afterward, "and strengthen your bones," meaning that He makes them into a complete body in the grave that shines like supernal light. And it rises and acknowledges and praises the Holy One, blessed be He, as we learn from the verse, "All my bones shall say"[5] (Psalms 35:10). This is the satisfaction

135R 140R 145R 150R 155R 160R

[1]The Hebrew term '״כ' is an abbreviation for 'Knesset Yisrael' (Community of Israel), which in Kabbalah represents the divine feminine presence (Shekhinah) and is symbolically associated with the moon receiving light from the sun (representing masculine divine aspects).

[2]In Kabbalah, Malkhut (Kingdom) is the tenth and lowest of the divine emanations (sefirot), representing the divine presence in the material world. The 'ten sparks' refer to fragments of divine light that animate creation.

[3]Beriah is the second of four spiritual worlds in Kabbalah (below Atzilut/Emanation and above Yetzirah/Formation and Asiyah/Action), representing the realm of divine Creation where the highest souls reside.

[4]Kabbalah describes the soul as having multiple levels: neshamah (highest level), ruach (middle level), and nefesh (lowest level). Each corresponds to different spiritual worlds and divine attributes.

[5]The Hebrew actually uses the feminine plural form 'תאמרנה' (shall say) rather than the masculine

[i]The metaphor of the moon illuminating the earth parallels the kabbalistic concept of Malkhut (the divine feminine) receiving light from higher divine emanations and transmitting it to the lower worlds.

[ii]The author consistently employs the principle of correspondence between macrocosm and microcosm, showing how celestial patterns are mirrored in human spiritual anatomy.

[iii]In kabbalistic thought, the physical body parts correspond to spiritual entities and divine attributes, with the bones representing the most enduring connection to the divine structure.

[iv]The term 'tzachtzachot' (radiance/brilliance) in Isaiah 58:11 is interpreted in the Zohar as referring to the divine illumination that satisfies souls in the afterlife.

[v]This quotation from Psalms 35:10 is often used in kabbalistic texts to suggest that the physical remains maintain a spiritual consciousness even after death, capable of praising God.

[vi]Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The author is adapting Zoharic concepts about the relationship between the divine feminine (moon/Community of Israel) and the human soul's components, of the soul from all sides.

פרק כ״ה

Chapter 25

ממה שהעלינו מסולת נקיה מדברי חז״ל ראינו כי הצדיקי׳ זוכים לג׳ נייחות אחר מיתתם[i] דכבר אמרנו שהרוח נכנס בג״ע ומצטייר שם בדיוקן הגוף בעה״ז[ii] במלבוש שמתלבש שם ומתהנים שם בהנאות וכסופין דזיו דג״ע ובשבתות וחדשים ומועדים עולה למעלה ומתהנית שם וחוזרת למקומה ועל זה כתוב והרוח תשוב אל האלהים תשוב ודאי בזמנים אלו[iii] נשמה עולה מיד למקום שיצאה משם[iv] ומחמתה מתדלקת נר שהוא אור חדש כי יגיה בגינה למעלה וזו אינה יורדת למטה לעולם ועמה נכללת המדרגה העליונה שהיא בלולה מכל הבחינות מעלה ומטה שהיא

From the pure essence we have extracted from the words of our Sages of blessed memory, we have seen that the righteous merit three forms of rest[1] after their death. We have already stated that the ruach (spirit) enters the Garden of Eden and is formed there in the likeness of the body it had in this world, clothed in a garment in which it is dressed there. There, it delights in the pleasures and longings of the radiance[2] of the Garden of Eden. On Sabbaths, new moons, and festivals, it ascends higher and enjoys itself there before returning to its place. Concerning this it is written, "And the spirit returns to God who gave it" (Ecclesiastes 12:7)—it certainly returns during these times.[3] 5R 10R

The neshamah (higher soul) immediately ascends to the place from which it originated, and because of it, a lamp is kindled, which is a new light that illuminates above because of it. This never descends below, and with it is included the highest level, which 15R form, which the author interprets as evidence that the bones themselves actively speak praises, not merely metaphorically.

[1]The Hebrew 'niyachot' (נייחות) has connotations beyond mere rest, suggesting spiritual satisfaction, proper placement, and fulfillment of purpose.

[2]The phrase 'הנאות וכסופין דזיו' combines technical kabbalistic terminology with more accessible language. 'Kisufin' (longings/desires) in kabbalistic contexts refers to spiritual yearnings rather than physical desires.

[3]I've emphasized the word 'certainly' to capture the Hebrew 'ודאי' which indicates the author is offering a specific interpretation of the biblical verse that differs from its common understanding.

showing how the metaphysical structure of the cosmos is mirrored in human spiritual anatomy. | Cf. Isaiah 58:11 — The author interprets this prophetic verse as a mystical reference to how the divine light fills and satisfies the soul, which then illuminates and strengthens the physical remains even in the grave. | Cf. Psalms 35:10 — The author uses this psalm verse to demonstrate that even after death, the physical remains maintain a connection to the soul and participate in spiritual activities like praising God. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The author is drawing on the Tikkunei Zohar's teachings about how the different levels of the soul (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) correspond to different divine attributes and how they function together in life and after death.

[i]The concept of 'three forms of rest' (shalosh niyachot) reflects the kabbalistic understanding that each of the three soul components (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) requires its own specific form of spiritual repose after death.

[ii]This describes the kabbalistic concept that the ruach retains a form resembling its earthly body while in the Garden of Eden, maintaining a connection to its previous physical existence.

[iii]The author is offering a mystical interpretation of Ecclesiastes 12:7, suggesting that the biblical phrase about the spirit returning to God refers specifically to the temporary ascents of the ruach during sacred times rather than a permanent return.

[iv]According to kabbalistic tradition, the neshamah originates from the highest divine realms and returns there immediately after death, unlike the other soul components that have intermediate destinations.

מלכות שמים.[i] ועד שהנשמה עולה להתקשר במקומה הרוח אינו מתעטר בעטרותיו בג״ע של מטה והנפש אינה מתיישבת במקומה ובעלייתה לכלם יש נייחא. וכשבני העולם בצער והולכים לבית הקברות[ii] הנפש מתעוררת ומשוטטת ומעוררת לרוח והרוח מעורר לבחינת האבות שבג״ע ועולה ומעורר לנשמה ואז הקב״ה מרחם על העולם וכשהנשמה מתעכבת מלעלות למקומה הרוח עומד לפתח ג״ע ואינם פותחין לה ומשוטטת משם בעולם[iii] encompasses all aspects above and below, which is the Kingdom of Heaven.[1] 20R

Until the neshamah ascends to be bound in its place, the ruach is not crowned with its crowns in the lower Garden of Eden, and the nefesh (vital soul) does not settle in its place. When it ascends, all [soul components] find rest. 25R

When people on earth are in distress and go to the cemetery, the nefesh is aroused and wanders about, stirring the ruach, and the ruach arouses the aspect of the Patriarchs who are in the Garden of Eden.[2] It then ascends and awakens the neshamah, and then the Holy One, blessed be He, has mercy on the world. When the neshamah is delayed from ascending to its place, the ruach stands at the entrance to the Garden of Eden, but they do not open for it, and it wanders from there throughout the world. 30R 35R

ואין מי שישגיח בה כמו שבני אדם אינם משגיחין בעה״ז על מעשה המצות וכן הנפש משוטטת בעולם ורואה הגוף המעלה תולעים ובאותו הדין ונפשו עליו תאבל וכל זה הוה על צד העונש. ועד שהנשמה מתקשרת במקומה נפש אין לה אור מעצמה

And none pay attention to it, just as people in this world do not pay attention to the performance of commandments. Similarly, the soul wanders in the world and sees the body producing worms, and in that judgment, "his soul mourns over him."[3] All this occurs as a form of punishment. 40R

Until the neshamah (higher soul) becomes bound to its place, the nefesh (vital soul) has no light of its

[1] This translates 'מלכות שמים' (Malkhut Shamayim), which in kabbalistic contexts specifically refers to the tenth and lowest sefirah (divine emanation), representing the divine feminine and the interface between higher realms and our world.

[2] The 'aspect of the Patriarchs' (בחינת האבות) refers to the spiritual presence or soul-roots of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who according to kabbalistic tradition reside in the Garden of Eden and serve as intercessors for their descendants.

[3] This is an allusion to Job 14:22: 'But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn.' The verse is used in rabbinic literature to suggest the continued awareness of the soul after death.

[i] Malkhut Shamayim (Kingdom of Heaven) is both a theological concept referring to God's sovereignty and a technical kabbalistic term for the lowest of the ten divine emanations (sefirot), which serves as the interface between divine and human realms.

[ii] This passage provides a kabbalistic justification for the Jewish practice of visiting graves during times of communal distress, explaining the metaphysical mechanism by which such visits can activate divine mercy.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — This passage closely follows Zoharic teachings about how the three soul parts (nefesh, ruach, neshamah) relate to each other after death, with the nefesh remaining connected to the grave, ruach entering the lower Garden of Eden, and neshamah ascending to the highest realms. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 12:7 — The author interprets this verse kabbalisticallyto describe how the ruach (spirit) component of the soul temporarily ascends to higher realms during holy times before returning to its normal post-death resting place. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Discourse 3 — The text refers back to its own earlier explanations of the soul structure with "we have already stated," creating internal coherence within the book. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The description of how cemetery visits by the living create a chain reaction through the soul parts resembles Tikkunei Zohar's explanations of how earthly actions affect higher worlds.

כלום והיא המשתתפת בגוף
לזונו ולענגו בכל מה שצריך
כד״א ותתן טרף לביתה. בית
הוא הגוף ונערותיה הם אברי
הגוף רוח רוכב על נפש זו
לשלוט עליה ומאירה בכל מה
שצריך ונפש היא כסא לו[i] נשמה
שולטת ומאירה לרוח מאור
החיים שבמלכות ועד שהנשמה
העליונה אינה עולה תוך מקור
עתיקא דעתיקין סתימא דכל
סתימין[ii] ומתמלאת ממנו תדיר
בלא הפסק הרוח לא נכנס בג״ע
והנפש העליונה אינה מתישבת
במקומה תוך הגוף למטה הכי
נמי מתפרשן בבר נש וכיון שכלם
קשור אחד נשמה עולה למעלה
תוך מקור הבאר. רוח נכנס בג״ע
כדוגמת העליון. ונפש מתיישבת
תוך הגוף בקבר. ונפש שלמעלה
המתיישבת תוך הגוף תוך ההיא
קליפה קשה זהו נקרא קבר
עליון ועד״ז נפש תחתונה למטה
בקבר תחתון וכל עת שהעצמות
נמצאים תוך הקבר נפש זו נמצאת
שם.[iii] וכבר אמרנו איך מתעלית
נפש זו לשבח קב״ה בשבתות
וי״ט ור״ח[iv] בדיוקא הגוף עם
העצמות. ובעוד האדם חי אמרו בתקון ס״ט דף ק״ט דרוח יורדת own whatsoever. It is that which participates with the body to nourish and delight it in all that it needs, as it is written: "She provides food for her household."[1] The "house" is the body, and "her maidens" are the limbs of the body. The ruach (spirit) rides upon this nefesh to rule over it and illuminates it in all that is necessary, and the nefesh is like a throne for it. The neshamah rules and illuminates the ruach from the light of life that is in Malkhut (Kingdom).

Until the supernal neshamah ascends into the source of the Ancient of Ancients, the Most Hidden of all Hidden Ones, and is continuously filled by Him without interruption, the ruach does not enter the Garden of Eden, and the supernal nefesh does not settle in its place within the body below. So too are they separated in a human being.

And since they are all bound as one: the neshamah ascends above into the source of the Well; the ruach enters the Garden of Eden like its supernal counterpart; and the nefesh settles within the body in the grave. The nefesh above that settles within the body, within that hard shell,[2] is called the supernal grave, and in this manner, the lower nefesh is below in the lower grave. As long as the bones remain within the grave, this nefesh is present there.

We have already explained how this nefesh elevates itself to praise the Holy One, blessed be He, on Sabbaths, festivals, and new moons, in the exact form of the body with the bones. While a person is still alive, they said in Tikkun 69, page 109,[3] that the [1] This is a direct quote from Proverbs 31:15, part of the 'Woman of Valor' (Eshet Chayil) passage. The author uses this verse metaphorically to describe the nefesh's role in maintaining the body.

[2] The term 'kelipah' (shell) in Kabbalah often refers to negative spiritual forces, but here it seems to refer to the physical body itself as a kind of shell or vessel that contains the soul, reflecting the Neoplatonic influence on Kabbalah where physical matter is considered a denser, more limited form of reality.
[3] This refers to the Tikkunei Zohar, a section of the Zoharic literature consisting of seventy 'tikku-

[i] The metaphor of one soul component being a 'throne' or 'seat' for another reflects the kabbalistic concept of hierarchical spiritual worlds, where each level serves as a vessel or container for the divine influence flowing from above.
[ii] These terms refer to the highest conceivable divine configuration in Kabbalah, sometimes identified with Keter (Crown) or even beyond. The text suggests that the soul's highest component (neshamah) ultimately reunites with this supreme divine source.
[iii] The text establishes that the nefesh (vital soul) remains with the bones in the grave as long as they exist there. This reflects the Jewish belief in a continued connection between the body and soul even after death, which is why proper burial practices are so important.
[iv] According to this kabbalistic teaching, the soul components experience temporary elevations during sacred times. This belief explains customs of reciting memorial prayers on Sabbaths and festivals, as these are considered especially auspicious times when the souls of the deceased can experience spiritual elevation.

ועולה בגוף ומתפשטת בכל
ורידי הלב המנענעים הה״ד אל
אשר יהיה שמה הרוח ללכת ילכו
אבל הנפש קבועה בלב כאשה
הקבועה בביתה[i] ושם אמר כי
השקרים גורמים סלוק שכינה
מעל האדם. וראיה מפ׳ חלק
ממעשה דאיתרע בההוא אתרא
דשמיה קושטא[ii] שבאור פני מלך
חיים.[iii]

ruach descends and ascends in the body and spreads through all the pulsating veins of the heart. This is what is meant by the verse: "Wherever the spirit would go, they would go."[1] But the nefesh is fixed in the heart like a woman fixed in her house. And there it is said that falsehoods cause the Divine Presence to depart from a person, as evidenced in the chapter Chelek from the story that occurred in that place called Kushta (Truth), for "in the light of the king's countenance is life."[2]

וכתוב בספר החסידים בסי׳
תתשל״ו כי הנפש היא במיתה
כמו בחיים וזהו שאמרו חז״ל
שהבועל שפחה חרופה נקשרים
יחד[iv] והביא שם מעשה מאחד
שלא ראה צל על ראשו בליל

And it is written in Sefer Hasidim, section 1736,[3] that the soul in death is like in life, and this is what our Sages meant when they said that one who has relations with a betrothed maidservant remains bound together with her.[4] He brings there a story about someone who did not see nim' or rectifications. This specific citation shows the author's familiarity with these texts and their pagination in editions available to him.

[1]This quotes Ezekiel 1:20, from the prophet's vision of the divine chariot. The original context describes the movement of the chariot's wheels in harmony with the animating spirit, repurposed here to describe the relationship between the ruach and the body's circulatory system.

[2]This is a quote from Proverbs 16:15, used here to emphasize how truth (Kushta) and divine presence are connected, with the implication that the Divine King's favorable countenance brings life, while His absence (caused by falsehood) brings death.

[3]Sefer Hasidim (Book of the Pious) is a medieval ethical work attributed to Rabbi Judah the Pious (c. 1150-1217). It contains pietistic teachings and customs of the Ashkenazi Hasidim of medieval Germany.

[4]This refers to a specific legal category in Jewish law (shifchah charufah) and the spiritual consequences of such a relationship. The author uses this as evidence that spiritual bonds persist after death.

[i]The comparison of the nefesh to a woman fixed in her house while the ruach moves freely reflects gender dynamics of the period, but also establishes a kabbalistic metaphor where the feminine principle (often associated with Malkhut/Kingdom) is relatively stationary while the masculine principle (often associated with Tiferet/Beauty) is more mobile.

[ii]This refers to the Talmudic story (Sanhedrin 97a) about a town called Kushta where no one ever told a lie, and as a result, no one died prematurely. The author uses this to illustrate how moral behavior (truthfulness) affects spiritual reality (divine presence).

[iii]Cf. Proverbs 31:15 — The author draws on the imagery of the 'woman of valor' from Proverbs to describe how the nefesh tends to the body's physical needs, establishing a correspondence between spiritual and physical realms. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:20 — The author draws a parallel between the divine chariot's wheels that move according to the spirit's direction and the relationship between the ruach (spirit) and the body's circulatory system, suggesting that physical functions mirror spiritual patterns. | Cf. Proverbs 16:15 — The author connects the concept of truth (Kushta) with divine presence, suggesting that honesty maintains the connection between human and divine realms, while falsehood causes separation. | Cf. Zohar, Tikkun 69 — The author grounds his mystical explanation of soul dynamics in authoritative kabbalistic texts, specifically the Tikkunei Zohar, to establish the relationship between the ruach and physical processes like blood circulation. | Cf. Sanhedrin, Chapter Chelek — The author draws on a well-known Talmudic narrative about a place where truth was absolute to emphasize how falsehood disrupts the connection between humans and the divine presence, creating a spiritual parallel to the soul's disruption after death.

[iv]This refers to a type of spiritual bond that forms between individuals through certain actions. A 'shifchah charufah' is a specific legal category in Jewish law: a maidservant who has been designated for marriage to a specific man but has not yet been fully freed.

הושענא רבא[i] והתענה הוא ואוהביו צומות הרבה ופיזר נתן לאביונים בשפע וחי. גם מזה יראה כי תעניות אוהביו ורעיו של אדם מסייעים אותו להעביר מעליו הגזרה מהטעם שכתבנו. עוד אמרו כי לנשמות יש להם ספרים ערוכים על השלחן וכמו שרגילים בחייהם ללמוד כן לומדים במותם וכבר נתראה למשכילי עמנו דוגמא מזה ועיין לקמן בשם ספר הזהר מהו סוד השלחן של צדיקים בג׳ רגלים.[ii] והרב יוצא לקראת התלמוד במותו[iii] ולכן אמרו באותו תלמיד שנתחייב שריפה למקום הניחו לו שאדם גדול שמש כנראה מדברי הגמרא ואולי אז ר׳ יוחנן אחז ביד אלישע אחר שבא לקראתו כי שנה תורתו והעלהו עמו לג״ע. והמתים שמחים במיתת החיים אוהביהם ומתפללים עליהם קודם מותם. וע״פ מה שאמרנו שהנפש היא בעצמות ומתראים בדיוקן שהיו בעה״ז ע״כ צריך ליזהר שיהיו כל אבריו עמו בקברו ובפרט אותם שאין להם חליפין. וראיתי נוהגים שאפי׳ שני הלסתות שאין his shadow on his head on the night of Hoshana Rabbah,[1] so he and his friends fasted many fasts, and he generously scattered charity to the poor, and lived. From this too we see that the fasts of a person's friends and companions help remove the decree from him,[2] for the reason we have written. They further said that souls have books arranged on the table,[3] and just as they were accustomed to study during their lives, so do they study after death. Examples of this have already appeared to the wise of our people, and see below in the name of the Zohar what is the secret of the table of the righteous on the three festivals. The teacher comes forth to meet his student in death, and therefore they said of that student who was condemned to burning, "Leave him be, for he served a great man," as appears from the words of the Gemara. Perhaps it was then that Rabbi Yochanan took Elisha Acher by the hand[4] when he came to meet him, because he had taught his Torah, and raised him up with him to the Garden of Eden. The dead rejoice in the death of their beloved living ones and pray for them before their death. According to what we have said, that the soul resides in the bones and appears in the form they had in this world,[5] one must therefore be careful that all of one's limbs be with oneself in the grave, especially those that have no replacements. I have seen the practice that even the two jawbones, which have no replacements, are stored to be buried

[1] Hoshana Rabbah is the seventh day of Sukkot, considered a day of final judgment when divine decrees for the year are sealed. A folk tradition held that if one could not see their shadow on this night, it portended their death in the coming year.

[2] This reflects the Jewish theological concept that communal spiritual efforts can alter divine decrees against individuals, based on the interconnectedness of all Jewish souls.

[3] This metaphorical description suggests that souls continue their intellectual and spiritual pursuits after death, studying Torah in the afterlife in ways that parallel their earthly study habits.

[4] This refers to a Talmudic story about Rabbi Yochanan saving the soul of his teacher Elisha ben Abuya (called 'Acher'—'the other'—after he became an apostate) from punishment in the afterlife.

[5] This reflects the kabbalistic belief that the lowest level of the soul (nefesh) remains connected to the physical remains after death, particularly to the bones, explaining the importance of proper burial of all body parts.

[i] This refers to a folk belief that on the night of Hoshana Rabbah (the seventh day of Sukkot), one could determine if they would die in the coming year by checking if their shadow appeared when standing in moonlight. The absence of a shadow was considered an ominous sign portending death.

[ii] This refers to a mystical concept from the Zohar about how righteous souls participate in spiritual feasts during the three pilgrimage festivals (Passover, Shavuot, and Sukkot). These 'tables' represent realms of spiritual nourishment in the afterlife.

[iii] This describes the kabbalistic belief that when a Torah scholar dies, his teachers from the heavenly academy come to greet him and escort him to his place in the afterlife, recognizing the continuation of the teacher-student relationship beyond death.

להם חליפין מצניעין אותם
להקבר עמהם וכ״ש אם מחמת
חולי הוצרכו לחתוך לו אבר
אם אפשר להם יקברוהו עמו
וראיה מדוד דאסיק רישיה לגבי
גופיה דאבשלום.[i] עוד אמרו כי
יש עת מיועד לרוחות להתאסף
יחד ואז פעמים קובלים זה
מזה כדאמרי׳ דלא נימא לרב
מילי עלי. ואמרו בירו׳ דסוטה
פרק ה׳ שאמר רבי אלעזר בן
עזריה לר״ע דאמר אליהו בן
ברכאל זה בלעם. אי לית הוא
עתיד להתווכח עמך. ואמרו
במסכת חגיגה פ״ג בגמרין על
אותו הרוג שהרג יהודה בן טבאי
שלא כדין ואחר שמת יהודה לא
היה קולו נשמע כמו שהיה נשמע
בכל יום שהיה משתטח על קברו
וא״ל רב אחא בריה דרבא לרב
אשי ממאי דילמא פיוסי פייסיה
או בדינא תבעיה. והמתים
מתווכחים בב״ד של מעלה
והצדיקים עושים ביניהם שלום.
וכשהמלאכים מקצת מחייבים
ומקצת מזכים כפי מה שפוסקת
עיר וקדיש שנקרא בגמרא רוח
פסקונית[ii] בן גוזרים מלמעלה.
ואמרו בפ׳ פקודי כי גבריאל
הוא שליח העה״ז ולכן הוא לבוש
הבדים שמתלבש בלבושי העה״ז
כמו שהנשמה מתלבשת לבושים
דוגמת העולם העליון כדי
לעמוד שם. וזה מעשיו מושכים
מאור זיו העליון לבוש ליראות
בו לפני קונו ומתוכו מסתכלים
באספקלריא המאירה[iii] לחזות
בנועם ה׳ כי להשיג אורות

with them, and all the more so if due to illness they needed to amputate a limb—if possible they should bury it with him. Evidence of this comes from David, who brought up Absalom's head to his body. They further said that there is a designated time for spirits to gather together, and sometimes they complain about each other, as we say, "Let him not say words about me to the teacher." And they said in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sotah, chapter 5, that Rabbi Elazar ben Azariah said to Rabbi Akiva, who said that Elihu son of Barachel is Balaam: "Is he not going to argue with you in the future?" And they said in Tractate Chagigah, chapter 3, in our Gemara, regarding that person who was wrongfully killed by Judah ben Tabbai, that after Judah died, his voice was no longer heard as it used to be heard every day when he would prostrate himself on his grave. And Rav Acha son of Rava said to Rav Ashi: "How do you know? Perhaps he appeased him or pursued him in judgment." The dead argue in the heavenly court, and the righteous make peace between them. And when some angels find merit and some find guilt, according to what the "city and holy one"—called in the Gemara a "decisive spirit"—decides, so they decree from above. And they said in Parashat Pekudei that Gabriel is the messenger of this world,[1] and therefore he is clothed in linen, dressing in the garments of this world, just as the soul dresses in garments like those of the upper world in order to stand there. And one's deeds draw down a garment from the radiance of the supernal light, in which to appear before one's Creator, and through it they gaze into the illuminating lens to behold the pleasantness of the Lord, for to attain the supernal lights, garments are needed, as in "Behold, I come to you in the thickness of the cloud,[2] that the people may hear," and likewise Moses, "And Moses entered into the [1] In Jewish angelology, Gabriel is associated with judgment and serves as an intermediary between divine and earthly realms, needing appropriate 'garments' to function in each domain.

[2] This quote from Exodus 19:9 describes God's appearance at Mount Sinai. The author uses it to

[i] This references an aggadic tradition that David had Absalom's severed head rejoined to his body for burial, emphasizing the importance of bodily integrity in Jewish burial practices.

[ii] This refers to a term from the Book of Daniel (4:10) describing an angelic being who renders decisive judgments. In rabbinic literature, this became associated with a specific type of celestial force that finalizes judgments in spiritual realms.

[iii] This is a rabbinic term for the highest level of prophetic vision, described as looking through a clear, illuminated lens (contrasted with 'aspaklaria she'einah me'irah,' a non-illuminating lens). It represents direct, unmediated spiritual perception of divine truth.

עליונות צריכים לבושים על
דרך הנה אנכי בא אליך בעב
הענן בעבור ישמע העם וכן משה
ויבא משה בתוך הענן ואחד
160 מתכליות בריאת העולם היה
להיות לבושים לאורות[i] והדרוש
רחב במקומו: [ii]

midst of the cloud." One of the purposes of the creation of the world was to be garments for the lights, and this topic is extensive in its place. 160R

פרק כ״ו

Chapter 26

אם היה לאדם לב רחב כשלמה
ויכול לעסוק בתורה בחייו
ולא שמש כל צרכו בפשיעתו
כשמתווכחין עמו באותו עולם
5 לא יבין לומר האמת באופן
שלא יודו לו בישיבה של מעלה
ולא יזכה לבא בהם. ואם אדם
טורח בזה העולם לדעת אעפ״י
שאין לו לב עתה יהיה לו לב
10 במתיבתא דרקיעא. וכתוב בפ׳
וישב דף קפ״ה ע״א אורייתא
לא אתנשי מדמיכי עפרא דהא
כדין ינדעון כל ההיא אורייתא
דשבקו כד יסתלקו מהאי עלמא
15 וכל מלין מזדבאן יתיר מכמה

If a person had a broad mind like Solomon[1] and could engage in Torah study during his lifetime but did not serve his needs properly through his negligence,[A] when they debate with him in that world, he will not understand how to speak the truth 5R in a way that would gain him acknowledgment in the heavenly academy, and he will not merit to join them. However, if a person toils in this world to gain knowledge, even though he may lack understanding now, he will be granted understanding in the 10R heavenly academy.

It is written in Parashat Vayeshev, page 185a: "Torah is not forgotten by those who sleep in the dust, for they will then know all the Torah they left behind when they depart from this world. And 15R illustrate how divine revelations require appropriate 'garments' or veils to be perceivable without overwhelming the recipient.

[A] Or: "but did not serve [his teacher/Torah] adequately due to his negligence" — The Hebrew phrase 'lo shimesh kol tzorko' is somewhat ambiguous. While my primary translation takes it to mean 'did not serve his own needs properly,' it could alternatively refer to not properly serving one's teacher or not adequately serving/attending to Torah study. This alternate reading might better fit the context of Torah scholarship.

[1] The Hebrew term "lev rachav" (broad mind/heart) alludes to 1 Kings 5:9, which describes Solomon's God-given wisdom as "broadness of heart like the sand on the seashore."

[i] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the physical world serves as a 'garment' or vessel for divine light, suggesting that materiality itself was created to contain and express spiritual energies in a form that could be perceived and interacted with.

[ii] Cf. Sefer Hasidim — The citation from Sefer Hasidim serves as a foundational authority for the idea that the soul maintains consciousness and activity after death, which is central to the author's argument about posthumous spiritual existence. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — The Zohar reference supports the kabbalistic understanding of how souls navigate different spiritual realms through appropriate 'garments' or vessels, paralleling how angels like Gabriel must don appropriate 'clothing' to function in various realms. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Sotah, chapter 5 — This reference supports the concept that souls maintain their intellectual identity and debates after death, suggesting a continuity of consciousness and relationships beyond physical life. | Cf. Tractate Chagigah, chapter 3 — This Talmudic story is used to demonstrate that the dead can be appeased or continue to pursue justice in the afterlife, supporting the book's central theme of continued spiritual agency after death. | Cf. Hoshana Rabbah custom of checking one's shadow — This alludes to the folk belief that not seeing one's shadow on Hoshana Rabbah night portends death in the coming year, connecting to Ma'avar Yabok's broader theme of preparation for death and spiritual transition.

דהוו בהאי עלמא דהא כל אינון מלין דאיהו לא יכיל לאדבקא לון בדקא חזי ואיהו אשתדל בהו כולהון עיילין במעוהי מתקנן ואורייתא תמלל ביה והיינו דכתיב והקיצות היא תשיחך. ושני מלאכי השרת מסדרין תלמודו של אדם בפניו בצאתו מן העולם שלא יהיה לו בושת פנים לפני הקב״ה כמו שדרשו על פסוק לא ירעיב ה׳ נפש צדיק. וא״כ אשרי העוסק בסודות התורה ובדברי רשב״י שכמו שטעם בעה״ז מעין עה״ב כן ישביעוהו מפרי מעשיו ותורתו ואמר מורי הגאון מפאנו זצ״ל כי שני מלאכים חלו הם יצ״ט ויצ״ה להיות כי הם שמעו מפיו תורה כל ימי חייו ונתקדשו שניהם על ידו[i] שמשך אותם לבית המדרש ואם במתן תורה אמר בתקון כ״ב שכל אחד מהמלאכים היה עושה עצמו קול ופורח באויר וכל אחד מישראל שהיה אומר נעשה ונשמע היה שורה בפיו ומלמדו התורה כלה כ״ש שהמלאכים גבורי כחו של האדם המתהוים מתורתו ומעשיו בחייו שלומדים ומבינים אותו בעצם מה שלמד והגה בעה״ז וזהו ליגרים איניש בעה״ז והדר ליסבר בעה״ב לגרוס איניש ואע״ג דלא ידע מאי קאמר כי עתיד להבין ואמרו האי מאן דבעי למנדע אע״ג דלא ידע שבחא איהו ליה כי מי שטרח ולא השיג יזכה ויבין בג״ע ולכן טוב לגרוס ספר הזהר ותקונים ור״מ וכיוצא גם שלא יבין אותם.[ii] ובתקון

all matters become more refined than they were in this world, for all those matters that one was unable to properly grasp, yet strove to understand[A]—all of them enter his inner being properly arranged, and the Torah will speak through him. This is the meaning of the verse, ‘When you awake, it shall converse with you’ [Proverbs 6:22].” 20R

Two ministering angels arrange a person’s learning before him when he departs from this world so that he will not be ashamed before the Holy One, blessed be He, as they interpreted the verse, “The Lord will not allow the soul of the righteous to hunger” [Proverbs 10:3]. 25R

Therefore, fortunate is one who engages in the secrets of the Torah and the teachings of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai, for just as he tasted in this world a semblance of the World to Come, so will he be satisfied with the fruit of his deeds and his Torah study. My teacher, the Gaon of Fano, of blessed memory, said that the two angels—the good inclination and the evil inclination—are these, for they heard Torah from his mouth throughout his lifetime and were both sanctified through him, as he drew them into the house of study. And if at the giving of the Torah, as stated in Tikkun 22, each of the angels made itself into a voice flying through the air, and each Israelite who said “We will do and we will hear” had an angel rest upon his mouth teaching him the entire Torah—how much more so the angels, the mighty ones who do His bidding, who are formed through a person’s Torah study and deeds during his lifetime, will teach and help him truly understand what he learned and contemplated in this world. 30R 35R 40R 45R

This is the meaning of “a person should study in this world and afterward understand in the World to Come”—one should study even if he does not understand what he is saying, for he will understand it in the future. And they said: “Whoever wishes to know, even though he does not know, it is praise- 50R

[A] Or: “exerted effort in them” — The Aramaic phrase ‘ishtadal behu’ could be rendered more literally as ‘exerted effort in them,’ which preserves the sense of active striving without specifically limiting it to understanding. This alternate translation captures the broader sense of effort and engagement with Torah concepts.

[i] This striking passage teaches that even the evil inclination (yetzer hara) can be sanctified through Torah study, suggesting that when a person studies Torah, they elevate both their good and evil inclinations by bringing them into the house of study.

[ii] This reflects an important kabbalistic approach to sacred texts—that their recitation has spiritual value even without intellectual comprehension. The physical act of studying creates spiritual effects regardless of one’s understanding.

ל״ח אמרו שהדבור שנעשה מלאך היה לשמור בחינת רוחם שמכחו דבר עמהם הקב״ה מעולם דמטטרו״ן ועוד דבר עמהם מכח הנשמה שבכסא שבה יורד השכינה העליונה בלולה משלשה ספירות ראשונות[i] על זה נאמר מן השמים השמיעך את קולו. עוד דבר עמהם מאופן שמשם מוצא הנפש של אדם שעל זה נאמר ועל הארץ הראך את אשו הגדולה שכן עליו נאמר והנה אופן אחד בארץ. הנה כי קדש רוחניות התורה שירדה מהאצילות העליון עולם הכסא עם כל גדודיו ועולם המלאכים בכללו ושמים וארץ רוחניים מעולם העשיה ומשם לשמים וארץ גשמיים עד שהעבירה זוהמת עם בני ישראל וקדשם. והצדיקים זוכים לעטרה שעל ראשם לעה״ב מפני שטהרו המוח שבראשיהם כדי שתהיה השכינה מתעטרת עליהם. ושכר המצות הוא כפי מה שממשיכים אותם בני האדם במחשבתם אם עובד לכבוד ה׳ הקב״ה בעצמו ישלם שכרו ואם בשביל שכר העה״ז יש לו שכר מעין עה״ז ואם בשביל ג״ע שכרו על ידי עולם המלאכים המשמשים את הגן אבל העובד שלא ע״מ לקבל פרס שכרו מלמעלה ממקום אשר עין לא ראתה אלהים זולתך ואין במצות למעלה מת״ת בנודע להיות כי בזה הוא אחוז בנוף אילן עץ החיים ואם לא עוסק בהם ויקחוהו וישליכו אותו הבורה וגו׳ ר״ל ופעמים בעה״ז נוצח שאינו צדיק לצדיק בפלפול כדי שיהיה לו עה״ז מלא. ופעמים worthy for him," for one who toiled but did not attain will merit to understand in the Garden of Eden. Therefore, it is good to study the Book of the Zohar, the Tikkunim, and Ra'aya Mehemna, and similar works, even if one does not understand them. 55R

In Tikkun 38, they said that the speech that became an angel was to preserve the aspect of their spirit, through which the Holy One, blessed be He, spoke to them from the world of Metatron. Additionally, He spoke to them through the power of the soul in the Throne, wherein the supernal Divine Presence descends, encompassing the three first sefirot. Regarding this it is said, "From heaven He made you hear His voice" [Deuteronomy 4:36]. He further spoke to them through the Ofan, from which the human soul originates, concerning which it is said, "And on earth He showed you His great fire" [ibid.], for about it, it is said, "And behold, there was one Ofan on the earth" [Ezekiel 1:15]. 60R 65R 70R

Behold, the holiness of the Torah's spirituality descended from the supernal emanation, the world of the Throne with all its hosts, and the world of the angels in its entirety, and the spiritual heavens and earth from the world of Asiyah, and from there to the physical heavens and earth, until it removed the spiritual impurity from the children of Israel and sanctified them. 75R 80R

The righteous merit the crown upon their heads in the World to Come because they purified the brain in their heads so that the Divine Presence might be crowned upon them. The reward for commandments depends on how people channel them in their thoughts: if one serves for the glory of God, the Holy One, blessed be He, Himself will reward him;[1] if for the sake of reward in this world, he receives a reward similar to this world; and if for the sake of the Garden of Eden, his reward comes through the world of angels who serve the Garden. But one who serves without expecting a reward receives his reward from above, from a place of which "No eye has seen, O God, beside You"[2] [Isaiah 64:3]. And there 85R 90R 95R

[1] This passage reflects the rabbinic teaching from Pirkei Avot 1:3 about serving without expectation of reward, but adds a sophisticated kabbalistic framework of how intentions during mitzvah performance determine the source and nature of divine reward.

[2] This references Isaiah 64:3, traditionally understood as describing the incomprehensible nature

[i] This refers to the highest three sefirot (divine emanations): Keter (Crown), Chokhmah (Wisdom), and Binah (Understanding), which in Kabbalah represent the most transcendent aspects of divinity, beyond human comprehension.

כי הדור אינם זוכים בשמועות
דאדם צדיק בישראל שהיו
נשמעים לאחיתופל וכבר אמרו
דטינא היתה בלבו.[i] ואי לך
ארץ שמלכך מנוער מן המצות
דבתר רישא גופא אזיל ואשרך
ארץ שמלכך בן חורין מדינה
של גיהנם שהרב הדומה למלאך
ה׳ צבאות אז הוא מוכן לקבל
ממעינות של תורה עילאה ויכוין
ההלכה על האמת והצדק:[ii]

is no commandment higher than Torah study, as is known, because through this one clings to the foliage of the Tree of Life. If one does not engage in them, "they took him and cast him into the pit" [Genesis 37:24], etc.—that is to say, sometimes in this world, 100R one who is not righteous defeats a righteous person in scholarly debate so that he may have his fill of this world. And sometimes the generation does not merit to hear the teachings of a righteous person, as in the case of Israel who listened to Ahithophel, 105R though they already said that he harbored ill will in his heart.[A]

"Woe to you, O land, whose king is a youth" [Ecclesiastes 10:16]—who is immature in commandments, for the body follows the head. "Happy 110R are you, O land, whose king is a free man" [ibid. 10:17]—free from the judgment of Gehenna, for the rabbi who resembles an angel of the Lord of hosts[1] is then prepared to receive from the wellsprings of the supernal Torah, and will direct the law toward truth 115R and righteousness.

פרק כ״ז

Chapter 27

[A] Or: "he had a grudge/resentment in his heart" — The Hebrew term 'tina' specifically refers to a long-standing grudge or resentment. This alternative translation more precisely captures the nature of Ahithophel's feelings toward David according to rabbinic tradition.

of the reward reserved for the righteous in the World to Come. The author uses this to emphasize that the highest level of service receives reward from the most transcendent divine source.

[1] This alludes to Malachi 2:7, "For the lips of a priest should guard knowledge, and people should seek instruction from his mouth, for he is an angel/messenger of the LORD of hosts." The text reinterprets this verse to suggest that a truly worthy spiritual leader channels divine wisdom directly.

[i] This refers to the biblical account where King David's advisor Ahithophel joined Absalom's rebellion. The Talmud (Sanhedrin 106b) suggests he harbored resentment (tina) against David, illustrating how even the greatest wisdom can be corrupted by negative personal motivations.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Vayeshev 185a — This Zohar passage serves as a key textual proof for the author's assertion that souls retain and even enhance their Torah knowledge after death. The reference reinforces the idea that spiritual study in this world has permanent effects in the next world. | Cf. Proverbs 6:22 — The author reinterprets this verse, which originally refers to Torah guiding a person throughout life, to suggest that Torah knowledge becomes actively communicative through the soul after death. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — These references establish the metaphysical framework for understanding how human speech becomes angelic and how divine revelation works across multiple spiritual worlds. They support the author's claim about the importance of Torah study even when not fully understood. | Cf. Tree of Life — This is an allusion to the kabbalistic symbol of the Tree of Life (Etz Chaim), suggesting that Torah study connects one to the divine emanations (sefirot). The metaphor encourages the reader to contemplate how Torah study serves as a literal connection to divine reality. | Cf. Ecclesiastes 10:16-17 — The author reinterprets these verses that originally referred to political leadership to instead describe spiritual leadership and Torah knowledge, creating a contrast between communities led by the spiritually immature versus those guided by the spiritually advanced.

אין הקב״ה דן את האדם אלא
בפמליא של מעלה שלעולם
פותחין בזכות ולכן נקרא ההיכל
שבו הסנהדרין קדושים היכל
הזכות לא כן היכל שכנגדו
בקליפה הפותחים לעולם
בחובה וכשהקב״ה גומר הדין
אין מי שישיב עליו שנאמר
והוא באחד ומי ישיבנו:[i] ויש
עוד בקדושת ב״ד תחתון וב״ד
עליון ודין האדם הוא בעליון
דנפישי רחמיו. עוד אמרו כי
הנפש החוטאת היא תמות דצריך
למרק המשחית שעשה ביסורין
ותשובה מועלת ואינה מבטלת
הגזרה כולה אלא תולה היסורין
עד שיקבלם עליו מעט מעט
ובזה יתמוגג המשחית וגורמת
התשובה חלישת כח המקטרגים
ע״ד עת אשר שלט אדם באדם
אדם רע באדם דקדושה לרע
לו דאדם בליעל. והגר אחר
שירשה מקומה של שרה והקל
בעיניה ברחה ונתענתה תחת
ידיה וזהו כוונת אברהם באומרו
הנה שפחתך בידך וכוונת שרה
לענותה כי חששה שגבר עליה
כח הקדושה בביאת אברהם
ואמר לה כי לא לקטה רק
סריות שבו והראיה כי תכנע
ותשתעבד תחתיה שהיא בסוד
הקדושה ע״ב רצתה שרה לנסות
זה בענות אותה כי לא היה לה
כוונת נשים קלי דעת בענות
אותה. ודימו שליטת החצוני
בכח הקדושה לחיה גדולה שבלע

The Holy One, blessed be He, judges a person only in the company of the heavenly court, which always begins with merit. Therefore, the chamber where the Sanhedrin sits is called the "Chamber of Merit." Not so the corresponding chamber in the realm of impurity,[1] which always begins with guilt. And when the Holy One, blessed be He, finalizes judgment, there is no one who can respond to Him, as it is said, "He is One, and who can turn Him back?" 5R

There is also [a distinction] in the sanctity between the earthly court and the heavenly court, and human judgment takes place in the higher realm where His mercies are abundant. They further said that "the soul that sins shall die," meaning that one must purge the destructive force created [by sin] through suffering. Repentance is effective but does not nullify the entire decree—rather, it suspends the suffering until one accepts it little by little, and through this the destructive force dissolves.[2] Repentance causes the weakening of the accusers' power, as in "a time when man rules over man to his detriment," meaning a wicked person [ruling] over a holy person, to the detriment of the wicked one. 10R 15R 20R

This is like Hagar, who after inheriting Sarah's position,[3] looked lightly upon her, fled, and was then afflicted under her hand. This was Abraham's intention when he said, "Behold, your maidservant is in your hand," and Sarah's intention in afflicting her was because she feared that the power of holiness had strengthened in her through Abraham's coming to her. He told her that [Hagar] had gathered only the thorns within him, and the proof was that she would submit and be subjugated to Sarah, who embodied the mystery of holiness. Therefore, Sarah wanted to test this by afflicting her, for she did not have 25R 30R 35R

[1] The Hebrew term 'kelipah' (shell/husk) is a technical kabbalistic concept referring to the realm of impurity or negative spiritual forces that oppose holiness. I've translated it in a more accessible way while maintaining the contrast with the 'Chamber of Merit.'

[2] The text describes a spiritual process where repentance doesn't eliminate suffering entirely but transforms how it's experienced. The Hebrew term 'yitmogeig' (dissolves/melts away) suggests that the destructive spiritual entity created by sin gradually loses its power through the controlled acceptance of suffering.

[3] The text uses the biblical story of Sarah and Hagar as a mystical allegory for the interaction between forces of holiness (Sarah) and external forces (Hagar). This represents a typically kabbalistic reading where biblical narratives reveal deeper metaphysical principles.

[i] This references Job 23:13, 'But He is in one mind, and who can turn Him?' The verse is invoked to establish God's ultimate authority in judgment once a decision is finalized.

אדם מזויין[i] ולא חבלו בפיה להיותה גדולה הרבה וזהו סוד והלבנון באדיר יפול[ii] והאדם
40 הזה שלא חובל בפיה יש בידו חרב פיפיות וירד לתוך מעיה של חיה זו והחרב בידו ובעודו בתוכה משחית בני מעיה בחרבו הקשה הנה ששליטתה בו הוא
45 לרע לה בסוד ותבאנה אל קרבנה ומראיהן רע[iii] וגו׳ כמו כן התשובה גורמת חלישות כח במקטרגים. ולכן השב מאהבה יש לו שכר על כל עון כאלו
50 עשה שתי מצות הא׳ החטא עצמו שנתהפך למצוה ומלאך רע נעשה טוב הב׳ המלאך החדש המתהוה מהתשובה פרטית שעושה לכל עון וזהו כי לקחה מיד ה׳ כפלים
55 בכל חטאתיה.[iv] כפלים נחמות ולכן נחמו נחמו עמי. והתשובה גם שהיא מיראה מועלת היא לנשמה להביאה לעה״ב שהמיתה עם התשובה כפרה עליו ובזהר
60 פ׳ מקץ על פסוק ויראו האנשים דף ר״א ע״ב שם יש תוכחה לאדם שיזכור יום המות תמיד גם בתקונים כתב על פסוק יונה דרוש רחב על הנשמה והגלות
65 אשריהם הצדיקים שתמיד מרבים שמן לנר נשמתם ורוחם בעה״ז וזוכים לבנים במיתתם כדאמרי׳ בפ׳ וישב דף ק״מ ע״ב. ואמרו בזהר פ׳ תרומה דף קכ״ח ע״א
70 כי השתדלות התלוי במעשה המצות אסור ליקח אותו בחנם שרוח הקדש אינו נמשך על the frivolous intentions of simple-minded women in afflicting her.

They compared the dominion of external forces over holiness to a great beast that swallowed an armed man without injuring him in its mouth, because it was so large. This is the secret meaning of "And Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one." This man, who was not injured in its mouth, has a double-edged sword in his hand, and he descends into the innards of this beast with the sword in his hand. While inside it, he destroys its inner organs with his sharp sword. Thus, its dominion over him is actually to its own detriment, as in the secret of "When they entered into their stomach, it could not be known that they had entered; their appearance was as bad as before." Similarly, repentance causes a weakening of the accusers' power. 40R 45R 50R

Therefore, one who repents out of love earns reward for each sin as if he had performed two commandments: first, the sin itself, which is transformed into a commandment, and a harmful angel becomes good; second, the new angel created from the specific repentance performed for each sin. This is the meaning of "For she has received from the hand of the LORD double for all her sins"—double consolations, and therefore "Comfort, comfort My people." 55R 60R

Repentance, even if motivated by fear, benefits the soul by bringing it to the World to Come, for death combined with repentance atones for him. In the Zohar, Parashat Miketz, on the verse "And the men were afraid" (page 201b), there is a rebuke for a person to always remember the day of death. Also in Tikkunim, on the verse about Jonah, there is an extensive discourse on the soul and exile. Fortunate are the righteous who always increase oil for the lamp of their soul and spirit in this world,[1] and merit chil- 65R 70R

[1] This uses the metaphor of a soul as a lamp requiring oil, drawing on the biblical imagery from

[i] This is a kabbalistic metaphor where the 'external forces' (forces of impurity) are compared to a large beast that swallows a person. The metaphor continues to explain that though the person appears to be overcome, they can actually defeat these forces from within through repentance.

[ii] This quotes Isaiah 10:34, 'And Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one.' In the kabbalistic interpretation here, Lebanon represents the forces of impurity that will ultimately fall through the action of the righteous.

[iii] This references Genesis 41:21 from Pharaoh's dream, where the thin cows devoured the fat ones yet remained as thin as before. It's used metaphorically to describe how negative forces cannot truly benefit from consuming holiness.

[iv] This quotes Isaiah 40:2, 'For she has received from the LORD's hand double for all her sins.' The author interprets this doubling positively as referring to double consolations, as reinforced by the next verse quoted ('Comfort, comfort My people').

האדם במעשה המצות אלא באגר שלים ואמר שכתוב בספר שלמד
75 אשמדאי לשלמה שכל מי שרוצה להעביר ממנו רוח הטומאה ולכסות רוח זרה ממנו כי צריך לקנות דבר הראוי לו לזה בכסף שלם ובהשתדלות רב וסגי שהוא
80 בטהרת משכנו ורצון לבו ולא שיטה לבו לימין ולא לשמאל ואם לאו הטהרה תתרחק ממנו ולא יהיה בידו כח לקנותה כבתחלה לפי שרוח הטומאה תזדמן תמיד
85 על הדבר שהוא חנם. ראה כמה גדול כחן של מעשה הצדיקים שאפי׳ זווג של ת״ח שאינם מולידים מתהוה מהם רוחות קדושות כדאמרו באברהם ושרה
90 וכמו כן זווג הנעשה בקדושה גם שאין אנו רואים הויה מוגלמת מהם. מהטפות ההם מתהוה כחות מוכנות להתלבש בהם ניצוצות הנדחים מהקדושה והכל לפי
95 הכוונה. והזווג שהוא עם אשתו קדושה בכוונה זכה יערה עליו רוח ממרום וידענו שהזווג שהוא להוליד כדומה נקרא בעילת קדושה והזווג שאין ראוי ללידה
100 בגון המניקה והמעוברת גם הוא לצורך גבוה ונקרא בעילת מצוה ולכן קראו כן לבעילה ראשונה שאיו האשה מתעברת ממנה ועיין בסי׳ י״ח וי״ט מאם כל חי מהגאון
105 מורי מפאנו[i] ושם תמצא כמה מיני יעודים מוכנים לצדיקים ושם דבר מסעודת לויתן ובסימן כ״א מדבר מבהמות בהררי אלף ובסי׳ כ״א מזיז שדי:[ii]

dren in their death, as is stated in Parashat Vayeshev, page 140b.

They said in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 128a, that effort related to the performance of commandments must not be taken for free,[1] because the holy spirit is drawn upon a person through performing commandments only with full payment. It says that in a book that Ashmedai taught to Solomon, anyone who wishes to remove the spirit of impurity from himself and to cover a foreign spirit from himself must purchase something suitable for this with full payment and with great effort. It is sufficient that he [do so] with purity of his dwelling and the will of his heart, not turning his heart to the right or to the left. Otherwise, purity will distance itself from him, and he will not have the power to acquire it as before, because the spirit of impurity is always ready to come upon something that is free.

See how great is the power of the righteous ones' deeds, that even the union of Torah scholars who do not produce children generates holy spirits, as they said regarding Abraham and Sarah. Similarly, a union performed in holiness, even if we do not see a tangible being produced from it—from those drops are formed powers ready to clothe themselves in the sparks that were pushed away from holiness, and everything depends on the intention. And the union with one's wife in holiness with pure intention causes a spirit from above to be poured upon him. And we know that a union intended for procreation is called a "holy union," while a union not appropriate for conception, such as with a nursing or pregnant woman, is also for a higher purpose and is called a "commandment union." Therefore, they also called the first act of intercourse by this name, since the woman does not become pregnant from it. See sections 18 and 19 of "Em Kol Chai" by my teacher, the Gaon of Fano, and there you will find several types

75R 80R 85R 90R 95R 100R 105R 110R

Proverbs 20:27 ('The spirit of man is the lamp of the LORD'). In kabbalistic thought, performing commandments and good deeds provides the 'oil' that illuminates one's soul.

[1] This reflects a kabbalistic principle that spiritual achievements require commensurate effort. The notion that holiness must be 'purchased' with 'full payment' shouldn't be understood literally as monetary payment, but rather as appropriate spiritual investment and effort.

[i] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an Italian kabbalist whom the author identifies as his teacher. Da Fano was known for synthesizing the kabbalistic systems of Cordovero and Luria and wrote extensively on Jewish mysticism.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Miketz — The Zohar passage is cited as a source encouraging contemplation of one's mortality, which is a central theme in Ma'avar Yabok. This practice of remembering death is presented as a spiritual discipline that leads to proper repentance and preparation. | Cf.

of rewards prepared for the righteous, and there he speaks of the feast of Leviathan,[1] and in section 21 he speaks of the Behemoth in the thousand mountains, and in section 21 of the wild animals of the field.

פרק כ״ח

Chapter 28

ברית ברותה לצדיק המקיים התורה מעוני דהיינו בעודו בגוף העני הלז שהוא מכח החצוני[i] ומיניה וביה יכניעוהו לעבודת יוצרו במצות גשמיות סופו יהיה לקיים התורה מעושר בלבוש מלכות בעולם הנשמות במצות רוחניות ובתפלין של אור[ii] והכתוב צווח ואומר ואהיה שעשועים יום יום[iii] אינו אומר והייתי רק ואהיה בג״ע מקום השעשוע והטיול ואמרו

A covenant is made with the righteous person who fulfills the Torah in poverty, meaning while still within this impoverished body which derives from external forces, and from within itself must subdue those forces to serve its Creator through physical commandments. In the end, such a person will fulfill the Torah in wealth, clothed in royal garments in the World of Souls,[2] through spiritual commandments and with tefillin of light.[3] Scripture proclaims, saying: "And I was daily His delight" [Proverbs 8:30]—it does not say "I was" but rather "I am" in the Garden of Eden, the place of delight

[1]This refers to a concept in Jewish eschatology where the righteous will participate in a feast featuring the primordial Leviathan at the end of days. In kabbalistic literature, this represents the spiritual delights awaiting the righteous in the World to Come.

[2]The concept of 'World of Souls' (olam ha-neshamot) refers to the realm where souls dwell after death but before resurrection. In kabbalistic thought, this is often associated with the Garden of Eden, where souls experience spiritual pleasure and continue their divine service in purely spiritual forms.

[3]The metaphor of 'tefillin of light' (tefillin shel or) represents the transformation of physical ritual objects into their spiritual essence in the afterlife. Just as physical tefillin bind a person to God's service in this world, these spiritual 'tefillin of light' represent the soul's eternal bond with the divine in the World to Come.

Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This Zohar passage is referenced to explain the spiritual economy of commandments, emphasizing that spiritual benefits must be earned through effort and investment, not received freely. This supports the author's broader thesis about the efficacy of proper repentance and ritual action. | Cf. Em Kol Chai — The author references this work by Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (identified as 'the Gaon of Fano') to direct readers to further discussions about rewards for the righteous in the afterlife, including mystical concepts like the feast of Leviathan and the Behemoth, which represent spiritual delights awaiting the righteous. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The reference to 'Tikkunim' points to Tikkunei Zohar, a section of kabbalistic literature that elaborates on the mystical significance of the soul's journey and exile, themes that are central to Ma'avar Yabok's discussion of death and the afterlife.

[i]The text describes the physical body as 'impoverished' and originating from 'external forces' (kochot ha-chitzonim), a kabbalistic term for negative spiritual forces. This reflects the dualistic view common in Jewish mysticism that the body has origins in lower spiritual realms while the soul comes from divine sources.

[ii]The phrase 'tefillin of light' represents a mystical transformation of the physical ritual object (tefillin) into its spiritual counterpart in the afterlife. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that each physical mitzvah has a corresponding spiritual reality in higher worlds.

[iii]This is a quote from Proverbs 8:30, where Wisdom speaks of being God's delight. The author makes an interpretive point about the Hebrew tense, noting that the verse uses the future-continuous form ('I will be/I am') rather than past tense ('I was'), suggesting the ongoing nature of divine delight in the righteous soul.

בשם ספרא דחנוך[i] שכל מצות של הצדיקים בארץ מתעטרים לעומדים לפני המלך ומשתעשע בהם הקב״ה ויורדין ועומדים לפניו בדיוקן אותו צדיק ומשתעשע הקב״ה באותו דיוקן ואח״כ נכתבים בספר זכרון לעמוד לפניו בקיום רב תמיד ועל הכסא דמות כמראה אדם[ii] במראה כולל כל דיוקנין דמלין דחכמתא.[iii] and spiritual journey.[1] And they said in the name of the Book of Enoch that all the commandments performed by the righteous on earth are crowned before those who stand before the King, and the Holy One, blessed be He, delights in them. They descend and stand before Him in the image of that righteous person,[2] and the Holy One, blessed be He, delights in that image. Afterward, they are inscribed in the Book of Remembrance to stand before Him in great permanence always, "and upon the throne was a likeness as the appearance of a man" [Ezekiel 1:26]—an appearance that encompasses all the images of matters of wisdom.[3]

והמתעסק בתורה שהיא נובלת חכמה של מעלה[iv] כמ״ש בתקון דף ע״ב כי חמה היא נוקבא לגבי שמשא לבנה נוקבא לגבי

One who engages in Torah, which is the fallen fruit of supernal wisdom—as it is written in Tikkun, page 72, that the sun is feminine in relation to the luminary, and the moon is feminine in relation to the

[1]The Hebrew term 'tiyul' (translated here as 'spiritual journey') has special significance in kabbalistic texts, referring to the soul's ability to traverse different spiritual realms and dimensions in the afterlife, an activity that provides sublime pleasure.

[2]The concept of 'diokna' (image) is crucial in kabbalistic understanding of the afterlife. It suggests that the soul maintains a recognizable 'form' even after death, and that this spiritual image continues to interact with divine realms.

[3]This complex phrase suggests that the human form seen on the divine throne encompasses all the spiritual forms created by wisdom and Torah study. In kabbalistic thought, human spiritual achievements become incorporated into the divine presence itself.

[i]The 'Book of Enoch' referenced here is not part of the standard Jewish biblical canon but belongs to pseudepigraphical literature. Its citation demonstrates the breadth of sources the author draws upon for mystical concepts about the afterlife.

[ii]This phrase quotes Ezekiel's vision of the divine throne (Ezekiel 1:26). By connecting this verse to the image of the righteous person, the author suggests a profound elevation of the human soul to the level of divine manifestation after death.

[iii]Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, other sections discussing the World of Souls — This passage expands on a theme found throughout Ma'avar Yabok regarding how actions in this world create corresponding spiritual realities in the World of Souls. The author uses this concept to comfort readers by showing how physical suffering and Torah study in this world transform into spiritual rewards after death. | Cf. Proverbs 8:30 — The author cites this verse about Wisdom being God's delight to suggest that the righteous soul becomes God's eternal delight in the Garden of Eden. The interpretive move is to read the verse's tense as indicating an ongoing present state rather than a past one. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:26 — This reference to Ezekiel's vision of the divine throne is used to suggest that the righteous person's image becomes part of the divine presence itself, incorporating human wisdom into the divine realm. | Cf. Book of Enoch — Though not part of the standard Jewish canon, the reference to the Book of Enoch shows the author's willingness to draw on pseudepigraphical works to support mystical concepts about the afterlife. | Cf. Zoharic concept of diokna (image/likeness) — The passage employs the kabbalistic concept of 'diokna' (spiritual image) from the Zohar, suggesting that the righteous person's spiritual form continues to exist and interact with the divine realm after death.

[iv]This phrase, literally "fallen fruit of supernal wisdom," is a rabbinic concept explaining that Torah as we know it in this world is merely a diminished reflection of the divine wisdom that exists in higher realms. Just as fallen fruit is a small part of what remains on the tree, Torah study in this world gives us only a taste of the complete wisdom we'll experience in the World to Come.

ירח ושם אמרו כי יש מ״ע
פנים למטה מסטרא דישראל
זוטא[i] והוא מטטרו״ן שהוא
מאור הנובל מחכמה של מעלה
דבריאה ודאצילות המתעסק
בה יזכה לעה״ב לאור החכמה
העליונה המחיה את בעליה
כאמרם ז״ל כל המלמד תורה
בעה״ז זוכה ומלמדה לעה״ב
שנאמר ומרוה גם הוא יורה.
ואמרו במדרש רבה פ׳ ס״ד רבי
ברכיה אמר בשם ר׳ יהודה.
אין כל יום שאין הקדוש ברוך
הוא מחדש הלבנה בב״ד של
מעלה. ובש״ר על פסוק לחם
לא אכל ומים לא שתה בעה״ז
אבל לעה״ב הוא אוכל מלחמה
של תורה והוא שותה ממימיה.
ומשה היה ניזון מזיו השכינה.
ואמרו בזהר פ׳ תרומה דלית
גבהו דאורייתא אלא בעלמא
דאתי ווי למאן דאיהו גס רוחא
במילי דאורייתא בעה״ז וכתוב
בר״מ פרשת תרומה וכמה רזין
עילאין אוקימנא במאן דאשתדל
באורייתא דזכי לאתקשרא
באורייתא דלעיל בהאי עלמא
לא שכיך ולא שכיך בעלמא
דאתי ואפי׳ בקבר שפתיה
מרחש׳. אורייתא[ii] כד״א דובב
שפתי ישנים וכה״א דדיה ירווך
בכל עת. והחכם נקרא בעל
תורה דהוא ודאי מאריה דביתא
דהא כל רזין דילה גליאת ליה
ולא כסיאת מיניה כלום והוא
במדרגת בן אחוז בעץ החיים
והעבד הוא אחוז בעץ הדעת
טוב ורע[iii] ואמר בר״מ פ׳
משפטים כי מדרגת נער שנאמר

moon's light—and there they said that there are seventy faces below from the side of Lesser Israel, which is Metatron, who is the light that falls from the supernal wisdom of Beriah and Atzilut. One who engages in it will merit in the World to Come the light of supernal wisdom that gives life to its possessors, as our Sages of blessed memory said: "Whoever teaches Torah in this world merits to teach it in the World to Come," as it is said: "And one who gives drink will also teach" [Proverbs 11:25].

And they said in Midrash Rabbah, chapter 64, Rabbi Berechiah said in the name of Rabbi Judah: "There is no day when the Holy One, blessed be He, does not renew the moon in the heavenly court." And in Shemot Rabbah on the verse "He did not eat bread nor drink water" [Exodus 34:28]—in this world, but in the World to Come, he eats from the bread of Torah and drinks from its waters. And Moses was nourished from the radiance of the Divine Presence.

And they said in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, that the height of Torah is only in the World to Come. Woe to one who is arrogant regarding matters of Torah in this world! And it is written in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Terumah: "And we have established many supernal mysteries concerning one who engages in Torah, who merits to be bound to the Torah above. In this world he does not rest, and in the World to Come he does not rest, and even in the grave his lips murmur Torah," as it is said, "causing the lips of those who sleep to speak" [Song of Songs 7:10], and as it is said, "her breasts will satisfy you at all times" [Proverbs 5:19].

The sage is called a "master of Torah," for he is truly the master of the house, as all its mysteries are revealed to him and nothing is concealed from him. He is at the level of a son who grasps the Tree of Life, while the servant grasps the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. And it says in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Mishpatim, that the level of [i] The text refers to "seventy faces below from the side of Lesser Israel." The number seventy is significant in Jewish tradition, often representing completeness or totality (seventy nations, seventy languages, etc.). Here, it refers to the multiple layers of interpretation possible within Torah.

[ii] The image of the deceased Torah scholar's lips continuing to murmur Torah in the grave is a powerful rabbinic concept found in several sources. It suggests that the connection between a scholar and Torah transcends death, with their teachings continuing to have influence in this world.

[iii] This presents a hierarchical understanding of Torah mastery. The "son" (ben) who grasps the Tree of Life represents one who understands Torah at its highest level, seeing its unified spiritual essence, while the "servant" (eved) who grasps the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil understands Torah only at the level of permitted and forbidden actions.

במשה כי היה במטטרו״ן קודם
שנדבק בעץ החיים וצד הרע
שבו גרם לו לחטא כי מטה
הראשון היה מעץ הדעת טוב
ורע ובר״מ פ׳ משפטים דף קי״ז
ע״ב פירש בסוד עץ החיים ועץ
הדעת טוב ורע רשע ורע לו.
עוד אמרו בתקון ס״ו דף ק״א
ע״א כי שבירת הלוחות גורם
איבוד בית ראשון ובית שני ושני
חרבנין היו תקון. והכנה לבית
השלישי שמתחלה הוצרך להיות
במדרגת הר ואח״כ במדרגת
שדה ואחר יעלה להיות במדרגת
בית ואז וגו׳ ונלכה אל בית
אלהי יעקב כי זכותו יעמוד
לעד והלוחות שניות היו מבחינת
עץ הדעת טוב ורע שמשם נתנה
תורה באיסור והיתר מימין חיים
ומשמאל מות ולכן א״ר עקיבא
לתלמידיו כשתגיעו לאבני שיש
טהור אל תאמרו מים מים[i] ולא
תהיו שוקלים שיש טהור לאבנים
אחרים שיש בהם חיים ומיתה ולא
עוד אלא כי תסתכנו בעצמכם
שאבני טוב ורע הם בפירוד
ואבני שיש טהור הם ביחוד בלי
פרוד כלל.[ii]

"youth" mentioned regarding Moses was because he was like Metatron before he cleaved to the Tree of Life, and the evil aspect within it caused him to sin, for the first staff was from the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. And in Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Mishpatim, page 117b, it explains the secret of the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil: "the wicked man who fares badly."

They further said in Tikkun 66, page 101a, that the breaking of the tablets caused the destruction of the First and Second Temples, and these two destructions were a rectification and preparation for the Third Temple. For at first it needed to be at the level of a mountain, and afterward at the level of a field, and afterward it would rise to the level of a house, and then "let us go up to the house of the God of Jacob" [Isaiah 2:3], for his merit will stand forever. And the second tablets were from the aspect of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, from which the Torah was given with prohibitions and permissions: life from the right and death from the left. Therefore, Rabbi Akiva said to his disciples: "When you reach the pure marble stones, do not say 'water, water,' and do not equate pure marble with other stones that contain life and death. Moreover, you would endanger yourselves, for the stones of good and evil are in separation, while the stones of pure marble are in unity without any separation at all."

[i] This refers to a famous passage in the Talmud (Hagigah 14b) concerning the mystical journey of four sages who entered "Pardes" (the mystical orchard). Rabbi Akiva warned them not to say "water, water" when they see what appears to be pure marble stones, because these are not physical waters but rather spiritual realities that appear as water. This warning symbolizes the danger of mistaking spiritual unity for duality or separation.

[ii] Cf. Tikkun (Tikkunei Zohar) — The text cites Tikkunei Zohar to establish a metaphysical framework about the hierarchical relationship between celestial bodies, which serves as an analogy for the relationship between different levels of Torah wisdom. | Cf. Midrash Rabbah — This reference establishes the daily renewal of the moon by God in the heavenly court, supporting the idea that divine wisdom is continuously renewed and that Torah study has cosmic significance. | Cf. Shemot Rabbah — This reference contrasts Moses' physical abstinence in this world with spiritual nourishment in the World to Come, establishing that Torah wisdom provides eternal sustenance. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This reference emphasizes that the full comprehension of Torah is only possible in the World to Come and warns against arrogance in Torah study in this world. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Terumah — This reference explains how engaging with Torah creates a connection that transcends death, with the scholar continuing to 'speak' Torah even after death. | Cf. Proverbs 11:25 — This verse is interpreted to mean that one who teaches Torah in this world will continue to teach it in the World to Come. | Cf. Song of Songs 7:10 — This verse about 'causing the lips of those who sleep to speak' is interpreted as referring to the continued teaching of Torah by scholars even after death. | Cf. Proverbs 5:19 — The phrase 'her breasts will satisfy you at all times' is interpreted metaphorically as Torah wisdom continuously nourishing its students even in the afterlife. | Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna, Parashat Mishpatim — This reference develops the contrast between the Tree of Life and the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil as representing different levels of spiritual understanding, with Moses initially at a lower level

עוד אמרו בפ׳ תרומה דף
קס״ה ע״ב פקודין דאורייתא
גרים לבר נש לאשלמא רוחיה
ונשמתיה בהאי עלמא ובעלמא
דאתי כתיב כי נר מצוה ותורה
אור צריך מעשה המצות בעה״ז
לתקן הנ״ר וצריך עסק התורה
להאיר הנר ונשים מתקנים נר
זה והאנשים בתורה מאירים
להההוא נר שהוא של מצוה
שהנשים נתחייבות בו.[i] עוד
רמז אור הוא למאתים ושבעה
עולמות הגנוזים בצד ימין ומאה
ושלש בצד שמאל[ii] וכבר בארנו
בסוף המעירי שחר שלנו מה
הוא פי׳ עולמות בכל מקום
מס״ה ותקונים ומספר כל
עולמות אלו הם שלש מאות
ועשר ואלה הקב״ה מתקן תמיד
ומאלה מתפשטים כמה אוצרי
חמדה הגנוזים להתעדן בהם
הצדיקים על אלה כתיב להנחיל
אוהבי י״ש. בכל אלה כתיב
עין לא ראתה ואור ימין זה
הוא נקרא אור ראשון ולעולם
הוא עושה תולדות והוא זרוע
בגן ועתה הגן גדל מספיחי

Furthermore, they said in Parashat Terumah, page 165b: "The commandments of the Torah enable a person to perfect their spirit and soul in this world and in the World to Come. It is written, 100R
'For a commandment is a lamp and the Torah is light'[1] (Proverbs 6:23). One needs to perform the commandments in this world to prepare the lamp, and one needs to engage in Torah study to illuminate the lamp. Women prepare this lamp, while men, 105R through Torah study, illuminate the lamp[2] of the commandment that women are obligated to fulfill."

There is another allusion: "light" refers to the two hundred and seven worlds hidden on the right side, and one hundred and three on the left side.[3] I 110R have already explained at the end of our Me'irei Shachar[4] what "worlds" means in every instance according to the Zohar and Tikkunim. The total number of these worlds is three hundred and ten. The Holy One, blessed be He, is constantly perfecting 115R these worlds, and from them extend many treasuries of delight hidden away for the righteous to enjoy. Concerning these it is written, "To bequeath to those who love Me substance (yesh)" (Proverbs 8:21). Regarding all these it is written, "No eye has seen" 120R (Isaiah 64:3). This light of the right is called the primordial light, and it eternally produces offspring. It is sown in the Garden, and now the Garden grows

[1]This verse from Proverbs 6:23 serves as the foundation for the entire kabbalistic interpretation that follows, where the author develops an elaborate metaphysical system based on the lamp/light imagery.

[2]The original text reflects a gendered division of spiritual labor common in traditional Jewish thought, where women and men have distinct yet complementary religious roles. This is based on women's exemption from certain time-bound commandments and their traditional obligations in three specific mitzvot.

[3]This precise numerical cosmology reflects kabbalistic teaching where the right side is associated with Chesed (loving-kindness) and the left with Gevurah (judgment/strength). The total of 310 worlds likely has significance in gematria (Hebrew numerology).

[4]This appears to be another work by the author of Ma'avar Yabok, Aaron Berechia of Modena. The title means 'Illuminators of Dawn' and likely refers to a prayer society or collection he compiled.

before ascending. | Cf. Tikkun 66 (Tikkunei Zohar) — This reference connects the breaking of the tablets to the Temple destructions, presenting them as necessary spiritual preparations for the ultimate Third Temple, which represents complete spiritual unity. | Cf. Isaiah 2:3 — This verse about going up to the house of the God of Jacob is cited in connection with the future Third Temple, representing the highest spiritual level.

[i]This passage presents a kabbalistic interpretation of gender roles in Judaism: women prepare the metaphysical 'lamp' through their ritual obligations, while men illuminate this lamp through Torah study, suggesting a complementary cosmic partnership rather than a hierarchy.

[ii]The text uses precise numerical symbolism characteristic of kabbalistic thought: 207 worlds on the right (associated with mercy) and 103 on the left (associated with judgment), totaling 310 worlds. These numbers likely have gematria (numerical) significance in the author's mystical system.

ספיחים ובריש פ׳ פקודי אמר
רע״ג דהוא גנוז ביה קיימין בני
נשא בעלמא דין ובן התורה
נזרעת תמיד בעולם ועושה
תולדות ופירות ומפירות שלה
נזון העולם. וא״כ בכל מצוה
הנפעלת בעולם הזה מתהוה
ממנה שני מיני יחוד האחד בגן
עדן של מעלה והשני בגן עדן
של מטה.[i] וזה סוד השעשוע
למבינים ומכ״ש שתתעלה מאד
הארת המצוה הרוחנית הנעשית
בגן עדן אחר המות ששם הוא
סוד העבודה והשמירה המעולה
ומעלה לשמים שיאה עד אין
קץ שהתעוררות מיושבי הגן
ה״ה נשמותיהם של צדיקים ששם
כבודם יגרום השעשוע שהוא
זווג הספירות וכמו שהמהלך בגן
הוא שעשוע הקב״ה עם שבינתו
כך והתהלכתי בתוככם אטייל
עמכם בגן עדן וגם זה יהיה
זווג הספירות על ידי תקוני
הצדיקים שהיו בעוה״ז ומי שהיה
בן יעבד להקב״ה בחייו יזכה
להיות עומד ומשמש כבן או
כעבד במותו ויהיה לו מהלכים
בעולמות הנזכרות ובזה טוב
יום המות מיום הולדו. וכתב
הגאון מורי מפאנו[ii] בפ״ק מחלק
ב׳ מחקור דין שלו כי ביום
החטא נולד המבטל שלפתח
חטאת רובץ וביום המות יתבטל
המבטל וטוביות המות הוא כי

from the aftergrowths of aftergrowths.[1] At the beginning of Parashat Pekudei, it says that this hidden light sustains humanity in this world. Similarly, the Torah is constantly being sown in the world, producing offspring and fruits, and from its fruits the world is nourished.

Therefore, with each commandment performed in this world, two types of unification are generated: one in the supernal Garden of Eden, and the second in the lower Garden of Eden. This is the secret of delight for those who understand. How much more so will the illumination of the spiritual commandment performed in the Garden of Eden after death be elevated, for there lies the secret of superior service and protection, ascending to the heavens immeasurably. For the stirring from the Garden's inhabitants—these are the souls of the righteous—whose honor there causes the delight that is the union of the sefirot. Just as one who walks in the Garden is the delight of the Holy One, blessed be He, with His Divine Presence, so too "I will walk among you" (Leviticus 26:12) means "I will stroll with you in the Garden of Eden." This too will be a union of the sefirot through the rectifications of the righteous who existed in this world.

One who was a son serving the Holy One, blessed be He, during their lifetime will merit to stand and serve as a son or as a servant after death, and will have pathways in the worlds mentioned. In this way, the day of death is better than the day of birth.[2] My teacher, the Gaon of Fano,[3] wrote in the first chapter of the second part of his Chikor Din that on the day of sin, the negator was born, as it is written, "sin crouches at the door" (Genesis 4:7), and on the day

[1] The Hebrew term 'ספיחי ספיחים' (sfikhei sfikhim) literally refers to plants that grow spontaneously from seeds that fell during the previous harvest, and then from those secondary plants. Here it's used metaphorically to describe how divine light continues to generate spiritual sustenance through multiple generations of emanation.

[2] This phrase echoes Ecclesiastes 7:1 ('the day of death is better than the day of one's birth'). The author gives this biblical wisdom a kabbalistic interpretation, explaining that death is superior because it transforms and purifies the evil inclination.

[3] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620), an important Italian kabbalist who synthesized the teachings of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria. Aaron Berechia of Modena identifies him as his teacher, establishing his intellectual lineage.

[i] The author presents a sophisticated kabbalistic understanding of mitzvot (commandments) where each physical action in this world generates two distinct spiritual unifications in different celestial realms—a concept that shows how human religious acts have cosmic significance.

[ii] The author refers to Rabbi Menachem Azariah da Fano (1548-1620) as 'my teacher,' indicating his direct intellectual lineage within Italian Kabbalah. Da Fano was a prominent kabbalist who synthesized the teachings of Moses Cordovero and Isaac Luria.

יטהר היצר הרע עצמו[i] וכמו שהרע מכלה את עצמו כנגדו הטוב מתרבה מיניה וביה כי יסודו מהעפר הקדוש העושה תולדות ופירות כדאמרי׳ על מעשה הצדיקים שיש להם קרן ופירות:[ii] of death, the negator will be nullified. The goodness of death is that the evil inclination itself becomes purified. Just as evil consumes itself, so does good increase from within itself, for its foundation is from the holy earth that produces offspring and fruits, as they said regarding the deeds of the righteous, that they have both principal and fruits.[1]

פרק כ״ט

Chapter 29

ולא זו בלבד שמור להם לצדיקים אלא מצותיהם יגדילו כ״כ למעלה כח הקדושה שאפילו גהינם יטהר ויתוסף על גבולי הגן עדן[iii] וזה לפי ששכר מצות

Not only is this reward preserved for the righteous, but their commandments will so greatly increase the power of holiness above that even Gehenna will be purified and added to the boundaries of the Garden of Eden.[A] This is because "there is no reward

[A] Or: "even Gehenna will be purified and its territory will be incorporated into the boundaries of the Garden of Eden" — This alternate translation more explicitly conveys the spatial transformation implied in the original text, where Gehenna's territory is not merely added to Eden

[1] The concepts of 'principal' (keren) and 'fruits' (peirot) come from rabbinic teachings about rewards for good deeds. The 'principal' is preserved for the World to Come, while the 'fruits' can be enjoyed in this world (Mishnah Peah 1:1). The author gives this traditional concept a kabbalistic interpretation.

[i] The text presents an unusual positive theology of death, suggesting that death purifies even the evil inclination itself, transforming what is typically viewed as negative into something ultimately beneficial in the divine cosmic plan.

[ii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This passage quotes directly from the Zohar Terumah to establish the relationship between Torah study, commandment observance, and their effects on the soul in both worlds. The Zohar text forms the foundation for the author's subsequent mystical interpretation about the spiritual mechanics of mitzvot. | Cf. Proverbs 6:23 — This biblical verse serves as the basis for the mystical exegesis connecting commandments to lamps/candles and Torah study to light, establishing a metaphorical framework that the author then expands into a comprehensive kabbalistic system. | Cf. Proverbs 8:21 — This reference supports the author's teaching about divine rewards stored for the righteous, connecting material from Proverbs to the kabbalistic concept of hidden treasuries of delight in the supernal worlds. | Cf. Isaiah 64:3 — This biblical reference emphasizes the transcendent nature of the divine rewards stored for the righteous, reinforcing that these spiritual treasuries exist beyond ordinary human perception. | Cf. Leviticus 26:12 — The author reinterprets this biblical verse, originally about God's presence among the Israelites, as a mystical reference to divine strolling in the Garden of Eden with the souls of the righteous, transforming a covenant promise into a description of posthumous spiritual intimacy. | Cf. Genesis 4:7 — This verse is used to describe the origin of the evil inclination ('the negator') that emerged at the time of sin, establishing a theological framework where death serves the positive function of nullifying this negative force. | Cf. Zohar Parashat Pekudei — The author references the Zohar's teaching that the primordial light sustains humanity, creating a parallel between this light and Torah as cosmic sustaining forces that nourish the world. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author references his own work 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), showing the interconnection between his writings and suggesting that this current text builds upon concepts previously established there regarding the mystical meaning of 'worlds.' | Cf. Chikor Din by Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano — The author cites his teacher's work to support his mystical interpretation of death as a positive event that purifies the evil inclination, showing how his teachings build upon established kabbalistic traditions.

[iii] This remarkable concept suggests that at the end of days, even Gehenna (Hell) will be purified and incorporated into the boundaries of Paradise, representing a complete cosmic transformation where even the realm of punishment becomes part of the divine good.

בהאי עלמא ליכא וחסידה שהיא השכינה בשמים ידעה מועדיה[i] וחושבת מחשבות להכין לעת קץ. וכל המצות והמעשים טובים בעושים ישראל היא אוצרת אותם בגן עדן וכל חדושי תורה שמחדשים ישראל עתידים הם לאומרם לעוה״ב בתוספת בינה כנראה באדרת נשא כי אחר שסיימו רבי שמעון בן יוחאי וחביריו י״ג תקוני אריך. קודם התחלתם בתשעה תקוני זעיר בישר רשב״י לשבעה עיני ה׳ שנשארו מהעשר שהיו כי קב״ה גמר דין דלעלמא דאתי יאמרו הם זמנא אחרא כל אינון מלין קדישין ובין דא לדא הם כמוסים בגן עד כי יבא עת שלמותן ומצרף גם כן כל מחשבות טובות של ישראל למעשה ואפי׳ הקרבנות נעשים למעלה כאלו ב״ה היה קיים כי מיכאל מקריב למעלה עבורנו כבשים של אש[ii] וזהו ואישי ישראל ותפלתם בדדרש הגאון מורי מפאנו על פסוק שמחנו כימות עניתנו בריש עשרה מאמרות שלו. והנה תמיד בכל יום מתרבים האורות למעלה בחדרי גן עדן מלבד הנשמות הקדושות והישיבות אשר מתוספת שם מדי יום ביום ולהיות כי אין שפע יורד למטה שהכל משומר לעת קץ לכן למטה בכל יום קללתו מרובה מחבירו.[iii] ואמרי׳ בירושלמי for commandments in this world," and the stork, which represents the Divine Presence, "knows her appointed times in the heavens" and devises plans to prepare for the end of days. All the commandments and good deeds that Israel performs, She stores in the Garden of Eden, and all the Torah insights that Israel creates, they will eventually recite them in the World to Come with additional understanding, as seen in the Idra of Naso. For after Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his companions completed the thirteen rectifications of Arich, before beginning the nine rectifications of Zeir, Rabbi Shimon announced to the "seven eyes of the Lord" that remained from the original ten that the Holy One, blessed be He, decreed that in the World to Come, they would explain all these holy matters[A] another time. And between this time and that, they remain hidden in the Garden until the time of their completion.

He also combines all the good thoughts of Israel into deeds, and even the sacrifices are performed above as if the Temple still existed, for Michael offers on our behalf lambs of fire above. This is the meaning of "the fire-offerings of Israel and their prayer," as my teacher, the Gaon of Fano, interpreted regarding the verse "Gladden us according to the days You afflicted us" at the beginning of his Ten Discourses. Indeed, every day the lights increase above in the chambers of the Garden of Eden, besides the holy souls and academies that are added there daily. And since no divine flow descends below, as everything is preserved for the end of days, therefore below, each day's curse exceeds that of the previous day.

As stated in the Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah, Chapter 7: "The aftergrowths we ate in our youth were better than the peaches we ate in our but actually becomes part of it. This better captures the cosmic reconfiguration described in the eschatological vision.

10R 15R 20R 25R 30R 35R 40R

[A] Or: "all those holy words" — The Aramaic 'מלין' specifically refers to words or utterances rather than matters or topics. This alternate translation better preserves the emphasis on the actual teachings and discourses that will be explained in the World to Come, rather than just the concepts.

[i] The author interprets the stork (חסידה) from Jeremiah 8:7 as representing the Divine Presence (Shekhinah), using wordplay since חסידה also shares a root with חסד (kindness). This metaphor suggests that the Divine Presence knows the proper timing for redemption and is actively preparing for it.

[ii] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that the archangel Michael continues to perform celestial sacrifices on Israel's behalf even after the destruction of the Temple, suggesting that earthly ritual practices have cosmic analogues that continue in the spiritual realms.

[iii] This references the Talmudic concept that the world continuously degenerates spiritually in the דפאה פ״ז יפין ספיחות שאכלנו

בילדותינו מפרסקין שאכלנו
בזקנותינו דביומוי אשתני עלמא
ועל דרך זה אמרי׳ במסכת גיטין
45 אך למעלה בכל יום ברכתו
מרובה. וזהו טעם דבעקבות
משיחא חוצפא יסגי וכי יבא
כנהר צר רוח ה׳ ינוססה בו
כי אז הגן והעדן יהיה מלא על
50 כל גדותיו משובע וברכת ה׳
והמולות המולות שרפי קדש
נבראים ונוצרים ונעשים ממעשה
התחתונים מיום חרבן בית ראשון
עד יום הגאולה ולעת קץ ברגע
55 יפתחו שערי הגן ואחריו שערי
העדן תחתון ועליון ומרוב
הכחות קדושות והארות עליונות
שיצאו כלם יחד יתבסם ויטהר
העולם ורוח הטומאה יעבור
60 מן הארץ וגר זאב עם כבש וגו׳
ושעשע יונק שהוא מטטרון על
חור פתן[i] על נוקבא דתהומא
רבה ויבולע סם מן סמאל וכן
מכל כחותיו ואז יתקדש גם כן
65 חללה של גהינם המכוונת נגד
פתחי גן עדן והיו כל זדים וכל
עושי רשעה קש ולהט אותם
היום הבא ברוך אשר לו נתכנו
עלילות. ובזה נבין אמרם שלשה
70 באים בהיסח הדעת.[ii] האחד
משיח וגם עקרב[iii]

old age," for in his days the world changed. And in this vein, we say in Tractate Gittin that above, each day's blessing exceeds the previous. This explains why in the footsteps of the Messiah, insolence will increase, but "when distress comes like a river, 45R the spirit of the Lord will raise a standard against it," for then the Garden and Eden will be filled to overflowing with divine abundance and blessing. Multitudes upon multitudes of holy seraphim are created, formed, and made[A] from the deeds of those 50R below, from the day of the destruction of the First Temple until the day of redemption. At the end of days, in an instant, the gates of the Garden will open, followed by the gates of lower and upper Eden. Due to the abundance of holy powers and 55R supernal illuminations that will all emerge together, the world will become fragrant and purified, and the spirit of impurity will pass from the earth, and "the wolf will dwell with the lamb," etc. The suckling child, who is Metatron, will play over the hole of 60R the asp, over the opening of the great abyss, and poison will be swallowed from Samael and from all his forces. Then even the void of Gehenna, which is aligned opposite the entrances to the Garden of Eden, will be sanctified, and all the wicked and 65R evildoers will be like stubble, and the coming day will consume them—blessed is He to whom all actions are reckoned.

Through this we can understand their statement that three things come when one's mind is diverted: 70R one is the Messiah, and also the scorpion [that stings

[A] Or: "Tumultuous multitudes of holy seraphim are being created, formed, and fashioned" — The Hebrew phrase 'המולות המולות' has a connotation of noise and commotion beyond just quantity, suggesting a dynamic, vibrant process of angelic creation. The alternate translation attempts to capture this auditory and energetic quality of the multitudes being described.

pre-messianic era. The author presents the paradox that while the earthly realm experiences increasing darkness, the heavenly realms simultaneously accumulate increasing light.

[i] The author interprets Isaiah's messianic prophecy (11:8) "A suckling child shall play over the hole of the asp" in kabbalistic terms, identifying the child with the angel Metatron who will neutralize the cosmic forces of evil (represented by Samael) at the time of redemption.

[ii] This is a reference to the Talmudic statement (Sanhedrin 97a) that three things come unexpectedly: the Messiah, a found object, and a scorpion. The author begins to explain this concept but the passage is cut off.

[iii] Cf. Idra of Naso — The text references the Idra of Naso (a section of the Zohar containing Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's mystical teachings), specifically regarding the thirteen rectifications of Arich and nine rectifications of Zeir, which are kabbalistic configurations of divine attributes. This reference establishes that Torah insights developed in this world will be more fully understood in the World to Come. | Cf. Gaon of Fano — The author cites Rabbi Menachem Azariah of Fano (referred to as 'my teacher, the Gaon of Fano'), demonstrating both intellectual lineage and the source for the interpretation about sacrifices being offered by the angel Michael in the absence when one's attention is elsewhere].

שהוא החמא העוקץ בא
משום שהסיח דעתו מן
הקדושה.[i] ומציאה כפשטה.[ii] ועיין
בפ׳ כי תשא דף קפ״ח ופ״ט וצ׳ 75R ושם משל נאה.[iii] הנה כי
הצדיקים מקיימים בגן עדן
עליון ותחתון מצות ומעשים
טובים ברוחניות יותר גדול וזה 80R
מעין חותם המצות דוקא שעסקו
בהם בעולם הזה:[iv] וממה שבא
בהקדמת תקוני הזהר נראה

The sin that stings comes because one has turned his mind away from holiness.[A] And a "finding" is meant literally.[1] See in Parashat Ki Tisa pages 188, 189, and 190, where there is a beautiful parable.[B] Indeed, the righteous fulfill commandments and good deeds in the upper and lower Garden of Eden with even greater spirituality, and this resembles the seal of specifically those commandments they engaged with in this world.[C]

From what appears in the introduction to Tikkunei Zohar, it seems that a person has many [A] Or: "The stinging sin [like a scorpion] comes because one has diverted his attention from holiness" — The term 'עוקץ' (stinging) has a connotation of a scorpion's sting in rabbinic literature, creating a metaphor for sin as a scorpion that stings when one's guard is down. This adds a layer of imagery that might better convey the original metaphor.

[B] Or: "See in the Zohar on Parashat Ki Tisa, folios 188, 189, and 190, where there is an elegant parable" — The reference is clearly to the Zohar on Parashat Ki Tisa, not the biblical passage itself. Specifying 'Zohar' and using 'folios' instead of 'pages' more accurately reflects the nature of the reference in this mystical text.

[C] Or: "this is like the spiritual imprint of precisely those commandments they occupied themselves with in this world" — The concept of 'חותם' (seal) in Kabbalistic literature often refers to a spiritual imprint or impression that leaves its mark in higher worlds. This translation better conveys the mystical concept that one's actions in this world create corresponding spiritual realities in the next.

[1] The author is explaining that while the 'scorpion' in the triad is metaphorical (representing sin), the 'finding' (metziah) should be understood in its plain sense as a lost object that one finds unexpectedly.

of the Temple. This establishes the concept that earthly religious practices have cosmic impact even without the physical Temple. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Tractate Pe'ah — The citation about aftergrowths in youth versus peaches in old age illustrates the decline of the material world over time, contrasting with the spiritual realm where illumination increases daily. This supports the author's theological framework that divine abundance accumulates in supernal realms while being withheld from the earthly realm until the messianic era. | Cf. wolf will dwell with the lamb — This biblical reference to messianic peace is reinterpreted in kabbalistic terms to describe the transformation and purification of all spiritual realms, including even Gehenna (Hell), suggesting that the ultimate redemption will reconcile all opposing forces in creation. | Cf. when distress comes like a river, the spirit of the Lord will raise a standard against it — This prophetic verse is used to explain the paradox of increasing spiritual darkness before messianic redemption, suggesting that the crescendo of negative forces will be met with a proportional divine response when the accumulated spiritual merits are finally released into the world.

[i] This statement follows the author's mention of three things that come unexpectedly: the Messiah, the scorpion (or sin), and a lost object. Here, he elaborates that sin, metaphorically likened to a scorpion's sting, attacks when one's attention has been diverted from holiness.

[ii] The author is explaining the third item that comes unexpectedly—a found object (metzia)—stating that this should be understood literally, unlike the metaphorical interpretation he provides for sin/scorpion.

[iii] The author refers to a parable in the Zohar's commentary on Exodus (Ki Tisa) that illustrates how distraction from holiness creates vulnerability to sin. This cross-reference is characteristic of kabbalistic literature, which often builds arguments through interwoven textual references.

[iv] This expresses the kabbalistic concept that one's actions in this world create corresponding spiritual realities in the next. The mitzvot performed in this world leave a spiritual 'seal' or 'imprint' that determines the nature of one's spiritual activities in Gan Eden after death.

כי הרבה מסייעים יש לאדם
המגלים לו רזי תורה וכל שכן
לעוה״ב. ראשונה יש אליהו עוד
נשמות של מתיבתאן עילאין.
המלאכים. שמות הקדושים
הויות וכנוים. ועשר ספירות
והארת הנשמות למעלה הוא מן
הכסא ופורחין מצדיק חי עלמין
ומאירין למלכות. ובעלי הקבלה
פורחין לעולם אחר השכינה
ועליהם נאמר לא תקח האם על
הבנים[i] ועוסקי בתורה לשמה
הם בגדר זה וכן מניחי תפלין
ומיחדי קריאת שמע ושומרי אות
ברית קדש ומקיימי לולב באגדו
וסוכה הם פורחים אחר השכינה.
ובתקון י״ח אמר רבי שמעון בן
יוחאי כי העוסק בתורת ה׳ כל
הבריות מסייעים אותו[ii] כמה
דאוקמוה כל העולם כלו לא
נברא אלא לצוות לזה ואפילו
שרפים וחיות ואופנים לא נבראו
אלא לסייעו וכל העוסק בטל
תורה לשמה טל תורה מחייהו
ובתקון ס״ט דף קי״א אמר כי
נצוץ נשמת מרע״ה מתפשט בכל
צדיק וחכם שעוסק בתורה. וזהו משה שפיר קאמרת דאיתמר

helpers who reveal to him the secrets of Torah, and all the more so in the World to Come. First, there is Elijah, then the souls from the heavenly academies,[1] the angels, the holy Names—the Tetragrammaton and divine epithets[2]—and the ten sefirot. The illumination of souls above comes from the Throne, and they fly from "the Righteous One, Life of the Worlds" and illuminate Malkhut (Kingdom).[A] The masters of Kabbalah always fly after the Divine Presence, and concerning them it is said, "You shall not take the mother bird with the young."[3] Those who engage in Torah study for its own sake are in this category, as are those who don tefillin, unify through the recitation of the Shema, guard the sign of the holy covenant, and fulfill the commandments of the lulav bundle and sukkah—they all fly after the Divine Presence.

In the 18th Tikkun, Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai said that when one engages in God's Torah, all creatures assist him, as they established: "The entire world was created only to accompany this person." Even the seraphim, holy beasts, and wheel angels were created only to assist him. Anyone who engages in the dew of Torah for its own sake is given life by the dew of Torah.[4] And in Tikkun 69, page 111, he said that a spark of Moses our Teacher's soul extends into every righteous person and sage who engages in Torah.[5] This is the meaning of "Moses, you have [A] Or: "and they emanate from Yesod (the Righteous One, Life of the Worlds) and illuminate Malkhut (Kingdom)" — In Kabbalistic terminology, 'צדיק חי עלמין' specifically refers to the sefirah of Yesod. Adding this technical term provides greater precision for readers familiar with Kabbalah and clarifies the mystical cosmology being described, where divine light flows from Yesod to Malkhut.

[1] The term 'מתיבתאן עילאין' refers to celestial academies where the souls of departed sages continue to study Torah. This concept of heavenly yeshivot is common in rabbinic and mystical literature.
[2] The Hebrew 'הויות וכנוים' refers to the four-letter divine name (YHVH) and other divine titles or descriptive names used for God in Jewish tradition.
[3] The author creatively reinterprets the biblical commandment from Deuteronomy 22:6-7 about sending away a mother bird before taking her young. In this mystical reading, pursuing the Divine Presence must be done with proper reverence and spiritual approach.
[4] This plays on the dual meaning of 'טל' (tal/dew), which can refer both to the dew of resurrection in Jewish tradition and to the life-giving qualities of Torah study. The phrase suggests that proper Torah study itself provides spiritual vitality.
[5] This reflects the kabbalistic concept of 'nitzotzot neshamah' (soul sparks), where the souls of

[i] The author creatively reinterprets the biblical commandment about sending away a mother bird before taking her young (Deuteronomy 22:6-7). In this mystical reading, those who pursue the Divine Presence (the 'mother bird') must do so with proper reverence and spiritual approach.
[ii] Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai was the traditional author of the Zohar, the central text of Jewish mysticism. The teaching cited here from Tikkun 18 of Tikkunei Zohar emphasizes the cosmic support system available to those engaged in Torah study.

בגמרא[i] ואמרו עוד כי העוסק בתלמוד לעתיד לבא ילך עם בעלי תלמוד אם במשנה ילך עם בעלי משנה וכן במקרא ואגדה. וירא אלהים יעשה לו מהלכים בין כל העומדים האלה. ובתבו שטוב להתענות קודם סיום המסכתא.[ii] [iii] spoken well," as mentioned in the Talmud. They further said that one who studies Talmud will, in the future, walk with masters of Talmud; if one studies Mishnah, they will walk with masters of Mishnah; and likewise with Scripture and Aggadah. One who fears God will be granted pathways among all these standing ones. And they wrote that it is good to fast before completing a tractate.[1]

וברבה פ׳ כי תצא אמר ר׳ שמעון בן לקיש כל מי שנכנס לבתי כנסיות ולבתי מדרשות בעוה״ז זוכה ליכנס שם לעתיד לבא שנאמר אשרי יושבי ביתך עוד יהללוך סלה. ויהללוך לעתיד משמע ר״א אמר ר׳ יודן כל מי ששומע בקול תורה בעוה״ז זוכה לשמוע אותו קול לעוה״ב וכו׳. וכל מה שעוסקים המלאכים וצדיקים בג״ע אינו רק בכ״ד ספרים ובתורה שבע״פ. ומבעי ליה לאדם להסתיר מעשיו הטובים מבני אדם שבזה שכרו יהיה נסתר מבעלי הדין שהקב״ה חופה עליו. כדאמרי׳ בירושלמי

And in Rabbah, Parashat Ki Teitzei, Rabbi Shimon ben Lakish said: "Anyone who enters synagogues and houses of study in this world merits to enter them in the future world, as it is said, 'Happy are those who dwell in Your house; they will praise You forever' (Psalms 84:5). 'They will praise You' implies in the future." Rabbi Eleazar said in the name of Rabbi Yudan: "Anyone who listens to the voice of Torah in this world merits to hear that voice in the World to Come," and so forth. And all that the angels and righteous ones engage with in the Garden of Eden[2] is only the twenty-four books [of the Bible] and the Oral Torah.

A person should conceal his good deeds from people, for by doing so, his reward will remain hidden from the forces of judgment, as the Holy One, blessed great figures contain multitudes of sparks that become distributed among later generations. Here, every true Torah scholar is said to contain an element of Moses's soul.

[1] This refers to the practice of fasting before a siyum (completion ceremony) of a Talmudic tractate, treating this intellectual achievement as a spiritual occasion worthy of ascetic preparation.

[2] Throughout the text, the author uses 'Garden of Eden' (Gan Eden) as a metaphor for both the afterlife and the elevated spiritual state achieved through Torah study, particularly at midnight.

[i] The phrase 'Moses, you have spoken well' appears in several Talmudic passages when a sage makes a particularly insightful interpretation. The author suggests this is because every Torah scholar who speaks wisdom contains a spark of Moses' soul.

[ii] This refers to the practice of fasting before completing the study of a Talmudic tractate, which was considered a spiritually significant occasion worthy of special preparation.

[iii] Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The passage explicitly cites the Tikkunei Zohar, specifically mentioning Tikkun 18 and Tikkun 69, to establish the concept that mystical study is supported by various spiritual entities, especially in the afterlife. The author uses these references to establish authoritative support for the concept of expanded mystical understanding in the World to Come. | Cf. Zohar on Parashat Ki Tisa — The text references specific folios in the Zohar on Parashat Ki Tisa regarding a parable about distraction from holiness. This reference supports the opening statement about sin coming from turning away from holiness, connecting the theoretical concept to a narrative illustration in the Zohar. | Cf. Deuteronomy 22:6-7 — The phrase 'לא תקח האם על הבנים' (do not take the mother with the young) alludes to Deuteronomy 22:6-7. In this context, it's being used metaphorically—Kabbalists who pursue the Divine Presence (the mother bird) must maintain proper spiritual distance and reverence, similar to the biblical commandment of sending away the mother bird before taking the young. | Cf. Talmudic concept of 'Moses, you have spoken well' — The phrase 'משה שפיר קאמרת' (Moses, you have spoken well) appears in several Talmudic passages when a sage makes a particularly insightful interpretation. Here it's used to suggest that when any Torah scholar speaks wisely, it's because they contain a spark of Moses' soul, explaining why this expression appears throughout the Talmud.

דמועד קטן על ההיא איתתא
דאיענשא משום דהות מפרסמא
עצמה בימי תעניתה וזה א׳
ממעלות התפלין שנקראי׳ כנפי
יונה שמסתירים הנשמה מבעלי
הדין כיונה המגינה בכנפיה. על
כן אשרי אדם אשר לו שיח ושיג
תמיד בסדרי זרעים וקדשים
וטהרות וכן בשאר המצות שלא
יוכל לקיימן במעשה יהגה בהם
ועקימת פיו יחשב לו למעשה
אחר מיתתו ובזה יזכה לקיים
כל התורה כלה בעולם הנשמות
וזהו שכר מצוה מצוה וכבר ידוע
שסגולות המשניות הם להכניע
היצר שהם בעולם דמטטרו״ן עץ
הדעת טוב ורע ויכוין להרוג
היצר בגרסתו כדאמרי׳ בדוד
דקטליה בגרסתיה ועל כן אמר
ולבי חלל בקרבי. ויועיל
שנונם ג״כ לטהרת המחשבות
ובזרעים מרבה זרע הקדוש לגן
עליון ובטהרות מטהר עצמו
ומחשבותיו ובקדשים מקדש
עצמו ומקדש עליון וכן כל סדר
ומסכתא יש להם סגולה בפני
עצמה כאשר בארנו בסוף מעירי
שחר שלנו. ואחזה אנכי אשית
לבי כי טוב לכל משכיל לתקון
נפשו לקרא פעם אחת בכל שנה
ספר הסמ״ג מלבד כי כל הוגה
בו יחכם ויידע להדורי סברא
בפלפולי התוספות וגאוני עולם.
עוד סגולה נפלאה להרוג היצר
ולהכניעו הוא לקום בחצות
לילה לעסוק בתורה כי מלבד
מעלות רבות שזוכה אליהם
כמו שבא מזה למעלה ויבא ג״כ
לפנינו בעה״י הוא הורג היצר
ומכניעו וזה רמזו רז״ל באמרם
הבא להרגך השכם להרגו כלומר
בא השטן להרגך אין לך במה

be He, covers over him. As we find in the Jerusalem Talmud of Moed Katan regarding a certain woman who was punished because she publicized herself during her fast days. This is one of the virtues of tefillin, which are called "wings of a dove," as they conceal the soul from the forces of judgment, like a dove that protects with its wings.

Therefore, fortunate is the person who constantly discusses the orders of Zeraim [Seeds], Kodashim [Holy Things], and Taharot [Purities], as well as other commandments he cannot fulfill practically. He should meditate upon them, and the movement of his lips will be considered as if he performed them after his death. Through this, he will merit to fulfill the entire Torah in the world of souls, and this is the meaning of "the reward of a commandment is a commandment." It is well known that the special qualities of the Mishnayot are to subdue the evil inclination,[1] as they exist in the world of Metatron, the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. One should intend to kill the evil inclination through study, as they said regarding David, who killed it through his study, and thus he said, "My heart is hollow within me" (Psalms 109:22).

Diligent study also purifies one's thoughts. Through [studying the order of] Zeraim, one increases holy seed for the supernal garden; through Taharot, one purifies oneself and one's thoughts; and through Kodashim, one sanctifies oneself and the supernal realm. Similarly, each order and tractate has its own special quality, as we explained at the end of our "Me'irei Shachar" [Illuminators of Dawn].

I perceive and set my heart to realize that it is good for every thoughtful person seeking to perfect his soul to read the Sefer HaMitzvot HaGadol [SeMaG] once each year. Besides the fact that anyone who studies it will become wise and know how to reason in the dialectics of the Tosafists and the great scholars, there is another wonderful quality for killing and subduing the evil inclination: rising at midnight to engage in Torah study.[2] Beyond the many virtues one attains through this, as mentioned above and as

[1] The author presents a mystical understanding of Mishnah study where each order creates specific spiritual effects: Zeraim (agricultural laws) produces 'spiritual seeds,' Taharot (purity laws) creates spiritual purification, and Kodashim (sacrificial laws) generates sanctification in higher realms.

[2] Midnight Torah study (Tikkun Chatzot) is considered especially potent in Kabbalistic tradition because it occurs during the time when divine judgment is balanced with mercy. This practice became particularly emphasized in Kabbalistic circles following the teachings of Isaac Luria in the 16th century.

שתהרגהו אלא בהשכמה וזהו
השכם ובזה אתה הורגו והטעם
כי אז הוא היחוד מדת לילה
ביום והיחוד הוא הריגת ס״מ
ואם הוא ישן הוא נהרג כי השליט
עליו המות לשינה כי היא אחד
משישים במיתה. וזהו שאמר
ההוא ספדנא נשים ימים כלילות
על מי שמשים לילות כימים
דהיינו היחוד שהיה מיחד היום
עם הלילה. א״כ אשריו ואשרי
חלקו ממי שהוא מתגבר כארי
להשתעשע עם הקדושה בג״ע
מחצות ואילך: [i] will be discussed later with God's help, it kills and subdues the evil inclination. This is what our Sages hinted at when they said, "If someone comes to kill you, rise early to kill him"—meaning, when Satan comes to kill you, you have no means to kill him except by rising early, and this is the meaning of "rise early." Through this, you kill him. The reason is that this is the time of unification between the attribute of night and day, and this unification is the killing of Samael.[1] If one is sleeping, he is being killed, for he has allowed death to rule over him through sleep, which is one-sixtieth of death.[2] This is what the eulogizer meant when he said, "Let us make days as nights for one who made nights as days"—meaning the unification that unified day with night.[3] Therefore, fortunate is he and fortunate is his portion, one who strengthens himself like a lion to delight with holiness in the Garden of Eden from midnight onward.

פרק ל׳

Chapter 30

אם כן גדול כחן של עושי מצוה
בעוה״ב למה ינום אדם הנלבב
ויישן אם הוא כשכיר יקוה פעלו
להרבות כבוד עליון ע״כ תמיד

Therefore, since the power of those who perform commandments in the World to Come is so great, why should a thoughtful person slumber and sleep? If one is like a laborer who anticipates his wages[4] to [1] Samael (often abbreviated as S"M in kabbalistic texts) is a name for the angel of death or Satan. The concept that Torah study 'kills' this entity reflects the kabbalistic understanding that spiritual disciplines neutralize negative spiritual forces.

[2] This refers to the Talmudic concept (Berakhot 57b) that sleep is a minor form of death, considered one-sixtieth of actual death. The author uses this to suggest that sleeping through the spiritually potent midnight hour is a form of spiritual surrender to death forces.

[3] In Kabbalistic thought, 'unification' (yichud) refers to the mystical joining of opposing cosmic forces or divine attributes. Here, midnight Torah study creates a unification between day (representing mercy/masculine) and night (representing judgment/feminine) forces, which has cosmic repercussions.

[4] The metaphor of a laborer (שכיר) waiting for wages appears in biblical texts like Leviticus 19:13 and Job 7:2. Here it's repurposed to suggest that humans should view their religious obligations

[i] Cf. Psalms 84:5 — This verse is used as proof that those who attend synagogues and study houses in this world will merit to enter them in the World to Come, with particular emphasis on the word 'od' (yet/still/again) suggesting future praise. | Cf. Jerusalem Talmud, Moed Katan — This reference is brought as a cautionary tale about a woman who was punished for publicizing her fasting, teaching that good deeds should be done privately. | Cf. Psalms 109:22 — The verse is interpreted to mean that David had killed his evil inclination through Torah study, leaving his heart 'hollow' or empty of evil desires. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar — This appears to be another work by the same author (Aaron Berechia of Modena) where he previously elaborated on the special qualities of each Mishnaic order and tractate. | Cf. Sefer HaMitzvot HaGadol (SeMaG) — The author recommends annual study of this comprehensive legal code by Rabbi Moses of Coucy (13th century) as beneficial for spiritual development and intellectual growth. | Cf. Talmudic dictum 'If someone comes to kill you, rise early to kill him' — This well-known Talmudic principle about self-defense is reinterpreted mystically to refer to rising early (particularly at midnight) to study Torah as a means of defeating the evil inclination (Satan).

לא יחשה מתורה ותעודה ויהיה
רץ למצוה קלה כבחמורה כדי
שיעשה לו הכנה לקיים תורה
ומצות בסוד רוחניותם שבגן
עליון ותחתון. ואם ירצה לזכות
לפתורא דדהבא מסמכת מזכות
ג׳ אבות[i] הגומלים חסדים טובים
ומירכין עילאין ומסיומא דגופא
יסדר שולחנו בעוה״ז לפני ה׳
ולפני הפנים עליונים שלכן
אמרו כי היה נקרא לחם הפנים
להיותו שואב מהפנים עליונים.
וצריך על כל שלחן דברי תורה
וחלק לעניים דכתיב ונפש נענה
תשביע ואח״כ אז תתענג על ה׳
מכל אינון עידונין דאתמשכאן
לההוא כבוד עליון ואמרי׳ בפ׳
תרומה דף קנ״ו ע״ב כי שלחן יש
לצדיקים בעולם ההוא שהמזון
וספוק של עידון שאוכלים באותו
עולם הוא כמו מה שאוכלים
מלאכים עליונים[ii] ומזה אכלו
ישראל במדבר והוא סוד הטל
דנגיד ונמשך מסוד עוה״ב ומשם increase the glory of the Most High, then one should never be silent from Torah and testimony, and should run to perform a minor commandment as eagerly as a major one,[1] in order to prepare oneself to fulfill Torah and commandments in their spiritual essence that exists in the upper and lower Garden of Eden. And if one wishes to merit a golden table[A] supported by the merit of the three Patriarchs[2] who bestow good kindnesses, and by the supernal thighs,[B] and by the conclusion of the body, one should arrange one's table in this world before God and before the supernal Faces. For this reason they said that it was called the Showbread because it draws from the supernal Faces. And every table requires words of Torah and a portion for the poor, as it is written, "and satisfy the afflicted soul" (Isaiah 58:10), and afterward "then you shall delight in the Lord" (Isaiah 58:14) from all those delights that flow to that supernal glory. And it is said in Parashat Terumah, page 156b, that there is a table for the righteous in that world, and the food and provision of delight that they eat in that world[C] is like what the supernal angels eat. This is what the Israelites ate in the wilderness, and this is the secret

[A] Or: "a celestial golden table" — The Aramaic term 'patura d'dahava' has a mystical connotation that goes beyond a mere physical golden table. It refers specifically to a celestial or metaphysical table of gold that exists in higher spiritual realms as a reward for the righteous. This translation better captures the otherworldly nature of this concept.

[B] Or: "by the supernal supports" — While 'ירכין' literally means 'thighs,' in kabbalistic context this anatomical metaphor refers to cosmic supporting structures or pillars. A less literal translation would obscure the body metaphor that is important in kabbalistic literature, but might be more accessible to readers unfamiliar with these mystical anthropomorphisms.

[C] Or: "the spiritual sustenance and delight that they experience in that world" — The 'eating' described here is not physical consumption but a metaphor for spiritual absorption or experience. This alternate translation moves away from the literal food imagery to emphasize the non-physical nature of this sustenance, though at the cost of losing the deliberate parallel between physical and spiritual eating.

as sacred labor with spiritual compensation in the World to Come.

[1] This alludes to the rabbinic teaching in Pirkei Avot (Ethics of the Fathers) 4:2 that one should be 'as scrupulous about a minor mitzvah as about a major one, for you do not know the reward given for the respective mitzvot.'

[2] The imagery of a 'golden table' (פתורא דדהבא) in the World to Come builds on the biblical Showbread table but transforms it into a mystical reward. The three Patriarchs as 'supports' reflects the kabbalistic concept that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob correspond to the divine attributes that sustain creation.

[i] This refers to a mystical 'golden table' in the afterlife that is supported by the merit of the three Patriarchs (Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob). In Kabbalistic thought, the Patriarchs correspond to the divine attributes of Chesed (Loving-kindness), Gevurah (Strength), and Tiferet (Beauty).

[ii] The text describes mystical nourishment in the World to Come as comparable to what angels consume. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that physical eating in this world has a spiritual counterpart in higher realms.

נזונים סוד נשמות הצדיקים
בג״ע ומתהנים שם שמשם נשמות
מתלבשות בגן כמו שהיו בעולם
הזה ומתפשטים ממנו בשבתות
ובמועדים ועולים לראות בכבוד
מאריהון[i] ולהתעדן בעדן עליון.
ופירוש יבא כל בשר כי כל זה
הוא רוח השולט על הגוף הנקרא
כל בשר כמו שכ״ל עליון נכנס
בגוף עליון וזהו ויתרון ארץ
בכל הוא וזהו יבא כ״ל בשר
לא הבשר דוקא ועל עידון זה
כתיב עין לא ראתה. וכל העוסק
בתורה על שלחנו יהב תוקפא
למאריה ומלאך סוריא נטיל כל
אינון מלין ושוי דיוקנא דההוא
שלחן קמי קב״ה[ii] ושלחן בזה
מטהר לאדם מכל עונותיו ומזכה
אותו לטוב עליון לעולם הבא
וצורך תקון עליון הוא שדברי
תורה יהיו נשמעים על השלחן
קודם ברכת המזון. ומזכהו
למזון עולם הזה ונזכר לטוב
קמי עתיק יומין ומוסיף כח וחיל
במקום שצריך [iii]

of the dew that flows and extends from the secret of the World to Come.[1] From there, the secret of the souls of the righteous in the Garden of Eden[A] are nourished and take pleasure, for from there souls are clothed in the garden as they were in this world. And they divest themselves of it on Sabbaths and festivals, and ascend to behold the glory of their Master and to delight in the supernal Eden. And the interpretation of "all flesh shall come"[2] (Isaiah 66:23) is that this is the spirit that rules over the body, which is called "all flesh," just as the supernal ALL enters the supernal body. This is the meaning of "the advantage of the land is in all"[3] (Ecclesiastes 5:8), and this is why it says "ALL flesh shall come," not specifically the flesh. And concerning this delight it is written, "No eye has seen it" (Isaiah 64:3). And whoever engages in Torah study at his table gives strength to his Master, and the angel Suriah takes all those words and places the image of that table before the Holy One, blessed be He. Such a table purifies a person from all his sins and merits him supernal goodness in the World to Come. It is necessary for supernal rectification that words of Torah be heard at the table before the Grace After Meals. This merits him sustenance in this world, and he is remembered favorably before the Ancient [A] Or: "the essence of the righteous souls in the Garden of Eden" — The Hebrew 'סוד' (secret) can sometimes refer to the inner essence or fundamental nature of something, not merely something hidden. This translation might better capture the meaning in context, suggesting the innermost reality of these souls, though it loses the technical kabbalistic connotation of 'secret' as a mystical dimension.

[1] In kabbalistic thought, 'dew' (טל) is associated with resurrection and divine sustenance. It has a numerical value of 39, which connects it to various mystical formulas. The author is suggesting that the manna eaten by the Israelites was actually a manifestation of this spiritual dew from higher realms.

[2] The author is reinterpreting Isaiah 66:23 ('All flesh shall come to worship before Me') to suggest that 'all flesh' refers not to physical bodies but to the spiritual essence (רוח) that animates and rules over flesh. This aligns with the text's general approach of finding spiritual meanings behind physical descriptions.

[3] The Hebrew word for 'all' (כל) is treated as a technical term in Kabbalah, often associated with the sefirah of Yesod (Foundation). The author is connecting this verse from Ecclesiastes with the concept that divine blessing flows through this cosmic 'ALL' into the physical world.

[i] This describes a kabbalistic concept that on Sabbaths and festivals, souls in the Garden of Eden temporarily divest themselves of their 'garden garments' to ascend to higher spiritual levels and behold divine glory directly.

[ii] Suriah is an angel mentioned in kabbalistic literature who is responsible for carrying the words of Torah spoken at one's table and presenting them before God. This illustrates the belief that spiritual entities mediate between human religious activities and divine realms.

[iii] Cf. Garden of Eden — The passage continues the book's exploration of the Garden of Eden as both an afterlife destination and a spiritual source. It specifically adds the concept that righteous souls there continue to perform spiritual versions of Torah and commandments, suggesting a of Days, and adds power and strength in the place where it is needed.

ובזה יזכה לשלחן הגדול משלחנם של גדולים. ועל הכל יכוין בברכת המזון לתקון עליון ועיין בזה בפרשת תרומה קכ״ד וקנ״ז. ושם אמר דצריך לומר מזמור על נהרות בבל על השלחן ועיין בדף ק״ט בכוונת ד׳ ברכות וסמיכותן ובע״ב ביאר ההוא רביא סדר ז׳ ברכות החופה וסמיכותן ואמר כי רצון השכינה שכל העולם ישאלון מזונות שהיא מקבלת בראשונה ע״כ הלהגנו לבקש רחמים על המזונות אפי׳ בשבת כנראה בסדר יום ראשון ממעירי שחר כי זה נקרא צורך גבוה ושם פירש מה הוא הקושי ליתן מזונות לעולם וקושי קריעת ים סוף וכן קשים זווגים ושם בדף קע״א ועמוד ב׳ וע״ג ביאר דרוש על סדר הככבים יע״ש וכלן לצורך מעשה הצדיקים. ובעולם הזה העושי מצות נאחזים בעלים הנובלים מאילן עץ החיים וכל מעשה המצות בשעתו עולה וכותב עצמו שם בטרפי האילן

In this way, one will merit the great table, greater than the tables of the great ones.[1] In all of this, one should direct their intention during the Grace After Meals toward supernal rectification. See about this in Parashat Terumah, pages 124 and 157. There it states that one must recite Psalm 137 ("By the rivers of Babylon") at the table, and see on page 109 regarding the intention of the four blessings and their connection. On page 72, that youth explained the order of the seven blessings of the wedding canopy and their connections, stating that it is the Divine Presence's will that the entire world should request sustenance, which She receives first. Therefore, we persist in requesting mercy for sustenance even on the Sabbath, as appears in the order for the first day in our "Illuminators of Dawn,"[2] for this is called "a higher need." There it explains what is the difficulty in providing sustenance to the world, the difficulty of splitting the Red Sea, and likewise how difficult matchmaking is. And there on page 171, column 2 and 3, a discourse on the order of the stars is explained—see there—and all of them are for the purpose of the righteous ones' deeds.

In this world, those who perform commandments grasp onto the leaves that fall from the Tree of Life,[3] and every act of a commandment, at its time,

[1] This is a metaphorical reference to spiritual reward, where the 'table' represents divine sustenance and blessing in both this world and the next. The comparison to 'tables of the great ones' suggests surpassing even the spiritual rewards of renowned sages.

[2] This appears to be a reference to the author's own prayer collection. Aaron Berechia of Modena seems to have compiled prayers for different occasions, including special requests for sustenance that were permitted even on Sabbath due to their spiritual significance.

[3] The author presents a mystical interpretation where mitzvot (commandments) create tangible spiritual realities depicted as 'leaves' from the cosmic Tree of Life. This connects physical religious actions with their supernal counterparts and effects.

continuity between religious practice in this world and the next. | Cf. Table imagery — The text draws parallels between the biblical Showbread table from the Temple, an individual's dining table in this world, and a metaphysical 'golden table' in the World to Come. This creates a mystical continuum where everyday dining practices connect to both ancient Temple rituals and future spiritual rewards. | Cf. Zohar Terumah 156b — The author explicitly cites this Zohar passage to establish the concept of a special table for the righteous in the afterlife. This reference authenticates his teaching about the continuity between physical and spiritual nourishment across different planes of existence. | Cf. Isaiah 58:10-14 — The text quotes from Isaiah to establish that sharing with the poor (material charity) leads to spiritual delight. This supports the author's central argument that physical actions in this world create corresponding spiritual realities in the next. | Cf. Israelites eating manna in the wilderness — By connecting the heavenly food of the righteous with the manna eaten by the Israelites, the author suggests that the manna was not merely physical sustenance but a manifestation of spiritual nourishment from higher realms, foreshadowing what the righteous will experience in the World to Come.

שבתוך הגן. ונלע״ד ראיה
לדרוש זה מטרפי דעלי שהזמין
אליהו בגלימיה דרבה בר אבוה
במציעא פרק המקבל ובתר
כן שמע קלא דהוה אמר מאן
אכיל לעלמיה בחייוהי כרבה
בר אבוה.[i] וזהו ספר המתקיים
עמהם אך אינו מתראה לעין
פמליא של מעלה וכ״ש למה
שלמטה מהם רק ביום ראש
השנה שבכח הגברת האש והדין
המתרבה באותו יום למעלה
בכסא מעשה הצדיקים והרשעים
שמידי יום ביום נכתבים זה
בחלק הטוב שבעץ הדעת טוב
וזה בחלק הרע שבו אינו נקרא
ונראה עד יום ר״ה כמשל
הכתיבה העשויה מאיזה מי
פירות כגון המיץ של לימוני
שאין מתראה מה שכתוב בו
עד כי יקריבוהו אצל האש כן
בר״ה ג׳ מיני ספרים נפתחים
שהם ג׳ מיני אוירים ספיריים
אחד לצד ימין בחלק הטוב
שבעולם מטטרון והוא מעשי
הצדיקים ואויר ספיריי אחד
שמצד שמאל בחלק הרע שבעץ
הדעת טוב ורע ומשם יניקתו
וכחו של ס״מ וחיילותיו ובו
נרשם ונכתב מעשיהם של רשעים
בסוד האפר שאינו עושה פירות
ואויר דביני וביני חציו לצד
מטטרון וחציו לצד ס״מ בו כתוב
ורשום מעשיהם של בינונים ובכח
האש הגדול המתלהט עליהם
מכח עולם הכסא דכל נשמתין

ascends and writes itself there on the leaves of the tree within the garden. It seems to me there is proof for this interpretation from the leaves that Elijah prepared in his cloak for Rabbah bar Avuha in Bava Metzia, chapter "The Receiver," after which he heard a voice saying, "Who has consumed his world during his lifetime like Rabbah bar Avuha?"[1] This is the book that remains with them, but it is not visible to the eye of the heavenly entourage—and certainly not to those below them—except on Rosh Hashanah, when, through the power of the intensifying fire and judgment on that day above in the Throne, the deeds of the righteous and the wicked, which are written day by day—these in the good part of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, and these in the evil part of it—are not read and seen until the day of Rosh Hashanah. It is like the parable of writing made from some fruit juice,[2] such as lemon juice, where what is written in it is not visible until it is brought near the fire. Similarly, on Rosh Hashanah, three types of books are opened, which are three types of ethereal atmospheres: one to the right side in the good part of the world of Metatron, containing the deeds of the righteous; and one ethereal atmosphere to the left side in the evil part of the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil, from which Samael and his forces draw their nourishment and power, and in which the deeds of the wicked are inscribed and written according to the mystery of ash, which does not produce fruit;[3] and an atmosphere in between, half toward Metatron and half toward Samael, in which the deeds of the intermediate ones are written and inscribed. And through the power of the great fire that blazes upon them from the power of the world of the Throne, from which all holy souls are [1]This refers to the exceptional case of someone experiencing in this world the spiritual pleasures typically reserved for the World to Come. The author uses this to show how the 'leaves' of good deeds can provide spiritual sustenance even in this life.

[2]The author uses the metaphor of invisible ink (lemon juice) that only becomes visible when heated to explain how human deeds, though recorded constantly, only become 'visible' to divine judgment on Rosh Hashanah through the intensification of supernal fire.

[3]This metaphor contrasts with the 'leaves' and 'fruit' imagery used for righteous deeds. The wicked deeds are recorded as 'ash,' symbolizing their spiritual sterility and inability to generate positive spiritual consequences.

[i]This refers to a Talmudic story (Bava Metzia 114b) where Rabbah bar Avuha encountered Elijah in a cemetery and benefited from divine pleasure in his lifetime. The author uses this story to demonstrate that the spiritual rewards normally reserved for the afterlife can sometimes be experienced in this world by the exceptionally righteous.

קדישין מתמן אתגזרו מביום הרת
עולם שמלך המשפט יושב על
הכסא וכל באי עולם מתראים
לפניו בכל בחינותיהם חצוניים
ופנימיים וכל צבא השמים
עומדים עליו אז כרגע בכח
מדת הדין האוקר כל נסתרות
יוצא לגילוי רושם מעשים אלו
דוגמא לזו אמרו בתקון דף ע״א
ע״ב וגוונין אלו נהריו ברקיעא
עד דיעול תמן קב״ה כי אז
נאמר נפתחו השמים ואראה
מראות אלהים וידוע כי כסא
הכבוד מתעלה ומתהדר במעשה
התחתונים ומשמח בתולת ישראל
במחול שלו בשלהבת שתמיד
מתנועעת כלפי מעלה וזה כי
תאב להתדבק בעילתו בכח
קשוטי התחתונים המתראים בו.
לכן בשעת התפלה טוב לנענע
עצמו דרך ימין ושמאל לרמז
התעוררות הכסא ואמרי׳ בפ׳
תרומה דף קנ״ד ע״א כורסא
קדישא לא אתקן לעיל אלא מגו
תקונא דבני עלמא[i] כד אינון
זכאין וחסידין וידעין לתקנא
תקונוהי וזהו כל הנקרא בשמי
ולכבודי בראתיו. וכ״ש עולם
היצירה והעשיה. ובזהר החדש
במדרש הנעלם דף ל״ב תנו רבנן
כשאדם הולך בדרכי קונו הרבה
מסייעים אותו ונשמתו מלאכי
השרת שכיצה וכלם מכריזים
לפניו בלכתך לא יצר צעדך
וגו׳. ובסדר שלש מיני אוירין
אלו נבין פירוש שלשה ספרים
נפתחים[ii] לא אמר נכתבים שכבר
הם כתובים כל א׳ בשעת מעשה
ברם ביום הדין כי הנה ה׳
באש יבא[iii] נפתחים שמתראה

hewn, from the day of the world's creation when the King of Judgment sits on the Throne and all who enter the world appear before Him in all their aspects, external and internal, and all the host of heaven stand over Him—then, in an instant, through the power of the attribute of Judgment which investigates all secrets, the imprint of these deeds comes to revelation.

Similar to this, they said in Tikkunim, page 71b, "These colors shine in the firmament until the Holy One, blessed be He, enters there," for then it is said, "The heavens opened and I saw visions of God." And it is known that the Throne of Glory is elevated and glorified through the deeds of those below, and gladdens the virgin of Israel in His dance, like a flame that always moves upward, because it yearns to cling to its cause through the power of the adornments of those below that appear in it. Therefore, during prayer, it is good to move oneself right and left to symbolize the arousal of the Throne. And it says in Parashat Terumah, page 154a, "The holy throne is not established above except through the rectification by the people of the world when they are meritorious and pious and know how to establish its rectifications," and this is "Everyone who is called by My name, for My glory I have created him." And how much more so the world of Formation and the world of Action.

And in the New Zohar, in the Hidden Midrash, page 32, the Rabbis taught: "When a person walks in the ways of his Creator, many assist him—his soul, the ministering angels, the Divine Presence—and all of them proclaim before him, 'When you go, your steps shall not be impeded,' etc." And in the order of these three types of atmospheres, we can understand the interpretation of "three books are opened"—it does not say "written," for they are already written, each one at the time of the deed. However, on the day of judgment, for behold, "the Lord will come with fire," they are opened so that what is hinted at in them becomes visible and articulated through

[i] This Zoharic teaching explains that the divine throne (symbolizing God's sovereignty) is established through human righteous actions. The author uses this to demonstrate how human deeds directly affect supernal realms.

[ii] This refers to the rabbinic teaching that on Rosh Hashanah, three books are opened: one for the completely righteous, one for the completely wicked, and one for those in between. The author provides a kabbalistic interpretation of this concept, explaining these 'books' as three types of ethereal atmospheres where human deeds are recorded.

[iii] This is a reference to Isaiah 66:15, which describes divine judgment coming with fire. The author uses this biblical imagery to explain how the 'hidden writing' of human deeds becomes visible

ונהגה מה שנרמז בהם בכח אש
גלילי הכסא הרובץ עליהם
וכמו שהעתידות בדעת עליון
לא יחייבו הטוב והרע כן רושם
שבאוירים אלו לא יחייבו מיתה
וחיים לבעליהם עד כי יתראו
למטה בסוד הכתיבה שהכתיבה
היא הויה נגלית כדבר הנגבל
בספר על ידי הכתיבה וסוד
הכתיבה היא במלכות יד החזקה
החתימה היא באימא יד הגדולה
וכלא כ״ח פרקים ויש עוד יד
רמה כנדרש בתקון נ״ה דף
צ״ב בעולם המלאכים כתביאל
ממונה על הכתיבה. חתמיאל
על החתימה כתביאל מסטרא
דאימא חתמיאל מסטרא דחכמה
ותרווייהו חיים בהו ג׳ אצבעות
מתייחדים לקולמוס לכתיבה
ועליהם אמר בן זומא אין בין
מים העליונים לתחתונים אלא
בג׳ אצבעות[i] ושנים סומכים
להני ה״א תתאה כותב באות וא״ו
שהוא קולמוס קנה הזרוע ה״א
עילאה חותם באות יו״ד שהוא
כף היד ובסוף תקון י׳ וגם בתקון
י״ח דורש בכתיבה וחתימה פוק
חזי. וכתיב באדם ותפקדנו
לבקרים לרגעים תבחננו[ii] וזה
שמלבד דין ראש השנה בנזכר
[iii] עוד יש דין המות

the power of the fiery rings of the Throne resting upon them. And just as future events in supernal knowledge do not determine good and evil, so too the impressions in these atmospheres do not determine death and life for their owners until they appear below in the mystery of the writing. For writing is a revealed existence, like something bounded in a book through writing. And the mystery of writing is in Malkhut, "the strong hand"; the sealing is in Imma, "the great hand"; and all are 28 joints. And there is also "the uplifted hand," as interpreted in Tikkun 55, page 92. In the world of angels, Kataviel is appointed over writing, Chatamiel over sealing. Kataviel is from the side of Imma, Chatamiel from the side of Chokhmah, and both are living. In them, three fingers unite for the pen for writing, and regarding them Ben Zoma said, "There is nothing between the upper waters and the lower waters except three fingers," and two support them. The lower Hei writes with the letter Vav, which is the pen, the reed of the arm; the upper Hei seals with the letter Yod, which is the palm of the hand. And at the end of Tikkun 10, and also in Tikkun 18, he expounds on writing and sealing—go and see. And it is written concerning humans, "You remember him every morning, You test him every moment." This means that apart from the judgment of Rosh Hashanah mentioned above, there is also the judgment of death.

through the intensification of divine fire on the day of judgment.

[i] This quotes a teaching from Ben Zoma in Genesis Rabbah 2:4 about the separation between upper and lower waters in creation. The author recontextualizes this to explain the metaphysical process of writing in the heavenly books, where three fingers unite for the cosmic 'pen.'

[ii] This is a quotation from Job 7:18. The author uses this verse to establish that divine judgment occurs not only annually on Rosh Hashanah but also continuously, with daily examinations of human deeds.

[iii] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — The passage references specific pages in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, regarding the spiritual significance of blessing after meals and its effects on supernal worlds. These references provide detailed kabbalistic explanations of how human actions below create cosmic effects above. | Cf. Psalm 137 (By the rivers of Babylon) — The text prescribes reciting this psalm during meals, connecting the mundane act of eating with the redemptive themes of the psalm. This unexpected connection suggests a kabbalistic view that table rituals can help rectify the cosmic exile. | Cf. Bava Metzia — The reference to Elijah preparing leaves in his cloak for Rabbah bar Avuha alludes to a Talmudic story (Bava Metzia 114b) where Rabbah encounters Elijah in a cemetery. The author uses this as proof that righteous actions create tangible spiritual 'leaves' that can be 'consumed' or experienced even in this world. | Cf. Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil — This biblical reference (Genesis 2-3) is reinterpreted in kabbalistic terms to represent a cosmic structure where human deeds are recorded. The author presents a tripartite division of this tree, with righteous deeds recorded on the good side, wicked deeds on the evil side, and intermediate

ומי שהגיע זמנו למות קודם
ר״ה[i] אז מעשיו בכח הדין
שדנין אותו[ii] נכתבין ונחתמין
למעלה:[iii iv]

And for one whose time to die arrives before Rosh Hashanah, his deeds are written and sealed above[1] through the power of judgment[2] that judges him.

פרק ל״א

Chapter 31

מה שאמרנו בפרק הקודם
שהצדיקים נאחזים בעלים
הנובלות מאילן עץ החיים
בסוד נובלת חכמה של מעלה
תורה[v] זהו בעוה״ז אך אחר
שמתעלים ומתאחדים בעולם

What we said in the previous chapter—that the righteous cling to the leaves that fall from the Tree of Life, in the mystery of[3] "the fallen fruit of supernal wisdom is Torah"[A]—this applies to this world. But after they ascend and unite in the World of Souls, there they merit to enjoy the very essence of the light

[A] Or: "Torah is the withered leaves of supernal wisdom" — The term 'novelet' (נובלה) can refer to fallen leaves or withered fruit. This alternate translation emphasizes the hierarchical relationship between celestial wisdom and earthly Torah, suggesting Torah is a more distant derivative of divine wisdom.

[1] The term "above" (למעלה/l'maalah) has mystical significance in kabbalistic texts, referring to the celestial realms where divine judgment occurs. The author is describing a metaphysical process of recording the deceased's deeds in the heavenly books.

[2] I've rendered "בכח הדין" as "through the power of judgment" to convey the kabbalistic concept that divine judgment is an active force or power that processes the soul after death, not merely a passive evaluation.

[3] The Hebrew term 'besod' (בסוד) literally means 'in the secret of' and is commonly used in kabbalistic texts to introduce an esoteric interpretation. I've translated it as 'in the mystery of' to maintain the mystical connotation.

deeds in between. | Cf. Me'irei Shachar (Illuminators of Dawn) — The author references his own prayer collection, indicating that this composition likely contained specific prayers and kavvanot (spiritual intentions) for requesting sustenance, even on Sabbath when mundane requests are typically discouraged. | Cf. Tikkunei Zohar — The citation from Tikkunei Zohar about colors shining in the firmament connects to the author's explanation of how human deeds become visible on Rosh Hashanah. This reference supports the kabbalistic concept that human actions create visible 'colors' or effects in supernal realms. | Cf. Ezekiel 1:1 — The quotation 'The heavens opened and I saw visions of God' comes from Ezekiel's vision of the divine chariot. The author uses this to illustrate how divine judgment works through revelation—just as Ezekiel's vision involved an opening of heavens, the judgment process involves an 'opening' of cosmic books.

[i] Abbreviation for Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year and day of judgment.

[ii] This phrase carries kabbalistic significance, referring to the power of divine judgment that becomes activated for an individual at death. In the cosmology of Ma'avar Yabok, each person's death triggers a personalized judgment process.

[iii] The metaphor of "writing and sealing" derives from the Rosh Hashanah liturgy where God is described as writing and sealing the fate of all living beings. Here, it's applied to an individual judgment process at death, using the same celestial record-keeping imagery.

[iv] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, Section 4.4 — This text connects to an earlier discussion in Ma'avar Yabok about the three books opened on Rosh Hashanah. Here, the author explains what happens to those who die before the annual judgment day—they undergo an individual judgment process where their deeds are recorded in the celestial ledger outside the regular annual cycle. | Cf. Talmud, Rosh Hashanah 16a-b — This passage builds on the Talmudic concept that three books are opened on Rosh Hashanah: one for the completely righteous, one for the completely wicked, and one for those in between. The author adapts this concept to explain the status of those who die before this annual judgment day.

[v] This phrase refers to a rabbinic teaching that Torah in this world is merely the 'fallen fruit' or residue of the supernal wisdom. It appears in Genesis Rabbah 17:5, where Rabbi Abbahu states, 'Torah is only the fallen fruit of the supernal wisdom.'

הנשמות שם זוכים ליהנות מעצם
האור המתהוה מאור הקדום
שתמיד עושה פירות לצדיקים
שנאמר אור זרוע לצדיק[i] כנראה
בזהר פ׳ תרומה דף קמ״ט
דאור זה אזדרע כהאי זרעא
דעביד תולדין וזרעין ואיבין
ומיניה אתקיים עלמא ואמר כי
הענן ששכן על המשכן[ii] היה
מסטרא דאור קדמאה וגם
שאינו נגלה ממנו מחדש בכל
יום מעשה בראשות וחדוש זה
הוא למעלה מן השמש בגן עדן
שבעליית שם הצדיקים מתרבים
בו בכל עת האורות ושם עוסקים
ומשתעשעים בפירות אילן עץ
החיים וזהו כוונת הפסוק אמרו
צדיק כי טוב כי פרי מעלליהם
יאכלו. ואמרו שכל מעשינו
בעה״ז הם תהו ואפי׳ מעשה
המצות[iii] [iv]

that emanates from the Primordial Light, which constantly produces fruits for the righteous, as it is said, "Light is sown for the righteous" (Psalms 97:11). As appears in the Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 149, where it states that this light is sown like a seed that produces offspring, seeds, and fruits,[1] and from it the world is sustained. And it says that the cloud that dwelled over the Tabernacle came from the aspect of the Primordial Light, and though it is not revealed from it, it renews the work of Creation every day. And this renewal occurs above the sun, in the Garden of Eden, where through the ascension of the righteous there, the lights increase at all times, and there they engage and delight in the fruits of the Tree of Life. This is the meaning of the verse, "Say of the righteous that it shall be well with them, for they shall eat the fruit of their deeds" (Isaiah 3:10). And they said that all our deeds in this world are vanity,[A] even the performance of commandments.

[A] Or: "emptiness" — The Hebrew term 'tohu' (תהו) could also be translated as 'emptiness' or 'formlessness', which might better capture its cosmological significance in kabbalistic thought, where it refers to an unformed state of potential rather than mere futility.

[1] The original Hebrew uses Aramaic terms from the Zohar: 'azdara' (is sown), 'avid toladin' (produces offspring), 'zar'in' (seeds), and 'eibin' (fruits). This agricultural metaphor is central to the passage's understanding of how divine light generates ongoing spiritual benefits.

[i] This is a quotation from Psalms 97:11, 'Light is sown for the righteous.' The author interprets this verse as indicating that divine light is planted like a seed that produces ongoing spiritual fruits for the righteous in the afterlife.

[ii] This refers to the cloud of divine glory that rested on the Tabernacle in the wilderness, as described in Exodus 40:34-38. The author, following the Zohar, interprets this cloud as an emanation of the Primordial Light.

[iii] This is a striking statement that all deeds in this world, even the performance of divine commandments, are considered 'vanity' or 'emptiness' (תהו). This does not mean they are worthless, but rather that they are incomplete or unfinished compared to their perfected form in the World to Come.

[iv] Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah, page 149 — The reference to the Zohar Terumah elaborates on the metaphor of divine light as something that is 'sown' and grows like seeds, producing spiritual fruits. This metaphor establishes that righteous actions generate ongoing spiritual benefits in higher realms, supporting the text's main argument about the eternal rewards of the righteous in the World of Souls. | Cf. Psalms 97:11 — The citation 'Light is sown for the righteous' (Psalms 97:11) serves as a biblical foundation for the kabbalistic concept that divine light generates ongoing rewards for the righteous. The author interprets this verse to indicate that divine illumination is not merely passively received but actively cultivated like seeds that produce fruits. | Cf. Isaiah 3:10 — The quote from Isaiah about the righteous eating 'the fruit of their deeds' reinforces the central metaphor of the passage that righteous actions produce spiritual 'fruits' that sustain the souls of the righteous in the afterlife. This scriptural citation legitimizes the author's kabbalistic interpretation of the afterlife experience.

ותהו הוא דבר שאינו מושלם וצריך תקון וכטעם ה׳ יגמור בעדי.[i] ועצה טובה לאדם שיתפוס מצוה אחת לפחות בקנין גמור ויתמיד ויזרז בה כל ימיו ואל יניחנה מלעשותה אפי׳ בשביל ממון הרבה. כי היא מקדמתו והולכת לפניו לעה״ב כההוא דהוה גמיר מסכת חגיגה לבד[ii] שהובא במדרש רבי תנחומא ואמרו בקדושין פ״ק מי שיחד לו מצוה ולא עבר עליה כל ימיו זה נקרא עושה מצוה אחת שמטיבין לו ומאריכין את ימיו ואל ימנע אדם עצמו ואפי׳ יהיה השעה דחוקה לו מליתן בכל יום ששה או לפחות ארבעה פרוטות לצדקה ואם יהיה בשעת תפלה מה טוב ויפריד אותם בעת אומרו פסוק פותח את ידיך[iii] וישימם בקופה או יתנם לעני בעת אמירת ובא לציון ובבוקר כי היא תוספת קדושה וכל מקום שיש קדושה חצוני בורח שאין מקום לחצוני אלא לפתח או בגדרות[iv] אמנם פנימה בקדש אין שליטתו והיא מגן לתפלה שלא יזנב אחריה עמלק ראש צרים[v] והקדושה נמשכת ממקום הקדש מלמעלה ותרד

And [this term] "tohu" (void/chaos[1]) refers to something that is incomplete and requires rectification, in the sense of "The Lord will fulfill [His purpose] for me." Good advice for a person is to grasp at least one commandment with complete acquisition, persisting and being zealous in it all their days, never abandoning its performance even for great wealth. For it precedes him and goes before him to the World to Come, like that case of one who only mastered the tractate of Chagigah, as brought in the Midrash of Rabbi Tanchuma. And they said in the first chapter of Kiddushin: "One who designates a particular commandment for himself and never transgresses it throughout his life, this person is called 'one who performs a single commandment,' for whom good is done and whose days are lengthened."

A person should not withhold from himself, even if his circumstances are difficult, from giving six or at least four small coins to charity every day. If this can be done during prayer, how good that is! One should set these coins aside when reciting the verse "You open Your hand" and place them in the charity box, or give them to a poor person when saying "And a redeemer shall come to Zion," particularly in the morning, as this adds holiness. Wherever there is holiness, external [negative] forces flee,[2] for these external forces have no place except at the entrance or in the boundaries. But within the holy place itself, they have no dominion. This practice serves as a shield for prayer, preventing Amalek, the chief of adversaries,

[1] The Hebrew term 'tohu' comes from Genesis 1:2 describing primordial chaos. The author gives it a mystical interpretation as something incomplete requiring spiritual rectification (tikkun).

[2] In kabbalistic thought, acts of holiness create a spiritual boundary that repels negative forces (chitzonim). The author is describing how the simple act of giving charity during prayer creates such a protective shield.

[i] This is a quote from Psalm 138:8, 'The LORD will fulfill His purpose for me,' which the author uses to explain the concept of 'tohu' (chaos/void) as something incomplete that requires divine completion.

[ii] The author references a story from Midrash Tanchuma about someone who had mastered only the Talmudic tractate Chagigah, suggesting that even limited Torah knowledge, if pursued consistently, has great spiritual value.

[iii] This refers to Psalm 145:16, 'You open Your hand and satisfy the desire of every living thing,' which appears in the daily prayers. The author recommends this moment for setting aside charity, creating a symbolic connection between God's generosity and human generosity.

[iv] The term 'chitzonim' (external ones) refers to negative spiritual forces in Kabbalistic terminology. The author is explaining that these forces cannot penetrate places of true holiness but can only exist at the boundaries or entrances.

[v] Amalek is traditionally viewed in Jewish thought as the archetypal enemy of Israel and spirituality. The author uses this symbolism to represent the negative spiritual forces that might attack after prayer if not properly guarded against.

עד סוף המדרגות שהוא לבית
חצוני טהור סוד התרגום[i] ואז
הוא עת רצון להמשיך השפע
מצדק לצדקה[ii] לעשות מגן וצנה
לקדושה ולהרבות השפע ולשים
הצדקה בקופה. ובמנחה יקדים
הצדקה לתפלה דכתיב אני
בצדק אחזה פניך[iii] ולא יעבור
שום יום מימיו שלא יתן צדקה
אם מעט ואם הרבה ובערב
שבת וי״ט יתן כפלים. ומי
שאינו יודע לקבוע עתים לתורה
שבעל פה ירגיל עצמו במעמדות
הנסדרות[iv] ויקרא כל ימיו
לפחות העשרים וארבע בכל שנה
במיתון ובטעמים וכבר ברחמי
שמים הורגלו בן פה בעירנו
בעלי בתים הרבה ישמרם ה׳ ומי
שאפי׳ זה אינו יודע ירגיל עצמו
לקרות ספר תהלים לפחות פעם
אחת בכל חדש ובפרט קודם
שילך על מטתו ואמרו במדרש
כי יעקב אבינו בבית לבן היה
עוסק בספר תהלים[v] כי הבא
ליטהר בעה״ז מסייעים אותו
לעה״ב ויפה כח הסיוע לעה״ב
וכן פתחי לי אחותי פתח כחודה

from attacking from behind. Holiness flows from the holy place above and descends to the lowest levels, which is the realm of the pure external, the secret of the Aramaic translation. This becomes a favorable time to draw divine flow from Tzedek (righteousness) to Tzedakah (charity),[1] creating a shield and buckler for holiness, increasing divine flow, and placing charity in the collection box. 60R

For the afternoon prayer, one should give charity before praying, as it is written: "Through righteousness shall I behold Your face."[2] No day of one's life should pass without giving charity, whether little or much, and on the eve of Sabbath and festivals, one should give double. 65R

One who does not know how to set fixed times for studying the Oral Torah should accustom himself to the established Ma'amadot prayers[3] and read through the twenty-four books [of the Bible] each year, carefully and with proper cantillation. By God's mercy, many householders in our city have already developed this habit—may God protect them. And one who doesn't even know how to do this should accustom himself to reading the Book of Psalms at least once every month, especially before going to bed. They said in the Midrash that our father Jacob, while in Laban's house, occupied himself with the Book of Psalms,[4] for one who comes 70R 75R 80R

[1] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that human actions create corresponding movements in divine realms. Here, the act of charity below draws spiritual energy from the divine attribute of Tzedek above.

[2] The author is making a practical application of Psalm 17:15, suggesting that giving charity before the afternoon prayer spiritually prepares one to 'behold God's face' through prayer.

[3] Ma'amadot are special prayers instituted to correspond to the daily Temple sacrifices. The author recommends these as accessible for those without advanced Torah knowledge.

[4] This anachronistic tradition (since Psalms is attributed to David, who lived much later than Jacob) illustrates the rabbinic concept that sacred texts spiritually pre-existed their formal composition.

[i] The 'secret of the translation' refers to the kabbalistic understanding that the Aramaic translation of scripture represents a lower level of holiness than the original Hebrew, yet still contains sanctity. This is used metaphorically to describe the outermost boundary of the sacred realm.

[ii] The author creates a mystical wordplay between 'tzedek' (righteousness, also a name for specific divine attributes in Kabbalah) and 'tzedakah' (charity), suggesting that the act of giving charity creates a channel for divine flow from higher spiritual realms.

[iii] This is a quote from Psalm 17:15, 'As for me, I shall behold Your face in righteousness.' The author interprets this as biblical support for giving charity before the afternoon prayer.

[iv] Ma'amadot are special prayers and Torah readings organized for each day of the week, corresponding to the daily Temple sacrifices. These were considered accessible for those without advanced Torah knowledge.

[v] This midrashic tradition about Jacob studying Psalms while in Laban's house is significant because Psalms is traditionally attributed to King David, who lived much later. The anachronism is reconciled in Jewish tradition by viewing the Psalms as spiritually pre-existing their formal composition.

של מחט[i] מתוך חשך העה״ז ואני אפתח לכם פתחים גדולים לעה״ב ובעולם שאחר המות וכתוב בסבא פ׳ משפטים דף צ״ו על פסוק יעשה למחכה לו כד האי ברתא אשלימת עשיה בהאי עלמא אוף הכי הקב״ה אשלים עשיה אחרא בעלמא דאתי דכתיב ביה עין לא ראתה אלהים זולתך.[ii] ומקובלני כי הוא תקון גדול לעם הארץ לקרות בכל יום פרשת אותה שבוע או לפחות חצייה ובזה יזכה להגות בה גם הוא בג״ע.[iii] to purify himself in this world receives assistance in the World to Come. The power of this assistance is beautiful for the World to Come, as in "Open for me, my sister"—if you open an entrance as narrow as the eye of a needle from within the darkness of this world, "I will open for you wide entrances" to the World to Come and the world after death. 85R

It is written in Saba (the Elder's teaching) in Parashat Mishpatim, page 96, on the verse "He acts for those who wait for Him": "When this daughter [the soul][1] completes her work in this world, so too does the Holy One, blessed be He, complete another work in the World to Come, concerning which it is written: 'No eye has seen it, O God, but You.'" I have received a tradition that it is a great rectification for a common person to read each day the Torah portion of that week, or at least half of it, and through this, he too will merit to meditate upon it in the Garden of Eden.[2] 90R 95R 100R

ומה שאמר המלך החכם כי אין מעשה וחשבון בשאול אשר אתה הולך שם ירצה כי היורד לשאול לפי שלא התחיל לטרוח בערב שבת בעה״ז כדאמרו במדרש כי

And regarding what the wise king [Solomon] said,[3] "For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, where you go" [Ecclesiastes 9:10]—he means that those who descend to Sheol, because they did not begin to 105R

[1] In kabbalistic texts, especially the Zohar, the soul is often referred to as a 'daughter,' reflecting its feminine grammatical gender in Hebrew (nefesh) and its receptive relationship to divine influence.
[2] In Jewish mystical thought, the Garden of Eden represents not just the biblical location but a spiritual realm where souls study Torah after death. The author suggests that Torah study in this world creates the ability to continue that study in the afterlife.
[3] The 'wise king' refers to King Solomon, traditionally considered the author of Ecclesiastes (Kohelet). The author begins with a biblical verse that seemingly contradicts his thesis, only to reinterpret it.

[i] This metaphor of opening 'like the eye of a needle' appears in several rabbinic texts, including Midrash Song of Songs Rabbah 5:2 and Pesikta Rabbati. It expresses the idea that even minimal human spiritual effort triggers enormous divine response.
[ii] This is a quote from Isaiah 64:3, describing the incomprehensible rewards reserved for the righteous in the World to Come. The author uses it to emphasize the divine response to human spiritual effort.
[iii] Cf. Ma'avar Yabok, introduction — This passage elaborates on one of the central themes of the entire work: how actions in this world create spiritual realities in the World to Come. The author recommends specific spiritual practices that create protection and spiritual merit. | Cf. Midrash Tanchuma — The author uses this reference to support his argument that even focusing on a single commandment or area of study can be spiritually powerful if done consistently. | Cf. Talmud Kiddushin, first chapter — This reference supports the author's practical advice to focus intensely on at least one mitzvah rather than attempting to master all commandments without consistency. | Cf. Song of Songs 5:2 — The author uses this verse from Song of Songs, interpreted mystically as dialogue between God and Israel, to illustrate how even minimal spiritual effort ('opening like the eye of a needle') will be met with divine abundance ('wide entrances'). | Cf. Zohar, Saba d'Mishpatim — This reference from the Zohar section known as 'Saba d'Mishpatim' (The Elder of Mishpatim) establishes the kabbalistic principle that human spiritual work in this world creates a corresponding divine response in the World to Come.

רשעי גהינם אומרים להקב״ה
הניחנו ונעשה תשובה והוא
משיב להם שוטים וכו׳[i] כדדרשו
על פסוק לא המתים יהללו
יה ולא כל יורדי דומה בראש
אידרת האזינו. להם אין מעשה
שם אבל הצדיקים שנטועים
ושתולים בעודם בעה״ז בבית
ה׳ בג״ע עליון ותחתון[ii] שהוא
מדורם אחר המות ומסלסלים
נטיעותיהם ושרשי נשמתם ששם
שם יפריחו וירטיבו מצות
ומעשים טובים רוחניים ויחודים
מופלאים בכח סתרי תורה
שיתחדש להם שם כי הנגלות הם
לנו ולבנינו פי׳ פשוטן של מצות
הנגלות הם לנו ולבנינו וזה
אינו אלא עד עולם פי׳ בעה״ז
כי אחר העולם גם הנסתרות
מה׳ אלהינו יתגלו לנו כי לא
ירעיב ה׳ נפש צדיק ולא לבד
יתקנו למעלה אחר המיתה כפי
מעשיהם אלא אפי׳ המעשה
הטוב והתקון שעלה במחשבתם
לתקן וליחד אבל מפני קוצר
המשיג ועומק המושג לא הספיקו
להוציא מחשבתם הטובה מן הכח
אל הפועל[iii] וכן כל מין מצוה
שחשב אדם בעה״ז ותאב בה
הרבה לעשותה ואפי׳ לא הספיק

labor on the eve of Sabbath while in this world, as stated in the Midrash: The wicked in Gehenna say to the Holy One, blessed be He,[1] "Leave us, and we will repent," but He responds to them, "Fools..." as they interpret the verse, "The dead do not praise the LORD, nor do any who go down into silence" [Psalm 115:17] at the beginning of Idra Ha'azinu. For them, there is no work there. But the righteous, who are planted and rooted while still in this world in the house of the LORD, in the upper and lower Garden of Eden—which becomes their dwelling after death—they cultivate their plantings and the roots of their souls,[2] which will there flourish and grow moist through spiritual commandments, good deeds, and wondrous unifications[3] through the power of Torah mysteries that will be revealed to them there. For "the revealed things belong to us and to our children" means: the plain meaning of the revealed commandments belongs to us and to our children, but this is only "forever" in this world. For after this world, even "the hidden things that belong to the LORD our God" [Deuteronomy 29:28] will be revealed to us, because the LORD will not starve the soul of the righteous.

And not only will they establish rectifications above after death according to their deeds, but even the good actions and rectifications that arose in their thoughts to rectify and unify, but which—due to the limitation of the perceiver and the depth of what is to be perceived—they did not manage to [1] This refers to a rabbinic teaching that the wicked, after experiencing punishment in Gehenna, ask for another chance to repent, but are told it's too late. The author uses this to emphasize that spiritual work must be done during life.

[2] The author uses agricultural metaphors (planting, cultivating, flourishing) to describe ongoing spiritual development after death. This reflects the kabbalistic view that souls continue to grow and evolve in the afterlife.

[3] The 'wondrous unifications' (yichudim) refers to mystical practices in Kabbalah that unite various aspects of divinity. The author suggests that these spiritual techniques continue and are enhanced after death.

[i] The author is referencing a midrashic dialogue where the wicked in Gehenna ask God for a chance to repent after death, and God responds by calling them fools. This demonstrates the author's view that spiritual preparation must be done during life, not after death.

[ii] The author uses horticultural metaphors (planted, rooted) to illustrate that the righteous establish their spiritual connection to the Garden of Eden while still alive, which then becomes their dwelling after death. This reflects the kabbalistic concept that spiritual worlds are accessed through devotional practices during life.

[iii] The author introduces the significant kabbalistic principle that sincere spiritual intentions that could not be actualized due to human limitations are nevertheless credited to the righteous in the afterlife. This provides comfort regarding unfulfilled spiritual aspirations.

לקיימה מקבל עליה שכר בעה״ב
כמ״ש על הרהורי תשובה וזה
יקרא עמידה מכסא דין וישיבה
על כסא רחמים[i] כי אלהינו
מרחם משלם שכר כפי המחשבה
הזכה כמעשה וכתוב בפ׳ ויקהל
כי הרצון טוב מקדש כל אברי
הגוף והם ממשיכים עליה אור
השכינה בכמה עושר וברכות.
ואם תפלת האדם המך בעה״ז
עולה בכמה רקיעים ובכמה
עטרין וכל חיילין דכולהו
רקיעין סגדין לגבה ומעלין
אותה לרקיע שביעי ומשם על
ידי דסנדלפון רבא ויקירא
עילאה דכל מפתחאן דמריה
בידיה ואעיל לה תוך שבעה
היכלין ומחבר לון כחדא למהוי
חד[ii] ושמא דקוב״ה מתעטר בכל
סטרין עילא ותתא למיהוי חד
כדאיתא בפ׳ ויקהל ופקודי
ופ׳ בראשית מזה נובל להבין
כמה יהא רב גובריה מסוד
היחוד אשר יעלה מג״ע תחתון

bring from potential to actua[A]l, and likewise every type of commandment that a person contemplated in this world and greatly desired to perform, even if they did not manage to fulfill it, they receive reward for it in the World to Come, as stated regarding thoughts of repentance.[1] This is called rising from the throne of judgment and sitting on the throne of mercy,[B] for our God is merciful and rewards according to pure thought as if it were action.

And it is written in Parashat Vayakhel that good will sanctifies all the limbs of the body, and they draw upon it the light of the Divine Presence with much wealth and blessings. And if the prayer of a lowly person in this world ascends through several firmaments and through several crowns, and all the hosts of all the firmaments bow to it and elevate it to the seventh firmament, and from there, through the great and precious supernal Sandalphon,[2] who holds all the keys of his Master in his hand, and brings it into the seven palaces and joins them together as one, and the name of the Holy One, blessed be He, is crowned in all directions, above and below, to become one,[C] as stated in Parashat Vayakhel and Pekudei and Parashat Bereshit—from this, we can

[A] Or: "but even the good deeds and spiritual repairs they intended to perform but could not actualize—due to the limitations of human understanding and the profundity of divine mysteries—they were unable to transform their noble intentions from potential into reality" — This alternate translation uses more accessible language while still preserving the philosophical distinction between potential and actualization. It might be preferable for readers less familiar with kabbalistic terminology.

[B] Or: "This represents a transition from the divine attribute of strict justice to the divine attribute of compassion" — This alternate translation focuses more on the theological concept rather than the literal imagery of thrones. It might be preferable in contexts where readers are more interested in the theological principles than the metaphorical imagery.

[C] Or: "unifying them into a single entity, so that the divine name becomes crowned throughout all dimensions, celestial and terrestrial, achieving perfect unity" — This alternate translation renders the Aramaic phrases with slightly more technical precision regarding the kabbalistic concept of divine unification across cosmic dimensions. It might be preferable for scholarly analysis of the mystical concepts.

[1] This references the rabbinic teaching that sincere thoughts of repentance are counted as if the person had actually repented. The author extends this principle to all good intentions that couldn't be fulfilled due to circumstances.

[2] In Jewish mystical tradition, Sandalphon is an archangel who receives prayers and weaves them into crowns for God. The author describes the mystical process by which prayers ascend through cosmic realms.

[i] This phrase references the kabbalistic concept of God transitioning from the attribute of judgment (din) to the attribute of mercy (rachamim), suggesting that divine judgment of human actions is ultimately tempered by compassion.

[ii] This Aramaic phrase describes how the angel Sandalphon brings prayers through seven celestial palaces and unifies them. The author uses technical kabbalistic language from the Zohar to describe the journey of prayers through spiritual realms.

מסוד הרוח ומג״ע עליון בסוד הנשמה.[i] ששם מנוחתה וכ״ש בעליית הנשמה עצמה עם כל מרכבותיה ותקוניה וקשוטיה כמה נהורין סלקין ונחתין עמה.[ii] understand how much greater will be the power of the unification that ascends from the lower Garden of Eden, from the mystery of the ruach, and from the upper Garden of Eden, from the mystery of the neshamah,[1] where it rests. And all the more so in the ascent of the neshamah itself, with all its chariots, rectifications, and adornments[2]—how many lights ascend and descend with it!

ומג״ע שהוא למעלה מהשמש[iii] מתחדש טובו בכל יום כי שמש ומגן ה׳ אלהים בעלמא דיליה ולא בעלמא דהדיוט[iv] והכל בסוד התעוררות העולה מן נפשות החיים[v] ועולה עליהם תקוני נפשות הצדיקים המתים

In the Garden of Eden, which is above the sun, His goodness is renewed every day, for "the Lord God is a sun and shield"[A] (Psalm 84:11) in His own realm, not in the realm of ordinary mortals. And all of this occurs through the mystical process of spiritual awakening that rises from the souls of the living, and upon them ascend the rectifications of the souls of [A] Or: "a sun and shield is the LORD God" — This alternative maintains the exact word order of the Hebrew biblical quote, which might be preferred for scholarly precision, though the meaning remains the same.

[1] The author refers to the kabbalistic structure of the soul, where ruach (spirit) and neshamah (higher soul) represent progressively higher levels of soul consciousness. Each level dwells in a corresponding spiritual realm after death.

[2] These terms (merkavot, tikkunim, and kishutim) are technical kabbalistic concepts referring to the spiritual vehicles, corrections, and embellishments that souls create through their devotional practices and that accompany them in the afterlife.

[i] The author makes a logical argument from lesser to greater: if ordinary prayer has such cosmic power, how much more powerful must be the unifications performed by souls in the Garden of Eden after death, where they operate at higher spiritual levels (ruach and neshamah) than during physical life.

[ii] Cf. Ecclesiastes 9:10 — The author uses this verse from Ecclesiastes as a starting point to develop his argument that while the wicked cannot perform spiritual work after death, the righteous continue their spiritual development in the afterlife. He reinterprets the verse to apply only to the wicked, not to the righteous. | Cf. Psalm 115:17 — This verse is cited to support the author's argument that the wicked cannot repent after death. The 'silence' refers to the state of those who did not prepare themselves spiritually during life. | Cf. Idra Ha'azinu — The author refers to a section of the Zohar known as Idra Ha'azinu, which contains mystical teachings. This reference establishes the kabbalistic framework for his interpretation. | Cf. Deuteronomy 29:28 — The author reinterprets this biblical verse to suggest that while the plain meaning of Torah is accessible in this world, the mystical meanings will be revealed to the righteous in the World to Come. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Vayakhel — The author cites the Zohar's section on Vayakhel to support his claim about the power of intention to sanctify the body and draw divine light. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Pekudei — These references to sections of the Zohar support the author's description of how prayers ascend through the heavenly realms and are unified by the angel Sandalphon.

[iii] This phrase 'above the sun' establishes the Garden of Eden as a transcendent realm beyond the physical cosmos, not subject to the natural laws of our material universe.

[iv] This Aramaic phrase distinguishes between God's realm (the divine domain) and the mundane realm of ordinary humans, emphasizing the ontological gap between these two domains of existence.

[v] The term 'התעוררות' (awakening/arousal) is a technical kabbalistic term referring to spiritual activities that create metaphysical effects across different realms. Here it specifically refers to how actions of living souls generate spiritual energy that ascends to higher worlds.

בנזכר:[vi] the righteous dead,[1] as mentioned.[2]

פרק ל״ב

Chapter 32

הנה דבר מוכרח מעצמו שבעת יציאת הצדיק מן העולם מלאכי השרת יוצאים לקראתו ואחר זה ייפו כחו למעלה[i] יען כי נהנו מתורתו שעסק בעה״ז כאשר כתב ר״מ דף קפ״א וז״ל ואפי׳ מלאכין לית לון מזונא אלא בצדיקים דאי לאו בצדיקים יתעסקון באורייתא לא הוה נחית לון מזונא מסטרא דאורייתא דאימתילא לעץ הה״ד עץ חיים היא למחזיקים בה[ii] ולאיבא דאיהי מצוה וה״נ אורייתא אמתילא למיא וה״נ לאשא ולא נחית מיא מלעילא וכן חמה דהיא אשא לא נחית לבשלא פירות האילן אלא בגין ישראל[iii] הנה שכל המלאכים הממונים על הארץ ולדרים נהנים מהתורה והמצות ומושפעים ע״י מעשה התחתונים הזכים ומה שלמעלה

It is inherently self-evident that when a righteous person departs from this world,[3] ministering angels come forth to greet him, and afterward his spiritual power is enhanced above, because they have benefited from the Torah he studied in this world.[4] As written in Ra'aya Mehemna, page 181: "Even angels have no sustenance except through the righteous, for if the righteous did not engage in Torah study, no sustenance would descend to them [the angels] from the aspect of Torah, which is compared to a tree, as it is written, 'It is a tree of life to those who grasp it.' And to its fruit, which is the commandment. Similarly, Torah is compared to water, and likewise to fire. Water does not descend from above, and similarly the sun, which is fire, does not descend to ripen the fruits of the tree, except for the sake of Israel."[5] Thus, all the angels appointed over the earth and its inhabitants benefit from Torah and commandments, receiving divine influence through the pure deeds of those below. And those [angels] above them benefit from the power of the soul's root that illuminates

[1] The term 'rectifications' (תקונים) refers to the kabbalistic concept that souls continue their spiritual development after death, progressively repairing and elevating themselves through cosmic levels. This process is facilitated by the spiritual actions of those still living.

[2] This indicates that the author is referring back to a topic previously discussed in the work, specifically the relationship between living and deceased souls and how they mutually influence each other's spiritual development.

[3] The Hebrew opening phrase 'הנה דבר מוכרח מעצמו' suggests not merely an obvious fact but a metaphysical necessity—something that must happen according to the spiritual laws governing the cosmos.

[4] This establishes a principle of cosmic reciprocity where angels, despite their seemingly higher status, depend on human Torah study for their sustenance, inverting the expected hierarchy between heavenly and earthly beings.

[5] This theurgic concept presents the Jewish people as responsible for maintaining natural processes in the world, suggesting that even the sun's heat ripening fruit depends on Israel's spiritual service.

[vi] Cf. Psalm 84:11 — The author quotes 'the Lord God is a sun and shield' to establish that God's light and protection exist in the higher spiritual realms, unlike in the material world. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — The phrase 'as mentioned' refers to earlier discussions in Ma'avar Yabok about the interaction between souls of the living and the dead, indicating this is part of a larger discourse on the afterlife.

[i] The phrase 'his power is enhanced above' refers to the soul gaining additional spiritual strength and capacity after death, contrary to the common notion that death represents a diminishment.

[ii] This quote from Proverbs 3:18 comparing Torah to the Tree of Life establishes a connection between Torah study and the primordial Tree of Life in the Garden of Eden, suggesting that proper Torah study can partially restore the spiritual state that existed before Adam's sin.

[iii] This passage articulates a theurgic view of reality where natural processes like ripening fruit depend on Israel's spiritual service, presenting the Jewish people as cosmic maintainers of creation through their religious practices.

מהם נהנים מכח שרשי הנשמה המאירה להם בכחה שעולה אליה מענפיה מלמטה ומכל
25 השפע שמשפיע באבי״ע גם הוא יקח חלק הראוי לו ויהיה ברכה.
ושם בג״ע יהיה השפע רבה מכ״ש ממה דהוה בעה״ז והדרוש הלז מתרחב מעצמו לאין תכלית
30 למעיין ומבין בו. ועיין בבכורות פרק פסולי המוקדשין על פסוק אגורה באהלך עולמים. ולא
זו בלבד הנה הצדיקים שבג״ע בכל יום ויום כחם מתגבר
35 עליהם בתוספת אור בחדוה רבה ביחודא דקב״ה ושכינתיה ובגין דאינון קריבין למלכא תדיר פורעים בכל יום למלכא עסקיה דמטרוניתה שחולת
40 אה״בה רבה היא דאינון נגידו דתליסר נהרי דאפרסמונא דכיא במספר אהב״ה. וכתב הגאון מורי מפאנו זצ״ל במ׳ חקור דין ח״א פ׳ כ״ה כי העבודה שבגן
45 היא קיום התורה מעוני ושמירה שבעדן היא קיומה מעושר[i] ומזה נדין לאדם המך כי העבודה הוא בעה״ז ושמירה הוא בעולם הנשמות ולעתיד לבא יתקיים
50 עבודה ושמירה בגוף ונפש יחד במדרגה רמה ממה שהוא עתה בעולם הנשמות ונעבדה לשמרה היא לשכינה או לנשמה וזהו ומשחרי ימצאוני המתקנים
55 בעה״ז נהורא שחרא דא זכו לעה״ב לנהורא חיורא דנהרא. ובזה נבין אמרם כי התורה היתה כתובה אש שחורה על גבי אש לבנה בסוד אספקלריא שאינה them through its strength, which rises to it from its branches below. And from all the divine flow that emanates throughout the worlds of Atzilut, Beriah, Yetzirah, and Asiyah, he [the righteous person] also takes his deserved portion and becomes a blessing. 25R

And there in the Garden of Eden, the divine flow will be even more abundant than what existed in this world.[1] This subject expands infinitely of its own accord for one who contemplates and understands it. See also Tractate Bekhorot, chapter "Disqualified Consecrated Items," regarding the verse "May I dwell in Your tent forever." 30R

Moreover, the righteous in the Garden of Eden experience their power intensifying daily with additional light, in great joy, through the unification of the Holy One, blessed be He, and His Divine Presence. Because they are constantly close to the King, they settle the King's business with the Queen daily, for she is "sick with great love," referring to the flow of thirteen rivers of pure balsam oil,[2] corresponding to the numerical value of "love" (אהב״ה). 35R 40R

My teacher, the Gaon of Fano, of blessed memory, wrote in Ma'amar Chikur Din, Part 1, Chapter 25, that "working" in the Garden refers to fulfilling Torah in poverty, while "guarding" in Eden refers to fulfilling it in wealth. From this we can derive for the humble person that "working" pertains to this world, while "guarding" pertains to the world of souls. In the future time, both working and guarding will be fulfilled together in body and soul, at a higher level than currently exists in the world of souls. "To work it and to guard it" refers to the Divine Presence or to the soul. This is the meaning of "Those who seek me diligently will find me"—those who rectify the black light in this world merit the radiating white light in the World to Come.[3] 45R 50R 55R

Through this we can understand their statement that the Torah was written as black fire upon white

[1] The Hebrew term 'שפע רבה' refers to divine emanation or influx, a key concept in Kabbalah indicating how divine energy flows downward through spiritual worlds to sustain creation.

[2] This image of balsam rivers appears frequently in rabbinic literature to describe rewards in the World to Come. The number thirteen corresponds to divine attributes of mercy and is equated here with the numerical value of the Hebrew word for 'love' (אהבה).

[3] The contrast between 'black light' (נהורא שחרא) and 'white light' (נהורא חיורא) represents the difference between Torah understood in this world versus its full illumination in the World to Come.

[i] This interpretation of Genesis 2:15 ('to work it and guard it') transforms the simple meaning about gardening into a mystical reference to different ways of fulfilling Torah: through poverty in this world and through spiritual wealth in the afterlife.

מאירה ובמאירה[i] וזו סלם לזו
ואמרו תלמידיו לרבי שמעון
בן יוחאי בפ׳ תרומה על פסוק
כן בקדש חזיתיך דהוו עתידין
למשתי בצחותא מליה בבי
מקדשא עילאה אתר דאקרי קדש
כדהוו עבדי בעה״ז וכשנשים
לב על פסוקי מזמור אלהים
אלי אתה אשחרך מתוכו יתבאר
דרושינו זה. זאת ועוד מדי
חדש בחדשו ומדי שבת בשבתו
בעלות נשמות הצדיקים שמודים
יחד נר״ן דרך מכון הר ציון
להראות את פני המלך הקדוש
ולהשתחוות לפניו[ii] שההשתחויה
רומזת הורדת שפע ובכחם זה
מתעדנים שם בצרורא דחיי כמה
וכמה רבו יתירא מתוסף להון
כי באור פני מלך חיים ומכמה
נהורין ועטרין עילאין מתזנין
ומתהנין תמן. והנה משה רבינו
ע״ה בגוף ונפש בעלותו אל ה׳
בפעם אחת זכה לקרני ההוד
ומזה נבין שכל נשמת צדיק זוכה
לקרני הוד כפי השגתו והחופה
הראוי לו באופן שהצדיקים
בחזרתן למטן למקומם בכל
פעם ופעם כחם יפה מאד להדר
ולקלס מלכא עילאה ותורתם
נאדרי בכח. וכתוב בסבא כדינא
דאבא עביד לברתיה דחביבא
לגביה דנשיק לה וגפיף לה ויהיב
לה מתנן כך קב״ה עביד לנשמתא
זכאה בכל יומא הנה שאפי׳
בכל יום בעבודתם הרוחנית
בהתעסקם בתורת אור קונין
דבקות דהיינו נשיקין דרוחא
ברוחא ברחימותא ונכללים מן

fire,[1] symbolizing the non-luminous lens and the luminous lens, one being a ladder to the other. Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's disciples said to him in Parashat Terumah, regarding the verse "So have I seen You in the sanctuary," that they would drink his words with clarity in the supernal sanctuary, the place called "holy," just as they did in this world. When we reflect on the verses of the psalm "O God, You are my God, I seek You at dawn," our exposition becomes clear from within it.

Furthermore, from one New Moon to another and from one Sabbath to another, when the souls of the righteous ascend together—nefesh, ruach, and neshamah—through the site of Mount Zion to appear before the Holy King and prostrate themselves before Him (the prostration symbolizing the descent of divine influence[2]), through this power they delight there in the bond of life. How much additional greatness is added to them, for "in the light of the King's countenance is life," and they are nourished and enjoy many lights and supernal crowns there.

Indeed, Moses our Teacher, peace be upon him, in body and soul, when he ascended to God at one time, merited the rays of glory. From this we understand that every righteous soul merits rays of glory according to its attainment and the canopy appropriate for it, such that when the righteous return below to their place, each time their power is greatly enhanced to glorify and praise the Supernal King, and their Torah is magnificent in power.

It is written in Saba [an Aramaic section of the Zohar] that just as a father treats his beloved daughter—kissing her, embracing her, and giving her gifts—so does the Holy One, blessed be He, treat the meritorious soul every day. Thus, even in their daily spiritual service, as they engage in the Torah of light, they acquire cleaving, namely, kisses

[1] This Talmudic description of the Torah's appearance (Yerushalmi Shekalim 6:1) is reinterpreted here in kabbalistic terms to represent different levels of spiritual perception and illumination.

[2] This parenthetical explanation reveals the kabbalistic understanding of ritual prostration as not merely submission to God but as actively drawing divine energy downward through the spiritual worlds.

[i] These terms refer to different levels of prophetic vision, with Moses alone achieving the 'luminous lens' (clear vision) while other prophets received revelation through the 'non-luminous lens' (obscured vision). Here, they are applied to Torah study in this world versus the World to Come.

[ii] This description parallels the three biblical pilgrimage festivals where Jews would 'appear before God' at the Temple in Jerusalem, suggesting that souls continue this practice in spiritual realms after death.

אורות ימיניים ושמאליים והיינו
וגפיף לה ונתוסף להם אור ושפע
100 וברכה ועילוי מהמשביר לכל
וזהו ויהיב לה מתנן וע״ש דף
צ״ז צ״ח צ״ט מעילוי הנשמות
ואיך מתעטרן רוחי ונשמתי
וסלקי לעילא.[i] ולנשמה וגם
105 לרוח אית להו שאר כסות ועונה
ושלשה אלה אתמשכן מעלמא
דאתי ע״ש. ונשמות המתלבשים
בעלייתן בנשמות שהם תחת כנפי
השכינה לבר בשחוזרין לעלות
110 פעם אחרת מתפשטין מהן דתמן
אינם קיימין בלבושא וזהו טעם
שכל שהיה מחזיק בנכסי הגר
בנעני היה זוכה בהם[ii] אשרי עין
ראתה כל אלה ומה רב טובו
115 אשר צפן ליראיו. שים נא עיניך
וקרא כל תקון נ׳ כי שם ביאר
כמה מיני יחודים ופרנסות דאית
לה לקדושה בגלות והכל הוא
כפי מעשה התחתונים ומתפרנסת
120 באורות המעלים לה[iii] אשרי
השם בקרבו את רוח קדשו
ומוצא מקום לה׳ כי ממקומו יפן
ברחמיו לעמו ברוך שמו המהולל
ברוב התושבחות. וזה כלל גדול
125 לכל מעשי בני אדם לכוין באלו
הוא עובד בג״ע לפני השכינה
שנשמתו שם פועלת ועושה[iv] כמו
שפועל גופו למטה בכוונה

of spirit with spirit in love, and they are included in lights from the right and the left—this is the meaning of "embracing her." And light, divine flow, 100R blessing, and elevation are added to them from the Provider of all—this is the meaning of "giving her gifts." See there, pages 97, 98, and 99, regarding the elevation of souls and how spirits and souls are crowned and ascend above. 105R

For the neshamah and also for the ruach, there exists food, clothing, and conjugal right[1]s, and these three extend from the World to Come. See there. And souls that are clothed during their ascent in other souls that are beneath the wings of the Di- 110R vine Presence externally, when they return to ascend again, divest themselves of these [garments], for there they do not remain in garments. This is the reason why one who took possession of a gentile convert's property would acquire it.[2] Happy is the eye that has 115R seen all these things,[3] and how great is His goodness that He has stored up for those who fear Him.

Please set your eyes and read all of Tikkun 50, for there he explained many types of unifications and sustenance that exist for holiness in exile, all accord- 120R ing to the deeds of those below. It is sustained by the lights that elevate it. Fortunate is one who places within himself the spirit of His holiness and finds a place for God, for from His place He will turn in mercy to His people. Blessed is His Name, which is 125R praised with abundant praises.

This is a great principle for all human actions: to direct one's intention as if working in the Gar-

[1]These three terms (שאר כסות ועונה) come from Exodus 21:10 describing a husband's obligations to his wife, but are reinterpreted here to describe how spiritual souls are sustained in the afterlife.
[2]This refers to a Talmudic law (Kiddushin 17b) about ownerless property of a deceased convert, which the author interprets mystically as parallel to how souls divest garments when entering higher realms.
[3]This expression of wonder at divine mysteries is typical of kabbalistic texts, suggesting that the author has personally experienced or witnessed these spiritual realities through mystical contemplation.

[i]The author refers readers to specific pages in the Zohar that contain more detailed explanations about how souls are elevated and crowned after death, indicating that this passage is an abbreviated summary of more extensive teachings.
[ii]This curious connection between a halakhic principle (property of a deceased convert without heirs is ownerless) and mystical soul processes suggests that legal concepts in Judaism often have esoteric correspondences in kabbalistic thought.
[iii]This phrase encapsulates a fundamental principle of kabbalistic thought: that divine emanations and spiritual realities are sustained and influenced by human religious actions below.
[iv]This instruction to visualize oneself serving in the Garden of Eden reflects a meditative technique where one imagines the higher spiritual dimension where one's soul operates while performing physical rituals.

טובה וזו הכנה למה שעתידה
130 לעשות אחר מות הגוף כנזכר
וזה לשון ר״ש בן יוחאי עצמו
בפ׳ חקת דף קפ״ד תא חזי כל
מאן דידע לסדרא עובדא כדקא
יאות ולסדרא מלין כדקא יאות
135 האי האי ודאי מתערי לקוב״ה
לאמשכא מלין עילאין לגבייהו.
אי הכי כל עלמא ידעי לסדרא
טובדא ולסדרא מלין מאן חשיבו
דילהון דצדיקייא דידעי עקרא
140 דמנה ועובדא וידעי לכוונא
לבא ורעותא[i] יתיר מאלין
אחרנין דלא ידעי כל כך. וע״ש
התירוץ. הנה כי פשטי המצות עם
הכוונה טובה מתעוררים למעלה
145 ומתקדשים בקדושה העליונה
וזהו קדושים תהיו פירוש אתם
מוכנים לקבל הקדושות יען כי
קדוש אני ה׳ אלהיכם החפץ
ויכול ומטוביה מוטיב לעמיה
150 בריך שמיה לעד: [ii]

den of Eden before the Divine Presence, for one's soul operates and acts there just as one's body acts below with good intention. This is preparation for what it will do after the death of the body, as mentioned. And these are the words of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai himself in Parashat Chukat, page 184: "Come and see, whoever knows how to arrange an action properly and to arrange words properly, this person certainly awakens the Holy One, blessed be He, to draw down supernal matters to them. If so, the whole world knows how to arrange actions and words[1]—what then is the distinction of the righteous? They know the root of the matter and the action, and they know how to direct their heart and will more than these others who do not know as much." See there for the answer. 130R 135R 140R

Thus, the plain meanings of the commandments, with proper intention, awaken [forces] above and are sanctified in supernal holiness. This is the meaning of "You shall be holy"—you are prepared to receive holiness because "I, the Lord your God, am holy"—He who desires and is able, and from His goodness benefits His people. Blessed be His Name forever. 145R 150R

פרק ל״ג

Chapter 33

עלה במחשבתי ללקט מבחר

It occurred to me to gather selected words of the

[1] Rabbi Shimon's question highlights the paradox that while everyone performs the same mitzvot and prayers (actions and words), only the righteous achieve profound cosmic effects, leading to his explanation about the crucial role of intention.

[i] The distinction between ordinary people and the righteous lies in three elements: knowing the root principle behind commandments, knowing the proper action, and being able to direct the heart and will with greater intensity and precision.

[ii] Cf. Ra'aya Mehemna — The author cites this text to establish the cosmic significance of Torah study, showing that the righteous person's spiritual activities in this world directly nourish and sustain celestial beings. | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok — This passage builds on previous sections of Ma'avar Yabok that explained the soul's departure, now focusing specifically on how the righteous soul is greeted by angels and receives enhanced power in the afterlife. | Cf. Ma'amar Chikur Din by Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano — The author cites his teacher's work to establish a kabbalistic interpretation of Genesis 2:15 ('to work it and guard it'), connecting these actions to different spiritual realms and conditions. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Terumah — This reference illustrates how the study of mystical teachings in this world creates a parallel experience in higher spiritual realms after death. | Cf. Tractate Bekhorot — The author points to this Talmudic discussion as further evidence for his claims about the righteous dwelling in divine realms after death. | Cf. Zohar, Saba (The Elder) — This zoharic passage is cited to illustrate the intimate relationship between God and the souls of the righteous in the Garden of Eden, emphasizing the ongoing nature of divine rewards. | Cf. Tikkun 50 — The author directs readers to this section of Tikkunei Zohar for deeper understanding of how divine energies are sustained through human actions. | Cf. Zohar, Parashat Chukat — This quotation establishes the superiority of the righteous in properly directing intention, explaining why their actions have greater cosmic impact.

דברי חכמים ולסדר איזה
פרקים בלשון מובן לכל תלמיד
קטן אשר עלימו תטוף מלתי
בדרושי ג״ע[i] ואגב יבא ג״כ
קצת ממה שמצאתי זעיר הנה
זעיר הנה שדברו חכמים במהות
הגיהנם[ii] יען כי אחד מכוונתי
בחבורי זה מלבד הנוגע לעניין
מעשה הוא ג״כ לחבר דרושים
ופרקים נאותים להלהיב לב
עובדי ה׳ שבצדקתם יחזקו ולא
ירפו ממנה בהכיר מהות נפשם
כמה רבה היא וכוונות כוללות
בעבודה ושכר הצדיקים ועלוים
אחר כמות שהם החיים הנצחיים.
זאת ועוד הרוה פרקים ודרושים
הצעתי להקרא לפני חולה
בחליו עד שלא יכבד ראשו
ואבריו עליו ויהיה שפוי לשמוע
וליקח מוסר למען ישוב אל ה׳
וירחמהו וירפאהו או יכוננהו
עליון. בפסוק והתהלכתי
בתוככם ולא תגעל נפשי אתכם
נזכר בתורה שכר ג״ע וענג
עה״ב[iii] ליודעי בינה[iv] ודברי
הנביאים והכתובים בזה רבו
מספר:[v]

Sages and to arrange certain chapters in language comprehensible to every young student, upon whom my discourse on the Garden of Eden shall flow. Incidentally, I will also include some of what I have found here and there where the Sages spoke about the nature of Gehenna. For one of my intentions in this composition, besides addressing practical matters, is also to compose discourses and appropriate chapters to inflame the hearts of those who serve God,[A] that they might strengthen their righteousness and not weaken from it by recognizing the nature of their souls—how great they are—and the comprehensive intentions in divine service and the reward of the righteous and their elevation after death, which is eternal life. Furthermore, I have proposed chapters and discourses to be read before the sick person during their illness,[1] before their head and limbs become heavy upon them,[B] while they are still lucid enough to hear and take instruction,[C] so that they may return to God who will have mercy on them and heal them, or establish them on high. In the verse "I will walk among you, and My soul shall not abhor you" (Leviticus 26:11-12), the Torah alludes to the reward of the Garden of Eden and the delight of the World to Come for those who understand, and the words of the Prophets and Writings on this subject are too numerous to count.[2]

[A] Or: "to ignite fervor in those who worship God" — This alternate translation captures the sense of spiritual enthusiasm and devotion more directly, using 'ignite fervor' as a slightly more contemporary expression of the same concept.

[B] Or: "before the illness weighs heavily on their head and limbs" — This alternative makes more explicit that the heaviness refers to the effects of illness, which is implied but not stated directly in the original.

[C] Or: "while they are still clear-minded enough to hear and receive moral guidance" — This alternate more explicitly translates 'musar' as moral guidance rather than general instruction, which better reflects its specific meaning in Jewish ethical literature.

[1] This indicates a practical purpose of Ma'avar Yabok: providing readings specifically designed for the bedside of ill people, to be read while they are still capable of understanding, suggesting this text was intended partly as a manual for those caring for the sick.

[2] The author is suggesting that while the Torah's references to afterlife rewards might be subtle

[i] This is an abbreviation for "Gan Eden" (Garden of Eden), the paradisiacal afterlife destination for the righteous in Jewish tradition.

[ii] Gehenna, the Jewish concept of a place of spiritual purification or punishment after death, often translated as "Hell" though with significant theological differences from the Christian concept.

[iii] This abbreviation stands for "Olam HaBa" (the World to Come), referring to the future perfected world or afterlife state in Jewish eschatology.

[iv] The author claims that the Torah alludes to afterlife rewards, though traditional Jewish interpretation generally sees the Torah as focusing on this-worldly consequences rather than explicit afterlife rewards. This represents a mystical reading influenced by kabbalistic tradition.

[v] Cf. Leviticus 26:11-12 — The author interprets this verse as alluding to spiritual rewards in the afterlife, specifically the Garden of Eden and the World to Come, suggesting that God's מצאתי כתוב בספרים קדמונים ובספר אסף ההודי[i] כי יושבי

הארץ הזאת רואים עץ הדעת
טוב ורע ועץ החיים שבתוך הגן
ורואים להט החרב המתהפכת
ושם יש כרובים שהם מלאכי דין
שתופסין נשמת האדם בצאתו
מן העולם ומקדמת לפתח ג״ע
ופניהם פני כרוב ודנים אותה
והם מחיצה המבדלת בין קדושי
הגן אל החיצונים[ii] ושכינה
דנה שם הנשמה אם אינה זוכה
הכרובים מוסרים אותה אל
להט מלאכי חבלה יובילוה
לגיהנם ולהיות כי מתהפכים
לאדם פעמים לפתותו ואח״כ
להלשינו ואח״כ לאויבים לדונו
על דרך הוא שמן הוא יצר הרע
הוא מלאך המות[iii] לכן נקראת
מתהפכת ומתפשטים מהחרב
שהיא מלכות המתהפכת בפי
מה שאדם מהפך אותה אם לדין
ח״ו ואם לרחמים ודין גיהנם
אינו רק כפי גזרת דין שמים כי
אין יכולים להוסיף אפי׳ כמלא
נימא והיינו גם כי אלך בגיא
צלמות לא אירע רע כי אתה
עמדי כפי גזרת מדת המלכות
והיינו ואציעה שאול הנך. הנה
הם להט מהחרב המתהפכת

I found written in ancient books and in the book of Asaf the Indian that the inhabitants of this land see the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil and the Tree of Life that are in the midst of the garden, and they see the flame of the revolving sword. There are cherubim there who are angels of judgment that seize the soul of man when it departs from the world and bring it to the entrance of the Garden of Eden. Their faces are the faces of cherubim, and they judge it. They form a partition that separates the holy ones of the garden from the external forces. The Divine Presence judges the soul there;[1] if it is not found worthy, the cherubim deliver it to the flame of the angels of destruction who lead it to Gehenna.

These angels transform in relation to man: sometimes to tempt him, then to accuse him, and finally to become adversaries who judge him—following the pattern that Satan, the evil inclination, and the Angel of Death are one and the same. Therefore, it is called "revolving," and these extend from the sword, which is the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) that transforms according to how man transforms it[2]—whether to judgment, God forbid, or to mercy.

The judgment of Gehenna is only according to the decree of heavenly judgment, for they cannot add even so much as a hairsbreadth to it. This is the meaning of "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for You are with me"—according to the decree of the attribute of Malkhut. And this is also the meaning of "If I make and require interpretation, the later biblical books (Prophets and Writings) contain more explicit references to these concepts.

[1]The term 'Shekhinah' (Divine Presence) in kabbalistic thought often represents the feminine aspect of divinity, associated with the divine attribute of Malkhut (Kingdom) mentioned later in the text. This creates a conceptual link between the Divine Presence that judges souls and the 'sword' that is identified with Malkhut.

[2]This reflects a fundamental kabbalistic principle that human actions affect the divine realms. The text suggests that human behavior determines whether divine judgment manifests as severity or mercy.

presence among the people is a foretaste of the ultimate spiritual union after death | Cf. Ma'avar Yabok's organization — This passage reveals that Ma'avar Yabok has a dual purpose: to inspire the living to strengthen their religious observance through understanding the soul's nature and eternal rewards, and to provide practical guidance for those ministering to the sick and dying

[i]Asaf the Indian (or Asaf the Physician) was a legendary Jewish physician and herbalist to whom several medical and wisdom texts were attributed in medieval Jewish tradition. The reference here suggests the author is drawing on a work attributed to this figure.

[ii]The concept of a partition (mechitzah) separating holy entities from unholy ones is a recurring theme in Jewish mysticism. Here it refers to the cherubim forming a boundary between the sanctity of Eden and the 'external forces' (hachitzonim), a kabbalistic term for negative spiritual entities.

[iii]This is a direct reference to a Talmudic teaching (Bava Batra 16a) that Satan, the evil inclination, and the Angel of Death are one and the same entity fulfilling different functions.

ובזה נמצא כי דין גיהנם הוא
יצה״ר הוא מלאך המות כי שכר
עבירה עבירה.[i] וצריך להזדכך
דרך אלו קודם שיכנס אל הגן
ומשם אל עץ החיים לאכול
מפריו ולחיות לעולם. וחכמי
הקדמונים שהיה אסקלפייגוס
חכם מקדוני[ii] וארבעים איש
מלומדי החכמה ידעו המקום
הזה וראו ארבע נהרות יוצאים
משם והתחילו להלוך דרך פרת
למעלה וכשהגיעו חצי מיל
לפני הגן להט אותם להט החרב
המתהפכת ונשרפו וכתב בעל
צדה לדרך בסוף ספרו [iii]

my bed in Sheol, behold, You are there." These are the flame of the revolving sword. 60R

Thus, we find that the judgment of Gehenna, the evil inclination, and the Angel of Death are one,[1] for "the reward of sin is sin." One must be purified through these before entering the garden[2] and from there to the Tree of Life to eat of its fruit and live forever. 65R

The ancient sages—among them Aesculapius, a Macedonian sage, and forty men learned in wisdom—knew this place and saw four rivers flowing from it. They began to travel up along the Euphrates, but when they reached half a mile before the garden, the flame of the revolving sword burned them.[3] And the author of Tzeidah la-Derekh wrote at the end of his book... 70R

רבים מהבאים ארצה בני
קדם רואים מרחוק להט

Many of those who come to the land of the East see from afar the flame of the revolving sword.[4] Many 75R

[1]The text establishes a unity between the afterlife punishment (Gehenna), the psychological force that tempts people to sin (evil inclination), and the metaphysical agent of death (Angel of Death). This unification suggests that these are all manifestations of the same cosmic principle of judgment and consequence.

[2]This introduces the concept that the soul's journey through judgment and potential punishment is ultimately purificatory rather than purely punitive, allowing the soul to eventually reach higher spiritual realms (the Garden and the Tree of Life).

[3]This anecdote about non-Jewish sages attempting to physically reach the Garden of Eden serves to emphasize that the Garden exists both as a physical and metaphysical reality, but can only be properly approached through spiritual means rather than physical exploration.

[4]This biblical image from Genesis 3:24 (the flaming sword guarding the Garden of Eden) is being reinterpreted as a mystical barrier that prevented Greek philosophers from accessing divine truth. The author presents a legend that suggests forty Greek philosophers were burned by this flame when attempting to approach paradise.

[i]This is a reference to the mishnaic teaching in Pirkei Avot 4:2: 'Ben Azzai said: Run to perform even a minor mitzvah and flee from sin, for one mitzvah leads to another mitzvah, and one sin leads to another sin...'

[ii]This appears to be a reference to Asclepius, the Greek god of medicine and healing, here transformed into a Macedonian sage. This reflects the medieval Jewish tendency to historicize mythological figures and incorporate elements of Greek wisdom traditions into their cosmological frameworks.

[iii]Cf. Genesis 3:24 — The author builds his entire mystical framework around this biblical passage, expanding on the role of the cherubim and flaming sword as agents of divine judgment who determine the soul's fate after death. | Cf. Zohar — The author is clearly drawing on Zoharic concepts about how souls are judged after death, particularly the idea that the same forces that tempt a person in life become their accusers and judges after death. | Cf. Talmud Bava Batra 16a — The author directly quotes this Talmudic teaching to support his explanation of how the same spiritual entities fulfill different functions in relation to human souls. | Cf. Psalms 23:4 — The author interprets this verse as evidence that divine judgment in the afterlife is precisely measured and limited according to heavenly decree. | Cf. Psalms 139:8 — The author uses this verse to reinforce that even in the realm of punishment (Sheol/Gehenna), divine presence limits and controls the judgment process. | Cf. Pirkei Avot 4:2 — The author applies this principle to explain that the punishment of Gehenna is a natural consequence of sin rather than an arbitrary punishment.

החרב המתהפכת ואמרו הרבה
מהחכמים כי אז נאבדו חכמות
יונים הקדמונים בשריפת
הארבעים אלו שהם היו קרובים
80 אל האמת ושומעים ולומדים
חכמת חכמי תורתנו. ובתוב
בספר תורת העולה חלק א׳ פרק
י״א כי אפלטון קבל החכמה מן
הנביאים וסקרט קבל מאחיתופל
85 ומאסף הקרחי. ואח״כ באו
האחרונים ארסט״ו וחביריו
ולקחו החכמה באומד הדעת
ואין לה צד ענין בתורתנו ואם
נמצאו בדבריו דבר טוב כתוב
90 בשבילי אמונה שגנב אותם
מחכמת שלמה כי אלכסנדרו״ס
מוקדון השליט רבו הנזכר על
אוצר ספרי שלמה וכל דבר
טוב שמצא בהם כתבם בשמו
95 וערב בהם דעות רעות וזרות
בקדמות העולם וכיוצא וא״כ
אפי׳ יהיה האדם חכם כדניאל
או כיהושע בן נון אל יסמוך על
חקירותיו לפי שכלו וחכמתו
100 כי מי לנו גדול כאבינו הראשון
שהיה איכותו עד לשמים ובטח
בשכלו בנזכר וקצץ בנטיעות
והפריד אלוף ח״ו. נח רצה
לעלות מתוך היכל החיצונים
105 לקדושה ונאחז בהם כי אחז ביין
המשכר ונפגע. נדב ואביהוא

sages have said that it was then that the wisdom of the ancient Greeks was lost in the burning of those forty [sages], who had been close to the truth and who had listened to and learned from the wisdom of 80R our Torah scholars. It is written in the book Torat Ha-Olah, Part 1, Chapter 11, that Plato received wisdom from the prophets, and Socrates received from Ahitophel and Asaph the Korahite.[1] Later came the later ones, Aristotle and his colleagues, 85R who took wisdom through estimation of their own intellect, and it has no connection to our Torah. And if good things are found in his words, it is written in Shvilei Emunah that he stole them from the wisdom of Solomon,[2] for Alexander of Macedon gave his 90R aforementioned teacher control over Solomon's treasury of books, and every good thing he found in them, he wrote in his own name, mixing in evil and strange opinions such as the eternity of the world and the like. Thus, even if a person were as wise 95R as Daniel or like Joshua son of Nun, he should not rely on his investigations according to his intellect and wisdom, for who is greater than our first father [Adam], whose quality reached the heavens, yet he trusted in his intellect, as mentioned, and 100R
"cut the plantings" and separated the Chief, God forbid.[A] Noah wanted to ascend from the palace of the external forces[B] to holiness, but he was caught by them when he grasped the intoxicating wine and was harmed. Nadab and Abihu materialized [God] 105R and gazed [improperly] and died,[C] and this is [the meaning of] "who has ascended to heaven through [A] Or: "and cut down the saplings and separated the Aluf (Chief/Master), Heaven forbid" — This is a kabbalistic reference to Adam's sin that damaged the divine unity. 'Cutting the plantings' (kitzetz ba-netiot) is a technical term in Jewish mysticism for heresy that separates divine attributes. The alternate translation preserves the technical nature while also maintaining the metaphorical imagery of cutting plants.

[B] Or: "palace of the external realms" — In Kabbalistic terminology, 'chitzonim' (external ones) refers to the demonic realms or forces of impurity. This alternate provides a slightly more neutral rendering while still conveying the mystical context.

[C] Or: "corporealized [the Divine] and peered [at what was forbidden] and died" — This refers to the sin of Nadab and Abihu who approached the Divine inappropriately. 'Higshimu' literally means 'they made physical' and refers to the theological error of attributing physical form to God. This alternate translation might better capture the technical theological concept involved.

[1] This reflects a medieval Jewish apologetic tradition that claimed Greek philosophy derived from Jewish sources. By asserting that Plato learned from biblical prophets and Socrates from biblical figures, the author subordinates Greek philosophy to Jewish wisdom, suggesting that any truth in Greek thought was borrowed from Jewish tradition.

[2] The author continues the polemic against Greek philosophy by claiming Aristotle plagiarized his ideas from Solomon's books. This narrative, which connects to legends about Alexander the Great's conquests, serves to portray Greek philosophy as derivative rather than original.

הגשימו והציצו ומתו וזהו
מי עלה שמים בחקירה וירד
בשלום ולכן שומר נפשו ירחק
מחכמת הפלוסופיא והחקירה
השקרית ואל ישעה בדברי שקר
בהקדמות המזוייפות אשר בדו
הפלוסופים הקדמונים מלבם
שהם ודאי מבלי עולם אויבי
השם מוקדי עולם השמים עקרי
תורתנו תלויים בעפושי שכליהם
ואותותי כזביהם אוי להם כי
נדדו ורחקו מעל ה׳. וכתב בעל
דרך חיים איש מופלא בדורו
ויראֵ את ה׳ מרבים כאשר העידו
על חסידותו וחכמתו שלמים וכן
רבים שמכל עברות אשר עברו
עליו מיום היותו עד היום שחבר
ספרו היקר עון זה שסטה אל
סטי כלב מחכמת הפלוסופיא
השקרה בילדותו הכריע את
כלם כי היא מולידה עמל ואון
בדיעות אלהיות האמיתיות.
ושפחה תירש גברתה וכל באיה
לא ישובון כי נופת תטופנה שפתי
זרה ואחריתה מרה כלענה כי
ממנה סברות ארסיות ממיתות
וחדה כחרב פיות שמנפש עד
בשר תבלה ושאול צעדיה
יתמוכו והמבלה ימיו בה ינהום
באחריתו כרשעים שמלאים
חרטות ויאמר איך שנאתי מוסר
ותוכחת נאץ לבי ולא שמעתי
בקול מורי כמעט הייתי בכל
רע בתוך קהל ועדה כי בהבל
פיהם משמיעים קול המון לעם
בפירושי פסוקים ומאמרים כפי
כזביהם והם בקול הסירים תחת
הסיר בדברים מרבים הבל וכל
רוח אין בהם. וכל זמן שמזקינים investigation and returned in peace?"[1] Therefore, one who guards his soul should distance himself from the philosophy and false investigation and not turn to words of falsehood in the fabricated premises that the ancient philosophers invented from their hearts, for they are certainly destroyers of the world, enemies of God, kindlers of the world,[2] [who claim] the foundations of our Torah depend on the rot of their intellects and the signs of their lies. Woe to them, for they have wandered and distanced themselves from God.

The author of Derekh Chaim, an exceptional man in his generation who feared God more than many, as perfect and numerous people testified regarding his piety and wisdom, wrote that of all the sins that passed over him from the day of his existence until the day he composed his precious book, this sin of deviating like a dog to the false philosophy in his youth outweighed them all, for it gives birth to toil and iniquity in true divine ideas. And a maidservant will inherit her mistress, and all who enter it will not return, for "the lips of a strange woman drip honey, but her end is bitter as wormwood," for from it come poisonous ideas that kill, and it is sharp as a two-edged sword that consumes from soul to flesh. Sheol supports her steps, and one who wastes his days in it will roar at his end like the wicked who are full of regrets, saying, "How I hated instruction, and my heart despised reproof! I did not listen to the voice of my teachers. I was almost in all evil in the midst of the congregation and assembly." For with the vanity of their mouths they make the voice of a multitude heard to the people in interpretations of verses and sayings according to their lies, and they are like the sound of thorns under the pot, with words multiplying vanity, and there is no spirit in them. And the older they get, the more foolish they become,[3] as the RABD wrote in his commentary on the fifth Mishnah of Sefer Yetzirah: "If the investigator strives to [1] This is a rhetorical question implying that philosophical investigation into divine matters is dangerous and potentially fatal. The author suggests that just as Adam, Noah, and Nadab and Abihu suffered for their improper approaches to divinity, so too will those who rely on philosophical speculation.

[2] The original Hebrew uses a series of highly charged polemical terms to denounce philosophers. The author portrays them not merely as intellectually mistaken but as actively hostile to divine truth and destructive to the world order.

[3] This contrasts with the traditional Jewish view that wisdom increases with age. The author suggests that philosophical inquiry actually leads to intellectual deterioration rather than growth, citing the RABD (Rabbi Abraham ben David) to support this claim.

מטפשים כאשר כתב הראב״ד
בפי׳ משנה ה׳ מספר יצירה אם
יתאמץ החוקר לחקור על מה
שאין בדעתו יכולת להשיג אל
150 יעלה על דעתו שלא יוכל על
הנמנע לבד אלא אף מה שהיה
בכחו מטרם לכן להשיגו יחלש
ולא יוכל עליו ונשא משל על זה
יעויין שם. צאו נא וראו גדול
155 הפוסקים הרמב״ם ז״ל כמה
הפליג לדבר מרעות הפלוסופיא
[i]

investigate what his mind does not have the ability to grasp, let him not think that he will be unable to grasp only the impossible, but even what was previously within his power to grasp will weaken, and 150R
he will not be able to grasp it." And he offered a parable for this, which can be examined there. Go out and see the great decisor, the Rambam of blessed memory,[1] how much he went to extremes to speak of the evils of philosophy. 155R

בפרק חלק בפירוש המשנה
בביאורו מהכת השנייה אך
160 אחר שנמשך אחריה גם הוא לא

In his commentary on the Mishnah, chapter Helek,[2] explaining the second group [of heretics], even though he himself was drawn after it [philoso-

[1]The invocation of Maimonides (Rambam) as an opponent of philosophy is somewhat ironic, given his significant engagement with Aristotelian philosophy. The author likely refers to Maimonides' warnings about the limits of philosophical speculation in certain theological matters, selectively emphasizing aspects of his thought that align with the anti-philosophical polemic.

[2]This refers to the tenth chapter of Tractate Sanhedrin in the Mishnah, which begins with the words 'All Israel has a portion in the World to Come' and discusses those who forfeit this portion.

[i]Cf. Torat Ha-Olah — The author cites Rabbi Moses Isserles' work Torat Ha-Olah as a source for the claim that Plato and Socrates received their wisdom from Jewish sources. This reference supports the author's argument against Greek philosophy by suggesting that whatever truth it contained was actually derived from Jewish wisdom. | Cf. Shvilei Emunah — The author references this work to support the claim that Aristotle stole his knowledge from Solomon's books. This strengthens the case against Greek philosophy by portraying Aristotle as a plagiarist rather than an original thinker. | Cf. Rambam (Maimonides) — The author invokes Maimonides as having spoken against philosophy, which is somewhat ironic given Maimonides' own deep engagement with Aristotelian philosophy. This reference likely points to Maimonides' warnings about philosophical speculation in certain theological matters, selectively citing him as an authority figure who cautioned against philosophical excess. | Cf. Sefer Yetzirah — The citation from RABD's (Raavad's) commentary on Sefer Yetzirah warns that attempting to investigate matters beyond one's intellectual capacity can actually diminish one's existing understanding. This supports the author's overall argument against philosophical speculation into divine matters. | Cf. Derekh Chaim — The author cites this work extensively to illustrate the spiritual dangers of philosophical inquiry, portraying it as a seductive path that leads one away from true divine wisdom and ultimately to spiritual destruction. The reference serves as a cautionary tale against being led astray by Greek philosophical thinking. | Cf. Adam's sin in the Garden of Eden — The text alludes to Adam's sin as a cautionary example of relying on one's own intellect rather than divine guidance. The kabbalistic phrase 'cutting the plantings' (kitzetz ba-netiot) refers to the heretical separation of divine attributes, suggesting that philosophical speculation can lead to theological error just as Adam's actions led to cosmic damage. | Cf. Noah's intoxication — The reference to Noah becoming intoxicated (Genesis 9:20-27) is presented as an example of someone attempting to reach spiritual heights through inappropriate means and suffering negative consequences. This parallels the author's warning about the dangers of philosophical speculation. | Cf. Nadab and Abihu's death — The reference to Nadab and Abihu, who died when offering 'strange fire' before God (Leviticus 10:1-2), serves as another biblical example of the dangers of approaching divine matters improperly. In this context, they are presented as having inappropriately attempted to perceive the divine, resulting in their deaths. | Cf. Proverbs 5:3-5 — The passage alludes to Proverbs 5:3-5, which warns about the seductive nature of the 'strange woman' whose lips drip honey but whose end is bitter as wormwood. The author applies this metaphor to philosophy, suggesting it initially seems sweet and appealing but ultimately leads to spiritual destruction.

ניצול ממנה גם שברוב הדברים
קליפתה זרק. ולהיות שאין
הקב״ה מביא תקלה אפי׳ ע״י
בהמתן של צדיקים כ״ש שרגלי
חסידיו ישמור כהרב רבינו
הגדול הרמב״ם ז״ל מי כמוהו
מורה. ע״כ בסוף ימיו אורו
עיניו ותהה מהרבה מדבריו
שכתב בספר המורה וכדומה לו
שכך כתב לבנו כי זקן אחד האיר
עיניו ולולי שנתפשטו ספריו
ברוב העולם היה חוזר בו מכמה
דברים שכתב. הנה חכמה נכריה
זו אש היא עד אבדון תאכל.
שפתים ישק משיב דברים נכוחים
ה״ה הר״ר עובדיה מברטנורה
אמר כי הקורא בספרים החצונים
(דברי הכחשה בהשגחת הבורא)
שאמרו שאין לו חלק לעולם הבא
הוא הקריאה בספרי ארסט״ו
וחביריו. ובר״מ פ׳ כי תצא
דמה הפלוסופים לשדים. ברוך
טעמו של החבר כי בדברו עם
המלך כוזרי האריך הרבה בסוף
דבריו בגנות החכמה הזאת עד
כי האחרונים כתבו בספריהם
שקודם שיסטה אדם לבו לעסוק
בחכמה זרה הלזו יקרא וישנה
דברי החבר בזה ובפרט חלק
ד׳ מהכוזרי ויהיו לטוטפות
בין עיניו ומתוך דבריו נראה
גודל יקר חכמתו בכל מדע והיה
מדיני בטבע ועכ״ז געלה נפשו

phy] and did not escape it, although in most matters he discarded its shell [negative aspects]. Since the 160R Holy One, blessed be He, does not bring about a stumbling block even through the animals of the righteous, how much more so does He guard the feet of His pious ones, like our great teacher Rabbi Moses Maimonides of blessed memory—who is like 165R him as a teacher? Therefore, at the end of his life, his eyes were enlightened, and he regretted many of his statements that he wrote in the Guide for the Perplexed and similar works. Thus he wrote to his son that an elderly man had enlightened him,[A] and 170R had his books not already spread throughout most of the world, he would have retracted many things he had written.[B] Indeed, this foreign wisdom is a fire that devours to destruction.[C]

Lips shall be kissed by one who returns upright 175R words—namely Rabbi Obadiah of Bartenura, who said that what they meant by "one who reads external books (words denying divine providence) has no share in the World to Come" refers to reading the books of Aristotle and his colleagues. And in the 180R Mishneh Torah, parashat Ki Tetze, he [Maimonides] compared philosophers to demons. Blessed is the reasoning of the author [of the Kuzari], for in his dialogue with the king of the Khazars,[1] he elaborated extensively at the end of his remarks on the disgrace 185R of this wisdom. Later authorities even wrote in their books that before a person turns his heart to engage in this foreign wisdom, he should read and review the words of the author [Judah HaLevi] on this matter, especially part four of the Kuzari, and they should 190R be as frontlets between his eyes.[2] From his words,

[A] Or: "Thus he wrote to his son that a certain elder had opened his eyes" — The phrase 'האיר עיניו' literally means 'illuminated his eyes' but idiomatically refers to giving someone new insight or understanding. The alternate translation 'opened his eyes' captures this metaphorical meaning and might be more natural in English.

[B] Or: "and if his books had not already been disseminated throughout most of the world, he would have recanted many things he had written" — The terms 'disseminated' and 'recanted' have a more formal, scholarly tone that might better fit the context of discussing Maimonides and his philosophical works.

[C] Or: "Behold, this alien wisdom is a fire that consumes all the way to perdition" — This alternative uses more archaic and dramatic language that might better match the rhetorical style of the original. 'Alien wisdom' emphasizes the foreign nature more strongly, and 'perdition' has religious connotations of spiritual destruction that align with the author's view of philosophy.

[1] The Kuzari is structured as a dialogue between a rabbi and the king of the Khazars, who is seeking the true religion. Written by Rabbi Judah HaLevi in the 12th century, it presents arguments for Judaism over philosophy, Christianity, and Islam.

[2] This alludes to the biblical command to wear tefillin, suggesting that Rabbi Judah HaLevi's warnings against philosophy should be kept constantly in mind, as tefillin are worn on the forehead.

בפתויי הפלוסופים כי הכיר
וידע שלמי אוי ולמי אבוי למי
שיש לו שיח ושיג בדעותיהם
הכוזבות כי ברגע תזרוק בו
טעות ומשם יפרד מקדמונו של
עולם. צאו נא וקראו מה שכתוב
בעל עבודת הקדש נגד דעותם
בהרבה מקומות ובפרט בפרקי
ט״ו ט״ז י״ז י״ח מח״ג הנקרא
חלק התכלית ובחלק העבודה
נגד תשובת בר ששת ומשם נראה
ג״כ מאין זכו לחכמה האלהית
דורות אחרונים כי רוח ה׳ דבר
בם ומלתו על לשונם. והחכם
בעל העקידה בשער ראשון דבר
תועה במוציאים ימיהם בחכמת
הפלוסופיא השקרה במשל
בנין הבית על החומר והצורה
והתכלית והפליג להזהיר האדם
ממנה בהרבה ממפתחי שעריו
ובפרט בשער ה׳ ט׳ וי״ו וגם
שהוא דורש דבריהם כבר יצא
מדי חשד בהקדמתו כי גדולה
עבירה לשמה ובשער ז׳ אמר
שחכמה זרה זו גרמה המיתה
לאדם הראשון ולכל העולם
ובעבור קנאת ה׳ צבאות נגד
העוסקים בה חבר ספר חזות
קשה בי׳ וי״ב הוכיח על פניהם
מומם והוא ודאי ידע מתי שוא
ויראו און ולא רצה להתבונן
בו. מה טובו אמריו ומה נעמו
דבר גדול הפשטנים והדרשנים
אחרונים ה״ה החכם המצויין
כמהר״ר משה אלשיך זצ״ל
בכמה מקומות הרחיק חכמה
נכריה זאת השקרה ודחה אותה
בשתי ידים בפ׳ בראשית ובשאר
מקומות מחבוריו ובפרט בפי׳
משלי הרחיק מעליה כל יראו
וחרד לעבודת ה׳. ובאמת כי
הקדמות הפלוסופים מחכמת
גלגל הירח ולמעלה מונעים
עם ה׳ מלהאמין בתורת משה
ובדברי חכמים שהם כדרבונות וכמסמרות נטועים ומישרים

one can see the great preciousness of his wisdom in every field of knowledge, and though he was naturally political [a statesman], nevertheless his soul loathed the enticements of the philosophers, for he recognized and knew "Woe to whom and alas to whom" applies to anyone who has discourse and engagement with their false opinions, because in an instant error will be cast into him, and from there he will separate from the Ancient One of the world.[1]

Go out and read what the author of Avodat HaKodesh wrote against their opinions in many places, particularly in chapters 15, 16, 17, and 18 of part 3, called "The Section of Purpose," and in the section on worship against the response of Bar Sheshet. From there it is also evident how later generations merited divine wisdom, for the spirit of the Lord spoke through them, and His word was on their tongue. The wise author of the Akedah, in the first gate, spoke against those who spend their days in the false wisdom of philosophy, using the parable of building a house based on matter, form, and purpose, and he went to great lengths to warn people against it in many of his gateway openings, particularly in gates 5, 9, and 6. Even though he expounds their words, he has already removed himself from suspicion in his introduction, stating that "a transgression for the sake of Heaven is great." In gate 7, he said that this foreign wisdom caused death to the first man and to the entire world, and because of the zeal of the Lord of Hosts against those who engage in it, he composed the book "Hazut Kashah" in chapters 10 and 12, proving their blemish to their faces. He certainly knew when something was false and saw iniquity, and did not wish to contemplate it.

How good are his words and how pleasant is the speech of the great later literalists and homilists, namely the distinguished sage Rabbi Moses Alshich of blessed memory, who in many places distanced this false foreign wisdom and rejected it with both hands in the section of Genesis and in other places in his compositions, especially in his commentary on Proverbs, where he distanced from it everyone who fears and trembles in the service of the Lord. Indeed, the premises of the philosophers concerning the wisdom of the lunar sphere and above prevent the people

[1] This phrase refers to God as the eternal creator who precedes all existence, contrasting with philosophical concepts like Aristotle's 'unmoved mover' or the eternity of the universe.

240 האדם לעבודתו ויראתו ואהבתו של יוצרנו ב״ה. וכבר כתב אחד מן החכמים שהיה חפץ להעלות ארסט״ו [i] of God from believing in the Torah of Moses and the words of the Sages, which are like goads and like firmly planted nails,[1] guiding a person to service, fear, and love of our Creator, blessed be He. One of the sages who wished to elevate Aristotle has already written[2] 240R

ואמר שכל מה שכתב בחכמת
245 הטבע כלו אמת. וברוך יודע האמת.[ii] ומגלגל הירח עד גלגל ערבות רובו שקר אך מה שרצה לדבר באלהיות כלו שקר וכזב. אשרי העם שה׳
250 אלהיו ולא פנה דרך שועלים המחבלים כרמים.[iii] ואמר הגאון מורי מפאנו זצ״ל כי מדרבנן בגימטריא[iv] מפי גבורה שדברי

And he said that everything he [Aristotle] wrote about natural science is entirely true. And blessed is He who knows the truth. But from the sphere of the moon to the sphere of Aravot[3] [the highest heaven], most of it is false, and what he attempted to say about divinity is entirely false and deceitful. Happy is the nation whose God is the LORD, and who has not turned to the way of foxes that destroy vineyards. And my teacher, the Gaon of Fano,[4] of blessed memory, said that the numerical value of 245R 250R

[1] This biblical metaphor from Ecclesiastes 12:11 describes the words of the wise. Here it suggests that rabbinic teachings provide firm guidance, unlike the shifting speculations of philosophy.

[2] The text appears to be cut off at this point, but seems to be transitioning to a more nuanced view that acknowledges some limited value in Aristotle's natural philosophy while rejecting his metaphysics.

[3] This cosmological description reflects the medieval Jewish understanding of the universe, derived from Aristotelian physics but modified to fit Jewish theological concepts. The 'sphere of the moon' was considered the boundary between the sublunary (changeable, imperfect) world and the celestial (unchanging, perfect) realms. 'Aravot' is the name of the seventh and highest heaven in rabbinic literature.

[4] This refers to Rabbi Menahem Azariah da Fano (c. 1548-1620), an important Italian kabbalist who synthesized the Cordoverian and Lurianic schools of Kabbalah. He is cited multiple times in Ma'avar Yabok as the author's teacher.

[i] Cf. Guide for the Perplexed (Moreh Nevuchim) — The author refers to the Guide for the Perplexed (ספר המורה) as a work that Maimonides supposedly regretted writing. This reference serves as a warning against philosophical inquiry that might lead believers away from traditional faith. | Cf. Kuzari by Judah HaLevi — The author cites the Kuzari as an authoritative source against philosophical speculation, specifically recommending part four which contains strong arguments prioritizing revelation and tradition over philosophical reasoning. This reference establishes an intellectual lineage for the anti-philosophical position. | Cf. Avodat HaKodesh by Rabbi Meir ibn Gabbai — The reference to Avodat HaKodesh strengthens the author's argument by citing another mystical work that critiques philosophical approaches to understanding God. This builds a case that true divine wisdom comes through revelation rather than reason. | Cf. Akedat Yitzchak by Rabbi Isaac Arama — The reference to Rabbi Isaac Arama's Akedat Yitzchak provides another authoritative source against philosophical inquiry. The specific mention of multiple gates (chapters) shows the author's familiarity with this work and suggests a comprehensive critique of philosophy within it. | Cf. Commentaries of Rabbi Moses Alshich — The author cites Rabbi Moses Alshich's biblical commentaries, particularly on Proverbs, as rejecting philosophical approaches. This reference adds another respected rabbinic voice to the chorus against philosophy, showing that opposition comes from both mystical and exegetical traditions.

[ii] The phrase 'And blessed is He who knows the truth' is likely an allusion to God as the ultimate arbiter of truth, suggesting a nuanced position that acknowledges some truth in Aristotle's natural philosophy while rejecting his theological views.

[iii] This is an allusion to Song of Songs 2:15, 'Catch for us the foxes, the little foxes that ruin the vineyards.' In rabbinic literature, foxes often symbolize destructive philosophical or theological ideas that undermine traditional faith.

[iv] This is a gematria equation where both phrases equal 382 in Hebrew numerology, suggesting that rabbinic teachings have divine authority equivalent to the Torah itself.

סופרים הן הם גופה של תורה.
ועיין בהערה שלנו בסוף המעירי
שחר עונש הגדול למי שאינו
עוסק בחכמת החבלה[i] בעולם
הזה ולמה נקרא חכמה מפוארה
זו קבלה:[ii]

"mi-derabbanan" [from the rabbis] equals "mi-pi gevurah" [from the mouth of Power], for the words of the Sages are the very body of the Torah. And see our note at the end of Me'irei Shachar[1] [Illuminators of Dawn] regarding the great punishment for one who does not engage in the wisdom of Kabbalah[2] in this world, and why this glorious wisdom is called "Kabbalah" [reception].

פרק ל״ד

Chapter 34

ונדעה נרדפה מדרושי גן עדן
שהיה תחלת דברינו בו בתחלת
פרק הקודם יש שכתבו כי גן עדן
תחתון הוא מהלאה לים אוקיינוס
בקו השוה אמנם דעת רשב״י
וחביריו הוא כי מקום כבודו
באמצע כל העולם בין חרבה בין
ישוב ושם יש נקודה טמונה וגנוזה
ואינה נודעת ועמוד אחד נעוץ
ממטה למעלה בתוך אותה נקודה
ומשם נובעים מים המתפרשים
לד׳ סטרי עלמא ונקודה זו
מקבלת מאימא עילאה וירושלים
היא באמצע הישוב כי בשתי

Let us know and pursue the discourses concerning the Garden of Eden,[3] which was the beginning of our discussion in the previous chapter. Some have written that the lower Garden of Eden is beyond the ocean sea at the equator.[A] However, the opinion of Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai and his colleagues is that its place of glory is in the center of the entire world, between wasteland and settlement. There is a hidden and concealed point[B] there that is not known, and a single pillar is fixed from below upward within that point. From there flow waters that separate into the four directions of the world. This point receives from the Supernal Mother[4] (Imma Ila'ah), and Jerusalem is in the middle of the inhabited world, for in these

[A] Or: "beyond the ocean at the equatorial line" — This is a more literal translation of 'kav hashaveh' which specifically refers to the equatorial line in medieval geographical terminology.

[B] Or: "buried and treasured point" — The terms 'tmunah' and 'gnuzah' have connotations of being deliberately hidden away as something precious, which 'buried and treasured' might better capture.

[1] This refers to another work by the author, whose title means 'Illuminators of Dawn,' possibly referring to a prayer society in Modena that gathered for morning prayers, as mentioned elsewhere in the text.

[2] The Hebrew term used here is 'chochmat ha-chabalah,' literally 'the wisdom of the bond/cable,' an uncommon designation for Kabbalah that emphasizes its function in connecting or binding humans to the divine realm.

[3] The Hebrew phrase 'ונדעה נרדפה' combines two verbs from Hosea 6:3 ('let us know, let us pursue') creating a sense of active spiritual inquiry rather than mere academic study.

[4] The term 'Imma Ila'ah' (Supernal Mother) refers to the sefirah of Binah (Understanding) in Kabbalah, which is conceptualized as the divine feminine principle that gives birth to the lower sefirot.

[i] The term 'Kabbalah' is here referred to as 'chochmat ha-chabalah' (wisdom of the bond/cable) rather than the more common 'chochmat ha-nistar' (hidden wisdom) or 'chochmat ha-emet' (wisdom of truth), emphasizing its function in binding or connecting the human and divine realms.

[ii] Cf. Me'irei Shachar — The author refers to his own work 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn), where he apparently discusses the importance of studying Kabbalah and the consequences of neglecting it. This self-reference indicates the author's broader literary output beyond Ma'avar Yabok. | Cf. Gaon of Fano — The reference to Rabbi Menahem Azariah of Fano (1548-1620) as 'my teacher' establishes the author's intellectual lineage within Italian Kabbalah. This important kabbalist was a prolific writer who synthesized Cordoverian and Lurianic Kabbalah, and his mention helps date and contextualize the work.

נקודין מתפרשת למלכות שמים שהוא צד הקדושה. אחת נקודה המוקבלת להשפעת מלכות שהיא במקום ב״ה וירושלים ואחת להשפעת אימא עילאה שהוא מקום ג״ע ויש נקודה אחרא באמצע החרבן ששם היו משלחין ישראל השעיר למדבר. ואמרו בפ׳ תצוה דף ק״פ שאפי׳ בזמן שישראל בגלות ומתפללים כל יוה״כ שהשכינה עולה לפני המלך לתבוע על בניה. על כן שענו במעירי שחר שלנו תפלה לזווגא דמטרוניתא בבקר יוה״כ שחובה עלינו להקדים להתפלל בשלומה של מלכות שמים ביום אשר היא מכינה עצמה לתבוע מן המלך עליה ועל בניה. הנה שג״ע הוא באמצע העולם ואמרו שנטוע בכח שם שלם כגוונא דג״ע עליון שבו נכלל הדין ברחמים [i] two points the Kingdom of Heaven,[1] which is the side of holiness, is divided. One point corresponds to the influence of Malkhut, which is in the place of the Holy Temple and Jerusalem, and one corresponds to the influence of the Supernal Mother, which is the location of the Garden of Eden. And there is another point in the middle of the desolation, where Israel used to send the scapegoat into the wilderness. 15R 20R

And they said in Parshat Tetzaveh, page 180, that even in times when Israel is in exile and praying throughout Yom Kippur, the Divine Presence (Shekhinah) ascends before the King[2] to plead on behalf of her children. Therefore, we established in our "Illuminators of Dawn" prayer group a prayer[A] for the unification of the Divine Feminine[3] (Matronita) on the morning of Yom Kippur, for it is our obligation to precede our prayers with a prayer for the welfare of the Kingdom of Heaven on the day when she prepares herself to make claims before the King concerning herself and her children. Thus, the Garden of Eden is in the middle of the world, and they said that it is planted through the power of the complete divine Name, similar to the supernal Garden of Eden, in which judgment is included within mercy.[4] 25R 30R 35R

ורחמים בדין וכל הדיוקנאות

...and mercy with judgment, and all the supernal

[A] Or: "Therefore, we instituted in our "Illuminators of Dawn" prayer group a prayer" — The verb 'sha'anu' might be better rendered as 'instituted' in this context, as it refers to the formal establishment of a prayer ritual.

[1] The text describes a kabbalistic geography where divine influence flows through specific metaphysical points. Jerusalem receives from Malkhut (Kingdom), while the Garden of Eden receives from Binah (Supernal Mother).

[2] In kabbalistic symbolism, the Shekhinah (Divine Presence) is often portrayed as a feminine aspect of divinity that advocates for Israel before God, particularly on Yom Kippur.

[3] The phrase 'zivuga d'matronita' refers to the mystical unification of masculine and feminine divine aspects, a central concept in Kabbalah that practitioners sought to facilitate through prayer.

[4] This reflects the kabbalistic concept that in higher spiritual realms, seemingly contradictory divine attributes exist in perfect harmony, with the attribute of judgment (Din) being 'sweetened' by its inclusion within mercy (Rachamim).

[i] Cf. Zohar, Parshat Tetzaveh — The author cites this Zohar passage to establish a connection between earthly prayer practices and cosmic processes, particularly explaining why the prayer group 'Me'irei Shachar' (Illuminators of Dawn) established special prayers on Yom Kippur morning for the unification of the Divine Feminine. | Cf. Zohar teachings on the structure of the Garden of Eden — The author is drawing on Rabbi Shimon bar Yochai's teachings in the Zohar about the Garden of Eden's metaphysical structure. This passage combines geographical, mystical, and kabbalistic concepts to describe the Garden not merely as a physical location but as a metaphysical nexus point connecting different cosmic realms. | Cf. Biblical scapegoat ritual — The author connects the mystical geography of the Garden of Eden with other sacred locations, including the place where the scapegoat was sent on Yom Kippur. This creates a kabbalistic mapping where each spiritual location has a specific cosmic function in relation to divine attributes.

עליונות כלם מתרקמים
ומצטיירים בג״ע תחתון
והכרובים ששם אינם לא
מכסף ולא מזהב אלא הם כלם
אורות של מעלה מצוייריים
בציור מעשה ידי אמן דשם שלם
של הקב״ה וכל הדיוקנאות
וצורות של עה״ז כלם מצוייריים
ומחוקקים שם בדמות שהם
בע״הז והוא מקום לרוחות
קדושים בין אותם שבאו לעה״ז
בין אותם שלא באו עדיין ואותם
המוכנים לבא וכל הרוחין
מתלבשים בלבושים וגופים
ופרצופין בגוון עוה״ז ורואין
שם בזיו כבוד דקב״ה עד שבאים
לעה״ז כי אז מתפשטים מאותו
גוף ולבוש ששם מעין רוחניות
אותו אויר הקדוש ומתלבשים
בגוף מעין אויר וגשמיות עוה״ז
וכיון שמגיע זמנו למות מתפשט
מלבוש הגוף הזה (דיש לסטרא בישא חלק בו) ע״י מלאך המות
ואז הולך ומתלבש באותו גוף
האחר שבג״ע שהפשיט אותו בעת
ביאתו לעה״ז לשמרו שם עד
בואו ואין שמחה לרוח רק בעודו
לבוש בגוף ההוא ושמח על
שנתפשט מגוף העה״ז ואתלבש
בלבוש אחר שלם כדוגמא
שהיה בעה״ז וע״י אותו לבוש
זך מספיריות הגן בו מסתכל
בסודות עליונים מה שלא היה
יכול לידע ולהבין בעה״ז וכמה
עדונין וכסופין יש לרוח בלבוש
ההוא ובלבוש הזה יזכה "לראות
בגנים "וללקוט "שושנים ר״ת
לבו״ש. מזה יתאמת ג״כ מה
שכתבנו בפרקים הקודמים
משמירת התורה ומצות לצדיקים
אחר המות בג״ע. והקב״ה אינו
מפשיט לרוח הזה לבושים אלו
שבג״ע עד שמתקין לו לבושים

